thô for want of comparing they make the latter to be before the former. And then with what Forces could this Lord Stafford pretend to go above an 100 Miles thrô France, to meet with the King at Creſſy, unleſs he left Aiguillon void? We ſhall therefore leave theſe Idle Tales, and go to a more probable and better atteſted Narration. The Earl of Pembroke, and the Lord Walter Manny were with ſome other aforemention'd Chief Captains of Aiguillon: Who when they ſaw the Departure of the Duke of Normandy (for he had [b] fired his Tents to the great Damage of thoſe that were Infirm, and the Loſs of their Neceſſaries) reſolved to give him a brisk Farewell. And ſo the Lord [c] Walter Manny iſſued out with his Banner before him, and daſhed in among the hindmoſt of the French, and fell upon them with ſuch Vigour, that he ſlew one with another 600 of them; and took about 60 Priſoners, whom he brought back with him into the Fortreſs. Of theſe Priſoners, upon enquiry, he underſtood, how the King of England, his Maſter, had made an Expedition into France, and had won a notable Victory in the Fields of Creſſy, and was intended to lay his Siege before Calais.

AN. DOM. 1346. An. Regni Angliæ XX. Franciæ VII.

[b] Giov. Villani l. 12. c. 60. p. 870.

[c] Froiſ. c. 134.

Hereupon [f] Sr. Walter Manny ſome days after fell into Communication with one of the Chief of all his Priſoners, who was a Noble Knight of Normandy, and both very Dear, and alſo nearly Allied to Duke John; demanding of him, how much Money he was content to pay for his Ranſom. The Knight reply'd, "He would very willingly give him 3000 Crowns. "Well, ſaid the Lord Manny, I am fully enformed, "that You are of Kin to the Duke of Normandy, and very High in his Favour; of "that I am ſure. And if I would preſs upon You, I am certain, You could pay me "10000 Crowns: But I ſhall deal otherwiſe with You, and only rely upon your "Faith and Promiſe. You ſhall go to the Duke your Lord, and endeavour to obtain "of him a Safe-Conduct for me, and 20 more of my Company to ride thrô France "to Calais, We paying courteouſly for all our Expences, and lying but One Night "in a place, till We come thither; and not offering the leaſt Wrong or Violence to "any ſoul whatſoever. And if You can get this Grant of the Duke, or of the King, "his Father, I ſhall clearly quit You your Ranſom with many Thanks: For I am "very deſirous to ſee the King, my Maſter. But if You cannot procure thus much "for me, You ſhall return hither again within a Moneth, and yield your Body up, as "my Priſoner.

[f] Froiſ. c. 135. &c.

X. To all this the Knight agreed, and gave his Promiſe to keep the Bargain truly and honeſtly, and ſo went to Paris; where having found the Duke of Normandy, he Obtained of him a Paſs-port and Safe-Conduct for Sr. Walter Manny, and only 20 Horſemen beſide, and therewithall returning punctually to Aiguillon, upon delivery of the ſaid Conduct, he was freely acquitted of his Ranſom and Impriſonment.

Then the Lord Walter Manny, made ſufficient Proviſion for his journey, and having took leave of the Earl of Pembroke, and the other Engliſh Lords and Captains, left the Fortreſs with 20 Gallant Fellows in his Company, all well Mounted, and rode thrô Auvergne, and when he came to any City or Town, he produced his Letters, and ſo was let paſs unmoleſted. But being come to Orleans, for all his Letters, he was arreſted, together with all his Company, and hurried away to Paris; where by the Kings Order they were Impriſon'd in the Chaſtelet, or Chief Priſon. The Duke of Normandy, having got notice hereof, went immediately to the King, his Father, and told him, how Sr. Walter Manny had his Safe-Conduct; wherefore he earneſtly deſired him to deliver him; "Sir, ſaid he, for Gods-ſake, blemiſh not Your Royal Ho"nour by ſuch an Unjuſt and Unprincely Action. I was furniſhed with full Power "from Your own Commiſſion, to grant a Safe-Conduct, or to Treat with any of Your "Enemies, in what Manner I ſhould think fit. Neither did I make this Grant, which "yet is of ſmall conſideration, to an Enemy, but for the ſake of a Loyal and Valiant "Subject, who was redeem'd from Priſon thereby. Nor could he have been reduced "into Your Power by the Force of Your Arms (for that was try'd in vain) but by "the Faith he repoſed in Your Princely Honour; which all Kings ſhould take the "utmoſt Care to keep inviolate. My Lord and Father, let it not be ſaid, that the "Heir of France, after a Fruitleſs Siege of many Months, was fain to falſifie his Word, "confirmed with his, nay with Your, Royal Seal, to trepan a Generous Enemy into "an Ignoble Death: For thô all this proceeded of Your Majeſties Pleaſure alone, yet "there is no Man, but will believe, that it was I, who betray'd him; and ſo they "juſtly may, unleſs they ſhall ſee him ſet free again by my Endeavours. "Set Free "again (reply'd the incenſed Prince) let me ſee, who dare pretend to diſpoſe of my

An. Dom. 1346. An. Regni Angliæ XX. Franciæ VII.

"Priſoners, otherwiſe, than I ſhall think Convenient. Be this your ſatisfaction; that "your Father and your King is reſolved, He ſhall die: For I look upon him as One "of my moſt Deadly Enemies, and ſo would You, if You knew, how he aims to ra- "viſh away for another, that Crown, which You may one Day Wear. "Father, "ſaid the Duke, if this be Your final Determination, ſurely I ſhall never bear Arms "on Your behalf againſt the King of England, nor ſhall any of thoſe, on whom I have "any Influence: For I am not greatly Ambitious to Wear a Crown, that is upheld "by any Unjuſt Action; and then, going out of the Preſence in Great Diſpleaſure, he repeated his former Words, Vowing on that Condition, never more to bear Arms for the King, his Father again. Thus the Matter ſtood a while, King Philip in doubt, whether to appeaſe his Son, or rid himſelf of an Enemy, the Prince in deep Sorrow, Shame, and Diſpleaſure, and the Lord Manny in great Danger of Death. But there was at Court a Worthy Knight of Hainalt, named Sr. Manſart de Sue, who made it his ſole Endeavour to deliver the Lord Manny; he held about this Matter ſeveral private Conferences with the Duke of Normandy, and by his means with the greateſt Peers, and Barons of France; whereupon at laſt King Philip was ſo importun'd by their joynt Prayers, and Remonſtrances, that he was content to let him go out of Priſon, with all his Men, their Horſes, Goods, and Armour, and all their Coſts paid. And becauſe now the King himſelf was aſhamed of what he had done, he ſent for the Lord Manny to his Palace of Neſle in Paris, and made him ſit down with him at Dinner, at his own Table. All which time the King ſpake ſo familiarly with him, and ſhew'd him ſo good a Countenance, as might become the moſt Gracious King in Europe, to uſe with his moſt Loyal Friend and Favourite: After all he preſented him with great Gifts and Jewels, to the Value of a 1000 Florens of Gold. But Sr. Walter would not receive this Preſent, ſaving on this Condition; that if his Maſter, the King of England, upon his Arrival before Calais, ſhould allow thereof, then he would keep them, as Tokens of his Princely Bounty; but otherwiſe, he muſt crave Pardon, thô he ſend them all back again to the Royal Donor. The King ſaid, "how he ſpake like a Man of Honour; and ſo the Lord Manny took his leave, and rode Northward, till he came into Hainalt, where he had his Birth; and having only tarried three Days at Valenciennes, he proceeded, till he came to Calais, where he and all his Men were welcome to the King of England.

But when he had ſhew'd the King the Particulars of all his Journey, and the Danger he was in at firſt, as alſo how afterwards, on certain Conditions, he had accepted of Gifts from the French King, Edward took him aſide and ſaid, "Sr. Walter, You have "hitherto ſerved Us with much Loyalty, and We doubt not, but You will continue "ſo to do. Send again to Philip of Valois his Preſents; You have no need of them; "We thank God, We have enough for our ſelves and for You too. And ſurely "We deſign for You both great Honour, and other Rewards according to the Good "and Laudable Service, You have done Us. Upon theſe Words of the King, the Lord Manny took immediately all the foreſaid Jewels, and delivering them to a Couſin of his, named Sr. Manſel, a young Gentleman of Gallant Shape, Deportment and Courage, thô at that time of no conſiderable Office, becauſe of his Youth, he ſaid, "Cou- "ſin Manſel, ride into France to the King there, and recommend me to him, and "tell him, that I thank his Majeſty a Thouſand times for the Favours he was pleaſed "to ſhew me, and the Gifts he gave me: But let him know, that it is not the Plea- "ſure of the King, my Maſter, that I ſhould keep them: Wherefore I now ſend them a- "gain unto him. This young Knight rode to Paris accordingly, and deliver'd his Meſſage with the Jewels to the King: But he thought it agreed not with his Honour to take them back again; wherefore (as Sr. Walter had imagin'd) He bad Sr. Manſel take them to himſelf. He for his part (as one, whoſe Place laid no ſuch Obligation upon him, as the Lord Manny's did) thanked his Majeſty heartily, and made no ſcruple to bring them along with him to Calais.

§ Froiſ. c. 136. Aſhmole p. 681. Du Cheſne. p. 665. Holinſhead p. 938. Mezeray p. 28. & Giov. Villan. l. 12. c. 76. p. 887.

XI. Now as ſoon § as the Duke of Normandy had Raiſed his Siege from before Aiguillon, and was returned to Paris, Henry Earl of Lancaſter and Darby, who during the Siege had kept at Bourdeaux, or la Reole, and thereabout, when he heard of the Duke's Departure, ſent his Summons throughout Gaſcogne, to all the Lords, Knights, and Eſquires of England, beſides ſuch Gaſcogners, as held for King Edward: Among whom were the Lord of Albret, the Lord de Le Sparre, the Lord of Roſam, the Lord of Mucidan, the Lord of Pamiers, the Lord of Tourton, the Lord of Bouqueton, Sr. Emery of Traſton, and others; ſo that the Earls Forces amounted in all to 1200 Men of Arms, 2000 Archers, and 3000 Foot. With this ſmall, but well compacted Army, he paſ-

ſed

sed the Garonne, between Bourdeaux and Blaye, and marching up the way toward Saintogne, came to Mirembeau, which he took by Storm, both Town and Castle, and set therein a Garrison of English. Then he turned to Mortagne by the Sea-side in Poictou, which he took by Assault, and Garrison'd also: From hence he rode to Taillebourg, and wan the Bridge, Town, and Castle, putting all whom he found to the Sword, in Revenge of the Death of a Knight of his, who was slain in the Assault. After this he advanced to Aunay, Surgieres, and Benon, all which he took; but the Castle of Marans beyond Rochelle he could not prevail upon by any means. Then he went and laid Siege to the Fair Town of St. John the Evangelist, called in French St. Jean D' Angely, and gave there a great Assault, which lasted, till almost Night. There were no very Expert Captains at that time in the Place, wherefore Sr. William de Rions, their Mayor, and the greater part of the Aldermen, sent to the Earl of Lancaster for a Safe-Conduct, whereby six of them might have security, to wait upon him, and Treat with him that Night, or early the next Morning. This latter was granted, and so next Day six Burgesses were brought to the Earls Tent, where presently they concluded to become good Subjects of England, as long as King Edward, or some of his Captains would protect them, and their Town against the French King. So the Earl tarried there three Days to refresh himself, and to take the Homage of all the Inhabitants: After which, he proceeded to Lusignan, where, as some say, he only burnt the Town, but could not win the Castle: Thô on better Authority [h] it seems, that both the Town and Castle of Lusignan were now taken, and Garrison'd by the English, as will further appear in the close of this Paragraph. Thence the Earl rode to the strong Town of Niort, whereof the Lord Guischard Dangle was Captain, who maintain'd his Honour, and the Place so well, that after three Vigorous Attacks spent in vain, the Earl was content to leave it, and go on the Right Hand to Bourg St. Maixent, where he found better Success, and entring the Place by Storm put all to the Sword.

AN. DOM. 1346. An. Regni Angliæ XX. Franciæ VII.

[h] Giov. Villani l. 12. c. 76. p. 887.

The whole [i] Country was so terrify'd with his Name, that every Man fled before him into strong Holds and Towns Defensible, forsaking their own Houses, and their Goods: Nor was there the least Preparation made by any to stop his Career; for all Knights, Gentlemen, and other Captains kept close in their Fortresses, without making any show of presenting Battle to the English. Then the Earl went forward to Monstrevill-Bonnin, wherein he heard, there were no less than 200 Coyners, making Money for the French King. The Inhabitants were resolved by no means to yield, but to Defend the Place to the extreamity: Thô therein they shew'd much more Courage, than Discretion; if We ought not rather to call that Brutish Valour, than Courage, which is not guided by Discretion. For the Earl with his Men of War gave them so fierce an Assault, whereto he encouraged his Men, by promising, that every One should freely and entirely Possess, what he could first light on in the City; that all Opposition being soon surmounted, the Place was enter'd by Storm, and all within put to the Sword. And here I shall make bold to supply Froisard with a Story, the truth whereof is notably attested by many, thô by none yet refer'd to this Place, as every Judicious Reader will easily grant it ought to be; when he shall consider our Reasons.

[i] Froiss. 136. &c.

XII. The Relation is this, that at the Assaulting of a certain Town in France, the Earl of Lancaster to encourage his Men the better, proposed to them as a Reward, the Spoil of whatever House or Person every one should first have in his Power: Now it chanced that the French Kings Mint being there, one man among the rest, who was but a Common Souldier, and named Reth, had the good hap to light upon that House wherein it was. And finding there several Sacks of Coined Money besides Bullion, he was almost carried beyond himself for joy and wonder: But at last considering, that such vast Riches were too disproportionable to his Condition, and only proper for the Coffers of Kings, he secur'd the entrance of the House, and went and told the Earl of Lancaster, desiring him to take Care and Possession thereof. The Earl bad him keep what Fortune had put into his Hands, for it was and should be his own: But the honest Fellow finding upon a more particular search, that the Immensity of the Treasure exceeded all imagination, went again to the Earl, protesting it was too much for any Private man to possess; and that he neither would nor durst accept of it. The Earl replied, "Fear nothing honest Archer, but be content with what God hath given "thee: For the Treasure thou hast found cannot possibly be so much as to make me "break my Word to my Souldiers: Since a Prince ought not to do so for all the "Treasures in the World. And hereupon some of his Captains disallowing of that his too

An. Dom. 1346. An. Regni Angliæ XX. Franciæ VII.

too profuse Liberality, and saying, that he might without any imputation of Injustice, have abundantly contented that poor Fellow with a good Part, and reserved the greater Quantity for his own and his Country's Use; he nobly answer'd in these [k] Words, "It is not for my State to play Childrens Play, to give a thing and take it back again: "Since he has my Word, let him hold the Money if it were thrice as much.

This is the Substance of the Story, which after so great a Man as Cambden I have not doubted to relate, notwithstanding the Diversity of Authors, as to the Place and Time, when and where the Action was done. For [l] thô Knighton says, the Earl of Darby found a Pipe of Gold at Bergerac; yet since we shewed before how that Place was not taken by Force, but yielded upon Composition, it certainly ought not to be given to the Plunder. And [m] Froisard and [n] Du Chesne say expressly, that in Monstrevil Bonnin there were 200 Money-makers that coyned for the French King; not to say that this Place being confessedly taken by Storm, and the Inhabitants consequently put to the Sword, all this Money must of necessity have been found: Thô Froisard might not have heard of this heroick and magnificent Act of the Earl of Lancaster's thereupon.

[k] Cambdens Remains in titulo Wise Speeches, p. 239.
[l] Knighton p. 2585.
[m] Froiss. c. 136.
[n] Du Chesne p. 665. & Holinshead p. 938.

XIII. The Earl having repaired the Fortifications of the Castle, and left a Garison for its Defence, went homeward now again, but in his way presented himself before the City of Poictiers. This Place was of so large Extent, that his small Army was not sufficient to invest it round; wherefore he laid his Siege to it but on one side, and began to assault them fiercely. But the Inhabitants being very numerous, thô for the most part mean People, and without any sufficient Number of expert Captains or choice Souldiers, did yet defend themselves so well, that they took but little Dammage at that time; and so the English retired to their Lodgings. Whereat, as [o] one says, the Townsmen were so puffed up with fond Conceit, that the next morning they adventur'd to Sally forth with no less than a 1000 Men of Arms, such as they were, and a mighty number of Footmen: Who scorning the small Forces of the English defied them to a Battle. But the Earl of Lancaster marched forth against them in good Order, and came upon them with so much Fury, beating down their Ranks with his Chosen men of Arms, and terrifying them with his Archers; that they presently turned their Backs with as much Dishonour, as they had sallied out with Vain-glory: For they had no manner of Conduct, nor Skill in matters of War any further, than their ordinary Trainings of the Militia in Peace might have instructed them with. The English enter'd the Town with them Pell-mell, where seising immediatly upon the Gates, they held them open till the Earl of Lancaster and all his Men were enter'd. And this is the manner as an ancient Author witnesses, of Taking Poictiers, thô [p] Froisard gives a different Account thereof, which is this. That the English having after the first Assault, rested that Night in their Camp, the next Morning certain Knights and Gentlemen of the Army, by the Earls Order took their Horses, and coasted about the Town to view it, if peradventure any where they might find it more Assaultable. These upon their return reported to the Earl, that they had found a Place of more easie Access than ordinary, by which they doubted not to carry the City. Hereupon the Earl determin'd to renew the Assault the next Day in three several Places, the greatest Noise and Show to appear elsewhere; but the whole stress of the Business to lie there, where it was most likely to succeed. Now as Froisard also witnesses, there was not in the Town any Captain of Name or Experience in matters of War; nor were the Inhabitants of any great Skill or Conduct in making good a Defence, whatever Courage they had in holding out thus long. Wherefore the Assault being on the third Day renewed, according to the former Device, the English who attacked the weakest part enter'd by Force, and so presently became Masters of the City. When they within saw this, they fled away in heaps at other Gates, and escaped away because the Place was not surrounded; but yet there were slain more than 700 of them, for at the beginning all were put to the Sword, who were found, both Men, Women and Children: And the whole City was overrun and robbed, as well of what the Inhabitants had owned, as of what was brought thither from Parts adjoining for better Security. Several Churches and Houses of Religion were robbed and defaced, and many Rapes and other Licentious deeds committed; and more had been, but that the Pious Earl of Lancaster commanded the contrary on Pain of Death; proclaiming, that no House, much less Church, should be fired, forasmuch as he said he designed to tarry there ten or twelve Days: So that the Rage of the Souldiers being thus repressed, far less Harm was done than would else have happen'd; but however as it falls out in such Cases, there was Plundering and Mischief enough.

[o] Knighton p. 2592.

[p] Froiss. c. 136, &c.

Here

Here the Earl tarried 12 Days, and might have done longer, if he had ſo pleaſed, for there was none to reſiſt him; all the Country was in ſuch a Conſternation. During his Stay here, becauſe the Place was of too large extent to be Garriſon'd, without great Numbers, which he could not ſpare at that time, he reſolved to leave it void, and ſo it was Diſmantled, given up to Plunder and laid wholly deſolate; except that they forbore to fire it, the Souldiers finding ſo much Spoil, they hardly knew what to do with it; inſomuch that they valued nothing but Gold, Silver, and Feathers for Men of War. AN. DOM. 1346. An. Regni Angliæ XX. Franciæ VII.

From hence the Earl returned by eaſie Marches to St. Jean D' Angely, where he tarried a while treating and careſſing the Ladies and Gentlewomen of the Town, with Banquets and Collations, beſides Gifts of Jewels and other rich Preſents, and he behaved himſelf ſo gallantly amid theſe Sports and Revels, that the People ſaid, "He "was the Nobleſt Prince that ever rode on Horſeback." After ſome ſhort Continuance here, during which time he took a new Oath in the King his Maſters Name, of the Mayor and Burgeſſes of the Town, to keep and defend it as the Indubitate Right and Inheritance of the King of England, he took his leave, and return'd by ſuch Fortreſſes as he had won before, to the City of Bourdeaux; where having largely ſatisfied his Men of War with Spoil, Thanks, Pay and Commendation, he diſpoſed them into their ſeveral Quarters, the Winter being far entred at that time.

XIV. When the Earl of Lancaſter had thus reſpited the Country, the Inhabitants of Poictiers who had eſcaped, repaired again thither, and fell with all their might to fortifie the Place: And ſoon after being joyned with great Numbers of their Neighbouring Friends, and headed with ſufficient Captains, they ſent forth a ſtrong Detachment of Men of Arms and others, deſigning to ſurpriſe Luſignan, the Garriſon whereof hugely annoyed them. But in this their Attempt, thô [q] treble the Number of the Engliſh, they were with great Loſs diſcomfited, and their Captain the Earl of Monferrand, with many others ſlain: Which was look'd upon as another wonderfull Inſtance of King Edwards invincible Fortune.

[q] Giov. Villani l.12. c.76. p. 887.

CHAPTER the FIFTH.

The CONTENTS.

I. King Philip by his Ambaſſadors prevails with the King of Scotland to break the Truce with King Edward, and to invade England. II. King David reſolves on a War with England: The Number of the Scotch Army; they begin to March. III. King David's Cruelty to an Engliſh Knight in cold Blood: He encamps near the City of Durham. IV. Queen Philippa makes her Muſters at York in order to reſiſt the Scots: She ſends an Expoſtulation to King David, who prepares for fight: The Order of the Scotch Army. V. The Order and Number of the Engliſh, with the Names of their Chief Leaders. VI. Queen Philippa encourages her Men, who beat Earl Douglas and Sr. David Graham before the Battle. VII. The Lord Robert Stuart Prince of Scotland begins the Fight, but is forced to Retreat. VIII. King David is taken Priſoner by John Copland an Eſquire of Northumberland. IX. The third and laſt Battalia of the Scots diſcomfited. X. The Time and Place of this Battle certainly aſſigned: A groſs Miſtake of Hector Boethius the Scotch Hiſtorian. XI. The Duration or Time how long it laſted, with an Account of the Loſs on both Sides: And the Names of the Scotch Nobility ſlain and taken. XII. John Copland bears away the King of Scotland to his Caſtle, where he reſolves to keep him: The Queen ſends to him for the King his Priſoner; and She returning to York, King Bailiol and the Engliſh Lords invade Scotland. XIII. John Copland upon refuſal to deliver his Priſoner to the Queen, is ſent for by King Edward, who upon full knowledge of his Reaſons, holds him excuſed and rewards him Royally. XIV. King David brought to London and put in the Tower: The Earls of Menteith and Fife executed. XV. The Earl of Lancaſter returns into England and the Queen goes over to Calais. XVI. The Pope ſeeks to make Peace between England and France, but in vain.

I. NOR

An. Dom. 1346. An. Regni Angliæ XX. Franciæ VII.

I. NOR were these all the Triumphs of this glorious Year: King Edward's Good Fortune is providing another King to be Conquer'd, and another Royal Army to be overthrown by his Successfull Arms. We spake in the former Chapter, how King Philip sought by his Ambassadors to provoke King David of Scotland to break the Truce made with England; and with all Expedition strongly to invade the Northern Borders. But this Matter however closely carried on, came to be scented by King Edward, who then lay before Calais: Thô he resolved for all that not to quit the Siege, as well becaufe he had Confidence in the Courage and Sufficiency of those, to whom he had left the Care of the Government in his Absence; as becaufe he had some hope that the Scots themselves, either in Respect to their Faith given, or thrô Remembrance of their former Losses, would not easily venture to break the Truce, so solemnly taken between them. Yet however to prevent if possible the Calamities, that might ensue upon an Invasion from Scotland, he presently dispatched away from Calais certain of his Lords, being Captains of great Experience, either to perswade King David to a punctual Observance of the Truce, or if that might not be obtained, to help to defend his Subjects against him. Among these were John Lord Moubray, William Lord Ros, and Thomas Lord Lucy of Cockermouth, who bare for his Arms Gules, Three Lucies Hariant, Argent. These with other the Kings Ambassadors are said by the Scotch Writers, [a] to have offer'd King David in their Masters Name, "Not only to deliver into his Hands the strong Town and "Castle of Barwick, but even the Person of his old Competitor King Bailiol, for whose "Sake the War was first begun betwixt them; on Condition, that he would reject the "Motions of the French King, and agree to observe the Truce, as both in Equity and "Honour he was bound. These Offers (if the Scotch Authors do not enlarge them, as we have good reason to doubt, especially in that part which relates to the Delivery of the Bailiol) being propounded to the King of Scotland in his Council, caused the more Prudent Sort to advise their Master, "that in no wise they ought to be reject-"ed: Since the Friendship of a Conquerour, especially on Conditions both Honoura-"ble and Advantageous, was more preferable than to abett the Weaker Side, both a-"gainst Equity and Profit. But David himself thrô the great Love he bore to the French King (with whom he had also sojourned about seven Years, during his Exile) and the Major Part of his Nobility being such, as had either Younger Heads or more Daring Hearts; or who were either sway'd by their Princes Example or France's Gold, were all desirous to take this Opportunity of King Edward's Absence, to revenge themselves on the English Nation, and so were fatally drawn to condescend to King Philips chargeable and hazardous Request, and reject King Edward's more safe and profitable Offers.

[a] Hector l.15.p. 325. Buchan. l.9. p.302. & Holinshead Hist. Scot.p.240.vid. Froiss.c.137. & Du Chesne p. 666. Mezeray & Aiscues Hist. of Scotland, p. 178. & Walsin. Hypod.p.119.id. Hist.p.157. & Giov.Villani l. 12.c.75. vid. Odoric. Rainal. ad hunc ann. §. 43. Adam Murimouth, &c.

II. Wherefore a [b] Parliament of all his Earls, Prelates, and Barons of Scotland, being met at St. John's Town, it was concluded, that England should speedily be invaded with a Puissant Army: Now that, King Edward being at Calais, and such other of his Forces in Bretagne, Gascogne, and Poictou, a pleasing hope of Success began to smile upon Scotland. So a War was resolved, an Army appointed to be levyed forthwith, and Solemn Proclamation made, that all who were able and fit to bear Arms, should come to the King to the General Rendezvous at St. Johnston upon the Tay, by such a Day, well appointed. Accordingly toward the latter end of September, there came to St. Johnston the Earls, Barons, and Prelates of Scotland, all ready to serve their King against their old Enemies the English. Among other great Captains, thither came [c] Reginald, Lord of the Isles of Hebrides, who govern'd the Wild Scots; for they would not endure the Government of any Man else, thô others desired to obtain it: And he brought with him no less than 3000 of the most Couragious and Hardy People of all that Country. There came also thither at the same time, David Earl of Rosse with his Troops, and made his Musters before the King: But the Night following he treacherously slew the Noble Lord of the Isles, with seven of his Kinsmen, as they lay in their Beds, and immediately fled thereupon, and gat him into Rosse: At which horrid Fact, as the Army was greatly troubled, so it was very much weakned, the Friends of both Parties, for fear of a Civil Combustion between the two Families, departing to their several Homes.

[b] Du Chesne p. 666.

[c] Ita Hector & Buchan. sed John apud Froiss.

King David, thô he was extreamly incensed hereby, and eagerly bent, and fully resolved severely to punish that insolent and daring Fact; yet becaufe he would not break off this Expedition, defer'd the Prosecution thereof, till a more convenient Opportunity. Althô the Lord William Douglas of Liddisdale, us'd his utmost to perswade him, rather for that time to defer this journey, and first to Chastise these Insolencies at Home,

Home, thereby to allay those unkind heats, that might else raise a General Conflagration in his Absence. But all would not do, the King was so hot upon his purposed War with England; to which his Affection and Obligations to the French Nation, and his own evil Destiny, hurried him on continually. AN. DOM. 1346. An. Regni Angliæ XX. Franciæ VII.

When the whole Army was assembled at St. Johnston, it amounted to between 50000 and 60000 Fighting Men; with which Forces King David began his March from St. Johnston in the beginning of October, about a Moneth after King Edward had lay'd his Siege before Calais. On the first Day he reach'd Dumfermeling, which was about 20 Scottish Miles onward: The next Day passing a little Arm of the Sea, he came to Sterling, and thence to Edinburgh; where again he muster'd all his Men and found them to be 3000 Men of Arms, Knights, and Esquires, and 30000 other on Geldings, and Gallowayes, besides the 15000 Crossbows of Genoua, and the French Auxiliaries. From Edinburgh he marched to Roxborough, the first Fortress that was then on the English side that way. The Captain whereof was a Famous Souldier, Sr. Edward Montagu, Uncle to the present Earl of Salisbury: Of whose Valour We had occasion [d] to speak in the Fifteenth Year. King David, whether in doubt of a Man, whom he had already experienced to be unconquerable, even when in a Place of less strength and importance, or rather because he designed greater things, passed him by, without offering the least Assault to the Castle; and on the sixth of October began to enter Northumberland. Upon his first coming to the Borders, before he set foot within the English pale, he made many new Knights, to encourage and animate his Men: But especially he created the Lord William Douglas, the Son of Archimbald Douglas, who fell in the Battle of Halliden, Earl of Douglas; and committed to his Charge the Leading of one Brigade.

[d] L. 1. c. 19. §. 19. p. 251. &c.

III. The first [e] Fortress they came to, near the Borders, was Lidel, round which they lay encamped for three Days; but on the Fourth, after a Vigorous Attack, carried it by fine force, where they put most of those they found to the Sword: But the Captain Sr. Walter Selby, before he would deliver his Sword, compounded with a Scotch Knight, to have his Life and the Lives of his Children saved; which was thereupon assured him. But when King [f] David heard of the Captains being taken, he gave order, that his Head should be cut off: Then the Scotch Knight, who had taken him, began to intreat in his behalf, at least, that he might be admitted into the Kings Presence; this with much adoe being granted, the English Knight upon his knees requested, that his Life might be saved for a Ransom: But notwithstanding he was again adjudged to die: Nor only so, but the Cruel Prince commanded two of his Children to be strangled in sight of their Father; and having thereby afflicted his Mind almost to Madness, with rage and grief, he presently caused his Head to be stricken off; not allowing him so much time, as to make a Confession; thô like a good Christian, he instantly desired that Ghostly comfort. Surely that hatred is Diabolical and Implacable, nor only unworthy of a Christian, but even exceeding the Barbarity of Infidels; which extends beyond this Life, and endeavours, not only to destroy the Body, but also to plunge the Soul into Eternal Ruine.

[e] Holinshead Scotl. p. 240. &c. ut ante.

[f] Stow p. 243. Holinshead ibid. &c.

After this Merciless Execution, the Scotch Army marched to Lenercost; where they spoil'd the Abbey of all its Ornaments, and whatever was valuable therein, and so passing the River Irthing, they went by Naworth Castle, and leaving Cumberland, enter'd on the other side the Picts-Wall into Northumberland, wasting all along with fire and sword, till they came to the Priory of Hexham, which was also pillaged and sacked; but the Town was saved from fire by the Kings Command; for he was advised to spare four Towns from fire in his Passage to York (whither he thought to go without Resistance) namely this of Hexham, Cerbridge, Durham, and Darlington; to the end they might serve him as so many storehouses, to lay in what quantities of Victuals and Provender, he should find about in the Country; therewith to sustain his Army upon Necessity, if he should either stay long in England, or be reduced to any extremity. At Hexham he lay three Days, and thence Marched to Ebchester, beyond the River Derwen, being one of the first Towns on that side within the Bishoprick of Durham. As thus he marched, wasting and spoiling the Country on every side, toward the City of Durham, he destroyed many of the Farms, belonging to the Abbey of that City; and had utterly ruin'd them all, had [g] not some of the Monks, who were taken thereabouts, and were kept, as Prisoners to be Ransomed, made an agreement for themselves, and the rest of their Fraternity, to pay the next Day ready down a 1000 pounds Sterling, on Condition they would forbear spoiling the Residue of their Mannors, or their Tenents: But of all others, they [h] took one penny for every Head, and one penny for every Foot, which being done, they were left free; but otherwise put to the sword: And thus they intended to do to every Soul they should meet with, even to the River Trent; but that they found a stop long before. At last King David came, and encamped by the Wood of Beare-Park, within three Leagues of Durham, not far from Nevils-Cross: He took up his Lodgings in the Mannor there, and daily sent forth strong Detachments to fetch in Booty, and to burn and destroy Houses and Villages. The Spoil, Desolation, and Slaughter, which Rapine, Fire, and Sword, spread along before the Enemy, was both Barbarous and terrible; for they spared neither Young, nor Old, neither Church, Chappel, nor Monastery; but in their blind fury, made one General Heap of both Sacred and Profane. Not so much as the Goods and Lands, belonging to the Patrimony of St. Cuthbert were exempted from Rapine and Plunder, as the Scotch Writers themselves confess; thô not only the Monks of the Abbey dedicated to that Saint, had compounded for their exemption; but also, as Hector says, King David was strictly admonished in a Dream, by no means to presume to touch any thing belonging unto his Church.

[g] Knighton p. 2590. n. 40. & Stow p. 243.

[h] Knighton ibid. n. 10.

An. Dom. 1346. An. Regni Angliæ XX. Franciæ VII.

IV. Now the Noble Queen of England, Philippa, being at that time in the North-parts about York, when she heard of the first Motions of the Scots, was not forgetfull of the King, her Husbands Honour, and of the Good of his Kingdom: But putting on a Spirit, worthy of Her that was Consort to King Edward, and Mother to the Black-Prince, sent out her Summons to all the Lords and Prelates of those Parts, and others, left by the King for the Defence of the Borders, to repair with all speed unto her. The Summons were sent forth in the Name of the King of England, by the Queen, and the Archbishop of York; and soon after there came the Lords and Captains of England, with their Retinues to York, to the Queen; where she made her General Musters. Then the Queen and the Archbishop sent away an Herald at Arms to King David, "requiring him to desist from further invading the Country, and to return into Scotland, till "some Reasonable Order for a final Peace might be agreed betwixt him, and the King "his Master: Otherwise he should be sure to have Battle to the Uttermost within "three Days after. [1] But that if he refused all terms of Agreement, he should remember, that there was in Heaven a Just God, of Power sufficient to Revenge the Injuries done unto England; and especially to his Servants the Priests, and other Holy Persons, whom he had slain with the Sword, neither sparing Church, nor Church-Lands, nor weak Women, nor Innocent Children. But all this signified little, or nothing, to that Prince, who was not only stirr'd up by his Youth, and an Emulation of his Fathers Glory, but also provoked to Revenge, as well by the former dealings of his English Enemies, as by the manifold Benefits received of his Friend of France: Wherefore he sends back a Mortal Defiance, and the next Day set his Men in Order to receive their Enemies; if they should come forward.

[1] Hector Boeth. l.15. fol.324.

The first Battalia he committed to the Care of the Lord Robert Stuart, Prince of Scotland, as being Eldest Son of King Davids Eldest Sister, Margaret Bruce; with whom was the Lord Patrick Dumbar Earl of March: The Second was commanded by John Randulph Earl of Murray, and William Earl of Douglas: And the Third he Lead himself, having with him the French Auxiliaries, and the Flower of the Nobility of Scotland. Thô Buchanan, by I know not what Authority, contradicts his Friend Hector here, and gives the first Battail to the Earls of Murray and Douglas, the Middle to the King, and the last to Prince Robert Stuart and Dumbar. In the same manner also, the Scotch Historians divide the English Army, contrary to what we shall manifest forthwith.

V. Now were the English come from York within about three Miles of Durham, being in Number 1200 Men of Arms, 3000 Archers, and 7000 Footmen; besides a Choice Band of Expert Souldiers, newly come from before Calais; the whole amounting to [k] 16000 compleat. Then they were Order'd into Four Bodies, Three to engage with the Enemy, and the Fourth to stand behind, as a Reserve on Horseback: For since the Scots exceeded them in Number, it seem'd best to the English thus to dispose their Men, because if one of their Battails should be broken, by this fresh Reserve, it might be again Repaired. And their Fronts being little less large, than the Scots, their Paucity was not so well observed; nor were they unlikely to make good their Part with the Enemy, because (thô the Scots Numbers were greater) while things should be doubtfull, no more Hands among them could be employ'd, than among the English; who well-nigh equall'd them in Front; and if the English should prevail, their Enemies Numbers would rather encrease the Confusion, than give them any Advantage. Of these a great Part were Clergymen; Priests, Chaplains, Fryers, and the like; like; but, as my [l] Author says, good tall Trenchermen, such, as were not afraid of a Crack'd Crown, thô they had no hair to hide the Wound. But [m] Piety, and a Love to their Country, laid the Foundation of this Courage, for seeing what havock King David had made of Hôly Places and Persons, they armed themselves with Faith in him, who sets himself in Array against those, who defie Religion, and reared up the Banner of their Saviour, as if now they fought against Infidels. AN. DOM. 1346. An. Regni Angliæ XX. Franciæ VII.

[k] Giov. Villani l.12. c.75. p. 887.

The First Brigade was govern'd by the Lord Henry Piercy, who was General of all the Army, thô not Earl of Northumberland, as Hector foolishly calls him; since it appears, [n] that his Grandson was the first Earl of that Title. With him was Thomas Hatfield Lord Bishop of Durham, Gilbert Umphravile Earl of Angos, the Lord Thomas Musgrave, and the Lord Henry Scroop of Masham. In the Second Battalia was William Zouch Archbishop of York, and Lord Warden of the North, and John Kirkeby Bishop of Carlile; with whom were the Lord Ralph Nevil of Raby, and his Son Sr. John Nevil, and [o] Ralph Lord Hastings and Others: Althô I must not dissemble, that [p] Tinemouth places the Lord Nevil in the Van. The Third Battail was lead by Thomas Beck Lord Bishop of Lincoln, a Man of great Fame and Merit, being assisted with the Lord John Moubray, the Lord John Leyburn, and Sr. Thomas Rokeby High-Sheriff of Yorkshire; of whose first Advancement from an Esquire we have spoken in the first Year of this History. The Fourth and Last Battalia was govern'd by Edward Bailiol, David's Competitor for the Crown of Scotland, with whom were John Stratford Archbishop of Canterbury, William Lord Ros of Hamlake, and [q] Robert Lord Bertram, High-Sheriff of Northumberland, and Governour of Newcastle on the Tine. Besides all which, William Lord Deincourt, and Robert Lord Ogle, Sr. [r] Nicolas Charnells, and Sr. Henry Bellasis of Durham, were appointed with a strong Guard to attend the Queens Person, who by the best Authors is affirmed to have kept the Field all the time of the Battle. Each of these Four Battalia's consisted of 4000 Choice Men, among and besides whom were, as we said, many Clergymen, who came thither now of their own Accord, with wonderfull Zeal to fight against the Scots; who had so profan'd and violated the Honour of God in his Members the Clergy, that with great Devotion and Faith, these Holy Men had already marked them forth for Ruine: Some whereof refused not to fight against these Enemies of Religion, and Others carried their Crosses, as Banners before the Men of War, singing at the joyning of the Battle Miserere, to the great Encouragement of the Sword-men, who thought themselves unconquerable, since they fought now as well with the Sword of the Spirit, as with an Arm of Flesh.

[l] Aiscue's hist. Scotl. p. 179.
[m] Knighton p. 2590. n. 10.
[n] Mill's Catal. Honor. p. 718. & Dudg. 1 Vol. p. 276.
[o] Monast. Angl. Vol. 2. p. 918. a. n. 30.
[p] Joh. Tinemouth Aur. Hist. M.S. in Bibl. Bodlei. l. 21. c. 26.
[q] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 545.
[r] Dugd. Warw. p. 19.

VI. When thus on both Sides the Armies were order'd, the Amazon Queen Philippa [t] rode before the Battles on a white Courser, being attended with her Guard, and passing from Rank to Rank, she sweetly desired them all "to use their utmost endea-"vour to defend the Honour of her Dear Lord, the King of England, and wished them "every Man in the Name of God to take Heart and be of good Courage, graciously "promising, that to her Power she would remember and consider the Well-deserving "no less, than if her Lord the King was there personally to bear witness of all their A-"ctions: And so she recommended the whole Army and her Self to God and St. George. This was done early in the Morning.

[t] Froiss. c. 138.

Now before the Armies began to move, Earl Douglas by the Kings Command rode forth with a good Brigade of Horse to discover the Face of the Enemy, and as Occasion was offer'd, to skirmish with them. But he coming suddenly e'r he was aware, into their Danger, was received so sharply, and upon his flight pursued so warmly, that having lost [u] 500 of his best Men, he very narrowly escaped himself to the Main Body. Where as soon as he had recover'd himself, the whole English Army appeared in Three Battalia's, for the Fourth was not yet discover'd, marching forward very couragiously. Whereupon Sr. David Graham, [x] a valiant Baron of Scotland, with a Wing of 500 Horse well appointed, gave a full Charge upon the left Flank of the English Archers, hoping to disorder and overrun them: But he was mistaken, for they received him with such a Showre of Arrows, that after two or three Attempts in vain, having lost many of his Men, he also was fain to fly back to the Main Battle upon the Spurr, in great danger of being taken by his Pursuers.

[u] Buchan. l. 9. p. 302. Aiscue's Hist. Scotl. p. 180.
[x] Hector l. 15. fol. 324. n. 50. Aiscue's Hist. Scotl. p. 180, 181.

VII. These inauspicious Beginnings did nothing at all startle the Courage of the Scotch King: Who was both Young and Valiant, and because he had never yet in Person maintain'd a just Fight, greedy of War, hoping to be no less Victorious than his Father Robert Bruce had been before him. Wherefore he presently commanded to sound a Charge: And immediately the Lord Robert Stuart, Prince of Scotland joyn'd furiously with the English Van; the other two Battails disposing themselves the same way. This fight was well maintain'd, and with much Bravery on both Sides: And the Engliſh Archers and the Croſsbows of Genoua brought up the firſt Courſe of this Martial Banquet; but the Engliſh had much the better ſhare, for their Shot endured longer and did more Execution. But Prince Robert reſolving not to ſtand aloof at ſuch Diſadvantage, preſſed hard forward to come to handy Strokes, ſo that the Archers were obliged to yield him Way, as their manner was in Extremity by opening to the Right and Left: Thô even at that inſtant they gall'd him on each Flank. However now he joyn'd with the Lord Percy's Battail, and maintain'd the Fight with much Courage and Honour, the Scots manfully laying about them with ſharp and heavy Axes, with which they gave mighty Strokes, cleaving Helmets and Shields; ſo that for a while the Engliſh were very hard put to it. Which when King Bailiol ſaw, as one that conſider'd (no ſuch Danger being in other places) the chief Power of the Scots lay here, and not doubting, but if the Engliſh were rendred abſolute at the beginning, ſo good an Omen would add Courage to them and Terrour to the Enemy, he reſolved preſently to fall on here; and accordingly comes up with 4000 Horſe, on a good round Trot in very dreadfull Order. This new and unforeſeen Enemy ſo amazed the Hearts of that Battalia of Scots, who already had found themſelves well enough match'd, that all their Martial Ardour began to languiſh immediately; and the Engliſh were exceedingly exalted in their Courages: Which when Prince Robert and the Earl of March perceived, and that already their Men began to give back in ſome Diſorder, hoping to bring them off by an early Care, and ſo to prevent that Loſs, which elſe they ſaw inevitable; they gave Order to Retreat, and drew off not only pretty well, but conſidering the Circumſtances, wiſely. Nor let any Man here reckon me Partial, as if becauſe our Preſent Soveraign King James the Second, is derived from the Loyns of that Lord Robert Stuart, I ſhould appear diligent in putting a fair Gloſs upon this his Flight, which ſome Authors have condemned, and for which King David afterwards for a while diſinherited, and excluded him in his Paſſion from the Right of Succeſſion. For I appeal to all, that have duely conſider'd the Hiſtory of Robert Stuart, as well before as after this Day; not only in theſe Papers which yet are ſincere, but in any either Scotch or other Writer, whether he was not generally reputed for a Perſon both of good Conduct and Courage unqueſtionable: Inſomuch, that during King Davids Abſence in France, he had in a manner freed all Scotland from the Engliſh Yoke, and when in time he came by Right of Succeſſion to wear that Crown himſelf, he certainly maintained his Honour and his Kingdom, not only againſt King Edward himſelf, but even to the very end of his Life.

An. Dom. 1346. An. Regni Angliæ XX. Franciæ VII.

But to return; whatever King David, whoſe Heat and Raſhneſs could not let him ſee ſo clearly, thought of this Matter either then or afterwards, either his Military Skill, or at leaſt the Genius, whoſe Care it was to preſerve the Founder of the Illuſtrious Family of the Stuarts, perſwaded him to this timely Retreat: Which Example had King David with the reſt of his Army follow'd, either their Loſs had been nothing at all, or very inconſiderable: The Engliſh being not able to compell them to any thing againſt their Minds, much leſs to purſue them too cloſe without breaking their Order, and perhaps expoſing themſelves to ſome notable Diſadvantage.

VIII. However King David diſdained to follow thoſe, whom now he look'd on, if not as Cowards, yet as Traytors and Deſertors: For he was jealous, that his Nephew Robert retreated thus, with deſign to leave him expos'd to be cut off, that ſo the Crown might fall to Him. Wherefore now he fought with the more Reſolution, being fully determin'd, either to repair this Fault or not to ſurvive it. But at that inſtant his Adverſary King Bailiol, having clear'd his hands of the Van of the Enemy, whom he thought not fit as yet to purſue, comes in with his freſh Troops, and falls upon King Davids Battail in the Flank, the Engliſh Van preſſing hard upon him in the Front, which together with the late Diſaſter ſo diſcouraged the Scots, that they were no longer able to endure unſhaken, but began by degrees to give back: At what time the [y] Monks of Durham being in the Steeple of their Church, and upon the Leads and Battlements, beholding the Scots upon the point of Looſing all, and ſome actually flying and fled, lifted up their Voices altogether, and fill'd the Air with the Noiſe thereof, crying aloud, and praiſing God and ſinging for Joy, even with weeping Tears, Te Deum laudamus: Which Voice the Engliſh hearing, as if it had been juſt at their backs, took thence a more confident Faith in God, and reſiſted the Enemy more vigorouſly, and trod them down more valiantly. For whatever ſome ſay, affirming that Durham was now deſtroy'd alſo; it is certain, that as we ſaid before, the Monks of that City had compounded with the Scots for themſelves, their Mannors and Tenants thereabouts, [y] Knighton p. 2590. n. 30 & 40.

abouts, on Conſideration of a 1000 l. Sterling, to be by them paid the next Day without any further Delay: Which yet, being deliver'd by this Victory, they did not pay. And it was King Davids Deſign to leave theſe Parts in pretty good Caſe till his Return; for he [z] thought to viſit the Monaſtery of Beverly, and other Religious Places in Yorkſhire, that abounded with Riches, and even to attempt the City of York it ſelf: For he imagin'd there would be none able to reſiſt him; but that all the Strength of England was now before Calais.

AN. DOM. 1346. An. Regni Angliæ XX. Franciæ VII.

When therefore King Davids Battail alſo was broken, and the Scots began to fly, the Engliſh fell more furiouſly on thoſe that ſtill kept the Field, reſolving not to hazard ſo glorious a Victory by an inconſiderate and raſh Purſuit. Wherefore many Scots were gather'd up by Prince Robert and Earl Patrick, who hover'd a far off in ſo conſiderable a Body, that the Engliſh durſt not too freely follow the Chace, eſpecially the Victory not being yet clearly their own: And yet neither could they by any means prevail with their Men to make another Attempt againſt the Enemy; becauſe their Friends came flying that way continually, and ſo added to their former Diſcouragements.

[z] Knighton ib.

As for King David he failed nothing, either in the Duty of a Good Captain or of a Valiant Souldier; but more than once rallied his diſorder'd Men, and encouraged them both by his Words and his Example: So that thoſe, who were moſt near unto him, were even aſham'd to forſake ſo Valiant a Prince, and therefore long they held together cloſe in a Ring, like a Tower of Steel about their Maſter, fighting deſperately with Spear and Shield, ſharp Battle-Axes and Halberds, till not above 80 of them remain'd with the King alive. He for his part being ſenſible of the unhappy Event of the Day, and not willing to outlive ſo many of his Nobility and other Loyal Subjects, preſſed now forward to meet a like Death himſelf: When a valiant Eſquire of Northumberland named John Copland, who well knew him to be the King, ſtept forward with one hundred Men of Arms, whom he had retained for that Service, and bad him yield himſelf. Here the Scotch Writers ſay, [a] that King David thô wounded in two Places, and having his Weapons beat out of his Hands, yet thrô Indignation gave Eſquire Copland ſuch a Stroke over the Mouth with his Gauntlet, that he beat out two of his Fore-teeth. But in my Opinion ſo ſmall an Effect ought not to be aſcribed to ſo great a Cauſe, as the Hand of an angry young Warrier, eſpecially when arm'd with a Gauntlet. For if Copland's Viſor was down, the Stroke would not have reach'd his Teeth, and if his Face was unarm'd, it muſt have been much more ſevere, if not fatal unto him. Wherefore I rather believe what Others alſo report, that King David upon Coplands Summons refuſed to yield, but to ſome Perſon of Quality, whereupon the Eſquire deceived him, by telling him that he was a Baron of England, on which account perhaps it is, that Hector calls him a Knight, thô indeed he was not ſo: However King David believing him, gave him his Gauntlet, in token he was his Priſoner alone, and ſo yielded.

[a] Hector l. 15. f. 325. n. 80. Buchan. l. 9. p. 302.

Yet certainly it ſurpriſes me not a little, that of all the Engliſh Lords there preſent, not one was found, to have any Ambition to take ſo great a King; eſpecially, when the Matter was ſo feaſible, his Men being moſt either ſlain, or routed; but that they all left the Task to a mean Eſquire: Upon theſe Reaſons, I confeſs, that I am rather enduced to believe, what is alſo deliver'd by no mean [b] Author, that ſeeing all things run to ruine, and having received ſome Wounds himſelf, beſides an Arrow in his Head, he endeavour'd to eſcape, but in the Chace, was taken by this Valiant Eſquire at Merington; which is the more confirmed by what follows; when we ſhall find, how it was ſome time, e're it was known to the Queen of England; that this Royal Priſoner was taken.

[b] Knighton p. 2591. n. 10.

IX. Now before this Second Battalia of the Scots was thus overcome, their Third Battail alſo, as well by their Diſcouragement from the ill Succeſs of their Fellows, as by the Valour of their Oppoſers, was diſcomfited, broken, ſlain, and put to Flight: Thô few eſcaped of this Brigade. One of the Leaders, John [c] Randulph, Earl of Murray was ſlain, with a great Number of the Nobility of Scotland, beſide the Commons; and the other Leader William Earl of Douglas, was taken Priſoner. So that the Engliſh gain'd an entire Victory; and as one [d] ſays, had they totally joyn'd in a cloſe purſuit, and not been diſtracted in taking Priſoners and Plunder, that Day had been the laſt, to the Obſtinate Rebellion of the Scots againſt the Engliſh Nation, and they might have blotted out their Name from the Land of the Living. But it pleaſed God in his Providence to order it otherwiſe.

[c] Hector p. 325.

[d] Walſingh. hiſt. p. 158. n. 1.

X. This Cruel Battle (thô ſome [e] by miſtake place it near Newcaſtle, and ſo call

[e] Froiſ. c. 138.

it

An. Dom. 1346. An. Regni Angliæ XX. Franciæ VII.

it the Battle of Newcastle upon Tyne) was fought at Nevils-Cross near Durham, whence also it bears the Name of the Battle of Nevils-Cross, with most Authors; as [f] also it is called the Battle of Durham in the Record it self. And as thrô mistake there is some variety among Authors, as to the Place, where it was fought; so neither do they agree, as to the time; notwithstanding it fell [g] most certainly on the 17 of October, or St. Lukes Eve, which that Year proved to be Tuesday: Thô Froisard in this point is much in the wrong, who expresly affirms, that it was fought on the Saturday next after St. Michael, which that Year was the 30 of September; and Du Chesne, who generally follows Froisard, yet here mistakes him, saying, that it was the Saturday next before St. Michael, which must have been the 23d. of the said Moneth. But these differences are nothing so Material, as that of Hector Boetius, who positively, and in Words at length averres, that this Misfortune happen'd to their Nation, in the Year of our Lord, One Thousand, Three Hundred, Fourty and Eight, which is wide two Years, and most notoriously false and erroneous, as appears not only from the joynt Testimonies of Records and Histories; but from all other Concurrences in the World.

[f] Stow p. 243.
[g] Tho. Stubbs de Episc. Ebor. f. 1732. Knighton p. 2591. Asmole p. 656. Walsing. Fabian, Fox, Holinsh. &c.

XI. The Fight continued in all three Hours, viz. from Nine in the Morning, till High Noon; and therefore, thô [h] one says, the English lost but four Knights, and five Esquires; yet that must not be allowed, unless we understand, that besides them, many of the Commons were slain also: For we are assured by a good [i] Author, as well as sound Reason, that this Victory was not bought without the Lives of many Men; and we find from [k] undeniable Proof, that particularly the Lord Ralph Hastings, was here Mortally wounded, of which hurts he died, leaving however, a Scotch Prisoner, whom he had taken in this Battle, to his Nephew, Edmund Hastings of Rousby, and John de Kirkeby of Wigginthorp, a Gentleman of an Ancient Family, to be shared betwixt them.

[h] Knighton p. 2591.
[i] Froisf. ibid.
[k] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 579.

But of the Scots, we are assured, there fell no less, than 15000, one says above [l] 20000, together with many great Lords, and an 100 of the best Knights in Scotland: Namely, John Randulph Earl of Murray, the Earl of Stratherne, the Lord David Hay, Constable, the Lord Edward Keth Marshal, the Lord Straqutrin Chamberlain, together with the Chancellor of Scotland: The Lord Philip Meldron, the Lord John Stuart, and Alan Stuart his Brother; Maurice Murray, John Crawford, William Haliburton, Reginald Kirk-Patrick, Patrick Herring, Sr. Michael Scot, Sr. Alexander Gurdon, Sr. William Frasier, Sr. John Lindesay of Gleenesk, Sr. Thomas Vaux, Sr. Dongal Campbell, Sr. Alexander Ramsey, a Valiant Knight, who bore that Day the Kings Standard, and Sr. Alexander Bodeval, who was called by the Souldiers the Flour of Chevalry, and would not depart from the Kings side, but died there by him: Besides these Frenchmen, Sr. Humphry Blois, Sr. Robert Maltalent, Sr. John de la Motte, and Sr. John Bonville. These are the Names of the slain, as many as were found with their Coat-Armours on, whereby they were known; besides the Prisoners, who were, David Bruce, King of Scotland, the Earl of Fife, the Earl of Menteith, the Earl of Southerland, the Earl of Wigton, the Earl of Carrick, the Earl Douglas, with a Brother of his, the Lord James Douglas, the Lord Robert Vescy, the Bishop of Aberdeen, and the Bishop of St. Andrews, the Lord William Kinaston, the Lord William Ramsey, the Lord Malcolm Flemin, the Lord David Banant, the Lord John St. Clare, the Lord Willliam Moubray; besides those of less Mark. In the Field many Spoils of great Value were taken, together with the Holy-Cross of Halyrood House, which was found upon the King, who bare it about him in confidence of its Vertue; and that thereby he should be secur'd from all Danger: But he was now spoil'd both of that, and other his Jewels, which were found about him. Now also was all the Booty recover'd, which the Scots had taken in this Expedition, and all the Provision, which they had left for their own use at Hexham, or elsewhere, and the Chace of them was held as far as [m] Pruddo-Castle, and Cerbridge, for about 14 or 16 Miles together.

[l] Knighton p. 2591. Hector Boet. l. 15. fol. 325. n. 10.
[m] Stow p. 243.

XII. John Copland, the Esquire of Northumberland, immediately, after he had taken his Royal Prey, rôde out of the Field with him, and having Eight of his Friends and Servants in his Company, all well mounted and armed, never left riding, till he had gotten above twenty Miles from the Place of Battle, unto the strong Castle of Ogle in Northumberland, on the River Blithe, whereof He was Captain; and then he said, "He would not deliver the King of Scots to any Man or Woman, living; "but only at the Command of the King of England, his Sovereign: And so with great Care he apply'd himself to heal the Kings Wounds, and sent for his Friends and Allies, and others, whom he could procure for Money, or Friendship, to help to defend the Castle, Caſtle, becauſe he well knew, he muſt give an exact Account of this his Royal Priſoner. AN. DOM. 1346.

The Queen of England tarried in the Field till toward the Evening, with her Guard about her; at which time moſt of the Engliſh Captains were returned from the Chace unto her. But when ſhe heard, that an Eſquire, named John Copland, had taken the King of Scots Priſoner, and carried him away, no Man could tell whither: She diſpatched a Purſuivant after him, with Command to bring forth his Priſoner, the King of Scots unto her; gently admoniſhing him, that he had not done well in carrying Him away without leave. All the Remainder of that Day, and the Night following the Engliſh Army kept the Field, as well for their greater Honour, as for the ſecurity of their Friends, many whereof were ſtill in the Chace: But the Queen had Lodgings provided for her in the City of Durham. After which ſhe rode back with her Guard to York, leaving Edward [n] Bailiol, and the other Engliſh Lords of the North to proſecute the War with Scotland; who forthwith entring that Land with fire and ſword, took the ſtrong Caſtle of Hermitage (for Roxborough was Engliſh before) and without any Reſiſtance ſubdued the Countries of Anandale, and Galloway, the Marches, Tividale, and Ethrick Foreſt, extending their Arms to Cockburne-Peke, and Sowtray-Hedge: And thus for that time Scotland was ſubdued.

[n] Hector. Buch. Aiſcue's Hiſt. Scotl. Holinſh. &c.

XIII. The mean while Eſquire John Copland, [o] having received and peruſed the Queens Letters, returned this bold Anſwer; "That as for the King of Scots, he "ſhould be ſafely kept, and he would be anſwerable for his forth coming upon occa- "ſion: But that He was reſolved to deliver him at the Command of no Man, or Wo- "man living, but only at the Pleaſure of his Sovereign Lord and Maſter, the King of "England. This Anſwer did not well ſatisfie the Queen; wherefore ſhe ſent to the King, her Husband, who lay before Calais, Letters of Complaint, deſiring to know, what he would have done in this caſe; when one of his Subjects refus'd to Obey her Commands: And fully enforming him of the Affairs of the Realm, particularly of this laſt Succeſs near Durham. King Edward having received theſe Letters from his beloved Queen, ſent immediately for John Copland to come over the Sea to him to Calais; which Command the Eſquire moſt readily obey'd, and having put his Royal Priſoner in ſafe Cuſtody, under the Hands of the Lord Ralph Nevill, and other his Friends and Allies; he rode thrô England, till he came to the Lands end at Dover: Where he went on Board a good Veſſel, arrived ſafe at the Camp before Calais, and ſo was brought to the Preſence of the King. As ſoon as the King ſaw him, he took him graciouſly by the hand, and ſaid, "Ha! now welcome, my Loyal Eſquire, that by "your Hardineſs have taken mine Adverſary, the King of Scots. "Sir, ſaid the Eſquire "kneeling, if God of his Grace have ſuffer'd me to take the King of Scots by true "Conqueſt of Arms, I think, no Man ought to look with an Evil Eye upon me; "For God of his Goodneſs may as well ſend ſuch Fortune to a poor Eſquire, as to a "Great Baron. And Sir, I humbly intreat Your Majeſty, not to be diſpleaſed with "me, thô I did not deliver the King of Scots at the Queens Command: For Sir, I "hold Service of Your Majeſty (as mine Oath is alſo made only to You) and not of "the Queen; but only in Good Manners. Beſides, I did not think fit to commit ſo "great a Priſoner to any ſmall Company, leaſt had he been loſt by a Reſcue, I my "ſelf had incurr'd the forfeiture of my Head to Your Majeſty; and thô the Queen "ſent Meſſengers indeed, yet there came no Forces ſufficient to have ſecur'd his car- "rying up to London, if I had deliver'd him upon Command. The King took him up graciouſly from the ground, ſaying, "John, the good Service that You have done "Us, and your known Loyalty and Valour are of ſo high Merit, that they muſt coun- "tervail your treſpaſs: So that We admit well of your Excuſe; and ſhame light on "them, that bear You any Envy or Evil Will. But now it is our Pleaſure, that with- "in theſe three days You return home, and upon the next demand, deliver up your Pri- "ſoner to the Queen, my Wife: And to encourage You to purſue Honour, as well as "to requite this laſt piece of Service, I hereby aſſign You, near to your Houſe, where "You ſhall think beſt, 500 pounds Sterling of yearly Rent for You and your Heirs "for ever. Which till it ſhall be fully ſettled, ſhall from this day forward be paid You "yearly out of my Exchequer, and here I make You Eſquire for my Body.

[o] Froiſ. c. 139.

By this we muſt underſtand him to be made Knight Banneret, as Mr. [p] Stow proves out of the Record, who alſo ſhews from thence, how this Annual Donation was paid, viz. 400 l. out of the Kings Cuſtom of the City of London, and an 100 l. out of his Cuſtom of the Town of Barwick upon Tweed, till 500 l. lands were firmly ſettled upon him for him and his Heirs for ever. And there it appears, that the King gave him further [p] Stow ex Recordo p. 243. & Speed p. 580.

for

An. Dom. 1346. An. Regni Angliæ XX. Franciæ VII.

for his good Service at the Battle of Durham with one hundred Men of Arms, one hundred Pounds per annum out of the Custom of the Kings Port of Newcastle upon Tine, till he should settle upon him so much in Land for him and his Heirs for ever.

After so truly a Royal Bounty, King Edward enquired of him concerning what he knew as to the Particulars of that Battle, and afterwards he was fain to repeat this News to a great many Lords and Gentlemen of the Army. But on the third Day he went on Board, and return'd for England, and with him there went a [q] Command from the King to all and singular High-Sheriffs and Others, that no Scotch Prisoner should be deliver'd for any Ransom whatsoever, but that they should be all kept in safe Custody, and the King himself would satisfie all those, who took them, for the Redemption of all and every of their Prisoners. And this Command of the Kings was generally published throughout all England, to be observed on forfeiture of Life and Limb.

[q] Knighton p. 2591. n. 20.

XIV. Sr. John Copland (for so now we shall call him) being come into England, [r] went to York where the Queen was, and there made his Excuse before the Queen and the Lords of the Council, in so dutifull and rational a manner, that they were all very well satisfied with his Conduct in that Affair, and immediately took Order how, and with what Forces, and at what time the King of Scots should be conveyed to the Tower of London. After this Sr. John Copland went home to his own Castle of Ogle and assembled his Kindred and Friends, who together with those of the North-parts, and Others made up 20000 fighting Men: With whom Sr. John Copland, the Lord Ralph Nevil, and the Lord Henry Piercy convey'd him to the Limits of Yorkshire, [t] where on the 20 of December he was deliver'd, according to the Kings Command to Sr. Thomas Rokeby High-Sheriff of Yorkshire, who received him from the Lord Ralph Nevill by Indenture: And this Sr. Thomas Rokeby with all the Forces aforesaid conducted the King of Scots up to London, where the said King being mounted on an huge Black Courser, was, at the Kings Command signifi'd in his Letters, received by the Mayor, Aldermen and Citizens of London with great Pomp and Solemnity, every Company in their Proper Liveries attending the Cavalcade from Street to Street; vast Multitudes of People following him, and infinite Numbers from Belconies, and the Tops of Houses beholding this Triumphant Spectacle. And being thus brought to the Tower of London, he was lastly deliver'd up from the Hands of Sr. Thomas Rokeby aforesaid by [t] Indenture, dated the second of January, to the Lord John Darcy senior, Constable of the Tower of London, there to be kept in safe Custody. King David himself was thus secured in a safe, but respectfull manner, and the rest of the Scotch Prisoners bestow'd in other Places of Safety: But in February following, [u] John Earl of Menteith, forasmuch as he had done Homage and sworn Allegiance to King Edward of England, and had now contrary to his Oath and Duty broken his Faith, and taken up Arms in behalf of David Bruce against the King of England and the Bailiol, was by the said King of Englands Command indited of High-Treason, and thereupon arraign'd, condemn'd, hang'd, drawn and quarter'd; as also the Earl of Fife was at the same time condemn'd to the same punishment.

[r] Speed. p. 580.

[t] Ashmole p. 656. ex Rot. Scot. 20. Ed. 3. m. 2. Decemb. 20mo.

[t] Ashmole p. 656. ex Claus. 20. Ed. 3. p. 2. m. 1. Dorso.

[u] Knighton. p. 2592. n. 30. & Holinsh. Scotl. p. 241. & Stow p. 245.

XV. This Winter the Noble and Valiant [x] Earl of Lancaster and Darby, together with the Earl of Pembroke, and some of their Chief Knights and Captains, things being first settled in Gascogne, return'd for England. In which Voyage on the 8 of December, they were taken in a Storm and in great Danger, according to the King their Masters Fate, who usually was thus handled at his return for England: But God deliver'd them also this time, and they arrived safe whither they were bound.

[x] Knighton p. 2592. n. 20.

After the Battle of Durham, [y] Queen Philippa made good Provision for the Defence of the Cities of York and Durham, for the Castles of Roxborough and Newcastle upon Tine, and other Frontier Towns on the Marches of Scotland; and having set the Lord Henry Piercy, and the Lord Ralph Nevill as Governours over that side of the Country, she went from York to London: Where having taken order for the safe Custody of the King of the Scots, and the rest of the Prisoners; she then went with an Honourable Company of Ladies of the Highest Quality, whose Husbands, Fathers, Brethren and other Friends lay then before Calais and with a good Convoy, among whom was the Bishop of Durham and many other great Personages, took the Sea and had so good a Wind, that She arrived safe in the Camp that same day, being three days before the Feast of St. Andrew. The King received her with extream delight and satisfaction, and made a great and splendid Feast for all the Lords and Ladies that were with him; especially for those that came with the Queen: For the Sea being his own, he had all things, that might serve either for Use or Pleasure in great Abundance. But the City of Calais began to be very much straitned for want of Victuals.

[y] Froiss. c. 139. fol. 68. b.

XVI. And

XVI. And yet all this while many Overtures were made by his Holineſs toward the Concerting of Matters, inſomuch, that by the inſtant Mediation of the Cardinals of Naples and Cleremont, five [z] days after the Battle of Durham, a Commiſſion was made out to William Marqueſs of Juliers, William Bohun Earl of Northampton, Conſtable, Thomas Beauchamp Earl of Warwick, Marſhall, the Lord Bartholomew Burwaſh, the Lord Richard Talbot Steward of the Kings Houſe, Dr. Thomas Bradwardin Chancellor of London, John Thoresby Canon of Lincoln, and Andrew Hufford Canon of York, either to all Eight, or to any Seven, Six, Five, Four, or Three of them, to treat and conclude with the ſaid Cardinals of and upon all Quarrels and Controverſies, depending between the King and the Lord Philip of Valois and their ſeveral Allies: But we ſhall ſay no more of this Meeting, becauſe it took no Effect, the Conceſſions of France being no way anſwerable to King Edwards Demands. So that this Year paſſed away without cloſing that Breach, which threatned to prove an Inlet to many great Calamities the Year following.

AN. DOM. 1346. An. Regni Angliæ XX. Franciæ VII.

[z] 22 Octob. Rot. Norm. 20. Ed. 3. m. 18. Aſhmole p. 656.

CHAPTER the SIXTH.

The CONTENTS.

I. King Philip holds a Parliament at Paris. II. Prince Lionel holds another in King Edwards Name at Weſtminſter. III. The Pope writes to the King of England to perſwade him to Peace; King Edward's Anſwer, and Odoricus Rainaldus refuted. IV. King Philip attempts to gain the Flemings but in vain: The Earl of Flanders returning home is impriſon'd by his Subjects, becauſe he will not match with a Daughter of England. V. King Edward reinforces the Siege of Calais. VI. The Earl of Flanders by pretending a Compliance, gets his liberty and eſcapes into France. VII. Two Frenchmen, for favouring King Edwards Right, put to Death at Paris. VIII. John Duke of Normandy receives a Foil before Caſſel in Flanders. IX. The French make ſeveral Efforts to relieve Calais, but fail: The Loſſes and Difficulties of the Engliſh Camp. X. Sr. Robert of Namur tenders his Service to King Edward before Calais. XI. A ſhort Account of the Scotch Affairs ſince the Battle of Durham. XII. An Account of the Affairs of Bretagne: The Battle of Roche d' Arien, where Sr. Charles of Blois is taken Priſoner by Sr. Thomas Dagworth. XIII. Roche d' Arien retaken by the French, and the Engliſh Garriſon put to the Sword by the Men of the Country. XIV. The French Navy, intended to Victual Calais, defeated: The Caliſians thruſt 500 Poor out of the Town. XV. And ſend a Letter of their Caſe to King Philip, &c. XVI. The Earl of Lancaſter leading a Detachment towards Amiens, upon News of King Philips Approach, returns to the Engliſh Camp: The French Kings Strength; he deſires Leave of the Flemings to paſs thrô their Country, but is refuſed: The Flemings beſiege the Town of Aire, but upon Philips Approach riſe. XVII. King Philip comes to Sangate near Calais, and demands Battle of King Edward, with the Anſwer. XVIII. Two Cardinals obtain a Treaty, which comes to nothing: King Philip goes off in Deſpair. XIX. The Manner how Calais was yielded. XX. Calais ſettled by King Edward. XXI. A Truce betwen the two Kings; King Edward returns for England. XXII. A Bruſh between the Engliſh and Scots of the Borders. XXIII. Lewis the Emperour dies: King Edward choſen Emperour, refuſes. Charles King of Bohemia ſucceeds: The Death of William Occam and Walter Hemingford: A Law-Caſe.

I. THE mean while King Philip of France, having now about him his Son the Duke of Normandy with his Forces (thô he had by this heard alſo of the great Loſs that his Friend the King of Scots had ſuffer'd for his Sake) was not able as yet to attempt any thing againſt his Enemy of England, becauſe of the Winter Seaſon, further, than that he provided [a] for the Cities of Picardy that lay neareſt unto Danger, and ſet Men of War in every Fortreſs in the Marches of Guiſnes, Artois, Boulogne and about Calais. But however, being deſirous to employ that Unactive time of the Year to the beſt Advantage; that he might as well further the next Campagne, as alſo ſeek the Advice of his Peers, Lords and Commons of France, he [b] calls a Parliament of the Eſtates to meet together at Paris on the Palm-Sunday following, which fell that Year [c] on the 25 of March, or the Annunciation of the Bleſſed Virgin; and ſo became a double Holy-day: Requiring all the Barons, Prelates and Commons of his Realm, to aſſiſt him in Leavying a mighty Army againſt the King of England, who lay as then before Calais: For he ſaid, how he had ſworn, not to make a Peace, or ſo much as a Truce with his Enemies, untill he had taken full Revenge for the Loſs he had received at Creſſy, and of the high Indignities which the King of England had put upon the Crown of France, as well by Invading his Realm in Hoſtile Manner, as now by holding a Siege before Calais. Which Oath, thô it could not be punctually obſerved, yet prov'd a ſtrong Enforcement to aſſemble together all his Barons, Prelates, Chief Burgeſſes and Citizens to his Parliament.

AN. DOM. 1347. An. Regni Angliæ XXI. Franciæ VIII.

[a] Froiſ. c. 140. & Du Serres.

An. Dom. 1347. An. Regni Angliæ XXI. Franciæ VIII.

[b] Giov. Villani l.12.c.85.p.893
[c] Lit.Dom.G. *Paſch.Kal.*Apr.

Here ſeveral Ways were in this Great Council deviſed to raiſe Mony for the maintenance of his Wars, and leavying of two Formidable Armies: For King Philip had long ſince in his Secret Council reſolved to carry on the War againſt England with an High hand this next Campagne, Himſelf intending in Perſon to go at the Head of one Army againſt King Edward to raiſe the Siege of Calais; and at the ſame time to ſend his Son, the Duke of Normandy, with another mighty Army into England, to attempt the Conqueſt thereof. And upon this latter Point there had been an Ordinance drawn up and contrived, called the Ordinance of Normandy, of which we ſhall ſpeak when we come to the Engliſh Parliament, held at Weſtminſter in the beginning of this Year.

[d] Du Serres p.12.

Now for the Procuring of a ſufficient ſtock of Money for the Kings Service, it was in this Aſſembly agreed, firſt of all to call the old Treaſurers, and other Great Officers and Miniſters of State to an exact Account for Abuſing their Places, and embezling or converting to their own Uſe, the Taxes and other the Kings Monies they had been entruſted with; and to leavy and raiſe of all ſuch Offenders Fines and Mulcts proportionable to their Offences: And for the future to refer the Government of the Treaſury to the moſt eminent Perſons of the Clergy and Nobility; thereby to free the People from ſuſpecting that their Contributions were any more like to be ill employed. Of this Affair the Abbots of Marmoutier and Corbie are choſen Superintendants, to whom Four Biſhops and Four Temporal Lords were joyned Aſſiſtants. Monſieur Peter of Eſſars, Treaſurer of France is flung into Priſon, and condemned in a vaſt Fine to the King; and together with him many other great Officers being condemned, whether juſtly or unjuſtly, yield up that at once for a ſatisfaction, which they had been ſo long in heaping together; the Golden Spunge of Oppreſſion being now ſqueez'd by the Iron Hand of the Law. Then the Banquers, Lombards and other Uſurers, are call'd to a ſtrict Account for all their unjuſt Exactions upon the poor Subjects of France: The intereſt is proved to exceed the Principall; wherefore the Principal is adjudged forfeit to the King, and the Intereſt to be remitted if not paid, or if paid to be refunded to the Debtor, who had borrowed the Mony upon ſuch Intereſt; and all the Bonds and Obligations therefore to be cancell'd and made void: And yet after [e] this Wipe, the Uſurers themſelves were not releaſed out of Priſon without large Fines to the King.

[e] Fabian p.274.

But the chief Honour of this Aſſembly was, that the whole Body tenderly ſympathizing with the Head, was unanimous to ſerve the King with their Lives and Fortunes in Defence of his Crown and Dignity: Wherefore at that time they leavied vaſt Contributions among themſelves according to their Qualities, Eſtates and Offices, and ordained the like thrô the whole Kingdom. They ſet alſo a general Tax upon the whole Clergy, nor were they ſhie to make bold with what Sums had been gathered through France for the Holy War; and with the Plate, Shrines, and other Riches and Profits of Abbeys and Monaſteries. Particularly the King having received a Subſidy, which was required of the Monks of St. Dennis; among certain other Jewels of that Place which he would needs have, demanded a great Crucifix of Maſſie Gold, ſtanding over the High Altar of the Monaſtery. But to this the Monks replied, that it could not be taken away without great hazard of the Souls of thoſe who ſhould be concerned in that Action. For Pope Eugenius the III, more than 200 Years before, had in the Days of Lewis the VII, King of France, ſolemnly accurſed all thoſe of any Degree whatſoever, that ſhould offer to lay violent hands upon that Crucifix, ſacrilegiouſly to take it away from its Place, or to convert it to any Secular Uſe; as [f] appeareth by a Plate engraven under the Pedeſtall of the Croſs: With which Anſwer King Philip was ſatisfied.

[f] Fabian ibid.

In this Parliament it was alſo Ordained, that the King ſhould ſend forth his general Summons throughout the whole Realm, commanding all Perſons, who any way held of the the Crown of France, to be with the King at the City of Amiens by Whitſuntide next following ([g] Whitſunday falling on the 20 of May that Year) there to attend at the Rendezvous with all their ſeveral Retinues, in their beſt Array. Nor did they forget to invite all the Friends and Allies of the Houſe of France, eſpecially the Lord Charles of Luxemburgh, Son to the late King of Bohemia and Elect Emperour, or King of the Romans; ſet up by the Pope and his Adherents againſt the Emperour Lewis of Bavaria, who again lay under the Cenſures of the Church. AN. DOM. 1347. An. Regni Angliæ XXI. Franciæ VIII.

And laſtly, to enflame the Minds of the French Nation more eagerly to proſecute their Revenge againſt the Engliſh, King Philip [h] cauſed to be brought from St. Dennis the ſacred Banner of Oriflambe, which of old was never taken down but in the Cauſe of Chriſt againſt Infidels, or upon ſome great Diſtreſs or Neceſſity of the King and the Realm of France: But now it was taken down to be uſed againſt King Edward, and was committed to the Cuſtody of a Burgundian Lord, a Noble Gentleman and approved in Arms; and having repeated his Commands to all Men to be ready to follow this Banner when he ſhould require them, for that time he diſmiſt the Parliament.

[g] Kal. April Paſch.
[h] Giov. Villani l. 12. c. 85. p. 894.

II. Having ſeen in what manner King Philip beſtirr'd himſelf to rear his Half-ruin'd Affairs, let us now take notice, how King Edward, thô abroad, influences Matters at home, towards the Eſtabliſhing, what he had already done, and was yet undertaking. For both theſe Princes underſtood well, that the time, which was unfit for Action, was the moſt proper for Counſel; and that they could not better paſs the Winter, then in providing againſt the Caſualties of the Summer. Wherefore at King Edward's Command, a Parliament was alſo called at Weſtminſter by his ſecond Son, Prince Lionel, then Lord Warden of England, for the King his Father; [i] which Parliament began the third Day of the New-year, on the Monday next after Chriſtmas-day; as if it was the beſt Auſpice, not only to end the Old-year, but to begin the New, by wholſome Advice and Counſel.

[i] M.S. Rec. Parl. 61. & Sr. Rob. Cottons Abridgment p. 46.

On which Day Command was given by Prince Lionel, that Proclamation ſhould be made againſt wearing of Armour, and uſing of Games in and about Weſtminſter, during this Seſſions. Then alſo a time was appointed for all ſuch, as would exhibit any Petitions, and Receivers alſo, and Tryers were conſtituted to take and conſider of the ſeveral Petitions, referring to England, Ireland, Wales, Scotland, Gaſcogne, and other Foreign Parts and Iſles; and thereupon Sr. Thomas Drayton being appointed Clerk of the Parliament, becauſe ſeveral of the Lords and Commons were not yet come, they adjourn'd till next Day: At which time the Houſe being informed, that Sr. Bartholomew Burwaſh, Sr. John Darcy Lord Chamberlain, Mr. John Thoresby, and Mr. John Charleton, were arrived, as Meſſengers from the King, then lying before Calais; but could not be ready to make their appearance there, till Wedneſday next after the Morrow, the Parliament was prorogued, until that Day.

At which time Declaration was made in open Parliament, that the Reaſons of that their preſent meeting, were, becauſe the King, ſince his paſſing the Sea, and his Attempts in France, was now uncertain of his Condition; that according to the Iſſue, or Exigence of Affairs abroad, Matters might be concerted at home, for the ſafety of his Majeſty, and the Common Peace and Wealth of his Kingdom; which latter was viſibly damnified by the ſufferance of falſe Money.

Then were produced the Kings Letters Patents, Credential; wherein among other Matters, the foreſaid Declaration was verbatim expreſſed, the Letters bearing Date before Calais. Which being read in open Parliament, Sr. Bartholomew Burwaſh, for, and in the Name of himſelf, and the reſt of his Colleagues, in preſence of the Lord Warden of England, and of the Three Eſtates, "declared the good Succeſs of the King, "ſince his Arrival at la Hogue in Normandy, as in ſurpriſing and taking of many Towns "and Caſtles of War, as well at Caën, as elſewhere, and alſo of the Great Victory ob"tain'd at Creſſy, where the whole Power of France was diſcomfited; and how the "King was now come before Calais, from whence he intended not to depart, till by "the help of God, he had won the ſame. After which he intended to purſue the E"nemy without return, till the War ſhould be fully ended. This done, he produced the Copy of an Order, made by the King of France, in reference to his Son the Duke of Normandy, and others, Nobles of that Country; which was particularly recited, being called the Ordinance of Normandy, and was to this effect; "That the Duke of "Normandy ſhould paſs as Chief, with other Nobles of that Province, into England, "with 40000 Men of Arms, Knights, Eſquires, and Perſons of good Eſtate, and 40000 "Footmen, Methods being there preſcribed for keeping the Sea; and an Order alſo "added, that the ſaid Duke ſhould remain in England with the ſaid Forces, for the

An. Dom. 1347. An. Regni Angliæ XXI. Franciæ VIII.

"ſpace of ten Weeks. And in caſe the Realm of England ſhould in this Expedition "be Conquer'd, that then the Conqueſt ſhould ſolely be to the Name, Honour, and "Advantage of the ſaid Duke, and all whatſoever the King of England at that time "had there, ſhould remain entirely to the ſaid Duke, and the Knights and Lords with "him. That all that which belonged to the Nobles, and ſecular Perſons of England, "ſhould be beſtowed on the Churches, and Famous Towns of Normandy, only of the "Revenues of the Church of England, the French King ſhall receive yearly 20000 l. "ſterling; ſaving the Rights of his Holineſs. And that hereupon Surrender be made "unto the Scots, of whatſoever hath at any time been taken from them, and annexed un- "to the Crown of England.

This being read, the ſaid Meſſengers, by the Mouth of Sr. Bartholomew Burwaſh, required to know, what aid they thought fit to grant to the King, toward the furtherance of his Enterpriſes, and the Defence of the Realm: In Anſwer to which the Commons (having deſired reſpite for their Anſwer, till the Thurſday next enſuing) declared on the ſaid Thurſday by a ſchedule at large, the ſundry, particular, former Aids, the Impoſition of 40 s. Cuſtom of Wooll, extorted of them againſt Law, beſides the Arraying of Men, and common taking of Purveyors: Notwithſtanding which, they freely Grant the King Two Fifteens in two Years, ſo as that, if within two Years the Wars do ceaſe, then the latter fifteen to ceaſe alſo.

After this follow the Petitions of the Commons with their Anſwers, made by Prince Lionel, by Commiſſion from the King, in the Kings Name in Manner following, viz.

Pet. That all Acts of Parliament, not repealed, may be fully and entirely obſerved; ſo as there paſs forth no Commiſſions of Array.

Reſp. The firſt Point the King Grants, of the Reſt, he will be Adviſed.

Pet. That ſuch, as were fined for not Arraying of Men, may be diſcharged.

Reſp. The King will take Advice.

Pet. That all within ſix Miles of the Sea may have a Superſedeas for Arraying of Men.

Reſp. Only ſuch, as keep the Sea-coaſts ſhall have a Superſedeas. It is Enacted; that the Coynage in all places ſhall be open, as heretofore; Item, that thoſe who import falſe Money into the Realm, ſhall forfeit Life and Limb, and that the Juſtice of Aſſiſe, and of the Peace ſhall enquire thereafter.

Pet. That the Kings Receivers may receive as well Gold, as Silver, and that the Changers thereof be not without Parliament.

Reſp. The firſt is Granted, the other Reſpited.

Pet. That the Fourty ſhillings Subſidy of every ſack of Wooll may ceaſe.

Reſp. The Kings mind muſt be known firſt.

Pet. That Payment may be made for the laſt taking up of Victuals.

Reſp. Order ſhall be taken for that.

Pet. That the Chief of every County may be Juſtices of the Peace, and that they may Determine all Felonies.

Reſp. The firſt is Granted: For the ſecond, the King will appoint Juſtices learned in the Laws.

Pet. That the keeping of the Sea be at the Kings Charge thenceforward.

Reſp. The Sea ſhall be kept, as it hath been heretofore.

Pet. That Sheriffs in every County may have ſufficient in their Counties; and that none of thoſe Offices be granted for Life, or in Fee: Item, that Purveyors, who have not the Conſtables with them, according to the Statute of Weſtminſter, may be look'd on, as Thieves; and that Juſtices of the Aſſiſe, and of the Peace may enquire of the ſame.

Reſp. The Statute made ſhall be obſerved.

Pet. That the Fifteens in Towns, and Ancient Demeſnes be levyed, as in the Bodies of Counties, without encreaſe.

Reſp. They ſhall be levyed after the accuſtomed manner.

Pet. That all Juſtices of the Inqueſt may be ſworn, as Juſtices of the Bench; and that the Chief of them may have Power to ſwear the Reſt.

Reſp. Such Juſtices ſhall be ſworn, as ought to be; ſo as they take nothing, but Meat and Drink, and that of ſmall Value: And the Chief ſhall be impowred to ſwear the Reſt.

Pet That the Fifteenths beyond the Trent be employ'd only for Defence of the North.

Reſp. The King will provide for Defence of thoſe Parts.

Pet. That

Pet. That Strangers, Enemies of the Realm, who remain now in Newgate, may be adjudged, during the Parliament.

Resp. They shall remain there, till further Order.

Pet. That no Charter of Pardon be granted, since the Kings last Expedition.

Resp. Advice shall be taken. It is Enacted, that Lombards, and other Merchants shall receive Gold for their Ware, without any Compact, on pain of Fine and Imprisonment.

Pet. That all Alien Monks do avoid the Realm by Michaelmas, and that their Livings be disposed of to young English Scholars: And that such Aliens, Enemies, as are advanced to Livings; they being in their own Countries, but Shoemakers, Taylors, or Chamberlains to Cardinals, may depart the Realm before Michaelmas, and their Livings be bestowed on poor English Scholars.

Resp. To these two Petitions, this One Answer was given; that the Persons being Spiritual, were not to be tryed by Parliament; and that their Livings being in the Kings hands, were not without him to be disposed of.

Pet. That the King may take the Profits of all other Strangers Livings, as Cardinals, and others, during their Lives.

Resp. The King doth take their Profits, and the Council have sent their Petition to his Majesty.

Pet. That no Payment be made to any Cardinals, living in France, to treat either of War or Peace.

Resp. This is granted, as Reasonable.

Pet. That Foreign Provisors, or Aliens buying Provisions, do quit the Realm by Michaelmas, on peril of being Outlawed.

Resp. The Statute heretofore made, shall be observed; and the King shall signifie the same to the Pope.

Pet. That the annual Advancement of 2000 Marks, granted out of the Province of Canterbury, may be restrained, and that those, who sue for Recovery thereof, may be Outlawed.

Resp. The Lords think the same Reasonable; and it is further commanded, that no such be from henceforth received.

It is Enacted, that whosoever shall bring into the Realm any Aliens, the Vessel, wherein they are brought shall be forfeited to the King, and the Body of the Bringer shall lye at the Kings Discretion.

It is Enacted, that during the Wars no Person do send or transport any Money to the Pope, or to any Bishop, or other Alien whatsoever, for any Duty whatsoever.

Pet. That no Englishman do Farm any thing of any Alien Religious, nor buy any of their Goods, nor be of their Counsel on pain of perpetual Imprisonment.

Resp. This is against the Kings Profit, who reaps benefit by such Farmers.

Pet. That all Fryers, Aliens, should depart the Realm, never to return hither again.

Resp. Order shall be taken with every General of all the Houses of Fryers, so to look to all Fryers Aliens, under their several Charges, as that they shall not be able to disclose the Secrets of the Realm.

Pet. That the annual Pension of 7 shillings which Sr. Raimond Peligrue received of every Religious House within the Realm, may henceforward cease.

Resp. The said Sr. Raimond is the Kings Liegeman, born in Gascogne, and sworn of the Kings Council, by whose Command he receiveth the same.

Pet. That the annual Pension of 2000 pounds paid to the Abbot of Clugny, may cease for ever.

Resp. The same is paid there.

Pet. That the Statute made, that the King should present unto any Church of his Gift, falling void, at any time within three Years, so as if the Parson had continued therein for three Years, that he should not be turned out, may stand.

Resp. The King will be advised.

It is Enacted, that no Person bring into the Realm to any Bishop, or other, any Bull, or other Letters from the Court of Rome, or from any Alien; unless he first shew the same to the Lord Chancellour, or to the Warden of the Cinque Ports, on loss of all that he hath.

It is Enacted, that all Religious Persons, for Lands purchased since the 20 of Edward the Third, and paying no Demesne therefore amongst the Clergy, shall pay Fifteens.

After

An. Dom. 1347. An. Regni Angliæ XXI. Franciæ VIII.

After this, Mr. John Charleton, one of the Messengers aforesaid, produced Letters from the Bishop of Durham, from the Earls of Northampton, Arundel, Warwick, Oxford, and Suffolk, and from Sr. Hugh Spencer, Lord of Glamorgan, directed to the whole Parliament, purporting, that whereas the King at his Arrival at la Hogue St. Vast in Normandy, had Knighted his Eldest Son, the Prince of Wales, whereby he ought to have an Aid of the Realm, viz. Fourty shillings of every Knights Fee, they would now consider thereof: Whereupon the Parliament agreed thereto immediately, and took Order for the speedy levying the same.

It is Order'd in full Parliament, at the Request of the Commons; that the Benefices of all Aliens should be seised into the Kings Hands, and he to take the Profit of the same; and that in Order thereto, all Bishops should before the next Convocation, certifie into the Chancery the Names of all Aliens, their Benefices, and the Value thereof.

An Act, that no Alien do send any Letters forth of the Realm, that shall not be first perused by the Lord Chancellour, or the Warden of the Cinque-Ports, on pain of losing all he hath.

This was the Substance of this Parliament: But those, who were set as Counsellors over Prince Lionel, were not at all forgetfull of their Duty, both as to the Defence of the Realm, and to the supply of the King their Master, with Men and Money. Especially, the Valiant and Noble Henry Earl of Lancaster and Darby, being now in England, was very diligent in Mustering Men of War against the next Campaigne, part whereof he intended to bestow about in Garrisons, that fronted Scotland, and with the Rest he intended to pass the Seas in Person, as the Kings occasions, or Commands should require. For when he had finished the last Years Expedition so Gloriously, as We have related, the King sent unto him [a] enjoyning him to leave Gascogne, and repairing into England, attend to the aforesaid Affairs; the Effect whereof We shall shew hereafter. Only We shall not here omit, that in the beginning of this Year, the King had also sent back his Eldest Son the Black-Prince, into England; no doubt about the same business, that things of that Moment might be sooner expedited: For We find by the [b] Date of One of his Letters, that he was on the 18 day of January at Westminster.

[a] Ashmole p. 681.

[b] Vid. Ashmole p. 707. & hujus Hist. l. 2. c. 9. §. 11.

But the Time of Action being not yet come, we shall take leave to speak of such Matters as happen'd the mean while; not only to carry on the continual Thread of History, but also to satisfie the Curious in Matters, which indeed were no whit of less moment than the more noisie Atchievements of War.

III. Now thô King Philip of France was very busie, as we have shewn, in making Preparations to raise the Siege of Calais by Force; yet was he not wanting nevertheless in his Artificial Attempts to save the Effusion of Blood, and if possible, to prevent the hazard of another Blow, by milder Counsels. He secretly therefore ply'd the Pope to use his Endeavours with King Edward, if by any means he might persuade him to entertain a Treaty. Wherefore [c] Pope Clement VI. commanded his Cardinal-Legats, Annibald and Stephen to spare no pains; but if they could not procure a Peace, that they would at least take care to make a Truce between the two Kings. And he himself by his Letters exhorted them Both; Philip, that by the Calamities of France he would be moved to embrace Peace; and Edward, that he would not only consider the innumerable Mischiefs, whereof he was look'd on to be the Author in that War; but that he would cast his Eyes towards the East, where he might obtain immortal Triumphs over the Enemies of God, and a Crown of Temporal and Eternal Glory; but that the Barbarians grew insolent at these Wars of Christendome, and entertain'd hopes of trampling the Cross quite under feet.

[c] Odor. Rainal. ad hunc annum §. 23.

[d] Odor. Rainal. ibid. ex Tom. 5. Epist. secret. ep. 896. & Fox Acts and Mon. p. 505. sed nos verbatim ex Origin.

"[d] CLEMENT the Bishop, Servant of the Servants of God, to his well-beloved Son "in Christ, Edward the Illustrious King of England, Greeting and Apostolicall Benedi- "ction. If you would diligently consider (most Dear Son) as a Catholick Prince ought "to do, the slaughters of innumerable Persons redeem'd with the pretious Blood of "Christ, the loss of Goods and the hazard of Souls, more bitterly to be bewailed, which "the Dissentions and Wars stirred up between You and our well-beloved Son, Philip the "Illustrious King of France, have brought forth, and yet dayly do bring forth without "any intermission; together with the Groans of poor Pupils, Orphans, Widows, and other "miserable Persons, who being plunder'd, and robbed and almost famished, do cry un- "to the Lord with Tears running down their Cheeks: Besides the Destructions of "Churches, and Monasteries, and Holy Places, the Sacrilegious Taking-away of Vessels "and other Ornaments dedicated to Gods Service; also the Seisings, Incarcerations, Op-

"pressions

" preſſions and Spoilings of Religious and Eccleſiaſticks, and other Perſons, and other innumerable, deteſtable and execrable Evils, manifeſtly offending the Eyes of the Divine Majeſty; if you revolve all theſe things in your Royal Breaſt, and add further to your Conſideration in this Part, that by the Premiſes the Catholick Faith eſpecially in the Eaſtern Parts is oppreſſed, and the Faithfull there abiding by reaſon of the ſaid Diſſentions and Wars, being deprived of the Aſſiſtance of the Catholicks of the Weſtern parts, are thereby afflicted by the Infidels, who behold Chriſtendom ſo embroiled with deadly Perſecutions, more cruelly than ever; althô in theſe Days there is in the ſaid Eaſtern Parts a better opportunity of Propagating the ſaid Faith, than hath been for many Ages paſt: We believe, verily we believe that you will ſoften your Heart, and leſt ſuch and ſo great Evils might further proceed, and ſo much good as might be done by propagating the foreſaid Faith in theſe our Days, might be hindred; that You will apply and turn your gentle Mind, to make Peace and Agreement with the foreſaid King. For, moſt Beloved Son, if God hath given You proſperous Succeſs and Fortune, your Mind ought rather to be humbled, than to be puffed up, and to appear more inclinable to the ſaid Peace; that ſo You may take care to direct the Endeavours of your Soul, to pleaſe God, who loveth Peace, and delighteth in peace-full-minded Men, thereby to put an end to the foreſaid Evils, which no doubt do now grievouſly offend him.

AN. DOM. 1347. An. Regni Angliæ XXI. Franciæ VIII.

" Furthermore, We have great cauſe to marvell, that our Reverend Brother Annibald Biſhop of Tuſculum, and our Beloved Son, Stephen of the Title of St. John and St. Paul, Prieſt and Cardinal of the Apoſtolick See, being ſent as Legates from Us and the ſaid Apoſtolick See, to treat of Peace, thô they diligently and faithfully labour'd for the ſame, as Lovers of Verity, Juſtice and Equity; and therewithall had an high regard to your Honour, could not yet for all that obtain Licence, as touching any Treaty, relating to the ſaid Peace, to be admitted into your Royal Preſence.

" Wherefore We more earneſtly deſire your Princely Majeſty, and for the Mercies of God with more Ardency require the ſame, that by taking up, and preventing with the ſweetneſs of Piety and Compaſſion the foreſaid horrible Evils, You may avoid the Vengeance of Gods indignation, which were much to be feared, if you ſhould ſtill perſevere to foment thoſe Evils: which God forbid!

" And as touching the Treaty of Peace, for which the foreſaid Cardinals were ſent unto You, (howbeit ſecretly) leſt it might have been any Derogation to your Honour: We deſire You again to condeſcend thereunto, and with your Affections to encline your Mind unto the ſame, ſince Peace is ſo pleaſing unto God, ſo deſirable to the World, and ſo profitable both to You, and the foreſaid King, and the whole Catholick Faith: That ſo the ſaid Peace being by Gods Aſſiſtance eſtabliſhed and ſettled, You may aſſay your puiſſant Valour about the Service of God in the foreſaid Eaſtern Parts (ſo good occaſion, as we ſaid before, being at this time offer'd) which would be an apt Advancement of your Honour, and no doubt a proſperous Augmentation of your Princely Name: For We have heard of You, that You are wont to behave Your Self fervently and vigorouſly in all your Undertakings.

" Thus We doubt not, but that You will write unto Us again concerning the Premiſes, and the Purport of your Intentions touching the ſame. Dat. [e] Avenion. xviii Kal. Februarii, Anno Pontificatus noſtri V.

[e] Ita Odor. Rainald. ex Copia Vatican. malè ergo Fox 18 Febr.

This Letter was anſwer'd by King Edward in this Manner,

" To the moſt Holy Father in God, CLEMENT, by Divine Providence Chief Biſhop of the Holy Roman and Catholick Church, EDWARD by the Grace of God, King of France and of England, and Lord of Ireland, Devout Kiſſings of his Holy Feet.

" Moſt Holy Father, We underſtand by the Letters of the Reverend Fathers in God, Annibald Biſhop of Tuſculum, and Stephen of the Titles of St. John and St. Paul; Prieſt, Cardinals and Legates of the Court of Rome, as alſo by your Holineſſes Letters ſent unto Us; that you have great marvel, for that your ſaid Legates, being ſent unto Us to treat of an Accommodation between Us and our Adverſary of France, We would not yet ſuffer them to talk with Us ſecretly, for the ſafeguard of our Honour; the intention of your Heart being in that manner to have made the foreſaid Accommodation. Wherein alſo You complain and bewail the Death of Chriſtian People, the loſs of their Goods and danger of their Souls, the dolefull Cries and Lamentations of the Poor, Orphans and Widows, and the Deſtruction of other wretched People, with the ſacrilegious Robbings of Churches, and other Miſchiefs innumerable, eſpecially the Decay of the Chriſtian Faith in the Eaſt, which by the Wars between Us and our Adverſary of France is deplorably impaired, as the ſaid Letters

" do

An. Dom. 1347. An. Regni Angliæ XXI Franciæ VIII.

"do import: And that foraſmuch as God hath given unto Us Triumphant Fortune, "We ought ſo much the rather to abaſe and humble our Heart, and be the readier to "accept of, and encline to Peace.

"Now as concerning all theſe Things, moſt Holy Father, We give your Holineſs to un- "derſtand, that both to your foreſaid Legates and other your Meſſengers ſent unto Us, to "every of them We have ſtill offer'd Reaſonable ways of promoting of Peace; and "We every Day declare the ſame, and that not ſecretly, but openly: For We are not "afraid nor aſham'd to make our Purpoſe manifeſt. For He that is the High Judge "both of [f] Him and Us, in whoſe Diſpoſe all things are, hath given unto Us the "Crown of France as our Right and Heritage: The which Right our foreſaid Adver- "ſary hath for a long time by Force detained from Us, thô We ſought in peaceable "Manner to obtain the ſame, and yet do, if by any Reaſonable way We may obtain "the ſame: And this the rather for the Benefit of Chriſtendom, and that the fore- "ſaid Evils might ceaſe, which by His Injuſtice only have had their Birth and Conti- "nuance.

[f] Philip King of France.

"Yet, notwithſtanding (as you know) before this time We aſſented to a Truce, "upon certain Articles contained in Writing, all this he hath infringed: Neither doth "the Wrong which he offereth unto Us in our foreſaid Heritage ſuffice, but he endea- "voured alſo, during the ſaid Truce, to invade our Realm of England and other our "Lands; and furthermore maintaineth the Scots, and aideth them for the utter Deſtructi- "on of Us, our People and Lands aforeſaid: So that We were enforced for the ſafe- "guard of our People and Lands, by ſuch Lawfull means as We might, to defend Our "Selves, and fruſtrate his wicked Deſign. For which intent committing our Quarrel "to the Hands of God, We are come againſt him to conquer our Heritage of France, "ſince when God hath given Us divers Victories over him, as We truſted he would in "his moſt Righteous Judgment, and as We knew he was able by his Almighty Power. "Which indeed he hath graciouſly manifeſted unto Us (all Chance of Fortune ſet a- "ſide) in reſpect only of our Juſt Title, and without the leaſt of our Deſerts. Wherefore "with all Humility of Soul We always give him Thanks, praiſing his Holy Name "moſt devoutly both Night and Day: For We acknowledge, that theſe things were "not brought to paſs by our Strength and Force.

"Wherefore moſt Holy Father, We deſire your Holineſs, and as much as in us lies, "earneſtly require You, that You, who ſupply the Place of the Son of God on Earth, "and have the Care of the Souls of all Chriſtians, and therefore ought to be Indiffe- "rent, Upright and Equal towards all Men, without any Reſpect of Perſons, that You, "I ſay, will receive good and true Information concerning the foreſaid Objections, and "will put to your holy helping Hand, that as much as in You lies, our ſaid Adverſary "of France may be brought to acknowledge the Wrong, which in this Point he hath "done unto Us, and which by your Aid may be redreſſed: But that eſpecially he "may receive no Aid nor Countenance from You in this his wrongfull Dealing.

"For if it be ſo, We then appeal unto the Supream Judge of Judges, who for a "time may permit Wrongs to be done for the ſins of Mankind, but in the end "redreſſeth the ſame, neither leaving any Good Deed unrewarded, nor Evil Deed un- "puniſhed: Moſt humbly requeſting him to be unto Us a true and impartial Judge of "all our Controverſies for his Mercies Sake; even as We the mean while do repoſe "our full Hope and Confidence in Him alone. The Holy Spirit of God preſerve and "direct your Holineſs in the Government of his Church many and happy Years, &c.

If Odoricus Rainaldus had peruſed this Anſwer of King Edward's, he would not perhaps have ſo dogmatically [g] aſſerted, that he prefer'd his intereſt to Religion, and was an Enemy to Chriſtian Piety; whoſe unhappy Death he ſays, was anſwerable to his Life; and that in the end he was deſpiſed of God, as he had before deſpiſed God, in the Perſon of his Vicegerent. This Judgment I believe, that Author would not have had, if he had taken as much care to weigh King Edward's Excuſes, as he hath in col- lecting the Accuſations laid unto his Charge: Both which yet being equally the Duty of every one who would avoid Errour, I have for the better clearing of Truth produ- ced all along the Letters on both ſides. And as for the Unhappineſs of King Edward's Death, the Opinion thereof is taken up from light and unauthentick Conjectures, as we ſhall ſhew, when after a Thirty Years Reign yet longer, in great Honour and Proſpe- rity, excepting ſome ſmall Allays, we ſhall find him in a good Old Age to go to the Grave in Peace, full of Days and Honour, being Royally interred by the Hands of his own Children, Friends and Subjects, not without many Wet Eyes and ſorrowfull Hearts: But to return whence we have digreſſed.

[g] Id. ibid. §. 24.

IV. All

IV. All this while the Flemings continued firm to King Edward's ſide, inſomuch, that about the time [h] of his Firſt Coming before Calais, they raiſed a ſufficient Army, which being lead by a Valiant Knight, called Sr. Edward de Renty, a Native of France, but lately baniſhed thence by King Philip, went, and laid cloſe Siege to Bethune, a City of Artois. But the Place was ſo well Defended by Four Worthy Knights of France, Sr. Geoffry Charny, Sr. Euſtace Ribemont, Sr. Baldwin Seclin, and Sr. John Landas; that after much labour to little purpoſe, they were fain to break up their Siege, and return home upon the approach of Winter. Their Captain Sr. Edward Renty ſoon after upon his Pardon returned into France, where he proved very ſerviceable to his Country in many Glorious hazards.

AN. DOM. 1347. An. Regni Angliæ XXI. Franciæ VIII.

[h] Froiſ. c. 140. & Du Cheſne. p. 666.

But now King Philip of France, who earneſtly deſired to lop off theſe Friends of Flanders from his Enemy of England, in hopes thereby to faſten them unto himſelf, makes unto them theſe large Offers: 1. "To remit unto them all their former Tranſ-"greſſions. 2. To cauſe [i] their Interdict or Excommunication to be taken off. 3. To "ſend unto them ſuch Plenty of Corn, that what they now paid 12 s. for, ſhould be ſold "for 4 s. and this to be continued for ſix Years. 4. To ſtore them with plenty of "French Woolls, to make their Cloth at a very cheap Rate; the which Cloth to be "ſold as well in France as in Flanders; he promiſing to forbid the Wearing or Buying "of any other Cloth in his Dominions, as long as any of that made of French Wooll "might be found. 5. To reſtore unto them freely the three Cities of Lille, Douay "and Bethune. 6. To defend them from all their Adverſaries, and in pledge there-"of to aſſiſt them with Money beforehand. 7. To retain in his Service ſuch as "were able and forward Men among them, and to raiſe them to Promotions according "to their Merits.

[i] Hence it ſeems, it was not yet revoked, according to an Article of the Truce at Vannes in Bretagne, or elſe upon their late embracing King Edward's Intereſt, was renewed againſt them.

But all theſe fair Offers, as ſeeming rather extorted by the neceſſity of the Times, than proceeding of any real Purpoſe or Good-will, were ſtifly rejected: Eſpecially by the carefull Endeavours of King Edward's Emiſſaries, who promiſed them, [k] after the Winning of Calais, to recover the three Cities aforeſaid unto them, and labour'd with better ſucceſs to keep them faſt to the King their Maſter, and to undermine the whole Drift of the French King. But chiefly they eſtabliſhed the Flemings, by Propoſing a Match between the Lady Iſabella, King Edwards Eldeſt Daughter, who was then about [l] 14 Years of Age, and their young Lord Lewis of Malines, onely Son to Lewis of Crecy aliàs Nivers, late Earl of Flanders, who fell the laſt Year in the Battle of Creſſy: Which young Earl Lewis was as then little more than [m] 16 Years old. The Flemings gladly approved of this Motion, as doubting not by ſuch an Alliance to be very well able to reſiſt upon Occaſion the French King, whoſe Friendſhip they thought not ſo neceſſary or advantageous unto them, as that of the King of England. And on the other ſide, King Edward was not leſs willing to conſummate this Match and Alliance, becauſe hereby he aſſured himſelf, that he ſhould bind the Flemings unto him more ſtrongly. But as for the young Earl himſelf, he having been all his Life educated in the Court of France, would by no means agree to this Match, but ſaid openly, "How "he would never take to Wife the Daughter of him who ſlew his Father. And beſides John Duke of Brabant, that had all along trim'd between the two Kings, and was generally ſuſpected to be but an outward Friend to King Edward, laboured now with this young Prince, rather to accept of his Daughter, telling him, that if he would "take her for his Wife, he would undertake fully to reſettle him in the quiet Poſſeſſi-"on of all Flanders, either by fair Means or otherwiſe: And to perſwade the King of France more eaſily to allow of this Match, he told him by his Private Agents, how "upon that Condition, he would ſo order it, that within a ſhort while all Flanders "ſhould renounce the King of England's Friendſhip, and return to his Side. Whereupon having obtain'd the King of France's Approbation, he began by ſufficient Meſſengers to deal privately with the Burgeſſes of the Good Towns of Flanders about re-admitting their Young Lord to the Exerciſe, Dignity and Profits of his Earldom. Theſe Men ſhew'd unto that giddy People ſuch plauſible Reaſons, that by General Advice and Conſent, they [n] preſently deputed certain Commiſſioners unto King Philip to redemand their Natural Prince of him, whom they would thenceforward own for their Lord. And to the young Earl they ſent this Invitation; that if he would return into Flanders, and make uſe of their Counſel, they would be unto him true and faithfull Subjects, and reſtore unto him all the Rights and Jurisdiction of Flanders, in as ample a Manner, as ever any Earl had before him. This Invitation the young Earl accepted of, and returned forthwith into Flanders, where he was received in moſt ſplendid manner, and preſented with Gifts of great Value.

[k] Froiſ. c. 140, &c.

[l] 1332. nata.

[m] Natus 7 Kal. Decemb. Anno 1330. Jac. Meyer. Annal. Fland. l. 12. p. 155.

[n] Mezeray p. 28.

An. Dom. 1347. An. Regni Angliæ XXI. Franciæ VIII.

But as ſoon as King Edward heard of this Change of Affairs in thoſe Parts, he ſent thither William Bohun Earl of Northampton, Richard Fitz-Alan Earl of Arundel, and Reginald Lord Cobham, who prevail'd ſo far with the Demagogues, and Leading Men of Flanders, that all the Country was quickly of the mind, that their Lord ſhould rather take to Wife a Daughter of England, than the Daughter of the Duke of Brabant, or of any other Prince whatſoever; And ſo they effectuouſly deſired their Lord, and ſhew'd him what Reaſons he had ſo to do; nor durſt thoſe few Burgeſſes, who were for a Match with Brabant, ſpeak the leaſt ſyllable to oppoſe them: But the young Earl boldly declared his Reſolution, ſaying, "That by the Grace of God, never, while "he lived, would he Marry her, whoſe Father had ſlain his, thô he ſhould have half "the Realm of England for her Dowry. When the Flemings heard this peremptory "Anſwer, they as boldly, but with little Care of their Duty, told him, that he was "too much ſway'd by French Counſels, and ſought the Intereſt of their Enemies, more "than it became him: And that he muſt expect no good from them, if he would "not rather believe the Counſel, which they ſhould give him, and which was for "the common Advantage both of him and them. But the Young Prince not being at all ſhaken with this, they proceeded further, and took, and put him in the Priſon of Courtray, ſwearing, "That he ſhould never come forth thence, while "he lived, unleſs he would govern himſelf after their Advice and Counſel: And "they told him moreover, that the Earl his Father believed, and loved the French Na-"tion in like Manner to his utter Ruine; whereas, had he follow'd their Advice, "and been a Friend to their Friends, he might have been as Great a Lord, as any in "Chriſtendom, and have recover'd again Lille, Douay, and Bethune, and ſtill on this "ſide Heaven. Thus Matters reſted for a while, and the Earl was kept ſhort, nor without ſome inconvenience, in no little fear, being empriſoned by his own Subjects.

V. King Edward the mean while was ſtill before Calais, and had kept all that Winter (eſpecially during the Chriſtmas Holy-days) a moſt Magnificent Court in the Camp; but as ſoon as the Spring began to open the Year for Action, he ſet himſelf earneſtly to eſtabliſh his Affairs. On the [o] ſecond of April therefore, being Eaſter-Monday, he ſent the Lord James Audeley from the Siege before Calais, into England, with Command to raiſe what Forces he could, and to bring them down to Sandwich by Aſcenſion-day, well-arm'd, in Order to paſs over to Calais; in regard the French King was drawing together a Vaſt Army, with a purpoſe to raiſe the Siege. About a [p] Month after, hearing the French King intended to be at Calais about Whitſuntide, he ſent alſo into England, to his Couſin Henry Earl of Lancaſter and Darby, commanding him ſpeedily to repair to his Aſſiſtance with the Forces he had raiſed: In reference to whoſe Paſſage, Command was given [q] five Days after to the Lord John Mongomery, Admiral of the Fleet Weſtward, to provide Ships in readineſs at Sandwich and Dover, with all ſpeed, for the tranſportation of thoſe Forces. Accordingly the Earl arrived at Calais before the end of May, immediately upon whoſe coming thither, King Edward, among other Gracious Tokens of Favour, wherewith he welcomed this High-born Subject, taking into conſideration his many great Services and Victorious Succeſſes in Aquitain, and elſewhere, [r] granted unto him and his Heirs-Male for ever, by Charter, the Caſtle, Town and Place of Bergerac on the Dordonne, in the Dioceſe of Perigort, with the whole Chaſtellany and all Jurisdiction, High and Low, Royal Authority, Abſolute and Mixt, as alſo the Coynage of Money there. To which he afterwards added a Grant of the Examination of the Aſſay, with both the Criminal and Civil Puniſhment of all Offendors for Coyning of Money. And [s] becauſe this Town and Caſtle ſtood upon the Frontiers of the Enemy, the King granted, that during the War, there ſhould remain in that Garriſon an 100 Men of Arms, and 200 Foot at the Kings pay, ſubject nevertheleſs to the Command of the Kings Seneſchal of Gaſcogne, and to be by him drawn out upon occaſion, he leaving ſufficient ſtrength to Defend the ſame. And further, becauſe this Noble Earl had taken divers Priſoners at the Town of St. Jean d' Angely, when he reduced that Place, as we have ſhewn, the King therefore toward the latter end of this Year, granted unto him all the Lands, Tenements, Vines, and other Goods of thoſe Priſoners; till their Ranſom was fully paid: And a little after he granted unto him and his Heirs for ever, the Houſes, Lands, and other Goods and Poſſeſſions of Bernard Barrham, Burgeſs of that Town, to hold by the ſervice of rendring to the King and his Heirs One Roſe annually at Midſummer. And beſides all this, he [t] granted unto him the Caſtle of Horeſton in the County of Darby, with the appurtenances, and 40 pounds per annum, out of the Farm of the Town of Darby, to him and his Heirs-Male; and for default of ſuch, the ſame to revert to the King

[o] Aſhmole p. 704. ex Rot. Franc. 21. Ed. 3. p. 1. m. 17. 2 April.

[p] Aſhmole p. 681. 14 Maii. Rot. Franc. 21. Ed. 3 p. 1. m. 10.

[q] 19 Maii Rot. Franc. 21. Ed. 3. p. 1. m. 6.

[r] 1 Junii. Rot. fact. apud Caleſ. 21. Ed. 3. m. 13.

[s] 17 Jun. Rot. Caleſ. 21. Ed. 3. m. 16.

[t] Extract. Donat. 21. Ed. 3. m. 10. Novemb. 10.

King and his Heirs. All these Grants, and more were made to him by that Munificent Monarch, upon the Account of his many good and acceptable Services by him performed. AN. DOM. 1347. An. Regni Angliæ XXI. Franciæ VIII.

VI. While King [u] Edward was thus busied in reinforcing the Siege at Calais, and King Philip was on the other hand preparing to rescue the Town, Lewis, the young Earl of Flanders, whom We lately left confin'd at Courtray, having by loss of Liberty, and some hardship learn'd a little Experience, resolved now to work his own Will, but therein to use more caution, and to procure his escape by Dissimulation: Since he found it impossible to avoid ruine, if he should still openly avow, what he could not but harbour in his heart. He often therefore said to those, who were about him, "that he would for the future believe the Counsel of his good Subjects of Flanders; "for he knew well (he said) that he should live in more splendour there, and in a "Higher Condition, than in any other Country: For in France he was subject to "the pleasure of other Men, and could not do, as he would. These Words, being noised abroad, were greedily swallowed by the plain-dealing Flemings, who could not penetrate into the forced Dissimulation of the Willfull young Lord. Wherefore they took him out of Prison, and suffer'd him to go an Hawking (a Sport, which he loved well) on the other side the River Lys, or Leye. But still there were Persons appointed to watch him, who were charged upon their Lives to look carefully to his Motions, that he should not by any means steal away from them. And besides his Keepers themselves were such, as chiefly prefer'd the King of England's service, so that he could not do the least occasions of Nature without their knowledge. This new way of Imprisonment obliged the Earl to another Device, he said, at last, as it were from his heart, and of his own accord, "that he desired extreamly to Marry the Daughter of "so Renowned a Prince, as King Edward was; but none of his Friends would endea-"vour to procure him that happy Promotion. Of this immediately the Flemings sent word to the King and Queen, then before Calais; and appointed a Day, whereon they should come with their Daughter, the Lady Isabella, to Bruges, and they would at the same time bring thither their Lord, the Young Earl, and so the Nuptials should be solemnized between them in the Abbey.

[u] Froiss. c. 140.

The King and Queen, [x] who were well pleased with this Overture, said, how the Flemings had now done, like true and honest Men, and so prepared for the intended Meeting. At the time appointed, the most Discreet and Wealthy Burgesses of the Towns of Flanders came unto Bruges, a Chief City of Flanders, between Ostend and Sluys, and brought with them the young Earl, their Lord, in great Pomp and State: Here they found the King of England and his Queen, who received them graciously. The Young Earl enclin'd himself with great Demonstrations of Respect to the King and Queen; and then King Edward took him by the Right Hand very courteously and lead him forward, saying unto him, "As for the Death of the Earl, your Father, as God "shall help me, I am Innocent: For I knew nothing of his being in the Field at the "Battle of Cressy, neither on the Day of Battle, nor till the Evening of the next Day; "when the Heralds brought me an Account of the slain. The Earl seem'd to believe this Protestation, and to acquiesce in so just an Excuse: And thereupon other Communication succeeded, and at last the Marriage was agreed, and a Bond of Ensurance made, certain Articles of perpetual Amity being on both sides sworn to, and agreed on, between Edward King of England, and Lewis Earl of Flanders: And then, and there the Young Earl affianced the Lady Isabella, King Edwards Daughter, and promised on such a Day to Wed her. So for that time, they all brake up, the Earl returning to Courtray, and the King and Queen going back to the Camp before Calais, where they made great Preparations against the Marriage, for Jewels and costly Apparel, and Presents to give away according to their Estate.

[x] Froiss. ibid. & Giov. Villani l. 12. c. 86. p. 894.

The mean [y] while the Earl of Flanders pass'd away his time very pleasantly about the River Leye, and seem'd so extreamly satisfied with the Person of the English Lady, that the Flemings verily believing him to be in earnest, took no such great heed to him as before. But they did not understand the deep Dissimulation of their Lord; for whatever appearance He made outwardly, his Heart was wholly addicted to the French Interest, and he resolved in his mind never to admit unto his Bed the Daughter of him, who had sent his Father to his Grave. A just Resolution, had it been rightly grounded: For indeed his Fathers Death ought not to have been imputed to King Edward, but to his own Misfortune, for taking part with King Edwards Enemies in that Battle, where he was slain by chance of War, and without any knowledge of the Kings, as himself protested.

[y] Froiss. ibid.

An. Dom. 1347. An. Regni Angliæ XXI. Franciæ VIII.

However the Earl having now obtain'd a little more liberty by reaſon of his fine conveyance (for he made huge Preparations againſt the Marriage he never intended) found at laſt an Opportunity to eſcape away; which was done in this Manner. In the Eaſter-week, [z] being that very Week that the Daughter of England was to be brought into Flanders, and the Eſpouſals to be ſolemnized, he rode forth with an Hawk on his Fiſt by the River ſide, after his Manner. At laſt his Faulconer caſt off a Faulcon at a Heron, and the Earl preſently caſt off his: Thus theſe two Faulcons were in chace of the Heron; and the Earl followed, as after his Faulcon. But when he found himſelf to have got the ſtart of all his Attendants, with the Advantage of the Open Fields, he then clap'd Spurs to his Horſe, and gallop'd right on, till his Keepers had wholly loſt him. The Earl continued hard on the Spur, till he came into Artois, the next Province to Flanders, and there he was ſafe. Thence he rode at his Leiſure into France, and came to King Philip; to whom he ſhew'd the Reaſons and Manner of his Eſcape; the King commended him, and ſaid, he had done Worthily and Wiſely: But the Engliſhmen ſaid, He had falſifi'd his Oath, and with the loſs of his Honour and Intereſt, betrayed and deceived them. But for all this King Edward did not break with the Flemings: For he ſaw plainly, that they were extreamly offended with this Raſh Action of their Lords, and that they knew as little of this Cheat, as himſelf. And indeed they made their Excuſe ſo well, that either the King did really believe it, or however thought beſt to admit of it for that time.

[z] Fabian p. 274.

VII. We muſt not omit [a] one memorable Matter, which happen'd about this time, concerning an Advocate of the Spiritual Court, named Dr. Gawin de Bellomont, an Inhabitant of Laon in Picardy: Who intended, as it was laid to his Charge, to have betrayed the City of Laon to the Engliſh: Which City of Laon being ſeated on a Mountain, not far from Vermand, ſtands very commodiouſly to make War upon all its Neighbours round about.

[a] Gaguin l. 8. p. 142. Fabian p. 274. &c.

Now there was at that time a poor Man, named Colin Tomelin, who formerly had lived in good Faſhion; but ſome while before, being fled from Laon for Debt, had gone to Metz on the Borders of Lorrain, where he made ſhift to live a miſerable Life: To this Man Dr. Gawin de Bellomont, aforeſaid, reſorted frequently, and as it were in pity of his Condition, relieved him conſiderably; till at laſt, when he thought, he had him faſt enough, he began ſomething to break his Mind unto him: But only then told him in General; "that if he would be ruled by him, he would not only re-"ſtore him to his former Eaſe and Sufficiency, but raiſe him to an Eminent Degree of "Wealth and Proſperity. Colin readily embraced the Offer, and ſware unto him Secrecy and Fidelity: Whereupon Gawin ſhew'd him a Letter ſealed up, and gave it him to carry to the King of England, lying as then before Calais, together with an handſome Gratuity, and a promiſe of much more upon his Return to him unto Reims with an Anſwer. When this Indigent fellow had received the Letter, he revolved many things in his mind, conſidering of what conſequence ſuch a Matter might prove at laſt; and he ſaid to himſelf, "Well! Colinet, thou may'ſt be poor; but thou ſhalt never be a "Traytor. Wherefore now, contrary to his Oath and Promiſe to Gawin, but agreeable to the Duty he ow'd to his King and Country, he took his way toward Paris, and preſented the Letter to the French King; in which was ſet down the whole Manner, Time, and Means, how, and when the City of Laon ſhould be betray'd. When the King underſtood the whole Series of this Black-Treaſon, he inſtructed Colin how to behave himſelf in returning with an Anſwer, and to fit his return according to the time, as if he had been at Calais with the King of England, and ſo at a convenient day to go to Reims, according to Gawin's appointment. During which Interval, King Philip wrote ſecretly to the Provoſt of Reims; that as ſoon as Colin Tomelin was come to Dr. Gawin with his Anſwer, the ſaid Gawin ſhould be attached, and had unto Priſon; all which was accordingly executed. When Proceſs was made againſt him, foraſmuch, as he was in Holy Orders, the Provoſt of Reims ſent him to the City of Laon, where he was put in the Biſhops Priſon. But when the Commons of Laon heard, how there was a Man Priſoner there, who would have betrayed their City, they roſe in great uproar, and would have broken up the Priſon, with intent to tear him in pieces. But the Biſhop, who is an Earl, and one of the Twelve Peers of France, and of the Supream Judges, ſo pacified them by his Officers, that for that time they went back again to their ſeveral Houſes. The next day, to quiet the People, he was brought forth to his Judgement, and there (becauſe he was a Clergyman) only condemned to perpetual Priſon: But for his greater Infamy and ſhame, he was further Order'd to be ſet up on high in a Tumbrel, or Dung-Cart, bare-headed to be ſeen of all Men; and ſo with vile Inſtruments of wretched Muſick, as Bagpipes, and the like, to be carried thrô the High-ſtreet of the City, unto the Biſhops Priſon aforeſaid, there to remain cloſe Priſoner, during his Life. But he was not carried far in this Manner, when the Common-people fell upon him with great ſhoutings, pelting him with dirt and ſtones ſo rudely, that before he had finiſhed half his Progreſs, he was ſtoned to Death; after which his Body was buried in a filthy Moor, hard by the City. With him alſo his Only Son, being in ſome meaſure guilty of his Fathers crime, was condemned to perpetual Impriſonment: But, being excuſed the ſhameſull Riding, was not expos'd ſo to the Fury of the Rabble; wherefore he had his Life, but loſt his Liberty for ever. AN. DOM. 1347. An. Regni Angliæ XXI. Franciæ VIII.

vile

Shortly afterward [b] there was alſo executed at Paris, a Burgeſs of the ſaid City, who (as was laid to his charge) had undertaken to betray that great Metropolis of the Kingdom to King Edward: For which Fact he was firſt diſmembred of his Legs and Arms, and afterwards hanged up by the Neck on the great Gallows of Paris, called Monfaucon. But in relation to theſe two ſuppoſed Treaſons, for my part I cannot ſee, how onely one or two Perſons can be ſuppoſed capable of Betraying ſuch Conſiderable Places, as Laon and Paris, near which the King of England had no Garriſons; and as for Himſelf he was then too far off, being at Calais: Nor could he be able with all his Forces to take, and hold Poſſeſſion of two ſuch Cities, eſpecially of Paris, even thô he had left the Siege of Calais. Wherefore I rather think the whole Matter amounted to no more than this; that ſome certain Perſons, who either ſhew'd ſmall ſatisfaction in King Philips Government, or were leſs carefull of their Carriage and Speech in ſuch a Juncture, or lay obnoxious to the Malice or Spight of any profligate Wretches, wanted not Evidences to ſwear home againſt them, and lay Matters to their Charge, which thô never ſo improbable, were then accounted no leſs than Treaſon by a Prince ſo mortally jealous as King Philip was. [b] Fabian p. 275.

VIII. Now the French King, having found all his peaceſull Overtures with the Flemings ineffectual, eſpecially now that they had proceeded ſo far, as to quarrel with their young Lord the Earl of Flanders, for the Sake of King Edward his Adverſary, as well to revenge his own and the Earls injuries, as hoping by ſome notable Succeſs againſt them to enduce them to ſome Reaſonable Terms, reſolves [c] to ſend his Son John Duke of Normandy, with a Conſiderable Army againſt them. But Duke John it ſeems, was born under no better Stars than his Father; for having beſieged Caſſel, a Town between St. Omers and Ipres, he was at laſt in a Sally ſet upon couragiouſly by the Flemings, being joyned with a good Body of Engliſh from Calais, and compelled to raiſe his Siege without Honour, but not without conſiderable Loſs: For the Conflict enduring from Morning till high Noon, the French were utterly vanquiſhed, and enforced to break up, having left behind them many Hundreds of their Men, as well ſlain as Priſoners; whereas on the other Side, rather by a Miraculous Protection of Heaven than any Chance of War, not one is reported to have been grievouſly wounded among the Flemings and their Engliſh Auxiliaries. To this Town above all the Towns of Flanders, King Philip ow'd an ill-will, becauſe [d] in the beginning of his Reign, when he laid ſiege unto them in Perſon, the Inhabitants had in deriſion of Him and his Title, cauſed a Red Cock to be painted on a White Cloth, under which in great Letters they wrote this following Rhyme, and hung it over the Walls, [c] Serres p. 12. in Phil. Valois. Speed p. 580. Fox p. 506. &c. [d] Fabian p. 264. & Jacob Meyer. Ann. Flandr. l. 12. p. 153.

Quand ce Coq icy chantera,
Le Roy Trouvé ca entrera.

Which ſignifies,

When this Cock ſhall crow clear,
The Found King ſhall enter here.

At which Lines the French King was horribly vexed, eſpecially becauſe they Nick-named him the Found King, as if having no manner of Title, the Frenchmen had as it were upon diligent ſearch, found him out to hold Pretenſions againſt King Edward.

After this Repulſe at Caſſel, Duke John collecting his ſhatter'd Forces, made yet another Attempt upon Lilers a Town of Flanders, by the River Navez between Arien and Bethune: But here alſo he received another Repulſe; ſo as he could hardly come off with the reſt of his Troops to his Father, who ſtormed and fretted exceedingly at theſe freſh Diſgraces.

IX. All this while was the Siege of Calais carried on with great Application, but the the Defendants held out with equal Obſtinacy: For thô King Edward's chief truſt was to reduce them by Famine, yet nevertheleſs he ceaſed not to afflict them with huge [c] Engines, that caſt continually Maſſie ſtones into the Town, and againſt their Walls and Towers; and ſome have ſaid, that at this Siege Canons were firſt uſed: But of that Opinion we have already diſcover'd the ſmall Probability. And a very good [f] Author, who was alſo an Eye-witneſs and preſent at the Siege ſays, that neither could any Engines be uſed to much Purpoſe, becauſe the Ground was not firm enough to ſuſtain them. Beſides if the Walls could have been quite beaten down, yet were the Ditches ſo deep (whereinto at their pleaſure they could let in the Sea) that with little ſtrength of Men, provided their Ammunition and Proviſion fail'd not, they were able to withſtand the whole World.

An. Dom. 1347. An. Regni Angliæ XXI. Franciæ VIII.

[c] Knighton p. 2588. & Froiſ. c. 140. *f.*69.

[f] *Sr. Th. de la More apud Stow p.*244.

One time the Admiral of France came up toward the Haven, deſigning to engage the Engliſh Fleet, to divert them, while many ſmall Boats laden with Proviſion ſhould get into the Town; but againſt him the Noble Earl of Northampton went forth with a good Squadron of Archers, and Men of Arms, and to his great Loſs put him to flight, Moſt of the Boats being intercepted and taken.

And on that ſide of the Town, on which the Boulogners were uſed to victual Calais, namely Weſtward along by the Sea-ſide, in little Boats and Bylanders ſtealing down by the ſhore in the Night-times or in miſty Weather, the ſaid Earl of Northampton made a ſtrong Rampire, wherewith he deſtroy'd, or kept back, or chaſed away ſuch Boats, the Rampire being perpetually guarded with Archers and Slingers of Stones, who watched the Victual-boats night and day.

[g] Knighton p. 2592. *n.*30, &c.

However a little [g] after Eaſter, no leſs than Thirty Norman Ships and Gallies, all nimble Sailers, adventur'd boldly one Morning early, and without any impediment from the Engliſh Fleet, carried in freſh Proviſions, and victual'd the Town, and got off again by good fortune with little or no Dammage: But from that time the King cauſed the Mouth of the Haven to be quite block'd up, and the Earl of Warwick with eighty tall Ships ſcoured the Channel between Calais and Dover. Now King [h] Philip, that he might ſome way anſwer the Loyalty and Courage of theſe poor Caliſians, who could not be overcome, but by Famine, had again equipped a Fleet of 12 Gallies of Genua, and 70 Sail of ſtout Ships, all laden with Proviſion and Ammunition, with Orders to Relieve Calais. But as ſoon as ever this Fleet was ſeen from Dover, and the Earl of Warwick had notice thereof, he ſet upon the Frenchmen with ſuch Fury, that they all were diſperſed, taken or ſlain: The Admiral of Genua flying firſt, and leaving the Frenchmen to the mercy of the Enemy. Here was taken a vaſt quantity of Victuals, Harneſs and other Proviſion, to the great Comfort of King Edward and his Hoſt, who hoped now to be ſoon Maſters of the Place; but the Beſieged in Calais were in great grief and diſtreſs, and almoſt reduced to deſpair.

[h] Odor. Raynal. ad hunc ann. §. 24. & Giov. Villani l. 12. c. 94. *p.*899, &c.

Nor is it yet to be thought, that King Edward's Men were without their Difficulties any more than the Beſieged, thô indeed they wanted no manner of Proviſion: For the French King [i] had Men of War in every Fortreſs of the Marches, in the Earldom of Guiſnes, Boulonois, Artois, and about Calais; beſides a great Number of Genouëſe, Normans, French and others on the Sea: Who at ſeveral times took no leſs than [k] fifteen of King Edwards beſt Ships of War, ſome whereof they kept for their own Uſe, and the reſt they made uſeleſs by fire. Among others, Sr. Thomas Hackluit and Sr. William Burton, as they were ſailing for England, were ſuddainly encountred by certain French Pirates, and taken Priſoners, with the two Ships which they commanded.

[i] Froiſ. c. 140.

[k] *Stow p.*244.

Nor did the [l] French Men of War belonging to the Garriſons about the Marches lye idle all this while; for when any of the Engliſh, either Horſe or Foot went a Foraging; for the moſt part they met with many difficult Adventures. Nor were the Lords and Captains of the Town idle or faint-hearted, but many times they made vigorous and bold Sallies, nor always to their own Loſs. Particularly one time the Lord Arnold D' Andreghan came out with a Choice Band of ſelect Warriers very early in a Morning, and came almoſt to the Kings Tent, ſo that the King himſelf being well-nigh ſurpriſed, cauſed his Trumpets to ſound, and with his Guard the mean while fought fiercely at the Entry of the Trench, crying out with indignation, Ha, St. Edward! Ha, St. George! But by this time the Captains of the Army began to move, and the Engliſh making an offer to intercept the Enemy, and ſo to cut off their Retreat, they drew back much faſter than they came forth; and leaving 200 of their Fellows behind, they had been all loſt, if the Captain of the Town, Sr. John de Vienne had not adventur'd forth with the Flower of the Garriſon to make good the Retreat; which he did

[l] Froiſ. ibid.

with

with much ado, but was himſelf wounded with a ſpear thrô the Thigh by the Lord Thomas Holland. AN. DOM. 1347. An. Regni Angliæ XXI. Franciæ VIII.

But however now the Beſieged were held ſo cloſe, that nothing could come to their Relief, but with great difficulty and by ſtealth; and that but little at a time: And what was thus done was effected by the means of two famous Seamen, one called Marant, and the other Meſtreil, Inhabitants of Abbeville, who often comforted and refreſhed the Caliſians, by bringing in to them a-nights Proviſions in light Boats, whereby they expoſed themſelves to much danger, being often chaced, but they alway eſcaped; nor only ſo, but cauſed many Engliſhmen to be drowned, for in dark Nights they would come ſilently in their ſmall Boats to the skirts of the Fleet, and bore Holes thrô their big Veſſels, ſomething below the ſurface of the Water. Whereby not a few Men were drowned, the Ships being full of Water, before they could find a Leak.

Beſides all theſe Inconveniences and the dayly Chances of War, what with the unwholſom Air, by reaſon of the unſtable Ground and the nearneſs of the Sea, and what with the [m] ſtink of Cattle that died in and about the Camp, as well as the Garbage of Beaſts ſlain, and other Refuſe of the Army; but chiefly by the rage of the Bloody Flux, no ſmall Numbers of Engliſhmen periſhed. Thô I believe Giovanni Villani [n] is ſomething too laviſh in this Point, who ſays, that together with all the Rencounters from the beginning to the end of this Expedition, and with extraordinary and common Diſeaſes, Maladies and Miſchances, King Edward loſt in the whole no leſs than 50000 Men. Among others, there died this Year on [o] the Twelfth of February the valiant Engliſh Lord Maurice Berkley, younger Son to Maurice Lord Berkley, and Brother to the Lord Thomas Berkley, in the Camp before Calais, to the extream Regret of his Maſter King Edward, who ſet an high value upon his Services, of which an Eſtimate may be from the Retinue he had at the time of his Death: Which conſiſted of ſix Knights, among whom [p] was Sr. Nicolas de St. Maure, aliàs Seymour, and 32 Eſquires, with 30 Archers on Horſeback, and 200 Archers on Foot. Three [q] days after his Death, the King in contemplation of his ſingular Merits, gave unto Thomas his Son and Heir, a Grant of the Profits of his own Wardſhip, as to his Lands and Marriage. This Noble Family of the Berkleys is derived from Maurice the Son of Robert Fitz-Harding, who was the Son of Harding, one of the Royal Blood, or as ſome ſay, [r] Youngeſt Son to the King of Denmark, who came into England with William the Conquerour. The foreſaid Maurice Son to Robert Fitz-Harding, had in Marriage the Lady Alice, Daughter, and at laſt [s] ſole Heir to Roger Lord Berkley, ſo called from his Caſtle of Berkley in Glouceſterſhire; and thereupon changing his Name, became Anceſtour to this Illuſtrious Family, which ſince that Time hath flouriſhed, and ſtill continues in great Honour to this Day.

[m] Walſingh. hiſt. p. 157.

[n] Giov. Villani l. 12. c. 95. p. 902.

[o] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 356.

[p] Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 89.

[q] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 356.

[r] Vetus M.S. in Caſtro de Berkley. Leland Coll. 1 Vol. p 912.

[s] Dudg. 1 Vol. p. 352. & Godwins Catal. Biſhops p. 500.

X. I do not meet with any more Perſons of Rank, that died during this Siege in the Engliſh Camp; but 'tis certain, that not a few of the Common Sort were waſted away, as we ſaid before: The Loſs of whom was notwithſtanding eaſily made up by ſucceeding Recruits from England and other Places. For many great Lords of Flanders, Hainalt, Brabant and Almain, came thither to the Camp, ſome indeed onely to pay their Reſpects to the King and Queen, others to joyn with the Engliſh Forces: And of all the Viſitors none departed home again without an agreeable Gratuity from the King. Among all thoſe Lords, that won by the Kings Fame or otherwiſe, came now to embrace his Service, the Lord [t] Robert of Namur was not the leaſt Conſiderable: This worthy young Lord had lately received the Order of Knighthood at the Holy Sepulchre in Jeruſalem, by the hands of that Renowned Chriſtian Souldier the Lord Leſpentine, and had thereupon continued for ſome time in the Holy Wars; but was now newly returned into the Country of Namur and Liege. He was as then in the firſt flower and vigour of his Age, of good Diſcretion, Courage and Conduct, and had not ſince his Return been engaged by either of the two Kings of England or France; but now of his own Accord he came gallantly attended, and richly provided to the Siege before Calais, and there offer'd himſelf to the Service of King Edward. By him he was received very graciouſly, as alſo he was highly welcome to the Queen and the Engliſh Lords; but eſpecially he won upon the Kings Affections, on the Account of the Lord Robert of Artois his Uncle, whoſe Name he bare, and whoſe Perſon and Vertues ſeemed again to be revived in him. Nor ſhall it be forgot, that this Martial Knight was a great Friend to the Muſes, as we may learn from [u] Sr. John Froiſard: For whoſe laborious and noble Hiſtory (which for the moſt part contains the Heroick Acts of King Edward and his Children) we are not a little beholding to this

[t] Froiſ. c. 141.

[u] Froiſ. l. 1. c. 1. f. 1. ad finem.

An. Dom. 1347. An. Regni Angliæ XXI. Franciæ VIII.

this Sr. Robert of Namur, Lord of Beaufort, who requeſted him to ſet about that Laudable Work, and both encouraged and aſſiſted him in it. Sr. Robert of Namur bare for his Arms, [x] Or, a Lion Rampant Sable, Crowned Gules, and in proceſs of time became Knight of the Garter. For from this time forward he became Liegeman to the King of England, who thereupon gave him for the firſt Hanſel of his Favour 300 l. per annum, to be paid by Yearly Return at Bruges in Flanders; and now he continued with his Troops, amounting to 300 Men of Arms, before Calais, till the Place was taken.

[x] Aſhmoles Garter p. 79. Plate 85.

About [y] Whitſuntide, King Edward ſent to all the Abbeys and Priories throughout England for an Aid of their Woolls, and for a proportionable Support from all other Religious Houſes, as lately had been granted unto him in Parliament. One [z] ſays, that he ſeized on all the Eccleſiaſtick Wealth, under the ſpecious pretence of Borrowing it, to maintain him in his Wars againſt France: By whoſe Example, King Philip to defend his own, laid hands on the Revenues of all Prieſts, except Cardinals, not reſiding in his Kingdom; and of other Benefices he took the Tenths. Whereupon the Pope ſent unto him Paſtor Archbiſhop of Ambrun, and William Biſhop of Chartres to reſtrain him; and the Gallican Clergy he exhorted to maintain the Liberties of the Church: Threatning [a] moreover to uſe his Pontifical Authority againſt him, unleſs he would reſtore the Eccleſiaſtick Right to its priſtine Splendour. But we do not find, that King Philip alter'd his Courſe of Proceeding for all this, the Neceſſity of his Affairs calling for extraordinary Supplies.

[y] Knighton p. 2592.

[z] Odoric. Rainald.. ad hunc an. §. 24. ex Archivis Vaticani.

[a] Tom. 5. ep. ſecret. 1160. Clem. VI. PP.

XI. Before we come to the Winning of Calais, it is fit we ſhould take notice of other Matters, that happen'd elſewhere the mean while, no whit leſs Worthy of Memory. And firſt we ſhall enquire after the Condition of Scotland at this time. We ſhew'd before, how the preceding Year, immediately after the Battle of Durham, the Engliſh purſuing their Victory, recover'd the Caſtle [b] of Hermitage, with all Anandale, Marches, Tweedale, Tividale, and Ethrick Foreſt, beſides regaining what the Scots had won in England, enlarging their Limits as far as Cockburne's pit and Solway: And all this was obtained in a manner, with little, or no Reſiſtance; for the Scots were now brought [c] ſo low, ſince that blow they received near Durham; that for a long while after they were unable to bring any conſiderable Army into the Field. But now early this Year King Edward Bailiol, in hopes to recover his Inheritance, during this weak Eſtate of Scotland, [d] enters that Kingdom by Carlile, with an Army of 20000 Men, and the Lord Piercy with as many more, by Barwick, made a Road into Louthian and Cliddiſdale; whence he brought great Booty of Goods and Cattle; while the Bailiol raged alike in Galloway, Niddiſdale, and Carrick; ſo that the Scots were at laſt compelled to yield unto him, and accept him for their King. From hence when both the Armies, being joyned, began to March toward St. Johnſton, with a Reſolution to bring all Scotland to their Subjection, the Scots made ſuch humble Inſtance, that they obtain'd a Truce for one Year, on Condition to pay immediately to King Bailiol 9000 pounds Sterling. Whereupon it was ordained, that King Bailiol ſhould reſide the mean while in the Caſtle of Lanerock, on the Borders of Galloway, with competent Forces, for fear of the Scots; and the other Engliſh Lords and Captains, that could be ſpared, returned to King Edward to the Camp before Calais.

[b] Hector l. 15. f. 325. & Buchan. l. 9. p. 303.

[c] Buchan. ibid.

[d] Knighton p. 2592. Hector, Buchan. & Holinſhead Scotl.

XII. We have not of a long while made any mention of the Affairs of Bretagne, which now ſeem (not out of ſeaſon) to call upon Us: For they are fruitfull of Actions, neither unworthy Memory, nor foreign to our Purpoſe; and yet can no where be more conveniently handled, than in this place, and at this time, wherein they had their Birth. King Edward, thô he lay all this while before Calais, did yet by his Working Genius actuate and influence more diſtant parts, as we have already inſtanced in Matters both at Home and Abroad, in England, Scotland, Gaſcogne, and Flanders. Now as for what relates to Bretagne, we ſhew'd before [e] in the latter end of King Edwards 17 Year; that a triennial Truce had ſettled Matters there: In which Truce were comprehended the Kings of France and of Scotland, with their Allies; however the two ſaid Kings afterwards brake the Truce, the One in the firſt Year, by putting King Edwards Friends to Death, and the Other not till the Third, by invading England, whence ſucceeded the Battle of Durham: Yet for all this the Lord Charles of Blois, and the Counteſs of Montfort (her husband who brake the Truce, being dead) kept ſtrictly to the former Articles. But now the Truce being to expire in Bretagne alſo, on the 19 of January this Year, King Edward thought fit to ſend ſome neceſſary Aid to the Counteſs, as well for his own Honour, he having eſpouſed her Quarrel, as alſo with deſign to weaken his Adverſary the French King, who had undertaken the Protection of the Lord Charles.

[e] L. 1. c. 21. §. 18. Article 2. p. 283.

Where-

Wherefore on the [f] 10 of January he created Sr. Thomas Dagworth, a Valiant Baron of England, his Lieutenant and Captain-General in the Dukedom of Bretagne, and sent [g] him, together with Sr. John Hartwell, Sr. Alan [h] Zouch, and Sr. John Lile, alias L' Isle, from the Siege of Calais into Bretagne, with an 100 Men of Arms, and 400 Archers, who all came in good time to the Countess at Hennebond, where they found her attended with her Men of War, of whom was Captain Sr. Tanguy de Castelle Breton Bretonant. As the Year began to open, these English and Bretons began to make their Incursions on those who held for Charles Earl of Blois: And sometimes they wan, and sometimes they lost, as the Course of War is; but the Country always suffer'd, whoever had the better. One day Sr. Thomas Dagworth laid Siege to a good strong Town, standing between Pontrieux and Lantriguet, called Roche D' Arien, in English, the Rock of Arrian, whose Captain for Sr. Charles of Blois, was Sr. Tassart of Guisnes: Here he gave many fierce Assaults; but the Place was so strong, and so well Defended, that by force, they were likely not much to prevail. However, whether by secret Intelligence, [i] as some say, or any other consideration, the Majority of the Town enclin'd to the English, and seising on their Captain Sr. Tassart, said, how they would kill him, unless he would be for the Countess. Hereupon he yielding to their desires, they all together deliver'd up the Town to the English, who left Sr. Tassart there still, as Captain, with a sufficient Recruit for his Defence, and so went back again for that time with the Countess.

AN. DOM. 1347. An. Regni Angliæ XXI. Franciæ VIII.

[f] Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 148.
[g] Froiss. c. 142.
[h] M.S. in Bibl. Bodlei. K. 84. p. 117. b.

[i] Du Chesne p. 667.

When Sr. Charles of Blois heard of this, [k] he sware, Matters should not go so over long, and immediately he sent his Summons both thrô Bretagne, and into Normandy, among his Friends, so that he muster'd at Nantes, no less than 1600 Men of Arms, 12000 Footmen, and 2000 Balisters, and he had in his Company 400 Knights, and 24 Banners. With these Forces he went and laid Siege to Roche D' Arien; so lately won by the English; here he is said to have used such terrible Engines, that neither Walls, nor Towers, nor any thing else, could long resist them (perhaps these might be great Ordnance) so that thô the Garrison had already sent to the Countess for aid; yet by the excessive fury of these Engines, which beat down all before them, one huge stone, or bullet, making its way even thrô the Roof of the Chamber where the Captains Wife lay in Childbed, to her Infinite Affrightment; the Captain, and all others, were in such a Consternation, that they offer'd forthwith to deliver up the Place, on Condition they might depart with their Lives and Goods, where they would: But the Lord Charles being too eager of Revenge, and blinded with security, refused this Advantageous Offer, to his almost utter Ruine.

[k] Froiss. ibid. & Du Chesne & Vid. Fabian p. 276. Knighton p. 2593. n. 40. & 50. Walsingh. hist. p. 158. Rob. Avesbury & Giov. Villani l. 12. c. 92. p. 898. Holinshead p. 941.

For the Countess of Montfort, who knew the Condition of her Friends, as well as of her Enemies, had by this time provided a 1000 Men of Arms, and 8000 Footmen; whereof Sr. Thomas Dagworth was Principal Leader, with Sr. John Lile, S. John Hartwell, and Sr. Alan Zouch, aforesaid, under his Command. These all agreed to raise the Siege, or never to return alive to the Countess; and with this Resolution they set forward, till they came near to Sr. Charles of Blois his Camp, where for that Night they pitch'd up their Tents by the River Trieu, designing to fight the next day. But when they had all refreshed themselves at Supper, Sr. Thomas Dagworth caused half the Host to arm, with whom about Midnight he sent forth Sr. John Hartwell, commanding him to give a brisk Camisade upon Sr. Charles his Host, and then to retire after some Execution, in seeming Confusion, and as if he was utterly Routed. This Brigade went forward, and dash'd suddenly into the Lord of Blois his Camp, on the nearer-side, and beat down Tents, and slew much People; but being too eager in the pursuit of their good Fortune, they tarried there so long, that all the Host being come to the Rescue, they were so beset, that they could not retreat without Battle, or downright flight, which had exposed them all to the sword of their Enemies. When they saw this they were not wanting to themselves in Courage; thô so lately they had forfeited their Discretion: But they were now already pretty well tired with Action, and their Enemies encreased upon them on all Hands; so that finally they were overcome, and for the most part taken, or slain; but Sr. John Hartwell made shift to escape with a small Number along by the River-side, and so returned to the General Sr. Thomas Dagworth, to whom he declared their ill Adventure: Whereupon the whole Army thought for that time to leave off all hopes of further succeeding, and to return back again to the Countess at Hennebond.

But then Sr. Thomas Dagworth spake to all the Captains, and those were about him, saying, "Nay, Gentlemen, let not such a strong Body of Men, as We are, think of "going back again, till We have recover'd the Reputation, We have so lately lost.

An. Dom. 1347. An. Regni Angliæ XXI. Franciæ VIII.

"Rather let Us now leap all on our Horſes, like Men of Courage, and for them that "have none, let them follow on a Foot in Gods Name: For now is the beſt time "in the World to look upon our Enemies; when their late Succeſs has lull'd them "aſleep in the Arms of ſecurity. I'll warrant You, We ſhall eaſily diſcomfit them, and "You ſhall ſoon ſee an happy turn of Affairs. As he ſpake thus, and his Men yet doubted, whether to obey him, or no, there came up to them a Knight of good Conduct and Valour, called Garnier, who was Lord of Cadudal, with an 100 Men of Arms, ſent to joyn Sr. Thomas Dagworth from the Counteſs of Montfort. This freſh recruit wholly confirmed the wavering Courages of the Engliſh, and ſo Sr. Thomas having order'd his Troops put himſelf in the Head of the Men of Arms, and the Archers on Horſeback, and the Foot followed him with a good Courage: So that about Sun-riſe they daſhed into the Lord Charles of Blois his Hoſt, where they found all was buried in ſleep and ſecurity: For they were proud of their Succeſs, and weary with obtaining it, and verily thought there was no more Enemy remaining after their laſt Nights Victory. Wherefore the Engliſhmen and Bretons with an horrible outcry invaded them like ſheep in a fold, and beat down Tents and Pavilions, and ſlew people on all hands: At which time the Captain of the Town making alſo a vigorous Sally with all his ſtrength; the whole Army of Charles of Blois, which conſiſted of 30000 Men was entirely defeated, and broken: The Lord Charles himſelf taken Priſoner, together with his two [l] Sons, John and Guy, the Lord of Rochefort, the Lord of Beaumanoire, the Lord of Lodeac, Sr. Guy de la Valle, and 36 Knights more; Among the ſlain were found the Vicount of Rouen, the Lord De la Valle, whoſe Son Guy was taken alive; the Lord of Chaſteau Briant, the Lord of Derual and his Son, the Lord of Rouge, the Lord of Quintin, with Sr. William his Son, the Lord of Maleſtroit, the Lord Ralph de Montfort, and others, to the Number of 500 Men of Arms, beſides Footmen. After this entire Defeat, Sr. Thomas Dagworth ſet the Priſoners in ſafe Cuſtody, eſpecially the Lord Charles of Blois, who being wounded, was committed to the Care of skillfull Chirurgeons; and then all Sr. Charles his Engines of battery, and other Spoils found in the Field, were brought into the Town and Caſtle of Roche D' Arien. But as for the Villagers, and Men of the Country thereabout, becauſe contrary to their Oath and Duty, they had favour'd the Earl of Blois in this Siege, Sr. Thomas puniſhed their Towns, and the Chief Men thereof with ſevere Fines, and held them much ſhorter, than ever before, and having executed ſeveral of the moſt Guilty, kept many of the Reſt in a kind of ſlavery, to be Labourers and Drudges for his Men of War. Then he ſet himſelf to repair the Breaches in the Walls, and elſewhere, and having ſufficiently reinforced the Garriſon with Men, Ammunition, and other Proviſion, departed with his Priſoners for Hennebond: Where he tarried till the Lord Charles was recover'd of his Wounds, and then convey'd him and his Sons, and the reſt of the Priſoners into England; and there they were all beſtow'd about in places of ſure Cuſtody, in the Tower, and elſewhere about London. This great Victory was thus obtain'd before the Fortreſs of Rochedarien, on the Wedneſday [m] before the Feaſt of St. John Baptiſt, being the 12 of the Calends of July, or the 20 Day of June, An°. Dom. MCCCXLVII.

[l] Du Cheſne p. 667. vid. Knighton, Fabian. Holinſhead, Villani, &c. ut ante.

[m] Ita Annales Britanniæ apud Du Cheſne p. 667. & Knighton p. 2593. n. 44. Lit. Dom. G. Labbe's Chron. Tech. ad hunc an.

I have ventur'd to differ ſomething in the Relation of the Fact from Froiſard in that Matter, where he makes Sr. Thomas Dagworth to be grievouſly Wounded in the firſt Onſet, and Garnier Lord of Cadudal to be the Author of that Counſel, of falling upon the French a ſecond Time; not only becauſe our [n] Records attribute the Conduct of this Affair to Sr. Thomas Dagworth; but alſo his own Letter is extant in Robert Aveſbury, wherein he ſhews forth the Matter, as We have related it. And in conſideration thereof, the King [o] created him before the End of this Year a Baron of the Realm; As alſo two [p] others of his Valiant Aſſociates, Sr. Alan Zouch, and Sr. John Liſle; beſides whom he made 50 Knights. And upon the firſt News of this Happy Succeſs, the ſame King, according to his Pious Cuſtom, cauſed Publique Thanks to be given to God Almighty, both in the Camp before Calais, and alſo throughout England.

[n] Rot. Franc. 21. Ed. 3. p. 2. m. 2. & p. 1. m. 11.

[o] Clauſ. de eod. An°. in Dorſo.

[p] M. S. in Bibl. Bodl. K. 84. p. 117. b.

XIII. And truly this was a very Important Succeſs, eſpecially conſidering the taking of Charles of Blois and his two Sons; althô his Lady [q] continued the War, as reſolutely as ever: For ſhe requeſted King Philip ſo earneſtly to enable her to Revenge this Loſs; that ſoon after, when Sr. Thomas Dagworth was now in England, he ſent thither the Lord of Craon with a ſtrong Army, to whom alſo great Multitudes of the Bretons reſorted. And thus altogether they came before Rochedarien, and Aſſaulted the Town for two days continually; but the Engliſh Defended themſelves vigorouſly, and threw forth upon their Enemies hot boyling Oyls, Fire, Coals, hot Aſhes, and other other Offensive Matter, wherewith they did much mischief to the Besiegers. The Third Day the English being oppress't, offer'd to yield the Place, on Condition they might have security to depart with Life and Goods: But this the French and Bretons would not now condescend to. So the Assault began anew; and the Lord Craon to encourage his Men, had hung up fifty Scutes of Gold in a Purse upon a Spears point, and Proclaim'd aloud, that he that first enter'd the Town should have the said Purse of Gold for his pains. AN. DOM. 1347. An. Regni Angliæ XXI. Franciæ VIII.

[q] Du Cheſne p. 667. D. & Fabian p. 276, &c.

When the Genouëse Souldiers heard the Promise of their Captain, some of them went under the protection of their Fellows Shot, with long and sharp Pick-axes and Mattocks, and so stoutly bestirred themselves, that in less than five Hours they had so mined the Wall, that (as the French Chronicles witness) there fell a Pain of 50 foot in length, at which Breach first the Genouese entred, and after the whole Host. Here without any compassion they slew Men, Women and Children, all that came in their way, not sparing Babes that sucked at their Mothers breasts, and spoiled and robbed the Town, every Man getting what he could to his advantage. And when thus the French had put all the English, and also Bretons and other Inhabitants of the Town, to the Sword, then they went and assaulted the Castle, to which about 240 Englishmen were fled for safeguard.

After several Assaults the Garrison at last offer'd to yield the Castle, so that their Lives and Goods might be saved unto them; but this not being accepted, in the end they agreed with their Lives onely saved, to be safely conveyed ten Miles on their way to Quintin, and this was allowed and sworn unto them. In confidence whereof they came forth, two Brittish Knights, Sr. Silvester de la Fevillée, and Sr. William de Stratton, being appointed to convey them safe onely in their Jackets; and thô the Knights did their best according to their Duty, yet could they hardly repress the insolence of the Conquerour, nor bear them off without loss: For their Enemies of the Host cast Stones at them, and so beat them with their Staves as they passed on thrô them, that several of them died and fell down by the way: the rest with much ado being brought in safety within a League or two of the Castle of Quintin, then in the English Hands. But the Commons of the Towns thereabouts, being informed of the coming of such Englishmen under safe Conduct, as had before slain the Lord of Quintin in the Battle of Rochedarien, where Sr. Charles of Blois was taken, gather'd together with their Weapons, and came out into the Fields against them; and the English being all unarmed, and the Knights their Guides, not being able to resist their cruel Determination, they slew every Man of them except the Captain, whom one of the Knights saved by lending him his own Horse, whereby he escaped. And when these savage People had thus shamefully slain the Englishmen, they gathered their Carcasses together in an heap, and there let them lie for Beasts and Fowl to devour.

XIV. While Matters passed thus in Bretagne, King Edward constrained the Town of Calais sore, blocking them up both by Land and by Sea, so that nothing could come in unto them: Wherefore John Duke of Normandy having recover'd his Losses in Flanders, came forward about the beginning [r] of June, and hover'd near Calais with a considerable Body of Men, till the King his Father should come up and joyn him with all his Forces: But King Edward sent out against him Henry Earl of Lancaster and Darby, with a Detachment of 800 Men of Arms and 1600 Archers, whom at that time Duke John would not expect, but retreated hastily out of his Reach. About the same [s] time John Vere Earl of Oxford, Ralph Baron Stafford, the Lord Walter Manny, and Sr. Hugh Fitz-Simond of the Lord Stafford's Retinue, passing forth of England with a Navy of 200 Sail to enforce the King at Calais, met with a Fleet of France, which was going to victual Calais: Of these Ships they took twenty Sail and many Gallies, with all the Purveyance therein, which they brought to the Camp before Calais.

[r] Knighton. p. 2592. n. 60.

[s] Knighton p. 2593. n. 10. Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 160.

Which last Hope also failing, the Calisians, who resolved to endure as much hardship as Flesh and Blood could bear, thô they saw themselves in so sad a Condition, and found their stock of Provision almost wholly spent, began now only to lessen their former Allowance of Food and Drink; and besides that thrust out [t] 500 more of the poorer Sort, Men and Women, who were by age or sickness useless for the War; and perhaps not much unwilling to be turned out, as who might hope to taste of the same Gracious Usage, which those, who were thrust out at the beginning of the Siege, had found at King Edwards Hands. But alas! they were widely mistaken; for the King, who in all this while had found this People so inveterately obstinate, that they would never listen to any Summons, nor admit of any Conditions, thô never so safe and honourable; but had put him (almoſt beyond all Patience) to ſuch infinite trouble, expence, and hazard of his Men, look'd upon theſe Creatures with an other kind of Countenance, and commanded them ſternly to return back again into their Town. But now their own Fellows and Countrymen refuſed to readmit them; wherefore being forced to lie between the Army and the Town, moſt of them died with Famine, Weakneſs and the Night-colds; but a very few being able to bear their miſery, till either their Enemies, or their Friends at that time little better than Enemies, took pity of them and relieved them.

[t] Knighton p. 2593. n. 30.

An. Dom. 1347. An. Regni Angliæ XXI. Franciæ VIII.

[u] Knighton p. 2593. n. 10.

XV. Much about [u] this time it was, that a certain Meſſenger was by the Engliſh taken on the Sea, bearing Letters in a Fly-boat to Philip the French King from the Captain of Calais, in theſe words, "Sachez treſdoute Seignieur, que vous Gentz in Calleys ont mangez leurs Chevals, Chiens, & Ratz, & neſt remit rien pour leur vivre, ſinon cheſcun mange aultre. Par quey treſhoneurable Seignieur, ſi nous ne eymes haſtiſe Succoure, la ville eſt perdue; & nous ſommes toutz accordes, ſi nous ne eymes eyde, de yſſer & mourir ſur nous ennemis, au Honneur, plus toſt, que dedens mourir pur defaulte. Et Dieu vous deigne de rendre al nous & noz Heirez noſtre Travaile, &c. Which is thus in Engliſh, "Know Dread Sir, that your People in Calais have "eaten their Horſes, Dogs and Rats, and nothing remains for them to live upon, unleſs "they eat one another. Wherefore moſt Honourable Sir, if we have not ſpeedy Suc"cour the Town is loſt: And we are all reſolved, if we are not relieved, to ſally "forth and die upon our Enemies with Honour, rather than to die within (the Walls) "by Famine. And God grant you Grace to render to us or our Heirs according to our "Travail in your Majeſties Service, &c.

This is the Summ of thoſe Letters, which when King Edward had peruſed, as they were written more at large, he [x] cauſed them to be cloſed up again with his own Seal, and ſo ſent them to the French King, requiring him to make haſte and ſuccour his good People in Calais, that were in ſuch miſery for his Sake. Philip for his part, not only from theſe Letters, but many other ways knew well enough, what hardſhips and difficulties his Loyal Subjects of Calais had all along undergone, and was all this while endeavouring their Reſcue: But as his Preparations were great, ſo they took up much time; however in anſwer to the foreſaid Letters, he ſent word to King Edward, that he would ſhortly come and look upon his Siege; and to the Caliſians, that now he would by no means fail to bring them a ſpeedy and powerfull Succour. All this while John Duke of Normandy, had made ſeveral Offers to draw near Calais with a great Power, and ſometimes he came within two Leagues, and ſometimes within three; but the Engliſh had ſo drain'd the Countrey, that for lack of Victuals he could not ſubſiſt thereabout for any time, and thereupon as [y] ſome will have it, he made that Expedition into Flanders, where he had ſuch Succeſs, as we have ſhewn before.

[x] Knighton ib. n. 20.

[y] Knighton ibid. n. 40.

[z] Knighton p. 2593. n. 60.

XVI. On the [z] 18 of July being a Wedneſday, Henry the Thrice-noble Earl of Lancaſter and Darby, went from the Siege of Calais, about ten Leagues into the Realm of France, with a ſtrong Detachment of 800 Men of Arms and 20000 Archers: His Deſign was to go to the General Fair that was held for Cattle of all Sorts near Amiens, on the Day of St. Margaret the Virgin and Martyr, which is kept on the 20 of the ſaid Month of July. But when he had rode one Day and a Night, intending to have been at the Fair the next Day, he received upon the way certain Information, that the French King was marching toward Calais, with a mighty Army of about 200000 Men. For the Inhabitants of Picardy and Artois had lately ſent to King Philip, telling him, "That if he did not make haſte to ſuccour Calais and drive the "Enemy away, they were not able any longer to endure ſuch a Neighbour; but muſt "of neceſſity yield up all their Towns to the King of England. Wherefore King Philip made haſte and began his March thitherward; upon News whereof the Earl of Lancaſter haſted back immediately for Calais; but however he had in this ſhort Expedition ſo well ranſackt the Country, that he brought back with him no leſs than 2060 Oxen and Kine, and more than 5000 Sheep, which was a great Refreſhment to the Army.

We ſhew'd before, how the French King had made his Summons, commanding all his Lords and Others who held of him, to be with him at the General Rendezvous at Amiens by the Feaſt of [a] Pentecoſt with their reſpective Troops. There came thither by the time appointed, the King of France himſelf, attended with a great number of Nobles and Men of War, where he held a ſolemn and magnificent Feaſt: Soon after there followed Duke Eudes or Otho of Burgundy, as alſo John Duke of Normandy, the Kings Eldeſt Son, and Philip then Earl of Valois, afterwards Duke of Orleans, his his Youngeſt Son; the Duke of Bourbon, Gaſton Phœbus Earl of Foix, Amadis Earl of Savoy, John Lord Beaumont of Hainalt, the Earl of Armagnac, the Earl of Foreſtes, the Earl of Valentinois, and divers other Great Princes, Earls, Barons and Knights. Here King Philip held a Council of War, to conſider which was his beſt way to March, in order to raiſe the Siege of Calais more ſucceſsfully, or at leaſt to relieve the Town with Men and Proviſions: He chiefly deſired to have the Paſſages of Flanders open; for ſo he thought to put ſome Troops into Graveling, and thence to recruit the Town of Calais, while he gave a Diverſion to King Edward another way. To this end he ſent Meſſengers into Flanders to treat upon the matter, but they were too faſt Friends to the Engliſh to comply ſo far with the French: Wherefore King Philip reſolved to take the way on the left hand towards Boulogne, and ſo Order was given for all Men to provide forthwith againſt this Expedition; for as yet the whole Number of the French Forces was not compleated.

[a] 20 May.

[b] Froiſ c. 144. Du Cheſne p. 667. Holinſhead p. 941.

An. Dom. 1347. An. Regni Angliæ XXI. Franciæ VIII.

Now the Flemings [c] were not only content to have ſent this Denial to King Philip, but to give King Edward a further Proof of their Good-will, they ſent an Army of near an 100000 Men, and laid Siege to the ſtrong City of Aire on the River le Lys in Artois, and waſted and burnt the Country all about, as Merville or Mergen, Le Gorgue, Eyterre, Leventis, and a March called Loos by the River Deulle, and on the other hand up to Teroüenne, and even to the Gates of St. Omers. Upon News hereof King Philip was obliged to remove from Amiens to Arras, that ſo he might be nearer at hand to watch the Motions of the Flemings, and upon occaſion to give them Battle; and all the Garriſons of Artois he reinforced with freſh Men of War, but eſpecially he ſent the Lord Charles de la Cerda, commonly called Don Carlos of Spain, who was Son to Don Lewis of Spain, Prince of the Fortunate Iſlands, now lately deceaſed, and Son in Law to Guy late Earl of Blois, and now in the Abſence of the Earl of Eu and Guiſnes (who was then Priſoner in England) Conſtable of France; this Man he ſent with a ſtrong Reinforcement to St. Omers for its greater Security. But notwithſtanding the Flemings had done exceſſive Miſchief about in the Country, and had ſlain many Frenchmen and won much Booty, before King Philip removed to Arras; but upon the News of his Arrival, doubting leſt he ſhould come upon them with all his Forces, they raiſed their Siege and returned into Flanders.

[c] Froiſ. c. 144.

XVII. When King Philip underſtood, that by his drawing ſo near them, he had obliged them to quit the Siege of Aire, and that their Army was now disbanded; being rid of that Fear, he began to march with all his Forces from Arras, to go the way he had before reſolved on toward Calais: The firſt Day he went to Heſdin on the River Canche, where he tarried one Day for his Carriages, the next day he removed forward to Blangys en Ternois, where he alſo tarried the remainder of that Day to adviſe further what Courſe to take now. Here it was agreed to take the direct way thrô Boulonois; and that way accordingly King Philip took the next Day with a mighty Army of about [d] 200000 Men one with another; ſo that his Hoſt, together with his Carriages took up in length above three Leagues of the Country. For there was now with King Philip, beſides the Lords and others aforemention'd and their ſeveral Retinues, the Lord [e] Charles King of Bohemia, Marqueſs of Moravia and Elect Emperour (thô as yet Lewis of Bavaria was not dead) who brought with him a great Army of Bohemians, Luxemburghers and other Germans, and ſware to King Philip, that he would either by Force or Treaty raiſe the Siege, or at leaſt victual the Town for another Winter: But how well he kept his Word we ſhall ſee hereafter. The Army paſſed on, leaving on the Right hand the County of Fauquenbergh, and ſo proceeded till they came to Sangate-Hill between Calais and Wiſſant, within a little Mile of the Engliſh Camp. They came thither on the Monday after St. James, being the 30 of July, in very good Order and Array, with Trumpets ſounding, and Banners diſplayed, that it was a Delightſom Terrour to behold ſo gallant and dreadfull an Appearance. When the Caliſians ſaw them encamping, it ſeem'd to them as if another Siege was going to be laid: But the ſight of the French Lillies made them indeed look upon it as an Army ſent from Heaven for their Deliverance.

[d] Ita Froiſ. ſed Mezeray 150000 tantùm.

[e] Stow p. 244.

G. Lit. Dom.

Now [f] King Edward had before this built an high and ſtrong Tower at Risban to cloſe up the way between the Town and the Sea, which he had fortifi'd with [g] Springolds, Bows and other Artillery: And in the Place were 60 Men of Arms and 200 Archers, beſides Engineers, who kept the Haven that nothing could come in or out: Wherefore of neceſſity the Place muſt ſoon be reduced by Famine. But when King Edward ſaw and knew, [h] that the French King was come with ſuch great Forces to raiſe the Siege; and that if he ſhould go forth out of his Trenches to fight him, the mean while the City

[f] *Froiſ. c.*144.

[g] Vid. Skinner's Etymol. à Will. Conq. ex Chaucers Romant of the Roſe.

[h] *Froiſ. c.*145.

An. Dom. 1347. An. Regni Angliæ XXI. Franciæ VIII.

City would be plentifully recruited with Proviſion of all ſorts, ſo that it might hold out as long again; it grieved him to think of Leaving what he was juſt then upon the point of Obtaining: For he knew very well the extream Scarcity and Famine that raged in the City. Wherefore, as he was of a good ready Capacity and Preſence of Mind, he conſider'd with himſelf, that the Enemy could neither come to him, nor to the Town, any other way but in two Places; the one on the Downs by the Sea-ſide, the other by the High-way; where yet becauſe of the many Ditches, Rocks and Mariſhes, there was but one Paſſage, and that was over New-land Bridge. For a Remedy therefore in the firſt place, he gave Order for his Navy to draw along by the Sea-ſide, to command the Downs, every Ship well-provided with Archers, Croſsbows, Springolds, Bombards and other Artillery, whereby it was not poſſible for the French to paſs that way, without apparently expoſing themſelves in Flank to the Shot of the Enemy. And then as for New-land Bridge, he ſent thither in good Time the Valiant and Thrice-noble Earl of Lancaſter and Darby, with a ſufficient Number of Archers and Men of Arms to make good that Paſſage: So that the Bridge being thus defended, there was no way on that ſide left free for the French, unleſs they would venture over the Mariſhes, which was no way feaſible. Now on the other ſide toward Calais, the King of England had built a Sconſe, wherein he had ſet certain Archers and Others to defend the Entrance of the Paſſage that way by the Downs from the Frenchmen. To this Bulwark, while King Philip was lodged on Sangate Hill, there advanced 1500 of the Commons of Tournay, at whom the Defendants ſhot Arrows and caſt Stones; but however they paſſed the Ditches, and came to the Foot of the Wall with Pick-axes and other Inſtruments; and while ſome fell to Digging at the Wall, others began to Aſſault, where they received a ſevere Welcome, and loſt many of their moſt forward Men: But by obſtinate Contending at laſt they gain'd the Place, and ſlew all they found within, and beat the Tower down to the Ground. But ſtill the Navy being ſpread along the ſhoar in moſt formidable manner, that way was as difficult as ever; for thoſe that offer'd to paſs that way, laid themſelves open in Flank to be by them galled at their Mercy.

Then King Philip ſent forth the Marſhals of his Hoſt to view the Siege, and to conſider which way he might beſt approach, either to relieve the Town or to give the Engliſh Battle: Theſe Men having view'd the manner of King Edwards Entrenching, and how well he had provided for all the Avenues, return'd with this Anſwer to the King their Maſter, "That it was impoſſible to come to Handy Stroaks with the "Engliſh againſt their Wills, without apparently expoſing his Men to many fatal Diſad-"vantages. Thus for that Day things reſted, King Philip being much troubled, that after all his vaſt and expenſive Preparations, it was ſtill ſo difficult to bring his Purpoſe about: But the next Morning after Maſs, he ſent by Advice of his Council, the Lord Geoffry Charny, the Lord Euſtace Ribemont, the Lord Guy de Neſle, and the Lord of Beaujeu to King Edward to demand Battle of him, affirming in his Name, that he would be ready [i] to give him a Meeting in the Field the Third day next after, or the Second of Auguſt (for this Meſſage was ſent on the Laſt of July) about the time of Even-ſong, if he durſt come forth from the Siege and abide it. Theſe four Gentlemen were Perſons of great Worth and Experience in the Wars, and they went by the way of New-land Bridge, which they found to be a very difficult Paſſage for an Army. They highly applauded among themſelves the Order that the Earl of Lancaſter kept at the Bridge; and ſo they rode forward with the ſame Earl in their Company, till they came to the King, who ſtood at his Tent door well attended with a Noble Company of his Chief Peers and Captains: At ſight of the King they all alighted from their Horſes, and came up to him and kneeled, the Lord Euſtace Ribemont delivering the Meſſage in theſe Words. "Sir, the King our Maſter ſendeth you word by us, that he is come to "Sangate-Hill to give you Battle: But becauſe he can find no convenient way to come "to You, he deſires that You would come forth and fight with him, for he will not fail "to meet You on the Second of Auguſt about Even-ſong: Or that You would appoint "certain Lords of your Council, as he alſo will of His, and that among theſe Lords of "both Parties, a convenient Place and Time for Battle be agreed on, to which he promiſes "to ſtand.

[i] M. S. Vet. Angl. in Bibl. C.C.C. Cantab. *c.*228.

King Edward knew well his own Buſineſs, and without any long Tarrying or great Deliberation replied in this Manner, "Lords of France, I have well underſtood what you "demand of me in behalf of my Adverſary, who unjuſtly detains my Inheritance from me, "whereat I am not a little diſpleaſed. You may tell him from Me, that here I am, and here "have been almoſt now an whole Year; and he might have found me here before this if

"ſo

"so he had pleased. But since he hath allow'd me so much Time to my great Expence "and Trouble, that now at last I have reduced the Town of Calais into my Power, "I must beg his Pardon, if I determine not so easily, by the advice of an Enemy, to "forego what otherwise I am in a manner sure to win; and which I always so much "long'd for, and have likewise so dearly paid for. Wherefore if he cannot pass this "way to meet with me, let him take what way he can, for I will not flinch from "him, no more than I will unadvisedly give way for him to refresh the Town with "Victuals.

AN. DOM. 1347. An. Regni Angliæ XXI. Franciæ VIII.

XVIII. With this Answer the French Lords were dismiss'd, being convey'd beyond the Bridge by the Earl of Lancaster, and his Guard of Partizans: But that very Morning, while the French King was thus busied in contriving how to relieve the Town, there came [k] thither two Cardinals, Annibald Bishop of Tusculum, and Stephen of the Title of St. John and St. Paul, who were sent from Avignon by the Pope, to mediate about a Truce, or if they might, a final Peace between the Two Kings. King Philip having understood their Errand, remitted them to the English Camp, to know, what his Adversary would do in this case: And he upon their earnest Importunities, and solemn adjurations, in Reverence to Religion, admitted of a Truce for Four Days; if within that time any equal Proposals might be offer'd him. Commissioners for this Treaty on the French part, were the Dukes of Burgundy and Bourbon, the Lord Lewis of Savoy, and John Lord of Beaumont, in Hainalt. On the English side, were Henry Earl of Lancaster, William Earl of Northampton, the Lord Reginald Cobham, and the Lord Walter Manny: And the Two Cardinals were as Moderators between both Parties. Among other things [l] the French offer'd to King Edward, "all Gascogne and Ponthieu, and the Marriage of his Son John; and rather "than fail, to yield unto him the Town of Calais, saving the Lives and Limbs of "the Inhabitants. To which the English answer'd briefly, "Small Thanks, for gi"ving a Part, which was theirs before, now the whole was due: That the Town "and all therein, was now at King Edwards Mercy, and not therefore at the Dispose "of King Philip. Then the French Commissioners required, that Five, or Six, being chosen out on both sides, might be authorised to discuss and adjust the Right of both the Kings, and that the Place, where they should meet, might be assigned by the King of France. To this the Earl of Lancaster replyed; that then the Place ought to be assigned by King Edward, who was the Natural, and Right Heir, both of England and France: For Philip of Valois had no Right at all. This was the Sum of the Three Days Treaty, during which time [m] several French Knights came to the Causey to just with the Englishmen; but King Edwards Commissioners would by no means admit of the French Concessions: So that the Cardinals were fain to retire to St. Omers, and both Armies prepared for Battle; for just then there came to King Edward a strong Reinforcement [n] of 17000 Fighting Men, English and Flemings. Whereupon he offer'd at his own Cost and Charges to fill the Trenches, and to remove all Impediments; that the French Army might have free access to come and joyn Battle with him; on Condition, he might have sufficient security, that nothing should be convey'd into the Town the mean while.

[k] Froiss. ibid. Du Chesne p. 668. & Holinshead p. 942. Odor. Rainald. ad hunc annum §. 24.

[l] Knighton p. 2594. n. 10. & 20.

[m] Knighton ibid. & Stow p. 244. ex Tho. de la More.

[n] Stow ibid. ex eodem & Knighton p. 2594. n. 42.

But King [o] Philip despairing to do any thing at that time, on the Thursday Morning betimes, set fire to his Tents, and began to Decamp and March off, taking his way towards Picardy, to go to Amiens; where being come he Disbanded his Army. But however upon his first Removal, the Earls [p] of Lancaster and Northampton, followed him at the Tayl, and wan Sumpters, Carts and Carriages, Horses, Wine, and other things, and slew several, and took many Prisoners, whom they brought to the Camp before Calais.

[o] Froiss. c. 145. fol. 71. & M.S. Vet. Angl. in Biblioth. C.C.C. c. 228.

[p] Stow p. 244.

XIX. Now the Calisians, upon this first Arrival of their King, had made their Condition known to him in this Manner; The first day they set up his Ensign Royal upon the Chief Tower of the Castle, together with other Banners, bearing the Arms of the Dukes, Earls, and Barons of France; and a little after the close of the Evening, they made a Great Light on the Top of their Highest Tower, that was directed toward the French Army, and at the same time gave a shout, and made a Merry Noise with Trumpets, and other Instruments of Martial Musick. The second Night they did the same, only the Light and the Noise was much less than before: But on the third Night they made a very small Fire, accompanied with a most Lamentable and Dolefull Noise, to signifie, that their Hopes were almost extinguished, and their Condition very Deplorable; and then they took in all their Flags and Streamers, but only the Standard of France. But when at last they perceived, that their King was Decamped from Sangate, gate, and took his March homeward, they pull'd down [q] their Standard of War, and with great ſorrow caſt it into the Ditch, and reared up in its ſtead the Standard of King Edward, with the Arms of England and France quarter'd, making at the ſame time a moſt Lamentable Cry for Mercy. Then at the Requeſt of the Inhabitants, the Captain of Calais, Sr. John de Vienna [r] went to the Walls of the Town, and made a ſign to ſpeak with ſome body: Upon notice hereof King Edward ſent unto him the Lord Walter Manny, and the Lord Ralph Baſſet of Sapcote, to hear what he had to ſay. And them the Captain accoſted thus, "Gentlemen, I know, You are Knights of great "Honour and Renown for Deeds of War; wherefore I more willingly appeal to Your "Judgement in what concerns Us at this time. You cannot be ignorant, how the "King, my Maſter, ſent me and others to this Place, with a Command to keep it to "our Power in his behalf; ſo that We neither incurred any blame to our ſelves, nor "ſuffer'd any Loſs to fall upon him. According to which Command, and our Duty, We "have hitherto maintain'd our Charge to our Ability: But now, ſince our Succours have "failed Us, We are brought ſo low, that We muſt all either die by the Sword, or "Famine, unleſs that Noble and Generous Prince, Your Maſter, will vouchſafe to take "pity on Us. Which that he would pleaſe to do, We deſire You, Worthy Lords, "to be our Interceſſors, praying him on our behalf, that he would permit Us to go out "with our Lives and Apparel only; and be content to accept the Town and Caſtle, "and all the Goods and Riches, that are therein, which I'll aſſure You, are in great "abundance. "Sir, (ſaid the Lord Walter Manny) "We know ſomething of the "King, our Maſter's mind already; for he hath upon this occaſion, before diſcover'd "ſomething of his Reſolution, concerning the People of this Place. And be aſſured "of this, that he intends not to let You, and thoſe that are with You, go away ſo "eaſily; but that You ſhould all entirely ſubmit your ſelves to him upon Diſcretion, "ſome to be Ranſomed, and others to be Puniſhed, as they have Deſerved. For the "Men of Calais have ſo highly provoked him by their Obſtinacy, and frequent Injuries, and Piracies againſt him and his, and have now particularly put him to ſuch "Charges and Labour, and coſt him ſo many of his Men, that he is very much incenſed againſt You indeed. "Why? Truly Gentlemen, ſaid the Captain, this is "ſomething too hard a caſe for Us! We are here within a ſmall parcel of Knights and "Eſquires, who have Loyally and Honeſtly ſerved the King, our Maſter, as You ſerve "Yours, and in this our Service, We have endured, as You know, many Hazards and "Difficulties. But for all that, We ſhall yet further undergo as much miſery, as ever "any Knights did, rather, than conſent, that the pooreſt Lad in the Town ſhould ſuffer harder Conditions, than the very beſt of Us all. Wherefore, Lords, I beg of "You, that of Your great Generoſity, You will go and Intercede with the King of England for Us: For We truſt his Goodneſs is ſo large, that by the Grace of God, he "will remit ſomething of his more ſevere Determination. Upon this, Sr. Walter Manny, and Sr. Ralph Baſſet, went both to the King, and declared unto him all the "Captains Words; but the King anſwer'd, that he would not receive them, unleſs "they yielded ſimply to his Mercy, without any Capitulation at all. Then the Lord "Manny ſaid, "Sir, ſaving your Majeſties Diſpleaſure, in this Point You may be in "the wrong: For hereby You will ſet an ill Example to your Enemies, to uſe a like "ſeverity againſt your Subjects. So that when You will ſend any of Us, your Servants, into any Caſtle, or Fortreſs, We ſhall not go with a very good Will: If "You put any of the Caliſians to Death, after they have yielded; for then the French "will ſerve Us in the ſame Manner, as often as We fall into the ſame Condition. Theſe Words many of the Lords of England, that were preſent, approved and maintain'd; adding further, [t] "That the moſt Noble and Magnanimous Princes made not "Wars, with Deſign to exerciſe Cruelty, and to ſhed the Blood of their Enemies, for "the ſake of Revenge; but to purchaſe Honour and Reputation, by being Gracious and "Merciſull; whereby they obtain more Renown, than by being Bloody and Cruel, as We "may judge by Tyrants, who are rendred Odious and Deteſtable in Hiſtory. Wherefore at laſt the King ſaid, "Well, my Lords, I will not be alone againſt You all: But "Sr. Walter, You ſhall go now and tell the Captain, that all the Favour they are like "to expect from me, is this; that ſix of the Chief Burgeſſes of the Town, come forth "to me bare-headed, bare-footed, and in their ſhirts, with Halters about their Necks, "and the Keys of the Town and Caſtle in their hands, and upon Condition, that ſix "ſuch Men reſign themſelves in this Manner, purely unto my Will, the Reſt ſhall all "be taken to our Mercy: Other Favour than this from Me have they none. With this Meſſage Sr. Walter Manny return'd to the Walls, where he found the Captain ſtill waiting waiting for an Anſwer, who having heard the utmoſt Grace that the King would ſhew, ſaid, "Well Sir, then I only deſire You would pleaſe to tarry here a little, till "I declare thus much to the Commons of the Town, who ſent me hither. And with that Sr. John went into the Market-place, and order'd the Larum Bell to be rung, to call the People together: And when the Aſſembly was full, Sr. John related unto them all the Kings laſt Reſolution, ſaying, "You [t] Good People of Calais, there is "no need for me to put You in mind of the Evils, Affliction, Diſtreſs, Neceſſity, "Famine, and Diſeaſes, to which We are at this Day reduced, for want of Succour. "However in this extremity there are two things for our Comfort; the One, that "We have approved our Loyalty, both before God and Man, even to this time; the "Other, that our Succour from the King failing Us, no Man can impute unto Us, "that We have failed in our Faith or Duty. Wherefore following the Reſolution ta- "ken in Council, I went to ſpeak with the Enemy, who having Sword in hand, and "Power without queſtion, propounds unto You a Matter moſt Sad and Lamentable (ſaying this, the Tears flow'd from his Eyes in abundance, ſo that he could not preſently proceed) which is this; he Commands, "That to ſave the Lives of the Multitude of "People within this City, Six of the Principal Burgeſſes of this Town of Calais, go "forth in their Shirts, bare-footed, and bare-headed, with Halters about their Necks, "and in that Poſture, preſent unto him the Keys of the Town; of which Six Burgeſ- "ſes he will diſpoſe at his Pleaſure. This is the Will of the Conquerour, and I would "have You to know, that I endeavour'd with thoſe who were ſent from King Ed- "ward, to mitigate the Matter, and to bring it to a more Favourable Iſſue: But it "is not poſſible for me to draw him from his Reſolution, He is ſo fixed and Reſol- "ved; wherefore, my Friends, ſince it will be no otherwiſe, conſider of it, and make "a quick Diſpatch. Upon this, all the People, Men, Women, and Children, be- gan ſuch a pitifull Lamentation, that it would have melted an heart of Marble into Tears, to behold ſo ſad an Object: The Captain himſelf could not refrain from weeping.

An. Dom. 1347. An. Regni Angliæ XXI. Franciæ VIII.

[q] Knighton p. 2594. & Stow ibid.

[r] Froiſ. c. 146.

[t] Paradin's Ann. de Bourgogne l. 2. p. 333.

AN. DOM. 1347. An. Regni Angliæ XXI. Franciæ VIII.

[t] Paradin's Annals de Bourgogne l. 2. p. 334.

But in the End [u] there roſe up the very Richeſt and moſt ſubſtantial Alderman of the whole City, named Euſtace de Sanct Pierre, who ſpake thus unto the Heads of the Corporation, "Gentlemen, it would ſurely be a great Cruelty, to ſuffer ſo many Chri- "ſtian Souls, as are in this Town, to periſh, either by Sword, or Famine; when there "are any means left to ſave them. I am verily perſwaded, that He, or They, who "could prevent ſo great a Miſchief, would do a very acceptable Service in the ſight "of God. And for my part, I repoſe ſo much Confidence in the Goodneſs of our "Lord Jeſus, that if I die in the Quarrel, to ſave the Reſidue, God will receive me "into his Mercy. Wherefore to ſave this poor People, I will be the Firſt, that will "offer my Head to the King of England, as a willing Sacrifice for my Dear Country. When he had thus ſpoken, all the Aſſembly was ready to adore him, and many kneeled down at his Feet with heavy Sighs, and condoling Lamentations. Then ſtraight aroſe another Honeſt Burgeſs, whoſe name was John Dayre, and ſaid, "I'll keep my Friend Euſtace Company in this Honourable Danger. After him roſe up James of Wiſſant, who was very Wealthy in Moneys, Goods, and Houſes, and he ſaid, "He would "ſhare in the Fortunes of his two Couſins; and the ſame did his Brother Peter, to whom two others preſently joyn'd themſelves with great Alacrity, and ſo the whole Number of Six was compleat. When therefore theſe Worthy Burgeſſes had put them- ſelves in that ſuppliant Condition which King Edward had Commanded, bare-headed, and bare-legg'd, in their Shirts, and Halters about their Necks, they offer'd them- ſelves unto the Captain, who went along with them to the Gate, where the whole Town took their laſt leave of them with great Lamentation. The Gate being opened, the Captain went forth with theſe Six Burgeſſes, and being between the Gate and the Barriers, ſpake to Sr. Walter Manny, ſaying, "Sir, I John de Vienna, as Captain of "Calais, deliver here unto You by Conſent of all the Inhabitants of the Town, theſe "Six Burgeſſes, and I ſwear unto You faithfully, that they are, and were this day, the "moſt Honourable and Wealthy Burgeſſes of all the Town of Calais: Wherefore, "moſt Generous Sir, I deſire You to Intercede with the King to have Mercy on them, "that they may not be put to Death. "Sir, reply'd the Lord Manny, what the King "will do I cannot tell; but I ſhall do for them to the beſt of my Power. Then the Barriers being open'd, the Six Burgeſſes went with the Lord Manny toward the King; and the Captain, as Froiſard ſays, return'd back again into the Town. But here I muſt crave leave to differ a little from that great Hiſtorian; for I cannot ſee, why the Captain ſhould go back again into the City, now that he had ſent away by these Burgesses, both the Keys of the Town and Castle to the King of England: Nor what greater security he could have, than the Kings Word; to which We see, he trusted the Lives of those Six Men. I shall therefore in this point choose to follow another Author of unquestionable Credit, who was then present with King Edward at the Siege, and says, [x] that the Captain also came out of the Town together with these miserable Worthies, [y] riding on a little old Nag; for he was lame, having received a Wound in the Thigh from the Lord Thomas Holland, upon a Sally, as We shew'd before.

[u] Froiſ. ibid. & Mezeray ad hunc annum, & Du Cheſne p. 668. &c.

An. Dom. 1347. An. Regni Angliæ XXI. Franciæ VIII.

[x] Sr Tho. de la More apud Stow p. 244.
[y] Paradin ibid. p. 335.

The Captain therefore having presented the Six Burgesses up unto the Kings Will, He then offer'd him a Warlike Sword, as unto the Chiefest Prince of Arms among all Christian Kings, and as unto One, that had taken that Fortress from the Mightiest King in Christendom, by Noble Chivalry. Then he deliver'd unto him the Keys of the Town and Castle, as being now solely at his Dispose; and lastly, requesting Pity and Pardon for himself, and the rest of the Souldiers and Inhabitants of Calais, he deliver'd unto him the Sword of Peace, wherewith he should Administer Right Judgement, Pardon and forbear the Humble and Lowly, and Punish the Obstinate and Proud-hearted. The King, having received these things, turned himself then to the Six Burgesses, who had been kneeling all the while, and now held up their hands, and said, "O most Gracious Prince, behold here Six Poor Wretches, who were lately considerable "Merchants, and the most Substantial Citizens of Calais, and now together with the "Keys both of Town and Castle, do all entirely submit our Bodies to Your Will and "Pleasure, thereby to save the Lives of the rest of the People of Calais, who, poor "Souls! have already suffer'd incredible Miseries: Only We beseech Your Royal Ma-"jesty of your great Clemency to have Compassion upon Us. At this Ruefull Spectacle all the Lords, Earls, and Barons of England, then present, wept for Pity: Only the King look'd furiously upon them, with Eyes flaming for Anger and Resentment, as He, that was irreconcileably incensed against the Calisians, because of the great Damages and Displeasures they had frequently done to him, and his People on the Sea before; and also for their extream Obstinacy, in holding out now thus long against him. Wherefore he Commanded, that their Heads should be stricken off immediately. Then all the Lords, and the Young Prince of Wales began to Intercede with the King for Mercy; but he would hearken to no Man, as to that Point. However Sr. Walter Manny, being mindfull of his Promise to the Captain, kneeled down before him now, and said, "Ah! Gracious Prince, for Gods sake refrain your Anger, and consider with "Your Self more calmly! You have hitherto kept the Name of Sovereign and un-"tainted Honour and Generosity; do not therefore (I beseech You, my Lord) com-"mit any thing now, that may blemish Your Renown, or give cause to Your Ene-"mies to speak dishonourably of Your Person. For every Man will say, it is great "Cruelty to put to Death such Honest Men, who of their own accord put them-"selves thus into Your Power, by a Voluntary Resignation of their Lives to preserve "the Rest of their Company. These Words grated upon the Kings Ears; but as yet He was inexorable; and, as if not venturing to hear any more, for fear of being perswaded, wrung himself away from the Lord Manny, and called aloud for the Executioner, saying, "the Men of Calais have been occasion of the Death of many of my "Good Subjects; wherefore now these Fellows shall die also, thô too small a Sacrifice "to the Ghosts of so many. At this all the Lords held their Peace, and the Prince himself durst not speak any further: But then the Queen [z] her self, who sat ruefully looking on all this while, could hold no longer, but rose hastily from her Seat, thô she was very big with Child, and kneeled down before the King, and with many Tears flowing from her Fair Eyes, said unto him, "Oh! my Gracious Lord and Husband, since "I have passed the Sea in great Danger to visit You, I have not yet made any Request "unto You: But now I humbly and heartily require You in Honour of the Son of "the Blessed Virgin Mary, and for the Love of Me, that You would be Mercifull to "these Poor Men. The King look'd relentingly upon her, and raising her from the ground, said, "Ah! Madam, I would You had been some where else at this time: "For You have so tenderly conjur'd me, by the Honour I ought to bear to my Re-"deemer, and by the Love I must always have for You, that I am not able to deny "Your Request: Wherefore now, Lady, I resign them to Your Hands, to do "with them as You shall think best. Then the Queen caused them to be brought into a private Apartment in her Tent, where the Halters were taken from their Necks, and they were handsomely clad in New Cloaths: Which being done, the Queen order'd them their Dinner, and six Nobles a piece, and so caused caused them to be safely convey'd to the Castle of Guisnes, and wholly set at Liberty. AN. DOM. 1347.

[z] Froiss. ibid. & Du Chesne & Mezeray, &c.

XX. Thus was the [a] strong City of Calais yielded up to King Edward of England, after it had endured a Siege of Eleven Moneths, within three days, viz. from the [b] seventh of September 1346, to the 4 of August MCCCXLVII, which was a Saturday, and the Day that King Edward received the Keys. An. Regni Angliæ XXI. Franciæ VIII.

Then the King spake to the Lord Walter Manny and the two Marshals of his Host, the Earl of Warwick and the Lord Stafford, afterwards Earl of Stafford, saying, "Here "Sirs, take you the Keys of the Town and Castle, and go and take Possession thereof in my "Name, and lay all the Knights and Esquires, that be there, in Prison; but as for the "Common Souldiers, that came thither only for hire, turn them all out of the Town, as "also, after they are well refreshed, all the Inhabitants, Men, Women and Children: For "I intend to Repeople the Town only with Englishmen. So these three Lords with an 100 Men of Arms went and took Possession of Calais, and secured in Prison the Bodies of Sr. John of Vienna the chief Captain, Sr. John Surry, Sr. Barton de Belborn, and other Officers of the Garrison; after which they commanded all the Souldiers to bring together their Harness into the Town-Hall, where they laid it all together on an heap; for they were not permitted to bear any Armour away. Now the King of his wonted Goodness had already [c] sent store of Victuals into the Town, to refresh the poor Commons therewith: But they were so hungry and afflicted and wasted with Famine, that either thrô too much Greediness they surfeited, or thrô too much Weakness were unable to digest; so that by the next day at night there died of them more than 300 Persons. As for the rest, the King commanded them [d] to be safely conveyed to the Castle of Guisnes within the French Pale, when they had been refreshed with the Kings Alms, and were grown strong enough to endure Travail: But the most part of them thought themselves not secure [e] till they were got to St. Omers.

Thus all manner of People were turned out of the Town, [f] except one Priest, and two other ancient Men, who understood the Customs, Laws and Ordinances of the Place, and how to point out and assign the Lands that lay about the Town, and the several Inheritances as they had been divided before. And when all things were duely prepared for the Kings Reception, he mounted his Great Horse and rode into Calais, with a Triumphant noise of Trumpets, Clarions and Tabours. He took up his Lodgings in the Castle, where he lay more than a Month, all the while Fortifying and setling Affairs both there and in the Town, untill [g] his Queen was deliver'd of a Fair Daughter called Margaret of Calais, who was afterwards married to the Lord John Hastings Earl of Pembroke, who was Son of Laurence Hastings now living; but she died before the said John her Husband, without Issue, both he and she being at that time but very young. Speeds [h] Mistake is here to be corrected, who makes Queen Philippa to be big with Child of this Infant at the Battle of Durham; and Walsingham [i] also who fixes the time too forward by several Days, making the Child to be born on the III of the Kalends of August, when as the Town of Calais wherein she was born, was not won till the iv of August: Nor is Mr. [k] Sandford to be omitted, who makes the Place of her Birth to be Windsor, without any Authority, but Conjecture.

While the King of England tarried thus at Calais, he gave many fair Houses in that Town to the Lord Walter Manny, to the Earl of Warwick, to the Lord Ralph Stafford, and the Lord Bartholomew Burwash, who [l] also obtain'd of the King in consideration of his Services, a Grant of the Marriage of one of the Sisters and Heirs of Edward St. John, Son and Heir of Hugh St. John deceased; and his Son Sr. Bartholomew the Younger, among other things, obtain'd in recompence of his Services in the Wars, a Grant of the Lands of John Louvaine deceased, till his Heir Nicolas Louvaine, then the Kings Ward should be of full Age. And besides we find, that the King gave to all his great Lords vast Allowances for their several Retinues during this Siege, as particularly to the Earl of Warwick for three [m] Bannerets, 61 Knights, 106 Esquires, and 154 Archers on Horseback, the Summ of 1366 l. 11 s. and 8 d. And yet Others had far greater Retinues, as Henry Earl of Darby, [n] who had 30 Bannerets, 800 Men of Arms and 2000 Archers; and kept such Hospitality in the Camp, that he expended dayly an 100 l. and 8 or 9 Marks: So that after the Truce it appeared by Computation, that he had spent above 17000 l. Sterling out of his own Purse, beside the Wages allow'd him by the King. All which Services were graciously consider'd by the King his Master, who bestowed now on him and other Lords a competent Portion of Houses they never built, and of Lands they never purchased, that so they might be obliged to People and defend the Town: Besides all which he design'd upon his return into England,

[a] Froiss. c. 147.
[b] Knighton p. 2595. n. 20.
[c] Knighton p. 2595. n. 10.
[d] Stow p. 244. ex Tho. de la More, &c.
[e] Froiss. c. 147.
[f] Froiss. ibid.
[g] Froiss. ibid.
[h] Speed p. 580. §. 105.
[i] Walsing. hist. p. 158. n. 3.
[k] Sandford's Geneal. Hist. &c. p. 179.
[l] Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 35.
[m] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 232.
[n] Knighton p. 2596. n. 10.

An. Dom. 1347. An. Regni Angliæ XXI. Franciæ VIII.

to send out of London 36 Substantial Citizens, with their Wives and Families to dwell in Calais, as he afterwards did; but the greater part of the Inhabitants came out of Kent: And thus from that time Calais became a perfect Colony of Englishmen.

Now on the Day [o] before St. Laurence, while Order was taking to preserve the Town of Calais in the English Hands; there [p] happened in the English Camp before the Town, a sad and grievous Mischance of sudden Fire, which devoured the Tents and Pavilions without Remedy, they being for the most part made of strong Timber: But this was remarkable, that as the fire came near the Kings Tent, as if not willing or not daring to do any harm there, it flew over among other Tents, consuming and destroying Victuals, Wine, Gold and Silver, things of pleasure, and necessity, Bows and Arrows and other Warlike Ammunition: So that the King was fain to send into England for a fresh Supply. Besides there came thither about the same time an Army of [q] 60000 Flemings to assist King Edward, supposing that the King of France was still there; and that a Battle would ensue between the two Kings: He for his part thô now he had no need of them, having already taken the Town, yet by the great Gifts he bestow'd among the Captains and other Officers, and the liberal Donations he gave to the Souldiers, declared how kindly he took this their Readiness to serve him. And so having from their abundance supplied himself with such warlike Necessaries as the Fire had deprived him of, he sent them home again on this Condition, that when he sent for them they should come ready Armed to his Service. This mean while Edward the Young Prince of Wales, rode forth with a strong Detachment from Calais, [r] about 30 Leagues into the Realm of France, even to the River Somme, where having fired and ravaged the Country round about, he returned safe to Calais with much Prey and Booty. But the Earl of Warwick had not such good Success, for as he rode from the Camp toward St. Omers, he lost to the Number of an 180 Men of Arms and Archers, who indiscreetly straggled too far from the Main Body. And besides these Losses for the most part of August, there was such a Drought by reason of the Hot Weather, that for want of fresh Water, great Numbers of the English died in the Camp before Calais.

All this while was the King of England providing and settling his Affairs in Calais, and first he caused all the Wealth and Riches of the Town to be brought together into one Place; and then sealed up the Door, and set a Guard upon the House. Then he [s] commanded the New Town and Bastion, which he had made without the Town, during the Siege to be pulled down, as also the strong Castle which he had built at the Mouth of the Haven, and all the Timber and Stones thereof to be brought into the Town: Over which he ordained as [t] Captain, the Lord John Montgomery, an English Baron of great Valour; but he made Captain of the Castle a certain Lombard, whom he had bred up in his Court, named Emeric of Pavia: Of whom we shall speak more hereafter. He also assigned certain Officers to keep in their turns constant Watch at the Gate, Walls and Barriers; and fully mended what was amiss about the Fortifications; and left for an Extraordinary [u] Guard 300 Men of Arms and 700 Archers.

As for Sr. John de Vienna, the late Captain of Calais for the French King, he was (together with twelve other chief Officers) sent Prisoner to London, and clapt up there in the Tower: Till about half a Year after, that King Philip redeem'd them all by paying their Ransoms. Surely now it was a great Corrosive to the Burgesses and Citizens of Calais, Men, Women and Children, to leave behind them their Houses, Goods, Possessions and Apparel, and to bear away nothing with them but enough to cover their Nakedness; and after all to have [x] no satisfaction from King Philip, for whose Sake they had lost all. Thô [y] Others report more handsomly, that on the Eighth of September following King Philip made an Ordinance, That the Calisians in their Turns should succeed into all agreeable Offices and Places of Profit, as fast as they should fall: No Others whatsoever to be preferred before their Turns were served. To the execution of which Decree, Peter Hangest Counsellour and Clark of the Parliament, and Monsieur John Cordier, Master of the Chamber of Accounts were appointed, and had a strict Charge laid upon them to see thereto.

XXI. While King Edward was thus busied at Calais, there [z] came into France Guy of Montfort, commonly called Guy of Boulogne, whereof [a] he was Bishop, and now Priest-Cardinal Titulo Sancti Cæcilii, who was just then sent as Legate from the Pope to joyn with the other two Cardinals now in France, in Order to make a Reconciliation between the two Kings. This Man labour'd earnestly with his Cousin the French King at Amiens, and thence proceeded to Calais to move King Edward: And at last he laboured so successfully in the Matter, that he presently obtained a Truce to be agreed on from the 5 of September to the 13, which being prolonged to the 28 of the said Month o 9 Augusti.

p Knighton p. 2595. n. 60.
q Knighton ibid. n. 10. &c. r Knighton p. 2595. n. 20. &c.
s Froiss. c. 147.
t Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 142. ex Rot. Franc. 21 Ed. 3. p. 1 m. 6. & Stow p. 245.
u Knighton p. 2596. n. 10.
x Froiss. ibid.
y Du Chesne p. 668. & Paul. Æmyl. l. 9. p. 283
z Froiss. ibid.
a Victorell. in Vit. Pontiff. p. 894.

Month being a Fryday; it [b] was then fully Ratified and Accorded on both Sides, to endure between both the Kings, their Subjects, Allies, Confederates, Aiders and Abettors untill the 8 of July following, upon these Articles, viz. AN. DOM. 1347. An. Regni Angliæ XXI. Franciæ VIII.

1. "That the Scots among Others should be comprised on King Philips Part, and that "the Truce should be proclaimed on the Marches both of England and Scotland. "Provided always, that whether the Scots should refuse to accept or hold the said "Truce or no, it should nevertheless continue firm and inviolable between the two Kings "and Others their Allies.

2. "That the Earl of Flanders should be obliged to keep it entirely, and during the "Term thereof should not make any War, or do any Grievance to the Flemings.

3. "That the Cardinals should cause to cease the Denuntiations, which the Bi-"shops and Priests of Cambray, Tournay, Terouënne and Arras had made against the "Flemings.

4. "That this Truce shall be observed in Gascogne and Bretagne, and all other Pla-"ces, where either of the two Kings, or their Allies had any Dominion or Possessions, "&c.

[b] Du Chesne p. 668.

The rest of the Articles were in a manner the [c] same with those mention'd in the two former Truces of 1340, and 1342.

[c] Du Chesne p. 669.

This Truce being afterwards at several times pieced up from time to time, [d] was spun on by divers Prorogations, untill the Year 1355, or the 29th of this King; in which Year we shall find both the Kings providing to renew the War. But neither did the Scots much value this Truce, till they were beaten into Wearinesse; nor many Captains in Gascogne both French and English; but especially in Bretagne, the War became soon as hot as ever: For the two Ladies, the Countess Dowager of Montfort, and Sr. Charles of Blois his Lady would by no means admit of any Agreement, but held out still, the one in her Sons Name, the other in her Husbands, with extreme Animosity.

[d] Ashmole p. 671.

As for King Edward, he would not repose any absolute Confidence in the Truce; but that he might the more certainly secure this his Conquest, he [e] built a strong Castle at Risban, betwixt the Town of Calais and the Havens Mouth, to keep off the Enemy from Entring the Haven to endammage the Town that way. And having thus prosperously settled his Affairs, he took the Sea with his beloved Queen, and the Prince his Son, and set Sail for England: But according to his usual Fate, he was now again roughly handled by a dreadfull Tempest, wherein he lost many of his People, which made him [f] expostulate thus, "St. Mary my Blessed Lady, what should be the Meaning of "this: That always in my Passage for France the Winds and Seas befriend me, but in "my Return for England, I meet with nothing but adverse Storms and destructive Tem-"pests! But however at last, thô not without great difficulty, and the loss of many Vessels, Men and Horses, he arrived safely at Land on the 14 of October, and soon after went to London, where he was received in Great Triumph of the Mayor and Citizens, and by them honourably attended to his Palace at Westminster.

[e] Stow p. 245.

[f] Walsing. Hist. p. 158. & M.S. vet. Ang. in Bibl. C.C.C. Cantab. c. 226.

Among those Lords and Gentlemen, that having served King Edward at the memorable Siege of Calais, returned now home with him; I must not forget the Noble Fitz-Thomas Earl of Kildare in Ireland, who [g] being highly touched with a Sense of King Edwards Favours, both to himself, and to his Brother the Earl of Desmond, went over the Sea in the Spring this Year, gallantly attended with divers Lords, Knights and Choice Horsemen, and offer'd his Service to the King before Calais: After the Winning whereof he now returned into his own Country in great Pomp and Honour.

[g] Holinshead Chron. Ireland p. 71 & 72.

XXII. About the end of this Year, the Lord Charles of Blois, who called himself Duke of Bretagne, was [h] brought Prisoner to London by Sr. Thomas Dagworth his Conquerour; and at King Edwards Command sent to the Tower, where David King of Scotland was at the same time. But shortly after at the Request of the Queen, to whom the said Lord Charles was Cousin German, he found so much favour as to be received upon his Word and Honour, and had Leave to go any whither about London at his pleasure; on Condition he should by no means so much as once lie out of London more than one Night at a time, unless it should be where the King or Queen should then keep their Court. And sometime after he was set at Liberty, [i] on Condition to pay unto the King of England 200000 Nobles for his Ransom: For the true Payment whereof he left his Sons his Pledges. There was also now Prisoner in London the Lord Ralph, Earl of [k] Eu and Guisnes, Constable of France, a most pleasant and noble Knight: Whose Behaviour was so acceptable, that he always brought his Welcom along with him wherever he went, and was extreamly gracious with the King and Queen, and all the Lords and Ladies of the Court of England. In these [l] Days the Nobles of [h] Knighton p. 2596. n. 50. & Froiss. c. 147. ad finem.

[i] Froiss. pars ult. c. 62. fol. 82.

[k] Froiss. l. 1. c. 147.

[l] Knighton p. 2596. n. 60.

An. Dom. 1347. An. Regni Angliæ XXI Franciæ VIII.

of the Land in all places were mightily addicted to Juſts and Tourneaments; and ſuch was the Nobleneſs of King Edward, that he permitted the French Priſoners at theſe Solemnities the Uſe and Exerciſe of Arms, wherein they behaved themſelves with much Honour. But particularly the foreſaid Earl of Eu and Guiſnes, gat great Commendation both from King Edward and his Son the Prince of Wales, by whom he was held in high Reſpect for his Worth and Valour. Nay we find, that King David of Scotland, thô he was confin'd as Priſoner in the Tower, had ſuch Favour from King Edward, that he was alſo permitted at his Pleaſure not only to behold, but to exerciſe theſe Knightly Sports: For [m] againſt an Haſtilude kept at Windſor, he had an Harneſs for his Horſe made of Blue Velvet (at King Edwards Charge) whereon was embroider'd a Pale of Red Velvet, and beneath a White Roſe, after the Cuſtom of that Age, whereby one Knight was diſtinguiſhed from another, as well by the Harneſs of his Horſe, as by his own Shield and Surcoat.

[m] Aſhmole p. 185. ex Rotul. Liberat. Draper. Offic. magn. Garderob. an. 21. & 22. Ed. 3. m. 11. penes Rememorat. Regis.

About this time the Scotch Nobility ſent to King Edward, offering to Redeem their King from Captivity; to whom he return'd Anſwer, [n] "that foraſmuch, as they in "Defiance of the Truce, had made War upon him in his Abſence unjuſtly, he ex- "pected, they ſhould firſt give him ſatisfaction for all thoſe Injuries and Damages, "they had done to him and his Realm, in that War: And this done, they might proceed "to the buſineſs of the Ranſom. Thô this Anſwer was but highly Reaſonable, it was ſo diſtaſtfull to the Scots, that upon the Receit thereof, they roſe ſuddenly, and in conſiderable Bodies enter'd the Marches of England, where they ravaged the Country, fired Villages, ſlew poor People without Mercy, and took many ſleeping in their Beds, whom they carried away Priſoners, and ſet unreaſonable Ranſomes upon them. Becauſe of this the Engliſh Lords of the Marches, Proclaim'd ſolemn Turneaments to be held at Barwick; thereby to entice the Scots again within the Engliſh pale: Who coming accordingly in their wonted Bravery, were cut ſhort in the way, by a good Body of Engliſh Borderers; who diſcomfited them, and put many to the Sword. And preſently after, in Proſecution of this Revenge, the Northern Lords went into Scotland, and ſpoil'd and ravaged the whole Province of Carrick.

[n] Knighton p. 2597. n. 16.

XXIII. We have often made mention of the Emperour Lewis of Bavaria, how he was Excommunicated by Pope John XXII, and thô he made many Overtures in order to be reconcil'd, we do not find, that ever he was re-admitted into the Boſom of the Church. But on the contrary it [o] appears, that on Holy-Thurſday the laſt Year, Pope Clement Curſed him, and pronounced him an Heretick and Schiſmatick, and exhorted the Princes Electors, to chooſe another Emperour: Wherefore on the ſecond of July, Charles the Marqueſs of Moravia, and Son to John King of Bohemia, was elected at Rens in the Diœceſe of Trier, thô the Major part were not for him, and all the Cities held for Lewis of Bavaria. But now the ſaid Lewis, as he return'd [p] from hunting, being taken with an Apoplexy, fell off his Horſe, and ſoon after departed this Life, on the 11 of October, and was buried at Munchen a City of Bavaria. By the irreconcileable Malice of his Enemies, he had two Emperours Elected in Oppoſition to him, Frederick of Auſtria in the beginning of his Reign, and Charles Marqueſs of Moravia in the Latter end; but for all this he Ruled the Empire in ſpight of the Pope's Curſes and Combinations againſt him, the ſpace of 32 Years. Upon his Death, Pope Clement VI. in hate, as ſome ſay, to King Edward of England, laboured [q] all he could to have Charles King of Bohemia, acknowledg'd Emperour, hoping, that thereby he would be enabled the better to Revenge the Death of his Father, ſlain in the Battle of Creſſy, upon the Engliſh Nation. Wherefore he ſent Charles de la Cerda of Spain, with his Papal Bull to the Archbiſhop of Colen, with an Injunction to conſecrate him Roman Emperour; which he did at Bon, a City of Lower Germany, about 4 Leagues from Colen, in the beginning of February following. But this being done againſt the Conſent of the Major Part of Electors (beſides that he had been refuſed by the whole City of Aix la Capelle, which us'd to be the Chief in the Election and Coronation of Emperours) the other Electors agreed rather to pitch upon King [r] Edward of England to be Emperour, as one, who had not only been already Vicar General of the Sacred Empire, but was alſo at that time juſtly [s] reputed to be the moſt Prudent, Valiant, and Worthy Souldier throughout all Chriſtendom. Wherefore [t] Henry Archbiſhop of Mentz, and Arch-Chancellour of the Empire, Rudolph and Rupert Counts Palatine of the Rhine, and Dukes of Bavaria, Lewis Marqueſs of Bradenburgh and Luſatia, and the Dukes of Upper and Lower Saxony, being aſſembled at Colen, ſent [u] two Earls, and two Doctors to ſignifie unto him, how they had with one voice Elected him unto the Dignity of the Empire.

[o] Abra. Bucholcer. Iſagog. Chron. ad an. 1346. &c.

[p] Abr. Bucholcer. Iſagog. Chron. ad hunc ann. & Labbe Chron. Tech. ad hunc an.

[q] Knighton p. 2596. n. 30.

[r] Giov. Villani l. 12. c. 105. p. 910. Luitprand. c. 44. Sleidan. de Quat. Monarc. l. 3. p. 218. & Pezelii ac Lampadii Mellificium Hiſt. part. 3. p. 360. & 362.

[s] Knighton p. 2596. n. 40.

[t] Aſhmole p. 656.

[u] Stow p. 245. a & b. & Knighton p. 2596. n. 60.

When

When Queen Philippa heard of this, [x] she took on most heavily, as well in Contemplation of the many Vexations and Troubles, which her Brother-in-Law, the late Emperour, had met with from the Popes Malice all his Reign; as fearing, that this was but a contrivance of the King, her Husbands Enemies, thereby to engage him in New Difficulties, that so he might be rendred unable to recover his Right in France. Whereupon the King [y] sent the Earl of Northampton into Almain, to enquire more particularly about the Premises; while the young Marques of Juliers, with the rest of the Embassadors staid at London, anxiously expecting the Kings Resolution. But upon the said Earls return, because then it appeared, [z] that in accepting of the Empire, the King was like to be hindred from prosecuting his Right in France, and should be forced to lay aside that War, and take up a fresh Quarrel against the King of Bohemia's Son, whom the Pope had caused to be made Emperour: Besides [a] he doubted, what inextricable Difficulties he might undergo, if Italy should prove Refractory to him; He also feared not a little the Avarice of the Pope, which he should never be able to satisfie; but [b] especially, because it was manifest, that at that time, whether by Right, or by Wrong, the Emperours were indeed subject to the Pope of Rome, which King Edward was resolved never to be; for all these Reasons, the King of England entertain'd the Germans with due Honour; but answer'd, that he would not take so great a Burthen upon his shoulders, till he had got the Crown of France, which was due unto him, in peaceable Possession. And accordingly the next spring, [c] he sent unto the Princes Electors Sr. Hugh Nevile, and Ivo de Glynton, Canon of St. Paul's, London, with a full Declaration of his Intention, which contained a formal refusal of that Imperial Dignity: But not without many great thanks for the Honour, they had design'd him; and withall [d] he promised to do unto the Sacred Empire all the good Offices that he might. Upon this refusal of King Edward's, the Electors proceeded, but not so unanimously, to another Election; for some [e] chose Frederick Marques of Misnia, and others, Gunter Earl of Negromont; but the one being brib'd off, and the other dispatch'd by Poison; Charles of Luxemburgh King of Bohemia, the Pope's Creature, prevail'd, and was Emperour by the name of Charles IV.

On the [f] 8 of February this Year John Cantacuzenus, Tutor to John Palæologus, Emperour of Greece, seised on the City of Constantinople, and on the 13 of May following was crowned Emperour in the Palace, together with his Lady; at which time he created his Son Matthew, Despote of the Empire, and on the 21 of the same Moneth gave his Daughter Helena Cantacuzena in Marriage to his Pupil, and Fellow-Emperour; who was then about 15 Years of Age.

On the [g] 10 of April there died William Occam an English Monk of the Order of St. Benedict, and a most Famous both Philosopher and Divine, who, among many other Learned Works, maintain'd by writing, that the Emperour was above the Pope, on occasion of the Popes Pretences at that time against Lewis of Bavaria: Wherefore being also Excommunicated he had his recourse to the said Lewis, and said, "O Emperour, Do You defend me with your Sword, And I'll defend you with the Word."

Another Learned Countryman of ours [h] deceased also about this time, namely, Walter Hemingford, a Regular Canon of the Order of St. Austen, in the Monastery of Gisborne in Yorkshire, who in a tolerable good style, with great Care, and equal Fidelity, wrote an History of the Acts of the Kings of England, and a Chronicle of our King Edward the Third, as far as Nature gave him leave.

I shall only here add one short Case of Law, which for its use may seem not unworthy of Memory: That a Prohibition [i] being this Year sent to Dr. William Bateman Bishop of Norwich, he presum'd to Excommunicate the Party, that brought the Writ: Whereupon an Action of the Case was brought upon the said Bishop, and the whole Matter set forth; so that a Bill being found against him, it was adjudged, that his Temporalities should be seised, till he had fully absolved the Party, and satisfied the King for the Contempt.

An. Dom. 1347. An. Regni Angliæ XXI. Franciæ VIII.

[x] Knighton p. 2597. n. 1. &c.
[y] Knighton p. 2597. & Dudg. 1 Vol. p. 186.
[z] Knighton p. 2597. n. 4.
[a] Pezelii & Lampadii Mellific. Hist. pars 3. p. 363.
[b] Cooper's Hist.
[c] Ashmole's Garter p. 656. ex Claus. 22. Ed. 3. m. 20. Dorso. 10 Maii.
[d] Sleidan de Monarchis l. 3. p. 218.
[e] Luitprand. c. 44. & Lampadius Mellific. Hist. pars 3. p. 362.
[f] Labbei Chron. Tech. ad hunc an.
[g] Pitsæus de Illustr. Angl. scriptor. p. 459. & Lampad. in Mellific. Hist. p. 355.
[h] Pitsæus ibid. p. 456.
[i] 21 Ed. 3. Rot. 46.

CHAP.

An. Dom. 1348. An. Regni Angliæ XXII. Franciæ IX.

CHAPTER the SEVENTH.

The CONTENTS.

I. The Glory and Prosperity of King Edward and his People hurtfull to the Nation. II. King Edward holds a Parliament at Westminster. III. And Justs and Tourneaments in divers Places. IV. How Avignon in Provence came first to belong to the Church of Rome. V. King Philip of Valois, and King Edward of England could cure the Kings Evil: An Order concerning the Kings Purveyors. VI. The Truce between England and France prorogued for another Year. VII. King Edward solemnizes the Translation of St. Thomas Bishop of Hereford; with some Account of his Life, &c. VIII. The Earl of Flanders doth Homage to King Edward, but afterward entring Flanders in Hostile Manner, is beaten by the Flemings and English. IX. King Edward inform'd of a Design to betray Calais, pardons the Lombard Captain, and gives him Instructions how to behave himself. X. King Edward goes privately over Sea to Calais, and discomfits the Frenchmen. XI. King Edward at Supper presents a Rich Chaplet of Pearls to the Lord Eustace de Ribemont a French Prisoner, and in contemplation of his Valour acquits him his Ransome. XII. The Lombard Captain put to Death by the Frenchmen; King Edward rewards his Friends, and having settled Calais under a New Captain returns for England. XIII. The Death of the Queen of France and of the Dutchess of Normandy: The French King, and the Duke his Son marry again.

I. NOW doth King Edward the Third seem to stand in the full Zenith both of his Age and Glories: He had but just past the 35 Year of his Life, and yet was crown'd at Home in his Family with a Lovely Row of Hopefull Children, and a Vertuous and Beautifull Consort; in his Kingdoms with Peace and full Prosperity: And abroad he was renowned above all the Kings of the Earth for his Notable Victories by Sea and by Land, in Scotland, France and Bretagne; for set Battles, or Taking of Towns; for Kings slain, Kings routed, and Kings taken Captive: Nor was his Moderation less admired and commended, which he shew'd in Refusing the Title and Dignity of an Emperour. This in my Opinion is the Brightest part of all his Reign; thô yet another King remains to be Captive by his Arms, and another King is destin'd to recover an Usurped Crown by the Aid of his Sword and Fortune.

For now [a] by means of so honourable a Peace, founded on so many remarkable Victories, it seem'd as if the Golden Age was reduced to England; and a New Sun began to shine in our Horizon: So great Riches and Plenty, the usual Attendants of Conquest, being generally diffused over the face of the whole Land. For there was scarce a Lady, or Gentlewoman of any Account, which had not in her possession some precious Houshold-stuff, as rich Gowns, Beds, Counterpains, Hangings, Linnen, Silks, Furs, Cups of Gold and Silver, Porcelain and Chrystal, Bracelets, Chains and Necklaces, brought from Caen, Calais, or other Cities beyond Sea. And yet as the Roman Historians complain, that they were overcome by the Luxury and Fashions of the Nations they had conquer'd: So from this time the Native Candour and simplicity of the English Nation did visibly empair; and Pride, Superfluity and Vanity began to lift up their hatefull Heads; till they provok'd the Author of the World to visit this Land also with his awakening Judgments. Some whereof were not wanting even in the Days of this Great Monarch; but did especially take rise in the Reign of his Successour from a Cruel and Unnatural civil War, which was not wholly extinct till it had prey'd upon the Lives of Five Kings, very many Princes, Dukes and Earls, and Hundreds of the Prime Nobility of England, besides those many Thousands of the Common People who perished in the Quarrel, even thrô the Reigns of Seven Kings; till in a more mercifull Providence, King Henry the VII happily united the two Roses; and Peace, and Humanity, and Arts began again to revive and flourish among us.

[a] Walsingh. Hypod. 121. & hist. 159. & Holinsh. Engl. Chron. p. 943. & Stow p. 245.

II. But that the Blessings of Peace and Plenty might be preserved unto England, as as much as lay in King Edwards Power, as well for the Support of his own Honour, as for the Security of his People's Advantages, and the Conservation of the good Laws of the Realm, he begins this Year with a Parliament: Which he [b] ſummons to meet him at Weſtminſter on the Monday in Midlent. From which time, becauſe ſeveral of the Peers were not then come, the Parliament was continued from day to day, untill Wedneſday: When Sr. William Thorp, then Lord Chief Juſtice, by the Kings Command, declared in preſence of the King and Lords, for what Reaſons the Parliament at that time was called. As that the King had, according to the Truce taken at Calais, ſent Commiſſioners to the Pope, from whom he had long ſince expected ſome Satisfactory Anſwer, but as yet had received none: Alſo that ſundry Articles of the Truce, touching both the Kings and their Allies, were not duely performed; and further, that the French were preparing a Puiſſant Army, wherewith to invade the Realm. From all which it appeared, that the Truce was but very fickle; and that it was neither ſafe nor prudent, to rely upon it, but rather betimes to be armed againſt the worſt that might happen. Beſides he added, that the Conſervation of the Publique Peace at home was a main Point for their Conſideration to employ it ſelf about, and that this muſt be done by wholſom Laws, duely and impartially put in Execution. Upon theſe Matters the Lords and Commons debated earneſtly for ſeveral Days, and at laſt anſwered the Kings Wants, and prepared their own Petitions in manner following.

AN. DOM. 1348. An. Regni Angliæ XXII. Franciæ IX.

[b] 14 Febr. Teſte Rege apud Weſtmonaſt. M.S. Record. p. 66. & Sr. Rob. Cotton's Abridgm. p. 68.

They [c] firſt ſhew the great Charges laid upon the Commons, as the Reaſonable Aid being pardon'd in the 14 Edw. 3. Whereof every Fine was forty ſhillings, whereas by Statute the ſame ſhould be but twenty ſhillings; alſo the ſetting forth of Men; the taking up of Victuals without Ready Money; and the Charge for keeping the Sea: The very Subſidy of Wooll amounting to 60000 l. per annum, and yet without Law; the Lending of 20000 Sacks of Wooll, and the Reſtraint of Exporting Wooll. Notwithſtanding they grant to the King Three Fifteens in three Years; ſo as the Subſidy of Wooll might ceaſe, and on Condition that David Bruce, William Douglas, and other Chief Captains of Scotland be not deliver'd for Ranſom, or on their Faith: Yet ſo that if the Wars do ceaſe within three Years, then their Grant might ceaſe alſo; this Condition being likewiſe underſtood, that their following Petitions be granted, and theſe their Conditions enrolled and exemplified.

[c] M.S. Record p. 68. & Sr. Rob. Cottons Abidgment p. 69.

Petitions of the Commons with their Anſwers.

Pet. That the Falſeneſs of thoſe, who were appointed to gather the 20000 Sacks of Wooll lent to the King, may be determin'd by ſome of the Parliament, and that all Acquittances made to any ſuch may be repealed.

Anſ. This Petition was anſwer'd in the laſt Parliament, and therefore Command was given anew to execute the ſame.

Pet. That the King would command the Nobles in no wiſe to take any common Thief or Robber into their Protection: And that in every Shire-Town two Knights, and two Learned in the Law be appointed to determin all Offences, and to enquire of Falſe Money; they to have ſome Fee to encourage them in their Duty, and to prevent Receiving of Bribes: But this alſo was ſaid to have been anſwer'd in the laſt Parliament.

Pet. Whereupon the Commons required, that all Petitions in this preſent Parliament may be preſently anſwer'd.

Anſ. After Eaſter they ſhall be ſo.

Pet. That all Woolls and other Merchandiſe may freely paſs without any Loans, or other Subſidies, beſides the due and uſual Cuſtoms.

Anſ. The Paſſage ſhall be free, ſaving to the King his Due.

Pet. That no Eires of the Foreſt, or other Inquiries, except thoſe of the Peace, be kept during the Wars.

Anſ. The King may uſe his Pleaſure therein.

Pet. That none of the Nobles or other Captains of Scotland, being the Kings Priſoners, be deliver'd upon any account.

[d] Anſ. The ſame was anſwer'd the laſt Parliament.

[d] This Line out, and the two following miſplaced in the Print of Sr. Rob. Cottons Abridgment the M.S. right.

Pet. That all that Aid which is leavied beyond the Trent, may be employed in the Scotch Wars.

Anſ. The King will allow more for that Purpoſe, if need ſhall be.

Pet. That no Appeals be received of any Felonies, done in any other Counties than where the Appeals were taken.

Anſ. The King is not adviſed to make ſuch New Laws.

Pet. That Redreſs may be had, for that the Men of Bruges in Flanders have forbid all Merchants-Strangers to buy any Staple-Ware here.

An. Dom. 1348. An. Regni Angliæ XXII. Franciæ IX.

Anſ. The King will talk with the Flemiſh Ambaſſadour.

Pet. That all Enquiries of the Ninths may ceaſe.

Anſ. The King will be adviſed.

Pet. That the Order made, that all Merchants for every Sack of Wooll ſhould bring in two Marks of Bullion, may be repealed: For that the Exportation of Bullion is forbidden in Flanders.

Anſ. The King will learn the Truth of the Ambaſſadour here.

It is agreed, that the Cuſtoms at Eaſter next ſtay the receipt of 2 s. of every Sack of Wooll.

Pet. That remedy may be found, that no Accomptant in the Exchequer do run in Iſſues, before he be warned.

Anſ. The Proceſs ſhall be firſt a Venire facias, then a Diſtringas, and after a Writ out of the Chancery to the Treaſurer and Barons.

Pet. That the Common Law may ſtand, as to the Bill of the Navy exhibited in the laſt Parliament.

Anſ. The King will be adviſed.

Pet. Then they reſum'd with ſome Alteration the former Petition, that no Eires of the Foreſt or other Enquiries, except thoſe of the Peace, may be kept for the ſpace of three Years.

Anſ. It ſeems good for the Eaſe of the Subject, if great neceſſity doth not require otherwiſe.

Pet. That the Marſhal letting to Bail, or at large, any Perſon committed to him for the Peace, do anſwer the Dammages himſelf.

Anſ. The King will be adviſed.

Pet. That no Man be barred by Non-claim.

Anſ. A Law muſt not be made ſuddenly.

Pet. That the Jurors in every Inqueſt and Grand Aſſize may ſay the Verity of the Fact, as in Aſſize of Novel Diſſeizin.

Anſ. The Law ſhall be kept as heretofore.

Pet. That the Purveyors for all Victuals do take by Indenture with two honeſt Men, where they ſhall purvey.

Anſ. The Laws made heretofore in that Caſe ſhall ſuffice.

Pet. That none who come to the Parliament by Summons, be appointed a Seſſor, or a Receiver of the Fifteens Triennial.

Anſ. The King will appoint ſuch as he ſhall like.

Pet. That the Erroneous Judgments in the Exchequer be reverſed in the King's Bench.

Anſ. This was anſwer'd the laſt Parliament.

[c] Purlieu & Afforeſt, de his Vocab. vid. Skinneri Etymolog. Ling. Angl.

Pet. Then was read a long Complaint againſt Foreſters, for Afforeſting of Mens Purlieus, for undue Trial and for Extortion: To which was added a Requeſt, that Magna Charta may be obſerved; and that all Men may enjoy their Purlieus, according to the Perambulation made in the time of King Edward the Firſt.

Anſ. The King wills, that Magna Charta be kept inviolable; and thoſe that will complain in the Right of their Purlieus, may have writs out of Chancery: Whereupon Surry and ſeveral other Counties by their Repreſentatives ſhew'd, that upon Sute they could not obtain ſuch Writs: To which the King anſwer'd, that the Order made the laſt Parliament ſhould be kept, and General or Special Writs ſhould be granted to all ſuch as ſhall ſue for them: So as equal Right be diſtributed both to the King and his Subjects.

Pet. That the Petitions declared by them in the laſt Parliament, to which the King and the Lords agreed, may be kept without Alteration, under any Colour or Pretence whatſoever.

Anſ. The King with the Aſſent of his Lords anſwered, that Laws and Proceſs heretofore uſed, could not be alter'd, without making New Statutes, which at this time they could not tend to do, but ſhortly would at more leiſure.

[f] 22 Ed. 3. n. in dorſo.

The [f] Worſted Weavers of Norwich, and the Merchants there, pray, that the Letters Patents, which the King had granted to Robert Pooley, One of his Valets of Eſſay, and One of the Alnage of Worſted in Norwich, and elſewhere in Norfolk, during the Life of the ſaid Robert, might be revoked, and that they might have the ſame. To which Petition this Anſwer was given; That it ſeemed good to the Kings Council, that their Requeſt ſhould be granted for the Common Benefit. But of this Parliament We ſhall ſay no more, becauſe it was broken up without any great Effect, and [g] diſ-

[g] M. S. Record p. 71. §. 4. & Sr Rob. Cotton p. 73. §. 4.

continued

continued for three Years together, by reaſon of a general Mortality, that ſoon after came into England, of which we ſhall ſpeak in its proper Place. AN. DOM. 1348.

III. In the Eaſter-Holy-days King Edward [h] held Publique Juſts and Tourneaments at Weſtminſter; where the Lord William Douglas Earl of Douglas, and Sr. William Douglas of Liddeſdale, who were both taken Priſoners at the Battle of Durham, by their Knightly Deportment and Valour, gain'd ſuch Favour in the Opinion of the King, that having given their Faith and Homage, and alſo an Oath to live peaceably at home, they had both leave to depart: And Sr. William, as well as the other, might have liv'd a long and happy Life in his own Country; but that his Hands having been ſtained with Civil Blood, could not be waſhed clean, but by his own. For, as the Scotch [i] Writers ſay, he had formerly upon Envy cauſed the Worthy Sr. Alexander Ramſey to be miſerably ſtarved to Death: And beſides that, having lately heard, that Sr. David Barklay, a Knight of Scotland, had ſlain his Brother Sr. John Douglas, who was Father to Sr. James Douglas of Dalkeith, he was ſo furiouſly bent on Revenge, that even during his Impriſonment in England, becauſe he could not do it himſelf, by Letters he procured Sr. John St. Michael to Murther the ſaid Sr. David Barklay, which accordingly one Night was performed at Aberdeen. But not long after he himſelf, being then deliver'd out of Priſon, one day, as he was hunting in Ethrick Foreſt, was in like manner ſuddenly ſlain by his own Couſin, and Godſon, William Douglas, the Son of Archimbald Douglas, in Revenge of the Death of Sr. Alexander Ramſey.

An. Regni Angliæ XXII. Franciæ IX.

[h] Stow p. 245. *Hector l.*15. fol. 325 *Buchan. l.*9. *p.*303. *& Holinſhead Scot. Hiſt. p.*242.

[i] Hector & Buchan. ibid.

While thus Scotland, and eſpecially the Family of the Douglaſſes, was miſerably divided in it ſelf; England, and the Court of King Edward flouriſhed with Honour, Peace, and Unity; and the Lords of England laudably contended to outvie one another in Martial Worth and Bravery. At Canterbury, and Eltham in Kent, at London, Weſtminſter, Wincheſter, Lincoln, Windſor, and other Places, were held ſeveral Great and Magnificent Juſts and Tourneaments. Henry [k] Earl of Lancaſter, held a little after Eaſter a ſolemn Haſtilude at Lincoln, where were preſent with Iſabel de Beaumont, his Counteſs, many Great Ladies; and alſo certain Ambaſſadors from Spain, who then came to Negotiate a Marriage [l] between the young Infant of Caſtille and Leon, named Don Pedro, Eldeſt Son and Heir Apparent to Alphonſo XI King of Spain, and the Lady Jane of the Tower, one of the Daughters of King Edward, who was then in the 13 Year of her Age. But this Poor Lady, being eſpouſed by Proxy, and conveyed into that Country, deceaſed preſently of a great Mortality, that then reign'd, of which we ſhall ſpeak hereafter. At the Tourneament at [m] Canterbury, among others, Robert Hufford Earl of Suffolk, and Sr. John Beauchamp, Brother to the Earl of Warwick, had their Harneſs and other Accoutrements allowed them from the King, the latter [n] being furniſh'd out of the Kings Wardrobe, with a Surcoat of fine Indian Silk, embroider'd with the Arms of Sr. Stephen Coſington, Knight: Of whom, thô he was not of Noble Blood, we muſt needs Remark, that he was a Gentleman of High Merit; as will not only appear from the ſequel of this our Hiſtory, but alſo may be rationally collected from this, that his Arms were beaten on all the Eight Harneſſes given by the King at this time, and worn [o] by Eight Renowned Combatants, being the Challengers, as the Prince of Wales, the Earls of Lancaſter and Suffolk, Sr. John Grey, Sr. John Beauchamp, Sr. Robert Mauley, Sr. John Chandos, and Sr. Roger Beauchamp. And at the Tourneament at Eltham, we find, among others, that the Valiant and Noble Earl of [p] Lancaſter, and Hugh [q] Courtney Earl of Devonſhire, beſides their Harneſs, and other Accoutrements, both for themſelves and Horſes, had each of them an hood of fine White Cloth, embroider'd with Dancing Men, in Blew Habits, and button'd before with large Pearls, which were allowed them out of the Kings Wardrobe.

[k] Stow p. 245

[l] *Stow ibid. & Aſhmole p.*669. &c.

[m] Dugd. 2 *Vol. p.*48.

[n] Dugd. 1 *Vol. p.*231.

[o] Aſhmole p. 185.

[p] Dugd. 1 *Vol. p.*786.

[q] Aſhmole p. 696.

We muſt here againſt our uſual Method inſert a matter or two, not of any great affinity to our Affairs, even before we come to the end of this Year; becauſe there will not then appear any ſuch convenient Room, the beginning of the next Year being continuedly joyn'd to the end of this.

IV. On the 9 of June this Year, Joan Queen of Naples, and Counteſs of Provence in France, ſold all the County of Venaiſin, together with the City of Avignon, to Pope Clement VI, for the Sum of 80000 Florens of Gold of Florence: Which ſaid Places (thô [r] ſome ſay, the Money was never paid) belong to the See of Rome to this day. How Charles II King of Naples, had firſt a Right to Venaiſin, from King Philip the Fair, who gave it unto him An° 1290, upon the Marriage of Charles de Valois his Brother, with Margaret the Daughter of that King; this is all well known: But the Firſt occaſion of this ſale (I do not ſpeak of Queen Joan's Neceſſities, of which the Pope made his Advantage) not being ſo vulgarly underſtood, we ſhall briefly from the Authority of a very [f] Judicious and Learned Gentleman, declare it in this place. In the Year 1209 Raymund the Third, Earl of Tholouſe, being a Fautor of the Albigenſes (who were accounted Hereticks) and as was thought chiefly concern'd in the Murther of the Pope's Legate, was now a ſecond time Excommunicated by Pope Innocent III; from which time he began to be deſpoiled of his Territories, till little or nothing was left entire. So that 19 Years after it was thus agreed at Paris, that to Alphonſo the Son of Raymund, ſhould fall only the City it ſelf of Tholouſe, with a few appurtenances; that the other Places beyond the Rhoſne, ſhould belong to the King of France; but whatever was by him or his Anceſtors poſſeſſed on this ſide the ſaid River, ſhould be the Pope's Patrimony. But becauſe the Men of theſe Parts did unwillingly ſubmit to the latter Part of this Agreement, being thereby upon occaſion obliged to have their Appeals to Rome, and therefore clave to Alphonſo and his Heirs, about fourſcore Years after Pope Boniface VIII, wholly acquitted them of all ſuch Appeals, and after him Pope Clement V, to win their Hearts the more, removed his Seat to Avignon in the Firſt Year of his Pontificate, or the [t] Year of our Lord 1305. So that now after all, when upon the Death of Benedict XII, [u] who ſucceeded John XXII, Clement the VI became Pope, Queen Joan flying unto Avignon from Lewis King of Hungary, who came to Revenge the Death of his Brother Andrew, her Husband, whom ſhe had murdred, made now unto the ſaid Clement a Deed of ſale of all thoſe Rights, which the Earls of Provence had from the very time of the Partition, made between Raymund Berengarius Earl of Provence, and Alphonſo Earl of Tholouſe, An°. Dom. 1125, and let this ſuffice for that Matter.

[r] Mezeray ad hunc ann. in Margine.

An. Dom. 1348. An. Regni Angliæ XXII. Franciæ IX.

[f] Peireskius apud Petrum Gaſſendum in Vitâ illius. p. 143. &c.

[t] Victorell. p. 833. collat. cum Labbe Chron. Tech. ad hunc an.

[u] Hic corrige ſive Peireskium, ſive Gaſſendum; quia ab eorum alterutro Clemens VI poſt Johannem inducitur; cùm illum exceperit Benedictus, & hunc Clemens; ut ex omnibus Pontif. Hiſtoriis conſtat.

V. A certain [x] Author, that flouriſhed in theſe days, and (as himſelf witneſſes) lived at Avignon in the Service of the ſaid Pope Clement VI, doth more than intimate, that the French King, Philip of Valois, had the Gift of healing the Diſeaſe, called the Kings Evil, with the Touch of his Hand only: Thô if ſo, we may well preſume, that our King Edward had the ſame Vertue, not only, as having more Right to the Crown of France, but as deſcended of King Edward the Confeſſors Blood, who was eminently ſignal in this Miraculous Grace: and from [y] whom, as it were by Right of Inheritance, the following Kings of England have derived the ſame Power, as Polydore Virgil, and many others have obſerved. But to return to Affairs at home.

[x] Guido Tract. 2. Doct. 2. c. 3. in Chirurgiâ Magnâ Vid. Guliel. Tookeri DD. Chariſma ſanationis p. 83.

[y] Polydor. Virg. Hiſt. l. 8. p. 143. n. 10. Vid. Tooker's Chariſma ſanitatis p. 83, 84, 85.

After * Eaſter King Edward made an Order in Council, that none of his Servants ſhould preſume to take up any Victuals of any Man againſt his Will, nor then, without paying ready Money, on pain of Puniſhment proportionable to his Offence, and being baniſh'd the Kings Court for ever. To the Execution of which Decree Sr. Richard Talbot, Lord High-Steward of the Kings Houſhold, was appointed to have an Eye.

* Stow p. 245.

VI. The Truce taken between the two Kings at Calais laſt Year, drawing now toward an end, upon [z] the Pope's Letters to King Edward, he was prevail'd with to depute Thomas Falſtaff Arch-Deacon of Welles, John Carleton Canon of Welles, both Doctors of Law, and Frier John de Reppes of the Order of Mount Carmel, who had Commiſſion to prorogue the Truce, and to Treat of a Final Peace. The Truce they accordingly prorogued for ſix Weeks, to Commence on the 13 of September following, and to be obſerved throughout all Picardy, Normandy, Artois, Boulogne, and Flanders. But the King well perceiving the delay and backwardneſs of the French to cloſe with him ſincerely, either for a Truce, or Peace, in [a] October next drew down his Forces to Sandwich, intending to paſs the Seas. Whereupon the French were quicken'd to a ſpeedy agreement, as to the Prorogation of the foregoing Truce [b] from the 18 of November 1348, unto the 1 of September 1349, on News whereof the King return'd to London.

[z] Aſhmole p. 656. ex Rot. Franc. 15. Maii 22. Ed. 3. m. 13.

[a] Clauſ. 22. Ed. 3 p. 2. m. 8. in Dorſo.

[b] 18 Novemb. Rot. Franc. 22. Ed. 3. m. 10.

VII. On the [c] 25 of October, King Edward ſolemnized the Tranſlation of St. Thomas the Confeſſor, once Biſhop of Hereford, to the great Expence and Charge of his Kinſman the Lord Nicolas Cantilupe. This St. Thomas had been alſo of the ſirname of Cantilupe, being in his Life time a Gentleman of a very Noble and Ancient Houſe (as appears * by the Antiquity of their Baronage in our Records) but, as Biſhop Godwin [d] ſays, of a much more Noble and Excellent Mind: For he was not only of a wonderfull Ingenuity and exquiſite Judgement; but even from a Child, of great Diligence and Induſtry in his ſtudies, of Marvellous exactneſs of Life, and of incomparable Candour and Vertue. His Father was William Lord Cantilupe, [e] High-Steward to King Henry III of England, a Man of great Power and Loyalty: His Mother was the Lady Millicent Counteſs of Eureux in Normandy. He firſt ſtudied at Oxford, and afterwards at Paris, where having proceeded Maſter, he return'd to Oxford, and there ap-

[c] Knighton p. 2600. & Stow p. 248. & Walſingh. hiſt. p. 160 n. 20. & Odor. Rainald. quanquam hic 2 poſt annis ponat.

* Vid. Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 731.

[d] Godw. Catal. Bps p. 457.

[e] Matth. Paris l. 17. p. 815. & Dugd. ibid.

ply'd

ply'd himself to the Canon Law, till he went out Doctor in that Faculty. After this he entirely gave his Mind to the study of Divinity; whereof he was to proceed Doctor in the Year 1273. Robert Kilwardby, with whom he was very familiarly acquainted, was then Provincial of the Friers-Preachers, and Doctor of the Chair in Oxford, when he was presented: But before the time came, that he should keep the Act, or rather the Act being by some Accident delayed till then, the said Doctor Kilwardby was become Archbishop of Canterbury. But this notwithstanding, he vouchsafed this his old Friend, the Honour to come down to Oxford to his Act on purpose; and there gave him the Ceremonies of his Creation. And it is observable, that this Archbishop and Professor, in his speech after the Disputation, among many other great Praises, which he bestowed on him, affirmed, that he the said Archbishop, having of many Years been Confessor to the said Candidate Dr. Thomas Cantilupe, "had never perceived him "guilty of any sin, which he could judge to be Mortal. Certainly, either the Confessee did a little mince Matters, or the Confessor was blinded with the prejudice of Friendship, or some other Infirmity, or the Relator did take a little too much liberty in Honour of the Man. Who notwithstanding, was no doubt of great Merit every way, as may appear by these manifold Honours; which as so many loud Testimonials of his Vertue were heaped upon him, both Living and Dead. For first he was made Arch-Deacon of Stafford, then Chancellour of the University of Oxford, then Lord [f] Chancellour of England, and afterwards Bishop of Hereford; lastly, a few Years after his Death, Canonised a Saint. For, whereas in his Travels to, or, as some say, from Rome, he departed this Life at Civita Vecchia, a Town of Tuscany, in the Year of our Lord 1282, and was Honourably buried in the Church of St. Severus there, from whence afterward his Bones were brought into England, and solemnly interred in his own Church of Hereford, near the East-Wall of the North-Cross-Isle, where we see an High-Tomb of Marble: Within a few Years after his Death, there being no less than [g] 163 Miracles said to be wrought by him, his Fame was so great, that we find [h] King Edward the Second, in the Twelfth Year of his Reign, and the Year of our Lord 1318, sent an Embassy to Pope John XXII, about his Canonization. And two Years after, namely, in the Year of our Lord 1320, [i] being the 13 of King Edward the Second, on the XV of the Calends of May, he was by the said Pope John Canonized with great Solemnity at Avignon, and the VI of the Nones of October was set apart for his Festival, as appears by the said Pope's Bull, bearing Date at Avignon XII Cal. Maii, Pontificatûs nostri Anno IV. But now King Edward designing to Honour the Memory of this Holy Man, took up his Bones this Year, being [k] Sixty five Years since he died, and had them Honourably reposed in a Rich and Glorious Shrine of great Value.

AN. DOM. 1348. An. Regni Angliæ XXII. Franciæ IX.

[f] Philipot's Catal. Chancellors p. 24.

[g] Nic. Harpsfield Hist. Eccl. Angl. secul. 13. c. 21.

[h] Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 92. ex Rot. Rom. 12. Ed. 2. m. 9.

[i] Odor. Rainald. ad an. 1320. a §. 43. ad §. 47.

[k] Nic. Harpsfield Hist. Eccl. Angl. secul. 13. c. 21.

This small Digression I ow'd to the Memory of this Worthy Prelate, as well that the Reader might understand, what kind of Man he had been, whose Translation King Edward did now so devoutly solemnize; as also, because I believed that such a Person, to whom so many of several Nations and Interests, never envied the Title of a glorified Saint, would much less by any Man of Modesty, be envied an Honourable Mention in History.

VIII. While King Edward was thus, with as much Devotion as Splendour, keeping a Feast in Memory of this Great Prelate, Henry the Noble Earl of Lancaster was by him [l] sent to Denemere, to receive in his behalf Fealty and Homage of Lewis, Earl of Flanders; which the said Earl, thô he had now Married the Duke of Brabant's Daughter, was at last forced to comply with, and performed it accordingly. But for all that being wholly enchanted with a love for the French Nation, [m] not long after, that he might be Reveng'd of those, who thus forced his Inclination, he enter'd Flanders with a great Power of Frenchmen, burning, killing and ravaging, as if he had been in the Country of his Deadly Enemies. However he was at last oppos'd by a considerable Body of Flemings, reinforced with some English Men of Arms, and Archers, who gave him a shrew'd encounter: Wherein many Frenchmen being slain, he himself with the rest was forced to quit the Field by flight. In which Action, many, both Flemings and English behav'd themselves so gallantly, that they obtained thereby the Honour of Knighthood, among whom was the young Lord John St. Philibert, Son an Heir of him, of whom we spake in the [n] V Year of this King.

[l] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 786. ex Claus. 22. Ed. 3. m. 3. & Stow p. 245.

[m] Stow p. 246. b.

[n] Vid. l. 1. c. 4. §. 6. p. 63.

IX. While yet the foresaid Festival of the Translation of St. Thomas lasted, it was also very privately signified unto King Edward by one of the Secretaries, of Emeric of Pavia Captain of Calais, that on such a certain Day, the Lord Geoffry Charny with a great Number of Armed Frenchmen was to be received into Calais, to the utter ruine of his his Intereſt in that Place. Froiſard is of the Opinion, that this Secretarie betrayed his Maſters Secrets thus to the King without his knowledge, as we ſhall ſee by and by: But the other French Writers agree, that he diſcover'd them himſelf, thô he had not only agreed to take their Money, but alſo had bound himſelf by taking the Sacrament to the Bargain; and therefore Mezeray ſays, that being taken ſome while after by the French, he was by them flea'd alive; and indeed we ſhall find him immediately laid aſide by King Edward after this Buſineſs was over. But let us firſt ſee how Froiſard relates the Matter

An. Dom. 1348. An. Regni Angliæ XXII. Franciæ IX.

It ſhould have been obſerved before, how the Frenchmen in all their Negotiations, either relating to a Peace or Truce, were ever urging of this Point, that Calais might be reſtored: But to this King Edward would never yield by any means, not only becauſe the Town had coſt him ſo dear before he had it, but alſo becauſe, while in the Engliſh Hands, it was both a ſignal Trophy of his Honour, and a ſure Footing for him to enter France, upon any Rupture between the two Nations. However, as we ſhew'd before, the French had now agreed to a Truce, the Neceſſity of their Affairs ſo requiring it, thô it inwardly grieved them to the Heart, that Calais was ſtill left under the Dominion of England.

[o] Froiſ. c. 150.

Now there [o] was at this time in the Town of St. Omers a right Politick and Valiant Lord of France, called Sr. Geoffry de Chargny, or Charny, who had full and abſolute Authority, as Lieutenant under the King of France, to keep the Frontiers in thoſe Parts; in like manner, as [p] Henry Earl of Lancaſter had under the King of England in the Parts of Flanders, Calais, and all other Places ſubject to King Edward in France. This Lord Geoffry Charny, who reſolved by any Means to ſerve the King his Maſters Intereſt, among many Conſiderations, which he entertain'd in his thoughts concerning the Regaining of Calais, remembred that the Captain of the Caſtle of Calais was a Lombard, and that your Lombards of all People are naturally Covetous: And ſo with this thought he reſolves upon a Deſign, nothing at all agreeable to Faith or Honour, but likely to prove of great Advantage to the King and Realm of France. Now by reaſon of the Truce, there was free Communication allowed between the Caliſians and them of St. Omers; ſo that dayly they reſorted for Traffick to one another, and had mutual Correſpondence in matters of Life and Society. Hereupon the Lord Geoffry Charny built his Deſign, and ſecretly fell in Treaty with Sr. Emeric of Pavia Captain of the Caſtle; ſo that at laſt he agreed, and thereupon [q] took the Sacrament, for the Summ of 20000 Crowns of Gold, to deliver up to the Frenchmens Hands the Caſtle of Calais, whereby the Town was commanded, as on the laſt Day of December at Midnight.

[p] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 786. 25 Septemb. Rot. Fran. 22. Ed. 3. m. 1.

[q] Stow p. 248. b.

There is ſome Variation in the Account that Authors give of this Matter: Some averring, that this Lombard had been bred up of a Child in King Edwards Court; Others, that he was at firſt a Penſioner of the French Kings in the Town of Calais, untill the Taking thereof, at what time for Reaſons beſt known to himſelf he retain'd him in his Pay: But this latter Opinion ſeems the weaker of the two; for how ſhould ſo Wiſe a Prince commit ſo important a Charge to any Man upon ſo ſmall Acquaintance? Again, ſome ſay that the Diſcovery of the Treaſon was not made by him; but then how ſhould the King be ſo ſecure, as to keep him ſtill in that Office? Thô I confeſs this is not abſolutely improbable, becauſe the King being certainly informed of the Time and other Circumſtances, might well enough be ſuppoſed able to prevent the Treaſon's taking effect, by ſetting a good Watch over him, ſecretly to obſerve all his Motions. On the other hand 'tis ſaid, as we intimated before, that he himſelf of his own accord gave the King ſecret and timely Notice of the Deſign; and that thereby he would have an Opportunity, not only to catch his Enemies in the very Act of breaking the Truce, but to make a conſiderable Advantage to Himſelf, and at the ſame time turn the Miſchief they intended to Him, on their own Heads. But if this latter be true, the Man had more Loyalty to King Edward than Religion to God, who could ſo readily take the Sacrament, as a Pledge for the Performance of what he never intended. A thing ſcarce credible among Chriſtians; but that we have ſeen even in our Days a Man, who had the impudence to own himſelf guilty of the ſame horrid Prevarication, under pretence of Deſigning well.

And having given this Hint, leſt the different Accounts, which Authors give of the Matter, may prejudice an unwary Reader againſt any thing we ſhall ſay; we now proceed according to Froiſard, not abſolutely rejecting thoſe of the other ſide, becauſe neither are they without their Probabilities.

When King Edward therefore heard, either one or the other way, of this intended Treachery of the French, he immediately ſent for Emeric the Lombard to come over unto unto him: And he accordingly went, for he thought it impoſſible, that his private Conveyance ſhould have taken any Vent already. When the King ſaw him, he took him into his Cloſet and ſaid, "You know well Sir, that I have entruſted to your Charge "that Thing, which in this World I love beſt, next my Wife and Children, that is to "ſay, the Caſtle of Calais, whereby the Town alſo is commanded. And yet this Ca- "ſtle have you traiterouſly ſold to the French: Wherefore what can you ſay now, "why you ſhould not ſuffer a ſhamefull Death? Then the Lombard fell down upon his "knees and ſaid, Ah! my Gracious Maſter, I humbly crave your Mercy. What you "ſay, I acknowledge is all true; but Sir, the Bargain may eaſily be broken, for as yet "I have not received one Penny of the Mony. Now the King, who had long had a "great Favour for this Lombard, began to take pity of him, and ſaid, "Emeric, I give "you your Life, and continue you in your Office in truſt of your Amendment: And "I would alſo have you go on with your Bargain, and get as much Mony of my "Enemies as you can: But let me have true Information of the Day and Hour ap- "pointed for the Delivery of the Caſtle; and let no Soul living know of this our Com- "munication, and on this Condition I forgive you your treſpaſs. According to this A- greement things were ſettled, and the Lombard return'd back to Calais, and kept all very cloſe, reſolving to be true to ſo indulgent a Maſter, and to put a Trick on thoſe, who had thus attempted to debauch his Loyalty.

AN. DOM. 1348. An. Regni Angliæ XXII. Franciæ IX.

The mean while Sr. Geoffry Charny, not doubting but to ſucceed in his intended Enterpriſe upon Calais, near the time appointed had furniſh'd himſelf with [r] a thouſand choice Men of Arms, and a proportionable Number of Others, thô few or none of all his Company had the leaſt knowledge of what he deſign'd. 'Tis thought that he never acquainted the King his Maſter with his Purpoſe, for fear that in Honour he ſhould not give his Conſent, becauſe of the Truce; but he doubted not, when once the Matter was happily effected, not only to gain a Pardon, but Thanks for ſuch a piece of Service. The Time on which the Caſtle of Calais was to be deliver'd, was fixt on the laſt Night of December, or the firſt Morning of the New Year: Of which Bargain the Lombard ſent ſecretly by a Brother of his a diſtinct Notice to King Edward, who was then at [s] Havering at the Bower in Eſſex, where he kept his Chriſtmas.

[r] Mezeray p. 32

[s] M.S. vet. Ang. in Bibl. C.C.C. c. 228. & Holinſhead Eng. Chr. p. 944.

X. The King being thus acquainted with all the Minutes, choſe privately unto him [t] 800 Men of Arms, and 1000 Archers, and taking Ship at Dover, arrived ſafely that Evening at Calais ſo ſecretly, that none but his Friends had the leaſt inkling thereof: And ſo immediately he began to diſpoſe of his Men in Ambuſh in the Dungeon and other Places of the Caſtle: And having done thus, he ſaid to the Lord Walter Manny, "Sir Walter, I have a mind to grace you with the Honour of this Enterpriſe: For both "I and the Prince my Son, intend to fight under your Banner. Now this mean while the Lord Geoffry Charny, on the laſt Day of December, after Noon, began to march from Arras toward Calais, and came thither about 8 of the Clock at Night, and then made an Halt, waiting for thoſe that were not yet come up, and ſet his Men in order for Battle: Which being done, and all his Men he expected being come, about twelve of the Clock he ſent two Eſquires to the Poſtern Gate of the Caſtle, who finding Sr. Emeric of Pavia ready there to receive them, demanded of him if it was time, that the Lord Geoffry might come, and he ſaid, "Yes high time. With this Anſwer they return'd to their Maſter, who thereupon made his Men paſs New-land Bridge in good Order of Battle: Before whom he ſent twelve Knights with an 100 Men of Arms, to go and take poſſeſſion of the Caſtle; for he judg'd rightly, that when once he had ſecur'd that to himſelf he ſhould preſently get the Town: Since he had ſuch a Number of Men with him (no leſs than 20000) and might have more from the Country about at his Pleaſure. When he ſent theſe Men, he alſo deliver'd into the hands of Sr. Edward of Renty their Chief Captain, 20000 Crowns of Gold in a Bag, to give unto the Lombard according to their Agreement; and while thoſe went to take the Caſtle, he himſelf hover'd near the Town in great ſilence with his Banner before him: For it was his Reſolution to enter the Town by the Gate, or elſe not at all. Now the Lombard Captain had let down the Bridge of the Poſtern, and permitted the 100 Men of Arms to enter peaceably, Sr. Edward Renty having at the Poſtern deliver'd into his Hands the 20000 Crowns in a Bag, which he took ſaying, "I hope here is the full "Summ, thô I am not at leiſure to count it now, for anon it will be Morning: And we "have not done all our Work yet. And thereupon he caſt the Bag, and Crowns and all into a Cheſt, and ſaid to the Frenchmen, "Come on Meſſieurs, you ſhall firſt ſeiſe "on the Dungeon, and then you are ſure to be Maſters of the Caſtle. And there- withall upon their Approach thither, he drew aſide the Barrs, and open'd the Gate wide for [t] Mezeray p. 31 Froiſ. c. 151.

An. Dom. 1348. An. Regni Angliæ XXII. Franciæ IX.

for them to enter. Within this part of the Tower was the King of England with 200 Men of Arms, who at that inſtant ſallied out upon the Frenchmen with their naked Swords and Battle-axes in their hands, crying out, "A Manny, a Manny, to the Reſcue! "What do the Frenchmen imagin with ſo few Men to take the Caſtle of Calais? The French were both ſuddenly ſurpriſed and far outnumbred; wherefore ſeeing 'twas in vain to reſiſt, they ſtrait yielded themſelves Priſoners; ſo that few or none were hurt or ſlain, and immediately they were all diſarmed, and clapt up together in the ſame Tower of the Dungeon. Then the Engliſhmen with the King iſſued out of the Caſtle into the Town, all mounted on Horſeback, for the Frenchmens Horſes were all now in their Hands, and an hundred Engliſh Archers leapt thereon, and accompanied the King and his two hundred Men of Arms, and others on Foot to the Gate that looks towards Boulogne: Where the Lord Geoffry Charny ſtood with his Banner before him, which was Gules, Three Eſcutcheons Argent. He was very deſirous to be the firſt that ſhould enter the Town; and ſaid thrô impatience to the Captains that were about him: "Ex- "cept this Lombard open the Gate quickly, we are like to ſtarve here with Cold. Oh! "Sir, ſaid Sr. Pepin de la Gueret, theſe Lombards are covetous and ſubtle Fellows; I'll "warrant he is looking over our Crowns now, to ſee whether they be all Current or "no, and to find whether it be the full Summ. And with that Word King Edward and his Son the Black-Prince were ready at the Gate, being Both incognito under the Banner of the Lord Walter Manny, which was [n] born in this Adventure by a Noble and Valiant Young Baron of England, called Sr. Guy Brian: Beſides which Lord Manny, there were preſent divers other Engliſh Lords, who had their Banners in the Field, as Robert Hufford Earl of Suffolk, Ralph Lord Stafford, the Lord John Montagu, Brother to William Earl of Salisbury, the Lord John Beauchamp, Brother to Thomas Earl of Warwick, the young Lord Roger de la Ware, the Lord Thomas Berkley, the Lord William [x] Rous the Younger; and there were no more Lords that bore Banners in this Exploit. All theſe being come on Horſeback in great ſilence to the Gate that reſpects Boulogne, the Gates were preſently ſet open, and they all iſſued forth in good Order of Battle. When the Frenchmen ſaw them come forth againſt them, and heard them cry "a Manny, a Manny to the Reſcue; they ſaw well the Lombard had betray'd them, and began to be in ſome Confuſion. But then the Lord Geoffry Charny, like a wiſe and hardy Captain, ſaid aloud, "Meſſieurs, if we turn our Backs we are all loſt without "Remedy: 'Tis more ſafe to expect our Enemies with a good Courage, and then we ſhall obtain the Day. The Front of the Engliſh hearing theſe Words ſaid, "By Saint "George You ſay well! A ſhame on them that turn their Backs firſt. And then the Frenchmen began to light off their Horſes, and order'd themſelves for a ſtanding Fight: Whereupon King Edward ſpake to the Lord Manny, "Let us alſo get on Foot, for the "Enemy I ſee will expect us: And at the ſame time he order'd a Detachment to go to Newland Bridge: For he had heard, that a good Body of Frenchmen were juſt ſent thither to make good the Retreat; beſides a Conſiderable Party left there at firſt by Sr. Geoffry Charny. Accordingly there went thither ſix Banners of England, and 300 Archers on Horſeback, and there they found the Lord Moreaux de Fiennes and the Lord of Crequy, and others ready to keep the Bridge; and before them between the Bridge and Calais ſtood ready ranged a Brigade of Arbaliſters and Croſs-bows. Here began a terrible Medley, the Archers of England piercing and breaking their Ranks thrô and thrô with their thick Flights of deadly Arrows; ſo that preſently there were more than ſix hundred Frenchmen ſlain, or drown'd and ſtifled, for they were eaſily beaten away by the Archers, ſlain, diſcomfited, and chaced into the Water on each hand. This was early in the Morning before Day-break, when all things being rendred uncertain, thoſe who are ſet upon are uſually the moſt fearfull. However the French Men of Arms kept their Ground, and for a while fought gallantly enough, and did many proper Feats of Arms, but the Engliſhmen from Calais perpetually flow'd in upon them, and the French decreaſed as faſt; wherefore the reſt ſeeing they could no longer maintain the Bridge, ſuch as had Horſes by, mounted and ſhew'd their Backs, the Engliſh following after them on the Spurr, while others were gleaning the Reliques of the Field at the Bridge, and ſlaying and taking thoſe Frenchmen, who could not recover their Horſes. There the Lord of Fiennes, the Lord of Crequy, the Lord Doudeauville and Others, that were well horſed ſaved themſelves: But far more were beaten and overthrown, and many were taken thrô their own indiſcreet Hardineſs, that might elſe have ſaved themſelves not diſhonourably. But when at laſt it was Day-light, and the Frenchmen could plainly ſee all about them, they began to look back, and beheld that the Purſuers was far inferiour to them in Number, wherefore they boldly faced about, bout, and began to order themselves for Battle, and to call upon their fellows to come back and joyn them. And here, as some [y] will have it, was the King of England in this Party among the Pursuers, eager of Honour, thô to the great hazard of his Person, and that being at first, because unknown, follow'd but by a Few, namely, 16 Men of Arms, and about an 100 Archers on Horseback, when he saw the Resolution of his Enemies, who perceiving his small Numbers, turned back upon him, he as resolutely dismounted, and put away his Horse from him, cast away the scabbard of his Sword, and set his Men in the best Order he might, placing the Archers on the dry hills, encompassed with Quagmires and Marshes, to preserve them from the fury of the Enemies Horse; at which instant lifting up the Visor of his Helmet a little, to shew himself unto his Men, he exhorted them aloud to play the Game of Honour lustily, telling them that he was Edward of Windsor, and would bear a part with them in this adventure: So that the Hearts of the English were wonderfully exalted beyond their usual height of Courage, being as well animated by the Example and Presence of their King, as also by Honour and Necessity it self. The Archers especially stripping up their sleeves to the shoulder, to have the more liberty for Action, stood ready to bestow their home-drawn Arrows, with such judgement and concernedness, that not one of them might fail of due Execution. Then the Armed Men on both sides met furiously, and the King in the Head of his Men did Marvels, raging, as [z] One says, like a Wild Boar, and crying out for Indignation, as his usual Manner was, Ha! St. Edward, Ha! St. George; the Archers all this while doing great Execution on the Enemies flank: till at last, the English being well-nigh oppresst by the too unequal Numbers of the Enemy; the Young Prince of Wales came opportunely to the Rescue.

[n] Dugd. 2 Vol. Bar. p. 151. ex Clauſ. 23. Ed. 3. p. 2. m. 8.

[x] Dugd. Bar. 1 Vol. p. 550. ex Rot. Franc. 23 Ed. 3. m. 4.

AN. DOM. 1348. An. Regni Angliæ XXII. Franciæ IX.

[y] Walsing. hist. p. 159. & Stow p. 249.

[z] Walsing. ibid. & M.S. Vet. Angl. in Bibl. C.C.C. c. 228.

But let who will be of this Opinion, I cannot cordially embrace it my self, not only because it makes so Great a Captain, against decorum, too inconsiderate and rash for that Character; but also because it seems utterly improbable, that the Prince of Wales, the Lord Manny, and those other Lords, who knew of the Kings being there, should suffer him to be so lightly attended in so hazardous a juncture, or that thô disguised to the rest, he was not yet remarkable enough to them. Not to say, that it is scarce credible, the King, who had such a zeal for the safety of Calais, should leave the Head of the Enemy fighting at the Gates, and run forth after Matters of far less Moment, leaving the Place in danger of being taken. From all which we are enclin'd to believe, that when the Causey and Bridge was clear'd by that Detachment, which the King had sent thither, one Moiety might remain there still to clear the field of the French, who could not recover their Horses, or who fled not so fast, and the other in the mean time follow'd the Chace upon the Spur: And perhaps here and there did meet with some resistance, till their Partners having clear'd their hands by this time, came up to their Reinforcement: But that the King himself, his Son, and the Lord Manny, fought all the while in the Field by Boulogne-Gate, where the main stress of the whole business lay. In this part the [a] Frenchmen fought bravely indeed, under the Conduct of the Lord Geoffry Charny, and the Lord Charles of Monmorency, and gave the Englishmen their hands full, thô the King himself, and his Son the Prince, with the strength of the Garrison, and the Flower of those he brought with him from England, was engag'd against them. The King fought on foot among his Enemies, unknown both to them, and most of his own Men, under the Banner of the Lord Walter Manny, which was [b] Or, Three Chevrons Sable. The French at their first approach stood ready to receive them with their Spears cut five foot long before them. It was the Fortune of King Edward to encountre hand to hand, with a strong and hardy Knight of France, named Eustace de Ribemont, Lord of Ribemont in Tierasche, a tract in Picardy; between these two there began a fierce and gallant Combat, that it was a great pleasure to behold them; but at last they were put asunder against their both Wills, by others, who on each side came between, and still the Battle waxed hotter and hotter. King Edward began to be chafed with this opposition, and especially desired to meet singly with that Lord again, who had put him so hard to it: For he had twice by pure strength and weight of his stroaks upon the Kings Helmet, made him bend his knee almost to the Earth. At last they met together again, and then the King had such apparent Advantage of him, that Sr. Eustace was forced to save his Life by delivering his Sword unto him; when neither knowing, who, nor what he was, he said, "Sr. Knight, I yield my self your Prisoner. Whereupon the King, who himself alone had taken him, gave him to a Lord, his Servant there by, with a strict Charge to see him forth coming, upon demand. About the same time there were taken by others, the Lord Geoffry Charny, and his Son; Sr. Geoffry himself being grievously wounded, for he had all the while been among the foremoſt. There was ſlain Sr. Pepin de la Gueret, Sr. Henry du Bois, Sr. Walter de [c] Valence, and Sr. Robert de Beauvais, with many more. The Lord Monmorency very narrowly eſcaped away, with the Lord of Landas, and others: Beſides thoſe mention'd before, who eſcaped away at Newland-Bridge: So that almoſt all Sr. Geoffry's Party were cut off, or taken, together with the Lord Edward Renty, and thoſe other twelve Knights, who with an 100 Men of Arms had been ſurpriſed before, and clap'd up in the Dungeon.

[a] Froiss. c. 151. fol. 74.

[b] Vid Ashmole's Garter in Plate 46. ad p. 709.

An. Dom. 1348. An. Regni Angliæ XXII. Franciæ IX.

[c] Fabian p.226.

[d] Fabian p.226.

After this Victory, which was happily compleated on the Firſt day of January, by Ten in the Morning, the Lord Geoffry Charny, [d] being grievouſly wounded, was laid forth upon a Dreſſer, and ſo expoſed to the Kings View; who, notwithſtanding he knew him the Author of this Treaſon, began to relent, to behold ſo great a Spirit, in ſo low a Condition, and took pity of him: Inſomuch that he forthwith Commanded his own Chirurgeons, to take the beſt Care they could of his Life, and to look faithfully and diligently to his Wounds, giving him ſuch Reſtoratives, as might ſooneſt ſupply the Defects of Nature: And they ſo well obſerv'd this Charge, that having not receiv'd any Mortal hurt, the Lord Geoffry was at Night able to walk, and ſat at Supper with the reſt of the Priſoners, as we ſhall now declare.

An. Dom. 1349. An. Regni Angliæ XXIII. Franciæ X.

XI. The Battle being thus happily ended to the Advantage of the Engliſh, King Edward return'd to the Caſtle of Calais, and Commanded all the Priſoners to be brought thither, and beſtow'd in ſafe Cuſtody: [e] And then, firſt the Frenchmen knew and ſaw, that the King of England had been Perſonally in this Exploit, thô diſguiſed in Common Armour, without any Rich Surcoat, or other Honourable Cogniſance, under the Banner of one of his own Knights; a Greater Honour, than which, did never any Sovereign Confer on a Well-deſerving Subject. The King moſt Courteouſly viſited the Priſoners, and told them, He would that Night give them all an Entertainment in his Caſtle of Calais; and accordingly at the time of Supper, the Tables were ſpread in the Great Hall, and a Magnificent and Royal Feaſt provided. The King and his Lords were all there freſh and Richly cloathed, and the Frenchmen alſo were, as the King had order'd, in the ſame Room, making merry, at leaſt to outward appearance, thô they were Priſoners. The King ſat down at a Table by himſelf, at the Upper end of the Hall, the Prince his Son, and the Lords and Knights of England ſerving in the Firſt Courſe: But at the Second Courſe, they alſo ſat down on each ſide of the King; the French Lords and Captains, being all at one long Table in the midſt of the Hall. There was a moſt Splendid Feaſt, and it continued long; and after Supper the King tarried ſtill in the Hall among his Nobles, and the Frenchmen had Wine brought to them at the Table.

[e] Froiſ. c. 152.

Preſently after Supper, the King, being bare-headed, except a Rich Circlet of Gold about his Head, beſet with Precious Pearl, roſe up with ſome of his Chief Lords, and went to look and diſcourſe with the Frenchmen. When he came to Sr. Geoffry Charny, he changed countenance a little, and beheld him with ſome Signs of Diſpleaſure, and ſaid, "Sr. Geoffry, of Right I ſhould owe you but ſmall Thanks, ſince you "deſign'd to ſteal from me in the Dark, that which I ſo fairly won by day, and which "coſt me ſo dearly. I am very well ſatisfied, that I took you in the Fact: For ſure-"ly you thought to make a better Market, than I had; when you attempted to pur-"chaſe Calais for 20000 Crowns. But God Almighty hath in Mercy aſſiſted Me, "and you have miſt your aim. He for his part had never a word to return, both ſhame and an evil Conſcience forbidding him, and his Wounds alſo rendring him not well diſpos'd to ſpeak. So the King left him, and went to the Lord Euſtace de Ribemont, where he made a ſtand, and with a joyfull and friendly countenance ſaid unto him: "Sr. Euſtace, of all Men living, You are the Knight, whom I have found moſt "Valiant and Couragious, as well in offending your Enemies, as in defending your ſelf, and "I never in my life met with that Man, that gave me ſo much adoe, Body to Body, as "you have done this day. Wherefore I adjudge the Prize of Knighthood unto you by "Right Sentence above all the Knights of my Court. And with that the King took off the Chaplet of Pearls, which he wore upon his Head, being very Fair, Goodly and Rich, and preſenting him therewith ſaid, "Sr. Euſtace, I give you this Chaplet for the beſt "Doer in Arms at this laſt Battle of either Party, whether French or Engliſh, and I "deſire you to wear it this Year at Feſtivals for my ſake. I know well, you are a Per-"ſonable Gentleman, Young and Amorous, and well accepted of among the Ladies; "wherefore if you will wear it in all Publique Balls, and declare unto them, that the "King of England gave you this, as a Teſtimony of your Valour; I will alſo now re-"leaſe you from Priſon, quitting you wholly of your Ranſom, and you ſhall depart to "mor-

"morrow, if you pleaſe. The Knight, who by this time had been fully informed of all things, was ſo abundantly ſatisfied, that it had been his Fortune to fight hand to hand with ſo great a King, and to receive ſuch an Honourable Acknowledgement from him, that he not only wore the ſaid Chaplet accordingly, while he lived; but in Memory of ſo Gracious a Gift from ſo Mighty a Prince, did [f] bear ever after in his Arms Three Chaplets garniſhed with Pearls.

AN. DOM. 1349. An. Regni Angliæ XXIII. Franciæ X.

[f] Ferne's Blazon of Gentry. *l.*1. *p.*211.

XII. Thus was this Treaſon of the French, attempted in the time of Truce, by another Treaſon of the Lombard Captain juſtly thrown upon their own Heads: Thô the perfidious Knight eſcaped not long himſelf: For [g] being the next Year taken by ſome Frenchmen about St. Omers, he was firſt degraded of the Order of Knighthood, by having his Spurs hew'd from his Heels, then branded with a burning hot Iron for a Rogue, and then his Tongue being cut out in token of his Perjury, he was Hanged by the Neck, and laſtly Beheaded, Quarter'd and Diſmembred as a Traytor. And ſurely, however cunningly he had carried himſelf in this matter, either there remain'd ſtill ſo much Suſpicion on him, or however the Action appeared ſo deteſtable, that King Edward never after had any Kindneſs for him, or Confidence in his Loyalty: For we find, [h] how on that very Day, whereon the Reſcue of Calais had been made, namely on the Firſt of January, the King appointed the Noble, Valiant and Loyal Baron Sr. John Beauchamp for Captain of Calais.

[g] Mezeray ad an. 1350. &c. Stow p. 249.

[h] Aſhmole p. 657. ex Rot. Franc. 22. Ed. 3. *m.*1.

Nor was the King unmindfull of thoſe his Gallant Subjects, who had accompanied him in the Reſcue of this important Place: Among whom the Lord Walter Manny, under whoſe Banner he had fought, [i] obtain'd of him a Pardon for all ſuch Eſcapes, as any Felons or Fugitives had made out of the Priſon of the Marſhalſey, he being this Year Marſhall thereof; and the next [k] Year had a Grant of thoſe Houſes and Wharfs in the Town of Libourne within the Dutchy of Aquitain, which Edmund Marcell (a Partaker with the Kings Enemies) had formerly poſſeſſed; as alſo a [l] Grant of the Mannor of Oſpettlington in the County of Barwick, which Thomas Byſet, a Scot in Arms againſt the King, had formerly held. And as for the Lord Guy Bryan, who was Standard-Bearer to the King in this Action, [m] he behav'd himſelf with ſuch great Courage and Valour at that time, that in Recompence thereof he obtained of the King a Grant of 200 Marks per annum out of the Exchequer, during Life, which was afterwards augmented [n] with 200 l. more per annum, ut priùs; beſides ſeveral other Charters, Grants and Emoluments at ſundry times confer'd upon him, and the great Honour of being made firſt a Banneret, and afterwards upon a Vacancy Knight of the moſt Noble Order of the Garter: He [o] bore for his Arms Or Three Piles Azure.

[i] Dugd. 2 *Vol. p.*149. ex Pat. 23. *Ed.*3. *p.*2. m. 26.

[k] *Dugd. ibid. ex Rot. Vaſc.*24 *Ed.*3. *m.*6.

[l] *Id. ibid. ex Rot. Vaſc.*24 *Ed.*3. *m.*3.

[m] Dugd. Bar. 2 *Vol. p.*151. *ex Pat.*23 *Ed.*3. *p.*2. *m.*3.

[n] Id. ibid. ex Autogr. penes Cleric. pell.

[o] *Aſhmole's Garter p.*709. Plate 57.

And thus the Noble King of England having happily atchieved his Enterprize, and left the Caſtle of Calais under the Command of the Lord Beauchamp aforeſaid, and the Town as it was before under the Lord John Mongomery, returned Triumphant homeward with the Chief of the French Priſoners, and arrived ſafe in England. But the Lord Mongomery and his Lady preſently after died at Calais of a Plague, which by and by will furniſh us with much matter of Diſcourſe.

Not long before this, [p] Charles Eldeſt Son of John Duke of Normandy, King Philips Eldeſt Son, took Poſſeſſion of the Dauphinate of Vienna, which the Old Dauphin Prince Humbert, having loſt the Lord James, his onely Son and Heir in the Battle of Creſſy, had ſold a good Penniworth to the French King: He himſelf retiring from the World into a Convent of Jacobins, where he took their Habit. From that Prince the Kings of France's Eldeſt Sons have been called Dauphins of Vienna, as the Kings of England's Eldeſt Sons are ſtiled Princes of Wales.

[p] *Fabian p.*278. & Mezeray ad an. 1349. Odor. Rainal. ad. an. 1350. *n.*40.

XIII. In the [q] Month of Auguſt of this laſt Year died the Mother of the ſaid Dauphin, commonly called the Good Dutcheſs of Normandy, who was Daughter to John the Old King of Bohemia, that was ſlain alſo in the Battle of Creſſy: And [r] yet the ſame King of Bohemia's Son, Charles the Emperour, was married to the Lady Blanch, Siſter of King Philip of Valois, Father to the ſaid John Duke of Normandy. And in December following died Jane Queen of France, Daughter to Robert once Duke of Burgundy, and Siſter to Eudes then Duke of Burgundy; ſo that the French King and his eldeſt Son John were both Widowers at one time. But as for King Philip he had lately ſent for a freſh Young Lady, deſigning to give her unto his Son John, but now being a Widower himſelf, he thought good to ſerve his own Turn firſt; and ſo on the Ninth of January took her for his Second Queen: Her Name was Blanch, Daughter to Philip late King of Navarre, by his Queen, who was Siſter to the Earl of Foix; but the Eſpouſals were kept ſecretly at the Mannor of Robert Earl of Braye, ſhe being then ſcarce 18 Years of Age, and the Bridegroom already a Grandfather; but he enjoy'd her little more than a Year and an half, as we ſhall ſee hereafter. On the Ninth of February, his Son John alſo married his Second Wife, which was the Lady Joan Counteſs of Boulogne, Relict of the young Lord Philip of Burgundy, Son of Eudes Duke of Burgundy, who died at the Siege of Aiguillon about three Years before, as we have [f] ſhewn. She was Daughter to William Earl of Boulogne, by his Lady the Daughter of Lewis Earl of Eureux, and ſo held in her Hands at that time the Counties of Artois, Boulogne, Auvergne, and divers other Lands, and after the Death of Eudo Duke of Burgundy (which happen'd this Year) that [t] Dutchy alſo, during the Minority of her Son Philip, who was Heir thereof. And thus King Philip remained a Widower not quite a Month, and his Son John ſcarce out Half a Year.

[q] *Froiſ. c.*152. *Fabian p.*278. Mezeray ad hunc annum.

[r] Ex Vitâ Caroli Imperatoris per ſe ſcriptâ ab initio.

An. Dom. 1349. An. Regni Angliæ XXIII. Franciæ X.

[f] L.2.c.4.§.6. p.369.
[t] Favine l.4.c.3.p.6.

CHAPTER the EIGHTH.

The CONTENTS.

I. Several Prodigies, forerunners of an Univerſal Plague, which happen'd in theſe Days, as a Notable Conjunction, Eclipſe, &c. II. Divers other Preſages, as Comets, Fiery Pillars, Strange Births, Inundations, Earthquakes, &c. III. The Original of this Plague, with its horrid Effects and Symptoms. IV. A Deſcription thereof from John Cantacuzenus at that time Emperour of Greece. V. The vaſt Numbers of thoſe, that died thereof in the Heathen and Chriſtian World. VI. It comes into England, with the great Havock it makes there: The Foundation of the Charter-houſe in London, and of Eaſt-Minſter by the Tower, occaſion'd thereby. VII. The Pope takes hence occaſion of exhorting King Edward to a Peace with France, which produces a Truce. VIII. The Pope's Charity to the Living and the Dead at this time. IX. The Names of thoſe few of the Engliſh Nobility and Clergy that died of this Viſitation. X. The Inferiour Clergy mightily exhauſted thereby. XI. It comes into Wales and Ireland; and how the Scots brought it to their own Doors. XII. Divers Miſeries ſucceeding it, as Murrain of Cattle, Dearth of Corn, and Inſolence of Workmen and poor People, which latter Miſchief King Edward repreſſes by wholſom Laws. XIII. The Jews, being falſly ſuſpected as Occaſioners of the Plague, by their exquiſit Arts of Empoiſoning, are moſt cruelly perſecuted by the Chriſtians: The Plague ceaſes in England.

I. HAving toward the latter end of the preceding Chapter made mention of the Death of Sr. John Mongomery, Captain of the Town of Calais, and a Baron of this Realm, who together with his Lady died, a little after King Edwards Exploit there, of a Peſtilence that then began; now We following the Example of no [a] mean Hiſtorian, are inclin'd to think it not unworthy of our preſent Work, to inſert therein a more particular Account of that Plague: Since for its ſtrange and manifold Prognoſticks, univerſal Contagion, wonderfull and fatal Events and long Continuance, it was not only as memorable as the Plague of Athens, but perhaps the Greateſt that ever happen'd in the World.

[a] Thucydides, who elegantly deſcribes the Plague of Athens. Thucyd. l.2.Lucret.l.6. Virg.Georg.l.3.

Now in the [b] Year 1345, being three Years before this Fatality came into England, on the [c] 28 of March, a little before Nine of the Clock, according to the Adequation of a great Mathematician and Aſtrologer, called Doctor Paulo di ſer Piero, there was a Conjunction of Saturn and Jupiter in 20 Degrees of Aquarius, with thoſe Aſpects of the other Planets, as we ſhall ſhew hereafter: But According to the Almanack of [d] Profazio a Jew, and the Tables of Toledo, that Conjunction ſhould be fixt on the 20 of the ſaid Month of March, and the Planet of Mars was with them in the ſaid Sign of Aquarius 27 Degrees: And the Moon ſuffer'd a total Eccliſpe on the 18 of the ſame Month in 7 Degrees of Libra. And on the 11 of March, when Sol enter'd Aries, Saturn was in his Aſcendant in 18 Degrees of Aquarius, and Lord of the Year; and Jupiter was in 16 Degrees of the ſaid Sign of Aquarius, and Mars

[b] De hâc famosâ Peſtilentiâ vid. Franciſci Petrarch. de Rebus Famil. Epiſtol. l. 8 ep. 7. Johan. Cantacuzen. *l.*4. c. 8. Odoric. Rainald. ad Annum 1348. §. 1. & 30. ad §. 33. Giovanni Villani & Matth. Villani M.S. Vet. Angl. in Bibl. C.C.C. c. 228. Knighton, Walſingham, Fabian, Holinſhead, Stow, Lanquet, Speed, Fox, R. Avesbury, Godwins Catal. Biſhops, Sandfords Geneal. Hiſtory, Mezeray, Cluverius, Epit. Hiſt. Polydor. Virgil. l. 19. p. 377. Bucholcerus Haagog. Chron. Lampad. & Pezel. in Sleidan, &c.

[c] Giov. Villani l. 12. c. 40. p. 848.

[d] Profatius a learned Jewiſh Aſtrologer, who wrote about an 100 Years before this time a Perpetual Almanack, &c. vid. Eſq; Sherburn's Catal. of Aſtronom. at his Sphere of Manilius p. 33.

Mars in 22 Degrees of the ſame. But if we follow the Equation of the ſaid Dr. Paulo, who was the moſt Eminent of the Moderns in thoſe Days, and ſays, that by the Help of his Inſtruments he ſaw viſibly the Conjunction on the 28 of March, the ſaid Conjunction being in an Angle of the Eaſt, that the Sun was well-nigh in the Mid-Heaven, a little declining to the Angle of 16 Degrees of Aries, and in his Exaltation and Leo his Houſe, was in his Aſcendant 13 Degrees, and Mars was now already in 16 Degrees of Piſces, Venus in 12 Degrees of Taurus, her Houſe, and in the Mid-Heaven; Mercury in the firſt Degree of Taurus, and the Moon 4 Degrees in Aquarius. But according to the Calculation of Mr. John Aſhindon, and Mr. William Read (two Engliſh Aſtrologers of thoſe Days of Merton College in Oxford) which they made for the Latitude of Oxford, [c] on the ſaid 18 Day of March the Moon was totally Eclipſed at fourty Scruples paſt Nine of the Clock, the Sun being in 22[d] Degree of Aries, and the Moon in the 22[d] of Libra. But the Conjunction of Saturn and Jupiter was moſt notable in the 19 Degree of Aquarius, on the 20 Day of March, in the Evening at Eight of the Clock and one Scruple. From which Eclipſe the ſaid Aſhindon and Read, and another Oxford Man named Geoffry de Meldis, undertook to foretell Wars, Famine and Peſtilence: Particularly Aſhindon predicted, that the Influence of that Eclipſe ſhould continue for eight Years and five Months; but that the Effects of the Conjunction ſhould prevail for the ſpace of three Years onely. And indeed the foreſaid Conjunction with its Aſpects of the other Planets and Signs, according to the beſt Aſtrologers, did naturally [f] ſignifie (God permitting) ſome Grand Event to the World, as Battle and Slaughter, and remarkable Mutations of Kingdoms and People, and the Death of Kings, and Tranſlation of Dominions, and Alterations in Religion, and the Appearance of ſome Prophet, and new Errours and Fallings from the Faith, and the ſudden Arrival of New Lords and Strange Nations, and Dearth and Mortality, near at hand; in thoſe Climates, Kingdoms, Countries and Cities, to which the Influence of the ſaid Signs and Planets belongs; and ſometimes is attended with ſome Comet in the Air, or other Prodigies, or Inundations, and Floods and exceſſive Rains: Becauſe that Conjunction being of it ſelf important, is ſo much the more to be feared from the Propinquity of Mars; and alſo the Eclipſe of the Moon, which of it ſelf ſometimes is of evil Portent.

AN. DOM. 1349. An. Regni Angliæ XXIII. Franciæ X.

[c] Vid. Antonii Wood Antiq. Oxon. Acad. l. 1. p. 172.

[f] Giov. Villani ibid. vid. Sr. George Wharton's Works (put forth by Mr. John Gadbury) p. 133, &c.

This we do not averr to be done of Neceſſity from ſuch and ſuch Appearances or Poſitions of the Heavenly Bodies; but yet we ſay, that it is done more or leſs, as it pleaſes God, the Creator and Ruler of all things, either in Juſtice or Mercy, according to the Good or Evil Merits of Nations, or Kingdoms or People, to puniſh or reward them. And ſtill there remains a Free-Will in Man, thô only as to what may be ſuppoſed within his own Power.

Nay if we obſerve further we ſhall find, that Mars entred into Cancer on the 12 of September in the foreſaid Year 1345, and ſtood in the ſaid Sign between Direct and Retrograde till the 10 of January; when being Retrograde he went into Gemini, and continued there till the 16 of February, and returned afterward into Cancer, and then ſtood in that Sign till the Firſt of May 1346. From whence it appears, that he ſtood in Cancer within the ſpace of ſix Months almoſt twice, when according to his uſual Courſe, he did not ſtay in a Sign above 50 Days. Whence it was ſaid by many Maſters in Aſtrology, "That the Realm of France ſhould ſuffer many Adverſities and "Changes, becauſe that Sign of Cancer is the Exaltation of Jupiter, a ſweet and peace-"able Planet, beſtowing Riches and Nobility: Which Sign of Cancer is attributed to "the Realm of France. Beſides the Planet of Jupiter ſtood in Oppoſition to Saturn "and Mars, which Planet Jupiter is appropriated to the Church, and to the French "King. Note alſo that Jupiter, after that, entring Piſces, his Houſe, was preſently in "that Sign in Conjunction with Cauda Draconis, which doth farther advance the Ma-"levolence by abating the more benign Force of Jupiter, eſpecially in that Country, "where his Influence is aſcribed.

But now to qualifie all this, leſt we ſhould be counted too much addicted to the Obſervation of Matters, which have been wholly deſpiſed by many Wiſe Men (thô not much the Wiſer perhaps for abſolutely Rejecting all Aſtrologicall Judgments) we ought firmly to believe and hold for certain; that God Almighty ſuffereth ſuch Plagues and Adverſities to fall upon People, Cities or Countries, for the Puniſhmenr of Sin; not neceſſarily from the Courſe of the Stars: But that at ſuch times being Lord of the Univerſe, and ſo conſequently of the Heavenly Bodies, as he pleaſes, and even when he will, he makes the Courſe of the Stars to accord and harmonize with his Judgments. To which Opinion the Scripture it ſelf doth more than ſeem to bear an Alluſion, when it says, "That the Stars in their Courses fought against Sisera: Which is as much as to say, after the Exposition of a Reverend and Learned [g] Prelate of the Church of England, That Sisera fought, when there was an Evil Aspect, or Malignant Influence upon him.

it

An. Dom. 1349. An. Regni Angliæ XXIII. Franciæ X.

II. And yet beside this Dreadfull Conjunction, which was ever observed to be of almost Universal and Fatal Consequence to Mankind, there were innumerable other strange and prodigious Sympathisings of Nature, as so many evident Tokens of an Angry God; or rather, as so many Gentle Admonitions and Fatherly Warnings, before this heavy stroak of Justice was inflicted.

[g] Bishop Taylors Life of the Holy *Jesus Part.*3. *sect.*13. *p.*307.

But because this horrible Pestilence passed by Degrees over the whole World, and therefore cannot be supposed to have scourged all Places at the same time (for it began about the Year 1345, as we have said, came not into England, till the latter end of the Year 1348, and yet continued its Malignant Itineration thrô the World, even till the Year 1362) We shall therefore for Methods sake heap up together the several Prognosticks belonging thereto, as they happen'd at sundry times in divers Places.

[h] Stow p. 247.

In the County [h] of Oxford nigh Chippingnorton, was found about this time a Monstrous Serpent, having two Heads, with Faces like Women, one being shaped so, as to resemble the New Tire of those Days, and the other to represent the Old antiquated Fashion: It had also great and large Wings; but something like those of a Flittermouse, or Bat, as Authors have reported. And the last Year it rain'd in England, especially [i] in the South-Countries, and in the West, from Christmas even to Midsummer in a manner continually; so that all the while it hardly ever held up so much as but for one Day and Night together: Whereupon great Inundations followed, and the Earth became corrupted, and afterwards the Air; whence partly ensued that Mortality, of which we shall speak by and by. Particularly seven Days after Christmas, the [k] River Ouse overflow'd so mightily at York, that it reach'd from the end of the Bridge towards St. Michael-Gate to the Market-place.

[i] *M. Scvet. Angl. in Bibl. C.C.C. c.*228. *Walsing. hypod. p.*121. & hist. 159. *Fabian p.*226. Holinshead p 943.

[k] Tho. Stubbs Act. Pontif. Eborac. apud 10 *Angl. scriptores p.*1732. *n.*20.

Also at Paris in the [l] Moneth of August, the foregoing Year, there was seen an extraordinary Dreadfull Comet, which is called Nigra, or Black, from its Evil Portent, in 16 Degrees of Taurus, in the Head of the Figure and Sign, named Caput Argol, or Medusa's Head: It appeared before the Sun was down, and seemed to be not very high in the Air. The second Night it was less luminous, and as it were divided into several radiant streaks; and after about fifteen days continuance, it wholly disappeared. This sort of Comet partakes of the Nature of Saturn, and from its influence is called Nigra; according as Zael the Philosopher and Astrologer, and other Masters of the said science affirm: Which portends nothing but the Death of Kings and Potentates, and great Mortality. And this particularly appeared, not only from this Plague which we are discoursing of, but more especially from the Death of the French King, which followed soon after.

[l] *Mezeray p.*32. & *Giov. Villani l.*12. *c.*97. *p.*903

On the [m] 20 of December 1348, in the Morning, the Sun being risen, there appeared at Avignon in Provence in France, where the Popes resided in those Days, over his Holinesses Palace, as it were a Pillar of Fire, and tarried there the space of an Hour: Which was seen by all of his Court to their great Amazement. And thô there may be given a Natural reason for it, as that it may proceed from the Rays of the Sun in manner of an Arch; yet always such an appearance hath been taken to portend some strange Novelty; And therefore is it not amiss ranked among those many previous Denunciations of so notable a Plague, as now we are discoursing of.

[m] *Giov. Villani c.*119. *p.*927.

Besides all these unusual and unhappy Presages, there were [n] this Year in many Countries, frequent and terrible Earthquakes; but especially in Italy; so that in the City of Rome many Houses, Steeples and Churches were thrown down; and at Naples the Archbishops Palace was wholly overthrown, with several other stately Edifices, strong Towers, and goodly Monasteries; so that what with the Earthquake and a strange Tempest, that happen'd at the same time, a great part of the City was destroy'd: Particularly, while a certain Frier was Preaching in a Church, both he and all his Auditors were buried in the Earth together; except only One Frier, who, doubting the Event from the trembling and groaning, which he perceived in the Earth, fled into a Garden without the City, where he sav'd himself. And many other Churches and Chief Buildings, were with such violence overturned by this Hurricane; that the Inhabitants had neither time, nor warning, to foresee or escape the Danger; but a great Number were suddenly buried in these Ruines. Wherefore neither Citizens, nor strangers durst stay in their Houses, either Night or Day; but continued with great fear in spacious Marketket-places, or removed into the open fields, till the Fury of this terrible Earthquake was abated: Which yet lasted by fits for about 8 days. And during those Dreadfull Turbulencies, the People, thô on plain ground, were not able to stand on their Feet. In [o] Achaia, and about Corinth, in Peloponnesus, several whole Villages were overwhelmed, and absorpt by Earthquakes: In Cyprus Mountains were removed from their places; so that Towns and Villages were crushed down, and the Course of Great Rivers were obstructed thereby. In [p] Germany two Mountains were swallowed up by this Earthquake; particularly [q] Villach in Istria was a sad Example of this Calamity: For every House in that City was utterly overthrown, except only the Cottage of a Just and Charitable Man. And yet the Inhabitants had timely warning of this Evil, that so they might fly from it: For in the midst of the Market-place the Earth was cloven in sunder in the form of a Cross; and first it sent forth Blood, and then Water. And [r] Lazius says, that most of the Towns in Austria and Styria fell with this Earthquake; and many other Provinces suffer'd such lasting Characters of the Fury of these strong Convulsions of Nature; that least the joynt concurrence of so many Authors of those days should not obtain sufficient Credit, they might be very plainly read even by late Posterity.

[n] *Stow p.*247. & Knighton p. 2598.

AN. DOM. 1349. An. Regni Angliæ XXIII. Franciæ X.

[o] Knighton ibid.
[p] Lampad. & Pezel. in Sleidan. par. 3. p. 365.
[q] Giov. Villani l. 12. c. 122. p. 929. & D. Ant. Archiep. Floren. Chron. par. 3. p. 355. ad an. 1349. tit. 21. c. 8. § 4.
[r] Lazius Geneal. Austr. Comment. l. 12. p. 234. & Jch. Aventin. Ann. Boior. l. 7. p. 633.

This Wonderfull Earthquake, as if in it self not enough terrible, was for the most part [s] attended with loud and horrid Thunders, and dismal flashes of Lightning; whereby among the rest, in the Year 1353, the great Bell of St. Peters Church in Rome, was thrown down and almost melted. The same Year at Cremona, near Mantua in Italy, there fell a Mighty storm of Hail, whereby many Cattle and People were destroyed, and even strong-built Houses not a little damnified. For if we may believe the Report of Historians, several of the Hail-stones weigh'd 8 pound, and those of the lesser sort a pound. Two Years after, viz. 1355, upon a [t] Tuesday, being the 17 of February, at half an hour past 4 in the Morning, the Moon being then in Aquarius, began to suffer an Eclipse, and by half an hour past 5 it was totally Eclipsed, and so continued to the Astonishment of all that saw it, for well nigh an Hour. The Year following there was another terrible Earthquake in divers Countries, but especially in Spain and Germany, to the Desolation of many Edifices, and the Destruction of much People, to whom for the most part their own houses became Sepulchers: But the City of Basil felt the Effects of its Fury more severely, being almost wholly ruinated thereby. Three Years after, namely 1359, on the 21 [u] of April, being Easter-day, in the Cathedral-Church of Siena in Tuscany, while the Bishop being assisted with five other Priests, stood by the Altar preparing the Elements for the Holy Eucharist, there fell a strong and terrible shour of Rain, accompanied with loud Thunders and horrid flashes of Lightning, during which Tempests many parts of the Church were stricken, and the Chappel spoil'd and beaten down, together with the Table of the High-Altar: The Bishop and the Priests, what with the Lightning and their own Amazement, were fell'd down half-dead, and the Chalice and Cross were violently born away, or melted, or stricken into the ground; so that afterwards they could never be found. About the same time were many Monstrous and Prodigious Births in divers Countries, and Women frequently miscarried, or perished in Childbirth. In the Year 1348, it rain'd [x] Blood in Germany, and Comets, Meteors, Fiery Beams, and other Coruscations appear'd in the Air; [y] with divers Mock Suns, and the Heavens seem'd to burn.

[s] Stow p. 247.
[t] Stow says Tuesday the 16 of Feb. but D being the Domin. Letter of that Year, the 16 of Febr. was on a Monday.
[u] Hic Stow exacte cum Labbæo concordat. ubi ad an. 1359. Lit. Dom. F. Pascha 21 Apr.
[x] Lampadius & Pezel. in Sleid. pars 3. p. 365.
[y] Mr. John Gadbury's Natura Prodigiorum p. 77.

Nor was the Long-suffering of Heaven content to give these short warnings; some being but a little before, and some even in the very time of the great Plague; but 30 [z] Years before the Blow was given, that Infinite Father of all Mercies, declared by the Mouth of one named Robert, a Jacobin Frier; that heavy Judgements were preparing, as well for all Mankind, if they did not speedily repent; as especially for the Clergy (which part also we shall see most exactly performed by and by) to punish them for their Pride, Simony, Sloth, Lust, and Avarice. All these and many more Predictions and unusual Prodigies, which happen'd in these days, did easily perswade the more judicious and sober part of Mankind (which yet are always but a few in Number) that some great and signal Judgements were ready to pursue the Falshood, Vanity, and Irreligion of the World: And accordingly now there arose such a Plague, as a [a] very Judicious and Worthy Person sticks not to averr, that it was never yet equall'd by any: For, says He, it rag'd Universally over all our Hemisphere, and there was neither City, Village, nor House, whereinto it did not cruelly intrude.

[z] Stow p. 248.
[a] Mezeray An°. 1348.

III. It is said to have had its Original [b] among the Tartars, in the Kingdom of Cathay in Asia, and among the Indians, by reason of a certain Igneous Vapour, or Sulphurous phurous Fire, horribly breaking forth from the Earth; or, as [c] others, descending from Heaven, which utterly consumed and devoured Men and Beasts, Houses, Stones, and Trees, to the very ground it self, and stretched forward, rowling along in smoaky globes of horrid Stink and Pestilential Fire, for more than 200 Leagues of the Country, or 15 days journey together: Whereby the Air became so infected in those parts, that there fell down [d] Millions of young Serpents, and other Venemous Insects, and in other Countries more remote from this fiery eruption, were found infinite quantities of huge Vermin, with 8 short Legs and Tails, all over black, some living, and some dead; the latter whereof stank over all the Country, and the former were not only most dreadfull to behold; but whomsoever any of them chanced but to touch, they became immediately to them as Mortal Poison: As was testified by Letters even in those days by Persons of undoubted Credit, to several Citizens of Florence, and others.

[b] Mezeray ibid. & Knighton p. 2598.

An. Dom. 1349. An. Regni Angliæ XXIII. Franciæ X.

[c] Giov. Villani l. 12. c. 83. p. 892. & D. Anton. Chron. par. 3. p. 355.

[d] Mezeray ibid. Giov. Villani ib. & Mr. John Gadbury's Natura Prodigorum p. 77. D. Anton. Chron. par. 3 p. 355. &c.

The Plague also of Athens is reported to have had its Original in the same Parts: For whereas Thucydides names the Place of its Rise to be that Part of Ethiopia which lies upon Egypt; we are assured, that the Antients were used frequently to confound the Names of Ethiopia and India together, as [e] Servius also witnesses: Wherefore Thucydides, who follow'd only common Report herein, might be deceived, as to the Place of its Birth, or rather those Authors, whom I am fain to follow. Which I am rather inclin'd to believe, not onely out of Respect to that Incomparable Greek Historian; but also I find a Difference among our Writers: Some seriously affirming, [f] that the Original of this Pestilence was in Egypt also; tho Others say, that this Destructive Vapour arose at Mecha in Arabia Felix, among the Jews, Turks and Arabians, where at the same time it rained Snakes and Blood from Heaven for three Days and three Nights together; when also the Temple of Mahomet was beaten down by a terrible Tempest, and his Sepulchre torn up and broken to pieces; and that from this sulphurous and pestiferous Vapour, together with the Stink of Snakes and Blood, the whole Middle Region of the Air became corrupted, whence this unusual Infection took its Birth.

[e] In Lucan. l. 10. ubi de Regia Ægypti: Sed Indiam omnem plagam Æthiopiæ accipimus.

[f] John Baptista Pign. Hist. Domûs Atestinæ l. 4. p. 319.

Nor did it at all degenerate from its Original, but immediately proceeded to decimate all Mankind; or rather to destroy Nine of Ten thrô the whole World: For [g] Historians have not doubted to speak so largely of this Mortality. Nay some say, that where indeed it was most favourable, it left one Third, or One of Five; but where it shew'd its Tyranny more freely, it scarce left a fifteenth or a twentieth Person alive. Nay some Provinces partly with the Plague, and partly with Earthquakes and Lightnings, were quite left Desolate; and in the Country of Anthemusia, vulgarly Alidult, in Mesopotamia, [h] under the Dominion of the Soldan of Babylon, there was not one left alive but only some Women, whom either the Horrour of their Condition, or the strangeness of the Infection, or both, drove to such a furious Enragedness of Mind, that they devoured one another. The Method of this Plague was to stay but [i] two or three Days with any Person (for it surely kill'd in that or less time) and but five or six Months in any Place, and then to seek out for fresh Quarters. And as if disdaining to be rival'd by any Competitor, it solely reign'd, either keeping back all other sorts of Diseases, as being fully assured of its own Sufficiency, or rather engrossing to it self all the Armory of Death and Destruction: For it made more abundant Conquests, than ever all sorts of other Diseases did at one time before. It took Men generally in the Head and Stomach, appearing [k] first in the Groin, or under the Armpits by little Knobs or Swellings, called Kernels, being Biles, Blains, Blisters, Pimples, Wheals or Plague-Sores, generally attended with Pestilential Fevers, which occasion'd Spitting and Vomiting of Blood, whence for the most part they died in a manner presently, or in half [l] a Day, or within a Day or two at the most: After the Third day, thô seldom any liv'd so long, there was Hope, and yet then many falling into a deep Sleep never waked more. The Blisters and Kernels aforesaid were certain Symptoms of this Malady; but the most deadly and desperate was, when many of these [m] impostumous Swellings would rise over all the Body, which being hard and dry, upon Cutting sent forth little or no purulent Matter: Thô by this means after many Cuttings and Torments, not a few were healed in the end. But this Remedy was not found till very late, nor then in many Places neither: So that generally it was an irresistable Evil, every where tyrannizing without controll. Nor did Piety here avail, for those whose tender Minds obliged them, in meer Compassion, carefully to look to their Friends or Others, in this their deplorable Condition, were for the most part surely seised on themselves; for as [n] we are told, the Influence of this Disease was so contagious, that it not onely infected by a Touch

[g] Walsingh. Hyp. p. 129. Godw. Catal. Bishops p. 137. & Mezeray ibid.

[h] Giov. Villani l. 12. c. 83. p. 892.

[i] Knighton p. 2599.

[k] Giov. Villani l. 12. c. 83. p. 892. & Cortusiorum Historia l. 9. c. 14. & D. Anton. Chron. par. 3. p. 353.

[l] Knighton p. 2599. & Cortus. Hist. ibid.

[m] Anton. Wood Antiq. Oxon. l. 1. p. 172. lin. 20.

[n] Cortus. Hist. ibid. & Mezeray ibid.

Touch or Breathing, but transfus'd its Malignity into the very Beams of Light, and darted Death from the Eyes; and the very Seats and Garments of such proved fatal. Wherefore Parents forsook their Children, and Wives their Husbands; nor would Physicians here make their Visits, for neither were they able to do good to Others, and they were almost certain thereby to destroy themselves. Even the Priests also for the same horrid Consideration forbore either to administer the Sacraments, or absolve the dying Penitent. But yet neither Priests, nor Physicians, nor any other, who sought thus to escape, did find their Caution of any Advantage: For Death not only rag'd without Doors as well as in Chambers, but as if it took indignation, that any Mortal should think to fly from it, these kind of People died both more speedily and proportionably in greater Numbers. Then was there Death without Sorrow, Affinity without Friendship, willfull Penance and Dearth without Scarcity, and Flying without Refuge or Succour: For many fled from place to place because of the Pestilence; some into Deserts and places not inhabited, either in hope or despair: But quick-sighted Destruction found them out, and nimble-footed Misery was ever ready to attend them. Others having hired Boats or other Vessels, into which they laid up Provision, thought, or at lest hoped so to elude the Power of the Infection: But the Destroying Angel, like that in the [o] Revelations, had one Foot upon the Waters, as well as on the Land; for alas! the very Air they breathed being tainted, they drew in Death together with Life it self. The horrour of these things made others to lock up themselves close in their Houses, Gardens, and sweet retired Places, but the Evil they intended to exclude, pursued them thrô all their defences, and they had this onely difference, to die without the Company of any that might serve or pity them. No Physician could tell the Cause, or prescribe a Cure; and even what was saving to one was no less than fatal to another; no Astrologer could divine how or when it would cease: The only way left was to be prepared to receive it, and the most comfortable Resolution to expect it without Fear. Nay, it is to be remembred to the Praise of God, who correcteth the Body to save the Soul; that all Men being awaken'd to the quick by so dreadfull an appearance of Death at their Elbow, are said to have piously set themselves to bewail their sins, and to amend their Lives, and where they could, to frequent the Sacraments; and which was wonderfull, that most were so touched with a sense of Piety, Gods Grace sweetning the bitterness of Death with some small Taste of Eternal Felicity approaching, that they even rejoyced as they were dying: And [p] Nauclerus says, "That "it was some kind of Consolation in the midst of this general Grief, that innocent "Children being at the point of Death, did for the most part joyfully set forth the "Praises of God: And that Sinners themselves, before they perceiv'd any token of "the Pestilence upon them, had prepared themselves by an hearty Repentance: So that "they even willingly waited for Death.

AN. DOM. 1349. An. Regni Angliæ XXIII. Franciæ X.

[o] Apocal. c. 10. v. 2. & 5.

[p] Nauclerus Gener. 45.

IV. I shall notwithstanding this prolix Description of ours subjoyn hereto one far more graphical and authentick, which came from the Royal Pen of John Cantacuzenus, who was at that time Emperour of Constantinople, and a great Sufferer thereby in the Devastation of his Countries. "This Plague says he, [q] taking its rise from the Scythians cal- "led Hyberboreans, overran almost all the Sea-coasts of the Habitable World, and de- "stroyed an incredible Number of People. For it did not only pass thrô Pontus, and "Thrace and Macedonia; but also thrô Hellas (properly so called) and Italy, and all "the Isles, and Egypt, and Libya, and Indæa, and Syria, and in a manner all the World "round about. But it was such an unconquerable Evil, that neither any Diet, or "Strength of Body could resist it: For it pull'd down all Bodies alike, as well the "Strong as the Weak, and those, who were most diligently look'd after, perished, as "well as those who wanted all things. That Year was free from all other Distempers; but "if perhaps any one was sick before, all other Distempers terminated in this. Here the "Knowledge of the Physicians was put to a stand: For some enduring a little died the "same Day, some the same Hour; but those that held out to the second or third Day, "were first taken with an acute Fever, and the Distemper getting up into the Head "were rendred speechless and insensible to all that was done; and so dropt off as it "were in a profound Sleep. But if any ever came to themselves a little, they endea- "vour'd to speak something, but the Tongue was difficultly moved; and so uttering "many inarticulate things, the Nerves being stupified in the hinder Part of the Head, "they presently died. Others were not taken in the Head, but in the Lungs, these had "an Inflamation in their Inwards, which created acute Pains about the Stomach: So that "they sent up Blood and a loathsome and cadaverous Stink from within. Their Jaws and "Tongues were dried up with Heat, and black and tainted with Gore; and whether [q] Joh Cantacuz. Hist. l. 4. c. 8. p. 730. & 731. & Jacob. Pontan. ibid. Latin. & id. in Attic. Bellar. par. 1. Syntag. 6. Descript. 9. p. 496.

An. Dom. 1349. An. Regni Angliæ XXIII. Franciæ X.

"they drank much or little, 'twas all alike. These could take no sleep, but were in "continual pain and disquiet. Some had impostumous Ulcers and black Blisters, bigger "or lesser on their Arms, and under their Armpits; and some in the Cheeks, and o- "thers in other parts of the Body. And in others there arose black Nodes, Spots, "or Tokens over all the Body, in some more superficial and visible, in others deeper "and obscure. And yet of both sorts all died alike: For some had all these Sym- "toms together, others more or less, but to most even one of all was enough to do the "Business. Yet those few who recover'd, were no more touched with the same Mis- "chief, but remain'd secure now: For it never took any twice, so as to kill. Sundry "times there were great Impostumes in the Thighs and in the Arms, which being cut "sent forth much stinking matter: And so the Disease was carried off, flinging forth "together therewith all the noxious humours. And yet some, thô they had all these "symptoms, were beyond all expectation saved. But there was no certain Remedy: "For what was good for one, was to another in the same Condition fatal: Yet he that "cured another got his own death thereby, and this made the greatest havock, so that "houses were emptied of Inhabitants, even brute Creatures dying with their Masters. "Yet nothing herein seem'd more dismal than the Despair, to which Men were redu- "ced: For when any one perceived himself sick, he abandon'd all hopes of Recove- "ry; and thus they gave themselves over and died presently, adding their defection of "Mind as an assistance to the Disease. Such a kind of Malady cannot be expressed; "and it was most manifest, that it was not any Plague natural or usual to Mankind, but "a Scourge from Heaven: Wherefore many also were much better'd thereby; not on- "ly of those who died, but as many as survived: For then casting aside all their "vices, they applied themselves wholly to the study of Vertue, and several gave all they "had to the Poor: But when any found themselves affected, there was none so stony "or so obdurate, but that he repented heartily of his sins, and thereby gave the Di- "vine Goodness some occasion of being Gracious at his Tribunal. Thus far the Greek Emperour.

V. And in this manner this terrible Slaughter taking its rise, whether in India, Tartaria, Scythia or Arabia, but [s] most certainly in that manner, as we have related, went sweeping along thrô the Indians, Tartarians, Saracens, Turks, Syrians, Palestinians, Persians, Egyptians and Ethiopians, Africans, and the Parts about Tunis and Tribisond, where it rag'd most furiously. Then it proceeded over all the Levant, thrô Mesopotamia, Chaldæa, Cyprus, Candie, Rhodes, and every Island in the Archipelago, scattering unspeakable Desolation all about: Insomuch that at first, before the Plague had touched the Christians, several Heathen Princes being dismayed above measure at its unexpressible rage and fury, were fully resolved to embrace the Christian Faith; for as then they heard how the Christians that dwelt on this side the Greekish Sea, were not, beyond the ordinary manner of Men, troubled with any Sickness or Mortality. Whereas in those Eastern Parts they found no less than 8000 [f] Legions, that is 23840000 Souls had been swept away in the space of one Year, as it was reported before the Pope at Avignon. But especially a marvellous manner of Death, and almost incredible to be told happen'd in Arcaccia; [t] so that Men, Women, and all living Creatures became in a manner statues at their Decease, being rendred almost as hard as marble after they were dead. Whereupon the Lords of that Country being horribly amazed at these unaccountable matters, propounded to themselves to receive the Gospell, till hearing of a like Mortality among the Christians, they were content to remain in their Infidelity. But the King [u] of Tharsis in Comagena supposing verily, that this unusual Scourge of Gods Wrath was laid upon him and his People for their Unbelief, with a great multitude of his Princes and Nobles, began his journey towards Avignon to visit Pope Clement VI, and to receive Baptism at his Hands: But being about 20 Diets onward of his way, when he heard that the Christians also were not free from this Contagion, he turned back, laying wholly aside the saving Design of Embracing the Faith, and so return'd into his own Country an Infidel as he came out: But in the way he lost about 2000 of his Company, whom the Christians cut off at the Tail of his Army.

Nor did this impartial Judgment make less havock throughout Christendom, for having [x] ravaged thrô all Asia and Africk, at last it came over into Greece, and thence successively to other Parts of Europe, till it had run it all over even to the Extremity of the North. In which Countries because we have surer Testimonies to rely upon, and a better Account made out thereby; we shall be here a little more particular in relating what it did: Well knowing what good Use wise and sober Men may make of so

[s] Giov. Villani l.12 c.83. p. 892. E fu pure vera, e chiara, e certa, che si comincio un fuoco uscito di sotterra, overo che scendesse da cielo, &c.

[f] Knighton p. 2598. Legio. continet 6730.

[t] Giov. Villani l.12. c.83. p. 892.

[u] Knighton p. 2598.

[x] Mezeray p. 32.

so ample an Account of a Judgment that ought never to be forgotten; thô we are not unsensible, that to a great many, even this that we have already said, may seem both too much, and of no great Consequence. AN. DOM. 1349. An. Regni Angliæ XXIII. Franciæ X.

The Venetians, [y] having lost an 100000 Souls, hired Vessels at a great Price, and were wafted to the Isles, leaving the City almost desolate. To Padua there came but one unknown Person infected, who so spread the Contagion, that hardly a Third remain'd alive in the whole Precinct. At Florence there died in one Year of this Plague no less than [z] 60000 Men, among whom was that Learned and Diligent Historian [a] Giovanni Villani, whom we have so often quoted in this present Work, and grieve, that by his untimely Death, we shall not be able in the Progress of our History to make any more Advantage of his Excellent and Authentick Labours: For he was certainly a Man, that surpassed all the Historians of that Age, whether we consider his Universal knowledge, or comprehensive Labours, or Curious, Industrious, Elegant and Faithfull Commentaries. Yet he died but toward the latter end of the Plague; wherefore during this our Description, we shall have some recourse to his Golden Book: For it seems the Worthy Gentleman laid not aside his Pen, till Death snatch'd it out of his Hand. And yet [b] a near Kinsman of his named Matthew Villani, as Heir of his Vertues and Industry, continued to write where he left off, nor without good success. The Citizens of Florence this mean while, [c] were so consternated at these perpetual Alarms of Dying, that they made a Publique Decree, that none should presume to publish the Number of the Dead, nor to sound any Passing Bell in the Churches, for fear of driving the living to despair by the frequent noise of Funerals. Nor did this Tyrannous Mischief rage less in Pistoia, a City between Lucca and Florence, in Bolognia, Romania, Genoa, and other parts of Italy, as also in Sicily, Sardinia, Corsica, and innumerable other Places. But especially it was exceeding grievous at Avignon in Provence, where the People died [d] bleeding at the Nose, Mouth, and Fundament; so that Rivers ran with Blood, and streams of putrid gore issued forth from the Graves and Sepulchres of the Dead. When first it began there, no [e] less than 66 of the Carmelite-Fryers died, before any knew, what was the Matter; so that at first 'twas imagin'd, they had murder'd one another. Of the English College at Avignon, not one was left alive, and of the whole City scarce one in five. For according to a Bill of Mortality or Computation made before the Pope, there died there in one day 1212, and on another more than 400. But all this while, the Pope himself [f] deny'd all Publique Access to him, and made use of many Fires in his Chamber to purifie the Air: By which means [g] they say Pope Nicolas IV, had before that avoided a like Epidemical distemper, constantly keeping many fires in his Palace, even in the hottest of Summer. However Pope Clement did not lock himself up so, as to confine his Charity; "for all this while he "[h] allowed wages to certain Physicians to visit the Poor; and others he hired, to pro- "vide them with Necessaries, while they lived, and upon their departure to give them "decent burial. He also purchased for a burying-place a large Field, wherein he cau- "sed to be consecrated a Cœmitery, able to contain all their Dead. And there infi- "nite Numbers from that time were buried, and it was called Campo il Florido, which "name continues to this day. In [i] Provence there died in Lent only of the Fryers-Preachers 358, and in Montpellier of an 140 of the said Order of Fryers, there remain'd but seven alive: But at Marseilles of an 140 Predicants, and 10 Fryers-Minors, there was but only One left to tell the sad Story of his Brethrens Death. At St. Dennis this Devouring Monster dispatch'd [k] 14000, and so proceeded to Paris, where, as if it had been yet fasting, it made a more Plentifull Banquet of no less than 50000. At Lubeck, a City of Germany, in one Year it swept away no less than [l] 90000, whereof 1500 are reported to have died within the space of Four Hours: And thrô all Germany there are reckoned 1244434 to have died of the Plague only.

[y] Cortusiorum Hist. l.9. c.14. & Odor. Raynal. ad an. 1348. §. 30.
[z] Cluverius Epit. Hist. p.573. &c. & D. Anton. Archiep. Florent. Chron. par. 3. p. 353.
[a] Additio ad finem Giov. Villan. p.929.
[b] Odoric. Raynald. ad an. 1348. §. 33. ex Matth. Villani l.1. c.1.
[c] Giov. Villani l.12. c.83. p. 891.
[d] Stow p. 248.
[e] Knighton p. 2598.
[f] Odor. Raynald. ad an. 1348. §. 32.
[g] Odor. Raynald. ad an. 1288. §. 1.
[h] Gesta Clement. VI. apud Bosqu. & Odor. Raynal. ad an. 1348. §. 32.
[i] Knighton p. 2598.
[k] Fabian p. 226. & Lanquet's Chron. ad an. 1348.
[l] Cluverii Epit. Hist. p. 573. & Lampad. & Pezel. in Sleidan. par. 3. p. 365.

It would be both incredible to hear, and almost impossible to declare, the Wonderfull havock it made in other Foreign Parts, even as we have said, throughout the whole world: Insomuch [m] that many Towns and Cities, nay whole Provinces, were in a manner left desolate of Inhabitants. Wherefore we shall have done with this Tragical Truth; when we have shewn, how our own Country fared thereby: For at last this fiery scourge of God came over the Seas to afflict our World also.

[m] Giov. Villani l.12. c 83. p.893

VI. About the [n] First of August 1348, it began in the Sea-port Towns, on the Coasts of Dorsetshire, Devonshire, and Somersetshire, whence it ran up to Bristow: So that the Glocestershire-men forbad all entercourse with the Bristolians. But this Familiar Fury wanted no Medium to introduce it: For as the Scripture says of the Pestilence, [n] Fox Acts & Mon. & Stow p. 245. &c.

An. Dom. 1349. An. Regni Angliæ XXIII. Franciæ X.

stilence, that it walketh in Darkneſs or inviſibly; its Progreſs not being to be found out; ſo unexpectedly and contrary to humane Precaution this Plague alſo walked, or rather flew, among the Gloceſterſhire men; whence it went [o] to Oxford, and about the Firſt of November it reached London, and finally ſpread it ſelf all over England, ſcattering every where ſuch Ruine and Deſolation, that of all ſorts hardly the Tenth Perſon was left alive.

In the [p] Church and Church-yard of Yarmouth, were buried in one Year no leſs, than 7052 Perſons, all of the Plague: So that the Parſonage, which before was worth 700 Marks per annum, was hardly afterwards worth 40 pounds, as it was certified to King Henry VII, in the 22 Year of his Reign, and was written upon the Gates of the Church of that Town. In the City [q] of Norwich, from the Firſt of January to the Firſt of July, which is but half a Years Space, there died no leſs than 57104, or as others have it, 57374. In the City [r] of Leiceſter out of the ſmall Pariſh of St. Leonard, there fell no leſs than 380: In the Pariſh of Holy-Rood 400 more, then in St. Margarets 700, and ſo proportionably in other Pariſhes. In the City [s] of York it raged moſt furiouſly from about the Aſcenſion to the Feaſt of St. James the Apoſtle: But in the Famous City of London, Death was ſo outragiouſly Cruel, that every day at leaſt 20, ſometimes 40, ſometimes 60, or more dead Corpſes were flung together into one Pit; and yet the Church-yards not ſufficing for the Dead, they were fain to ſet apart certain Fields for additional places of Burial: And yet even ſo, thoſe Offices were not performed with any uſual Decency or Honeſty; for the Numbers of the Dead being ſo great, they were fain to [t] make deep Ditches and Pits very broad; wherein they lay'd a range of Carcaſſes, and a range of Earth upon them, and then another range of Dead Bodies, which were all together cover'd; and after this manner were all People buried at that time, except thoſe of the better ſort. Among thoſe, who charitably took care of the Dead in this manner, we find, [u] that the Noble and Valiant Lord Walter Manny, ſo often mention'd in this our Hiſtory, having a Pious Regard to Gods Judgements, and the common Frailty of Humane Nature, purchas'd a piece of ground, adjoyning to a place called No Mans Land, and lying in a place, called Spittle-Croft, becauſe it belonged to St. Bartholomews Spittle, or Hoſpital in Smithfield, ſince that, called the New-Church-[x] Haw, containing 13 Acres of Land and a Rod, and cauſed the ſame to be incloſed and conſecrated by Ralph Stafford Biſhop of London: In which one place (beſides thoſe buried in other Church-yards, Churches and Monaſteries in and about London) there were buried within one Year more than [y] 50000 Perſons, as I have read, ſays Mr. Stow, in the Charters of Edward III. The ſame Author affirms alſo, that he had ſeen and read an Inſcription, fixed on a Stone-Croſs, ſometime ſtanding in the ſame Church-yard, in theſe Words, Anno Domini MCCCXLIX Regnante Magna Peſtilentia, Conſecratum Fuit Hoc Coemiterium. In Quo Et Infra Septa Præſentis Monaſterii Sepulta Fuerunt Mortuorum Corpora Plusquam LM Præter Alia Multa Abhinc Usque Ad Præſens. Quorum Animabus Propitietur Deus. Amen.

But eſpecially between Candlemas and Eaſter this Year, there were buried in the place aforeſaid, about [z] 200 Corpſes per diem every day: Wherefore the ſaid Noble Lord Walter Manny, in memory of the vaſt Numbers of Chriſtian People there buried, and in Pious Charity (as he thought) to their Souls, cauſed afterwards on the ſame ground a Chappel to be builded, of rare Workmanſhip with Deſign to make it Collegiate for 12 Prieſts, and a Provoſt, and to endow it amply: [a] And there for about twenty two Years, Offerings were made, in which time it is to be noted, that above an 100000 Bodies of Chriſtian People, had been buried in that Church-yard. For the ſaid Sr. Walter Manny had purchaſed the Place for the Burial of Poor People, Travailers, and others, to remain for ever, and order was taken to avoid contention thereupon between That Houſe and Parſons of Churches.

But in the Year 1371, the ſaid Lord Manny, changing his Mind, in ſtead thereof obtained [b] a Licence to found a Monaſtery of Carthuſian Monks, to pray for the good Eſtate of himſelf, and of Margaret his Wife, during their Lives in this World, and afterwards for their Souls: As alſo for the Souls of Alice of Hainalt, Michael Northburgh, ſometime Biſhop of London, and of all his Anceſtors. And this [c] Houſe of Carthuſian Monks, he the ſaid Founder willed to be call'd the Salutation, and that One of the Monks ſhould be called Prior, and he gave them the ſaid place of 13 Acres, and a Rod of Land, with the Chappel and Houſes there builded for their habitation. He alſo gave them the three Acres of Land, lying without the Walls on the North- part,

[o] Anton. Wood Antiq. Oxon. l. 1. p. 171. & 172. & Fox Acts & Mon. ibid. & Stow p. 246.

[p] Annal. Eccleſiæ Prior. Yarmouth apud Stow ibid.

[q] Stow ibid. ex Regiſtro Norvicenſi, & Sandford's Geneal. Hiſt. p. 166. ſed male ibi London, pro Norwich. & Daniel's Hiſt. p. 241. & Godwin's Catal. Bps p. 427. & Blome's Britan. p. 169.

[r] Knighton p. 2599.

[s] Tho. Stubbs apud Decem Angl. Hiſt. Scriptores p. 1732.

[t] M.S. Vet. Ang. in Bibl. C.C.C. Cantabr. c. 228.

[u] Stow Chron. p. 246. and Survey of London p. 477. & Bp. Godw. Catal. Bps p. 198. & Monaſt. Angl. Vol. 1. p. 961.

[x] Haw apud Veteres Yard ſonat.

[y] Fabian p. 227. & Stow Chron. p. 246. and Survey of London 478.

[z] Fox Acts & Mon, p. 507. & Holinſh. p. 945. ex Rob. Aveſbury.

[a] Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 150. ex Monaſt. Ang. 1 Vol. p. 961.

[b] Dugd. ibid. ex Monaſt. Ang. ibid.

[c] Stow Survey London p. 478, 479, 480, 481, &c.

part, betwixt the Lands of the Abbot of Weſtminſter, and the Lands of the Prior of St. John: Which three Acres being purchaſed, encloſed, and dedicated by Ralph Stafford Biſhop of London, as aforeſaid, remain'd till our Fathers days by the Name of Pardon Church-yard, and ſerved for burying of ſuch, as deſparately ended their own Lives, or were executed for Felony. But now it is an Hoſpital for poor Men and Children, of the Foundation of the Worthy Thomas Sutton Eſquire, ſtill called by Corruption the Charter-houſe, and for its Revenues and decent Proviſion for young Scholars and others, excepting that Royal Foundation of Chriſt-Church Hoſpital in London (to which I owe my Education) the moſt notable in all this Kingdom.

AN. DOM. 1349. An. Regni Angliæ XXIII. Franciæ X.

About the ſame time, and upon the ſame occaſion, that this Work of Charity began in Weſt-Smithfield; One [d] Mr. John Corey, a Godly and Learned Divine purchaſed of Doctor Nicolas Prior of the Holy Trinity within Aldgate, one Toft of ground near Eaſt-Smithfield by the Tower of London, for the Burial of them that died, with condition, that it might be called the Church-yard of the Holy Trinity; which ground by the aid of divers Devout Citizens, he cauſed to be encloſed with a Wall of Stone. In which place afterwards, namely, in the Year 1359, King Edward III (in contemplation of a vow which in a Tempeſt at Sea he had made, to build a Monaſtery to the Honour of God and our Lady of Grace, if God would graciouſly bring him ſafe to Land) did, by the conſent of the ſaid Prior and his Convent, build and found the Abbey of St. Mary of Grace, cauſing it to be named Eaſt-Minſter, thô it was alſo called by the Name of New-Abbey, placing therein an Abbot and Monks of the Ciſtertian Order.

[d] Stow's Chron. p. 246. & 277. and Survey of London p. 117.

VII. The mean while, in conſideration of this grievous Mortality, [e] all Suits and Pleadings in the Kings Bench, and other places ceaſed; and all * Seſſions of Parliament for the Space of more than two Years were hindred. Pope Clement for his part, being alarum'd with theſe heavy and prodigious Judgements of Almighty God, never ceaſed * by his Letters to both the Kings of England and France, to exhort them, as he doth moſt earneſtly, to a final agreement, that they might ſo avoid the ſevere ſtroke of Gods Vengeance: Aſſuring them that all theſe things happen'd as a Puniſhment for the Sins of Mankind. But eſpecially he entreated King Edward to ſend his Orators to Avignon, [f] "having (ſays he) our confidence in him, in whoſe hands are the "Hearts of Kings, We reſolve by no means to deſiſt from the proſecution of the "Treaty already begun: But intend by ſo much the more effectually and carefully to "promote it, by how much the more the miſerable ſtate of the World (which the jea-"lous God, and the Lord of Vengeance, being provoked with the multitude of Sins, "which Charity doth not cover, but wrath encreaſes, doth conſume in fury by a ge-"neral ſlaughter of an unheard-of Peſtilence) doth moſt eſpecially require an agreement "between you and the ſaid King of France, and is known to want it extreamly: "Leſt, which God forbid, that ſmall Flock, which the Saviour of the World, who "woundeth and healeth, hath like Seed-corn preſerved from this Deſtruction, ſhould "now be drown'd in the Waves of Commotions, and ſwallow'd in the miſerable Tem-"peſt of War, &c. Dat. Avin. XV Cal. December: An°. Pontif. noſtri, VIII. Upon this Pious Exhortation, King Edward was ſo far prevail'd with, as to [g] ſend his Commiſſioners, who were William Bateman Biſhop of Norwich, the Earls of Lancaſter, Suffolk, and Northampton, the Lord Walter Manny, the Lord [h] Robert Bourchier, the Lord Ralph Stafford, and the Lord Richard Talbot. Theſe all arrived at Calais in order to Treat with the French Commiſſioners, who were then come as far as St. Omers to meet them, together with the Biſhop of Lyons, the Abbot of St. Dennis, and the two Cardinals, who came on the Pope's behalf to moderate Matters between the two parties. Being all met in a Convenient place half-way between the Towns of Calais and St. Omers, the Frenchmen ſtill inſiſted on the reſtoring of Calais, or raſing it down to the ground: But neither of theſe would the Engliſh admit of. However, at laſt by the urgent Prayers, and Interceſſion of the Cardinals, it was at laſt agreed, that certain Commiſſioners from both the Kings of England & France ſhould enter upon a Treaty of Peace, to be held from the time, that this Treaty ended, unto the Month of September following: By which, if then a final Peace could not be had, that the Crown of France ſhould be brought by the Conſent of both Partys to a certain convenient place within that Realm, and there without any other Tryal or Appeal, the Right thereof to be decided by a Pitch'd Battle. This Truce and Agreement was thus made on the [i] Tenth of March * $13\frac{49}{50}$, but the Conditions came to no Effect, the whole project being null'd on occaſion of the Death of Philip of Valois, who died a Month before the limited time, to wit, on the [k] 22[d] of Auguſt the Year following.

[e] Stow Chron. p. 246. * M.S. R.P. p. 71. §. 4. Sr. Rob. Cotton's Abridgement p. 73. §. 4. An°. 25. Ed. 3. * Knighton p. 2598. & Odor. Rainald. ad an. 1349. §. 26. &c. ex Tom. Epiſt. Secret. ep. 72. & 73.

[f] Odor. Rainald. ibid. ex Tom. 7. Epiſt. Secret. ep. 102.

[g] Stow p. 246. & Holinſh. p. 945.

[h] Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 127.

[i] Aſhmole p. 657. * $13\frac{49}{50}$.

[k] Mezeray ad an. 1350.

VIII. Du-

An. Dom. 1349. An. Regni Angliæ XXIII. Franciæ X.

VIII. During the rage of this horrid Peſtilence, the Pope, [l] to raiſe the Faithfull to a Chriſtian-like Conſtancy, by the hope of a Glorious Immortality, gave Authority to all Prieſts of abſolving the Penitent from all their ſins, and granting them the benefit of Indulgences: And in his Diploma, bearing date the XIV Kal. June the Year foregoing, he propoſes great Indulgences to thoſe Prieſts, who ſhould adminiſter the Sacrament, or other Ghoſtly Comforts to the ſick, as alſo to all thoſe who ſhould perform any good or friendly Office to the Dying, or to the Dead, either in Phyſick, Burial, or the like: And further, becauſe many were like to be deprived of the Benefit of Prieſts Converſation, he now by his Bulls [m] granted throughout all Chriſtendom a full Remiſſion of Sins to any One, that being in peril of Death ſhould but once receive Abſolution; and that every One might take whom he pleas'd, or whom he could, for his Confeſſor; which Grant to endure till the Eaſter then next enſuing. A Grant to be queſtion'd, as to its validity (For who can forgive ſins, but God alone?) yet no doubt proceeding from a good purpoſe, and for that reſpect, at leaſt commendable. Upon the ſame account alſo here in England, Thomas Beck Biſhop of Lincoln, ſent throughout all his Diœceſe, empowring all Prieſts both Regular and Secular to hear Confeſſions, and to abſolve any Perſon with full and Epiſcopal Authority of all Sins, except only for Debt: In which caſe, if the Party was able, he ſhould make full Satisfaction in his own Perſon, while he lived, or carefully provide, that others ſhould perform the ſame after his Death. And in all Chriſtian Countries, Cities, and Towns, there were Publique and Solemn Proceſſions made for [n] ſeveral days together, that God would be pleaſed to ſheath his angry Sword, and preſerve the Reſidue from this devouring Peſtilence.

[l] Matth. Villani l. 1 c. 3. & Odor. Rainald. ad an. 1348. §. 33. & Giov. Villani l. 12. c. 83. p. 893.
[m] Knighton p. 2599.
[n] Giov. Villani l. 12. p. 893.

IX. Of which, thô innumerable Numbers of the Common ſort of People died, chiefly old Men, Women and Children; yet (which is Wonderfull) not [o] one King, or Prince of a Nation, is ſaid to have died thrô all the World: And even of Nobles but a very few were taken away at this time, eſpecially of the Engliſh Nation: Whether by chance, or that it pleaſed God to ſpare theſe, either for the Well-governing the Remainder, or for their further Puniſhment; for in thoſe days the Wars were moſtly carried on, and Menag'd by the Intereſt, Valour, and Conduct of the Nobility in all Nations. Among the Nobles of England, that died of this Plague, we find beſides the Lord John Mongomery, Captain of Calais, and his Lady, that the Princeſs Joan, ſecond Daughter, and third Child of King Edward the Third, was the Chief, who taſted this bitter Cup. About four Years ſince ſhe had been requeſted by Alphonſo XI, King of Caſtille and Leon, as a Match for his Eldeſt Son Don Pedro, Infant of Spain, in order to which Marriage King Edward then [p] ſent over Sr. William Truſſel, and the Prior of Rocheſter, to confer with the ſaid Alphonſo: Accordingly the laſt Year, being thirteen Years of Age, ſhe was [q] eſpouſed by Proxy to Don Pedro, entitled Infanta of Spain, and then Honourably convey'd into that Country, where ſhe preſently deceaſed of this Plague, then reigning in thoſe Parts; So that the Prince, who came to meet her to ſolemnize the Eſpouſals, was fain to accompany her Body to Church to her Funeral, which happen'd in the Year aforeſaid. Of the ſame Plague alſo there died this Year [r] on the 31 of May, without Iſſue, the Lord Thomas Wake of Lidel, leaving behind him the Lady Margaret, Counteſs of Kent (Dowager of Edmund of Woodſtock, late Earl of Kent) his Siſter and Heir, Fourty Years of Age: Who thereupon performing her Fealty, had Livery of all his Lands ſhortly after. There [s] died alſo about this time Sr. John Fauconberg a Valiant and Hardy Baron of this Realm, being aged 57 Years: He was a Perſon highly Eminent for his Military Services both in France and Scotland, and had been ſucceſſively in his time High-Sheriff of Yorkſhire, and Governour of the Caſtle of York, and afterwards of Barwick upon Tweed. He was ſucceeded by Walter his Son and Heir, then of full Age, who performing his Homage, had Livery of his Fathers Lands, and became a good Knight in his days. And laſtly there died the Lord Robert Bourchier, [t] leaving John his Son and Heir twenty Years of Age, and was buried at Haulſted in Eſſex. I know of no more of the Nobility, that fell at this time, nor did any of the Epiſcopal Order ſuffer Deeper; but only the Chair of Canterbury, which loſt no leſs, than three Archbiſhops all in one Year. And thoſe were firſt Dr. John Stratford, a Man of great Learning, Loyalty, and Charity, with whom that Famous Contention paſſed, whereof we ſpake ſo largely; after he had ſat in that ſee about 15 Years. The Second was his Succeſſor Dr. John Hufford, Son (as [u] ſome ſay) to Robert Hufford, Earl of Suffolk: Thô I find it not [x] in that Earls Pedigree, and beſides, the Age ſhews ſome diſcrepance, the Earl ſurviving him full 20 Years: He is not by ſome reckon'd among the Archbiſhops, [o] Cortuſiorum Hiſtoria l. 9. c. 14.

[p] Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 144.
[q] Aſhmole p. 669. Speeds Chron. p. 590. b in Ed. 3. ad finem.
[r] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 541. & Tho. Mills Catal. Honor. p. 764.
[s] Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 4.
[t] Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 127.
[u] Godw. Catal. Biſh. p. 136. & 137.
[x] Mill's Catal. of Hon. p. 529. & Dudg. Bar. 2 Vol. p. 48. b.

biſhops, becauſe having expected his Pall and Conſecration full ſix Months, he died now at laſt without either, in the [y] Month of May, or as one [z] ſays, on the Seventh of June this Year, having been in his time ſucceſſively both Dean of Lincoln and Lord Chancellour of England. AN. DOM. 1349. An. Regni Angliæ XXIII. Franciæ X.

The laſt but not the leaſt Worthy, was his Succeſſor Thomas [a] Bradwardin, called for his deep Knowledge in Divinity, Doctor de Profundis: Who died of the Plague within two days after he came to London, and within five Weeks and four Days after his Conſecration at Avignon; ſo that he alſo was never Enthroniſed at all. But we ſhall not ſoon part with him here, becauſe Men of Merit are the beſt and moſt profitable Subjects of Hiſtory; and for whoſe ſakes a fruitfull Digreſſion may well obtain a Pardon.

[y] Philpots Catal. Chancell. p.40.
[z] Godw. Catal. Biſh. p.137.
[a] Knighton p. 2600. n. 10.

Of his extraordinary Piety and Learning, and deep skill both in the Mathematicks and Theology, as well his own excellent Works, as our Hiſtorians are concurrent and ample Teſtimonies. But one thing for Example ſake I ſhall not omit to remember in this Place: That [b] being King Edwards Confeſſor, he behav'd himſelf in that Office with ſingular Moderation, Integrity and Diſcretion; and whatever he ſaw amiſs, he would in ſecret freely reprehend in the King before his Face, which Boldneſs of his the King always took in good part, not only becauſe he thereby ſaw the Zeal and diſcreet Piety of the Man, but alſo knew his ſincerity and love to his Perſon. In the French Wars, while he lived he was always preſent, never enduring to abſent himſelf from his Royal Charge, but ſtill admoniſh'd him ſecretly, and his whole Army openly in his learned and eloquent Sermons and other Exhortations, "To take carefull heed of waxing proud "and inſolent after thoſe many great Victories which God had ſent them: But rather to "improve them to their greater Advantage, by uſing them with Thankfulneſs and Mo- "deration. Some there are who have not doubted to aſcribe thoſe many notable Succeſſes of King Edward rather to the Vertue, Holineſs, and Prayers of this Man, than to any other worldly, either Wiſdom or Proweſs: Thus much we ſhall readily acknowledge; that althô after his Death King Edward had the ſame good Succeſs as before, the Reaſon may be juſtly attributed to that Prince's Care, of following the Precepts of this memorable Prelate. For whoſe wonderfull Modeſty we have this alſo to ſay; that whereas he might have obtain'd of the King whatever Preferment he would have asked, he was ſo far from any Ambitious Deſire of ſuperfluous Promotion, that it was long e'r he could be prevail'd with to accept a Prebend of Lincoln when it was offer'd him, he being at the ſame time Chancellor of St. Pauls in London. And it is certain, that the Archbiſhoprick came at laſt to him without the leaſt of his Endeavours for it; the Convent electing him, the King allowing their Choice, and the Pope, who knew not any of theſe things, at the ſame time conferring this Dignity upon him, without the leaſt Application made to him in his Behalf. Whereas had he but ſhew'd the ſmalleſt Inclination for the Place, he might have obtain'd it of the King before: Concerning which Matter, when certain ſpake to the King, ſaying, they admired that his Majeſty did not admit of this Mans Election from the Convent (for they had choſen him before his Predeceſſour John Hufford was choſen) he replied, "That it was, be- "cauſe he could very ill ſpare ſo Worthy a Man to be from him, and he never could "perceive that he himſelf deſired to be ſpared. He was ſucceeded by Simon Iſlip Keeper of the Privy Seal, who was Conſecrated in December 1349.

[b] Godw. Catal. Biſh. p.138.

Beſides theſe [c] Simon --- -- Abbot of Weſtminſter being taken away in this Viſitation, was ſucceeded by Simon Langham, who was afterwards Lord Treaſurer of England, then Biſhop of Ely, ſoon after Lord Chancellour, then Archbiſhop of Canterbury, in which Seat having ſat two Years, he was by Pope Urban V created Cardinal Titulo S^ti Sixti, and laſtly was made Biſhop-Cardinal of Preneſte by Gregory the XI.

[c] Walſingh. hiſt. p.160. ubi Banham malè pro Langham: Vti apertè liquet; cùm Simon Langham ſolus ſibi hæc omnia Officia & Titulos vendicet. v. Godw. Catal. Biſh. p.143. & Philpots Catal. Chancell. p.41. & Catal. Treaſ. p. 36.
[d] Knighton. p. p.2600. n.20.

X. Theſe are all whom I find to have died this Bout of the moſt Eminent of the Prelacy of England; a Number not great, but for the Heighth of the Dignity, and Worth of the Perſons very conſiderable. But of the inferior Clergy there was ſuch havock made, that many Churches were left wholly void, without either Parſon or Curate, or any to perform the leaſt Divine Office, whether Maſs, Mattins, Veſpers, Sacraments or Burial. So that it was hard to procure any one to be a Chaplain, or to Adminiſter in any Church under Ten Pounds or Ten Marks per Annum at leaſt: Which Ten Marks as Money then went, did countervail 40 l. with us. And few or none would accept of a Vicaridge worth 20 l. or 20 Marks per annum; whereas before the Peſtilence, when there was Plenty of young Divines, a Man might have a Chaplain for four or five Marks per annum; nay ſometimes for two or three, beſides his Board. So that now the Prophecy of Robert the Jacobin Frier againſt the Clergy, was very fully and and ſeverely accompliſhed indeed. But ſhortly after this Scarcity of Clergymen was abundantly made up, or rather the Church was overſtock'd: For vaſt Numbers of Laymen, whoſe Wives were dead of the Plague, came crowding now into Orders, many of whom were meer Idiots, and utterly unlearned, except that perhaps they knew how to read, thô not with Underſtanding.

An. Dom. 1349. An. Regni Angliæ XXIII. Franciæ X.

Sr. John Poultney, [c] who had been Mayor of London Four times, and a very charitable and munificent Perſon, died alſo in this Peſtilence; but of others, who were either conſiderable for their Dignity, Birth or Station, I have not met with any: So that it is no wonder, if when the Wars were again renewed between England and France, King Edward ſeem'd nothing the weaker for all the great Loſs of his People in this Plague: For of the Common Sort France was as much exhauſted hereby as England, and in a manner all King Edwards expert Barons and Captains remained ſtill alive to be another Plague to that Nation.

[c] Stow's Survey p.86. & 252.

XI. In Wales [f] alſo this Epidemical Calamity raged extreamly, and ſhortly after paſſing over into Ireland, it made great havock of the Engliſhmen in thoſe Parts; eſpecially about the Sea-coaſts: But as for thoſe who were true Iriſhmen born, and dwelt in the hilly Countries, it ſcarce juſt ſaluted them: So that they ſuffer'd but little or no loſs thereby.

[f] Stow p.246. & Holinſh. Chr. Ireland p.72.

When the Scots heard of this ſtrange and dreadful Fatality here in England, [g] they too maliciouſly inſulted over our Sufferings, and inſtead of humbling themſelves under a due ſenſe of Gods terrible Judgments, made a Scoff and Deriſion of what ſhould have been their Warning, and in their ordinary Converſation took up this profane Oath, by the foul Deaths of the Engliſh. Nor this only, but out of a moſt inveterate and implacable hatred, deſiring if poſſible to add more weight to the heavy Judgments of Gods Hand, they made a Warlike Rendezvous in Solkirk Foreſt on purpoſe to invade the North-Borders. But before they could make any conſiderable Progreſs, a ſudden and moſt terrible kind of Death fell among them: So that more than 5000 of them died in a manner preſently. Whereupon they made all the haſte home imaginable, as well the infected as the whole; but they were overtaken, wearied, deſpairing and out of Order by a ſtrong and well-prepared Body of Engliſh, who eaſily overcame and ſlew of them with a great Slaughter. But however ſo many eſcaped home as ſufficed to communicate the Infection they had won by this Expedition, over all that Kingdom alſo. So that Scotland partook of the univerſal Contagion in as high a Degree, and in the ſame manner as other Countries had done before them: Only in this there was a difference; that whereas other Nations with trembling ſat ſtill and waited for it, the Scots did ſeem ambitious to fetch it in among themſelves.

[g] Knighton p. 2600 n.1. & Stow p.246.a. n.60.

XII. In the mean time, whereas during the Plague, there was almoſt every where ſufficient plenty of all things, ſo that in a manner no other Miſchief reigned all that while; as ſoon as this grand Conquerour was march'd off, innumerable other Miſchiefs, as ſo many petty Tyrants, began to play their Tragical parts alſo. And [h] firſt by occaſion of the Plague, the Cattle for want of Men to look to them, wandred about in fields at randome, from whence no Body drove or gather'd them. So that they began to periſh among hedges and ditches in ſuch Numbers, that it was no leſs loſs than wonder to behold: For there died in and about one Paſture more than five Thouſand Sheep. Wherefore it might be ſuppoſed, that they alſo died in this manner thrô ſome kind of Plague, that was as ſtrange and unaccountable among them as the former had been to Mankind: For it is [i] ſaid, that neither Bird nor Beaſt of Prey would touch their Carcaſſes. And this is another Inſtance, that the late Peſtilence did yet further differ from thoſe of other Times: Since uſually Beaſts by reaſon of their prone Looks downward on the Earth, and their quicker Scent therewithall are firſt infected; but here it happened quite contrary. However there ſhortly enſued hereby ſuch a Scarcity of Cattle, that all Proviſion of Fleſh became exceſſive Dear, as well as other Beaſts, for uſe and labour: Whereas in the plague time, partly thrô their great abundance, and partly alſo becauſe thrô the preſent Apprehenſions of Death Men were then leſs intent upon Gain, a good Horſe worth 40 s. before, might be bought for a Mark; a large fat Ox for four ſhillings, a Cow for one ſhilling, an Heifer for ſix Pence, a fat Mutton for four Pence, a Sheep for two Pence, a Lamb for two Pence, and a Pork for five Pence, one Stone of Wooll for nine pence, and other things went at the ſame Rate in England.

[h] Knighton p. 2599. lin. 65.

[i] Knighton p. ibid. lin. 40.

But now the ſtate of Affairs was alter'd; and beſides the prodigious Decay of Cattle aforeſaid, there ſucceeded alſo a great Dearth of Corn in many Parts of the World; not ſo much thrô any defect or Parſimony of Nature (for the Fields were ſufficiently cloathed with Grain in many Parts, eſpecially here in England) as partly thrô an inordinate ordinate desire of Gain in some, and also partly from the want of Men in most Places to gather it in. Particularly this Year about Harvest-time a Reaper was not to be had for Money under eight Pence a Day, nor a Mower under twelve Pence besides Victuals, which in those Days was excessive Wages; Mony bearing then almost a Decuple value to what it doth now. So that the King was fain [l] to issue out his Commands thrô all the Counties of England, that Reapers and other Labourers should neither demand, nor take any more than formerly was used in the 20 Year of his Reign, or other five or six Years before, on Penalties limited in the said Statute, which bare Date [l] 14 of June Anno Regni Angliæ XXIII, Franciæ verò X, &c. But this Sort of Men being lightly puffed up with Thoughts far beyond what was agreeable to their Condition, when they saw the absolute necessity Men stood in, of using their Assistance, set at nought the Kings Commands, and became peremptory in this, either not to work at all, or to have what they should demand for their hire. But this King, who knew as well how to reduce a refractory and disobedient Subject, as to conquer a Foreign Enemy, undertook to tame their insolence such a way, as both wholly cured their madness, and prevented that ruine, which was like to ensue thereby; and also at the same time enriched his own Coffers, in order to the carrying on of his great and chargeable Affairs. For having understood, that many Abbeys and Colleges, and such Persons, or Societies and Corporations, who held great Possessions, rather than loose their Corn and other Fruits, had contrary to the Statute aforesaid given unto their Labourers larger stipends than were there appointed: He first of all levied considerable Amerciaments upon the Abbots, Priors, Barons, Knights and Others of all Degrees, of some 5 l. of others 4 l. 3 l. 2 l. 1 l. and of every Carucat, Hide or Plough-Land, over all England 1 l. and yet in general one Fifteen besides. Then he caused many Hundreds of the said Labourers, especially the Master-workmen to be apprehended; so that many who had offended in that kind, having intimation of the matter, were fain to retire into Woods and Forests, where they skulked about, living hardly for a while; but those that were taken were severely fined, and after the discipline of a temporary Imprisonment, being first sworn to take for the future their Day Wages according to the old usage only, were dismissed. Other [m] Artificers also in Towns and Burroughs were served in the same manner: For by reason of the scarcity of Men, these People began to demand most unreasonable Rates for all their Work and Services, till now at length this other Plague of their insolence was removed by the healing hand of King Edwards Justice: As may be seen at large in the [n] Statute, where all the Prizes are appointed for all such Labourers and Artificers, according to the Rate of Money in those Days, to which I refer the Curious Reader. However vast quantities of Corn were already lost for want of Hands to gather it in; but a timely Remedy being so seasonably applied, a greater Famine was prevented in this Nation: Thô in many other Parts it raged most immeasurably. For soon after the Pestilence a Famine beginning in Barbary and Morocco, the Christians of sundry Nations, in hopes of inordinate Gain from these Infidels, carried thither such huge Quantities of Corn, as thereby they occasion'd a greater Famine in Spain, [o] Italy, France and other Parts of Europe: So that at the most there was but three Ounces per diem allowed for every Man. And soon after there happen'd in most Parts of the World great and strange Inundations, with Presters, and frequent and unusual Storms and Tempests, which were succeeded by monstrous and terrible Sights and Flames of Fire in the Air, gastly and dismal Spectres and Apparitions, and then extream Droughts and want of Waters. All which in their several Capacities, in divers Places, and at several Times, did no small harm to all living Creatures in the Air, Sea and Land; and to all Sorts of Vegetables, as also to many goodly Structures and Edifices. And [p] this was generally observed of all those, who were born next and immediately after this wonderfull Plague, that when the time came for the growth of their Teeth, they had two Cheek-Teeth in their heads less than they had afore.

XIII. And yet [q] to all these Evils there was added one more; for there arose a certain Rumour, that there were many Poisoners, and especially the Jews, who infected the Waters and Fountains: From whence the foresaid Pestilence began. Wherefore in many Places Thousands of Jews and some Christians also, thô innocent and blameless, were burnt, slain and cruelly handled: Whereas indeed it was the Hand of God which wrought all this for the sins of the World. To resist which unreasonable Fury of the Christians against the Jews, Pope Clement twice wrote his Encyclical Letters to all Archbishops, Bishops and other Prelates of the Church to stop this Fury of the People. But all his Endeavours could not prevent the unjust Prosecution of this miserable Nation: For every where, except in the Province of Venaissin and about Avignon, [l] Knighton p. 2600. lin. 37. [l] Vid. Statute-Book 23. Ed. 3. p. 90. licet malè ibi 23. Ed. 3. pro 25. ut videre est: M. S. Record. Parl. p. 71. & Sr. Rob. Cotton's Abridgm. p. 3. §. 6.

[m] Knighton ib. lin. 61.

[n] 25 Ed. 3. vid. Statute-Book p. 91. & 92.

[o] Giov. Villani ad ann. 1346. c. 72. p. 883. & Stow p. 247. a. & b. vid. Froiss. c. 153. & Lanquet ad ann. 1351. de Fame in Gallia.

[p] M. S. vet. Ang. in Bibl. C. C. C. c. 228. ad finem.

[q] Gesta Clement VI. apud Bosq. & Alb. Argent. in Chron. vid. Odor. Rainald. ad ann. 1348. n. 33.

AN. DOM. 1349. An. Regni Angliæ XXIII. Franciæ X.

An. Dom. 1349. An. Regni Angliæ XXIII. Franciæ X.

the Jews were ſought out on all hands to be put to Death for Poiſoners. And particularly this Year in Germany, where the Plague then reigned, this falſe Rumour made them ſo odious, that as [r] Rebdorf witneſſes, 12000 of them were put to Death in the City of Mentz. And [ſ] Albert of Straſburgh writes, that from this rage of the People againſt them, they were reduced to ſuch Deſpair and Madneſs, that locking themſelves up, they conſumed themſelves and all that they had with Fire. But in England early this Year the Plague began to abate, and about the end of Auguſt was wholly extinct at London, and in moſt other Parts of the Land; and immediately a more pleaſant Face of things began to ſmile, and cheer up the late dejected Minds of the People: And thus we ſhall end this Tragical Chapter.

[r] Rebdorfius in Annal.
[ſ] Alb. Argent. in Chron.

CHAPTER the NINTH.

The CONTENTS.

I. King Edward founds the Chappel of St. GEORGE in Windſor Caſtle, with the Copy of his Letters Patents for that purpoſe. II. The Pope further the Matter by two Bulls. III. The Kings Progreſs in the Building, Enlarging and Beautifying the Caſtle of WINDSOR. IV. The Inſtitution of the moſt Noble Order of the GARTER, attended with Divine Service, Royal Feaſtings, and Solemn Juſts and Tourneaments. V. Henry Earl of Lancaſter, Leiceſter and Darby made alſo Earl of Lincoln, and ſent into Gaſcogne. VI. The Lord Thomas Dagworth ſlain in Bretagne. VII. Earl Henry's Exploits in Gaſcogne: He reduces the French to Terms. VIII. A famous Combat between Thirty Engliſh and Thirty French-Bretons. IX Of Certain, who arrived to great Wealth and Splendour by the Wars. X. Of Sr. Thomas Rokeby Deputy-Lieutenant of Ireland, and of Sr. Robert Savage, and his Son Henry who lived in Ulſter. XI. A Grant of the Black-Prince to the Lord Henry Eam of Flanders, confirmed at this time by the King.

I. NOW this being the Year, that King Edward the Third founded and eſtabliſhed in his Royal Caſtle of Windſor the Ever-Noble and Honourable Order of the Knights of the Garter, of which we ſpake more fully in the 18 Year of his Reign; it will not be amiſs to reſume ſo much of that Matter in this Place, as we left unremembred in that. And firſt for the Dignity and Worth of the Subject, we ſhall preſent the Curious Reader with the Copy of his [a] Letters Patents for Founding of St. George's Chappel in Windſor-Caſtle, faithfully tranſlated from the Original Latine, which we ſhall find to bear Date the ſixth of Auguſt, in the Year foregoing, before the Plague began in London.

[a] Pat. an. 22. Ed. 3. par. 2. m. 6. extant apud Aſhmole de Ordine Garterii in Appendice N. 1.

"EDWARD by the Grace of God King of England, and France, and Lord of "Ireland, to All, who ſhall ſee theſe Preſent Letters, Greeting. It becomes the Ma- "jeſty of a King to delight always in Acts of Piety, that when he ſhall ſtand before "the Tribunal of the Moſt-High-King (with whom there is no acceptance of Perſons, "but every One ſhall receive according to what he hath done in the Body, whether "it be good, or whether it be Evil) he may be able to ſtand among the Good on "the Right Hand, and not be condemned with the Reprobates, as a ſlothfull and "unprofitable ſervant. We truly with grief of Heart carefully remembring the vari- "ous Labours of our Life, and our own ſmall deſerts, as alſo rightly conſidering the "Divine Favours ſhewed unto us, and the Graces and Honours, wherewith above o- "thers the Moſt High hath prevented us, do greatly repent of thoſe goods, which be- "ing granted us by God, we have above meaſure ſo often vainly expended. And "there remains nothing elſe for us to do, but only that unto Chriſt and his Mother "the Glorious Virgin, who hath never failed to defend us, but has hitherto by her "bleſſed Prayers protected us, when we were ſet in many Dangers, we wholly convert "our mind, and give unto him thanks for his Favours, and ask pardon for our Offences. "And becauſe it is a good way of Merchandiſe, whereby, with an happy bartering, "tranſitory things are exchanged for Eternal: We have cauſed a certain Chappel of "convenient Beauty for eight Secular Canons, ſcituate within our Caſtle of Windſor, wherein "wherein we were washed with the Water of Holy Baptism, magnificently begun to "the Honour of St. Edward the Confessor, by our Progenitors, to which (Canons) for "their sustentation they allowed a certain Sum of Money at their pleasure, and gave "it them for Alms out of their Exchequer, to be finished at our Royal Charge to "the Honour of God Almighty, and of his Mother the Glorious Virgin Mary, and of the "Saints, George the Martyr, and Edward the Confessor. And earnestly desiring, and effectually "endeavouring, that the said Canons, being there to serve the Lord, may be augmented, as "well with an encrease of Revenues, as in the number of other Canons, Ministers, and Ser-"vants; and that in the said Chappel, the Glory of the Divine Name may be exalted with "greater Worship, unto the foresaid Eight Canons we think fit to superadd One Custos, "presiding over them, and fifteen other Canons more, and twenty four Poor Knights, im-"potent of themselves, or inclining to Poverty, to be perpetually maintain'd of the goods "of the said Chappel, and other Ministers of the said Chappel perpetually serving Christ "under the Command of the said Custos, [or Warden] and there Cause to be recei-"ved, as well the Canons and Knights, as other Ministers of the said Chappel, as is "premised: [And this] We firmly decree, inviolably ordain, and by our Royal Au-"thority, as much as in us lies, establish for ever. Willing that the said Canons and "Ministers perform Divine Offices for us, and our Progenitors and Successors, in part "of Satisfaction for those things, whereof in the last judgement we are to give an Ac-"count, they being to celebrate for ever according to the form of our Ordination "thence more fully to be made: Unto whom the Rights of Patronage, and the Ad-"vousons of the Churches of [b] Wyrardesbury, in the Diœcese of Lincoln, Southtan-"ton, of Exon, and Uttoxater, of Coventry, and Lichfield, which we have lately "purchased for that Cause, for Us and our Heirs, We have given and granted, and "do give and grant, to have and to hold to them, and their Successors, for free, "pure, and perpetual Alms, altogether free and quiet for ever, from all secular exa-"ction. We have also granted unto them, for Us and our Heirs, and given leave, "that they, the Warden and Canons, may appropriate the said Churches, and hold "them so appropriated to their own uses, to them and their Successors for ever, not-"withstanding the Statute set forth concerning Lands and Tenements, not to be put "to Mortmaine. We will also, that unto the said Warden, Canons, Knights, and o-"ther Ministers of the said Chappel, there to serve, so much be paid every Year out "of our Exchequer, as together with the Profits arising from the said Churches, shall "seem sufficient and honest for their Diet, and the support of the Burthens incum-"bent on them, according to the Decency of their Condition the mean while, until "there shall be provided by Us, in goods immoveable, Lands, Benefices, or Rents, to "an agreeable sufficience, and to our Honour, to the Sum of a Thousand Pounds "yearly: All which We promise and undertake for Us, and for our Heirs effectually "to fulfill. In witness whereof, We have caused these our Letters to be made Pa-"tent. Witness our self at Westminster the VI of August, in the Year of our Reign "of England XXII, and of France IX.

AN. DOM. 1349. An. Regni Angliæ XXIII. Franciæ X.

[b] Vulgò Ras-bury.

From that Passage in these Letters------And this We firmly decree, inviolably ordain, and by our Royal Authority, as much as in us lies, establish for ever-----it is to be observed, that according to the Opinion of those times, the Kingly Authority extended not to the instituting any where Men of Religion, and other Officers, to perform and attend the service of God: For that lay in the Power and Disposition of the Pope. And therefore King Edward setting forth what he had design'd in reference to the Endowment of this Chappel, requested Pope Clement VI to grant unto the Archbishop of Canterbury, and the Bishop of Winchester, full Authority and Power of ordaining and instituting the College, and other things thereunto appertaining.

II. Hereupon the said Pope by his [c] Bull, bearing date at Avignon, Pridiè Calendas Decembris in the Ninth Year of his Pontificate (which answers to the Thirtieth day of November, An°. Dom. [d] 1350) commending the Pious intent of the King in this matter, granted unto the Archbishop and Bishop aforesaid, and to either of them, full Power and Authority to ordain, institute, and appoint in this Chappel, as should seem good to them, a certain Number of Canons, Priests, Clerks, Knights, and Officers, continually to attend upon the Service of God, of which Canons and Priests, one was to have the Title of Custos, or Warden, and preside over the Rest. And in another Bull, bearing date at Avignon II Idus Februarii, the same Year, he exempted the said College of Windsor from the Jurisdiction of Archbishops, Bishops, Archdeacons, and the like, as may be seen at large in the said [e] Bull.

[c] Ashmole p. 152. Extat ibid. in Append. N. 11. ex ipso Autographo, &c.

[d] Non 1351, ut Ashmole: vid. Rainald. ad hunc an. & Labbe in Chronol. Techn.

[e] Extat Ashmole in Appendice N. 111.

III. And [f] now at this time We find the King beginning seriously to apply himself to the compleating the College of the Chappel of St. George, and to the enlarging and beautifying of the Caſtle. And to this Work he appointed ſeveral eminent Surveyors; among whom we find numbred John Peyntour, Richard Rochell, William Hurle, William Ireland, Robert Barnham, John Brocas, Oliver de Bourdeaux, Thomas Foxley, John Alkeſhull, Walter Palmer, and William of Wickham, who by this imployment became ſo acceptable to the King, that in time, after many other conſiderable Preferments, he attained to the Dignity of Biſhop of Wincheſter, and was the ſecond Prelate of the Garter. All theſe, during the whole time of this Magnificent Work, were aſſign'd to preſs Hewers of Stone, Carpenters, and ſuch other Artificers, as were thought uſefull and neceſſary, to provide Stone, Timber, Lead, Iron, and other Materials and Carriages for them: Three whereof, to the end this great undertaking might be honeſtly and ſubſtantially performed, were aſſigned joyntly and ſeverally (at leaſt once a Moneth all together) with all Care and Diligence to ſurvey the Workmen and their Work, and to encourage ſuch as did their Duty competently well, but to compell the Idle and Slothfull: And after this manner the Building went on, till the 43d Year of the ſaid King, at which time it was quite finiſhed, namely, as much as this King undertook, [s] that is to ſay, the Chappel of St. George, the Great-Hall of St. George, the Kings Palace, the Lodgings on the Eaſt and South-ſide of the Upper-Ward, the Keep, or Tower, in the Middle-Ward, the Houſes for the Cuſtos and Canons in the Lower-Ward, together with the whole Circumference of the Walls, and their ſeveral Towers and Gates, as they ſtand to this day.

[f] Ashmole p. 128. ex Pat. de anno 23. Ed. 3. pars 1. m. 10. &c.

An. Dom. 1349. An. Regni Angliæ XXIII. Franciæ X.

[s] Aſhmole p. 129.

IV. But it was now, that the moſt Noble Order of the Garter received its full Inſtitution, in ſuch manner, as We have [h] before related ſomething largely in the 18 Year of this King: Who on the 23 of April, being a Thurſday, and the Feſtival of St. George, [i] the Military Patron of England, went himſelf with the 25 Knights, Companions aforemention'd, being all cloathed in Gowns of Ruſſet, and Mantles [k] of Fine-Woollen Cloth, of Blue-Colour, pouder'd with Garters, and each having a pair of long Cordans of Blue-ſilk fixed to his Collar, together with the reſt of the Habit of the Order, in a Solemn Proceſſion, [l] all bare-headed, to the Chappel of St. George, to hear Maſs, which was celebrated by William Edindon Biſhop of Wincheſter, and Prelate of the Order. This done they return'd in their former Ranks to a Magnificent Feaſt, at which they ſat in ſuch Regular Manner, as is continued to this day.

[h] Lib. 1. c. 22. §. 6. p. 296, &c.

[i] Regiſtr. M.S. Arundel. Archiv. Cant. par. 1. fol. 53. b. § 27.

[k] Aſhmole p. 209. ex Rotul. Compct. Joh. Coke Cler. Magn. Garderob. ab an. 21. ad an. 23. Ed. 3. m. 8. penes Remem. Regis in Scaccario.

[l] Sr Tho. de la More apud Stow p. 250.

At this Solemnity [m] King Edward after his uſual Manner, exhibited thoſe Martial Sports of Tilting and Tourneament, whereat King David of Scotland, thô a Priſoner, was not only permitted to be preſent, but alſo to ennoble himſelf by the uſe and exerciſe of Arms: the Harneſs of his Horſe being made of Blue Velvet at King Edwards Charge, with a Pale of Red Velvet, and beneath, a White-Roſe embroidered thereon. The King of England alſo himſelf held a part in theſe Solemn Juſts, having for his Deviſe a White-Swan, Gorged Or, with this daring and inviting Motto, wrought upon his Surcoat and Shield,

Hay hay the White Swan;
By Gods Soul I am thy Man.

[m] Stow p. 246. b. & Aſhmole p. 185. vid. l. 2. c. 6. §. 22. p. 414.

The ſame Liberty, which was granted to the [n] King of Scots, was alſo allowed to Ralph Earl of Eu and Guiſnes, and Conſtable of France, with the Earl of Tancarville, the Lord Charles of [o] Blois, and many other both French and Scotch Captives; to whom the Courteous King not only permitted the uſe of Arms upon this, and other the like occaſions, but impartially awarded them the Prizes, they deſerved. Particularly the Earl of Eu bare himſelf at this time with ſo much Honour, that King Edward adjudged unto him that days Prize, and ſoon after gave him [p] leave upon Paroll to return into France, in order to gather up 20000 Scutes for his own Ranſom, and to negotiate about the Redemption of others his Country-men, that were then alſo Priſoners here. But this Favour of King Edwards, thus graciouſly beſtowed on this Worthy Perſonage, proved accidentally an occaſion of ſuch a Mortal Jealouſie to the French King, that thereby he found, or made, a Pretence to bereave him of his Life, as in the next Year we ſhall ſhew more plainly. The mean while the Fame of theſe frequent and notable Tourneaments, held by ſo Warlike a Prince, invited hither many Gallant Knights from Foreign Parts; but eſpecially the Young Noblemen of Gaſcoign came hither, as to the Chiefeſt School of War, to practiſe themſelves in Feats of Arms: And during the Summer-ſeaſon, both theſe, and others the Priſoners of both Nations were allow'd to [q] follow the Court, and paſs their time with the King and his Nobles, in hunting in Claringdon-Park, near Salisbury in Wiltſhire, and in ſeveral other the Kings Foreſts, both in thoſe parts and elſewhere.

[n] Stow ibid.

[o] Valois apud Stow male.

[p] Knighton p. 2606. n. 64.

[q] Stow p. 246.

On

V. On the [r] 20 of Auguſt King Edward, being deſirous to do further Honour to his Heroick Couſin, Henry Plantagenet, who already bore the Title of Earl of Lancaſter, Darby, and Leiceſter, and Steward of England, added further, the Title and Dignity of Earl of Lincoln, granting him therewith the Annual Fee of 20 pounds to be paid by the Sheriff of that County, in lieu of the Tertium denarium, as Thomas his Uncle, late Earl of Lincoln, had before him. And hereupon [r] he was conſtituted the Kings Lieutenant, and Captain General in the parts of Poictou, with Power to Treat of Peace and Amity, as alſo for a ſtrict obſervation of the Truce already taken with the French: And upon his journey thither, he obtain'd [t] Licence to grant a 1000 l. per annum, Lands and Rents, unto certain Perſons to diſpoſe of, according to his own direction, for the term of 12 Years then to come.

AN. DOM. 1349. An. Regni Angliæ XXIII. Franciæ X.

[r] Sandford's Geneal. Hiſt. p. 112. & Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 786. b. ex Clauſ 23. Ed. 3. par. 2. m. 5. & ex Chart. 23. Ed. 3. n. 4.

[t] Rot. Vaſc. 23. Ed. 3. m. 3. Pat. 23. Ed. 3. p. 2. m. 6.

VI. Now it is to be premiſed, that the occaſion of this Valiant Earls Expedition into Gaſcoign at this time, was, becauſe by the Treachery of ſome wicked Men, the Truce was highly violated there. And [u] John Duke of Normandy, King Philips Eldeſt Son, had made a great diſturbance in that Dutchy, challenging, and taking of Places, that belonged not unto him, nor were King Edwards Captains there preſent able to impeach him. And in Bretagne likewiſe, about this time, that Noble and Valiant Baron Sr. Thomas Dagworth, who about 2 Years before had taken the Lord Charles of Blois before Roche D' Arien, was baſely and barbarouſly murder'd in time of Truce. Froiſard [x] ſays, he was fairly fought withall by Sr. Ralph de Cahors, who had ſixſcore Men of Arms in his Company before his Caſtle of Auray, where together with him were ſlain an hundred Men of Arms, Engliſh and Bretons. Fabian [y] ſays indeed, the ſame French Knight ſlew him, but that it was by chance-medley. However, the greater part of our [z] Hiſtorians agree, 'twas done by fraud, and not plain Valour, and one relates the Matter thus, that the Sons of Sabater with a few others, having firſt laid a ſtrong Ambuſh in the Wood adjoyning, paſſed openly that way, as deſigning to forage thereabouts. Of theſe Prollers Sr. Thomas Dagworth, who was the King of Englands Lieutenant in thoſe parts, and at that time lay in the Caſtle of Auray, having notice, with only 16 Armed Men in his Company, purſued theſe Robbers, who fled purpoſely toward their Ambuſh, and enter'd the Wood after them, where being ſurpris'd by the Ambuſh, thô he ſlew no leſs than 300 of them; yet at laſt having received five Wounds upon his Face and Body, and loſt all his Men, who died faithfully by his ſide, he himſelf was finally thruſt thrô the Body with a Spear, and ended his Life, as formerly he had maintain'd it, Valiantly and with Honour. Froiſard, and from him Du Cheſne, and from them (as it happens) many of our old Writers call him Dangorne and Dagorne, but this proceeding from the obſcurity of old M. SS. or the variation of the name thrô foreign Languages, muſt be corrected and read Dagworth, as is well known, beſides other undeniable Authorities, from the Records themſelves. Wherefore neither is it material to obſerve the difference among Authors, concerning the time of his Death, ſome fixing it a Year more forward, others two Years backward: Since the [a] Records are the ſureſt Guide, which in this place alſo I have followed. However thus this Valiant Worthy fell thrô the Treaſon of the French and Bretons, that held of their part (for it was a notorious violation of the Truce) leaving behind him by his Lady Eleanor, Nicolas his Son and Heir, then very young, who in time came to be a notable Imitator of his Fathers Vertues, and Revenger of his Death.

[u] John Duke of Normandy, King Philips Eldeſt Son, had made a great diſturbance in that Dutchy, challenging, and taking of Places, that belonged not unto him, nor were King Edwards Captains there preſent able to impeach him. And in Bretagne likewiſe, about this time, that Noble and Valiant Baron Sr. Thomas Dagworth, who about 2 Years before had taken the Lord Charles of Blois before Roche D' Arien, was baſely and barbarouſly murder'd in time of Truce. Froiſard [x] ſays, he was fairly fought withall by Sr. Ralph de Cahors, who had ſixſcore Men of Arms in his Company before his Caſtle of Auray, where together with him were ſlain an hundred Men of Arms, Engliſh and Bretons. Fabian [y] ſays indeed, the ſame French Knight ſlew him, but that it was by chance-medley. However, the greater part of our [z] Hiſtorians agree, 'twas done by fraud, and not plain Valour, and one relates the Matter thus, that the Sons of Sabater with a few others, having firſt laid a ſtrong Ambuſh in the Wood adjoyning, paſſed openly that way, as deſigning to forage thereabouts. Of theſe Prollers Sr. Thomas Dagworth, who was the King of Englands Lieutenant in thoſe parts, and at that time lay in the Caſtle of Auray, having notice, with only 16 Armed Men in his Company, purſued theſe Robbers, who fled purpoſely toward their Ambuſh, and enter'd the Wood after them, where being ſurpris'd by the Ambuſh, thô he ſlew no leſs than 300 of them; yet at laſt having received five Wounds upon his Face and Body, and loſt all his Men, who died faithfully by his ſide, he himſelf was finally thruſt thrô the Body with a Spear, and ended his Life, as formerly he had maintain'd it, Valiantly and with Honour. Froiſard, and from him Du Cheſne, and from them (as it happens) many of our old Writers call him Dangorne and Dagorne, but this proceeding from the obſcurity of old M. SS. or the variation of the name thrô foreign Languages, muſt be corrected and read Dagworth, as is well known, beſides other undeniable Authorities, from the Records themſelves. Wherefore neither is it material to obſerve the difference among Authors, concerning the time of his Death, ſome fixing it a Year more forward, others two Years backward: Since the [a] Records are the ſureſt Guide, which in this place alſo I have followed. However thus this Valiant Worthy fell thrô the Treaſon of the French and Bretons, that held of their part (for it was a notorious violation of the Truce) leaving behind him by his Lady Eleanor, Nicolas his Son and Heir, then very young, who in time came to be a notable Imitator of his Fathers Vertues, and Revenger of his Death.

[x] Froiſ. c. 153.

[y] Fabian p. 228.

[z] Knighton p. 2602. n. 42. Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 148. & Stow p. 246. ex Sr Tho. de la More, &c.

[a] Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 148. ex Rot. Franc. 23. Ed. 3. m. 5.

VII. Such Provocations as theſe being given by the French both in Bretagne and in Gaſcogne, King Edward eaſily provided for the former, having already ſufficient Captains in thoſe Parts: But as for the latter, he conſtituted, as we ſaid before, Henry Earl of Lancaſter and Derby his Lieutenant and Captain General, and [b] about the Feaſt of All-Saints ſent him well provided into Gaſcogne: Where preſently he began to take the Field with an Army [c] of 30000 Men; and marched forth to ſeek his Enemies for above ten Days, in which time he took more than fourty Towns and Caſtles, and with Fire and Sword made great Spoil for above 40 French Miles Southward. At laſt he came to Tholouſe, a great and ſtrong City on the River Garonne, and by his Heralds demanded of them in the Name of his Maſter the King of England to yield, or to come forth and give him Battle. To which the Captains within returned Anſwer, that if he would tarry five Days, they would then come out and fight him. Hereupon he granted them a Truce for Four days, but on the Fifth, when he ſaw they would not fight according to their Promiſe, he ſet fire on the Suburbs and ſo returned, having ſpoiled the Country all about to the great terrour of the Inhabitants. There accompanied the Earl of Lancaſter in this his Expedition, [d] Ralph Lord Stafford, the Lord Bartholomew Burwaſh, and Sr. Bartholomew his Son, the Eldeſt Sons of the Lords

[b] Stow p. 247.

[c] Dugd. 1 Vol. 786. & Hen. Knighton p. 2601. n. 60. & p. 2602.

[d] Stow p. 247.

Nevill

An. Dom. 1349 An. Regni Angliæ XXIII. Franciæ X.

Nevill and Piercy, Sr. [e] Miles Stapleton Knight of the Garter, and Thomas Lord Furnival: Which latter [f] within a while after, too raſhly engaging with his Enemies, was by them taken Priſoner. Soon after King Edward himſelf prepared to make a Voyage into France, but the Earl of Lancaſter returning the mean while out of Gaſcogne, ſignified unto him, that according to the Extent of his Commiſſion he had agreed unto a further Truce; wherefore that Deſign was no further purſued at that time.

[a] Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 70. [f] Stow p. 249. & 250.

VIII. Now during theſe Wars in Bretagne and Gaſcogne, there were many ſingle Combats, and ſometimes Battles at utterance between certain Numbers of French and Engliſh, as ſometimes 10, 20 or 30 on each Side: All which were fought with extream Animoſity and Obſtinacy, as wherein the Honour of their ſeveral Countries was ſo nearly concerned. One particularly at one time was occaſion'd in this Manner: Twenty [g] French Knights challenged Twenty Others, either of England or Gaſcogne, to fight them in a certain place aſſigned them in the Marches between Gaſcogne and France: which Challenge being accepted, each Party gave Security to the other, not to forſake the Field upon any Account, ſo long as one was left ready and willing to engage him in Combat. Accordingly the time being come they all performed their Parts ſo valiantly, and ſtood to it ſo long, that of the French but Three were left alive; and of the other Part, only the Noble Lord of Pamiers being ſlain, almoſt all the reſt were grievouſly wounded. Another Combat in like manner was agreed to be fought between [h] Thirty Engliſh and Thirty Bretons, Sr. Richard Bembre being Captain of the former, and the Lord of Beaumanoir of the latter: In which Number there was a Valiant Young Engliſh Gentleman named Sr. Hugh Calverlee: Of whoſe Martial Acts we ſhall ſpeak hereafter. Froiſard names [i] one young Eſquire Croquart, who being at this time choſen on the Engliſh Part, wan the Prize above all of either ſide. However Mezeray ſays, the Advantage remain'd here with the Bretons, and the chief Honour of that Side with the Captain, the Lord of Beaumanoir; and it is added in the Margin, that afterwards Sr. Bertram of Clequin fighting hand to hand with the ſaid Sr. Richard Brembre, in cloſe Field vanquiſhed and ſlew him.

[g] Knighton p. 2607. n. 20.

[h] Mezeray p. 39. ad ann. 1351. Sr. Walter Raleigh Hiſt. of the World p. 954.

[i] Froiſ. c. 149.

IX. By reaſon of theſe hot Wars many poor and mean Fellows arrived to great Riches, as Fortune favour'd that ſide they ſerved: So that in time ſeveral ſuch kind of Perſons ſet up for themſelves, and grew Captains of Robbers, and retain'd Aſſiſtants, whereby they wan Towns and Caſtles, took Priſoners, and by their Ranſoms and otherwiſe, got incredible Pillage and Booty; ſome of their Captains being worth above 40000 Crowns of Gold.

Theſe Men would often by their Spies ſeek out where there was any conſiderable Town, or Village within a Days journey or ſo from them; and being informed as to that point, they would aſſemble Thirty or Fourty of them together, and take by-ways, travelling night and day, and ſo unknown enter into the Place deſigned before it was Light, and ſtraight ſet fire to ſome Houſe or Barn: Whereupon the poor Inhabitants thinking ſome Men of War near, would fly away with all ſpeed imaginable; the mean while theſe Robbers would break up their Houſes and Coffers, and having thence taken what they pleaſed march off as they came. Among others there was one of theſe graceleſs Captains in Languedoc named Bacon, who having by his Spies privily found out the manner of the ſtrong Caſtle of Colbourne in Limoſin, rode by Night with 30 Choſen Men in his Company, and preſently ſurprized the Caſtle, and the Lord thereof who was called by the Caſtles Name the Lord Colbourne, whom he impriſon'd, and held there in his own Caſtle under reſtraint ſo long, till at laſt he made him pay 24000 Crowns for his Ranſom. And yet for all that he kept the Caſtle ſtill, and thence made war upon the Country: Till at laſt the French King was fain to buy him off, and to purchaſe his Service and the Caſtle: For the latter whereof he gave him 20000 Crowns more, and made him Uſher of Arms about his own Perſon: And thus was this Bacon of a Robber made a Gentleman, and Servant to a King, and he went always well Horſed and Armed, as if he had been an Earl, during his life.

Nor was the Dutchy of Bretagne free from this Sort of People, who now in time of Truce made War where they liſted, and wan and ſurprized Towns and Caſtles, and lived on Plunder, holding of no Man: For what they got they kept themſelves, or ſold back to the Country at their own Rates. The moſt conſiderable among thoſe who reign'd thus in Bretagne, was one Captain Croquart, a valiant and expert Man of Arms, who had formerly been a Page, and waited on the Lord Barkley in Holland; but when he began to be a Man, his Maſter gave him leave to follow the Wars in Bretagne. There he fell into ſervice with an Engliſh Man of Arms, and behav'd himſelf ſo well, that that when afterwards his Maſter was ſlain in a Skirmiſh, his Fellow-Souldiers choſe him for their Captain and Maſter. Whereupon teaching his Men this ſweet way of Free-booty, he arrived to ſuch Wealth, that he was accounted worth above 40000 Crowns, beſides his Horſes and Warlike Furniture; and he had always at leaſt twenty or thirty good Barbed Horſes menaged for the War: And himſelf bare the Reputation of being one of the moſt expert Men of Arms in all that Country; for he had been choſen in the Combat, whereof we ſpake, to be one of the Thirty on the Engliſh Side, and there he wan the Prize beyond all of either Party. The French King attempted to bring him alſo over to his Side, offering him, if he would turn againſt the Engliſh, to make him a Knight, and marry him to a great Fortune, and likewiſe to allow him out of his Exchequer 2000 l. of yearly Revenues during his Life. But either he loved the Engliſh, or at leaſt this licentious way of Robbing, ſo well, that he abſolutely rejected theſe honeſt and advantagious Conditions. But it happen'd ſoon after, that having bought a young mettleſome Horſe for 300 Crowns, he would needs try him himſelf, and in riding ſo ſpurr'd him, that the Horſe ran away with him, and in running fell in a great Ditch, where poor Croquart brake his Neck to the infinite regret of his Men, but to the full ſatisfaction of all the Country thereabouts, which he had ſo wonderfully haraſſed, ravaged and plunder'd.

AN. DOM. 1349. An. Regni Angliæ XXIII. Franciæ X.

X. As for the Affairs of Ireland, I have all this while forbore to ſpeak more particularly of them, becauſe neither is the Matter it ſelf of any great Moment, and there is not only much variety and confuſion in the Relation, but alſo what is related is done very imperfectly; at leaſt, nothing that I have met with hitherto hath given me ſatisfaction. But however I ſhall not omit one or two Occurrences, that are coincident with this Year in that Kingdom.

The Kings Lieutenant of Ireland at this time was [k] Sr. Robert Darcy, Second Son to John Lord Darcy deceaſed, and Brother to John Lord Darcy Junior; under whom Sr. Thomas Rokeby, [l] of whoſe being Knighted we ſpake in the beginning of this our Work, was now Deputy-Lieutenant. He had beſides his ordinary Retinue aſſign'd him by the King, for the defence of his Perſon and Authority 30 Men of Arms, and 200 Archers on Horſeback, ſo long as it ſhould be judged needfull. This Gentleman was a Perſon of great ſincerity and integrity, and being once twitted for ſuffering himſelf to be ſerved in Cups of Wood, anſwer'd, "Theſe homely Cups and Diſhes pay truly for "what they contain: I had rather drink out of Wooden Cups and pay Gold and "Silver, than drink out of Gold and Silver and make Wooden Payment. In the time of this Mans Governance, there dwelt in the Province of Ulſter a ſubſtantial Engliſh Knight called Sr. Robert Savage, who the better to preſerve his own from the ſuddain Incurſions of the Wild Iriſh, began to encloſe and fortifie his Mannor-Houſes with ſtrong Caſtles, Piles and Trenches, exhorting his Son and Heir Henry Savage to purſue the ſame Work, as a thing likely to be beneficial to himſelf and his Poſterity. "Father (replied the young Savage) I am for that Proverb which ſays, a Caſtle of Bones is "better than one of Stones. When Strength and Courage of valiant Men may be found "to help us, never will I by the Grace of God ſeek to lurk behind dead Walls. "My Fort ſhall be wherever young Blood is ſtirring, and where I can find room to "fight in. Upon this Anſwer his Father in a heat ſurceaſed the Building, and ſware never to proceed any further therein. But however the gallant young Henry Savage maintain'd his Poſſeſſions by the Valour of his Hands as he had promiſed. And among many other of his Acts, all worthy of eternal Memory, I ſhall chooſe to relate this one, not doubting, but its own Worth may attone for the Digreſſion.

[k] Holinſhead Chron. Ireland p. 72.
[l] L. 1. c. 1. §. 6. p. 11.

Having one time gather'd a little Band of Men, to go forth againſt the Iriſh, he allow'd to every Souldier to drink, before they began their March a good Draught of Aqua-Vitæ, Wine or ſtrong Ale, and for Proviſion againſt their Return, had kill'd ready beforehand great ſtore of Beef, Veniſon and Fowl: Whereupon ſome of his Officers, conſidering the uncertainty of War, told him it would be better Policy to poiſon the Meat, or at leaſt to deſtroy it, than to leave it there perhaps to feed and cheriſh a ſort of Rude Barbarians their Enemies, at ſo ſplendid a rate; if being a few againſt many, they ſhould, as 'twas moſt likely, miſcarry in this Adventure.

"Now God have Mercy, replied this Worthy Gentleman ſmiling, You are too full "of envy againſt your Fellow Creatures: This World is but an Inn, to which we "can claim no Propriety, but are only as Tenants at will to the Landlord. If it pleaſe "him to command us to leave it, as it were our Lodgings which he had lent us, and "to ſet other good Fellows in our Room; what harm is it for us if we leave them "ſome meat for their Suppers, of which we our ſelves have no Occaſion? Let them

"win

An. Dom. 1349. An. Regni Angliæ XXIII. Franciæ X.

"win it hardly and they deserve to eat it. For if they enter our Dwellings, common "Civility would do no less than welcome them with such Fare as the Country affords, "and with all my Heart much good may it do them. Notwithstanding I repose such an "assurance in the Grace of God, and in your noble Courages; that I am fully per- "swaded in my Mind, we shall return Conquerours at Night, and feast our selves with "our own Provision. Thus he said, and thus accordingly he returned at Night, having with a small Number slain no less than Three Thousand of the Irish his Enemies.

But however this Valiant Gentleman was of the Opinion with the Lacedæmonians, and scorned to be defended by any other thing, than his own Courage; it is certain, that for want of Walls and other places of Strength, not only the family of the Savages, but also most of many other English Gentlemen, have been greatly diminished in Ulster, and other parts of Ireland, the lack of Walled Towns, being one of the Principal occasions of the rude barbarity of that People.

XI. But before we close this Year, we think fit to remember a remarkable Instance of the Generous Prince of Wales his Bounty, to a Valiant Servant of his Sr. Henry Eam of Flanders; which will best be discover'd from an Instrument made unto him by the said Prince two Years before, and now confirmed by the King his Father, the Copy whereof being to be seen according to the Original French and Latine in [m] Esquire Ashmole's noble Work of the Garter, we shall take leave to set it down in English---

[m] Ashmole Instit. Garter p. 707. ex Pat. an. 23. Ed. 3. par. 2. m. 24.

"The King, to all to whom these presents shall come, Greeting. We have seen the "Letters Patents of our most Dear, most Well-beloved, and most Trusty Son, Edward, "Prince of Wales, Duke of Cornwall, and Earl of Chester, in these Words: "ED- "WARD, Eldest Son of the Noble King of England, and of France, Prince of "Wales, Duke of Cornwall, and Earl of Chester, to all, who shall see or hear these "Letters, Greeting. Know, that whereas our Thrice-Dear and Well-beloved Sr. Henry "Eam, from the time that he hath taken at our hands the Order of Knighthood, "hath offer'd and promis'd of his Free-will to be intending to our Service, during his "Life, and while we shall sufficiently furnish him with Arms, to go along with Us "to what part We shall please, as well in Peace as in War, and to bear Arms with "Us at our Pleasure against all Men, except the Duke of Brabant, his Liege Lord, "in defence of his own Lands: We accepting of this his Offer and Promise, and be- "ing willing to retain him for our Service, and (that he may be the more obliged to "serve Us before any other) to bear such a regard unto him, whereby he may the "better maintain his Estate, have given unto him the Annual Rent of one Hundred "Marks, during his Life, to be received out of our Mannor of Bradinuch, in the Coun- "ty of Devonshire, every Year at the terms of Easter, and of St. Michael by equal "Portions, of the hands of the Keepers of our said Mannor for the time being, the "Offer and Promise aforesaid, being in all points held and kept. And We will also, "that at what time, and as often, as his said payment shall be upon arriere, in part "or in whole, without term assigned, it shall be Lawfull for the said Sr. Henry to di- "strain on the said Mannor, and to have what is so distrained, until he shall be fully "payed, so much, as shall be found due unto him upon arriere, as aforesaid. In wit- "ness whereof We have made these our Letters Patent: Given under our Seal at West- "minster, the 18 day of January in the Year of the Reign of our most Dear Lord "and Father the King, over England the 21, and over France the 8. "We [n] allow- "ing and approving the foresaid Grant do by the Tenour of these Presents confirm and "ratifie the same unto the said Henry, during his Life, as the foresaid Letters do im- "port. In witness whereof, &c. Teste Rege apud Westmonasterium XXVIII die "Junii, Anno Regni nostri Angliæ 23, Regni verò nostri Franciæ 10. Per ipsum "Regem.

[n] i.e. the King.

CHAP-

AN. DOM. 1350. An. Regni Angliæ XXIV. Franciæ XI.

CHAPTER the TENTH.

The CONTENTS.

I. Pope Clement reduces the Bonifacian Jubilee from the Hundredth to the Fiftieth Year, with an Account of the first Original of a Jubilee. II. King Edward forbids his subjects to go to Rome on that occasion, with his Answer to the Popes expostulation thereupon. III. The sect of Whippers arises, and is suppress't. IV. King Edwards Victory over the Spaniards at Sea. V. King Philip of France dies, and is succeeded by his Eldest Son, John Duke of Normandy. VI. A Duel fought before King Edward between a Cypriote Knight, and the Bastard of France. VII. King John puts the Bastard to Death, together with the Earl of Eu and Guisnes, for envy; because they commended the Carriage of King Edward of England. VIII. Some steps towards a Peace with Scotland, in order to King Davids Redemption.

I. THis Year being the Fiftieth of the Fourteenth Century, accounting from the Nativity of our Lord, being held as a Solemn Jubilee at Rome, we shall here make some short enquiry after that Matter. And it appears from the Sacred Records, that God Almighty himself was the First Institutor of this great Solemnity: For He, having appointed the Sabbath-Day, or the Seventh of the Week, to be kept Holy in Memory of the Creation of the World, which was by his Word alone compleated in the space of six Days, did afterwards at the promulgation of the Law from Mount Sina, [a] add unto the Jews a Sabbath of Years to be observed, that so the Land of Palestine, having been tilled and manured for six continued Years, should be left fallow every Seventh Year, without any manuring, tilling, reaping, or dressing: And seven of these Sabbatical Years, or Fourty Nine common Years, being compleat, God commanded the Jews to proclaim thrô their whole Land a Festival Year, by sound of the Holy Trumpets, to be universally held as the great Sabbatical Year, a Year of general Release, and of Religious Rest, and of Joy, and of Exultation, as a Type of that Eternal Rest, Relaxation, and Liberty, which the Messias was to procure unto the Sons of God: Which Fiftieth Year was called the Year of Jubilee, from a [b] Word in Hebrew, which signifies a Ram, because it was proclaimed with the sound of Trumpets made of Rams-horns: Unless some had rather derive it from a Word of Latine-Original, which signifies to Rejoyce.

[a] Levitic. c. 25. v. 2, 3, &c.

[b] יובל vid. Joh. Buxtorf. Lexicon Hebr. in hâc voce p. 293, &c.

This being the First Institution of the Jubilee among the Jews, deliver'd by their great Prince and Law-giver Moses, Pope Boniface VIII brought it in also among the Christians, [c] in the Year of our Lord MCCC, which was the sixth of his Papacy, and then ordain'd, that it should be solemnly kept every Hundredth Year. Althô we find, that in the Year of our Lord CCXLVII, which was Ab U. C. Annus Millesimus, the Emperour [d] Philip the Second, kept a Festive Year in Memory of the first Foundation of the Imperial City of Rome, with all imaginable Splendour and Magnificence: And this, althô it had not the Name, was indeed no other, than a Jubilee.

[c] Labbæi Chron. Techn. ad hunc an. & Polydor. Virg. l. 19. p. 385.

[d] Dr. Cave's Apostolici in tabulâ Chronol.

But now [e] Pope Clement VI, because it was not likely, that any Man, who had seen the first Bonifacian Jubilee, should live to see the Return of another, and also in that the Fiftieth Year was more consonant to the Mosaical Law, at the Instant Request of the Roman Ambassadors, granted that on this Year, and every Fiftieth Year following, the Jubilee should be celebrated at the Holy City of Rome; at which time he granted by his Apostolical Power many great Indulgences to all those, who should devoutly Visit the Churches of the Apostles, St. Peter and St. Paul, and also the Lateran, called S^to Giovanni Laterano; the Dignity of which Church doth sufficiently appear from this Ancient Inscription in Marble, in the Porch thereof at Rome, [e] Odor. Rainald. ad an. Christi 1349. §. 11. &c. & ad an. 1350. §. 1. &c.

Dogmate Papali datur & simul Imperiali;
Ut sim cunctarum Mater & Caput Ecclesiarum.

An. Dom. 1350. An. Regni Angliæ XXIV. Franciæ XI.

The opinion, that these Indulgences were of no small Advantage, did so mightily prevail, that infinite Numbers of both Sexes went on Pilgrimage to Rome, there being reckoned no less than [f] 1200000 Thousand Strangers passing too and fro in the City at One time, among whom were many Persons of extraordinary Quality, and some Princes, Dukes, and the like. But [g] Kings and Persons of an higher Station, who were by their great Affairs detained at home, being desirous to be made partakers nevertheless of these Sacred Privileges, wrote their Letters Supplicatory to the Pope, that in them the Good-Will might be taken for the Deed, and that thô they could not tend to go in Person, yet since they so devoutly desired it, they might obtain of his Holiness the same Indulgences, as others, who performed that Pilgrimage, among which there was the King of Castille and Leon, the Kings of Aragon, Portugal, and Cyprus, Albert Duke of Austria, and others. And thô the Pope defer'd a while to answer their Requests, till he might confer thereupon with his Cardinals in Council, yet it is likely that they enjoy'd the said Benefit at last, for it appears, that soon [h] after the same was granted to King Edward of England, and to his Son Edward, Prince of Wales, to the Queens of England, Isabell, and Philippa, and to Elisabeth Queen of Hungary.

[f] Matth. Villani l. 1. c. 58.
[g] Odor. Rainal. ad an. 1349. §. 9.
[h] Odor. Rainal. ad an. 1350. §. 2.

II. The Jubilee began [i] on the 25 of March, being the Feast of the Annunciation of the Blessed Virgin Mary, and lasted until the said Feast of the Year following, during the most part of which space, especially about Easter, Ascension-Day, and Whitsuntide, there was such a crowding, rather than concourse, of People at Rome, [k] that Francis Petrarch, who was then present, says, how it seem'd the late horrid Plague had done little or no harm; there came thither every day such Incredible Multitudes of Christian People from all parts of Europe: Althô few or none went out of England upon that account, (except the [l] Lady Margaret, Mother to William Lord Ros of Hamlake) King Edward [m] expresly forbidding it, as of ill Consequence to his Realm; very considerable Sums of Money, being necessarily on such occasions transported out of the Kingdom. When the Pope understood this, he sent his Nuntio's to the King of England, desiring of him, "First, that he would not hinder the Passage of those, who desired to visit the Places of the Holy Apostles. Item, that he would grant a Truce, "that so the Earl of Lancaster might not act any Hostilities in Aquitain, to the hindrance of those, who desired to visit Holy Places. Lastly, that he would not hinder, "or permit to be hindred, those, who were promoted by his Bulls at the Court of Rome, "from receiving Benefices so incumbent on them. To the first Article it was answer'd, "that the King being busied in his Wars, did therefore Want to be Aided of what was "his own, and that it was necessary to provide for the Treasure of his Kingdom, lest, "while the War endured, it should be exported out of the Realm, to the Prejudice of "Him and of his Subjects. And further as to this point the King caused to be proclaimed, that all Englishmen, as well at Rome, as any other place beyond Sea, should make haste to return home, as soon as might be, on pain of forfeiture of Life and Goods. As to the second Article, relating to the Truce, it was answer'd, "that the "King of France had often acted Hostilities, during such a Truce, upon the Lands of "the King of England treacherously, to the destruction of his People, and contrary to the "Conventions contained in the said Truce. And as to the Third Article, respecting the Provisors, it was answer'd, "that the King would graciously receive Clergy-men, ma-"king use of Papal Provision, who were of good Condition, and worthy of Promotion, but "not others. And with this Answer the Popes Nuntio's returned.

[i] Knighton p. 2602. n. 29. vid Walsingh. Hist. p. 160.
[k] Vid. Matur. Annot. ad D. Antonin. Chron. t. 355.
[l] Dudg. 1 Vol. p. 550.
[m] Knighton p. 2601. n. 30, 40, 50, &c.

III. About the [n] same time there arose a certain Sect of People, who were seised with a pious Frenzy, and went about in several Parts of the World whipping themselves with four-corded Whips, and Preaching, Singing and Praying with much seeming Devotion; but it proved no better than Hypocrisie or misguided Zeal at the best, as may appear to any, that shall consult the Places quoted in the Margin: Wherefore the Pope wrote his Letters to the Archbishops and Bishops of Germany, Poland, Sweedland, England and France, enjoyning them to extinguish this Sect of Whippers; and also to the several Kings, that by their Kingly Authority they would uphold the said Prelates in this matter. Particularly there are extant to our King Edward Letters from the Pope, wherein he writes thus concerning the Rise of these Whippers. [o] Lately in the Parts of Almain under the pretence of Piety and doing Penance, there hath arisen a Superstitious and vain Generation, and so having at large declared, how they had been condemned by the Apostolick Decree; and that Patriarchs and Archbishops had been enjoyned to pluck up that poisonous Plant, which the Heavenly Husbandman had not planted, he adds these Prayers, "Do You therefore, ô most Dear Son, not only drive a- [n] Vid. Odoric. Rainald. ad an. 1349. §. 18. Albert. Argent. in Chron. Lanquet. Chron. ad an. 1350. Walsing. hist. p. 160. Stow p. 246.

[o] Tom. 8. Epist. secr. p. 104. apud Odor. Rainal. ad an. 1349. §. 22.

"way

"way the same Wicked Persons, if perhaps they should presume to come into your King- "dom, out of the Limits of your said Kingdom; but also that they may repent of their "Follies and Errours, and return to Modesty, correct and punish them: That so the "Purity of the Catholick Faith may always shine forth, and the leaven of the Malice
"of these Men may by your provident Care be taken away from among all your Subjects.
Dat. Avenion: III Non. Decembris, Anno Pontif. VIII. About [p] Michaelmas this Year, above an hundred and twenty Noblemen and Others, Natives of Zealand, Holland and Hainalt, in the same blind Devotion passing thrô Flanders, came into England; and at London, sometimes in the Cathedral of St. Paul, sometimes in other Religious Places of the City, made their procession all together, being coverd from the Loins to the Heels with Linnen, marked with Red Crosses before and behind, and on their Hats, all the rest of their Bodies being bare: they had every one a Three-corded Whip in his hand, well knotted, wherewith twice or thrice in a Day they beat themselves on their bare bloody Bodies most cruelly, Four of them singing all the while in their own Language, and all the rest making up the Chorus. King Edward (thô he strictly forbad all others from joining with them) inflicted no other Punishment on them than what was the effect of their own Folly; seeing how severely they chastised themselves, and knowing such Smarting Devotion could not hold out long, if no manner of notice was taken of them. I remember to have read, [q] that when Diogenes the Cynick stood naked out of an Ostentatious humour, in a very cold Season, embracing a Pillar of Marble, and all the People flocking about him pitied the poor Mans Condition, the Divine Plato passing accidentally by, told the Spectators, "If they really pitied him, they "should take no notice of him, but pass regardless on, and then they should see the "Vain-glorious Philosopher, make haste away, and gladly run to a Fire. In like manner these Enthusiasts, when they saw none took notice of them, and that but a few of the Common People afforded them any pity or respect (the most part of them also flouting and deriding their Madness) began to cool in their warm fit of Penance, and at last vanished away, as ashamed of their former folly. Certainly the soundest and most effectual Devotion consisteth not in Popular Mortifications of the Body, as in Whippings, Fastings and the like; but in secret and firm Resolutions against sin, and a steady and discreet Curbing of the unruly Concupiscence.

AN. DOM. 1350. An. Regni Angliæ XXIV. Franciæ XI.

[p] Walsing. hist. p. 160. Stow p. 24 b.

[q] Vid. Diogen. Laert.

IV. In the [r] beginning of this Summer some Variance happening between the Fleets of England and Spain, which was fomented by French Arts, the Spaniards under the Conduct of Don Carlos de la Cerda their Admiral, beset the Brittish Sea with a Fleet of fourty four Tall Men of War; and particularly encountring with ten English Merchants laden with Wine from Gascogne, they boarded, wan, rifled and sank them, and so took the Haven of Scluse in Flanders. And many more Evils they did about the Coasts of England and Aquitain, as firing of Ships which they found at Anchor, Robbing and Killing our Merchants, and what other Englishmen fell into their hands. Hereupon King Edward sent first into Flanders, that they should not presume to allow any Harbour or Assistance unto these his Enemies: And he the mean while prepared to set out against them in Person. Accordingly being soon furnish'd with a Fleet of Fifty good Ships and Pinnaces, and taking along with him his Eldest Son, Edward Prince of Wales, then in the Twentieth Year of his Age, together with the Earls of Lancaster, Northampton, Warwick, Salisbury, Arundel, Huntington, Glouceſter, and other Lords and Knights with their several Retinues, and a good Number of stout Archers, he went on board at Sandwich with design to meet the Spanish Armada at their return with Wares from Flanders; and at last on [f] a Monday, the IV of the Kalends of September, being the 29 of August, and the Feast of the Decollation of St. John Baptist, he met with them upon the Coasts of Winchelsea, and about Rye, near the hour of Mattins. There arose immediately a fierce Engagement between the two Fleets, the Spanish huge Carracks easily overlooking the English Vessels, and almost overwhelming them with a storm of Crosbow-shot, Stones, Timber and Bars of iron, that flew incessantly from their high built Castles. But the Archers of England pierced their Arbalisters with a further Reach than they could strike again; and so compelled them to appear more rarely on the Decks, obliging also at the same time those that fought on the Hatches to cover themselves with Planks and Tables, and fetching likewise down with their winged Messengers, such as threw Stones from the tops of their Ships: And then after a long and doubtfull Fight, the English Men of Arms began boldly to board the Spanish Vessels with Swords, Lances, Halberds and Battle-Axes in their hands, cruelly slaying and tumbling over-board all they met with to make room for new Guests, which King Edward had brought with him for that purpose. And now Seventeen of the Enemies

[r] Odor. Rainal. ad hunc an. §. 40. & Matth. Villani l. 1. c. 99. Walsingh. Hist. p. 160. n. 10. Knighton p. 2602. Fabian p. 228. Holinsh. 945. Stow p. 251. & M. S. Vet. Angl. in Bibl. C.C.C. Cantab. c. 224.

[f] Lit. Dom. C.

An. Dom. 1350. An. Regni Angliæ XXIV. Franciæ XI.

Ships were thus wholly in the Engliſh power, when all out of ſeaſon envious Night came on to befriend the poor Spaniards, but to deprive the Engliſh of an abſolute and entire Victory. For hereby they were fain to caſt Anchor, and to deſiſt from purſuing their good Beginnings, being forced to attend a further Trial till the next Day: And therefore as ſuppoſing nothing done to purpoſe, while any thing remained undone; they fell to dreſſing their own Wounded, but flang the miſerable Spaniards into that Sea, whereon they had ſo lately treſpaſſed: And then having taken their repaſt, and ſet the Watch, they all waited for the Morning. The next Day being freſhly apparel'd for fight, they look'd about all over the Seas, but ſaw no ſign of any thing to reſiſt them. For 27 Spaniards Ships had fled away during the Night-ſeaſon, leaving thô againſt their wills no leſs than 17 (thô [u] Others ſay 22, and Some 26) to the diſcretion of King Edward, who was thus again adorned with a Naval Crown. But this Honour the King thought too dearly bought with the Life of Sr. John Goldesborough, a young Knight of great Valour, of comely Shape and noble Deportment, who died in this Engagement, and was much lamented by the King and his Son the Prince of Wales, to whom he was always very Dear, upon the account of his extraordinary Qualities, and almoſt equal Age, and Conformity of Will and Inclination. His Loſs King Edward having endeavour'd to repair by Advancing no leſs than fourſcore young Gentlemen, who performed beſt in the Fight, to the Honour of Knighthood, return'd again with Victory and Triumph for England. This Defeat happen'd [y] to the Spaniard juſt upon the beginning of Don Pedro's Reign, his Father Alphonſo XI being [z] in the Month of March preceding taken away by the Plague, as he lay at the Siege of Heraclea, now called Gibraltar Viejo.

[u] Fabian p.228. Martin p. 125. [b] Speed p. 581. Holinſh. Engl. Chron. p. 946. Sed M. S. Vet. Angl. in Bibl. C.C.C. Cantabr. c. 224. Naves XXIV captas refert.

[y] Odor. Rainal. ad hunc an. §. 40,41, &c. [z] Matth. Villani l. 1. c. 41. & Joh. Mariana l. 16. c. 15.

V. A Week before this Battle was fought, namely [a] on the 22[d] of Auguſt, or as ſome ſay the 28, being a Sunday, Philip of Valois King of France, departed this Life at Nogent le Roy in Chartrain, in the Fifty Seventh Year of his Age, and the Twenty Third of his Reign. He was a Prince ſurely of very great Accompliſhments, Pious, Brave and Liberal: But either by the more powerfull Genius of King Edward his Adverſary, or the Injuſtice of his Cauſe, or both, all his Gallantry and Courage were rendred ineffectual, or rather of dangerous effect to himſelf. He [b] was more happy in Negotiations than in Battles, very ſevere and ſtrict to his Subjects, ſuſpicious, vindicative, and apt to be immoderately tranſported by the impetuoſity of his Choler. From [c] Nogent his Body was honourably conveyed to our Lady's Church in Paris, and on the Thurſday following he was Royally interred at St. Dennis on the Left ſide the High Altar, his [d] Bowels being left among the Jacobins in Paris, and his Heart, as himſelf had deſired, at [e] Bourefountain in Valois. His Eldeſt Son and Heir John, Duke of Normandy ſucceeded him in his Troubleſome Throne, and on the 26 of September following, being a Sunday, was ſolemnly Anointed and Crowned King of France, together with his Queen Joan, [f] late Widow of the Lord Philip of Burgundy, in the City of Rheims. At which time he made ſeveral Knights, [g] as his Eldeſt Son Charles the Dauphin, his Second Son Lewis Earl of Alenſon, the young Earl of Eſtampes, the Lord John of Artois, Son to the late Famous Robert of Artois; alſo Philip Duke of Orleans, the Kings only Brother, the little Young Duke of Burgundy, Son to his Queen by her Firſt Husband the Lord Philip aforeſaid, the Earl of Dampmartin and Others: And at the ſame [h] time in conſideration of the eminent and agreeable Services of the Lord Don Carlos de la Cerda of Spain, who had lately enter'd the narrow Seas in Behalf of the French with a Powerfull Fleet, and thô he was beaten by King Edward, as we ſhew'd even now, had firſt done conſiderable dammage to England, created him Earl of Angouleſme. The next day the King removed thence and went to Laon, and ſo thrô Soiſſons and Senlis; after which both He and his Queen enter'd into Paris on the 17 of October in great Triumph, where there was general Feaſting and Revels for an whole Week together; and the King tarried at his Palace of Neſle untill the Eleventh of November, or the Feaſt of St. Martin the Biſhop and Confeſſor, during which time he ſent forth his Summons for the Three Eſtates to meet him in Parliament at ſuch a Day.

[b] Mezeray ad hunc an.

[c] Froiſ. c. 153.

[d] Lanquets Chr. ad hunc an. [e] an Fountainbleau.

[f] Vid. l. 2. c. 7. §. 13. p. 428. [g] Froiſ. ibid. Mezeray, &c.

[h] Martin p. 125

[i] Froiſ. ibid.

VI. Now it is to be noted, [k] that in theſe Days there was hot War between the Soldan of Babylon and Conſtantine King of Armenia, the former invading the King of Armenia's Dominions with vaſt and numerous Armies, and the latter endeavouring by the united Strength of his own Subjects, the Cypriotes and Rhodians to repell the Violence of the ſaid Heathen Invaders, or at leaſt to ſtop their Progreſs, which then began to threaten all Chriſtendom. Among [l] the ſeveral great Men, who together with the Chriſtian Princes were engaged in this Holy War, whereof Hugh the Valiant King of Cyprus was the moſt Notable; there was a Cypriote Knight, named John de Veſconti, of the [k] Odor. Rainal. ad hunc annum. §. 37. &c.

[l] Walſing. Hiſt. p. 160. n. 25. Stow p. 250. b. n. 56. & Holinſh. p. 945. b. n. 20.

King

King of Cyprus his Blood, and a Knight of France called Thomas de la Marche, Baſtard-Brother to John de Valois the French King; both who had a conſiderable Command in the Chriſtian Army. It ſo fell out, that John de Veſconti laid flat Treaſon to the Charge of the Baſtard of France, namely, that he had ſecretly appointed, in Conſideration of a certain Summ of Gold to be paid unto him before-hand in part of a greater Summ to be paid afterward, to betray the Chriſtian Army to the Turks. The Defendant ſtrenuouſly denied the Charge, which the Appellant as eagerly urged; but there was no other Proof on either ſide, ſave only their ſingle Aſſeverations. Whereupon a Challenge being denounced, and accepted between the Parties, the Chriſtian Captains, fearing either to diſpleaſe the King of Cyprus, or the King of France, to whom they were Allied; or at leaſt doubting ſome Diſſention might happen thereupon among themſelves by reaſon of Part-taking on eitther ſide, made them both ſwear to ſtand to their Award, as it ſhould be determin'd by the Confederates in Council. The Judgment was, that they ſhould take and carry Letters importing their Cauſe fully and clearly, from the ſaid Chriſtian Princes unto King Edward of England, and to ſubmit themſelves to be tried by Combat before him, as the moſt Worthy and Honourable Prince in all Chriſtendom, they ſwearing to remain as perfect Friends untill that time.

AN. DOM. 1350. An. Regni Angliæ XXIV. Franciæ XI.

As it was determin'd, ſo theſe Generous Knights performed, and came into England in the beginning of September, and forthwith preſented their Letters unto King Edward in the Name of the Kings of Armenia and Cyprus, and the reſt of the Princes and Captains of the Chriſtians, containing the whole Difference between them, and that they were to determine the Matter by Combat before him, as their Judge. And then again Sr. John de Veſconti openly before the King, began to accuſe Sr. Thomas de la Marche of the Treaſonable Intent and Purpoſe aforeſaid, challenging to prove it upon his Body, and thereupon flung down his Gantlet: Which the ſaid Sr. Thomas as boldly took up, and accepted the Challenge in proof of his Innocency. King Edward having read the Letters, and ſeriouſly conſider'd the whole Matter, ſet them a Day, namely the Fourth of October, being the Monday after St. Michael, wherein to decide their Quarrel in cloſe Field within the Liſts at his Palace of Weſtminſter. On the day appointed they met accordingly, Armed at all Points on Horſeback, the King, the Prince of Wales, and the whole Court of England being Spectators. There preſently upon Sound of Trumpet began a moſt gallant Combat between theſe two Gentlemen, for at the Tilt both their Spears brake on each others Shield, yet neither of them was moved from his Saddle, wherefore as it were by Conſent, they both alighted at one inſtant, aud renewed the Combat on Foot, till having with equal Valour and Diſcretion fought a Conſiderable while, both their Weapons were rendred uſeleſs, and they were obliged to come to cloſe Grapple, till by Wreſtling both fell lock'd together, ſtill contending for the Victory. Now the Viſors of both their Helmets were defended before with ſmall diſtant Bars of Steel, thrô which they might ſee and breath more freely, all the reſt of their Bodies being wholly cover'd with Armour: Wherefore Sr. Thomas de la Marche the Knight of France, who only of the two had certain ſhort but ſharp Pricks of Steel called [m] Gadlings, encloſed in the Joints of his Right Gauntlet, ſtruck therewith at the Viſor of Sr. John de Veſconti, as often as he could come at him, and grievouſly tormented him in the Face. Inſomuch that being himſelf unprovided of the like Gadlings, he was forced thrô Extremity of pain to cry out aloud, as one that could not help himſelf. At that King Edward flang down his Wardour, and the Marſhal cried Ho, and ſo the Combat ceaſed; the King adjudging the Victory to the Frenchman, and the Vanquiſhed to be at his Mercy, according to the Law of Arms. Sr. Thomas de la Marche, however being ſatisfied with ſo plain and honourable a Proof of his Innocency, before ſo Great a Preſence, forbore to uſe his power over his Enemy, and only took him and made a Preſent of him unto the Black-Prince, to uſe at his Diſcretion: Which done with great, Devotion he Dedicated his own Suit of Armour to the Engliſh Patron St. George, in the famous Cathedral of St. Paul at London. A few Days after this, King Edward having graciouſly entertained and rewarded the Baſtard of France, ſent him home honourably with Commendations to King John his Brother. And as for the Captive Knight of Cyprus, ſome while after the Generous Prince of Wales, for the Sake of the King of Cyprus, gave him his full Liberty, and let him go at his Leiſure.

C. Lit. Dom.

[m] Ab Anglo-Sax. Gadd, Maſſa chalybis.

VII. Now King John of France, before the return of his Baſtard-Brother, had heard of all this buſineſs, and taking it in deep indignation, that a Frenchman of his Blood ſhould yield to try a Combat before a King, his Enemy, was mortally diſpleaſed at him, and thô he had gain'd ſuch Honour, both in the Holy Wars, and in the late Duel, abſolutely solutely deny'd to admit him into his Presence. But after a few days, having with much adoe, and earnest Intercession obtain'd admittance, the said Lord Thomas, as one that was desirous to shew himself a true Subject, and so to recover his Brothers favour, besides his declaring the necessity, which the Christian Lords had put upon him to go into England, "began among his excuses highly to extoll the Generosity of King Ed-"ward, and to shew how justly his Fame was spread throughout the whole World: "Nor did he forget to commend his Equity, which he had shewn in his cause, not "at all accepting the Person of the Cypriote (althô it was well known, what a Friend "he was to the King of Cyprus himself) but Prefer'd, and Honoured, and Rewarded "me, said he, thô I am a Frenchman, and Brother, and Servant to you my Lord, the "King of France. These Words the Noble Earl of Ewe, and of Guisnes, and Constable of France, then Present, not knowing how distastfull they were to King John, confirmed by his own experience, and rose up, and shew'd among other instances, [n] "how far that Noble King had banish'd all envy and hatred from his Breast, inso-"much that lately in a solemn Tourneament at Windsor, he had not only admitted "him being a Prisoner, to that Honourable Exercise, but gave him an allowance of "all necessary accoutrements, and at last rewarded him with a Rich Prize, and now "had sent him home upon his Parole in trust of a small Ransom, and rather as Ne-"gotiator for the Redemption of others, than a Prisoner himself; whereby said he, "I am put in a Capacity to serve your Majesty, as I served your Father of blessed "Memory. These true Praises of King Edwards Princely Disposition, enflam'd the envious heart of King John with Madness; so that immediately without any further consideration or process of Law, he caused them both to be apprehended, and flung in Prison, and the third day after, [o] namely, on the 19 of November, to be beheaded by night, in the Presence of the Duke of Bourbon, and seven or eight other Lords of Note, before whom the Earl of Ewe is said to have confessed certain points of Treason, whereof he stood guilty. But however all the Treason, that Envy it self could lay to the Bastards Charge, was only, that (as he was bound by Oath to all the Christian Princes in the Holy War) he had accordingly committed his cause to the Arbitration of the King of England. And as for the Earl of Ewe, whatever at that time was devis'd to blacken him, he was notoriously a Person of such Gallantry, and had already so eminently signaliz'd his Loyalty, that to this day it could never be believed, that he could be really guilty of any manner of Treason; thô some, rather by way of conjecture, than proof, pretend to colour the Matter, that his frequent passing too and fro between England and France (which he did in order to hasten the Redemption of his Fellow-Prisoners) was with Designs in favour of the English. Others say, [p] that he was suspected of being over Familiar with the French Queen, "and that therefore King John, after the fall of these two Great, but Unfortunate "Gentlemen, famished his Queen to Death; thô she was Daughter to John of Lux-"emburgh, that Noble King of Bohemia, who lost his Life at the Battle of Cressy, "in the cause of France. But this is a most false and irrational Story; for King Johns first Wife, who indeed was Daughter to the said King of Bohemia, died, as we [q] shew'd, two Years before: And his second Wife, his Queen at this time, who was Daughter to William Earl of Boulogne, lived in his Favour, and died not till many Years after. However the Earl of Ewe's Lands and Honours, [r] were parcell'd out to others, his Office of Constable of France in January following, was by the King confer'd on the Lord Don Carlos de la Cerda of Spain, whom already he had made Earl of Angoulesme; his Earldom of Eu he gave to the Lord John of Artois, Eldest Son to Sr. Robert of Artois, of whose Revolt from France, and Friendship to King Edward, we have spoken in the first part of this our History: Only the Earldom of Guisnes he left with the Lady Jane, sole Daughter of the Defunct Earl of Ewe, who was then Married to Walter Duke of Athens, and after his Decease to Lewis Earl of Estampes of the house of Eureux, from whom are derived the present Earls of Eu, Princes of the Blood.

An. Dom. 1350. An. Regni Angliæ XXIV. Franciæ XI.

[n] Knighton p. 2607. n. 1. &c.

[o] Froiss. c. 153. & Mezeray ad hunc ann.

[p] Stow p. 251.

[q] L. 2. c. 7. §. 13. p. 427.

[r] Froiss. c. 153. Mezeray ibid. & Martin. p. 125. Knighton ibid. &c.

VIII. About this time, the Scots not yet agreeing to redeem their King David, who was still a Prisoner here, nor admitting of any just offers of Composition, but rather provoking the King of England farther by their Insolencies, Cruelties, and Depredations; He for his part, considering that the Truce with France, would either be soon ended by violation, or of its own course, sent his [s] Commissioners, viz. Dr. Thomas Hatfield Bishop of Durham, the Lord Ralph Stafford, the Lord Henry Piercy, and the Lord Ralph Nevill, to treat with the Lord Robert Stuart, Prince of Scotland, and other Nobles of that Realm, then met at York, about a firm and final Peace between the two Nations. And this Treaty was held on with good hopes of Succeſs, even till the end of the next Year; for we find, that it was at laſt between them agreed, [t] that upon the coming into England of the young Lord John, Eldeſt Son and Heir of Robert Stuart, and ſeveral other young Noblemen, Hoſtages for the ſaid King, he himſelf ſhould be permitted to go into Scotland, and upon his return back, the Hoſtages ſhould be deliver'd. The Kings Letters of ſafe Conduct to the Hoſtages, and of Power to certain Commiſſioners to receive them, and to take King Davids Oath for his Return, and the Command for his ſafe Cuſtody at Newcaſtle, till the Hoſtages were all come, bear date the 5 of September, an. 25. Ed. 3. to continue in force, till the Quindena of the Purification next following, and on the 3 of November after they were renewed, with a further term, even to the Feaſt of St. Philip and James enſuing. According to this agreement the Hoſtages being come, and diſpoſed into the Caſtles of York and Nottingham, King Edward ſent his Command, [u] bearing date the 5 of October to Sr. John Copland, High-Sheriff of Northumberland, the ſame, who firſt took the King of Scotland Priſoner, and at that time had the Cuſtody of him, to deliver him up to the Biſhops of Durham and Caerlile, to William Earl of Northampton, the Lords Henry Piercy, and Ralph Nevill, or to any Four, Three, or Two of them; and at the ſame time another Command was iſſued out to them, to deliver him under the form, and upon the Conditions agreed on. And ſo toward the latter end of October, King David, being at liberty upon Parole went into Scotland, in hopes by his Preſence to quicken his Subjects to come to a Compoſition with King Edward; but not being able to accompliſh his intention ſo ſoon as he had deſign'd, [x] the Scots refuſing alſo to redeem him on ſuch Conditions as King Edward propounded, he return'd into England about half a Year after; at which time a Command bearing date [y] 28 March, an. 26. Ed. 3. was ſent to the Sheriff of Yorkſhire, to conduct the Hoſtages of Scotland to Barwick, they to be there in Quindena [z] Paſchæ, it being the Day fixed for King Davids return to that Town: And ſo he remain'd a Priſoner ſtill in England.

[s] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 160. & p. 275 & p. 294.

tween

AN. DOM. 1350. An. Regni Angliæ XXIV. Franciæ XI.

[t] Rot. Scotiæ 25. Ed. 3. m. 3. & Aſhmole p. 657.

[u] Rot. Scotiæ 25. Ed. 3. m. 3.

[x] Knighton p. 2603. n. 10. &c.

[y] Rot. Scotiæ 26. Ed. 3. m. 3.

[z] Paſcha 17. Aprilis. B. Dom. Lit.

CHAPTER the ELEVENTH.

The CONTENTS.

I. A Parliament at Weſtminſter, wherein the King advances ſeveral Great Men to Honour. II. The Lord John Beauchamp, Captain of Calais, being taken Priſoner is ſucceeded by Sr. Robert Herle: His Acts; a Truce. III. A Truce with Spain: The Lord Guy de Neſle taken Priſoner before the Truce with France. IV. Twenty four Chriſtians Martyr'd by the Governour of Damaſcus, who is therefore put to Death by the Soldane of Babylon. V. King John renews the Order of the Star. VI. The Manner how the Caſtle of Guiſnes was taken by the Engliſh of Calais. VII. King John of France endeavours to recover it in vain. VIII. The Lord Charles of Blois ſet at Liberty upon his Parole. IX. The Lord Guy de Neſle ſlain in Battle by Sr. Walter Bentley. X. The Earl of Stafford created Lieutenant of Gaſcogne, wins a Victory over the French, the Death of Sr. Thomas Wale, Knight of the Garter. XI. King Edward provides for Defence of the Seas; William Earl of Hainalt, Marries the Eldeſt Daughter of Henry Duke of Lancaſter. XII. The Duke of Lancaſter gets Honour of the Duke of Brunſwick. XIII. King Edward prepares to reſiſt the French. XIV. Pope Clement dies, and the Earl of Kent: Two Malefactors beheaded at London. AN. DOM. 1351. An. Regni Angliæ XXV. Franciæ XII.

I. ON the [a] Seventh of February, being the Monday in the Utas of the Purification of our Lady, at the Opening of this Year, King Edward held his High-Court of Parliament at Weſtminſter: Over which at firſt Prince Lionel, the Kings Third Son, was commiſſion'd to preſide, becauſe the King and his Eldeſt Son, Prince Edward, were then preparing to croſs the Seas, thô afterwards that Voyage being defer'd, we ſhall find them both preſent at this Seſſions.

[a] M.S. Record. Parl. p. 71. &c. Sr. Rob. Cotton's Abridgment, p. 73. &c.

Thô

An. Dom. 1351. An. Regni Angliæ XXV. Franciæ XII.

Thô the Parliament began ſo early to ſit, yet by reaſon of ſeveral Continuations from Day to Day, becauſe many of the Lords were not yet come, it was not open'd till Tueſday the 15 of February: At which time Receivers being appointed to gather, and Tryers to conſider of, the ſeveral Petitions from England, Wales, Gaſcogne, Scotland, Ireland, Bretagne, and other Foreign Iſles and Places; the Reaſons for the Calling of the Parliament were declared in Preſence of the King and his Nobles: "As firſt, be- "cauſe the King having in the Twenty ſecond Year of his Reign ſummon'd a Parlia- "ment, was both hindred to continue that Seſſion, and alſo to [b] call them to another "by reaſon of the late dreadfull Plague, untill this time. Alſo, that the Buſineſs of his "Wars required their Concurrence, becauſe the Peace was not punctually obſerved, "and Domeſtick Matters were likewiſe to be taken into Conſideration; for that La- "bourers refuſed to do their Service at reaſonable and uſual Rates; and laſtly, becauſe "the Treaſure of the Realm was exported. For theſe Conſiderations was the Parlia- ment convened, and hereupon to conſult the King did eſpecially command and require them; and Sr. William Shareſhull Knight, the Kings Chief Juſtice repeated the Sub- ſtance of all this to the Commons, willing them to weigh all things well, and provide for them effectually.

[b] From hence it appears, that the Printed Statutes pretended to be made anno 23 Ed. 3. are falſly dated.

The whole Proceſs and Matter following, as it is to be ſeen at large in the Record, was deliver'd by Dr. John Thoresby, Biſhop of [c] Worceſter, then Lord Chancellour, to John Codington Clerk of the Parliament, at the Kings Command to be entred into the Rolls of the ſame Parliament.

[c] Ita emendo Wincheſter in M. S. & Sr. Rob. Cotton, ex Philpots Catal. Chancell.

In this [d] Parliament the old Controverſie between the Archbiſhops of Canterbury and York, concerning Bearing their Croſiers, began to be renew'd with the uſual Heat; but at laſt it was wholly referred to the King's Hearing: Who ſet down this final Rule to be obſerved for the future. "That the Archbiſhop of York might beat his "Croſs in the others Province, ſaving the Preeminence to Canterbury; but that in to- "ken of Subjection, every Archbiſhop of York at his Entrance into that Biſhoprick, "ſhould offer an Image of Gold to the value of Fourty Pounds at the Shrine of Tho- "mas of Canterbury. The ſame Image to be ſent by ſome Knight, or Doctor of the "Law, within the ſpace of two Months after his Inthronization.

[d] Godw. Catal. Bps in Canter. §. 54. l. 14.

In this Parliament Richard Fitz-Alan, the Great Earl of Arundel, by his Petition prayeth, that his Reſtitution granted in the [e] Fourth of Edward the Third, may be now better declared and confirmed: Which the King in Conſideration of the Equity of his Requeſt, and alſo of his many worthy Services done to the Crown, moſt readily granted. Whereupon the ſaid Act made in the Fourth of Edward the Third Tit. 14, touching this Earl was read over, and afterwards this Clauſe thereto adjoyned; "That "it is by the King and Parliament Agreed, that the ſaid Reſtitution be Confirmed, "and ſhall remain of ſuch full Force and Effect; that John now Earl of Kent, and his "Heirs ſhall neither Challenge nor Obtain againſt the ſaid Richard Earl of Arundel in "any Court of England, or in Wales, by Writ or otherwiſe, by any Petition in Parlia- "ment, any of the Poſſeſſions or Titles that the ſaid John, or Edmund his Eldeſt Bro- "ther (long ſince deceaſed) ever had in or to the ſaid Caſtle of Arundel, or of any "Part or Parcel thereof. So as by this Reſtitution the ſaid Earl Richard ſhall have the "like Eſtate and Title, as he ſhould have had by Deſcent of Inheritance, as well to all "other Hereditaments, whereof Edmund Earl of Arundel, his Father died ſeiſed, ei- "ther in England or in Wales, as of the ſaid Caſtle.

[e] Vid. Lib. 1. c. 3. §. 6. p. 52. & 53.

As for this Earl of Arundel here ſpoken of, his Cauſe as well as his Valour is ſufficiently declared in the former Part of this our Hiſtory; but for this Earl John we ſhall now once for all add ſomewhat of him, becauſe the ſmall Age to which he attained, rendred him unable to purchaſe any higher Character in this Work. He was Second Son to Edmund Plantaginet, Earl of Kent, the Kings Uncle, of whoſe Death [f] we ſpake in the Fourth Year: Yet he made no Proof of his Age till this very [g] Year, when upon his Homage, he had Livery of all his Lands, his Mother the Lady Margaret being then alſo dead. And at that time he granted unto King Edward the Third, and his Heirs Kings of England, the Caſtle and whole Lordſhip of Lydel (as well within the Precincts of England as Scotland) after the Deceaſe of Blanche, Relict of Thomas Lord Wake, which Caſtle and Lordſhip came to him in Right of the Lady Margaret his Mother, Siſter and Heir to the ſaid Lord Wake of Lydel. But this hopefull young Prince, having juſt married Elizabeth, Daughter to William Marqueſs of Juliers, departed this Life without Iſſue the Year next following, in the Prime of his Youth, leaving all his vaſt Poſſeſſions to his Siſter and Heir the Lady Joan, commonly called the Fair Maid of Kent, firſt Eſpouſed to William Montagu, ſecond Earl of Salisbury of that Name, [f] Lib. 1. c. 3. §. 3. p. 38. ad p. 42.

[g] Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 94. b.

at

at this time the Wife of Thomas Lord Holland, in her Right afterwards Earl of Kent. But to return to the Tranſactions of this Parliament. AN. DOM. 1351.

King Edward during this Seſſion, beſtow'd ſeveral great Honours on Sundry of his Martial Nobility: As particularly his Valiant Coſen, Henry Plantagenet Earl of Lancaſter, Leiceſter, Lincoln, Darby, Groſmont and Ferrers, him on the [h] Sixth of March he advanced to the Title and Dignity of Duke of Lancaſter. Which being done by the General Conſent of all the Prelates and Peers then ſitting in Parliament, and Confirmed unto him for his Life; he was inveſted therewith by the Cincture of a Sword, with Power to have a Chancery in the County of Lancaſter, and there to iſſue out Writs under his own Seal, as well touching Pleas of the Crown, as others relating to the Common Laws of this Realm: As alſo to enjoy all other Liberties and Regalities, belonging to a County-Palatine, in as ample Manner as the Earl of Cheſter was known to have within that County; the Tenths * and Fifteenths, and all other Payments granted by the Clergy or Canons, and Pardons for Life and Members to the King, excepted. Thus the Black-Prince, who was Duke of Cornwall and Earl of Cheſter, and Henry Plantagenet Duke of Lancaſter, being the two firſt Dukes in England ſince the Conqueſt, by the Grandeur of their Names, as well as Birth and Dignity, did ſeem the Worthieſt of all Men to be ſo. Duke Henry was yet [i] further about the ſame time conſtituted Admiral of the Kings whole Fleet from the River Thames Weſtward: And two Days after the King aſſigned him ſeveral Lieutenants, namely Reginald Ferrers, on the Rivers of Thames and Medway; Robert Ledred Serjeant at Arms within the Cinque-ports, Philip de Wetton, and Walter de Harewell Serjeant at Arms in the Port of Seaford, and in every Part and Place thence by the Sea-coaſt to Foye; Richard Lengles in the Port of Foye, and thence to Briſtow, and there and in the Port of Chepſtow and River of Severn; and Ralph de Lullibrock in all Places and Ports from Chepſtow to Cheſter, and there, and in all Parts and Maritime Places in Wales.

[h] Aſhmoles Garter p.682. Dudg. Bar. 1 Vol. p.786. Stow p.251. & M.S. Vet. Ang. in Bib. C.C.C. Cantabr. c.224.

[*] Aſhmole ibid.

[i] 8 Martii Rot. Franc. 25. Ed. 3. m.15. & Aſhmole p.682.

Mr. Stow [k] ſays, that at this time Prince Lionel of Antwerp, the Kings Son, was made Earl of Ulſter in Ireland, and John of Gaunt, his Younger Brother, Earl of Richmond, but the Former had not that Title till [l] Ten Years after, at what time he took to Wife the Heireſs of Ulſter; and the Latter had his Nine Years before, as appears by the [m] Records. So Knighton [n] tells us, that the Lord Robert Hufford was now made Earl of Suffolk, whereas he had been advanced to that Dignity no leſs than [o] fourteen Years before.

[k] Stow Chron. p.251.

[l] Dugd. 2 Vol. p.167, &c.

[m] Cart. 16 Ed. 3. n.2.

[n] Knighton p. 2602.

[o] Dugd. 2 Vol. p.47.

But the Lord Ralph [p] Stafford was at this time advanced to the Title of Earl of Stafford, and for his better Support in that Dignity, the King granted him a 1000 Marks per annum in Fee, untill he ſhould provide Lands of that Value to ſettle on Him and his Heirs. In this Parliament alſo the Lord John Maltravers ſenior, one who was thought to have had an hand in the Murder of King Edward the Second, having as we ſhew'd [q] ſix Years before, ſurrendred himſelf with great Contrition to the King, was now [r] by the Judgment of the Parliament acquitted, and by his Majeſty thereupon fully pardoned, reſtored and admitted to take Place in that Honourable Convention.

[p] Dugd. 1 Vol. p.160. ex Cart. 25 Ed. 3. m.25. Martii 5.

[q] L.1.c.24.§.4.

[r] Dugd. 2 Vol. p.102.

In [s] Conſideration of the great Dearth, of which yet the Land was not wholly freed, the King releaſeth one Half of his Proviſion, appointed to be taken up by Purveyors. And Remedy was likewiſe taken againſt Labourers, who required Exceſſive Wages, as we partly intimated before; as alſo againſt the Pope's Reſervations, and thoſe who being caſt in the Kings Court, ſeek redreſs from the Court of Rome, to the Subverſion of the Laws of the Realm. Then the Commons petition'd, That no Man may be put to anſwer, in what concerns his Freehold or whatever toucheth Life, Limb or Fine, by his Oppoſite before the Council, but by due Proceſs of Law. To this the King, as to what concerned the Freehold, agreed, but for the reſt rejected it in the uſual Form ſaying, Le Royſe adviſera. That no Man whatſoever but Merchants only, for their great Neceſſity of Traffick, ſhould export the Good Money of the Realm. The King anſwer'd as before, that he would be adviſed. That the Fines of Labourers may be paid to the chief Taxors of this Fifteen in Aid of the Poor. The King replyed, the Surpluſage thereof ſhould be employed according as Circumſtances hereafter ſhall moſt require. That the Steward, and Marſhal, and their Deputies do make no other Proceſs than was uſed in the Time of King Edward the Second, and limited by the Statute therefore provided. The King willeth that the Statutes be kept, and all juſt Complainants heard. That no Purveyance be made for Hay or Oates for Horſes. The Statute ſhall be obſerved. That the Payment of Merchants for Wafting over their Goods may ceaſe. The King will be adviſed. "It ſeems, that it appear'd highly reaſonable "to that Wiſe Prince by this his Anſwer to this laſt Petition, that ſuch Payment

[s] M.S. Rot. Par. p.72. §.11. & Sr. Rob. Cotton's Abridgment p. 74. §.11. &c. ad hunc annum.

An. Dom. 1351. An. Regni Angliæ XXV. Franciæ XII.

"ought to be exacted: It being but equitable, that thoſe Tradeſmen or Merchants, "for whoſe benefit and ſecurity the King at his vaſt Expence, doth more eſpecially "maintain the Dominion of the Seas, ſhould by a proportionable Cuſtom on thoſe "Goods ſo exported, contribute towards the better enabling him to defend and ſecure "them in that their Traffick: And this Payment was called Tonnage and Poundage. Further the Commons petition, That the Subſidy of Wooll, viz. of every Sack may ceaſe. But becauſe that Subſidy had been granted unto the King for a longer time, that Petition fell. Then to the requeſt, That Sheriffs, Eſcheators, and Coroners may have ſufficient Allowance in their ſeveral Counties; it was anſwer'd, that the Statute made for that Purpoſe ſhould be kept. That Remedy may be had againſt Sheriffs for Paying the Kings Duties. The Treaſurer upon Complaint ſhall pay the ſame. That every Judgment in the Common Pleas may paſs under the Seal of the Chief Juſtice, as in Caſes of Oyer; ſo that the Charges of the Great Seal may ceaſe. This Motion ſeems unreaſonable. That no Pardon be granted to any Murtherer or Felon, but where the King may ſave his Oath. This the King freely granteth. That the Fines of Chancery Writs may be abated. The King willeth, that the Chancellour conſider the Quality and Degree of every Perſon. That no Purveyor of Timber do take away Trees about any Mans Houſe, and that henceforward Exception be made as to that Point in all their Commiſſions. This the King granteth. That no Writ de Excommunicato Capiendo come forth before a Scire Facias be directed, to cauſe the Party to anſwer: And that the Party may anſwer to the Cauſe after Letters of Excommunication. To theſe two Petitions this one Anſwer was given, that it could not be granted. That the Merchants may be paid their Loans in every Sack of Wooll. Walter de Chirton, the Kings Farmer of his Cuſtoms hath not yet brought in his Accounts.

It is Enacted, That the Statute of Weſtminſter made againſt the Deſtruction of Salmons be obſerved, and that all Mills ſet on Rivers be thrown down.

It is Enacted, that the Juſtices of Oyer and Terminer ſhall ſeiſe, and take the Fines of the Parties in their Preſence, and by their own Accord: And that no Pardon ſhall be granted to ſuch as bring in Falſe Money.

That Remedy may be had againſt the Oppreſſion of Ordinaries and their Officers. The Laws of the Land and of the Church ſhall be obſerved. It is complained, That the Cuſtom for every 300 of Wooll-Fells was 46 s. and 8 d. whereas of old it was but 3 s. and 4 d. for every 100, that is 10 s. for every 300. The preſent Cuſtom being of long time received and eſtabliſhed, ought not to be withdrawn. That a Standard of all Sorts of Meaſures may be in every County. If there be not, there ſhall be. That no Statute be alter'd for any Private Cauſe. Let this Petition be better explain'd againſt the next Parliament.

Now it is to be obſerved, that the Printed Statutes touching thoſe that are born beyond the Seas, and that touching the Meaſure and Content of Woollen Cloths, Chapter 1. As alſo that of Merchandiſes to be ſold by Strangers, Chap. 2. Together with that of Foreſtalling, Chap. 3. And that for pulling down Mills ſet upon Rivers, Chap. 4. agree all with the Record: But only the Four latter in the Print are ſaid to be made at the Utas of St. Hilary an. 25. Ed. 3. Whereas it ſhould be the Utas of the Purification, as appears from the Record. So alſo the Act of Proviſions made againſt the Pope's unjuſt Encroachments, agreeth with the Print, Chap. 1. & 2. As alſo that about Labourers, Chap. 8. In dorſo hujus Rotuli is contained a Proclamation againſt Wearing of Arms, and againſt Players and Games, in and about Weſtminſter, during the Seſſions of Parliament; and the Writ alſo of Proclamation for the True Making of Woollen Cloth is endorſed.

[t] Mezeray ad hunc annum.

II. This [t] mean while the Truce with France not being fully ended, however each party took the Liberty, as they ſaw Advantage, to enterprize ſomewhat upon one another. Sr. John Beauchamp, Captain of Calais for King Edward, underſtanding, that the ways thereabout were much infeſted by the French, even as if it had been in time of open War, [u] went forth of the Garriſon with 300 Men of Arms, and 200 Archers on Horſeback, and took up booty about in the Country for 10 Leagues together: But in his Return he was encountred by the Lord of Beaulieu with a Brigade of 2000, which Lord notwithſtanding he ſlew, and had doubtleſs routed all his Company; but that before he had compleated the Victory, another ſtrong party came upon him; ſo that he himſelf, and 20 more Knights of England were taken Priſoners, almoſt all the reſt of his Men being ſlain: But Sr. John and his Fellow-Priſoners were ſoon redeemed, and ſent into England.

[u] Knighton p. 2602.

[x] Stow p. 251. [y] Vid Aſhmole p. 683. ex Rot. Franc. 32 Ed. 3. m. 8.

He was [x] ſucceeded by Sr. Robert [y] Herle, who being recruited with a Choice Band lead

lead by the Lord Walter Manny, rode forth for all that into the French Pale, and having done much damage about in the vicinage, came off not only without loſs, but with a vaſt booty of Oxen, Sheep, and Swine; ſo that a fat Ox at Calais would hardly yield ſixteen pence Sterling, there was at that time ſuch exceeding plenty of Cattle. But about Eaſter [z] King Edward ſent over Henry then newly-created Duke of Lancaſter, who ſoon after marching forth of Calais, went along by the Sea-Coaſts of Artois and Picardy, and burnt the ſuburbs of Boulogne to the very Walls: He made an Aſſault alſo upon the Town it ſelf, but could not prevail, becauſe the Scaling Ladders which he brought with him, were too ſhort. However he fired all the Veſſels in the Haven, and then proceeded along down to Eſtaples on the River Canche, which having plunder'd, he took a Compaſs to return backward on the Right Hand, and did the like to Fauquenberge, and after that to Terouënne, only here many of his Men were hurt by the Townſmen, who fled into the Church, and thence made ſtout reſiſtance, till that alſo was taken, and the Frenchmen for the moſt part put to the Sword. In the Havens of theſe Towns he fired above an Hundred Veſſels of all ſorts, and then went on burning all about up to Arques, and the Gates of St. Omers, and having ſufficiently made known the Terror of his Arms, he return'd Triumphantly with many Priſoners and much Booty to Calais. But ſoon after the occaſions of the late Breach between the two Kings were fully concerted, and a further Truce was taken [a] with this condition, that either of the Kings might renounce it, when ever he pleaſed.

AN. DOM. 1351. An. Regni Angliæ XXV. Franciæ XII.

[z] Knighton p. 2602. n. 48. & Stow p. 251. n. 40. Paſcha contigit 17 April. hoc anno. Lit. Dom. B.

[a] Knighton p. 2603. n. 4.

III. The ſame Yeart [b] the Spaniſh Ships had liberty to come to England, by Reaſon of a Peace eſtabliſhed with that Kingdom, whereas the Year before there was an Imbargo ſet upon them, becauſe of the late Breach: But now a Truce was taken between the two Crowns for twenty Years, before which time we ſhall find Don Pedro of Spain to ſtand greatly in need of Englands Friendſhip: Whereas the foremention'd Truce with France was prolonged but for one Year further, and yet did it hardly endure ſo long, as we ſhall ſhew by and by. However now both the Kings ſeem'd in good earneſt to endeavour a final Peace, [c] and ſent their Commiſſioners for that purpoſe to Avignon, to conclude and perfect the Agreement on theſe Conditions, "That King Edward ſhould "wholly lay aſide his Title and Claim to the Crown of France, and King John ſhould "entirely yield up to him all the Dutchy of Guienne with the Dependencies, and "whatever was at any time before taken therefrom by his Progenitors, and that King "Edward and his Heirs, Kings of England, ſhould freely hold and poſſeſs the ſame, "without acknowledging, owing, or paying any Homage therefore to any French King, "from that day unto the Worlds end. But the Concluſion of this Matter was ſo long put off and delay'd by the Pope, and ſuch demurrs, and other Artifices, uſual in the Court of Rome, laid in the way; that the Duke of Lancaſter with the reſt of the Engliſh Commiſſioners, being wearied by thoſe tedious tergiverſations, returned back to their Maſter, without bringing the ſaid Agreement to any happy Concluſion. But [d] ſome ſay this Treaty was hindred by an occaſion given by the Engliſh, who took the Caſtle of Guiſnes by Treachery, of which we ſhall ſpeak preſently: However King Edward hereupon prepared for War, reſolving to take the Field early next Year, as ſoon as the Truce ſhould be expired.

[b] Stow p. 251.

[c] Fabian p. 228. & Odor. Rainald. ad hunc ann. §. 37.

[d] Odor. Rainald. ad hunc ann. Mezeray, &c.

But upon the firſt of April, before the laſt Truce was renewed for another Year, the Lord Guy [e] de Neſle, Marſhal of France, went in Hoſtile Manner with a great number of Men of Arms, ſpoiling and ravaging about in Xaintogne, and near St. Jean D' Angely, but was at laſt met with by Sr. Walter Bentley, who together with Edmund Rous a Norfolk-Man, and Captain of the Caſtle of St. Jean D' Angely, making in all but 600 Men, encountred him Valiantly, and had ſuch Succeſs, that he ſlew and routed the whole Body of them, took Sr. Guy de Neſle himſelf, and Sr. Arnold D' Endreghan, together with the Lord William de Neſle, the Marſhals Brother, and ſix other Knights of Quality, and of Eſquires and Gentlemen 140 Priſoners. But yet [f] in the September following, the Frenchmen recover'd the Town and Caſtle of St. Jean D' Angely, after it had been in the Engliſhmens Poſſeſſion 5 Years, without one ſtroke given or taken: For the Garriſon being left low, and without Proviſion, was fain to yield up the Place on Equal Conditions, becauſe they had not wherewithall to live on.

[e] Froiſ. c. 153. Mezeray ad hunc annum, & Stow p. 251. ubi tamen 23. April, & Fox Acts & Mon. p. 507.

[f] Froiſ. c. 153.

IV. While thus matters were held in ſuſpence between England and France, and hot War [g] raged between Caſimire King of Poland, and the Lithuanians, and Tartars on one hand, and the Chriſtian States of Venice and Genoa tore out one anothers Bowels on the other; and the King of Armenia's Territories were ſnatch'd away from him piece-meal by the Infidels; the [h] Heathen Governour of Damaſcus, with a design to render the Christians under him odious, and so to fill his Coffers with their substance, perpetrated a most cruel and Nero-like Action this Year. For having himself caused the said City to be secretly fired in two several places, he presently hurried away the Christians to the Rack, as the only Authors thereof. Some of these, being rendred impatient by the exquisiteness of the torments, confessed themselves guilty: Whereupon immediately he condemns them all to die, except such as would embrace Mahometanisme. Most of them by large gifts appeas'd the Tyrants fury, others unhappily renounced the Christian Faith: But there remain'd two and twenty, who refusing to do either, were condemned to be Crucified. However, first the Tyrant commanded them to be brought before their Friends, Parents, and Children, that so he might shake their Constancy: But the Divine Grace did so powerfully assist them at that time, that the Father, who was to die, despis'd the Prayers and Tears of his own Son, who entreated him to live, and the Faithfull Son upbraided his Apostate Father of wicked Inconstancy, to forsake the True Religion for fear of Corporal punishment, and call'd him his worst Enemy, in that by tempting him with the transitory joys of this Life, he endeavour'd to deprive him of the Rewards of Eternity. Being therefore all hung upon the Cross for three days, they were beheld both by Christians and Saracens to die a notable Example of Religious Constancy. But the Tyrant had but a short Triumph for this his exploit: For soon after the Innocence of the Christians, as to the burning of the City, being made manifest, by the Soldan's Command he was put to Death after this Manner. A Great-broad Anvil of Iron being ready prepared as red-hot as possible, the Malefactor was brought near, stark-naked from his Privy-parts upwards; then two strong Men took and twisted a Towel below his Ribs, and above his Hips round his Belly, pulling and twisting, till by degrees they had rendred him thereabout little more than a span round: At which time the Executioner cutting him off with a sword at one Blow just above the Towel, this Body was immediately set upon the glowing Anvil; So that the Blood and Life together was held in, till the Anvil growing colder, the Body fell off being seised by Death. With such signal severity can it please God to Revenge the Blood of his Saints, even by the hands of the Blasphemers of his Name.

[g] Vid. Odor. Rainald. ad hunc ann. §. 22. &c.

[h] Ibidem §. 25.

An. Dom. 1351. An. Regni Angliæ XXV. Franciæ XII.

[i] Favine's Theatre L' Honneur *l.*3. *c.*2. p. 346.
[k] Mezeray ad hunc annum.

V. This Year [i] on the 8 day of September, or the Nativity of the Blessed Virgin Mary, King John of France, that in Magnificence he might not come behind King Edward of England, who had lately instituted the Order of the Garter, did also [k] institute, or rather renew, the almost obsolete Order of the Star at a most Royal Assembly, which he held at his Palace of St. Ouyn, near Paris. The Knights Companions at this time were but Eighteen, (others being to be added at the following Chapters) whose Names were these:

[i] Favine's Theatre L' Honneur *l.*3. *c.*2. p. 346.

1 [i] JOHN de Valois King of France, the Sovereign.
2 Monsieur Philip Duke of Orleans, his only Brother.
3 Charles of France, Dauphin of Vienna. } King John's Sons.
4 Lewis, Duke of Anjou.
5 John Duke of Berry,
6 Philip Duke of Touraine.
7 Charles King of Navarre.
8 Peter, Duke of Bourbon. } Brethren.
9 James of Bourbon, Count de la Marche.
10 Charles de la Cerda of Spain, Earl of Angoulesme.
11 Arnold D' Endreghan. } Marshals of France.
12 John de Clermont.
13 Geoffry Count Charny, Great Chamberlain of France.
14 Charles, Earl of Tancarville.
15 Walter de Brenne, Duke of Athens, Master of the Horse.
16 John of Artois, Earl of Eu. } Sons to Sr. Robert of Artois.
17 Charles of Artois, Count Longeville.
18 John Viscount de Melun.

These Knights Brethren bore for their Cognisance a Bright Star on the Crest of their Helmets, and about their Necks pendant, the same being embroider'd on their Mantles before. Altho their first Institution happen'd in the Month of October, yet the time of holding their Chapters, was [m] the Day of the Three Kings of Colen, from the first Original; and therefore the Star which directed those Kings, was chosen for the [m] 6 Jan. i.e. Epiphany.

the Emblem of the Order. However this Inſtitution was not founded under the Aſpect of any good Star: For Charles V. Son to this King John, when he ſaw the Order brought into Contempt by the Multitude of Companions, left it wholly to the Captain of the Ordinary Watch at Paris, and to the Archers of his Guard. But I refer the Curious to Favine, where they may find a more full and exact Account of theſe Matters.

AN. DOM. 1351. An. Regni Angliæ XXV. Franciæ XII.

VI. At the Solemnity of the Inſtitution of this Order of Knighthood, among others, was preſent Sr. Matthew Bouginghem, whom King John had made Captain of the ſtrong Caſtle of Guiſnes, near Calais: And he now in his abſence had committed it to the Care of Sr. William Beauconroy. But however the Engliſh of Calais, who neglected no opportunity, [n] made themſelves Maſters of this important place, during the foreſaid Solemnity, having by Money corrupted the Faith of Sr. William Beauconroy, the Vice-Captain, who, as the French Authors relate, being ſhortly after taken at Amiens, was torn in pieces with Wild-Horſes. Upon this ſurprize of the Caſtle of Guiſnes in time of Truce, King John expoſtulated by his Ambaſſadors with King Edward, that it was an apparent breach on his ſide, but he, who knew the Importance of the Place, is ſaid to have anſwer'd pleaſantly, "That buying and ſelling was Lawfull in time of Truce, "and that King Philip his Father, who atttempted to purchaſe Calais in that Manner, "thô he was taken tardy, had taught his Captains that way of Merchandiſe. But there is another manner of the taking of this Place reported, which becauſe of its intreague, as well as probability, I ſhall add hereunto, thô it be ſomething prolix in the Relation.

[n] Froiſ. c. 153. Mezeray ad hunc annum, Fabian p. 229.

Guiſnes is about [o] five Miles from Calais, almoſt equally between Hames and Fiennes, the Town thereof being of no great ſtrength, for it was only encompaſſed with a large and deep Trench, without any Walls or Bullwarks: But the Caſtle was well fortified with ſtrong and maſſy Baſtions, having alſo an High and Mighty Tower of the old ſort of Fortification, but of great ſtrength, called in Engliſh the Keep. This [p] Fortreſs was a grievous check and Eyeſore to the Engliſh of Calais, becauſe being ſet as a ſtop to thoſe, who went into the higher Country to France-ward, it mightily ſecured thoſe parts from the foragers of Calais. At this time the French were very buſie, either in repairing it, or adding new Fortifications unto it, whereat the Caliſians were preſently alarum'd, and buſied their thoughts with Deſigns, how to hinder this Work, which was ſo directly intended to their perpetual hindrance. Now there was a Priſoner in Guiſnes, an Engliſh Archer, named John Lancaſter, who being taken ſome while before, and not having wherewithall to pay his Ranſom, was now let looſe, on condition to work for ſuch a time with the Frenchmen in the Garriſon. This fellow chanced to fall into familiarity with a wanton young Laundreſs, a Strumpet, of whom he learn'd, that beyond the Principal Ditch there ran a Wall of two foot broad, extending from the Rampires to the brim of the Ditch, under water; ſo that being cover'd it was not eaſily diſcernable: But yet neither was it ſo deep drown'd; but that a Man walking thereon might paſs ſecurely, being only up to the Knees, and that being made for the uſe of Fiſhers, it was diſcontinued in the midſt for the ſpace of two foot only. Now the Archer being directed by the Wench, took ſpecial notice of this Place, and afterwards found an opportunity to take the heighth of the Caſtle-Wall by a Line. Which things being thus prepared, he adventur'd one Morning early to ſlide down from the Wall, and paſſing forthwith over the Water by that hidden ledge of Brick, abſconding in the Mariſh-grounds till the Evening, at Night he went into the Engliſh Pale, and drew near Calais. Here he waited till clear day (for it was not Lawfull for any to enter otherwiſe) and then went into the Town, where falling in Communication with ſome of his old Acquaintance, and others, who were willing to venture hard in hopes of Prey, and to purchaſe to their Country a place of that Moment, he inſtructed them all, how to paſs the Ditch, and ſcale, and win the Caſtle with eaſe. Whereupon Thirty ſtout fellows conſpired together, and having made Ladders according to the Length appointed them by the Archer, and put on black Armour, for fear of reflecting any Light, they all went forward together by the Guiding of the ſaid John Lancaſter, and paſſing the Ditch ſafely, and climing the Walls ſucceſsfully, they ſurprized the Watchmen, cut their throats, and tumbled them down over the Wall: Then going ſoftly into the Great Hall, they ſlew many of the chief Officers, whom they found unarmed, playing at Cheſs and Hazard. After this they brake into the ſeveral Chambers and Turrets, upon the Knights and Ladies, that lay there aſleep, whom they only ſeiſed, and bound, and ſo preſently became Maſters of all that was within. Hereupon having lock'd up all their Priſoners bound and unarmed in a ſtrong Room, they went and releaſed the Engliſh Priſoners, that had been taken the Year before, and made made them Keepers over thoſe, who kept them before. Thus at laſt the whole Caſtle was reduced into their power, thoſe in the Town knowing nothing of what had happen'd all this while. In the Morning the Engliſh commanded the Workmen, who came to work without the Caſtle, to leave off their Work; who thereupon perceiving the Caſtle to be won, fled away, carrying the News with them wherever they went. Theſe new Lords however were ſo Civil, as immediately to give the Ladies within the Caſtle leave to depart whither they pleaſed on Horſeback, together with their Apparel, Writings, and Muniments, where they ought to hold their Fees.

[o] Captain George Ferrers Hiſt. of Queen Mary apud Grafton p. 1357, &c.

[p] Stow p. 252. Matth. Villani l. 3. c. 23. & Froiſ. c. 153.

An. Dom. 1351. An. Regni Angliæ XXV. Franciæ XII.

That ſame Day there came from Calais to their Aſſiſtance, as many as they ſent for, by whoſe Aid they were now able to keep the Caſtle againſt Competent Forces. About Three of the Clock the ſame Day there came thither two Knights from the Lord Walter de Brenne Duke of Athens and (in Right [q] of his Wife Jane, Daughter to Ralph late Earl of Eu and Guiſnes) Earl of Guiſnes, who demanding a Truce, deſired to know of thoſe within the Caſtle, who they were, to whom they belonged; and by whoſe Authority they kept the Caſtle ſo taken in the time of Truce? To theſe Demands they within anſwer'd, That being thus intruded they would not declare to any Man their Deſign, till they had tried a longer Poſſeſſion. The Earl of Guiſnes being thus ſham'd off, ſent on St. Maurice's Day, being the 22d of September, Meſſengers into England, complaining how in prejudice of the Truce the ſaid Caſtle was unjuſtly taken, and therefore by right of mutual Faith and Honour ought to be reſtored unto the true Owner. King Edward anſwer'd, "That what was done was neither with his "Knowledge nor Conſent: Wherefore he would ſend his Command, that none of his "Subjects preſume any longer to detain the Caſtle of Guiſnes, but immediately on "ſight of his Letters to reſtore it entirely to the Lord thereof. The Meſſengers being return'd with this Anſwer to the Earl of Guiſnes, he preſently went to the Caſtle, demanding of thoſe within, as at other times, in whoſe Name, and by whoſe Authority they held that Place. They ſtill affirming, that they held it in the Name and Behalf of John Lancaſter; the Earl required to know, if the ſaid John were the King of Englands Liegeman, and would obey him or no. Then John anſwer'd himſelf, "That as for his part he knew not what Meſſengers had been in England, nor what "Miſchief might be brew'd for him; wherefore while he was ſecure, he reſolved to "keep himſelf ſo, maugre all their ſubtle Devices. At that the Earl offer'd unto the ſaid John Lancaſter 40000 Crowns, or other Poſſeſſions in Exchange, and an Indemnity from the King of France for ever. To which he received this Anſwer, "That "before the Taking of that Caſtle they were all good Subjects of England, but now "by this their Offence againſt the Truce, and other their Demerits, no better than baniſhed Men, and excluded from the Peace of their Lord King Edward: Wherefore "the Place, which now they held, they would willingly ſell or exchange, but to none "ſooner, than to their Natural Lord the King of England, to whom they would rather "ſell that Caſtle, thereby to obtain a Pardon: But if he ſhould refuſe to buy it, then "they would ſell it to the French King or to Him, that would offer moſt for it. The Earl being thus mocked went away, and the King of England ſoon after bought it indeed, giving unto John Lancaſter and his Fellow-Adventurers a Competent Summ, which they demanded, and alſo their Pardon for Refuſing to obey his Letters ſo wiſely to his Advantage. For it was a place always much deſired by King Edward, as the beſt Neighbour to Calais, if in his hands, and the worſt if not.

[q] L. 2. c. 10. §. 7. p. 454.

VII. Hereupon King John charging him with Breaking the Truce, he replied as we intimated before, "That there was no one Article in the Truce, which prohibiteth "Trafficking together, or the Entercourſe of Buying and Selling. Theſe are the two Accounts of the Taking of this ſtrong Fortreſs, either of which the Reader may prefer at his Diſcretion; tho indeed the French Writers do moſtly agree, that it was ſold by a Frenchman, the Captain thereof, who afterwards received the Reward of his Treaſon.

[r] Stow p. 253.

However when King John and his Council ſaw, [r] that by no means they could prevail to have it reſtored, they adviſed to build another like unto it, for a Bridle to that, and a Defence of the Country thereabouts, and accordingly they ſent the Lord Geoffry Charny, ſomewhile ſince redeemed out of England, with Authority to build and fortifie, as preſently we ſhall declare.

Now as you travel from Guiſnes to Calais, there was then to be ſeen on your Left hand, almoſt within Shot of the Town of Guiſnes, a Monaſtery called la Baſtie, of good ſtrong Building, but decayed with Age, wherein was a Church, certain Nuns reſiding there at that time; upon which Account the Engliſh had hitherto ſpared it in Devotion. This place

place might eaſily be made Defenſible, for it had very high Walls like a Caſtle, and a large and ſtrong Steeple for a Tower; and lying in a Mariſh Ground, might with ſmall Labour be environ'd with a Ditch of great Depth and Breadth. Wherefore about [t] Whitſuntide Sr. Geoffry Charny aforeſaid came with 20000 Men, and began to lay Siege to Guiſnes, at the ſame time turning the Nuns away, and making a Caſtle of the Church, and fencing the Walls with a Ditch and Rampire. For at that time of the Year, the Waters being very low, his Men were at liberty to work more freely in the Mariſh. Now the Engliſh in Guiſnes being thus beſieged, were not able to go abroad, but in their Boats, becauſe the Ditches were full of Water, and the Mariſh unpaſſable, and all the uſual Avenues ſtopt up by the French: Neither were the Caliſians as yet able to Victual them for the ſame Reaſons; and eſpecially becauſe of the Siege, and the ſtrong Army at la Baſtie. Yet often the Beſieged would appear before the Town with their Arrows and Warlike Engines, playing upon the Beſiegers; but they did no great Execution, the Aim being uncertain at that diſtance, and the Reach for the moſt part too ſhort. However one Day by ſecret Appointment, the Caliſians being joyn'd with thoſe of Oye, Marque and Hames on the one hand, and thoſe of the Garriſon of Guiſnes on the other, ſet all together at one time upon their Enemies unawares with much Bravery, and took ſome, ſlew many and chaſed more; ſo that the Siege being wholly raiſed, they all together ſet upon la Baſtie, burnt it up, diſmantled it of its Walls, and levell'd all to the Ground. And thus was Guiſnes ſecured to the Engliſh; thô the French made huge Clamours thereupon, how the Truce was firſt broken by the Engliſh.

AN. DOM. 1352. An. Regni Angliæ XXVI. Franciæ XIII.

[t] Penteco'te hoc anno 27 Maii contigit, Paſcha 8 April. Lit. Dom. AG.

VIII. This ſame Whitſuntide King Edward kept in great Splendor at Weſtminſter, being accompanied with the Chief of his Nobility, and thoſe of France and Scotland, that were Priſoners: During which [t] Solemnity the Lord Edmund, younger Brother to Richard Fitz-Alan Earl of Arundel, was Knighted by the King, together with 300 more young Gentlemen. At which time [u] alſo the Lord Charles of Blois, who had been Priſoner in England above four Years, by means of Queen Philippa, whoſe Kinſman he was, obtained leave to go into France to procure his Ranſom, his two Sons Sr. John and Sr. Guy remaining ſtill behind, as Hoſtages for the Payment; he being by Oath obliged not to bear Arms againſt England, till he had paid the Money. Thô one [x] ſays, that having obtain'd Leave upon Security given, to divert himſelf in the Iſland of Jarſey, when by walking about frequently, he had ſufficiently obſerved the Weakneſs of the Country, he came ſome Months afterwards ſuddenly upon them with 300 Men of Arms, and put all he found to the Sword, like a perfidious and Diſloyal Knight, and ſo took poſſeſſion of the Place himſelf.

[t] Catal. Nobil. by Tho. Mills p. 649.

[u] Knighton p. 2607. n. 27. & Mezeray p. 39. Tom. 3. par. 2.

[x] Knighton p. 2607.

IX. The Lord Guy de Neſle Marſhal of France, being now at Liberty again, to repair the Loſs he ſuffer'd in April, raiſes a conſiderable Army in Bretagne, where about the Middle of Auguſt (viz. on the 15 Day) 1352, [y] he was again valiantly encountred by Sr. Walter Bentley, Sr. Robert Knolles, and other Engliſh Captains near Mauron between Rennes and Ploermel: Where after a long and doubtfull Fight, the Engliſh being but 300 Men of Arms, and 600 Archers, the Frenchmen, thô above Four times their Number, were utterly diſcomfited, ſlain and taken. For there fell Guy of Neſle himſelf; who was Lord of Oyſemont and Marſhal of France, together with the Lord of St. Quintin, the Lord of Briquebec, the Lord of Courtenay, the Chaſtellain of Beauvais, the Lord of Rugemont, the Lord of Montauban, the Lord de l' Aunay, the Lord of Mont de Bayeux, the Lord de L' Aigle, the Lord de Villebon, the Lord de la Marche, the Lord de le Chaſtelet, Thirteen Lords in all, beſides an 140 Knights, and of Batchelours 500, whoſe Coat Armours were brought away: But the Common-Souldiers were not numbred. There were alſo taken Priſoners the Lord of Bruſebeque, Son of the Lord Bertram, Sr. Triſtram de Morlaix, the Lord of Maleſtroit, the Viſcount of Cominges, Sr. Geoffry de Gray, Sr. William de la Val, Sr. Charles Darcheville, Sr. John de Brou, and other Lords and Knights Batchelours, to the number of 130. This Army of the French and Bretons, under the Conduct of the ſaid Marſhal, had been ſo order'd by him, that having a ſteep Mountain behind at their Backs, they might be enforced to ſtand to it reſolutely by deſpairing to fly. One [z] ſays, that no leſs than 45 Knights of the Star were ſlain in this Battle; but the Number of thoſe Knights, who were created the laſt Year being but 18, 'tis hardly credible, that already the Order ſhould be ſo mightily overſtockt; wherefore we paſs this by as an Errour. However there were many Valiant and Noble Leaders on the French Part, and their Array was ſo dreadfull, that it diſmayed the Hearts of ſeveral Engliſhmen, ſo that they began to flee: But the Couragious Sr. Walter Bentley, Lieutenant of Bretagne at that time for the King of England, would would not flinch a Foot, but oppos'd good Conduct and indefatigable Reſolution to the fury of his Enemies, till after a bloody Fight (wherein hardly one of the Engliſh eſcaped unhurt, and Sr. Walter himſelf was grievouſly, thô not mortally wounded) by the Grace of God he obtain'd a famous Victory. After which in a Court Martial he condemned thirty Archers to be hang'd, becauſe they forſook him and fled in the Heat of Battle, to the hazard of all his Company. This was a conſiderable Blow to France, and a Loſs not in many Years to be repaired; althô in the room of Guy de Neſle there ſucceeded the Lord of Beaujeu, a moſt Worthy Captain, in the Office of Marſhal of France.

[y] Froiſ. c. 153. Gagu'n p. 143. Walſingh. hiſt. p. 161. Fabian p. 229. Stow p. 253.

[z] Stow ibid.

An. Dom. 1352. An. Regni Angliæ XXVI. Franciæ XIII.

[a] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 160. ex Record.

X. As for the Affairs of Gaſcogne, King Edward at this time [a] conſtituted the Lord Ralph Earl of Stafford his Lieutenant, and Captain General in thoſe parts, with ſpecial Commiſſion to Treat with any perſons of what Nation ſoever, upon terms of yielding aid to the King, and receiving mutual aſſiſtance from him. In which ſervice of the Lieutenancy of Aquitain, he was now retained by Indenture, bearing Date 3^tio Martii 1352 to continue with an 100 Men of Arms, and an 100 Archers on Horſeback, all of his own proper Retinue, till Michaelmas next enſuing. And from that time forwards to have an additional Number of 100 Men at Arms, and 200 Archers on Horſeback, provided at the Kings Charge, during his ſtay in thoſe parts: The King likewiſe indenting further with him, to ſend by way of ſupply (under the Conduct of the Duke of Lancaſter, or one of the Earls, either of Northampton, Arundel, Warwick, or Huntington) 300 Men of Arms more, and 700 Archers. At which time the ſaid Earl of Stafford conſtituted Sr. James Pipe, then Seneſchal of Aquitain, Governour of Blaye, ſcituate in the Enemies Quarters on the other ſide the Garonne. But the mean while in reſpect of this his neceſſitated Abſence from England, he obtained of the King a ſpecial Precept to the Judges of the Kings Bench, that they ſhould not in any of their Seſſions, within the County of Eſſex, intermeddle with his Liberties. And while he was preparing for this Expedition, he had an Aſſignation of the Town of Hackney, in the County of Middleſex, for the quartering of his Men and Horſes: Sixty Men with Lances being among others, impreſſed for that ſervice out of his Lordſhips of Newport and Netherwent, in the Marches of Wales. And being in the beginning of May, almoſt [b] ready to take his journey into Gaſcogne, a Writ bearing Date 14 of May, was iſſued to Thomas Beauchamp, Earl of Warwick, Admiral towards the Weſt, to arreſt all Ships of 50 Tuns and upwards, for this Earl's paſſage thither, and to bring them to Sandwich by the [c] Quindene of Trinity, or the 17 of June following. Being arrived ſafe in Gaſcogne, he preſently after encountred a Great Body of Frenchmen, who came forth of their ſtrong hold to meet him, of whom he had an entire Victory, ſlaying the greater part of them, and taking Priſoner that moſt valiant Gentleman [d] Sr. ------Gaudee (who afterwards being naturalized made his ſeat in Suffolk) and ſeven Knights of the Star; if this latter is not a miſtake of kin to the former.

[b] Aſhmole p. 690. ex Rot. Franc. 26. Ed 3. m. 11. Mali 14. Lit. Dom. A. G.

[c] Paſcha 8. April. Feſt. Trin. 3 Junii.

[d] Stow p. 253.

About this time there [e] died in the parts of Gaſcogne, on the Tueſday next after the Feaſt of St. Michael the Archangel, Sr. Thomas Wale, Knight of the moſt Noble Order of the Garter, being a Perſon of great Worth and Vertue: So that of all the Stalls of the firſt Founders, his firſt became void; into which ſucceeded Reginald Lord Cobham of Sterborough. Sr. Thomas Wale bare for his Arms Argent a Croſs Sable, and Sr. Reginald Cobham, Gules, Three Mullets Sable on a Cheveron Or.

[e] Aſhmole p. 700. & Stow ibid. & Sr Tho. de la More.

XI. King [f] Edward, underſtanding at this time, that the Britiſh Seas were infeſted with Pirates, order'd ſeven Men of War to be fitted out, with certain Pinnaces to attend them: Of which Fleet Sr. Thomas Cook, and Sr. Richard Tottleſham were Admirals, who ſcoured the Seas about the Coaſts of Picardy and Normandy, and at laſt return'd with ſafety and Honour.

[f] Stow p. 253.

This Year [g] William of Bavaria, Son to Lewis, the late Emperour of Germany, and in his Mothers Right Earl of Hainalt, Holland, and Zealand, came into England, and Married by the Kings leave the Lady Mathilda, Eldeſt Daughter to Henry Duke of Lancaſter, and Relict of Ralph, Eldeſt Son of Ralph Earl of Stafford, who dying three Years before, left her a Fair young Widow. This William was Duke of Bavaria, and Count Palatine of the Rhine, and lately upon his Mother, the Lady Margaret, her Death, Earl of Hainalt, &c. But about ſix Years after (upon what occaſion is not known) [h] he fell diſtracted, and ſlew a Knight with a blow of his Fiſt: Whereupon he was ſhut up under a good Guard in hopes of Recovery, his Brother Albert managing the Government in his ſtead, till about 19 Years after he died in that ſad Condition, leaving no Iſſue by his Wife, who continued in a manner a Widow, during that long time of his Diſtraction.

[g] Knighton p. 2603. n. 20.

[h] Time's ſtore-houſe p. 721.

XII. This

XII. This mean while Henry the Great Duke of Lancaſter, Father to the ſaid Lady Mathilda, when he ſaw the Truce taken between the two Realms the laſt Year, being deſirous to beſtow what time was his own to the Honour of God, and the propagation of Religion, [l] obtained the Kings Licence to take a journey into Pruſſia, there to fight againſt the Infidels. In which Licence the King granted, that in caſe he ſhould depart this Life before his Return, his Executors ſhould retain all his Caſtles, Lands, and Manors in their Hands, till his Debts were diſcharged. Together with this Noble Prince went at the ſame time [k] William Lord Ros of Hamlake, and ſeveral other Perſons of Quality, but the ſaid Lord Ros died this Year before his Return, in the 26 Year of his Age without Iſſue, leaving Thomas his Brother, Heir to his Great Inheritance, then but 14 Years of Age. The Duke of Lancaſter paſſing thus towards the Holy Land with a gallant attendance of Valiant Knights and Gentlemen, was [l] ſuddenly in High-Germany, together with ſeveral of his Company, arreſted, and obliged to lay down 300 Scutes of Gold for his Liberty: Which affront we ſhall ſhortly find how ill he reſented. But however for the preſent he proceeded on his journey, being honourably attended and convey'd from Country to Country, by the ſpecial Command of thoſe Chriſtian Princes, thrô whoſe Dominions he paſſed. But before he came into Pruſſia, he heard, that a Truce for ſeveral Years had been already taken by the Chriſtians and Pagans; whereat being much diſpleaſed he returned back again the ſame way.

AN. DOM. 1352. An. Regni Angliæ XXVI. Franciæ XIII.

[l] Dudg. 1 Vol p. 786. ex Pat. 25. Ed. 3. m. 6.
[k] Monaſt. Angl. 1 Vol. p. 728. b. n. 20. & Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 550.
[l] Knighton p. 2603. n. 10.

In his return, [m] being then at Cologne, a certain German Knight informed him, how the Duke of Brunſwick was He, who had cauſed him to be ſo arreſted, intending in favour of the King of France, to have him ſecured, and ſent back unto the ſaid King. Wherefore now he declared openly in the Cathedral of Cologne, in preſence of the Marqueſs of Juliers, and many other Nobles, "how baſely Otho Duke of Brunſwick had "cauſed him to be arreſted with deſign to hinder his Pious Pilgrimage, thô he had ne- "ver given him any the leaſt occaſion of Offence, as he knew, having no acquaintance "with him, or knowledge of his Perſon. And he affirmed, that it did not become a "Gentleman of Quality to deal ſo rudely with a Knight Stranger, who had never of- "fended him; and that in caſe he had a mind to meddle, he ſhould find him ready "to perform the part of a Souldier at any time. Now when the Duke of Lancaſter was ſafely return'd into England (as he did before Aſcenſion-day this Year) theſe his Words were related in Order to the ſaid Duke of Brunſwick, who thereupon preſently ſent a Challenge to the Duke of Lancaſter in this form.

[m] Knighton p. 2603. n. 30. &c. Dudg. 1 Vol. p. 786. b. &c. Froiſ. c. 153. Stow p. 253. Fabian p. 230. Grafton p. 292. Walſingh. Hiſt. p. 162. n. 14.

"Otho, by the Grace of God Duke of Brunſwick, Lord of Thuringen, and Son to "the Great Duke of Brunſwick, unto the Excellent Prince and Noble Duke of Lan- "caſter. Know You, that the Words, which You ſpake perſonally with your own "proper Mouth, in the Chief Church of Cologne, by Name St. Peters, on the Friday "next after Eaſter laſt paſt, before the Noble Prince, the Marqueſs of Juliers, and ma- "ny other Worſhipfull Knights and Eſquires, in the preſence of the Citizens of the ſaid "City, unadviſedly, raſhly, and ſhamefully, were falſe, and by no means true. Which "things We will maintain by our own Body againſt your Body, as a true and Loyal "Lord is bound and obliged to demonſtrate againſt a raſh, and falſe, and wicked Man. "And this We will perform between the Caſtle of Guiſnes, and St. Omers, or where "elſe the King of France, our Lord, ſhall aſſign a place: For thither ſhall be brought "a ſafe Conduct from the ſaid King; leſt We ſhould prolong the Matter. Dated, &c.

This Challenge being brought into England to the Duke, unſealed, [n] leſt he might expoſe himſelf to ſcorn by giving too much Credit to ſuch unauthentick Letters, he preſently ſent back unto Otho two Knights, to learn the truth of the Matter, and to demand thereupon his Letters Patents, ſealed with his Seal of Arms. Upon the return of theſe Knights, with his Letters ſealed, he obtained leave of the King, his Maſter, and wrote back, that by ſuch a day he would not fail to meet him, and by the Grace of God to maintain his Words in his own proper Perſon, as Truth and Honour required. Accordingly having with much adoe obtained a ſafe Conduct from France, he furniſhed himſelf after his Quality, and went ſtrait over to Calais with 50 Knights in his Company, and a gallant Retinue. At Guiſnes the Lord John Clermont, Marſhal of France, met him with a Noble Attendance of Men of Arms, in the [o] Quindene before Chriſtmas, and gave him an Honourable Reception, conducting him with much reſpect, as far as Heſdin. Where the Lord James of Bourbon, Count de la Marche, met him alſo with another Honourable Train of Gentlemen, and conducted him to Paris, with extream Civility. At his approach to Paris, he was thirdly, met by a very conſiderable Body of Lords, Knights, and Gentlemen of France, who came by King Johns ſpecial Command to do him Honour. There was then the greateſt Number of Strangers, that e'r was known at Paris, to behold this Combat of two such Mighty Princes, all who in their several Capacities, gave due Honour to the Duke of Lancaster; and King John himself immediately upon his Arrival sent for him to his Palace, where he gave him a Princely Reception. But above all, his Kinsman [p] Charles the young King of Navarre, shew'd him a very high Regard, and Menaged his Affairs with great diligence and application. Before the day of Battle there was much agitation to reconcile these two great Enemies; but all overtures were ineffectual; the English Duke maintaining the Truth and Reason of his Words, and the Almain utterly denying the whole Accusation. Wherefore on the day appointed, the Lists were ranged out in a Field, called [q] le Pré aux Clercs, the two Combatants were brought into the place, and the King of France with his Prime Nobility, and an Infinite Number of People were present as spectators. All things being ready, the two Knights, having (as the Custom of Duellists in those Days was) taken their several Oaths on the [r] Corporall, that their cause was just, and that they had no Charms about them, and so began to address themselves to the Combat. The Duke of Brunswick bore in his shield [s] Gules, Two Lions Passant, Guardant Or; and the Duke of Lancaster, Gules Three Lions Passant, Guardant Or (being the Arms of England) with a Three-pointed Labell of France.

[n] Stow ibid.
[o] 11 Decemb.

An. Dom. 1352. An. Regni Angliæ XXVI. Franciæ XIII.

Now 'tis said, that till now You could hardly find a more fierce or comely Man at Arms, than the Duke of Brunswick, nor one that promised better: But presently, as soon as he had taken his Oath, his countenance changed and grew pale, as Death; whereby most People thought his quarrel was not so good, as he pretended. He took his Horse with a sad and ill-boading Countenance, and as many spectators avouched, had none of his former briskness and vigour remaining, insomuch that he bare himself very awkwardly in handling his Arms, and twice or thrice let fall his shield in receiving it. But the Noble Duke of Lancaster sat ready Mounted with his Spear upright, and his shield on his Arm, in a decent and couragious manner, with a sedate and resolute Countenance, expecting to cope with his Adversary, like a Knight, who had Truth and Honour on his side; so that all Men applauded his steady and gallant Behaviour. Wherefore the Duke of Brunswick by advice of his Friends, submitted his quarrel to the judgement of the King of France, and proffer'd to withdraw his Challenge. But the Duke of Lancaster absolutely refused to forsake the Combat, saying, "How that "before he had entred the Lists, perhaps he might have been perswaded to an agreement, "but now that he was already Mounted and prepared before the King and his Nobles, "and such an extraordinary Confluence of People, to defend the Justice of his Cause, "it would be an high Reflection both on himself, and the English Nation, if now he "should depart the Lists without performing, what Truth and Equity did require: Where- "fore he said, he would not leave the Field for any Treaty or Composition whatsoever "without Battle; so as to derive the least umbrage of a suspicion upon his Honour, "Blood, and Quality; whereby either Himself, the King his Master, or his Country "might suffer the least flaw in their Reputation: Otherwise he would receive what E- "vent or Fortune the Grace of God would allot him. Upon this the Duke of Brunswick, as a Man Conquered, utterly renounced the Quarrel, and refus'd the Combat, without any reservation of his Honour, wholly submitting himself to the award and disposal of the King of France, to the great Glory of the Duke of Lancaster. The Duke of Brunswick was generally more acceptable to the King and Court of France, as who was much their Friend; but however the Duke of Lancaster was not without his Intereests among so many Honourable Persons, who respected him, thô an Enemy, for his many Heroick Vertues and High Birth. Among these his Counsellours and Abetters, who stuck close to him at this time, were the foremention'd Charles King of Navarre his Kinsman, and Giles his Fathers Brother, the Earl of Ponthieu, the Earl of Flanders, the Earl of Tancarville, the Earl of Saltzbourg, the Lord John Clermont Marshal of France, the Lord James of Bourbon, the Lord Lewis of Navarre, the Lord Lewis Earl of Harcourt, the Lord John de Chastillon, and the Lord Walter his Son, with many more. These Persons so wrought with the Duke of Lancaster, that upon Duke Otho's absolute renunciation of the Quarrel, he was content to go last out of the Field: After which the King at a great Feast, by the help of his Nobles, partakers on both sides, reconciled these two Dukes, and took up the Quarrel between them for ever. The next day he led the Duke of Lancaster about his Palace, shewing him many notable and Rich Jewels, of all which he offer'd him the choice: But he for his part desired only one Thorn out of the Crown of our Saviour, which he brought away, and afterwards gave, as a Relick to his Collegiate Church of our Lady, founded by himself, near the Castle of Leicester. The third Day after, he took leave of the French King and Court, and return'd home into England unto the King, who [p] This Duke Henry was Son to Henry de Torto-Collo, who was second Son to Edmund (second Brother to K. Edw. I) and of Blanche the Relict of Henry de Champagne King of Navarre; from whom also this Charles King of Navarre was descended. Tho. Mills Catal. Nobility p. 319.

[q] Fabian ad hunc an. p. 230. Grafton p. 292. Mezeray p. 51.

[r] Corporall, Gallicè Corporail, Latin. Corporale, idem quod Dominicale, i.e. pulvinar Sacrosanctum; Syndon, vel linteum, quo corpus Dominicum tegitur.

[s] True Use of Armory Bibl. Cottonianâ p. 58 vid. Tho. Mills Catal. Nobility p. 342. He came of Maud, Eldest Daughter of K. Henry II of Engl. and Henry Leo D. of Saxony, whose V Son, William of Winchester was Progenitor to the Dukes of Brunswick. Hence this Dukes Arms so like England.

who was then at St. Albans, where he kept his Chriſtmas at that time, and received him with great Grace and Favour. AN. DOM. 1352.

XIII. This pious Heroe, who at laſt by his Religious and Noble Carriage obtained to be called the [t] Good Duke of Lancaſter, out of his devout Reſpect to the Canons of his Collegiate Church at Leiceſter, permitted [u] them this Year to encloſe their Woods, and ſtored them with Deer out of his own Parks; and likewiſe interceded perſonally with the Pope, for Appropriating the Churches of Humberſton and Hungerton to the ſaid Abbey. About which time [x] he received ſpecial Command from the King, to keep a ſtrict Guard upon the Sea-coaſts of Lancaſhire, and to arm all thoſe 40 Lanciers, which were then raiſed in his Territories of Monmouth, Groſmont, Whitcaſtle, Kedewy, Karwathelan and Iskennin for the publick Service. For there came into [y] England a prevailing Rumour, that the French King had provided an Army and Navy to invade the Land; wherefore now, beſides the Maritime Parts of Lancaſhire aforemention'd, the King committed all the Sea-Coaſts of Dorſet, Somerſetſhire, Wiltſhire and Hantſhire unto this powerfull Duke to ſecure, and to reſiſt the Enemy. At the ſame time among others, Thomas [z] Beauchamp Earl of Warwick, was one of the Commiſſioners aſſign'd by the King for the Arraying all ſorts of Men able for the War, as well Knights and Eſquires, as Others within the Counties of Warwick, Leiceſter and Worceſter. As alſo [a] Thomas Lord Muſgrave, and Thomas Lord Lucy, were Commiſſioners for the like purpoſe in the County of Weſtmorland, Sr. John [b] Kirketon of Kirketon in Holland in Lincolnſhire, and Sr. John [c] Willoughby of Eresby, two noble Barons of the Realm, being conſtituted Commiſſioners of Array in the ſaid County; as others were in other places for the Defence of the Realm againſt the French, then threatning an Invaſion: Though this Threat, like a great many more of theirs came to nothing.

The Earl of Warwick [d] aforeſaid recover'd about this time the Dominion of Gowerland in Wales, from John Lord Moubray, whoſe Title thereto accrued by the Lady Aliva his Mother, Daughter and Heireſs to William Lord Braoſe: Which Lordſhip King John in the Fourth Year of his Reign had wrongfully given to William de Braoſe, whilſt Henry Son of Waleran Newburgh Earl of Warwick (Anceſtor to this Thomas Beauchamp now Earl) was in his Minority: But till now it could not be recover'd for the Right Owner, thô [e] Roger (Predeceſſor to the ſaid Waleran, who lived in the Days of King Stephen, was reputed to have been the Conquerour of Gowerland: On which Account his Poſterity had enjoyed it, untill the ſaid Fourth Year of King John.

XIV. This Year [f] Pope Clement VI, after he had ſat in the Pontifical Chair ten Years and ſeven Months, wanting a Day, departed this Life in his Palace at Avignon on the 6th of December, being as was thought poiſoned. In whoſe ſtead upon the 18 of the ſaid Month was choſen Stephen Albert, a Limouſin by Birth, Prieſt-Cardinal Titulo SS. Joannis & Pauli, and then Biſhop of Oſtia; he took upon him the Name of Innocent, being the VI of that Name, and was Crowned with the Papal Mitre on the 30 Day of the ſame Month, the day after which he wrote his Letters Encyclical bearing Date 11 Kal. Januarii An° Pontif. I. But of his partiality towards his own Nation of France our Hiſtorians do not unjuſtly complain.

This very Month there departed out of this World the Hopefull Young Prince, John Plantagenet Earl of Kent, Son to Edmund of Woodſtock, King Edwards Uncle, who had lately taken to Wife the young Lady Elizabeth, Daughter to the Marqueſs of Juliers, but died now without Iſſue as we have ſaid. So that his Siſter Joan, commonly called the Fair Maid of Kent, being at that time [g] 24 Years old, and the Wife of the Lord Thomas Holland, was found his next Heir; and in her Right the ſaid Sr. Thomas became Earl of Kent.

It is remembred, [h] that two Fiſhmongers were this Year beheaded at the Standard in Cheap-Side London, thô their Offence is not recorded: Wherefore I only mention it to ſhew, how more mild and humane, thô withall ſeldome, the Executions were under this Prince's Government, in compariſon of thoſe Butcherly Diſmembrings uſed during the Reign of King Philip of Valois, his Adverſary.

[t] Tho. Mills Catal. Honor. p. 324.
[u] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 787. & Knighton p. 2606.
[x] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 787.
[y] Aſhmole p. 682, &c.
[z] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 232.
[a] Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 153.
[b] Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 168.
[c] Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 83.
[d] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 232.
[e] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 69.
[f] Odor. Rainal. ad ann. 1352. §. 24, 25. &c. Knighton p. 2605 n. 30. & Walſing. Hiſt. p. 161. & Froiſ. c. 153, &c.
[g] Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 94. & Sandford p. 215. ex Inquiſitione captâ 13 Febr. 27 Ed. 3.
[h] Stow's Survey of London p. 279.

An. Dom. 1353. An. Regni Angliæ XXVII. Franciæ XIV.

CHAPTER the Twelfth.

The CONTENTS.

I. A hard Winter, Storms, Drought and Dearth. II. A Riot in Cheſter: The Black-Prince's Munificence. III. King Edward founds a College at Weſtminſter. IV. A Treaty with Scotland. V. A Treaty and Truce with France. VI. A Parliament, with the Names of the Lords ſummon'd thereto, &c. VII. Another Parliament, wherein Roger Mortimer and Richard Fitz-Alan were fully reſtored. VIII. A Treaty at Avignon, which begets a ſhort Truce. IX. The Foundation of Trinity Hall in Cambridge. X. A Quarrel between the Town and Univerſity of Oxford. XI. Two Fryers burnt at Avignon: A Third recants at Paris.

I. THIS Year [a] began with a terrible, long, hard and cold Winter, which endured with extream Rigour from the 6 of December till the 12 of March, and was ſucceeded by a furious Hurricane or Tempeſt of Wind, the like whereof had not been ſeen in England: For it tore up the Coverings and Leads of Churches, overthrew Mills, and Walls and Trees to the ground, and did exceeding much Miſchief in ſundry places. Beſides which there happen'd an unuſual Drought, [b] ſo that from March to July little or no Moiſture fell upon the Earth: Wherefore all manner of Seeds being corrupted, there enſued a great Dearth of Corn, and other Grain and Fruits. Inſomuch that England, which was always before ſufficient for it ſelf, was now fain to ſeek Aſſiſtance from other Countries. Which thing being known to William of Bavaria Earl of Hainalt, Holland and Zealand, and Son in Law to Henry Duke of Lancaſter, out of his hearty Love to the Engliſh Nation, he ſent ſeveral Ships laden with fine Wheat to London, to the great refreſhment of the People. And ſoon [c] after were brought great Quantities of Corn from Ireland, which being diſtributed to ſeveral Port-Towns and Mercate-places of the Land, was a timely Aſſwagement of the Dearth, and a kind Relief to the poor People eſpecially. And then alſo by ſome means or other, [d] there was a general Scarcity of Minerals, as Iron, Lead, Braſs, and many other Commodities.

[a] Knighton p. 2607. n. 10. & Walſingh. Hiſt. p. 161. & M.S. vet. Angl. in Bibl. C.C.C. Cantab. c. 224.

[b] M.S. ibidem.

[c] Stow p. 254.

[d] Walſing. ibid.

II. About this time [e] the Cheſhire-men had committed ſome great Inſolence or Riot againſt the Servants of the Prince of Wales (on what Occaſion I have not found) which were Officers under the Prince, as he was Duke of Cheſter. Wherefore the King being extreamly incenſed againſt them, and reſolving to make them ſubmit to Law or to the Sword, ſends forth Sr. Richard Willoughby and Sr. William Shareſhull, his Juſtices Itinerant to ſit in Eyre at Cheſter. At the ſame time ordering ſufficient Forces under the Leading of his Son the Prince, attended with Henry Duke of Lancaſter, and the Earls of Warwick and Stafford, to go thither to prevent any Violence or Inſurrection of the People. But when the Cheſhire men knew in their Conſciences, that they were in fault, and ſaw plainly, there was as little Contending in Battle as in Law, againſt ſuch Force and ſuch Right, they compounded with the Prince of Wales their Lord, for 5060 Marks, to be paid within four Years thence to come, and gave him ſuch Security as the Prince himſelf deſired, on Condition, that the Juſtices ſhould no longer continue their Circuit of Eyre upon them. However becauſe they would not according to their Duty ſubmit to, but capitulate with their Prince, when they thought themſelves quit and wholly free, the Juſtices came and ſat again upon the Inquiſition of Traillebaſton, and leavied vaſt Summs of Money, and ſeiſed many Lands and Tenements into the Hands of the Prince, and raiſed Fines without number. After which the Prince paſſing upon his return thrô the Abby of [f] Vale-Royal, and ſeeing there a wonderfull Structure of the Fabrick of a Church, which the good King Edward his Great Grandfather had begun, of his meer Princely Good-will gave toward the Promotion of the ſaid pious Work 500 Marks, which Summ was eſteemed a Tenth of his whole Perquiſits in Cheſhire.

[e] Knighton p. 2606. n. 12. & Dugd. 1. Vol. p. 161.

[f] Vid. Sr. Rich. Baker in Ed. 1. titulo, Works of Piety done in his Time. Unde corrigo Deaulencros in Vale Royal.

III. About which time the King [g] his Father alſo converted the Chappel of St. Stephen at Weſtminſter (founded by his Royal Progenitors) into a College, conſiſting of 38 Perſons to ſerve God, namely one Dean, Twelve Secular Canons, Vicars and other ther Miniſters accordingly, and endowed it with Revenues to the Summ of 500 l. per Annum for ever. For the uſe of this Chappel, thô out of the Palace Court, ſome diſtance Weſtward, in a little Sanctuary, he alſo raiſed a mighty ſtrong Bellfry or Steeple of Stone and Timber, covered with Lead, and placed therein three Great Bells, which afterward were uſually rung at Coronations, Triumphs, Funerals of Princes, or their Obits. Of which Bells Men fabled, that their Ringing ſowred all the Drink in the Town; and it is ſaid, that about the Biggeſt of the Three, there were written theſe Rhymes:

[g] Stow's Chron. p. 254. & Survey of London p. 523.

AN. DOM. 1353. An. Regni Angliæ XXVII. Franciæ XIV.

King Edward made me
Thirty Thouſand and Three;
Take me down and weigh me,
And more ſhall ye find me.

However when theſe Bells were taken down, as they have been long ſince, they were found all Three hardly to weigh Twenty Thouſand Pound.

IV. We ſpake [h] before, how the King of Scotland had liberty to return home from his Captivity in order to diſcourſe with his Lords about his Ranſom; and that being not able to come to any Concluſion, he rendred himſelf a Priſoner again: Now it is to be conſider'd, that the Scots were not at all backward to redeem their King; but that the Demands of King Edward were ſuch as their free Souls could never brook, for he would have them do Homage unto him, as King David himſelf had ſworn to do, and as the Kings of Scotland before-time were accuſtomed to do. But the Scots anſwered all with one Heart and Voice, "How as for their King they were willing and "ready to redeem his Perſon at any Rate: Except only by ſubmitting themſelves un- "to the King of England; for that they would never do. Whereupon King David for that time, as we obſerved, returned his Body back again to Priſon in the Tower of London. But now this Year again by King Edwards leave, he reſolved to try them once more in Perſon, and having given a like Security, went as before to Newcaſtle upon Tyne, where he was met by ſuch Scotch Lords as were thereto appointed, in order to treat of a Final Peace between the two Realms; and alſo of his Redemption. But here as the Scottiſh Commiſſioners held ſtill to their old Obſtinacy, ſo that King David was fain to upbraid them thereof, and check them ſomething roughly, "That bearing "a Mind too high for the preſent Condition of Affairs, they were too unreaſonably ſtiff; "when both for his Sake, and that of their bleeding Country, they ought rather to "bend and ſhew a little Complyance for the preſent; the Debate grew hereupon ſo high, that the Scots threatned to renounce both Him and his Authority, unleſs he would wholly fall off from the Thoughts of paying any Submiſſion to England, and forbear to liſten any longer to their Counſel. And they further added, "That they "would neither redeem him, nor any way promote his Redemption, unleſs he would firſt "engage to pardon them all ſorts of Quarrels, and Grievances, and all Offences by "them done or committed, ſince the time that he was taken at Durham: Otherwiſe "they threatned to ſet up another King over them. King Edward and his Council, upon this Backwardneſs of the Scots to cloſe with them, reſolved, that the Lords of the North ſhould enter Scotland, under the Leading of the Earl of Northampton, and that all thoſe, who claim'd any Lands or Inheritance in Scotland, ſhould accompany the ſaid Earl, together with King David into that Kingdom, by Force to reduce the Scots to a more reaſonable Submiſſion.

[h] Lib. 2. c. 10. §. 8. p. 455. vid. Knighton p. 2606. à n. 20. ad n. 30. collat. cum p. 2603. n. 10, &c.

Accordingly [i] the Earl of Northampton with King David in his Company, and a formidable Power of Men of Arms and Archers, entred the Marches of Scotland, where he obliged the ſtrong Fortreſs of Loughmaban, and ſeveral other Places of Strength to yield unto him, and took, and ſlew, and diſſipated all the cloſe Ambuſhes of the ſubtle Scots, who not being able to check him in plain Field, attempted by theſe Fineneſſes to gain ſome notable Advantage of him: But this Lord was too expert a Captain, to be trepan'd by thoſe uſual and well-known Stratagems. Whereupon they were now again compell'd to endeavour an Accommodation, and at laſt obtained an Hearing in order to a Treaty; at which time they declared, "How they were moſt wil- "ling to redeem their King, but not on that Condition, as thereby to fling both Him "and Them, and all their Poſterity into a far worſe Captivity, by Subjecting their Na- "tive Country to be held by Homage of England. Wherefore they heartily deſired "the King of England and his Council to conſider of it, and to propoſe unto them "ſuch Conditions as they might accept, and not demand of them things ſo inconſiſtent "and impoſſible, and which appeared unto them far worſe than Death. This Requeſt being being but reasonable was back'd with a Truce; and thus Matters rested for a while in those Parts.

[i] Stow p. 254. &c.

An. Dom. 1353. An. Regni Angliæ XXVII. Franciæ XIV.

V. Now [k] Pope Innocent the VI, being newly settled in the Pontifical Chair, when he saw Matters tending towards a Rupture between the two Realms of England and France, interposed his Endeavours to make up the Breach, and sent [l] Guy Bishop of Porto, and Cardinal of Bologna, in his Name to promote the Treaty of a Final Peace, in Order to which he empower'd him by his Papal Letters, the Tenour whereof followeth.

[k] Odor. Rainal. ad hunc annum. §.15. & Stow p. 254.

[l] Innoc. VI. Tom. 1. Epist. Secret. p. 22. Et an. 1. Epist. Curial. l. 2. Epist. 29, 30, 31.

"INNOCENT, the Servant of the Servants of God, to his Venerable Brother, "Guy Bishop of Porto, &c. Among other things, which by the Office of our Apostolick Service are incumbent on Us, this We especially desire, that between our Most "Dear Sons in Christ, the Illustrious Kings, John of France, and Edward of England, "the Fewel of Dissention being withdrawn, Peace and Concord may be reformed, "Tranquillity may flourish, the happiness of Quiet may abound, and a Pacifick State "may continue. Considering therefore, that You, who as an earnest Well-Wisher to "the Premises, have at our Good Pleasure gone to the Parts of France, and there Personally tarry, do zealously interpose Your Diligence to the Reformation of the said "Peace and Concord; desiring also, that (if by his Grace, who is the Author of Health "and Peace, Your Intention being as to the Premises conformable to ours, may obtain a desired effect) those things, which shall be done, may be firmly Ratified; "We grant unto your Brotherhood (of whom in this and other things We have full "Confidence in the Lord) by the Apostolical Authority, by Vertue of these Presents, "full and free Power, of Confirming, approving, and Ratifying, by the Authority aforesaid, the Treaties and Conventions of the said Peace and Concord between the "said Kings, and also the Princes, Lords, Great Men, Aiders and Followers of them "and their Adherents; nevertheless, after that the said Treaties and Conventions shall "by Gods assistance be finished, and by the said Kings, and others aforesaid, freely "received and approved, of receiving from them and every of them, Covenants, "Oaths, and Submissions, for the entire observation of the said Treaties and Conventions; and of restraining the Contradictions by Ecclesiastical Censure, without any Appeal; notwithstanding, if to them, or any of them, either together, or severally, "it hath been granted by the Apostolick See, that they should not be interdicted, "suspended, or excommunicated by Apostolick Letters, making full and express mention, and Word by Word of such a Grant. Dated at Villeneufe, of the Diœcese of Avignon III Id. Maii, An°. Pontif. 1mo. Besides this Cardinal, Pope Innocent [m] sent several other Prelates to both the Kings, in Order to bring this Peace to its Perfection. So that at [n] last it was agreed, "That the King of England should resign, acquit, and renounce all the Right he had, or claimed to the Crown of France, "transferring it entirely to the French King and his Heirs; in Consideration whereof, "He the said King of England should receive, and enjoy the whole Dukedom of Aquitain, with the City of Calais, and the whole Counties of Artois, and of Guisnes, for Himself and his Successors, Kings of England, without ever doing any Homage, or making any acknowledgement for the same to the Kings of France, or "without holding them in any subordinate Manner, otherwise, than he held the Crown "of England it self, namely of God alone. To these Conditions, thus agreed on, King Edward yielded his Consent, and for a firm Conclusion of the Premises, Ambassadors were sent as well from him, as from the French King, to the Court of Rome then at Avignon: A Truce being taken the mean while to be kept in England, France, Gascogne, and Bretagne, till Easter next ensuing, during which time it was hoped, a full and final Peace would be established. But we shall defer the Prosecution of that Matter to its proper Place, and speak of what happen'd at home before the Truce was in any forwardness.

[m] M. S. in Bibl. Vatican. sign. N. p. 2040. apud Odor. Rainald. ibid.

[n] Stow ibid. M.S. Vet. Angl. in Bibl. C.C.C. Cantab. c. 229.

VI. On the 15 of July, King Edward sent forth his Writs of Summons to his Lords, to meet him in Parliament at Westminster, on the * Monday after the Feast of St. Matthew, or the 23^d of September following, these being the Names of those to whom the Writs were directed.

[o] M.S. Rot. Parl. p. 70. & Sr. Rob. Cotton p. 83.

* Lit. Dom. F.

Edward Prince of Wales.	William Clinton Earl of Huntington.
Henry Duke of Lancaster.	Richard Fitz-Alan Earl of Arundel.
William Bohun Earl of Northampton.	Thomas Beauchamp Earl of Warwick.
Humphry Bohun Earl of Hereford and Essex.	John Vere Earl of Oxford.
Hugh Courtney Earl of Devonshire.	Gilbert Umphraville Earl of Angos.

Robert

Robert Hufford Earl of Suffolk.
William Montague Earl of Salisbury.
Ralph Stafford Earl of Stafford.
John Lord Mowbray.
Henry Lord Piercy.
Ralph Lord Neville.
Richard Lord Talbot.
Robert Lord Morley.
Walter Lord Manny.
William Lord Huntingfield.
Thomas Lord Berkley.
Thomas Lord Lucy.
Peter Lord Morley the Fifth.
Reginald Lord Cobham.
Reginald Lord Grey.
John Lord Willoughby of Eresby.
Roger Lord Chandos.
John Lord Charleton.
William Lord Zouch of Harringworth.
John Lord Bardolph.
William Lord Deincourt.
John Lord Tibetot.
John Lord Fitz-Walter.
Walter Lord Fauconbridge.
William Lord Greystock.
William Lord Dacres.
Thomas Lord Musgrave.
Thomas Lord Bradestan.
John Lord Grey of Rotherfield.
John Lord Grey of Codonore.
John Lord Darcy of Knayth.
Roger Lord Mortimer of Wigmore.
Robert Lord Colvile.
Bartholomew Lord Burwash Senior.
Guy Lord Brian.
Nicolas Lord Seimour.
Geoffry Lord Say.
Michael Lord Poynz.
John Lord Beauchamp of Somerset.
John Lord Beauchamp of Warwickshire.
William Lord Ferrers.
John Lord Lisle of Rugemont.
Nicolas Lord Cantilupe.
John Lord Furnival.
Nicolas Lord Burnel.
Edward Lord Montague.
Thomas Lord Ughtred.
Robert Lord Scales.
Henry Lord Scroop.
John Lord Cobham.
Thomas Lord Braose.
James Lord Audley.
Thomas Lord Holland.
Bartholomew Lord Burwash Junior, Warden of the Cinque-Ports.

AN. DOM. 1353. An. Regni Angliæ XXVII. Franciæ XIV.

On the [P] Monday aforesaid the Parliament being met, Proclamation was made in Westminster-Hall, that the Three-Estates warned thereto, might take their ease from Wednesday until Friday then ensuing. On which Friday Sr. William Shareshull the Lord Chief Justice, shew'd, that the Assembly was called, for that the Staple should be removed from beyond the Seas, and appointed within the Realm. But for that we shall refer the Reader to the Statute of the Staple, in the Statute-Book, because it agreeth exactly with the Record, containing 28 Chapters. The Seventh day of October, Sr. Bartholomew Burwash the Kings Chamberlain, in the Presence of the King, Lords, and Commons, sheweth how the King had attempted and pursued War against the French, without Charging of the Commons. And to end the same he had made great means to the Pope, but that since he could not obtain any good end of the War, he now required the Commons to grant him the Subsidy of Wooll, who thereupon by whole assent, granted him the same for Three Years.

[P] Sr. Rob. Cotton's Abridgement p. 81. &c.

The Print against Provisors, that sue to the Court of Rome, c. 1. agreeth with the Record; the Print that all Suggestions shall be put into Pardons c. 2. agreeth with the Record: The Print, that Justices of the Peace should look after Victuallers c. 3. agreeth with the Record. But the Statute of Wines in the Print c. 5, 6, 7, and 8. is not in the Roll, nor in the Printed Calendar of Parliaments.

The Commons Petitions are as followeth, viz. "That the King would revoke the "Office of Alnage, and take three pence of every Cloth. Let the Commons talk with "the Chancellour and Treasurer, to the end good Recompence be made for the said Alnage. "That the Subsidies and other Aids granted, may be employed only in the Wars. It "pleaseth the King. That the Coin may be reduced into old Sterling. It was an-"swer'd the last Parliament. That the Staple may be appointed at Worcester, Not-"tingham, Hull, St. Botolphs, Stamford, Lyn, Ipswich, and Canterbury. One shall be at "Canterbury, and that only in Honour of St. Thomas. That the Lords and Commons "may by Easter following, appoint out three Sorts of Woolls, which shall then "Commence. The King will be advised. That the outragious Fines taken by Sr. "John Molins, and such other Commissioners may be remedied. Upon Complaint Re-"dress shall be had.

It is Enacted, that all the Articles of the Staple shall be proclaimed throughout the Realm, and confirmed at the next Parliament.

VII. Thus this Year ended, and on the 15 of March following King Edward sent forth forth his Writs of Summons to his Barons, to meet him in Parliament on the Monday after St. Mark the Evangeliſt, or the 28 of April.

An. Dom. 1354. An. Regni Angliæ XXVIII. Franciæ XV.

On the [q] Monday aforeſaid, the Lord Chief Juſtice Sr. William Shareſhull in the Painted Chamber made open Proclamation before the King, Lords and Commons, that the Parliament was called for three Cauſes; Firſt, For the Eſtabliſhing the Staple within the Realm, and for Confirmation of the Ordinances made at the laſt Great Council: Secondly, How they might treat of a Peace with France; for that by War the King ſaw his Subjects greatly waſted; and Thirdly, For Receiving of Petitions, and redreſs of Enormities, all which without a Parliament could not be effectually ended. Here Roger Mortimer Lord of Wigmore, being Grandchild to the old Roger Mortimer, Earl of March, who had been executed for Treaſon [r] twenty three Years before, had ſuch favour, as [s] upon his Petition, to obtain a Reverſal of the Judgment given againſt his Grandfather aforeſaid, as erroneous and utterly void; for that he the ſaid Earl was put to Death againſt Law, having never been called to open Anſwer before his Peers: Whereupon this ſaid Roger from thence forward bare the Title of Earl of March, and had again Reſtitution of the Caſtles and Lordſhips of Blenleveny and Bulkedinas, whereof his Grandfather died ſeiſed; as alſo all his other Lands, which upon that Forfeiture coming to the Crown, had been beſtowed on William Lord Montagu and Others. But the Charter of his Reſtitution [t] bears a later Date, viz. on the 19 of Novemb. Anno Regni 29. 1355.

[q] M.S. Rot. Par. 28 Ed 3. m. 1. p. 379. Sr. Rob. Cotton p. 85.

[r] Vid. l. 1. c. 3 §. 6. p. 46. ad p. 54. An. 4. Ed 3.

[s] M.S. ibid. & Sr. Rob. Cotton ibid. Aſhmole p. 692. & Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 147.

[t] Tho. Mills Catal. Hon. p. 576.

In [u] like manner Richard Fitz-Alan Earl of Arundel upon his humble Petition, wherein he remonſtrated, that Edmund Earl of Arundel his Father had been unjuſtly put to Death, was thereupon, as Heir unto him, fully reſtored: And becauſe the Death of his Father had been occaſion'd by the means of Roger Mortimer Grandfather to the foreſaid Roger Earl of March, to prevent all further Heart-burnings between the two Families, it was now [x] by Indenture made betwixt this Earl Richard, and the ſaid Earl Roger agreed, that Edmund Son and Heir to the ſaid Richard, ſhould take to Wife Alice the Daughter of the ſaid Roger, and that ſhe ſhould have Three Thouſand Marks for her Portion, viz. one Thouſand at the Sealing of that Agreement, upon their Marriage at her Seventh Year of Age one Thouſand more, and at her accompliſhing the Age of Thirteen, the remaining Thouſand.

[u] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 317. M.S. Rot. Par. p. 80. §. 13. &c. Sr. Rob. Cotton p. 86, &c.

[x] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 317. ex Clauſ. 28 Ed. 3. in dorſo m. 10.

Now before this, as we have already obſerved, the King in Council reſolved to withdraw the Mart or Staple of Woolls from the Towns of Flanders, becauſe that People, thô they received much Advantage thereby, had not kept true Touch with him; and accordingly he commanded the ſame to be kept at [y] Weſtminſter, Chicheſter, Lincoln, Briſtow, Canterbury, Hull and other Places: In purſuance of which wholſom Device it was [z] now Enacted, that all the Ordinances made in the laſt Great Council aſſembled at Weſtminſter, touching the Staple, be confirmed to continue for ever. It is Enacted, that the Juſtices of the Peace ſhall be of the Beſt in every County, that upon the Diſplacing of any of them, others be placed at the Nomination of the Knights of the ſame County; that they ſit four times at leaſt every Year: That none be diſplaced without the Kings Special Commandment, or Teſtimony of their Fellows. It is Enacted, that no Purveyor, being arreſted for any Miſdemeanour ſhall have any Privy-Seal, to cauſe ſuch as arreſted him to come before the Council to anſwer the King, but have his Remedy at the Common Law.

[y] Holinſh. Engl. Chron. p. 948. Statute-Book p. 102.

[z] M.S. Rot. Par. p. 80. n. 16. Sr. Rob. Cotton p. 86. ibid. &c.

The Commons Petitions with the Kings Anſwers thereto, were theſe; That the Surpluſage of the Fines of the Statute of Labourers may be entirely diſtributed among the Poor of the whole County, and not to poor Towns only. It ſhall be parted among the poor Towns only. That the Writ of Eſtreat may lie in every Action, where the Party ſhall recover Dammages of Eſtreats after the Writ purchaſed. The old Law ſhall be continued. That Remedy may be had in ſuch Caſes, where the King receiveth the Profits of the Wards Lands, as well of Soccage, as otherwiſe, where no part of the ſame is holden of him. The Law heretofore uſed ſhall continue. That it may be order'd, whether the Tenants of ſuch as hold by Barony, and are ſummoned to Parliament, ſhall contribute to the payment of Knights Fees coming to the Parliament. As heretofore, ſo the ſame ſhall be. That preſent Pay be made of all Purveyances, being under twenty Shillings, and of greater within one Quarter of a Year, and that Purveyance be made without Malice. It is good to make Payment accordingly to the firſt Point, and to redreſs the ſecond. That all Sheriffs be charged to make preſent Payment for all Purveyances for Calais. The Demand is reaſonable. That any one attainted upon a Writ of Oyer and Terminer, may bring his Attaint, [a] hanging his Suit againſt the other. The Lords will not alter the Order of the Law. That the Lords, Marchers of Wales, do ſuffer fer no Diſtreſſes to be made on any Engliſh Man coming into Wales, for any other Mans Debts, if he be no Debter, Treſpaſſer, or Surety. As heretofore, ſo the Law ſhall be. That no Inqueſt upon Conſpiracy, Confederacy, Maintenance, or ſuch like be returned, but by the Sheriff, of the moſt lawfull Men, and nigheſt in that part of the Country, where ſuch Acts are laid; that all Evidences therein be given openly at the Bar, and that no Man ſpeak with the Jury after they depart therefrom. This laſt Petition was Enacted. That the King [b] will appoint a Time when the Coin ſhall be made Finer. With Opportunity the King meaneth the ſame. That the King have the Forfeitures of his Widows Dowagers; but not of ſuch as hold joyntly with their Husbands. The old Law ſhall ſtand. That the Writ of Appeal brought [d] hanging another may abate the other. The Common Law therein uſed ſhall continue. That Weights and Meaſures may henceforth be made in the Town of London, ſo as all Counties do conform themſelves according thereto. There is a STANDARD in the Treaſury, where every Man readily may have the ſame. That the Writs of the Chancery may be at reaſonable Prices, and that the Clerks of the Crown, and others for Commiſſion and ſuch like, do content themſelves with the Kings Allowance. As heretofore the ſame ſhall be. That Fines for Writs may be reaſonably made in every of the Kings Courts. The Chancellour ſhall do as heretofore. The Commons beyond the Trent require, that the Juſtices of the one Bench or of the other, may yearly come twice amongſt them, for taking Cogniſance of Fines and Letters of Attourney of the Unable. The King will be adviſed. That Labourers may take Corn for their Wages. The Statute made ſhall be obſerved. That the Staple may always continue in England. The ſame ſhall ſo continue till the next Parliament, and not be alter'd without the Aſſent of the Parliament. The Merchants Strangers require, that the Ordinances of the Staple may be executed ſpeedily. The King willeth the ſame.

[a] Ita M.S. & Sr. Rob. Cotton an potius having.

It is Enacted, that that Statute made, that all Merchants, coming into this Realm with their Merchandiſes, might ſell the ſame to any Perſon whatſoever, and of the ſame to make Exchange, or to buy Wares, paying the Cuſtoms therefore, is confirmed to continue. That the Cuſtomers do diſpatch all ſuch Merchants coming in with their Wares; and that thoſe Merchants for the Prices of their Wares may be credited upon their Letters and Oaths. It is Enacted, that ſome One of the Kings Council may be appointed to be Governour to ſuch Merchants Strangers. The Chancellor or Treaſurer ſhall ſupply the ſame, when he may attend, if not, ſome Learned Juſtices ſhall be appointed therefore. The Printed Statutes of this Year [e] concerning ſhewing of Woolls, Ch. XIV. And concerning, that none be Outlawed or put to Death without due Proceſs of Law, Ch. III. And that touching Errours and Miſpriſions in the City of London, Ch. X. And that touching the Confirmation of all Statutes not repealed, Ch. I. And that how the Eſcheators ſhall anſwer the Profits of the Lands of the Kings Tenants, Ch. IV. And that which prohibits Exporting of Iron, Ch. V. And that for the Election of Coroners, Ch. VI. And that which concerns the Continuance of Sheriffs, C. VII. And that touching Attaint given without reſpect to quantity of Dammages, Ch. VIII. And that which contains ſundry Ordinances of the Staple, Ch. XIII. And that concerning the Bounds of the Staple, Ch. XV. And that touching Sheriffs, who uſe to take Inqueſts for the inditing of any, Ch. IX. All [f] theſe Printed Statutes agree exactly with the Record.

After all theſe things, the Lord Bartholomew Burwaſh ſenior being then Lord Chamberlain, and [g] one of thoſe who had been at the Treaty of Calais the laſt Year, declared to the whole Houſe, that there was a Treaty of Peace between the King and the French, and a good hope of a final Accord; whereto in the Kings Name he demanded of the Commons, whether they would agree. To which Demand they anſwer'd, how therein they wholly ſubmitted themſelves to the Order of the King and his Nobles: Whereupon Dr. Michael Northborough, Keeper of the Kings Privy Seal, and about [h] this time Elect Biſhop of London, commanded Dr. John Swinley the Notary, to prepare a Publique Inſtrument thereof.

VIII. And having thus diſpatch'd the Tranſactions of this Parliament, it is high time to ſee what was effected, as to the Treaty then in hand between the two Crowns of [b] Now for the better Underſtanding of this Petition, it is to be noted; that about four Years before this [c] William Edindon Biſhop of Wincheſter, and Lord Treaſurer of England, had cauſed Groats and Half-Groats to be Coined to the People's great Diſadvantage; for they wanted ſomething of the juſt Sterling Weight: Which occaſion'd the Price of all things to be very much enhanced; whereupon at the Commons Complaint now in Parliament, the King promiſed to redreſs the Grievance the firſt Opportunity. Yet however many times after thoſe Days the like Practice hath been uſed; inſomuch that now 5 s. ſcarcely contain ſo much ſilver as 5 Groats had 300 or 400 Years ago: So that 'tis no wonder, if things be ſold at treble the Price which they held at that time. For hereby alſo it comes to paſs, that the Prince and Nobility cannot poſſibly maintain their Eſtates with their Ancient Rents and Revenues; becauſe thô they bring them in the old Tale and Number, yet they fall far ſhort in the due Weight and Quantity of Metal.

[c] Holinſhead Engl. Chron. p. 948. vid. Godwins Catal. Biſh. p. 234.

[d] Ita Sr. Rob. Cotton, having in M.S.

[e] *Statute-Book p.*108. ad an. 28. *Ed.*3.

[f] *M.S.Rot.Par. an.*28. *Ed.*3. n. 20,22,26,28, 31,32,39 41, 43,46,47,&c. *& Sr. Rob.Cottons Abridgm. p.*86,87,88.

[g] Dugd. 2 *Vol. p.*35. a.

[h] *Godw.Catal. Biſh.p.*197. ubi Northbrook malè pro Northburgh, ut Pat. 29 *Ed.*3.

An. Dom. 1354. An Regni Angliæ XXVIII. Franciæ XV.

England and France: According to an Article of the last Years Truce, Ambassadors were to appear from both the Kings at Avignon in January then next ensuing, in order to hold a serious Treaty for a firm and final Peace. On King [i] Edwards Behalf there went Dr. William Bateman Bishop of Norwich, Henry Duke of Lancaster, Richard Fitz-Alan Earl of Arundel, the Lord Guy Brian and other Nobles, who coming with an Equipage of 200 Horse, whereof 32 were cover'd with Harness, toward Avignon, were met on Christmas-Eve by the Archbishop of Roüen, the Duke of Bourbon, the Earl of Armagnac, the Lord Geoffry Charny and Others, who were sent Ambassadors from the French King, all who being thus joyned, were received with great Honour by several Cardinals, Bishops, Nobles, Citizens and Others, to the number of 2000 Horse, who met them within two Miles of Avignon, and brought them into the New-town, called Villeneufe, to the Pope's Palace, but the Pomp of the Cavalcade was so great, that from three of the Clock till Night they had scarce time to pass the Bridge.

[i] Knighton p. 2607. n. 50. &c. Stow p. 254. b. Froiss. c. 154. fol. 76. Walsing. hist. p. 161. n. 33

The Noble Duke of Lancaster at his Entrance saluted all the People, and rode forth to the Pope's Palace: Where alighting from his horse without the Gate, he made his Approach to his Holiness with all due Reverence, which he was perfectly instructed how to perform by his Court-like and Princely Demeanour. After some brief Discourse, as the Time would permit, he went thence for that time, and took along with him his Holinesses Blessing to his Lodgings, which had been prepared for him beforehand. All the time of his Residence there, which was more than six Weeks, he kept such Hospitality, that he was admired by the whole Court, having laid in an Hundred Tuns of the best Bourdeaux Wine before his Coming, and behaving himself during his Stay so obligingly to all Persons, especially to the Pope and his Cardinals, that they said of him, "how he had not his Fellow in the World. But as to the Business, about which all these Great Personages came thither, that being openly declared in the Consistory before the Pope and his Cardinals; the English Ambassadors requested to have those Covenants now confirmed, which had before been concluded upon between them at Calais. To whom the Duke of Bourbon, and the Earl of Armagnac, retracting what they had themselves agreed to, and sealed, and confirmed with their Oaths, in the Presence of Guy Cardinal of Bologna, replied now, "That gladly they would have Peace if they "might; but as to the Disposal of Aquitain and the forefaid Counties, neither, said "they, can the French King himself, nor any other whatsoever by any means alienate "them from the Crown of France: Nor yet could they or any of them give their con-"sent, that they should be dismembred from the entire Body of that Kingdom, since "both the King himself, and they also had been sworn to maintain them with all their "Power. But yet if the King of England would cease to bear the Arms of France, "they were content, that the Dominion and Profits of the said Dutchy and Counties "should remain with King Edward, in like manner as his Ancestors had held Aqui-"tain, that is to say, provided always the Regality of the Crown of France should be "reserved, in Witness whereof Homage should be made as of old, to the Kings of "France for those Places. To these new and unexpected Demands the Duke of Lancaster replied; "That as for the Oath, wherewith they pretended to be so strictly "bound, never to alienate those Places from the Crown of France, they might soon "for the sake of Peace be by his Holiness absolved therefrom: For, having so fair a "Pretence to the whole, the King of England was resolved to have at least these Paris "absolutely to himself, to be restored unto him without any Limitation; otherwise, "that those Arms of France, which by the Advice and Consent of his Liegemen of "Flanders, he had undertaken to bear, he would never relinquish for the fear or plea-"sure of any Man living. And that the King of England would never do Homage to "a Person, over whom by Hereditary Right from his Mother, he claimed Superiori-"ty. But yet if they could conceive of any more equal and rational way of Agree-"ment, and resolve to be more consistent with themselves, and more observant "of their own Concessions than now they seemed to be, King Edward, as a Lover of "Peace, will be ready to embrace what was reasonable. At this the Lords of France in a Huff replied, "That if so, they were both ready and able to defend their Coun-"try against the English for ever. And so they offer'd to rise up, but thrô the urgent Importunities of the Pope and his Cardinals this bitterness was soon corrected, and at last they agreed so far, [k] as that another short Truce was taken to endure till the Feast of St. John Baptist following; the Pope in the mean time to endeavour what in him lay to promote the Peace; and for that end by his Messengers to both the Kings, to require them again to send their Ambassadors to conclude on some other Conditions, that that might be more acceptable to either Party. And so they brake up for that time on both sides, and the Duke of Lancaster (having with [l] much adoe escaped the snares laid by the French to entrap him) returned with safety and Honour into England, together with the Rest of his Company, except only Dr. William Bateman Bishop of Norwich, who [m] died at Avignon on Twelfth-Day, and was there Honourably buried.

[k] Froiss. ibid.

AN. DOM. 1354. AN. REGNI Angliæ XXVIII. Franciæ XV.

And that the perfecting of a Peace at this time was hindred by the French is witnessed by an [n] Ancient Anonymous M. S in the Vatican-Library at Rome, which accuses the French King of all, saying, "In this Popes (Innocent's) time the Lord Guy Cardinal "of Bologna, by the Consent of the Pope, and of his own Proper Motion went into "France at his own expences, to Treat of a Peace with the said King (of France) and "Edward King of England: For which Treaty, the Duke of Bourbon with other Ambassadors, on behalf of the King of France; and the Duke of Lancaster, with other "Ambassadors on behalf of the King of England came to Avignon, in the time of In"nocent VI, in the first Year of his Coronation, to finish and compleat those things, "which had been ordained by the said Lord Cardinal concerning the said Peace be"tween the said Kings to be had: But finally they could not agree, and the said "Dukes with their Ambassadors went away in discord from the Court to their several "Countries. And this was done thrô default of the King of France, as was common"ly said, He then denying those things, which had been Treated, Engrossed, and "Sealed by them, and sworn to, in the Hands and Presence of the said Lord Cardinal "by the Will and Consent of the said King of France and his Council. To which [o] Odoricus Rainaldus adds these Words, "What dreadfull slaughters King John brought "upon himself thereby, with a like event, as his Father Philip had revoked the "Peace made with the English Commissioners, from whence we said the English War "brake forth, whereby France was embroil'd for so many Years, will appear hereafter.

[l] Knighton p. 2608. *n.*30.
[m] *Godw. Catal. Bps p.*426.
[n] M.S. in Bibl. Vatican. sign. n. 2040. vid. Odor. Rainal. ad an. 1353. §. 15. vid. M. S. Vet. Angl. in Bibl. C.C.C. Cantab. *c.*229, &c.
[o] Loco supra citato.

IX. Since we spake a little above of the Death of Dr. William Bateman, it is fit that we take our leave something more solemnly of so Worthy a Person, of whom many commendable things are to be said, thô only to excite Vertue in a Degenerate Age by the example of others, whose Liberality have embalmed their Names to late Posterity: He was [p] born at Norwich, bred at Cambridge, and being Dr. of the Civil Law, and Arch-Deacon of Norwich, was at last elected Bishop by the General Consent of the Convent. He was the first Founder of Trinity-Hall in Cambridge, appointing it, as it remains to this day, a perpetual Seminary of Learned Civilians, and giving certain Lands toward the Maintenance thereof. He founded also the Hall of the Annunciation of our Lady in the said University, and gave one of the Publick Chests. And provoking others to follow his good Example, he perswaded one Edward Gonwell, alias Gonvill, to found another Hall in the same English Athens, which afterwards was much augmented at the Cost and Charges of one John Caius, a Learned Physician, and is now after both their Names, called Gonvill and Key's College. Dr. Bateman was succeeded in the See of Norwich by [q] Richard Piercy, younger Brother to Henry Lord Piercy, which Henry was never Earl of Northumberland (thô Godwin by mistake calls him so, and gives unto this Richard the Name of Thomas, as Stow also doth) but Father to the first Earl of that Name.

[p] *Godw. Catal. Bps p.*426.
[q] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 275.

X. About this time [r] there fell a Cruel Dissention in the Famous University of Oxford, between the Scholars and the Townsmen: The occasion whereof was this. On the Tenth [s] of February, [t] which in the Year 135$\frac{4}{5}$ happen'd on a Tuesday, and the Feast of St. Scholastica the Virgin, Walter Sprinhouse, and Roger Chesterfield, with other Scholars, went to a Tavern called Swindlestock, or Swinstock, at the Sign of the Mermaid, in the Street named Quatervois; and there finding fault with the Wine, called for John Croydon the Vintner, and demanded better Wine. Here Words being multiply'd, and the Vintner not at all complying, the Scholars went so far as to strike the Pot and Wine and all about his Head. Upon this Affront he ran down, made his complaint to his servants and family, and afterward to his Neighbours; so that in short a great part of the Town conspired the Destruction of the Scholars, and rang the Town Bell at St. Martins. Whereupon the University Bell of St. Maries was rung also, and so the Scholars and Townsmen being armed with Bows, and other Weapons, had a scuffle, till the Evening parted them, and as yet no great harm was done. But the next day the Countrymen near Oxford, to the Number of about 2000, came in to the Assistance of the Townsmen with a Black-Banner born before them. Whereupon the Scholars fled to their Colleges, but the enraged Multitude breaking in upon them, slew many, whom they flung in their Bog-houses, and then rent and tare their Books and Writings to pieces, and carried away the College-Plate, and what else they pleased.

[r] *Stow p.*255; *Walsing. Hypod. p.*122. *& hist. p.*161. *& Fox p.*361. *& Holinshead p.*948.
[s] Anton. Wood's Antiqu. Oxon. [t] *L.*1. *p.*174. ad annum 1354. ex Reg. Synwell dicto fol. 67,68,69, &c. Dom. Lit. D. ad an. 135$\frac{4}{5}$.

An. Dom. 1354. An. Regni Angliæ XXVIII. Franciæ XV.

There were the Names of more than 28 Universsity men slain and wounded that day, given in to the Bishop of Lincoln a few days after; besides those, who being secretly buried, were not heard of any more. For this Riot the King * seised on the Liberties of the City, the greater part whereof were granted to the Universsity, which they enjoy to this Day. However, for that time the Universsity was in a manner dissolved, all Scholars, but those of Merton College, going to their Friends and Relations, where they continued for a Year or two after. The mean [u] while the Bishop of Lincoln inhibited all Priests to celebrate Divine Service in presence of any Layman within the City of Oxford, and the King sending his Justices thither to take knowledge of this disorderly Riot, there were divers both of the Townsmen and Scholars endited, and certain of the Burgesses, as Richard Forester, and Robert Lardiner, and the Mayor himself John Bereford, were committed to Prison: And the High-Sheriff, named Richard Williamscote, because he did not according to his Duty in helping the Universsity and the Vicechancellour, was removed, and John Laundels put in his Place. The [x] former Mayor and Bailiffs being now clapt up in the Tower, at the [y] Kings Command another Mayor was chosen, whose Name was John de St. Frideswide, and two new Bailiffs, William Somerford, and Hugh Teftele, alias Eisley, who were to hold for the remainder of the Year. The next day after their Names were carried to the King, and Attourneys sent to beg in their behalf his Majesties Pardon, for the foresaid Sedition. About which time certain Advocates for the Universsity were also at Court solliciting an end of these Matters. Whereupon both Parties being cited up to London, sent thither their several Advocates. The Universsity wholly resign'd, both her self and Privileges into the Kings hands: Then also the Townsmen produced their Resignation, and rendred up all their Privileges and Liberties, their Persons and Goods moveable and immoveable, and their Gilds whatsoever, as well general as special, and all their Rights they entirely submitted to the Kings disposal, and this they did (as they confess in the form of their Surrender) "because if they should be proceeded against by "any other way of Law, and solemnly, the examination of their cause would tend to their "greater Confusion and Punishment, &c. These Surrenders were made on the Wednesday next after the Feast of St. Dunstan the Bishop, before John Archbishop of York, Chancellour, and William Bishop of Winchester, Treasurer, and the Justices, and others of the Kings Council, in the Council Chamber by the Exchequer at Westminster. At which time both Parties humbly petition'd, that the Kings Majesty would accept of their Resignations: But the King commanded them to be deliver'd into the hands of David Wollere, Master of the Rolls of Chancery, to be kept until such time, as upon due deliberation, he might declare, whether they were to be accepted or rejected. The third day after the King accepted the Universities Resignation, and pardon'd them of all that the Scholars had done, either in the said tumult, or before; as his Letters, bearing [z] date 20 of May, and still remaining among the Archives of that Universsity, under the Kings Seal, bear witness. As to the Townsmen, who were now also involved in the Censures of the Church, upon the Intercession of several Nobles, and the Heads of the Universsity it self, this Order was at last taken with them. On * St. Kenelmes day, being a Friday, and the 17 day of July, [a] in the following Year, Master Humphry Charleton, Professor of Divinity, and John Charleton the younger, Dr. of the Laws, and Thomas Neville, Master of Arts, on the behalf of the Universsity of Oxford; and John of St. Frideswide, Mayor, John Bedford, and John Norton, Bailiffs of the said Town of Oxford, on behalf of the Commonalty of the same Town, came before the Kings Council, into the Council-Chamber near the Exchequer, where the Allegations on both sides being heard, upon request made, that it would please his Majesties Council, according to the Submissions by both Parties made unto the King, and to his Council, to take order in the Matter in Controversie betwixt them, concerning the late tumult and business, which had chanced in the said Town, by the disorder of the Commonalty of the same, in breaking down and burning of Houses, in taking and bearing away the Books, and other Goods of the said Masters and Scholars, and in committing other Transgressions. The Council having consideration of the Premises, to avoid the Decay, that might ensue to the said Town, made this end betwixt the Parties, "That the Commonalty of the said Town (John Bereford, "being in the Kings Prison, and Robert Lardiner only excepted) should be bound to "pay unto the said Masters and Scholars, damnified in the said Tumult and Business, "for amends and reformation of Injuries and Losses sustained (Death and Maim ex- "cepted) two hundred and fifty pounds, beside the Goods taken and born away, to "be restored again, and this Money to be paid to the said Chancellour, Masters, and "Scho-

u Holinsh. Engl. Chron. p.949. & Anton. Wood's Antiqu. Oxon. l.1. p.174. & 176.

x Anton. Wood's Antiqu. Oxon. l.1. p.176, &c.

y In Minor. Rubr. Libr. Civ. Oxon. C. fol. 27.

z Pat. 29. Ed. 3. p.2. m.26.

* D. Lit. Dom. ad an. 1355.

a Ex Record. Turr. Antiqu. Oxon. p.176. Clauf. 29. Ed. 3. m.23. & Holinsh. p.950. & Antiqu. Oxon. l.1. p.180.

"Scholars, by the Feaſt of St. James, or elſe ſufficient ſureties put in for the payment "thereof, at certain terms, as the Parties ſhould agree upon: And in reſpect thereof, "John Bereford, and John Norton, ſhall be releaſed out of Priſon at the Bail of the "ſaid Mayor, of Robert Minks, and John Dimock, till the next Seſſions of Goal-"Delivery, on Condition that the ſaid Sums of Money be paid, or ſurety put in for "the payment thereof, as before is ſaid, or elſe the Bodies of the ſaid John Bedford, "and John Norton, ſhall be returned to the ſaid Priſon within three days after the "Feaſt of St. Peter ad Vincula, there to remain in manner as before they did. It was alſo ordain'd by the Kings Council, with the Aſſent of the ſaid Humphry, Lewis, and John Charleton, that all, and every manner of Perſons of the ſaid Town of Oxford, and the ſuburbs of the ſame, indited and arraigned of the Felonies and tranſgreſſions aformention'd, that ſhould yield themſelves to the Kings Priſon to be tried by Law, and alſo all others, that were at that time preſent in Priſon, which the ſaid Humphry and John Charleton ſhould name (John de Bereford, and Robert Lardiner excepted) may be let to Bail, upon ſufficient Sureties, who ſhould undertake for them, body for body, to appear at the next Seſſions of Goal-Delivery, there to be tried, according to order of Law. And further it was order'd, that all ſuch Goods and Chattels, as were taken and carried away from the ſaid Maſters and Scholars in the ſaid tumult and buſineſs, by the Men of the ſaid Town and Suburbs, in whoſe hands, and in what places ſoever, within the ſaid Town and Suburbs, by Inquiſition, Information, or other means, they ſhould or might be found, ſhould be deliver'd unto the Chancellour and Proctors of the ſaid Univerſity, to be by them reſtored unto thoſe Perſons, to whom they belonged.

This was the effect of the final Order taken at the day and place aforeſaid, before the Reverend Fathers, John Archbiſhop of York, Primate and Chancellour of England, William Biſhop of Wincheſter Lord Treaſurer, Thomas Brembre Lord Keeper of the Privy-Seal, and David Wollere Maſter of the Rolls, Henry Inglesby Clerk of the Council, and other of the Kings Council there preſent.

XI. This Year [b] about Whitſuntide two Fryers Minors, named John of Caſtillon, and Francis at Arquata, being accounted guilty of Hereſie, were ſeiſed by Order of the Pope, and brought from Carcaſſone to Avignon, where they were both burnt alive. Of whom thus Henry Rebdorf in his Annals. "Being brought to Avignon, and by the "Popes Command examin'd, they read their Confeſſion in a certain long Paper, con-"taining many Articles about the Premiſes. Nay they publiquely affirmed, that Pope "John the XXII, and all his Succeſſors, and even Pope Innocent himſelf, who affirmed "the contrary to their Aſſertion, were, and had been Hereticks, and Reprobates, and "had no Title to any Dignity or Benefice Eccleſiaſtical. For which the ſaid Minors "being degraded of their Prieſthood, were in preſence of the Pope deliver'd over to "the ſecular Power, and burnt within the Octaves of Pentecoſt: And as they went to "the Stake they cried out with a loud voice, Glory be to God on high. And it was "publiquely ſaid, that many of the ſaid Order had been deliver'd over to the ſecular "Power, and burnt in Gaſcogne, and in Italy for the foreſaid Articles, whom the two "Friers aforeſaid affirmed to be true Martyrs. And it was moreover ſaid, how there "were very many Learned Perſons of the ſaid Order, who defended the Queſtion a-"bout Property, and the Poverty of Chriſt and his Apoſtles: [Which alſo theſe two "had done.]

[b] Odor. Rainal. Continuat. ad Baron. ad hunc annum §. 31. M.S. Bibl. Vatican. ſign. n. 3765. in Innocent. VI. & Geſta Innoc. VI. apud Boſqu. Walſingh. hiſt. p. 161. n. 47.

But it is alſo to be remembred, for the Honour of the Univerſity of Paris, which we find upon undoubted Authority, [c] that this Year a certain Auguſtin Frier, named Guido, for defending the Condignity of Mans Merit with God, which is a Matter now generally owned in the Church of Rome, was by Order of the Chancellour, and the Theological Faculty at Paris, to make his publique Recantation in this Form, "I ſaid againſt a "Batchelour of the Order of the Friers-Preachers in conference with him, that a Man doth "merit Everlaſting Life of Condignity, that is to ſay, that in caſe it were not given, there "ſhould be injury done unto him: I wrote likewiſe, that God ſhould do him injury, and "approved it. This I now revoke as falſe, Heretical, and Blaſphemous.

[c] Biſhop Uſher's Anſw. to a Jeſuits Challenge p. 428. ex Guid. Revocat. Error. fact. Pariſiis An°. 1354. Tom. 14. Bibl. Patrum Edit. Colon. p. 347.

CHAP.

An. Dom. 1355. An. Regni Angliæ XXIX. Franciæ XVI.

CHAPTER the Thirteenth.

The CONTENTS.

I. The King of Navarre murders the Conſtable of France, and invites the Duke of Lancaſter to his Aſſiſtance. The Duke ſets forth in order thereto; but hearing, how the Kings of France and Navarre were agreed, returns home again. II. The manner how that Reconcilement was made. III. The War breaks out again between England and France: Prince Edward goes over into Gaſcogne, with his Exploits there: The Lord John Liſle ſlain. IV. Two Letters of Sr. John Wingfield's, ſetting forth the Particulars of the Prince's Expedition. V. King Edward goes into France, obtains a Truce, and returns into England. VI. Barwick taken by the Scots. VII. A Parliament at Weſtminſter. VIII. A Parliament at Paris. IX. The Birth of Prince Thomas of Woodſtock: The City of Nantes in Bretagne taken and recover'd: A ſtrange Malady of Averſion from Company: The Death of Peter Lord Mauley the Fifth of that Name.

I. WHen we ſpake of the Combat, that was to have been perform'd between the Dukes of Lancaſter and Brunſwick, we mention'd among other things, how extraordinary kind his young Kinſman, Charles King of Navarre was then unto him. Now the Occaſion of this Prince's Coming to Paris at that time was to marry the Lady Jane, one of the Daughters of King John de Valois: But ſurely, whatever Alliance or Affinity he had or might ſeek to have with France, he became an Occaſion of many great Calamities to that Kingdom. For[a] as he was the moſt winning and obliging in his Addreſs of any Man living, being adorn'd with Vigour, Beauty, Eloquence, Courage, Affability, and Liberality beyond all Men; ſo he made the worſt uſe of theſe natural Excellencies, and rendred them pernicious by his Ambitious Temper, and the ſecret Delight he had in all kind of Miſchief. From the time of his Marriage he never ceaſed to purſue his Pretenſions to the Countries of Brie and Champagne, but eſpecially to that of Angouleſme. But Charles de la Cerda of Spain, Conſtable of France, to whom the King had given the latter, diſſwaded him from proffering any Equivalent by way of ſatisfaction in that Point. Whereupon the Navarrois retires diſcontented into his Earldom of Eureux in Normandy, and [b] there underſtanding, that the Conſtable was then in his Caſtle in the Town de L' Aigle, he enterpriſed a deſign as bold as execrable: For on the Sixth of January, taking unto him certain armed Knights, he cauſed them to ſcale the Caſtle early about break of Day, and there by them the Conſtable was murder'd in his Bed. This done he avowed the Fact, by juſtifying himſelf in his Letters to King John and his Council; and in the mean time, thô being the Kings Son-in-Law, he endeavour'd to reconcile himſelf to his Favour, yet either to ſecure himſelf againſt the worſt, or by making himſelf formidable to extort a Pardon, he was very buſie in making Muſters, in fortifying his Caſtles, and inviting ſeveral Neighbour Princes to a League againſt France. And althô a Treaty of Reconcilement had been begun, and to all ſeeming appearance eſtabliſhed by that time between the French King and him, as we ſhall ſhew by and by, yet when he heard how the Duke of Lancaſter was, as we ſhew'd in the preceding Year, at the Court of Avignon, [c] he alſo made ſhift to get thither, where ſecretly he [d] confer'd with his Couſin the Duke of Lancaſter, at which time he complain'd to the ſaid Duke of ſeveral Dammages done unto him by the French King, and gave him his Oath; that he would moſt willingly enter into League with the King of England, and for Aſſurance of the ſame would endeavour, when the Truce was once ended, to joyn him at Jerſey with all the Power he ſhould be able to raiſe. And in the beginning of this Year he [e] ſent among Others his Uncle Giles of Champagne to the Duke of Lancaſter with Letters, heartily beſeeching him to come into Normandy with all ſpeed to his Aid and Defence, and to receive his Oath of Fidelity to ſerve King Edward againſt all Men. The Duke accordingly with the Kings leave [f] gather'd a great Navy together, which was rigged and made ready at Rutherhive, alias

[a] Mezeray, ad ann. 1353.

[b] Gaguin, Froiſ. c. 154. Mezeray & Paul. Æmyl. p. 184. & Du Cheſne p. 673.

[c] Froiſ. c. 154. fol. 76. a.

[d] M.S. Rot Par. p. 85. n. 6. Sr. Rob. Cotton p. 90

[e] Stow p. 255.

[f] Holinſhead p. 949.

liàs Radriffe, being furniſhed with Proviſion of Victuals for one Quarter of a Year, and the whole Fleet conſiſting of fourty Sail, had all their chief Streamers beaten with the Arms of the ſaid Duke of Lancaſter, who was appointed with a great Power of choſen Men of Arms and Archers, Lord Admiral of the Navy: But few or none of his Men knew whither he was bound. The Tenth of July he ſailed to Greenwich, between which and Sandwich he was held till the 15 of Auguſt, the Wind for the moſt part all that while continuing at Weſt and South-weſt, which was contrary to his intended Courſe. At length with much Difficulty he came to Winchelſea, and thence to the Iſle of Wight. And it was generally concluded, that he deſign'd for Normandy to ſupport the King of Navarre in his Quarrel againſt the French King: But hearing now certain News of that Kings Reconciliation with France, he returned home again to the King his Maſter.

AN. DOM. 1355. An. Regni Angliæ XXIX. Franciæ XVI.

II. Now to ſet forth the Inconſtancy of this Navarrois Prince, we ſhall here remember (what we promiſed a little before) the manner of his firſt Reconcilement, which was this. When King John ſaw by his Levying of Men and otherwiſe, that Deſpair of Pardon might drive him to deſperate Courſes, prejudicial to Him and his Realm, eſpecially in this doubtfull Juncture, he thought to diſſemble the Matter, and by Flattery to bring him within his Power: But [g] this jealous Prince could by no means be allured to come to Paris, till he had made moſt ſecure and advantageous Conditions for himſelf; "As that King John ſhould render him Lands equivalent to Brie and Cham-"pagne, and an Independency of his Earldom of Eureux from all Others but the King on-"ly; alſo he demanded a full and abſolute Pardon for all thoſe who had an hand in "the Conſtable's Murther; and beſides all this, a good round Summ of Mony, and ſe-"veral other Lands and Advantages; and moreover, the Lord Lewis Duke of Anjou, "the Kings Second Son, in Hoſtage for his Security. All which King John was fain to grant him, being thereto perſwaded as well by the Navarrois his Friends, as by the Neceſſity of his own Affairs. Whereupon in March following he came to Paris, and appeared before the Parliament, where King John ſat on high in the Tribunal Seat, attended with his Peers, the Cardinal of Bologna the Pope's Legate, and divers other Prelates. The Criminal having asked pardon in a formal and ſtudied Harangue, compoſed of Complaints and Excuſes, the Lord James of Bourbon, [h] Brother to the Duke of Bourbon, and Conſtable for that time, was order'd to Arreſt him only for Form, which he did by ſetting his Hands upon the King of Navarre's Hands, and cauſing him to go backwards out of the Preſence, and to tarry in a Chamber adjoining till further Order was taken. The mean while the two Queens Dowagers of France, Jane the Relict of Charles the Fair, and Blanch the Relict of Philip of Valois, and German-Siſter to the King of Navarre, on their Knees beg'd his Pardon of King John. Which being granted, the Conſtable and Marſhals introduced him again; where after a grave Remonſtrance from the Legate, the French King declared him abſolved. But this Haughty Young Prince gather'd nothing but Rancour from that pompous Indignity, which afterwards he ſhewed to the great miſchief and Danger of the Realm of France. For ſoon after this Reconciliation he ſtole away to Avignon, as we intimated before, where he began to conſpire againſt his Native Country, and althô King John upon Apprehenſions of the Duke of Lancaſter, had again now by his Son Charles appeaſed his turbulent Mind; yet within a while we ſhall ſee him again fly out into wonderfull Extravagances, partly of his own unquiet ambitious Nature, and partly being irritated by the rough Dealing of his Father-in-Law. For the Year following King John, being too far provoked with his Inſolencies, came ſuddenly upon him, as he was at dinner in the Caſtle of Rouën, with 200 Men of Arms in his Company, and ſeiſed him on the Fifth of April, and committed him to Priſon; but immediatly cauſed the Heads of Four of his Great Lords to be ſtruck off in a Field by the Caſtle.

[g] Froiſ. c. 154. *f.*75. *&c. Mezeray p.*40. ad an. 1354.

[h] *Paul. Æmyl. p.*184.

[i] *Du Cheſne p.*675.

III. Till this time, thô not without much ado, many hazards of Relapſing, conſtant Care of the Pope, and other well-diſpoſed Perſonages, the unſtable Truce, firſt taken at Calais between England and France, made a hard ſhift to hold indifferently well for the ſpace of near upon Eight Years. But now the evil Genius of France, which hath heretofore been obſerved to extract the Original of its own Troubles from within it ſelf, began to work upon Prince Philip, Brother to King Charles of Navarre, to rouſe the Engliſh Arms againſt his own Blood of France, as we ſhall ſee hereafter: But as yet the King of Navarre was not ſeiſed; nor was his firſt Reconciliation as yet known to King Edward, as will preſently appear, when we ſhall come to ſpeak of his Expedition into France.

Now [k] a little after Whitſuntide, to wit about the end of May, or the beginning of [k] Knighton p. 2608. *n.*40. *Stow p.*256.

An. Dom. 1355. An. Regni Angliæ XXIX. Franciæ XVI.

of June, the Truce being to expire the 24 of the ſaid Month, both Kings began to put themſelves in a Poſture; and King Edward, reſolving not to be behind-hand with his Enemies, prepared to ſend over the Prince of Wales into Gaſcogne, attended with the Earls of Warwick, Oxford, Salisbury and Suffolk, and 800 Men of Arms, with 2400 Archers; himſelf intending the while to wait the French Kings Motions, and ſhortly after to joyn the King of Navarre about the Iſle of Jerſey. Wherefore King Edward [1] conſtituted his Son the Prince, his Lieutenant in the Dukedom of Aquitain, and other Places in France, whither he ſhould happen to march, as well for the Reformation of the State of that Dukedom, and other Places in France, as for the Recovery of his Lands and Right poſſeſt by the Rebels. And by another Commiſſion of the ſame Date, he gave him Power to make Alliances with all Perſons, of what Nation, Dignity or Condition ſoever, to retain Men, and pay them Wages and Rewards. A third Commiſſion gave him Power (in the Kings Stead and Name) to receive Homage and Fidelity from the Nobility and Others within the ſaid Dukedom and Realm of France.

[1] 10 Julii Rot. Vaſc. 29. Ed. 3. n. 6. vid. Aſhmoles Garter p. 671, &c.

For the Prince's Paſſage thither the King aſſigned Richard de Cortenhale, and Robert Bauldron Serjeants at Arms to arreſt, array, and equip all the Ships and Veſſels of 20 Tun and upward, in all Ports and Places from the River of Thames unto Lynn, as well within Liberties as without, to furniſh them with Men and other Neceſſaries, and to bring them to Southampton by St. Barnaby's Day at the furtheſt; as alſo to preſs Mariners for the Voyage at the Kings Wages; and further he had given Commiſſion to John Beauchamp Admiral of the Sea Weſtward, and to Thomas Hogſhaw Lieutenant, to carry the Prince over; with Power to hear and determin all Crimes and Treſpaſſes committed on Board, and to puniſh Delinquents according to Maritime Law, and to do all other things appertaining to their Places. Before their Setting forth * there was ſeen a Prodigy in the Air, which was conſtrued to portend Victory to the Engliſh: For there appeared two great Banners in the Firmament, the one Gules, the other Azure, which were evidently obſerved in many Parts of the Kingdom, and ſeem'd as it were in manner of Combating, to ruſh violently againſt each other: But in the end the Banner Gules overcame that which was Azure, and ſeem'd to lay it proſtrate on the Ground. Soon [m] after the Prince of Wales ſailing proſperouſly from Seton-Haven in Devonſhire, landed in the Port of Garonne, where he was honourably welcom'd by the Lords and Prelates of Gaſcogne, who together with the People of that Country received him with great joy, and proffer'd, as unto the Son of their Liege Lord, themſelves and all they had, and even to live and die with him, on Condition that he would tarry in thoſe Parts for their Defence. King John had before this diſpoſed his Armies in ſeveral Places about the Havens in Normandy, and in other Parts, to impeach the Landing of King Edward, and of the Prince his Son. But theſe Frenchmen lay ſo long thereabouts, that together with their Auxiliaries hired from foreign Parts, they waſted their own Country as bad, as if they had been Enemies themſelves, and idly conſum'd out of the French Kings Coffers ſo many thouſand Crowns; that afterwards he was ſo thinly attended, that upon King Edwards Arrival, he was not able to encounter him, but fled before him, burning his own Towns, and deſtroying all manner of Proviſion, that the Engliſh might find neither Meat nor Harbour. For thô King Edward, and his Son intended an early Campagne this Year, yet they were both hindred by ill Weather for above fourty Days: All which time the French ſtood ready to receive them; but being with this long ſtay wearied out, and their Proviſion waſted; when the Engliſh came to land they found no Enemy to oppoſe them; and firſt let us ſpeak of the Prince of Wales, and of his Actions in this Expedition.

* Knighton p. 2608. n. 57.

[m] Stow ibid.

EDWARD the Black-Prince [n] being thus happily arrived in Gaſcogne, as we ſhew'd before, declared [o] to the Chief Captains and Lords of the Country, the Reaſons of his coming thither, and fell immediately to adviſe with them, how to proceed for the beſt Advantage in his Affairs. After which having well refreſhed his Souldiers, and ſufficiently augmented his ſmall Forces, on the * Fifth of October, being a Monday, he marched out of Bourdeaux in this Order. In the Vanguard was the Earl of Warwick his Conſtable, the Lord Reginald Cobham his Marſhal, the Lord Roger Clifford Son in Law to the Earl of Warwick, the young Lord John Beauchamp of Somerſetſhire, the Lord Richard Stafford, Brother to the Earl of Stafford, and Sr. John Wingfield, an intimate Friend of his, of the Lord Cobhams Retinue, and ſeven ſtout Barons of Gaſcogne with 3000 Armed Men: In the Main-Battail marched the Valiant Young Prince himſelf, being now in the 25th Year of his Age, with a double Enſign; with him were the Earl of Oxford, the Lord Bartholomew Burgherſh, or Burwaſh, whoſe Father was then [n] Froiſ. c. 155.

[o] Holinſh. p. 951. & M.S. Vet. Angl. in Bibl. C.C.C. Cantabr. c. 230.

* Lit. Dom. D.

then newly dead; the Lord John Liſle, the Lord John Willoughby of Eresby, the Lord Roger de la Warre, the Lord Maurice Berkley, the Lord John Bourchier, the Lord John Roſe the Elder, of Bourdeaux, the Lord John Greilly, Captal de la Buche, the Lord of Chaumont, and the Lord of Monferrand, the Four latter being of Gaſcogne, and in this Battail were 7000 Men of Arms. The Reer, which contained 4000 Men of Arms, was led by the Earls of Suffolk and Salisbury, with whom was the Lord of Nemours, who conducted the Carriages. The whole Army conſiſted of better than 60000 Men one with another, and being furniſhed with ſuch a General, and ſuch Valiant and Expert Leaders, might well be counted very formidable: Wherefore the Earl of Armagnac, who was Lieutenant to the French King in Languedoc, Gaſton Phœbus, Earl of Foix, James of Bourbon, who was Lord of Ponthieu, and Conſtable of France, and the Lord John Clermont Marſhal of France, thô they had among them far [p] greater Numbers than the Prince, and were more Powerfull in the Field (if their Courage would have permitted a Tryal) durſt not, either for Fear, or (as Mezeray ſoftens it) for jealouſie of one another, ſo much as once offer to ſtop his Victorious Progreſs. Wherefore in little more than two Months time, the Prince overran all the Country at his pleaſure as far as Beziers and Narbonne, burning the very ſuburbs of Narbonne (or rather, as will appear by and by, the city it ſelf) and taking and deſtroying very many ſtrong Towns and Caſtles; all which are particularly and truly enumerated by Sr. Thomas de la More; thô the Names of the Places are there moſt corruptly written; for which reaſon, as well as for the dryneſs and prolixity thereof, we forbear to add the particulars here. In this [q] Expedition on occaſion of a Fire, that happen'd one Night in a Town where he lodged, he took a Reſolution, which he kept while he lived, never to lie a Night in any Town in an Enemies Country in time of War. Being come to the ſtrong City of Carcaſſone, the Citizens offer'd him 25000 ſouſes of Gold, on Condition he would ſpare their Town from Fire; but the Prince anſwer'd, "That he came not thither for Gold, but to take Cities and Towns with their Inha-"bitants, to ſuccour and cheriſh his Friends, and to offend his Enemies. In this Expedition at ſeveral times the Prince Knighted all theſe Gentlemen, Jenkin Barefort, Giles Stratton, Rowland Davis, Ralph Baſſet, the Sons of the Lord of Albret, Theodorick Dale, Porter of the Prince's Chamber, and many others. In lieu of all whom he loſt only one, but him a moſt Valiant and Noble Knight of the Order of the Garter, named the Lord John Liſle, who on the [r] 14 of October received a Mortal wound with a ſtone from a Wall, of which he died the next day, to the infinite regret of the Prince, and all, who knew his Worth and Gallantry, leaving behind him his Son and Heir Robert, then 22 Years of Age.

AN. DOM. 1355. An. Regni Angliæ XXIX. Franciæ XVI.

[p] Froiſs. c. 155. & Mezeray p. 42.

[q] Stow p. 255, &c.

[r] Aſhmole's Garter p. 673. & Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 739.

IV. But becauſe a more particular account of this Expedition cannot better be expected, than from the Mouthes of thoſe, who were actually concern'd therein (beſides the former Reference to Sr. Thomas de la More) I ſhall take leave to ſubjoyn the Words of Sr. John Wingfield, a Valiant Knight, whoſe [s] two Letters on this ſubject are moſt Worthy to be inſerted, that thereby the Reader may, as by a Touchſtone, try the Truth of Authors, who write of the ſame Matter.

[s] Holinſhead Engl. Chron. p. 952. ex Rob. Avesbury, &c. Aſhmole p. 672.

A Copy of Sr. JOHN WINGFIELD's Letter to a certain Noble Lord, then in England.

"My Lord, as touching News in theſe parts, may it pleaſe you to underſtand, that all "the Earls, Barons, Bannerets, Knights, and Eſquires, were in Health at the writing here-"of, and my Lord (the Prince) hath not loſt either Knight or Eſquire in this Expedi-"tion, except the Lord John Liſle, who was ſlain after a ſtrange manner, with a Quarrel "the third day after we were entred into our Enemies Country: He died the 15 of "October. And pleaſe you to underſtand, that my Lord hath rode thrô the Country of "Armagnac, and hath taken many encloſed Towns, and burnt and deſtroy'd them, ex-"cept ſuch, as He fortified for himſelf. After this He marched into the Vicountie of "Rovergne, where He took a good Town called Plaiſance, the Chief Place in that "Country, which He burnt and deſtroy'd with the Country round about the ſame. "This done He went into the Country of Eſtarrac, wherein He took many Towns, and "waſted and ravaged all the Country. Then He entred the County of Cominges, and "took many Towns there, which He cauſed to be deſtroy'd and burnt, together with "all the Country round about. He alſo took the Town of St. Bertrand, the Chief in "that Country, being as large in compaſs as the City of Norwich [in England.] After "that He entred the County of [t] Lille, and took the greater part of the cloſed Towns "therein, cauſing ſeveral of them to be burnt and deſtroy'd as he paſſed. Then going "into the Lordſhip of Tholouſe, We paſſed the River of Garonne, and another, a League

[t] L'Iſle en Dodon.

An. Dom. 1355. An. Regni Angliæ XXIX. Franciæ XVI.

"above Tholouſe, which is very great. For our Enemies had burnt all the Bridges, "as well on the one ſide of Tholouſe, as the other; except thoſe within Tholouſe, for "the River runneth thrô the Town. And within this Town at the ſame time were "the Conſtable of France, the Marſhal Clermont, and the Earl of Armagnac, with a "great Power of Souldiers. Tholouſe is a City of a large extent, ſtrong, fair, and well-"walled. And there was none in our Hoſt, who perfectly knew the Ford of the Ri-"ver; but yet by the Grace and Goodneſs of God we found it. So then we marched "thrô the Seigniory of Tholouſe, and took many good Towns encloſed, before we "came to Carcaſſone, which We alſo took, a Town greater, ſtronger, and fairer than "York. But as well this, as all other Towns in the Country (which We took) were "burnt, plunder'd and deſtroy'd. Now after We had marched by many journeys thrô "the Country of Carcaſſone, We came into the Seigniory of Narbonne, which Town "held out againſt Us; but it was won by force, and the ſame Town is little leſs than "the City of London; being ſcituate upon the [u] Greekiſh Sea, which is not above two "Leagues therefrom; And there is there an Haven, or Landing-place, from whence the "[x] River goeth up to Narbonne. Aud Narbonne is but 11 Leagues diſtant from Monpellier, "18 from Aigues-Mortes, and 30 from Avignon.

[u] i.e. the Mediterranean in hoc loco.

[x] Aude, Latinè Atax.

"And may it pleaſe You to underſtand, that our Holy Father ſent Meſſengers to my "Lord, who being not paſt 7 Leagues from him, ſent a Serjeant at Arms, who was "Serjeant Attendant at the Door of our Holy Fathers Chamber, with Letters to my "Lord, requiring of him a ſafe Conduct, to come and declare to his Highneſs their "Meſſage from our Holy Father, which was to treat of an Accommodation between "my Lord and his Adverſary of France. But the Serjeant was two days in the Army, "before my Lord would vouchſafe to ſee him, or receive his Letters. The reaſon "whereof was, becauſe He was informed, that the Power of France was come forth of "Tholouſe toward Carcaſſone; wherefore my Lord was obliged to turn back again upon "them preſently, as He did. But the Third day, when We expected to have met "them, they underſtanding of our approach, retired before day, and gat them to the "Mountains, marching haſtily toward Tholouſe. But the Country People, who had been "their Guides to lead them that way, were taken by Us, as they ſhould have paſſed "the Water. At which time becauſe the Serjeant at Arms was in my Cuſtody, I cau-"ſed him to examine the Guides, that were ſo taken, and becauſe one of the Guides "ſo taken, had been the Conſtables Guide, and his Countryman, He might well ſee "and know the Countenance of the French upon this his Examination: And I told "the Serjeant, that he might the better declare to the Pope, and all thoſe at Avignon, "what he had now heard or ſeen. But as to the Anſwer, which my Lord return'd to "them, who had been ſent to treat with him, You would be hugely pleaſed, if You "knew all the Matter: For He would not ſuffer them by any means to approach his "Perſon any nearer; but He ſent them word by their Serjeant, that if they came to "treat of any Matter, they ſhould ſend to the King his Father. For my Lord himſelf would "not do any thing therein, but by command from my Lord, his Father.

"But of my Lords turning back to meet his Enemies, of his repaſſing the River Ga-"ronne, and of his taking Caſtles and Towns in this Expedition, and of other things "done againſt his Enemies in purſuit of them, they were all Deeds Right Worthy and "Honourable to be told, as Sr. Richard Stafford, aud Sr. William Burton can more plain-"ly declare, than I can write unto You: For it would be too tedious to commit ſo much "to writing.

"Now my Lord rode abroad over the Country eight whole Weeks, whereof He reſt-"ed not above 11 days, in all thoſe places, whither he came. And know for certain, "that ſince this War firſt Commenced againſt the French King, he never received ſuch "Loſs and Miſchief, as he has in this laſt Expedition. For the Countries and good "Towns which were laid waſte at this time, ſupply'd the French King every Year to-"wards the Maintenance of his War, with more, than half his Realm hath done beſide; "except the Change of his Money, which He maketh every Year, and the Profits and "Cuſtom, which he taketh of the Poictevins, as I can ſhew You by good Records, "which were found in divers Towns in the Collectors houſes. For Carcaſſone and Li-"moux, which is as great as Carcaſſone, and two other Towns in the Coaſts of Car-"caſſone, found to the French King yearly wages for a 1000 Men of Arms, and an "100000 old Crowns to maintain the War beſide. And know, that by the Records, "which We found, thoſe Towns of THOLOUSE which We have deſtroyed, toge-"ther with the Towns in the Country of CARCASSONE, and the Town of Nar-"bonne, with others in Narbonnois, did together with the Sums aforeſaid, find him every "Year to the Aid of his War, 400000 Old Crowns into his Coffers; as the Burgeſ- AN. DOM.

"Year

"ſes of the great Towns, and other People of the Country, who are ſuppoſed well able 1355.
"to know, have told Us. Wherefore by Gods aſſiſtance, if my Lord had wherewith- An. Regni
"all to maintain this War, to the King his Fathers Profit, and to his own Honour, He Angliæ
"ſhould greatly enlarge the Engliſh Pale, and win many fair places: For our Enemies are XXIX.
"wonderfully aſtoniſhed. Franciæ

"At the writing hereof my Lord hath reſolved to ſend all the Earls, and all the Banne- XVI.
"rets to Quarter in certain places on the Marches, to be ready to make inroads upon the "Enemy, and to annoy them.

"My Lord, at this preſent I have no other News to ſend, but You may by Your Let"ters command me, as Yours, to my Ability.

"My Right Honourable Lord, God grant You good Life, Joy, and Health, long to "continue. Dated at Bourdeaux, the [y] Tueſday next before Chriſtmas.

[y] i.e. 22d Decemb. Lit. Dom. D.

This Letter may very well be ſuppoſed to have been ſent into England by Sr. Richard Stafford, and Sr. William Burton Knights, who returned thither at the end of the foreſaid Expedition; eſpecially if we compare what is mention'd of them both in the preceding Letter, with what is ſeen in the Title of the Following; which is dated a Month later.

The Tenour of a ſecond Letter written by Sr. John Wingfield, directed to Sr. Richard Stafford Knight, who had been in Gaſcogne, and there leaving his Family, was now returned into England.

"Right Dear Sir, and truly Loving Friend! Touching News here after your Depar"ture, You may underſtand, that We have taken and forced to yield five Towns en-
"cloſed, viz. Port St. Mary, Clerac, Tonneins, Bourg [z] Sur Mer, Chaſteau Sacrat,
"and Braſſac, alſo ſeventeen Caſtles, viz. Coiller, Buzet, Lemnac, two Caſtles called "Bolognes, which are near one another, Montaut, Vireſche, Frechenet, Montendre, Ro- "chechalais, Montpont, Montignac, Vauclare, Cenamont, Leyrac, Plaſſac, Montravel.
"And pleaſe to know, that my Lord John Chandos, my Lord James Audley, and your "Men, that are with them, and the Gaſcogners, that are in their Company, and my "Lord [a] John Botetourt with his Company, and my Lord Reginald Cobham took the "foreſaid Town of Chaſtel Sacrat by Aſſault, and the Baſtard of Liſle, who was Cap"tain of the ſaid Town, was ſlain in the Aſſault, being ſtricken thrô the Head with an "Arrow. Now my Lord Reginald is returned back toward Languedoc, and my Lord
"Botetourt toward Braſſac with their Troops: But the Lords John Chandos, and James
"Audley remain ſtill with their Troops in Chaſtel Sacrat, and have plenty of Victuals
"of all ſorts to ſerve them, between this and Midſummer; except only freſh Fiſh and "Cabages, as they have by Letters advertiſed Us: Wherefore You need not concern
"your ſelf about your Men: For there are in that Town more than three Hundred "Spears, 300 Commons, and an 150 Archers. And they have rid before Agen, and "burnt and deſtroy'd all their Mills, and fired or broken down all their Bridges, that "lie over the Garonne, and have taken a Caſtle without the ſame Town, and have for"tified it. And Monſieur John D' Armagnac, and the Seneſchal of Agenois, who "were then in the Town of Agen, would not once put forth their Heads, nor any of "their People, and yet have they been twice before that Town. And Monſieur Bouci-
"quault, and Monſieur Arnold D' Endreghan, and Grimſton Campbell with 300 Spears, "and 300 Souldiers of Lombardy came, and entred the Town of Moiſſac, which is in "Quercy, where now they are; that place being but a Mile from Chaſtel Sacrat, and
"but a League from Braſſac, and You may well ſuppoſe there will be good company to "give each other a taſte of their Valour. And further pleaſe to know, that my Lord
"Bartholomew (Burwaſh) is at Cognac with ſixſcore Men of Arms of my Lords Houſe,
"and ſixſcore Archers, and the Captal de Buche, the Lord Monferrand, and the Lord
"of [b] Crotony, who have with them 300 Spears, ſixſcore Archers, and 200 other Soul-
"diers, beſides thoſe in Taillebourg, in Tonnay, and Rochefoucaut; ſo that all toge"ther they may well amount to 600 Spears, and at the Writing hereof they were un"dertaking a journey towards Anjou and Poictou. And the Earls of Suffolk, Oxford,
"and Salisbury, with the Lord Mucidan, Monſieur Ellis de Pamiers, and other Gaſ-
"cogners, which are more than 500 Spears effective, 200 Souldiers, and 300 Archers,
"were at the Writing hereof, gone forth againſt the parts of Noſtre Dame de Roche-
"made, and have been abroad now theſe 12 days, nor are yet return'd at the ſending of "theſe Preſents. My Lord John Chandos, my Lord James Audley, and my Lord John
"Botetourt with their Troops, are ſet forth upon a journey on their ſide. And my "Lord Reginald Cobham, and thoſe of his Retinue, with the Gaſcogners of his Compa-

[z] Ita lego, pro St. Pierre, vid. Maps.

[a] John hic lego pro Baldwin ex Dug. Bar. 2 Vol. p. 46.

[b] An Partenay?

An. Dom. 1355. An. Regni Angliæ XXIX. Franciæ XVI.

"ny, are also upon a journey on their side. The Earl of Warwick hath been at Tonneins, and at Clerac, which Towns he took, and at the writing hereof was gone towards Marmand to destroy their Vines, and what else he can of theirs. My Lord (the Prince) is now at Libourne, and Monsieur de Pamiers at Fronsac, which is but a quarter of a League from Libourne, and Monsieur Bernard de la Bret is there with him: And my Lord looks for News, which he should have, and according to what He hears, He will behave himself; for as it seems, He stands strictly upon his Honour.

"At the Writing hereof the Earl of Armagnac was at Avignon, and the King of Aragon is there also: But of other Discourses, which you know have been in divers places, I cannot now certifie you.

"Right Dear Sir, I can recommend nothing to you more earnestly, than that you remember to send News your self to my Lord the Prince, as soon as by any means you can; and so the Lord grant you a long and a good Life. Dated at Libourne 21 January 135½.

V. Now before this, while the Prince of Wales was yet about his Expedition in Gascogne, the King his Father, according to an Agreement made between the Duke of Lancaster and the King of Navarre (of which we spake before) prepared with a great Navy and Army of Men to meet the said King about the Island of Jersey; and now all things being ready, he took his Course [c] from the Water of Thames; but in his passage thitherward he was so strongly encountred by contrary Winds, that he was in great danger driven back, till he arrived at Portsmouth. Here he lay with his whole Fleet, till he heard certain News, how the King of Navarre had changed his former Resolution, and was reconciled to the French King again. For when King John [d] heard and knew, that Despair of obtaining a full Pardon for the Constables Death, had drove that Prince to combine with England against him; he sent unto him the Queen of France and Others to assure him in his Name of absolute Indemnity, and full Grace and Favour, and a quiet Possession of all the Lands in Controversie; whereupon soon after the Reconciliation was made for the present, of which King Edward at this time received Advice.

However the King was not disturbed at this Matter, but hearing also at the same time, [e] that his Adversary King John of France made himself strong towards Calais, and had with him a great Army in the field thereabouts, he entertain'd hopes of speedily obtaining a Decisive Battle with him now, and therefore addressed himself thitherward, and at Calais was joyned with some Additional Forces lead by two Valiant Lords, his Allies, who met him there, namely Sr. Henry Eam of Flanders, and Sr. Frank van Hall, and many other Germains and Brabanders, to the number of a 1000 Men of Arms: So that in all, the Kings Forces amounted to [f] 7000 Men of Arms, 2000 Archers on Horseback, besides Archers on Foot in great Number, with Welchmen and other choice Infantry: There being among the rest 25 Men of Arms, and 500 Archers on Horseback all in one Suit of Livery, at the Charges of the City of London. The King took with him in this Expedition two of his Sons, Prince Lionel of Antwerp, and Prince John of Gaunt Earl of Richmond, the former in the Seventeenth Year of his Age, and the other in the Fifteenth; together with Henry Duke of Lancaster, William Earl of Northampton, the Earls of Stafford and March, and the Lord Walter Manny, and many young Gentlemen, Sons to Barons of the Realm; of whom [g] he had upon the Downs Knighted 27, the Chief whereof were his own Sons Lionel and John, Guy and Thomas Sons to the Earl of Warwick, Thomas Son to the Earl of Oxford, and John Son to the Lord Moubray. On the 2d of November, or rather on All-Saints Day, which is the First (as we shall prove by and by) the King began his March from Calais towards St. Omers (whither he heard the King of France was come from Amiens) wasting all the Country as he went. As he was between Guisnes and Ardres there came to him [h] the Marshal D' Endreghan, the Lord Bouciquault and Others from King John; that [i] under pretence of Discoursing Him, they might take a full view of all his Forces: And accordingly they returned with such a Report of his Strength, that the French King was now determin'd not to hazard a Battle with him: But rather to pass on before, [k] breaking the Bridges behind him, and gathering up or destroying all sorts of Provision; that so the English might be forced for want thereof to return back for that time. Whereupon [l] as he design'd it came to pass, for King Edward was so streightned thereby, that he was obliged to return to Calais, his Army having drank nothing but Water for three Days; and all other Provisions being extream scarce. The French Writers, and Froisard [m] also himself (for I am resolved to dissemble

[c] M.S. Rot. Par. p. 86. 29. Ed. 3. n. 7. & Sr. Rob. Cottons Abridgment p. 90.

[d] Knighton p. 2609. n. 10. ad n. 20.

[e] M.S. Rot. Par. & Sr. Rob. Cotton ibid. & Knighton p. 2608. n. 60. ad p. 2610. n. 60. & M.S. vet. Anglic. in Biblioth. C. C. C. Cantabr. c. 229.

[f] Stow p. 255. n. 40. confer cum Holinsh. Engl. Chron. p. 951.

[g] Knighton p. 2609.

[h] Froiss. c. 155.

[i] R. Avesbury & Holinsh. Eng. Chron. p. 951. a. n. 20.

[k] Knighton p. 2610. n. 60.

[l] R. Avesbury & Holinsh. Eng. Chron. p. 951. a. n. 30. Walsingh. hist. p. 263. M.S. vet. Ang. in Bib. C. C. C. Cantabr. c. 229.

[m] Froiss. c. 155. ibid. Mezeray ad hunc an. &c.

semble nothing) say, that King John by these Messengers offer'd King Edward "to "fight him either Body to Body, or Power against Power, whensoever himself should "appoint; but that King Edward declin'd the Offer, and so went home again for Eng- "land. Surely I desire by no means to rob the French Nation of any real Flower of Honour; but neither do I think it the part of a just Historian to receive any thing without an exact Scrutiny, or to let Improbabilities and Indecorums to pass without the least Remark, thô never so well attested.

AN. DOM. 1355. An. Regni Angliæ XXIX. Franciæ XVI.

It is evident both by the Challenge, which King Edward sent formerly to this Kings Father (as from sundry Authors of both Nations we [n] have shewn) and from the nature of that Princes Circumstances, as well as his ordinary Custom, that it was better for him in his own Opinion to make a quick Dispatch of the War; to which Opinion it must be allow'd, his Courage was no way wanting; so he could not have been brought over so often in Person without his own Will; and that it was ever his Aim to obtain a Battle, and that when offer'd, he never refused to accept it, and if he had, had been laugh'd at by all the World, since his only way was to win the Crown he claim'd, by Fighting. Nor was King John a better Man at Arms, or better furnished for the War, than his Father Philip, or King Edward (who was now in the Prime of his Manhood, being but 43 Years old) either of less Courage, or Art, or Strength, either of Person or People, than when he sent his Chartel of Defiance to King Philip of Valois: That he should need to decline the same at this time. And thô for this Assertion of theirs they bring no Record nor Authority, but the Word of one ancient Author, who might herein be misinformed: yet we shall add to these our Reasons a more Authentick Testimony from our Records of Parliament, which to establish my Opinion most expresly [o] witness, "That on All-Souls Day the King marched toward his Enemy, and profer'd him Bat- "tle, which his Enemy by all means refused: Wherefore having wasted and spoiled "the Country, seeing his own Army languish, he returned to Calais, where he made "Honourable Peace, and so came back into England to his Parliament: Which he had summon'd to sit at Westminster on the [p] Morrow after St. Martin the Bishop.

[n] Vid. Lib. 1. c. 17. §. 2. p. 188.

[o] M.S. Rot. Par. p. 86 n. 9. & Sr. Rob. Cottons Abridgm. of the Recor. p. 90. n. 9. ad an. 29. Ed. 3. n. 9.

[p] i.e. 12 Novemb.

Now Froisard, who happen'd by some Misinformation to give the first Authority to this Story, [q] doth yet witness with Others, that King Edward rode with a great Host, as far as Hesdin, where he brake up the Park, and burnt the Houses within and about it, thô he entred not either the Town or Castle: And then as our Writers agree, for want of Provisions he returned back to Calais on St. Martins Day, being the [r] Eleventh after his Setting forth, according to those who say, He set forth on the 2d of November, but the [s] Twelfth according to the Records, which affirm, how he marched forth of Calais on All-Souls, or All-Saints Day.

[q] Froiss. c. 155. ibid.

[r] These to be taken inclusively: For St. Martin the Bishops day is on the 12 of November, and St. Martin the Pope's on 13, but this not meant here.

That same Day being * a Thursday, and the 12 of November, the [t] Constable of France, and other French Gentlemen came indeed to the end of the Causey of Calais with Credential Letters, offering unto the King of England, in presence of the Duke of Lancaster, the Earl of Northampton, and the Lord Walter Manny, to give him Battle on the Tuesday next following; in answer to which Challenge, the said Lords of England having full Power and Authority so to do, offer'd unto the Constable in the King their Masters Name, that he the said King of England, to avoid shedding of Christian Blood, would fight with the French King their Master, Body to Body; so to decide his Right, or if that Offer should not take place, then the two Kings to select Three or Four Knights apiece, such as should be the nearest in Blood unto them; and together with these to try the Matter: But when both these Offers were rejected, the English Lords offer'd to give Battle to the whole French Army, either the next Day being Friday, or on Saturday the Day after, whether they would; but the Constable and his Fellows continuing still in their first Demand, refused both those Days. Then at the last the English Lords said, how they accepted of Tuesday, the Day by them assign'd, on this Condition; "That if they did not bring the King of "England to a Battle on that Day, then they would engage to yield themselves Priso- "ners to the French; so that they would likewise undertake to yield themselves, if their "King kept not the promised Day.

* Lit. Dom. D.

[t] R Avesbury & Holinsh. Eng. Chron. p. 951. n. 40. a.

To this equal but unexpected Proposal, when the Constable of France having nothing ready to reply, had made some Demurr, at last upon pressing he flatly refused to make any such Bargain: So that the English Lords perceived plainly, how their Enemies meant not to afford them Battle, as at first they pretended, but only by Delays to seek Advantages, and to put their Master to Charges, thereby to make him weary of the War. However because of the Season of the Year the Commissioners on both Sides made shift to strike up a Temporary Truce [u] to endure till Easter, which done they parted asunder without any more medling for that time.

[u] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 787.

King

An. Dom. 1355. An. Regni Angliæ XXIX. Franciæ XVI.

King Edward ſtayed at Calais however till the Tueſday [u] following, at which time having paid the Lords Strangers their appointed Wages, becauſe he ſaw no appearance of having Battle given him, he embarqued for England, where the next day he happily arrived, and came to his Parliament then ſitting at Weſtminſter.

VI. This [x] Parliament firſt began to ſit on the Day of St. Martin the Biſhop, being the very Day on which the King return'd to Calais from purſuit of his Enemies; but upon the Account of the Kings Abſence, as well as for other Cauſes, had been Adjourned firſt from the ſaid 12 of November to the 23d, and after from thence to 25th, by which time the King was returned to his Parliament. But before we enter upon this Affair, it will not be amiſs to diſpatch other Matters out of the way, in order to clear ſome Paſſages which follow.

[u] 17 Novemb.
[x] M.S.Rot.Par. p.85.§.1,4,5, 6, &c. Sr. Rob. Cotton p.90.&c.

Beſides what we mention'd, and the approach of Winter, there was a further Reaſon why King Edward made ſo much haſte home into England; for while he was yet in Artois, he had News brought him, "How on the Sixth of November the Scots came "very early one Morning to Barwick, and having by Surprize taken the Town, thô with "the Death of only three or four Engliſhmen, whom they found upon the Watch, they "ſeiſed on all the Goods and Perſons therein, except thoſe, who had got into the Caſtle. But the Caſtle they could not take, the Bridge being drawn up: Thô notwithſtanding they held the Town as their own, till King Edward drove them away; as we ſhall ſhew in due place.

[y] Hector Boet.l. 15.f.325.n.40. &c. Buchan.l.9. p.303. Holinſh. hiſt.Scotl.p.242 Knighton p. 2611.n.1.&c.

Now before King Edward was come into France, King John had [y] ſent the Lord Eugenie Garenciers with a ſelect Number of Frenchmen, and 40000 Crowns in Gold into Scotland, to encourage that People to invade England, thereby to give a Diverſion to King Edward as ſoon as ever he ſhould have left his Kingdom. Whereupon Patrick Earl of March, and the Lord William Douglas, being accompanied with Fourty French Captains of Name, beſide the Lord of Garenciers, marched ſilently towards Barwick, and in a certain convenient Place not far off, the two Earls planted themſelves in a ſtrong Ambuſh. Then Sr. William Ramſey of the Dalehouſe, according to Order, with 400 Light-Horſe in his Company began to drive a great many Head of Cattle near the Town, to decoy the Garriſon into their Ambuſh. The Souldiers of the Town ſeeing ſuch a Booty, ſallied out under the Command of Sr. Thomas Grey, as was expected, and hardly purſued after the Cattle and their Drivers, till e'r they were aware they fell into the Scotch Ambuſh, where being ſuddenly ſurrounded, after a ſtout Reſiſtance they were all ſlain, except Sr. Thomas Grey their Captain, with his Son Sr. John Dacres, and a few more Eſquires and Gentlemen, whom they kept to Ranſom: Thô the Scots themſelves loſt in this Skirmiſh ſeveral Perſons of Quality, as Sr. John Haliburton, Sr. James Turnbull and Others. [z] Hector ſays, certain Frenchmen bought of the Scots the Engliſh Priſoners, and then preſently put them to the Sword, in revenge of their Friends and Parents ſlain by them at Creſſy and elſewhere: But this I'll not believe, the French being naturally a People of more Honour. Early the next Morning, the Scots encouraged with this Victory, approached the Town of Barwick, and when the Watch was in a manner overcome with Sleep, ſet their Ladders to the Walls, mounted and enter'd the Place. Thoſe few Engliſh, whom they found ready they fell upon and ſlew, thô not without loſs to themſelves; for by their Acknowledgment there fell on the Scots ſide Sr. Thomas Vaux, Sr. Andrew Scot of Balvere, Sr. John Gourdon, Sr. William Sinclare, Sr. Thomas Preſton and Sr. Alexander Moubray: And of the Engliſh, Sr. Alexander Ogle the Captain of the Town, Sr. Everard Grey, and Sr. Thomas Piercy, Brother as they ſay to the Earl of Northumberland; thô as yet that Title did not belong to that Name, and in the Genealogy of the Lord Piercy, there is no mention of a Brother of his ſo named in thoſe Days. But 'tis uſual with the Scotch Hiſtorians to create Men and Titles, and then to ſlay them, to advance, as they imagin the Honour of their Nation. I'll give but one Inſtance of Hectors Ignorance, or at leaſt indiligence, ſpeaking of the Battle of Poictiers, which happened a little after, he ſays, [a] "The "ſame time theſe things were done in Scotland, Richard the Son of Edward the Third, "Prince of Wales, He who afterwards as King of England ſucceeded in his Fathers "Place, having conquer'd John King of France, and bringing him into England, &c. We may well expect wonderfull intelligence from this Man, as to the Families of the Engliſh Nobility, who is ſo groſly ignorant of the Name of the Greateſt Prince, Son to the Greateſt King, that England ever produced: But to return.

[z] Hector l.15.f. 325.n.62.

[a] Hector Boet. Scot.Hiſt.l.15.f. 327.l.27. &c.

[b] M.S.vet.Ang. in Bibl. C.C.C. Cantab.c.229.

Whatever the Manner was of Winning Barwick, the Scots are ſaid at this time [b] to have ſlain no more of the Engliſh but only thoſe who reſiſted. But when King Edward heard of the Loſs of the Town, he forthwith haſted into England to his Parliament, ment, as we ſhew'd before, where for the ardent deſire he had to recover the Town and ſave the Caſtle, he tarried but three Days before he began to march for Scotland: and yet in that time the Parliament performed Matters worth our Notice: Of which now we ſhall ſpeak briefly. Only we muſt not forget, [c] that the Lord William Greyſtock, who had been conſtituted Captain of the Town of Barwick, but was abſent at the time of its Taking, did then much incurr the Diſpleaſure of the King therefore: But it being clearly proved, that his Abſence was occaſion'd by the Kings Command (for he attended the King perſonally into France, as he was order'd) at the requeſt of Queen Philippa he obtained his Pardon.

AN. DOM. 1355. An. Regni Angliæ XXIX. Franciæ XVI.

[c] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 741. ex Rec. v. Stow p. 255. b.n. 46. &c.

VII. At the Opening of this Parliament, [d] which was on the Wedneſday, being St. Catharine's Day, or the 25 of November, the Lord Chief Juſtice Sr. William Shareſhull declared in the Preſence of the King, Lords and Commons, how it was his Majeſties Pleaſure, that Sr. Walter Manny ſhould make Declaration to the whole Aſſembly of the Kings Affairs, as one that had the moſt Knowledge therein; whereupon the ſaid Lord [e] Walter began to declare, "How the King had treated of a Peace with the "French, and how for the Accompliſhment thereof he had ſent the Duke of Lancaſter "and Others, as his Ambaſſadors to the Court of Rome at Avignon, where by means "of the Frenchmens Obſtinacy, Matters could not be brought to any Iſſue. How that "during the ſaid Duke's Abode at [f] Avignon the King of Navarre had complained to "the ſame Duke of ſundry Dammages done to him by the French (King) and by "Oath affirmed, how he would moſt willingly enter into a League with the King; "and for Aſſurance of the ſame would with as great a Power as he could, enforce him-"ſelf to meet the King at Jerſey. How the King upon the return of the ſaid Duke, "and knowledge had of theſe Things, with a great Navy and Army haſtned himſelf "from the River of Thames towards Jerſey, but being put back by contrary Winds, "was driven with great hazard to Portſmouth, where he abode till News came, that "the ſaid King of Navarre had made his Peace with the French King. Whereupon "the King being advertiſed that the French (King) made himſelf ſtrong toward Calais "with a great Army; and thinking there to have ſome preſent Battle offer'd him, ad-"dreſſed himſelf thither, being accompanied with his own Forces, and alſo certain of his "Allies, whom he found there, viz. Sr. Henry of Flanders, Sr. Frank van Hall and "many other Germans.

[d] M.S. Rot. Par. p. 85. n. 4. & Sr. Rob. Cotton p. 90. ibid.

[e] William in M.S. & Sr. Rob. Cotton malè, cùm in Recordo W. tantùm ſit ſcriptum; quare corrigendum ex Hiſt.

[f] M.S. & Sr. R. Cotton Rome malè ex Hiſtor. inſcitiâ, pro Court of Rome, &c.

"How the King on All-Souls Day laſt paſt marched towards his Enemy, and proffer'd "to give him Battle, which his Enemy by all means refuſed: Whereby the King wa-"ſting and ſpoiling the Country, and ſeeing his own Army for Want to languiſh, re-"turned to Calais, where he made Honourable Peace; and now was returned into the "Realm to his Parliament.

After all which Sr. William Shareſhull required the Commons," to weigh and conſider the "Kings unweariedneſs and Conſtancy in labouring for their Defence; and that he was now "ready to repell the Inſolence of the Scots, who had taken the Town of Barwick, as News "had been brought to the King: And he willeth them alſo forthwith to adviſe, how "he might be the beſt enabled not only to make a full Victory over that People; but "alſo attain to his long-deferred Peace with France to his own Honour, and to their quiet "and advantage.

The Friday after, which was the 27 of November, the Lords and Commons, after a ſhort Conference had, granted unto his Majeſty for Six Years following the Subſidy of Wooll, namely [g] 50 s. of every Sack, that ſhould be exported during that time; ſo as all that while no other Aid or Impoſition be laid upon the Commons. By which ſole Grant [h] it was thought, how the King might diſpend more than a Thouſand Marks Sterling per diem, for ſix Years together; ſuch Vent of Woolls had the Engliſh Merchants in thoſe Days, there being then above an 100000 Sacks tranſported yearly.

[g] M.S. vet. Ang. in Bibl. C.C.C. Cantab. c. 229. §. ult.

[h] Holinſh. Engl. Chron. p. 951. & Stow p. 255.

Petitions of the Commons with their Anſwers.

That the Great Charter, and the Charter of the Foreſt in all points ſhall be kept: That the Statute, that the Staples ſhall always be kept within the Realm, ſhall be obſerved: The Statute made for yearly removing of Sheriffs ſhall be obſerved: The Statute made for the Pourveyors ſhall be kept.

That whereas the Commons have granted to the King 40 s. of every Knights Fee in Aid to make his Son Knight, the Exchequer demandeth the ſame, as well of [i] Meſne Lords, as of the Tenants in Demeſne, againſt Reaſon: Wherefore they pray Remedy. The Right uſe of the Exchequer is to be kept. That no Mans Lands, being bought in the time of Henry III, which was before the Statute of Prerogative, may be ſeiſed into into the Kings hands by Eſcheators. Let this be more particularly declared unto the King. That the Juſtices of the Peace may determine Weights and Meaſures. The Statute made ſhall be obſerved. Such Juſtices ſhall make no Deputies, neither ſhall the Sheriff, Coroner, or ſuch like, be from henceforth a Juſtice.

[i] i.e. Domini qui Vaſſallos ſeu Beneficiarios ſub ſuâ ditione habent, ſed tamen in ſuperioris Domini ſunt Clientelâ. V. Cowell & Skinneri Etymol. Ling. Angl. in Voc. Forenſ. ad hoc verbum Meſne.

An. Dom. 1355. An. Regni Angliæ XXIX. Franciæ XVI.

It is Enacted, That no Sheriff, Conſtable of any Caſtle, or Goal, be any Commiſſioner, where Men are to be impriſon'd.

That the Points of Confederacy may be declared, conſidering how the Judges judge raſhly thereof: None ſhall be puniſhed for Confederacy, but where the Statute ſpeaketh expreſly, upon the point contained in the ſame ſtatute. That the Juſtices of Goal-Delivery, on an Inditement of the Coroner coming before them, may award the Exigent. The old Law ſhall ſtand. That ſuch Perſons of the Far North-Countries, as upon Appeals Foyn-Iſſue on good or evil, may try the ſame by Niſi Prius; conſidering that the Jury will not appear in the Kings Bench. The Old Law uſed ſhall be kept. That Remedy may be had againſt ſuch, as to defraud their Creditors before Judgement, do convey away their Lands and Goods. The Statute therefore made ſhall be obſerved. That Writs of Attaints may be had of Verdicts given in the Exchequer, as of Verdicts given in other Courts. The Old Law ſhall be obſerved. Such as be Indited before the Juſtices of the Peace ſhall make Attourneys have the hearing of their Preſentments, and Anſwer thereunto. Enacted.

VIII. Thus ended this Parliament, and about the time of its ending, viz. at the going out of November, the [k] Aſſembly of the Eſtates of France began to ſit at Paris: Before whom the Chancellour of France recited in the Parliament-Chamber the State of the Wars, "deſiring them thereupon to take Advice, what convenient Aid "ought to be given to the King their Lord, toward the Maintenance of his Wars, "and the Defence of his Realms; and he added, that whereas the King underſtood, "how his Subjects were ſore aggrieved at the Alteration of Money, his Majeſty offer'd "now to make good and durable Money; ſo that they would grant him ſufficient Aid "to furniſh his Wars: To which the Three Eſtates reply'd with one Conſent; That is, the Clergy by the Mouth of the Archbiſhop of Rheimes, the Nobility by the Duke of Athens, and the Good Towns by the Mouth of Stephen Marcel, Provoſt of the Merchants at Paris; "That they were, according to their Duty, ready to live and "die with their King, and to ſpend both their Bodies and Goods in his Service, only "they required ſufficient time to deliberate and adviſe together, which the King granted them. And the mean while, viz. on the ſeventh of December He created his Eldeſt Son, the Lord Charles, who was Dauphin of Vienna, Duke of Normandy; for which he receiv'd his Homage the next day. Now the Eſtates, having ſeriouſly conſidered upon the Kings Requeſts, and the Neceſſity of his Affairs, conſented to find him for One Year at their own Coſts and Charges 30000 Fighting Men with all their Warlike Furniture, Proviſion and Apparel; but becauſe the Sum of Money, which at firſt they reckon'd ſufficient for that Exploit, together with the Gabel of Salt, were both by many queſtion'd to fall ſhort, they appointed to meet again on the Firſt day of March following, to enquire into the Matter, and to make up, what ſhould then appear deficient: The Progreſs of which Affair We ſhall refer to its proper place; leſt We ſhould be carried too far abroad, when We are called upon to ſtay at home.

[k] Froiſ. c. 155. f. 76. Mezeray 2 Par. 3 Tom. p. 42.

But being brought to the end of this Year, We ſhall now think of concluding this Chapter, when We have after our uſual Method inſerted two or three occurrences, which are moſt properly ranged in ſuch places, where they may appear without diſturbing the Order or Coherence of greater Matters.

IX. On the ſixth of January, or after the Roman way of reckoning [l] on the VII of the Ides of the ſaid Month, in the beginning of this Year 1355, King Edward received from the Hands of Heaven, a lively Young Prince for a New-years Gift; this being his ſeventh and youngeſt Son, was born at the Kings Palace at Woodſtock about ſeven Miles from Oxford: Whereupon he bore the ſirname of Woodſtock, being at the Font named Thomas, and became in time Earl of Buckingham, and Duke of Glouceſter, and was a Prince of High Stomach and Reſolution. King Edward, upon the Queens [m] Purification of this her Seventh Son, held in her Honour a Solemn Juſts and Tourneament at Woodſtock, where were preſent the greater Part of the Nobility of England.

[l] Walſingh. hiſt. p. 163. Knighton p. 1608. n. 33. Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 169. & Sandf. Geneal. p. 227.

[m] Stow p. 255. a

It is ſaid, [n] that on Shrove-Tueſday this Year at Night, contrary to the Truce then in being, two and fifty Engliſh Men took the Caſtle of Nantes in Bretagne by Scalado: But the Lord Guy of Rochefort, the Captain thereof, who was at that time in the City, [n] Mezeray ad hunc ann. 2 Part. 3 Tom. p. 41. & Froiſ. c. 154. f. 76.

City, was so well provided, that he retook it again that same Night, and cut them all to pieces without pity, because they had so falsly violated the Truce. AN. DOM. 1355.

This Summer [o] there raged a most strange and unaccountable Infirmity in England, which was attributed rather to the Malignity of Evil Spirits, than to any natural Cause: For People of a sudden grew mad, and went out of their Wits in most parts of the Realm, whether they were in Towns or in Fields; and so they ran about distracted to Woods and Groves to hide themselves, as Wild Beasts, avoiding the Company of Men: And some ran out of the Fields to the Towns, and out of Towns to the Fields, void of all Care or Conduct, and could hardly be laid hold on; and some wounded themselves with knives, and snapt, and bit at those, who endeavour'd to catch them. And many were carried into Churches, and there they lay bound, till they might obtain ease from God by Prayer. And in some Churches you might see ten, or a dozen, sometimes more, sometimes less, in this Condition; so that it was a great Pity to behold their case. But they soon recover'd by this means, and the Malady was not lasting. An. Regni Angliæ XXIX. Franciæ XVI.

[o] Knighton p. 2609. n. 40. ad n. 54.

This Year [p] Peter Lord Mauley V. of that Name, deceased upon the Festival of St. German, in the Sixty sixth Year of his Age, leaving behind him Peter his Son and Heir, then Twenty four Years old, called Peter VI. de Malolacu or Mauley, who follow'd his Valiant Fathers steps thrô all the hazardous Paths of Glory.

[p] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 735.

CHAPTER the FOURTEENTH.

The CONTENTS.

I. King Edward goes into Scotland, and recovers Barwick: King Edward Bailiol resigns his Right and Title to the Crown of Scotland, to King Edward of England. II. King Edward ravages about in Scotland; but losing a great part of his Navy, is obliged to return. III. He brings along with him the Bailiol into England. IV. A Parliament at Paris, with a Famous Tax therein ordained. V. A Sedition at Arras prudently suppress. VI. King John seises on the Person of the King of Navarre, puts him in Prison, and executes several of his Friends. VII. Prince Philip, Brother to the King of Navarre, obtains Assistance from England, and being afterwards reinforced by the Duke of Lancaster, makes hot War in Normandy. VIII. King John goes against him; but upon News of Prince Edwards Invasion in another part, goes back to oppose him. IX. The Duke of Lancaster, having settled Affairs in Normandy, goes into Bretagne to the Dutchess. AN. DOM. 1356. An. Regni Angliæ XXX. Franciæ XVII.

I. THE Parliament at Westminster, of which we spake in the preceding Chapter, being ended about the Feast of St. Andrew, [a] King Edward immediately set forward for Scotland, and rested not, till he came to Newcastle, where he solemnized the Nativity of our Saviour: At which time He received Letters from his Valiant Son, the Prince of Wales, containing a full account of his late Exploits in Gascogne, as we have declared.

[a] Knighton p. 2611. n. 10. & Holinsh. p. 951. b. n. 34.

On the [b] 14 of January King Edward, having his Army encamped near the Town of Barwick, and his Navy ready in the Haven to assail the Scots, that were now therein, enter'd into the Castle himself with some of his Guard, that being still in the hands of his Subjects, designing to let down the Bridge, and fall in upon the Town that way, while the Army from without attempted the Walls: The Lord Manny also at the same time being busie in springing a Mine, thereby to get entrance by Craft, if Force should fail. Upon this the Scots within, being terrified with these dreadfull Preparations, and seeing it impossible to hold out against such Forces, and so various attacks; began to capitulate, desiring only to be secured of Life, Limb, and Liberty, and they would forthwith yield up the Town: Which Conditions the King accepted.

[b] Holinsh. p. 954. M.S. vet. Angl. in Bibl. C.C.C. Cantab. c. 230.

But the [c] Scotch Writers say, that when the Scots within the Town heard, how King Edward himself was coming to its Relief, they dismantled the Walls, set fire on the Town, and so fled away with all the Spoil they had gotten.

[c] Hector Boeth. l. 15. fol. 325. n. 75. Buchan. l. 9 p. 304.

However King [d] Edward, being now repossessed of the Place, leaves behind him sufficient Hands both for the Defence thereof, and to repair what was wanting in the Fortifications, and himself in [e] three Great Battails, marches forth into Scotland, resolving [f] now to bring that Realm to terms of Agreement, or to reduce them so low, that He should never after stand in doubt of their Rebellion. While he was at Roxborough, Edward Bailiol King of Scotland, considering, [g] how God Almighty wrought graciously and miraculously for King Edward, and being also wearied with so long contending for little more, than the Empty name of a King, which of himself he was not able to maintain; reflecting likewise, that himself was now well gone in Years, and had no Child to leave the Kingdom to; upon these thoughts, he concluded it wholly vain to labour any longer, and therefore coming unto Roxborough, by his Charter of Resignation he submitted the Crown of Scotland, and all the Right, Title, and Interest, that ever he had, or might have, thereto, unto King Edward of England and his Heirs for ever, only out of this Grant [h] he reserved to himself an annual Pension of 2050 pounds to be paid unto him, during his Natural Life. And he earnestly beg'd, that he would now pursue his own quarrel to the utmost, and [i] not forget those manifold Injuries, which the Scots had done unto them both. This Solemn [k] Resignation King Bailiol confirmed by his Letters Patents, made and given under his Hand and Seal, and bearing Date 25 Januarii An°. Domini 1356, which he deliver'd with his own hands to King Edward of England, in sight of all the Lords both of England and Scotland there present. Thô King Edward bearing a particular Love for his Third Son born (but Second living) Prince Lionel, [l] according to some, accepted the Kingdom for him, he to hold it by Homage now of Him, and hereafter of his Elder Brother the BLACK-PRINCE and his Heirs. For so says Knighton, that King Bailiol resign'd all the Right, which He claim'd to the Crown of Scotland, to the Lord Lionel, Son to the King of England. Thô others say, that King Edward not only received the Realm of Scotland to his own behoof, but also soon after took upon him the Royalties thereof, being at Scone in Presence of all the Prelates, Lords, and other great Men of both Nations, [m] Crowned King of Scotland. But We dare not averr so much our selves, because We never find him to use the Title, or any other way to signifie such a Matter.

[d] Holinsh. Engl. Chron. p. 955.

An. Dom. 1356. An. Regni Angliæ XXX. Franciæ XVII.

[e] Knighton p. 2611.
[f] Buchan. l. 9. p. 304.
[g] M. S. Vet. Angl. in Bibl. C.C.C. Cantabr. c. 230.
[h] Speed p. 581.
[i] Buchan. l. 9. p. 304.
[k] Holinsh. Engl. Chron. p. 955.
[l] Knighton p. 2611. n. 22.
[m] M. S. Vet. Angl. in Bibl. C.C.C. Cantab. c. 230.

II. However while King Edward and the Bailiol tarried at Roxborough, Earl Douglas, and many [n] of the Chief Nobles of Scotland came to him, and treated with him, as if they design'd to submit to his Peace, and a Day was appointed for a full and final Agreement: In order to which the King allow'd them 8 days Respite. But the mean while these perfidious People convey'd the best of their Moveables beyond the Scottish Sea, and then William Douglas sent word to the King, "That he would never submit himself "to his Peace, while he lived. King Edward being thus again deluded, marched forth with his Army, divided into three Great Battails, burning and destroying the Country on each side round about him, as he passed, till he came to Haddington. But the Scots had removed out of the way all sorts of Provision, so that for 15 days together the English could get no Drink, but fresh Water, wherefore they were obliged to return. But the Scots were always ready, both on their flank and Reer, to cut off whosoever went forth from the main Host to forage. While King Edward tarried at Haddington waiting for his Navy, wherein the Provisions for his Army were; his Men of War were not idle, but ravaged about in the Country at their Pleasure, doing much mischief to the Enemy, but little good to themselves: For there was neither Spoil to be met with of any Worth, nor Victuals in any Quantity, and Drink, as We said before, none but Water: All that was good for any thing, being carried away, or consumed by the Scots.

[n] Knighton p. 2611. n. 27. ad n. 50.

The mean while the Northern Navy, under the Command of the Lord [o] Robert Morley their Admiral, suffer'd great Damage at Sea; for whether it was, because they had spoil'd a Church of our Lady, near Haddington, called White-Kirk, [p] as was said, or for any other cause, or by chance, there arose such a Tempest and Vehement North-wind, that many of their Vessels rushing together, and beating rudely against the Banks and Sands, were cast away with most of the Men and Provisions within them, and the whole Fleet received much Damage, being scatter'd so, that hardly three Ships came into one Haven together. For Displeasure whereof (say the Scotch Writers) King Edward fell to ravaging again, and abundantly powred out his Anger upon Edinburgh, Haddington, and other Towns of Louthian. Nor will I dissemble, that he is here also said to have made terrible havock of Holy Places, sparing it seems, neither Church, Abbey, nor any other Religious House; as if, says Hector, he was minded to make War against God and all his Saints. But for this I must beg Hector's pardon, if I do not so readily believe it, partly because his Credit is not very great, as We have frequently seen, and partly because Buchanan says no such thing, as also because that humour was contrary to King Edwards disposition, who as Hector says (thô falsly in one point) slew his his own Brother John of Eltham for the ſame ſacrilegious humour; and we have inſtanced more than once in this our Hiſtory, that he hath hanged ſeveral of his own Men, for ſetting fire to Churches, or Monaſteries; and laſtly (not to take Notice of Hector's ſuperſtitious humour) I believe it not, becauſe of that notable Succeſs, which followed his Arms this Year in France, and elſewhere, as we ſhall ſhew preſently.

[o] Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 26.
[p] Hector l. 15. fol. 326. n. 6. & Buchan. l. 9. p. 304. Holinsh. Engl. Chron. p. 955.

AN. DOM. 1356. An. Regni Angliæ XXX. Franciæ XVII.

However this is certain, the King of England left at this time ſuch Marks of his Reſentments in thoſe parts, that becauſe this Deſolation happen'd about the Feaſt of the Purification of our Lady, and ſo many Towns and Villages were fired by the Engliſh, The Scots ever after [q] called it the Burnt-Candlemas.

[q] Hector ibid. ſed ibi bruit malè pro brunt, & brunt pro burnt.

III. When He had thus wreak'd himſelf upon Scotland, and had ſettled things, as then he could, in thoſe parts, he returned home with the Lord Edward Bailiol in his Company; not (as the Scots no leſs fooliſhly, then maliciouſly write) that he fear'd, leſt he ſhould make any New Stirs: For he had upon good grounds, after ſerious Conſideration, of his own accord, Reſign'd his Right unto him, and therefore 'twas not likely he ſhould repent the Fact; and if he ſhould, he had not the leaſt power in the World of doing any harm againſt King Edward, ſince it was only by means of his Force and Aſſiſtance, that he had not long ſince been cruſh'd to pieces; for the whole Scotch Nation hated him, thô againſt their Wills they had by the Engliſh Arms been forced to obey him. Wherefore 'twas not for any jealouſie, that King Edward now took him along with him into England, but rather for Friendſhip and Good-will, that ſo he might be removed, as he deſired, from being preſent among that ſtubborn People, whoſe vexatious Rebellions that he might avoid, he laid by his Right to a Crown, being willing to ſpend his latter days in ſome quiet and Honourable Retreat, which King Edward allow'd him all his Life, even ſeven Years after, at which time he died.

IV. Having thus diſpatch'd the Affairs of Scotland, 'tis time for us now to look toward other parts, eſpecially where the Trumpet ſeems to call us forth to War: Wherefore leaving England for a while, we ſhall ſearch a little after the Condition of France, where we ſhall find by a ſtrange kind of Fate, how readily that Realm inclines to accelerate its own Diſaſters.

On the firſt of March the Three Eſtates (according as they had ordain'd the laſt Seſſion) met again at Paris in Parliament, to conſider about the laſt Tax, and not only to make it ſufficient, but to ſettle a kind of Fund upon the Crown, toward the Maintenance of theſe hungry Wars. And [r] here finding, that the firſt Grant, together with the Gabell of Salt, would by no means ſuffice, they granted a New Subſidy; "that e- "very Perſon, as well of the Blood Royal, as others, whether of the Clergy or not, "Religieux, or Lay-Religieux, Houſholders or Curates of Churches, having Rents, or "Revenues, Offices, or Adminiſtration, Women, Widows, Children, Married, or not- "Married, having any thing of their own, either in their own hands, or in the keeping, "adminiſtration, or tuition of others, and all others of any Eſtate, Quality, or Privi- "lege whatſoever, that are according to the uſual valuation worth any thing: If it be "valued at an 100 l. Revenues or under, being for term of Life either in Heritage, or "pledge, or by means of any Office, or Penſion, during Life or at Pleaſure, that Perſon "ſhall pay to the Kings Aid and Subſidy, of every ſuch 4 l. Fourty Souſes; and of eve- "ry Ten Pound of Revenues and above, 20 Souſes: Labourers and others, living by "their Work and Labour, ſhall pay only 10 Souſes: Servants, Prentices, and others, "who living by their ſervice receive above an 100 ſhillings Wages per annum, ſhall pay "10 Souſes: The Moneys to be valued at the Rate of Paris in that Country, and at "the Rate of Tournois, as Money is current in thoſe parts. But if ſervants have by the "Year but an 100 ſhillings or under, then they ſhall pay nothing, unleſs they have "Goods after the Rate aforeſaid; for then they ſhall pay, as well as others. Alſo all "Beggars, Monks, and Cloyſterers, without Office or Adminiſtration, and all Children "being within ward, under the age of 15, if they have nothing in their hands, and alſo "all Nuns, having no Revenues above 40 l. ſhall pay nothing: Nor Married Women "neither, becauſe their Husbands pay for them: For they ſhall be valued as well after "what themſelves are worth, as what their Wives are Worth too. As for the Clergy, "and Men of the Church, as Prelates, Abbots, Priors, Canons, Vicars, and others; if "they be worth above an 100 l. Yearly Revenues, as aforeſaid, either in Spiritual or "Temporal Preferment, or Eſtate, or in both, to the Sum of 5000 l. they ſhall pay "4 l. for the firſt Hundred, and 40 s. for every other Hundred, till you come to the "Sum of 5000 l. aforeſaid: But they ſhall pay nothing, for what they may diſpend a- "bove 5000 l. nor for their Moveables. And the Value of their Benefices ſhall be "eſtimated after the Rate of their Deſmes, when they are payable without privilege

[r] Froiſ. c. 155. fol. 77.

An. Dom. 1356. An. Regni Angliæ XXX. Franciæ XVII.

"or exception. And as for Noblemen, and those of the Good Towns, that may "spend above the Sum of 100 l. Revenues, they shall pay, till they come to the Sum "of 5000 l. for every Hundred Pounds 40 s. besides 4 l. for the first Hundred: And "those of the Good Towns in like manner, till they come to a 1000 l. of Revenues. "And as for the Moveables of Noblemen, that have not a 100 l. of Revenues, their "Moveables shall be esteemed, and reckoned to the Value of a 1000 l. and no further. "And others, that have not 400 l. of Revenues, their Goods shall be reckoned, till "you come to 4000 l. that is to say, an Hundred Pounds of Moveables, as 10 l. "of Revenues, and so on after that Rate. And if a Nobleman has only an 100 l. in "Revenues, and but a 1000 l. in Moveables, or if he have but 400 l. in Revenues, and "but 4000 in Moveables, or if it be part in One, and part in the Other; they must "be estimated together to the Sum of 1000 l. to Noblemen, and to 4000 l. to o-"thers, and not beyond. This is that Famous Tax, the most Remarkable in that Age; not so much for the Greatness thereof, as for its Universality, it being extended to the very Wages of Servants, Labourers, and other Mean Persons; and besides that, there was taxed 8 pence, or French deniers, in every Pound, of all Merchandise.

[s] *Mezeray p.*42 ad an. 1356. C. B. Dom. Lit. [t] Froiss. c. 155. *fol.*156. & *Paul. Æmyl. p.*285. A.

V. These excessive Subsidies were occasion of many Murmurs, and of some Insurrections, as at Arras especially: Where on the [t] Fifth of March being a Saturday, there arose a fierce and mortal Contention between the Commons and the Chief Burgesses of the Town: At which time the Commons slew Seventeen of the most Eminent of their Citizens; and on the Monday after they murder'd Four more, and proscribed most of those that were absent: For at that time they had the chief stroke in the Government of the Town. But on the Wednesday after Easter, or the 27 of April, the Lord Arnold D' Endreghan Marshal of France, went thither politickly without any appearance of Men of War; but only as a Friendly Reconciler between the two Parties; and having order'd 200 Horse to follow him by degrees, when they were all come, he pick'd up more than an hundred of the principal Ringleaders in this Sedition, and the next day made Twenty of them shorter by the Head, laying the rest in Prison, till the Kings Pleasure might be known in that Behalf. Nor was this Town only reduced hereby, but other growing Seditions were nipt in the Bud, being aw'd with the severity of this opportune Execution.

[u] Paschа 24 April.

VI. This mean while fell out what we also hinted before, the surprize of the King of Navarre's Person, by his Father-in-Law King John: Which was occasioned and performed in this Manner. Since the late Reconciliation between the two Kings, King John was certainly informed, how King Charles of Navarre had covertly dealt with his Enemies, and had imagin'd and treated on divers things prejudicial to the Interest of Him and his Realm: And he heard, that the Lord Lewis Earl of Harcourt had spoken injurious and undutifull Words against his Person, and had in the Parliament assembled for the Kings Supplies, endeavour'd what in him lay to stop the Grant of that Subsidy. Wherefore being now resolved to bear these Indignities no longer, on Tuesday [x] being the fifth of April, and about the middle of Lent, he took horse early before day, and rode from Vernevil in Harness, with his Son Lewis Earl of Anjou, Philip Duke of Orleans his Brother, the Lord John of Artois, Earl of Eu, and the Lord Charles of Artois his Brother, Cousin-Germans to the King; together with the Earl of Tancarville, the Lord Arnold D' Endreghan Marshal of France, and Others to the number of 200 Spears. With this Company King John came directly to the Castle of Rouën by the Postern, and would not pass thrô the Town: So coming suddainly into the Castle, he there found at Dinner with his Son, the Dauphin, in the Great Hall, Charles King of Navarre, Lewis Earl of Harcourt, with his two Brethren John and William, and the Lord De la Preux Clere, the Lord Friquant of Friquant, the Lord of Tournebu, the Lord Graville, the Lord de Maubué, and two Esquires Oliver Doublet and John Vaubaton, with Others: All whom he caused to be apprehended together, and clapt up severally into divers Chambers of the Castle. And then having sat down, and dined on what was not prepared for him, he took Horse again after Dinner, and rode forth into the Field of Pardon. But surely at this time it could not be properly so called, but rather by an Antiphrasis, or contrary way of Speaking: For immediatly hereupon were brought thither in two Carts the Lord Lewis Earl of Harcourt, the Lord Graville, the Lord Maubué, and Oliver Doublet Esquire, all whose Heads he caused then and there to be stricken off before him, without any manner of Form or Process: After which their Bodies were all brought to a Gallows and there hanged up in Chains, and their Heads set upon the common Gibbet of Rouën. However that same Day the King acquitted all the Rest from Prison, except only the foresaid Charles King of Navarre, the Lord Friquant, and John Vaubaton Esquire; all whom whom he ſent to Paris, and impriſon'd them firſt in the Louvre, and afterward in the Chaſtelet; but eſpecially over the King of Navarre he ſet ſeveral of his moſt aſſured Friends of his Privy Council to have a ſtrict regard unto him; and ſometimes he threatned him with Death it ſelf, and had him hurried about to the ſtrong Caſtle of Gaillard upon the Seyne, to the Caſtle of Arleux in Cambreſis, and other Places of great Strength, as a Perſon Unſacred, and not of Kingly Character. AN. DOM. 1356. An. Regni Angliæ XXX. Franciæ XVII.

[x] *Froiss. c.*156.

VII. But this Violence of King John's was followed with Bloody Conſequences, for immediatly thereupon Prince Philip of Navarre, Brother to the impriſon'd King, and the Lord Godfry of Harcourt Brother to the late Earl, combined in a ſtrong League together to revenge the Outrages done againſt their Brethren. And firſt Prince Philip preſently ſeiſed into his hands ſeveral Caſtles in Normandy belonging to the King his Brother. And thô King John ſent unto him to deliver them back again, he was ſo far from complying with him therein, that he preſently took Shipping for England, where he obtain'd a preſent Supply under the Leading [y] of the Lord Miles Stapleton Knight of the Garter, with the promiſe of a ſpeedy Reinforcement to be headed by the Duke of Lancaſter. For [z] before that time King Edward had conſtituted this Mighty Prince, his Couſin Henry Plantagenet, his Lieutenant and Captain-General in the Dukedom of Bretagne, for the Defence of John of Montford the Duke thereof, who was ſtill under Age. And while the ſaid Duke of Lancaſter was thus preparing to aſſiſt the Duke of Bretagne, and in his way thither, his Kinſman of Navarre, Prince Philip, and the Lord Godfry of Harcourt aforeſaid, had brought [a] ſome Troops of Engliſh and Others, the King of France's Enemies, into the Iſle of Conſtantine or Coutantine in Normandy, which they fortified and held againſt the French King. When a little after Whitſuntide in the Month of June, came over to their Aid the ſaid Duke of Lancaſter, and the Earl of Darby (which one Perſon [b] Mezeray thrô Miſtake, accounts for two) and joyn'd with Prince Philip and the Lord Godfry of Harcourt, at [c] Montebourg in the ſaid Iſle of Conſtantine with 4000 Fighting Men. Theſe altogether rode to Carentan, to Liſieux and Orbec, and thence to the Caſtle of Ponteau de Mer, belonging to the King of Navarre, which had been beſieged for more than two Months, by the Lord [d] Robert de Houſtetout Maſter of the Croſsbows in France, and a great Number of Frenchmen. But when they heard of the Duke of Lancaſter's approach, they quitted the Siege in great haſte, leaving behind them all their Military Engines and Artillery, with many other Neceſſaries, which now the Engliſh took for their own Uſe. When the Duke of Lancaſter had victual'd the Place, and reinforced it with all things neceſſary, he marched thence to Breteville (belonging alſo to the King of Navarre) and at that time likewiſe beſieged by the French; and having here done as before, as well by Raiſing the Siege, as by ſupplying the Place; finding that the City and Caſtle of Eureux, which had lately been taken upon Compoſition by the French, was not worth his preſent Conſideration, becauſe at that time the City was burnt, and the Cathedral robbed as well by the Navarrois, who yielded them up, as by the French who gleaned after them; he neglected that Place for the preſent, and marched on the right hand to Vernevil a ſtrong City on the skirts of Normandy, and took the Town by Storm the firſt Day he came before it, and plunder'd and fired a great part thereof. After which he aſſaulted the Caſtle thrice, and took it the third Day, having with him a ſpecial Engine of Battery, wherewith he did Wonders in demoliſhing the Walls of Caſtles. But it being told him on the Morrow, that the French King was within five Leagues of him, he drew out his Army into the Field, and prepared for Battle, ſtaying thereabouts in expectation of him, till he heard how the King of France was turn'd off another way, being called to oppoſe the more violent Proceedings of Edward, the Young Prince of Wales.

[y] Dudg. Bar. 2 Vol. p. 70. & Stow p. 259.
[z] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 787.
[a] Froiſ. c. 156.
[b] Mezeray p. 43.
[c] Knighton p. 2611. n. 60. & Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 788.
[d] Froiſ. c. 156.

VIII. Now it is to be premiſed, that King John, who had before this raiſed a Mighty Army, having heard tidings of the Duke of Lancaſters thus taking the Field, haſted after him, and followed him as far as Conches, which leads ſtraight to Vernevil, from whence [e] he ſent two Heralds of Arms unto him to let him know, "That he "obſerv'd, how he had for a long time been in his Country, and done great Spoil to "his People there, ſo that it ſeem'd he deſign'd not to refuſe Battle when offer'd; "and if ſo he ſhould ſoon be ſatisfied as to that Point. To which Meſſage the Duke of Lancaſter return'd Anſwer, "that he was come into thoſe Parts upon ſpecial Buſi- "neſs, which (Thanks be to God) he had already in ſome meaſure effected: And "that as then he was Marching to ſome other Parts, where alſo he had Buſineſs to do; "but that if the French King, or any of his Subjects ſhould offer to ſtand in his way, "he was ready to make his way by Force, reſolving to do nothing obſcurely: For "that [e] Knighton p. 2612. l. 18. & Dudg. 1 Vol. f. 788.

An. Dom. 1356. An. Regni Angliæ XXX. Franciæ XVII.

"that he would cauſe a Lanthern to be carried behind him, that the French King might "know which way he bent his Courſe. However the Duke drew out his Men, [f] orderly ranged for Battle into the Field, expecting the Arrival of the King of France, whom he heard as then to be no more than five Leagues off. But he receiving News at the ſame time of Prince Edwards Ravaging in the Parts of Gaſcogne, returned back thitherward to give Battle unto him; of which Matter we ſhall ſpeak more particularly, when we have quitted our hands of what remains concerning this Expedition of the Duke of Lancaſters.

[f] Knighton ib. n. 14.

Upon King Johns Return, the Duke of Lancaſter went back to Laigle, [g] thence to Tully and Argentan; and even to the Abby of St. Fremund, where he paſſed over a dangerous Water, the Bridge having been broken by the French, and 67 Men of Arms left there to keep the Paſſage of the Bridge: but againſt them ſtept forth 18 Engliſh Men of Arms, belonging to the Marſhals Battle, and ſlew and wounded them, ſo that none was able to eſcape away. From thence he marched to Carentan, and ſo to Montebourg, whence he had firſt ſet out, no Day paſſing, wherein he took not ſome ſtrong Hold with many Priſoners, as he marched back again.

[g] Knighton ib.

[h] Froiſ. c. 156. fol. 77. b.

Others [h] ſay, that King John follow'd him by way of Purſuit as far as two Leagues beyond Laigle; but then finding, that the Duke and his Men had taken ſuch Foreſts before him; that they might thereby eaſily entrap him into ſome Diſadvantage, the Paſſages were ſo dangerous to them who followed an Enemy therein, went back again to ſtop the furious Career of the Prince of Wales.

IX. However the Duke return'd, as we ſaid before, to Montebourg about the latter end of September, where he heard of the Prince's Victory at Poictiers; at which Battle he himſelf had deſign'd to have been preſent, but that he was informed all the Paſſages of the Loire were ſo well kept, that he could not by any means expect to get over. Having therefore ſent the Lord Godfry of Harcourt to St. Saviour le Vicount, he himſelf ſoon after Michaelmas went laden with Spoils, Honour and the Thanks of Prince Philip of Navarre, from Montebourg in Normandy to Hennebond in Bretagne, where for this time we will leave him with the Counteſs of Montford, adviſing which way to employ his Arms further.

The End of the Second Book.

THE

THE HISTORY OF King Edward III^d.

BOOK THE THIRD.

CHAPTER the First.

The CONTENTS.

I. King John prepares to go againſt the Black-Prince. II. The ſaid Prince his Victorious March thrô Quercy, Auvergne, Berry, and Touraine. III. The French King follows him; two Cardinals haſte after him in hopes to reconcile Matters. IV. Some French Troops cut off by the Prince, whoſe Van-Currors beat up the French King's Quarters. V. King John having order'd his Battails, a Cardinal from Poictiers perſwades him to deſiſt, till he had firſt try'd to accommodate Matters: But the King demands more than the Prince would grant, and ſo no Peace to be expected. VI. A Quarrel between the Lord Clermont Marſhal of France and the Lord Chandos. VII. The Cardinal not able to reconcile the Parties, leaves the Field; Prince Edward encourages his Men; the Names of his Chief Leaders; the Prince's Speech to them; his new Device againſt the Enemy. VIII. The Lord James Audely and Sr. Euſtace Dambreticourt begin the Fight. IX. The Famous Battle of POICTIERS, wherein King John is taken Priſoner. X. The Prince of Wales gives to the Lord Audly 500 Marks per annum, which he beſtows on his four Eſquires that ſerved him in the Battle. XI. The Prince's obliging Deportment to the King of France, &c. XII. Being informed of the Reaſons which mov'd the Lord Audley to alienate his Gift, he confirms it unto the Four Eſquires, and enlarges his Bounty to my Lord. XIII. He returns to Bourdeaux; King Edward's Moderation at the News of this Succeſs XIV. The Pope writes to the Prince of Wales, highly commending him for his remarkable Humanity to the Captive King, &c. XV. The ſeveral Claims concerning the Taking the French King adjuſted. The Duke of Lancaſters Proceedings in Normandy and Bretagne after the Battle of Poictiers. XVI. The Troubles of France freſhly fomented by a Seditious Parliament. XVII. The Lord Godfrey of Harcourt ſlain. XVIII. The Pope ſollicites the Emperour to endeavour to compoſe Matters between the two Kings: A Diet for that purpoſe at Metz in Lorrain. XIX. Seals changed in England.

I. KING John in his Return from purſuing the Duke of Lancaſter, took the Caſtle and Town of Tillieres and Bretevil, which belonged to the King of Navarre, and having by ſupplying ſeveral Garriſons much diminiſhed his Forces, return'd back to Paris: Where [a] being freſhly alarum'd with the News of the Prince of Wales his Exploits in Gaſcogne, how he had invaded his Lands, and was now Marching into the Good Country of Berry, he ſaid aloud and ſware, "That he would ride forth and give him Battle, whereſoever "he ſhould find him. With this Reſolution he began to enforce his Summons, and immediately mediately sent an Especial Command to all his Nobles, and such as held of him by Homage or otherwise, straitly enjoyning them; "that all manner of Excuse laid a-"side, his Letters once seen, they should every Man on pain of his Displeasure, pre-"pare and meet him at the General Rendezvous in the Marches of Blaisois and Tou-"raine, to the intent to fight the English. And lest he should make any Delay in a matter of such Consequence, he forthwith rode from Paris to Chartres onward of his way, to have the surer Intelligence of the Prince's Actions: And there dayly flocked to him thither, and to the parts about Blois and Tours Men of War from every Province in and about the Kingdom of France, as from Hainalt, Lorraine, La Franche Comté, Picardy, Normandy, Bretagne, Vermandois, Berry, Burgundy; and still as they came in, they were set forward, train'd and enrolled, having Quarters assign'd them about in the Country by the two Marshals, the Lord John of Clermont, and the Lord Arnold D' Endreghan. King John the mean while sent huge Quantities of Provision of all sorts, to all the Fortresses and Garrisons in Anjou, Poictou, Le Maine, and Touraine, and elsewhere, where He thought the English might pass, designing thereby to foreclose the Avenues of the Country, and so to cut off all Provision from them, that neither they, nor their Horses might get any forage or subsistence. But for all that, as yet Prince Edward and his Forces found no Impeachment or want, but passed on at their ease thrô the plentifull Countries of Auvergne, Quercy, Limousin, Perigort, Saintogne, la Marche, and Berry, as now we shall shew.

[a] Froiſ. c. 157. f. 78.

An. Dom. 1356. An. Regni Angliæ XXX. Franciæ XVII.

[b] Stow p. 259.

II. EDWARD [b] Prince of Wales, sirnamed the Black-Prince, having employ'd the Winter-season in repairing and fortifying the City of Bourdeaux, and other Castles and Towns in Gascogne, and caused great Quantities of Gold and Silver to be coined according to a Commission from the King his Father, for the Wages of his Souldiers, began his March from Bourdeaux on the [c] sixth of July with an Army of [d] 12000 Men (as one says) whereof 3000 were Natural English: But most Writers agree, that his Forces amounted to little more at this time, than 8000, which was for certain the utmost number he had at the Battle of Poictiers; unless we should believe, that before he came thither, he lost one Third of his whole Army without any opposition, or remarkable Action at all. Wherefore we rather follow Froisard, who assigns the Number to be 2000 Men of Arms and 6000 Archers. With which gallant little Army of Chosen Men (having left the Lord [e] Bernard de la Bret his Lieutenant in Gascoigne, with sufficient Power for the Defence thereof against the Earl of Armagnac, who threatned to invade it) he rode thrô Quercy [f] and Auvergne, where he found plenty of all things, burning, plundering, and destroying all before him in Hostile manner.

[c] Walsing. hist. p. 163. & M.S. Vet. Angl. in Bibl. C.C.C. c. 230.
[d] Mezeray ad hunc annum.
[e] Stow p. 259.
[f] Froiss. c. 157.

When he enter'd any Good Town, well replenished with all things, there he usually tarried two or three days to refresh his Men, and then upon departure the Residue was all destroy'd, the Heads of the Wine-Vessels stricken out, Wheat, Barley, Oats, Flesh, and all other Provision, but what they could bear away, consumed; lest the Enemy might be the better for them. This Course the English held, till they came to the strong City of Bourges, which is the Principal place in Berry. Here they made an attempt by giving a brisk Assault to One of the Gates: In the Action many proper Feats of Arms were done; but nothing of Advantage could be won here; the place was so well Defended by the Lord of Conserans, and the Lord Hutin de Memers, who were Captains of the City. Thence they wheel'd off to Issoudun, a Castle of great strength, to which they gave a very fierce Assault, and thither came the whole Army; but the Gentlemen within behaved themselves so well, that they sav'd the place, and wan Honour from the Prince, by the Opinion they created in him of their Courages. From hence they took their way to Virzon, a large Town defended by a good Castle; but the Town it self was not well fortified, and the Hands within too few to make good the Defences, so that it was taken by force: And here the Prince, finding great Plenty of Good Wines, and other Provision of all sorts, was pleased to tarry three days to refresh his People.

While he tarried here tidings came to him, that the French King was at Chartres, on the other side the Loire, with a great Assembly of Men of War about him, and that all the Towns and Passages upon the said River were forecloséd, and guarded strongly: So that he could not expect to pass over, to get into Anjou, Vendosmois, or Le Maine: Wherefore he was advised by his Council to pass thrô the parts of Touraine, and so to wheel off on the Left Hand into Poictou, and by that way to return thrô Saintogne, and so to Bourdeaux.

This Course the Prince resolved to follow, and having done as he pleas'd in the Town of of Virzon, and taken the Caſtle by force, and ſlain moſt of them within, he proceeded ſomething on the left hand, and rode toward Romorantin, which lies almoſt equidiſtant between Blois and Bourges, ſending before him his two Marſhals, the Lord John Chandos, and the Lord James Audley, both Knights of the Garter, accompanied with Sr. Robert Knolles, and Sr. Frank Van Hall, together with their Men, to try out the ſtate of the Country, and to ſee there lay no Ambuſh. King John alſo at the ſame time ſent forth his ſpies to view the Condition of the Engliſh, and to learn of what force they were: Among whom [g] one Griffith Micco, Captain of 200 Horſe, came upon the Engliſh ſpies to his Coſt: For there 30 of his Men together with himſelf being taken, all the reſt were ſlain to a Man, not ſo much as one being left to carry back word, what was become of his Fellows.

AN. DOM. 1356. An. Regni Angliæ XXX. Franciæ XVII.

[g] Stow p. 259.

Now among others, whom the French King had ſent into thoſe parts to look to the Defence of the Country, there were [h] three great Barons appointed to keep the Frontiers, namely the Lord of Craon, the Lord of Bouciquaut, and the Hermit of Chaumont; who with 300 Spears had for ſome time rode about the Country, coaſting at a diſtance the Engliſh Hoſt, whom having now followed for ſix days together, they could yet never find any Advantage to ſet upon them, the Army rode ſo carefully, and in ſuch cloſe Order. At laſt perceiving the Prince to take the way of Romorantin, they began to fetch a wide compaſs about, and ſo getting before him planted themſelves in Ambuſh near to Romorantin, at the middle of a wonderfull ſtraight Paſſage, by which the Engliſh muſt needs go.

[h] Froiſ. c. 157. & Stow ibid.

That ſame Day by chance there went with the leave of the Marſhals before the Prince's Battail, the Lord Bartholomew Burwaſh, Sr. Walter Pavely, Sr. Nele Loring, and Sr. Sanchio Dambreticourt, all Four Knights of the Garter, with the Lord Roger de la Warre, the young Lord Edward Spencer (then about [i] 20 Years of Age) the young Lord Ralph Baſſet of Drayton but [k] two Years older; together with the Lord of Mucidan, and the Lord Petiton Coutras, Gaſcogners, and Sr. Euſtace Dambreticourt. Sr. Richard of Punchardon alſo was there, whom ſome ſuppoſe a Gaſcogner; but it is evident, that he was an Engliſhman born, and of Devonſhire, deriving his Name, as moſt Ancient Names had their Original, from Punchardon * a place in Branton-Hundred in that County. Theſe Ten Worthies having as we ſaid, obtained leave to ride with 200 Men of Arms before the Marſhals Battail, and to take a view of Romorantin, went accordingly in good Order, and rode thrô that difficult narrow Paſſage, where the French Ambuſh lay, without the leaſt knowledge or ſuſpicion thereof. They had but juſt got out of the Lane, when the French brake ſuddenly forth, and paſſed the Streight after them, and then being more at large, and freſhly ranged for Battle, they followed hard upon the Engliſh a good round Trot, and with great Ardor and Courage of mind made up to them. [l] When the Lords of England who were well forward, heard the Noiſe of Horſes from behind, and looked back and ſaw they were their Enemies, they faced about in good Order, and ſtood ſtill to receive them upon their Spears Points. The French came on very briskly with their Spears couched in their Reſts, and ran fiercely upon the Engliſh, who opening ſuddenly to the Right and Left, ſuffer'd them to paſs thrô; ſo that on both Sides not above five or ſix were overthrown at the firſt Meeting: But then the Engliſh joyn'd together again, and daſhed forth their Horſes after them, and began a moſt furious Combat. The Skirmiſh was hot, and well and long maintained on both Sides, many Knights and Eſquires on either part being reverſed to the Earth, and many mutually taken and reſcued with equal Bravery; ſaving that the French were more in Number being Three to Two: So that as yet it was doubtful, to which Side Victory would encline. But the Matter was now fully decided by the ſuddain Appearance of the Engliſh Marſhals Battail, which when the Frenchmen beheld to come ſcouring along by the Wood ſide, they immediately turned their Horſes, and fled every Man as faſt as he might toward Romorantin, the Engliſh after them without ſparing their Horſes in the leaſt. This was an hard caſe for the French, many of them being now overthrown, and ſlain or taken Priſoners: But about half of them (among whom were the Three Lords) namely thoſe that were beſt Horſed, made ſhift to gain the Caſtle; for the Town was taken by the Engliſh at their firſt Coming.

[i] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 395.
[k] Dugd. ibid. p. 380.

* Speeds Maps in Devonſhire l. 1. c. 10. p. 20.

[l] Froiſ. c. 157.

The Prince [m] of Wales heard how his Van-Currors were engaged, and therefore marched more haſtily toward Romorantin; but being come thither he found the Town already won, and his Marſhals buſie in deviſing how to take the Caſtle. Preſently he commanded the Lord John Chandos to go and talk with thoſe of the Caſtle, to try what their Reſolution was in that juncture. Sr. John made a ſign at the Gate, that he had a mind to parly with ſome body within: Whereupon certain who ſaw him, demanded his Name, and who ſent him thither, and upon his Anſwer to both their Demands, they gave notice to the chief Lords of the Garriſon, who ſent the Lord Bouciquault, and the Hermit of Chaumont to the Barriers. Sr. John having ſaluted them very courteouſly after his manner, accoſted them thus: "Meſſieurs, I am ſent hither from "my Lord the Prince of Wales, who is wont to ſhew great Clemency to ſuch as ſub- "mit unto him, as now I queſtion not but he will do. For he ſaith, that if without "putting him to farther Trouble, you will deliver up this Fortreſs into his Hands, and "become his Priſoners, he will receive you to his Grace, and uſe you honourably, as "Companions in Arms. "Sir (replied the Lord Bouciquault) we do not intend to fling "our ſelves into that Condition: If we ſhould do ſo before we are neceſſitated thereto, "our Diſcretion might juſtly be called in queſtion: Wherefore aſſure your ſelf (Sir) "that we intend to defend our ſelves like Men. At this the Parley brake off, and the Prince reſolved to encamp therebout for that Night; but early next morning, every Man being Armed under his Proper Colours, they began to aſſault the Caſtle on all hands: The Archers being ranged along on the Dikes, ſhot their Arrows ſo wholly together, that the Enemy could hardly appear at their Defences; the mean while Others ſwam over the Ditch on Planks and empty Casks joyned together, with Mattocks and Pick-axes in their Hands, and began to dig and mine at the Walls; but the Beſieged caſt down upon them great ſtones, pots of quick Lime and other offenſive things, wherewith many were hurt, and a valiant Eſquire named Raimond Derge du Lache, belonging to the Lord John Greilly, Captal de Buſche, was ſlain. All that day this Aſſault continued without intermiſſion, but yet alſo without Succeſs; wherefore at Night the Engliſh withdrew to their Lodgings again in Diſpleaſure. The next morning by Sun-riſe, thoſe who were appointed to renew the Aſſault, were all ready at the ſound of the Marſhals Trumpets. This ſecond Attaque was carried on with all imaginable Application, becauſe the Prince Himſelf being there perſonally preſent, as a Spectator of every Mans Behaviour, gave great Encouragement to his People. While thus the Prince ſtood on foot near the Dike, there was ſlain hard by him an Engliſh Eſquire named Jacob Bernard, whereat the Prince was ſo diſpleaſed, that he took his [n] moſt Solemn Oath, and ſware by his Fathers Soul not to leave the Siege, till he had the Caſtle and all within at his Mercy. Then the Aſſault was renewed much hotter than ever, till at laſt the Prince ſaw there was no likelihood of Prevailing that way. Wherefore preſently he gave Order to raiſe certain Engines, wherewith they caſt combuſtible Matter enflam'd, after the manner of Wild-Fire, into the Baſe Court, ſo faſt, and in ſuch Quantities, that at laſt the whole Court ſeem'd to be one Huge Fire. Whereupon the exceſſive Heat prevail'd ſo, that it took hold of the Roof of a great Tower, which was covered with Reed, and ſo began to ſpread over all the Caſtle. Now therefore when theſe Valiant Captains within ſaw, that of neceſſity they muſt either ſubmit entirely to the Prince's Courteſie, or periſh by the moſt mercileſs of Elements; they all together came down and yielded themſelves abſolutely to his Grace: So the Prince received both Them and their Men as his Priſoners, and left the Caſtle wholly void and ruin'd by the Flames: This was done on the 4 of September MCCCLVI, being 15 days before the Battle of Poictiers.

[m] Froiſ. c. 158. fol. 78. b.

An. Dom. 1356. An. Regni Angliæ XXX. Franciæ XVII.

[n] Froiſ. c. 280. f. 170. b.

There were here taken the [o] Three Lords aforeſaid, namely the Lord of Craon, the Lord of Bouciquaut, and the Hermit of Chaumont, beſides the Captain of the Garriſon, who was there before, and 240 Men of Arms, the common Souldiers being let go; and in this whole Expedition, before the Battle of Poictiers, there are [p] reckon'd to have been taken in all more than 6000 Men of Arms about in the Country as the Prince journey'd, all whom he ſent away Priſoners to Bourdeaux to be ranſomed.

[o] Knighton p. 2614. n. 50. licet ibi Broun malè pro Craon & Briciusgauth pro Bouciquaut propter ἀπόφασιν M.SS. Codicum legitur.

[p] M.S. vet-Anglic. in Biblioth. C.C.C. Cantabr. c. 230.

After the Taking of Romorantin the Prince marched on as before, thrô the Parts of Touraine and Anjou, on this ſide the Loire, deſtroying the Country all before him, till he came to the Place, which was ordain'd to be remarkable to all Poſterity for a Victory of his.

III. The French King [q] having already compleated his Muſters at Chartres, began his March about this time, and went thence to Blois upon the Loire in queſt of the Prince: Where having tarried two Days he paſſed the River with all his Hoſt, a great Part whereof went over at the Bridge of Orleans, Mehun, Tours and Saumur, or where elſe they might; for all the other Bridges but thoſe of the Good Towns, were broken down by the French to hinder the Prince's Paſſage. From Blois King John marched to Amboiſe, and the day following to Loches, where he heard, how the Prince of Wales was on the Borders of Touraine, and deſigned to return by Poictou to Bourdeaux: For he had perpetual Information ſent him in dayly by ſeveral expert Knights of France, who

[q] Froſ. c. 159. f. 79. &c.

who continually coasted the English, to observe their Countenance and Behaviour. Hereupon King John marched from Loches to la Haye en Touraine, resolving to give the Prince of Wales Battle, with an Army consisting of 20000 Men of Arms, Lords, Knights and Esquires, all muster'd and past for Men of Arms, among whom were twenty six Dukes and Earls, and more than 120 Banners, with the Kings Four Sons, who were all but Young, as Charles Duke of Normandy and Dauphin of Vienna, Lewis Duke of Anjou, John Duke of Berry, and Philip, who shortly after purchased the Sirname of Hardy, and became in time Duke of Burgundy.

AN. DOM. 1356. An. Regni Angliæ XXX. Franciæ XVII.

At that instant Pope Innocent VI sent the Lord Talayrand, Cardinal of Perigort, and Nicolas Cardinal [r] Titulo Sancti Vitalis into France, to treat of Peace between the French King and all his Enemies: First between him and the King of Navarre (for whose Delivery they had often before laboured hard with King John, when he lay before Bretevil, but all in vain) and then to use their utmost Endeavours to compose Matters between England and France. When these Cardinals came to Tours, they heard how the French King was in eager Pursuit of the English, wherefore they both made haste to the City of Poictiers, for that way they understood both the Armies were bound.

[r] Hæc nomina & tituli eorum, v. Victorell. 1 Vol. p. 911. ad p. 923 & Odor. Rainal.

The mean while the King hearing, that the Prince made haste to get home, and doubting lest he should escape his hands, departed with all his Host from la Haye en Touraine, and rode to Chauvigny on the River of Vienne, where he tarried that Thursday with his Men in and about the Town, between the two Rivers of Creuse and Vienne. The next Day he passed the Vienne at the Bridge, thinking to find the English before him on the other side, but he was mistaken; for they were encamped by a little Village higher on the Right hand of Poictiers: But for all that King John pursued after with great heat and confidence; and with him there passed the Bridge more than 60 Thousand Horse, besides those that passed over higher at Chastelleraut, who also took their way directly to Poictiers.

On the other hand Prince Edward had no certain knowledge where his Enemies were, thô he concluded they were not far off, because his Men could find no more Forage: Whereby he began to be in great Want, and then the English Souldiers repented much, that they had made such Havock and Destruction, as they had done before in Berry, Anjou and Touraine; and yet had laid up but small Provision for themselves against an evil Day.

IV. All that Friday, being the day that the King passed the Vienne at Chauvigny, [s] there tarried still behind in the Town three Great Lords of France, the Lord Ralph de Coucy, the Earl of Joigny, and the Lord of Chauvigny Marshal of Burgundy, with part of their Troops to the number of 240 Men of Arms. These early on the Saturday morning also passed the Bridge after the King, who was then about three Leagues before, and they took their way among Bushes by the side of a Wood, which leadeth to Poictiers. That same Morning Prince Edward had dislodged from about a little Village hard by called Bonmatour, at which time he sent before him certain Currours, to try if they could meet with any Adventure, and to get Intelligence whereabout the French Army was. These were in number sixty Men of Arms, all excellently well mounted, under the Leading of Sr. Eustace Dambreticourt a young Gentleman, Son to the Lord Sanchio Dambreticourt, who was Knight of the Garter, with whom was joyned the Lord John de St. Guislain, another Native of Hainalt; and soon after their setting forth they met by chance with the Three French Lords aforesaid, as they rode along by the side of the said Wood. The Frenchmen presently knew them for their Enemies, wherefore they strait clap'd on their Helmets, display'd their Banners, and came a good round Trot toward the Englishmen. But they seeing their Design, and withall how far they exceeded them in Number, determin'd to fly, and suffer the French to pursue, as knowing the Prince with his Horse was not far behind. So they turned their Horses and took down by a Corner of the Wood, with the Frenchmen at their Heels upon the Spurr, crying out their Martial Cries with great Clamour. But as they pursued thus eagarly, unawares they came where the Prince was with his Battail, expecting some News from those, whom he had sent forth for that Purpose. The Lord Ralph de Coucy rode so forward, that he was suddenly under the Princes Banner, where after a couragious Resistance he was taken Prisoner, together with the Earl of Joigny, and the Lord of Chauvigny, and an [t] Hundred Men of Arms, as many more being slain; only about Fourty escaped away by reason of the Covert of the Wood. This was the first lucky præludium to that Famous Victory, which was already destin'd for the English.

[s] Froiss. ibid. confer cum Knighton p. 2614. n. 50.

[t] M.S. vet. Ang. in Bibl. C.C.C. Cantab. t. 230.

From these Prisoners Prince Edward fully understood the Condition of his Enemies,

An. Dom. 1356. An. Regni Angliæ XXX. Franciæ XVII.

and how they followed him so near, that he could not handsomly avoid Battle, if he would; wherefore having reassembled all his Men, and set them in close Order, he gave Command, that none should presume to go before the Marshals Banners. And thus he rode without any further adventure the remaining part of that Saturday, till he came into the Fields of Beauvoir and Maupertuis, within two little Leagues of Poictiers; where finding a convenient place he resolved to encamp there that Night, and the mean while sent forth the Lord John Greilly, Captal de Busch, the Lord Edmund of Pamiers, the Lord Bartholomew Burwash, and Sr. Eustace Dambreticourt with 200 Men of Arms well-mounted, to observe the Countenance of the Enemy. These Knights rode so far, that they view'd the Kings great Battail, and saw all the Country cover'd with Men of Arms: But yet their Courage was so great, that they could not forbear their hands; but set on the tail of their Army, and overthrew many to the Earth, and took divers Prisoners, till the whole Host began to move that way. For when tidings hereof were brought to King John, just as he was entring into the City of Poictiers, he immediately faced about, commanding all Men to do the same, and so he returned into the Field again, where it was very late, before he could take up his Lodgings. The English Detachment return'd safe and Victorious again to the Prince, and related to him what they had seen, and done, and found, saying withall, "That the "French Army was exceeding Numerous. "Well then (said the Prince) in the Name "of God let us consider, how we may fight with them at our best Advantage; for a-"gainst Number Policy is requisite. And so that Night he chose for his Camp a strong Place among Hedges, Vines, and Bushes: And a good Watch was set, as was needfull, the Frenchmen on their part doing the like: And thus both Armies rested for that Night.

[u] Froiss. c. 160. fol. 79. b. [x] Ex Literis Clement. VI. PPæ, dat. Avin. XI. Kal. Julii An° Pontif. III. Extant apud Odor. Raināld. ad annum 1344 §. 62.

V. Now [u] on the Sunday Morning the French King, who was wonderfull desirous to have Battle, heard Mass in his Pavilion, took the Communion in both kinds (for [x] that Privilege had been granted him long since) and received Absolution together with his Four Sons: After which there came to him his Brother Philip, Duke of Orleans, the Lord Peter, Duke of Bourbon, the Lord Walter de Brenne, Duke of Athens, and Constable of France, Charles Earl of Tancarville, the Earl of Salebruse, the Earl of Dampmartin, the Earl of Ventador, and divers others, as well Barons of France, as others, who held of that Crown, as the Lord John Clermont, and the Lord Arnold D' Endreghan, Marshals of France, the Lord of St. Venant, the Lord John of Landas, the Lord Eustace Ribemont, who had so signalized himself by combatting hand to hand with King Edward at Calais; the Lord of Fiennes, the Lord Geoffry Charny, the Lord of Chastillon, the Lord of Suilly, the Lord of Nesle, Sr. Robert Duras, and divers others, with all whom the King then held a Council of War in his Royal Pavilion.

In the end it was universally agreed, that all the Army should be drawn out in Battle Array into the Field, and every Lord Display his Banner, and so set forward against the Enemy in the Name of God and St. Dennis.

So the Trumpets sounded, and every Man mounted his Horse, and rode forth into the Field, where they saw the Kings Banner standing aloft, and waving in the Wind. There you might have beheld a most Beautifull Sight of Fair Harness, of shining steel, Feathered Crests of glittering Helmets, and the Rich Embroidery of silken Surcoats of Arms, together with Golden Standards, Banners, and Penons Gloriously moving in the Air. For there was all the Flower of the Nobility and Gentry of France, none daring at that time to stay at home, without Invincible Necessity, or for the Defence of the Realm, unless he would hazard his Reputation for ever.

[y] Froiss. & Du Chesne legunt Seize, i. e. 16000; sed ut puto figuris decepti Codicum Exscriptores; cùm aliàs id. Froiss. dicat totum armatorum numerum ultrà 20000 non ascendisse: Aliter ad 48000 Armatorum millia, præter pedites numerentur; quod absurdum. [z] Vid. Odor. Rainal. ad hunc an. §. 7. &c.

This Great Army by Advice of the Constable and Marshals was ranged into Three Battalia's, the least whereof contained [y] 6000 Men of Arms, all being Muster'd and past for such, besides the Foot: The First was led by Monsieur Philip Duke of Orleans, King John's Brother; (thô he was 24 Years younger than the King, being born the same Year with Charles the Dauphin, who was now but 20 Years of Age.) With this young Prince there were 36 Banners, and twice as many Penons: The Second Battail was under the Duke of Normandy, Charles the Dauphin, and with him were his two Brethren, Lewis Duke of Anjou, and John Duke of Berry: The King himself brought up the Third, having with him his Youngest Son the Lord Philip Duke of Touraine, and afterwards of Burgundy, with a great Number of his Prime Nobility, and others; this Third Battail consisted of 40000 Chosen Men, whereof 8000 were Men of Arms, [z] all the whole Host was extraordinary well equipped and every way duly provided. And while the Marshals and other Officers were Ordering them, the King

King called unto him the Lord Euſtace Ribemont, the Lord John of Landas, and the Lord Richard de Beaujeu, and ſaid unto them, "Meſſieurs, ride you on before and mark "the Countenance of the Engliſhmen, and conſider exactly how many they may a- "mount to, and by what means we may beſt deal with them, whether on Horſeback or "on Foot. Now while theſe Three Lords rode forth, King John being Mounted on a large White Courſer to be ſeen of all, came up to the Head of his Troops, and ſaid aloud with a Couragious and High Voice, [a] "Meſſieurs, When You are at Paris, at "Chartres, at Orleans, or Rouën, then You threaten theſe Engliſhmen terribly, and wiſh "nothing more than to be in Arms againſt them. Now ſhall your Deſire be granted, "I'll lead You, where You ſhall be ſure to find 'um. Let me therefore now ſee the "effects of that Ill-will You bear them, and how well You can Revenge all the Diſ- "pleaſures and Damages, which they have done unto You: For without doubt We "ſhall not part without Blows. Such as were within hearing, anſwer'd briskly, "Sir, "in Gods Name be it ſo: We deſire nothing elſe; but would gladly ſee our Enemies. Within a while after the Three Lords of France return'd to the King, who preſently demanded what News? Whereupon the Lord Euſtace Ribemont for himſelf and his Fellows, anſwer'd thus, "Sir, We have view'd the Engliſhmen, and by our Eſtimation "they are not above 2000 Men of Arms, 4000 Archers, and 1500 others; howbeit "they are encamped in a ſtrong Place. And as far as I can imagine, they make up but "One Battail, but yet they are very wiſely Order'd, and along by the way they have ſtrongly "fortified the Hedges and Buſhes; A Party of their Archers lining the Hedges; ſo that "none can go or ride that way, but he muſt lie open to their Shot on the Flank: And "yet that way muſt We go, if We intend to attack 'um. Into this Lane there is but "one Paſſage neither, whereat as We judge, about 4 Horſemen may ride abreaſt, and "at the end of this Hedged Lane, where no Man can well paſs either on Foot or "Horſeback, ſtands a ſquare Battail of Men of Arms all on Foot, the Archers before "them in manner of an Herſe; ſo that eaſily they cannot be diſcomfited. Well, ſaid the "King, what then do you adviſe as beſt for Us to do? Sir (ſaid the Lord Euſtace) Let "Us all alight on Foot, except 300 Men of Arms, the moſt Select of all the Hoſt, and beſt- "armed, and beſt-mounted, who ſhall firſt a little break and open the Archers Battail, "and then immediately your Men of Arms to ſtrike in after them on Foot, and ſo to "cope with their Men of Arms hand to hand. But only let the German Cuiraſſiers re- "main ſtill on Horſeback, to comfort the Marſhals, if need ſhall be. This is the beſt "Advice that I can give: If any other judge any other way better, let him ſpeak. The King ſaid, "Thus it ſhall be done. And accordingly the two Marſhals rode from Bat- tail to Battail, and choſe [b] out 300 Knights and Eſquires of the moſt Valiant and Ex- pert Men of Arms of all the Hoſt, every Man well-mounted on a ſtrong barbed Cour- ſer, and Arm'd at all points himſelf: And Order was given, that the German Brigade of Cuiraſſiers ſhould continue ſtill on Horſeback, to aſſiſt, where moſt need ſhould be, under their Leaders, who were the Earls of Saltzburg, Neydo, and [c] Naſſau.

AN. DOM. 1356
An. Regni Angliæ XXX. Franciæ XVII.

[a] Froiſ. c. 160. and True uſe of Armory in Vitâ Domini Joh. Chandos p. 47.

[b] Froiſ. ibid. & Mezeray.

[c] Du Cheſne legit Noſto: ſed aliàs Naſſau, Froiſ. Noſcy; culpa vett. M.SS.

But here I muſt needs reflect on the Vanity of thoſe French Authors, who think- ing to palliate the Loſs, they received this Day, affirm, that King John in contempt of the Engliſh Forces, reſolved to make uſe only of his Infantry; whereat (ſay they) his Cavalry were ſo diſguſted, that they became backward in performing their Duty: And [d] One adds, how there fell among them a Dangerous Emulation, concerning who ſhould be reckon'd among that Famous Three-Hundred, who were to bear the brunt of the Danger, by breaking thrô the Archers. But the Conſideration of the known Prudence of many of the French Captains, who were notoriouſly Expert in War, com- par'd with that more Rational and Authentick account We have laid down from an Author of thoſe Days, may ſufficiently evince the Falſity of ſuch Men, who out of Ignorance or Deſign make ſuch Incredible Reflexions on the Wiſdom of the French King.

[d] Paul. Æmyl. p. 286.

He for his part [e] was there like a Valiant Prince, Armed at all Points in his Royal Habiliments, and it ſeems was ſo far from abſolutely deſpiſing the inconſiderable Num- bers of the Engliſh, that for his better ſecurity, Twenty more were order'd to appear that day, Arm'd in like manner with him. His Eldeſt Son, the Dauphin, was commit- ted to the Care of the Lord of St. Venant, the Lord of Landas, and the Lord Theobald of Bodenay, and the Lord Arnold [f] of Cervoles, a right Hardy young Gentleman, com- monly called the Arch-Prieſt, was clad in the Armour of his Second Son, Lewis Duke of Anjou, and Earl of Alanſon.

[e] Froiſ. c. 160.

[f] Ita Mezeray legit illius nomen alii Queſnol, alii Canol, alii deniq; Knolles, & fratrem dicunt fuiſſe Rob. Knolles, Mil. Angli. ſed tum quomodò contrà Anglos in hâc pugnâ ſtaret?

The [g] Three Battails being all ready ranged in the Field, and every Lord in his due Place under his own Banner, Command was given, that all Men ſhould put off their Spurs, [g] Froiſ. c. 161.

An. Dom. 1356. An. Regni Angliæ XXX. Franciæ XVII.

Spurs, and cut their Spears to five Foot length, as most commodious for such, who had left their Horses. But [h] at that instant, as they were ready to march against the Prince, Talayrand the Cardinal, having rode that Morning from Poictiers, came hastily to King John, and kneeling down before him with his hands in the most suppliant posture lifted up, desired him for Jesus Christ's sake to stop one Moment, till he might speak with him, which being granted, he said, "Sir, You have here all the "Flower of your Realm against an handfull of Englishmen, if we compare their Num- "bers to Yours, and surely if You can get them to yield to your Conditions, it will be "more profitable by far, and nothing less Honourable to Conquer them so cheaply, than "to hazard so flourishing an Army, as is here present. Wherefore Sir, most humbly, "and in the Name of God, I require You, that You will grant me time, before You go for- "ward, to ride yonder to the Prince, and shew him at what Disadvantage You have got "him. I am content You do so, answer'd the King, on condition You make a quick re- "turn back again. Then the Cardinal took his Horse, and rode toward the Prince of Wales, whom he found among his Men on foot, Armed at all Points, but his Helmet; the Cardinal alighting from his Horse came to him, and was received courteously of the Prince. Salutation being therefore taken and given, the Cardinal said, "O my "Fair Son, surely if You and Your Council do but rightly consider the strength of the "French King; You will not deny me leave to endeavour to compose Matters between "You, if I may. The Prince, who was Young and Lusty (being then but Twenty five Years and three Months old) answer'd in these Words; "Father, the Honour of "me and of my Country saved, I would willingly admit of any Reasonable Conditions. Said the Cardinal, "Sir, You say well, and I shall make You Friends, if I can; for it "would be a great Pity, if so many Noble and Gallant Spirits, as are now in the Field "on both sides, should be suffer'd to joyn together in Bloody Battle. And with that the Cardinal hasted to Horse, and rode back to King John, to whom he said, "Sir, You "need not make any such great haste to fight with your Enemies, for they cannot fly from "You, thô they would, they are in such a place: Wherefore, Dear Sir, I heartily re- "quire You to forbear for this day only, till to Morrow at Sun-rise, that during this "while We may endeavour to compose Matters handsomly. The King was extream loath to yield thus much, for several of his Council were utterly against it: But the Cardinal insisted with such Zeal, and shew'd such fair and plausible Reasons, that at last the King agreed to a Truce, till the time aforesaid. And in that very place there was presently pitch'd up for the King a Pavilion of Red Silk, fresh and Rich, embroider'd with Golden Lillies, and leave was given for all Men to take up their Lodgings, except only the Marshals Battails. All that Sunday the Cardinal did nothing but ride too and fro between the two Armies, in hopes to Reconcile the Parties; but the High Conceits of the French King dash'd all these Pious Endeavours of his. For at first, he said, "he would not agree to loose so great an Advantage, unless he might have Four "Principal Englishmen at his Pleasure, and the Prince, and all the Rest to yield themselves to him to be Ransomed. This insolent Demand was with great Disdain utterly rejected by the Prince, who yet offer'd very largely, as "to restore all that ever he "had won, since he marched out of Bourdeaux that Summer, both Towns and Castles, "and to acquit all the Prisoners, whom he had taken at that season; and also to swear, "not to bear Arms in Person against the French for the space of seven Years after. But these Offers the French King and his Council refus'd to accept, and at the last stuck close to this peremptory Demand; "That the Prince and an Hundred of his Knights "should yield themselves to the King as Prisoners of War, all the Rest to be at liberty: "Otherwise, that He would use the Advantage he had over them, to the utter de-"struction of them; the Prince his Person only excepted. To this shamefull and unworthy Motion the Prince reply'd with a smile, expressive of Indignation, "That He "hop'd to Conquer; but if not, that however he could Die; but could never yield "to lose his Honour, which he valued above his Life. That therefore whatever Condi-"tions, thô never so secure, might cast the least Reflexion either on his own Honour, or "his Fathers, or that of the English Nation, he utterly rejected them as Infamous and "worse than Death.

[h] Froiss. ibid. Matth. Villani l. 7. c. 10. ad c. 13.

VI. Now while the Cardinal busied himself on these fruitless Labours for Peace, certain Knights rode forth from either Camp, because there was a Truce for that Day, to coast their Enemies, and to behold their Order and Behaviour. It chanced [i] that on the English Part, the Lord John Chandos rode forth to view the French Host, and the Lord John Clermont one of the French Marshals, rode forth on that Part, to see how the English were entrenched. These two Knights on their Return met each other, other, and both had one and the same Device upon their Shields, which was Azure, the Virgin-Mary Or, encompassed with the Rays of the Sun Argent. Whereupon the Lord Clermont said aloud, "You Chandos, how long have you taken upon you to wear "my Device? Nay, you bear mine, said the Lord Chandos; for it is as much mine, "as yours. I deny that (replied Clermont) and if it were not for the Truce to be "kept this Day between us, I should prove upon your Body presently, that you have no "Right to wear my Device. "Ah! Sir, said the English Lord, say you so? You shall "surely find me to morrow in the Field ready to give you Satisfaction, and to prove by "Feat of Arms, that it is mine as well as yours. Then Clermont replied, "These are the "boasting Words of you Englishmen, for your gross Wits can devise nothing New: "But what you see good and fair among others, that you usurp and assume to your "selves. And with this they parted for that time without any further Medling, because of the Truce.

[i] Froiss. ibid. and True use of Armory in Vitâ Domini Joh. Chandos p. 48.

AN. DOM. 1356. An. Regni Angliæ XXX. Franciæ XVII.

The mean while the Good Cardinal of Perigort labour'd till dark Night thô to no purpose: For he could no ways reconcile the Parties, wherefore he return'd back to Poictiers for the present, intending early the next Morning to renew his former Diligence. All that Night the Frenchmen took their full Ease, for they had plenty of Provision of all sorts, and nothing to do: But the English were in great Want of all things, nor could they now Forage abroad for fear of the Enemy. But all that Day, and the Night following, they made great Ditches, and laid thick Hedges about their Archers, to render them more secure against the French Horse.

VII. On the Monday morning early the Prince of Wales was ready armed among his Men in the same Order of Battle, as he had before devised; as also the Frenchmen were ready on their Part to begin the Charge. When behold the foresaid Cardinal came again riding apace toward the French Army, thinking by his Preachments to prevail once more. But now the French Captains were so incensed at these fruitless Delays which he occasion'd; that they menaced him, and stir'd up the Souldiers against him, letting him know, that if he came thither Preaching any more, they would use his Eminence not so well as he expected. When the Cardinal saw the Danger he was in, and that all his honest Endeavours signified nothing, he took leave of the King, saying, [k] Ego Pacem diligo, at quùm loquor, illi ad Bellum se parant; i. e. I am for Peace, but when I speak thereof, they make themselves ready for War; and so riding away straight to the Prince, he said, "Sir, look to your Self as well as you can, for there is "nothing else to be expected but Battle: I can find no sign of a tractable Mind in the "French King. "Well (said the Prince) it is the Resolution of Us, and of all our "People to abide him: And God defend the Right. Amen (said the Cardinal) and adding his Benediction, took his leave of the Prince and return'd to Poictiers. But in his Company there were certain Knights and Esquires, Men of Arms, who secretly favoured the French Nation more than the English: And therefore when they saw now to what issue Matters were like to proceed, they stole away privily from their Master, and went to the French Host, as they stood in Battle Array in the Field; and there they unanimously chose the Chastelain of Ampost for their Captain, which Chastellain also was of the Cardinal's Retinue, together with the Lord Robert Duras, who was the Cardinal's Nephew, and the rest of that Brigade, all being his Domesticks or Relations: But of this the Cardinal himself knew nothing, till he was come to Poictiers.

[k] Psalm 120. vult.

Now when the Black-Prince saw, [l] that he should have Battle, the Cardinal being gone without any Conclusion of Peace, and found, that the French King in a manner disdain'd and slighted him and his Forces, he mounted his Horse with a perfect Courage, and rode thrô the Ranks, and spake to his Men in this manner. "Now Gentlemen, what thô we be an inconsiderable Company in respect of our Enemies? Yet "let us not be abashed for that: Since Victory consisteth not in the Multitude of "People, but in the Hands of God Almighty, to bestow it after his good Pleasure. "If it please him that the Day be ours, we shall be the most Honoured and Renowned People in the World; and if the worst happen, that we die in our just Quarrel, "'tis but paying a Debt we all owe to Nature something sooner, but much more honourably: And I have the King my Father, and Brethren, and you also have Valiant Friends, Relations and Countrymen left behind; these will sufficiently revenge "our Blood. Wherefore Sirs, for Gods sake I require you all to be of good Courage, "and to do your Devoirs heartily; for if it please God and St. George, you shall see me "this Day to perform the Part of a Good Knight, and to play the Man: For [m] surely "England shall never pay for my Ransome; I will either here Die or Conquer. These Words

[l] Froiss. c. 162. fol. 81.

[m] Life of the Lord Chandos ex Bibl. Cottoniana p. 53.

An. Dom. 1356. An. Regni Angliæ XXX. Franciæ XVII.

Words and other the like which the Prince ſpake, comforted his People extreamly, ſo that at that time they would not have feared all the World; and beſides this, their Captains and Leaders in their ſeveral Places by their Cheerfull Words and Looks exceedingly animated the Common Souldiers. The Names of the Lords, and Principal Leaders at this time with the Prince are as followeth, Thomas Beauchamp Earl of Warwick, John Vere Earl of Oxford, William Montagu Earl of Salisbury, Robert Hufford Earl of Suffolk, Ralph Lord Stafford, Earl of Stafford, the Lord Richard Stafford, Brother to the ſaid Earl, the Lord John Chandos, the Lord Reginald Cobham, the Lord Edward Spencer, the Lord James Audley, and the Lord Peter his Brother, the Lord Thomas Berkley (Son to that Lord Maurice Berkley, who [n] died in the Siege of Calais Nine years before) Ralph Lord Baſſet of Drayton, John Lord Waren, Eldeſt Son to John Plantagenet late Earl of Waren, Strathern and Surry, by his Firſt Lady Maud de Nereford; Peter Lord Mauley the Sixth of that Name, the Lord John Willoughby of Eresby, the Lord Bartholomew Burwaſh, the Lord William Felton and the Lord Thomas Felton his Brother, the Lord Thomas Bradeſtan; Sr. Walter Pavely, Sr. Stephen Coſſington, Sr. Mathew Gournay, Sr. William de la More, and others; all theſe were Engliſhmen born: Then of Gaſcogners, the Lord Edmund Pamiers, the Lord of Bougues, the Lord John Greilly Captal of Buſche, the Lord John de Chaumont, the Lord Delaſparre, the Lord of Rozan, the Lord of Couſen, the Lord of Monferrand, the Lord of Landas, the Lord Soldiche de L' Eſtarrac, and divers Others; and of Hainalders, the Lord Euſtace Dambreticourt, the Lord John de St. Guiſlain, and Two others Strangers; the Lord Daniel Phaſel, and a Knight of Artois, named Denis of Mourbeque. The whole Number of the Prince's Army as all agree, did not exceed 8000 Men; whereas the French Army amounted to ſixty Thouſand at leaſt; whereof there were more than 3000 Lords and Nobles.

[n] Vid. l. 2. c. 6. §. 9. p. 399.

About half an Hour before the French Hoſt approached, the Prince of Wales called before him the Earl of Oxford, and the other Principal Leaders of the Archers, and being ſurrounded with other the Chief of his Captains, both of England and Gaſcogne, ſpake thus unto them for their further Encouragement, "Having already had Experience of your ſeveral Courages and Conduct in many imminent Hazards of War; I "acknowledge You (ô Gentlemen of England) in nothing to have degenerated from "the Nobleſt of your Anceſtors; and You (our Dear Friends of Gaſcogne) to be as "worthily deſcended from thoſe your Valiant and Loyal Fathers, who have heretofore truly and gallantly ſerved the King my Father, and his Predeceſſors in that his "Ancient Dukedom. I ſee the Marks of generous Indignation in your Viſage, I ſee "how highly you reſent the Affront, that a King of France dare deſpiſe thoſe Cou"rages, to which as yet no Labour ever ſeem'd painfull, no Army invincible, no Hill "inacceſſible, no Tower impregnable, no Humane Power formidable. I ſee in your "Faces, my Lords and Gentlemen, the perfect Reſemblance of thoſe undaunted Fa"thers, whoſe Courage hath frequently foiled theſe haughty Frenchmen, hath won "and waſted the Iſle of Cyprus, hath tamed the Syracuſians, Calabrians, Saracens and "Paleſtinians, and hath taught Scotland to receive our Yoke, and Ireland to grow "mild and tractable; and Wales to accept of our Laws.

[o] Stow p. 260. &c.

"Even Occaſion it ſelf, and Time, and Danger, and Deſpair, have both ſharpned the Wits of Dull Men, and enhanced the Courages of the Fearfull: How much "more now ſhould honour, the Love of your Country, and the deſire of the Wealthy "Spoil of theſe Frenchmen provoke your Noble Minds to ſurmount themſelves, and "to follow the laudable Example of your own Fathers?

"Wherefore follow your Standards with Reſolution, and obey your Chief Leaders, "both with a willing Mind and unwearied Body; that if Victory come with Life, we "may ſtill continue in firm and mutual Friendſhip: But if envious Fortune (which "God forbid) ſhould allot, that this Day we run the Race of all Fleſh, and that we "end together both Life and Labour; aſſure your ſelves, your Names ſhall not want "Eternal Renown; for thirſt whereof we alſo our ſelves together with theſe Gentlemen our Friends and Companions, are all reſolved to drink of the ſame Cup with "you. And we doubt not (thrô the Grace of God) but that unto Us it ſhall be a "Perpetual Name and Glory to have overcome this Day the Nobility of France. For "to be Conquer'd (which God forbid to be our Lot!) is not to be aſcribed to "the Greatneſs of Danger, but to the Want of Courage to receive or repell that "Danger.

Having ſpoke theſe Words, he perceived that there was an Hill hard by, which was ſurrounded at the Foot of the Aſcent with Hedges and Ditches; on the one ſide thereof ran ran a fair Paſture-Field, bounded with many rough and high Buſhes; and on the other ſide it was all planted with Vines, but the reſidue was plain: On the farther ſide of this Hill he knew a Part of the French Army ſtood, and between the ſaid Hill and the Engliſh were great and low Valleys, and a piece of Mariſh ground. The young [p] Prince therefore commanded the Lord John Greilly Captal of Buſche, ſecretly to coaſt about under Covert of the Mountain with 300 Men of Arms, and as many Archers on Horſe-back, and coming behind the Enemy in the Heat of Action to ſtrike in upon their Backs. The Captal accordingly, having found a narrow Paſſage, entred the Valley and took the Hill, where [q] among the Buſhes he hid his Men, taking advantage of the Place, till the Armies ſhould be engaged. All the reſt [r] of the Prince's Order was known to King John already, but this being not taken Notice of, till juſt upon the Engagement, he was utterly ignorant thereof. And thô the Engliſh ſtood ſo cloſe within a ſmall ſpace of Ground, that to the French Spies they appear'd to be but one Battail; yet either they were deceived, or the Prince afterwards alter'd his Meaſures, and divided his Men into Three Small Battails (that ſo the more Hands might be ſet on work at a time) beſides that Detachment ſent forth under the Captal of Buſche. The Field, wherein the Prince with his Battail ſtood, was divided from the Plain, where the French Army lay, with a long Row of Hedges, and a Ditch flung up by the Engliſh, the one End whereof reached down to the Mariſh aforeſaid, and the other to the Hill; on the Hill ſide ſtood the Earl of Warwick Captain of the Van, and on the other ſide of the Hedge about a ſtones Caſt from the Lane ſtood the Reer, commanded by the Earls of Saliſbury and Suffolk: At the Lane's end was a pretty large Gap, within which ſtood the Prince of Wales with the Main Battail on Foot, down among the Vines, having cloſed the weaker part of his Field with the Carriages.

AN. DOM. 1356. An. Regni Angliæ XXX. Franciæ XVII.

[p] Froiſ. c. 161.
[q] Stow p. 261.
[r] Froiſ. ibid.

VIII. The Lord John Chandos, who was a moſt Valiant and Expert Knight, never ſtir'd from the Prince's ſide all that Day; no more did the Lord James Audely of a great while, till ſeeing the French Army advance, and knowing a Fight muſt needs enſue, he ſaid to the Prince, "[s] Sir, I have ever hitherto faithfully ſerved both my Lord "your Father, and your Royal Highneſs alſo, and ſhall do as long as I live. "This "Sir, I ſay, becauſe once I made a Vow, that the Firſt Battle, wherein either the "King your Father, or any of his Sons ſhould be Perſonally preſent, in that Battle I "would be the firſt Aggreſſor, or elſe die in the Endeavour: Therefore I now beg of "Your Highneſs, as in reward of whatever Service I did, or may do to the King your "Father, or your Self, that you would grant me Licence to leave you for a while, "and there to place my ſelf, where I may with moſt likelihood perform my Vow. To this ſo Honourable a Reſolution the Prince accorded with theſe Words, "Sir James, "God Almighty give you this day the Grace to approve your ſelf the beſt Knight of "all Others, and therewith ſhook him by the Hand. Thereupon the Lord Audley departed from the Prince on Horſeback, and went to the foremoſt Front of all the Battails, only attended with Four of his Eſquires, who were all Valiant and Choſen Men, and had promiſed not to fail him while they lived. But Sr. James was a moſt Courageous and Prudent Knight, by whoſe Advice much of the Order of the Army was ſettled the Day before; and now he ſtood with his Four Eſquires in the Front of the Battle ready to perform his Knightly Vow, with his Spear couched, and in his Left hand a Deep Shield charged with his Arms, [t] which were Gules a Fret Or; the ſame Arms being alſo embroider'd on his Satten Surcoat, which went over his Armour. So alſo the Lord Euſtace Dambreticourt of Hainalt had taken a Reſolution to be among the Foremoſt; of whoſe Succeſs, as well as of the Lord Audley's, we ſhall take notice by and by.

[s] Froiſ. c. 162. fol. 81. a. & Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 749.

[t] True Uſe of Armory ex Bibl. Cotton. p. 50. & Aſhmole Knight. Garter Plate 22.

Now the Battle began, the Marſhals approaching with their Men, and the 300 Choſen Horſe riding on before to break the Array of the Archers. They for their part made a gallant and reſolute entrance into the way; where on each ſide, the Hedges were thick lin'd with Bows. They when they ſaw theſe Men pretty far entred, powred in their ſhot upon them, galling them in the Flank and hinder parts eſpecially, and ſlew, and overturned, and wounded many Knights and Horſes. Which latter feeling the ſharp Arrows ſticking in their Bodies, and ſeeing them fly ſo about their Ears, would by no means go forward, but ſnorted, and bounced, and flounced, and drew back, and flang, and took on ſo fiercely, that many fell foul on their Maſters; ſo that for preſs and confuſion, they never could riſe again. However ſome of them, both Knights and Eſquires made ſhift to paſs the Archers that lin'd the Hedges, and came up to the Herſe of Archers, that ſtood in the Princes Front; but here they were received so hotly, that being not sufficient in Number, and the Marshals Battails failing to second them in time, those who were not slain with the Arrows, were cut in pieces by a Troop of Men of Arms, sent against them for that purpose. We spake before of a Brigade of German Cuirassiers, that stood aloof on Horseback ready to succour the Marshals Battails: It chanced, that the Lord Eustace Dambreticourt, being on Horseback in the English Front, laid his Spear in his Rest, and ran into that Battail, and was as roughly met by a Knight of Almaine, called the Lord Lewis van Conci-bras, who bare in a shield Argent Five Roses Gules, as the Lord Eustace bore in a [u] Field Ermin Three Hamets Gules. These two Valiant Gentlemen met with such a rude shock in the Front of the Armies, that both of them were reversed to the Earth; but the Almaine being wounded in the shoulder, was not able to rise so soon, as Sr. Eustace, who rising quickly, and taking his Breath a little, went with his sword drawn to the other Knight, as he lay on the ground; but then Five other German Knights came spurring upon him all at once, and with their Spears bore him to the Earth; for the Goodness of his Armour preserv'd his Body. So there he was taken Prisoner by force, and brought to the Earl of Nassau, who took no great heed of him then, and 'tis question'd, whether he was sworn Prisoner or no: But having bound him fast to a Chair, there they let him stand for that time.

An. Dom. 1356. An. Regni Angliæ XXX. Franciæ XVII.

[u] Froiss. c. 162. and True use of Armory p.86. vid. Ashmole at Plate 25.

The mean while the Lord James Audley with his Four Valiant Esquires, was in the Front of the Marshals Battail, doing Wonders in Arms, till by incredible Prowess he came to the Marshals Standard, where he fought with the Lord Arnold D' Endreghan, and handled him cruelly; and still the Archers ply'd them with shot on each Flank, till thereby the Marshals Battail also began to be disorder'd both by their thick flights of Arrows, and also by those Men of Arms of England, who upon sight of their Confusion dash'd in furiously among them, and beat them down by heaps, and slew, and took Prisoners, and did what they listed. So that finally Sr. Arnold D' Endreghan was there taken Prisoner by other Men, than Sr. James Audley, or his Esquires, for none of them would once meddle to take any Prisoner, they only minded to hold together in making their way among their Enemies, till by their Extraordinary Valour [x] they brake thrô the whole Battail, causing no small slaughter, whereever they went.

[x] Walsingh. hist. p.164. ad hunc annum n. 10. & Dugd. 1 Vol. p.749.

IX. At the beginning of this Justing, while Marshal D' Endreghan stood still to behold the strength and skill of the young Gentlemen of either party, the other Marshal, the Lord John Clermont, thinking to enter at the Hedge-Gap, and so to come at the back of our Van, made haste thither; but the Earls of Salisbury and Suffolk, who led the English Reer, and beheld his Motion, and guess'd his Design, posted to that Gap, which they fenced with an Hedge of steel, and so the Reer came to sustain the first main stress of the Battle. Here began a terrible Medley, the Englishmen of Arms laying on most Couragiously with Sword, Spear, and Battle-Ax, and the Archers at the same time notably bestirring themselves, and starting up from the safe Trenches in which they lay, powr'd forth their deadly shot over the Hedge upon the Enemy; insomuch, that they did more Execution with their Arrows, than the Men of Arms themselves. Here the Lord Clermont fought a while Valiantly under his own Banner, even as long as he could subsist; but at last he was beaten down, and could not be relieved, nor would the English take him to Ransom; but there he was slain without Mercy; which happen'd to him, as some say, upon the Lord Chandos his account, because of the High Words, he had given the day before. In this Battail of the Marshals there was William Earl of Douglas, who led [y] three Thousand Scots, who for the most part [z] were slain at this time, together with these Captains of Name, Sr. Andrew Stuart, Sr. Robert Gourdon, Sr. Andrew Haliburton, and Sr. Andrew Vaux. Earl Douglas being wounded with an Arrow in the Groine, fled out of the Field; for he feared to be taken by the English; but the Lord Archimbald Douglas, Son to the Lord James Douglas, who died in Spain, was taken Prisoner: Thô he that took him, let him go afterwards for a small Ransom, because Sr. William Ramsey of Colluthie, who was taken with him, bore it, as if the said Archimbald had been some poor and inconsiderable Fellow, causing him to pull off his Boots, and to do other such mean and servile Offices, as no way suited to a Person of any Rank or Quality, so that it might not be known who he was. But this by the by.

[y] Holinshead Hist. Scotl. p. 243.
[z] Favine le Parisien's Theater of Honour l.5. c.3.p.80.

With this terrible slaughter the Marshals Battails were wholly discomfited, for they fell foul on one another; whereby those who were behind, not being able to Advance forward, were obliged to recoil back in great Confusion to the Second Battail under the Duke of Normandy, at which time, while the English prest on them before, there was

was a new Terrour added to them from behind: For now the Captal of Buſche came down a little Mountain on their backs with his 300 Archers, and as many Men of Arms; whereat the Engliſh, who ſaw the Banner of St. George, and the Captal's Enſign alſo (which [a] were Or a Croſs Sable, charged with five Eſcallops Argent) were ſo mightily encouraged, and the French ſo ſtrangely confounded, that immediately the ſtrength of that Battail alſo began to be ſhaken: Which Succeſs is chiefly attributed to the wonderfull Courage and Force of the Engliſh Archers, who ſhot ſo thick together on Front, Flank, and Reer, that the French knew not on which ſide to take heed, and ſo by little and little the Engliſh wan ground upon them. At which time, when the Lord John Chandos ſaw that the Firſt Battail was wholly diſcomfited, and the Second began to be diſorder'd and broken, he ſaid to the Prince, "Now my Lord, "take your Horſe and Ride forth upon the French, the Day is Yours; God is now in "Your Hand; let us march directly to the French Kings Battail, for there lies all the "ſtreſs of the Matter: I verily believe his High Courage will not ſuffer him to flinch. "So that I doubt not, but by the Grace of God and St. George, We ſhall win him, "provided he be well fought with. And Sir, I heard you ſay, that this Day, We "ſhould ſee You play the part of a good Knight. With that the Prince mounted his Horſe, commanding all his Men to do the like, and ſaid aloud, "Let Us go forth: "You ſhall not ſee me this Day to turn my Back; Advance Banner, in the Name of "God and St. George. His Standard-Bearer Sr. Walter Woodland did, as he was commanded, and then while the Trumpets ſounded a dreadfull Charge, the Men of Arms of England mounted on their Horſes, which they had all ready by them, and uniting cloſe together cried out triumphantly St. George, Guienne! And at that time all the Field over, the Battle waxed hotter than ever, and many a Frenchman was overthrown, and whoever was once down could not be relieved again without extraordinary Aſſiſtance. As the Prince of Wales rode forth thus in terrible Array, and was entring in among his Enemies, he ſaw on his right hand under a little Buſh the Lord Robert Duras, lying dead, with his Banner by him, and ten or twelve of his Men about him; whereupon the Prince ſpake to two of his Eſquires, and to three Archers, "Here "Sirs, take up the Body of this Knight upon a Target, and preſent it from me to "the Cardinal of Perigort, and tell him, I ſalute him by that token. This was done as the Prince commanded; for the Prince had been informed, as now he found, that the Cardinals Men were in the Field againſt him, which was not conſonant to the Decency of Religion: For Men of the Church, who are permitted to go too and fro about Treaties of Peace, ought not in Reaſon to bear Arms, or to fight for either of the Parties; but rather to be Indifferent, both themſelves and their ſervants. And becauſe theſe Men had not been ſo, the Prince was thus diſpleaſed with the Cardinal, and therefore ſent unto him the Body of his Nephew, the Lord Robert Duras. Preſently after the Chaſtelain of Ampoſta himſelf was taken alive, who was the Chief Captain of all the Cardinals Men; and therefore the Prince gave Command, that his Head ſhould be preſently ſtricken off: But then the Lord Chandos ſaid, "Sir, Be patient "for a while, and let Us intend now to a greater Matter; for perhaps the Cardinal will "ſo excuſe this Affair, as to give You ſatisfaction. With that the Prince came up to the Duke of Athens, Conſtable of France, where he found the Engliſh and French already engaged warmly; theſe fighting in Companies, and crying Monjoy, St. Dennis; and the Engliſh, who were in a ſmall cloſe Body, returning, St. George, Guienne. Upon the Princes Arrival the Duke of Athens was preſently ſlain, and all his Men diſcomfited, and then the Prince met with the Battail of Germans under the Conduct of the Earls of Saltzburgh, Naſſau, and Neydo; but theſe were immediately ſhatter'd and broken; the Archers ſhooting ſo wholly together, that none durſt abide them. There was the Earl of Naſſau taken Priſoner, but the two other Earls were ſlain, with many other Knights and Eſquires of their Company, few or none in that hurry being taken to Ranſom. And here the Lord Euſtace D' Ambreticourt was found tied faſt to a Chair, and unbound, reſcued, and remounted by his own Men, and he being thoroughly vext, that he had ſo long ſtood idle, did now many Worthy Feats of Arms, and took good Priſoners. When the Duke of Normandy's Battail, which was already hardly matched, and had the Captal of Buſche upon the Reer, beheld alſo the Victorious Prince of Wales approaching, they thought it beſt not to abide him, but to ſave themſelves, as ſoon as they might: And ſo the Duke and two other of the Kings Sons, who were but young, lightly believed their Tutors, and departed out of the Field, with more than 800 Spears in their Company, who had not ſtuck one ſtroak that day. But however the Lord Guiſchard Dangle, and the Lord John de Santerre, by

AN. DOM. 1356. An. Regni Angliæ XXX. Franciæ XVII.

[a] Aſhmole's Garter Plate 5. & True uſe of Armory in Vitâ Captal de Buz. p. 110.

An. Dom. 1356. An. Regni Angliæ XXX. Franciæ XVII.

by ſome called Ceintre, accounted one of the beſt Men of Arms in France, would not fly on any pretence whatſoever, but ruſh'd into the thickeſt preaſs of the Battle.

The Kings Three Sons took the way to Chauvigny; but the Lord John of Landas, and the Lord Theobald of Bodenay, who were appointed to wait on the Dauphin of Vienna, when they had conducted the Three Princes a long League from the place of Battle, having charged the Lord of St. Venant not to leave them, till they were in ſafeguard, whereby he would better pleaſe the King, than if he aboad in Battle, took their leave of the Dauphin, intending to return to the Field again. In their way thither they met with the Duke of Orleans, and with him a great Company, who had alſo left the Field with clear hands; and yet there were among them many good Knights and Eſquires, who thô they were conſtrained to accompany their Maſters, had rather have died, than have done a thing themſelves ſo worthy of Reproach.

[b] Stow p.262.

Upon the Dauphin's Departure, there came [b] one to the French King and ſaid, "My "Lord, the Field is fallen to the Engliſh, and your Eldeſt Son is withdrawn out of the "Battle. At which the King ſaid with an Oath, "that he for his part would not "forſake the Field that day, without a notable Revenge; unleſs that he were either "taken or ſlain. Then the Standard-Bearers were Commanded to move forward, and preſently there appeared to the Prince of Wales two great Battalions of Armed Men, marching towards his ſmall Company. At the ſight whereof an old Counſellour, who ſtood near the Prince, was ſo extreamly diſcouraged, that he could not forbear crying out, "Alas! Poor Wretches; now are we utterly undone. But the Prince, who was full of Courage and Faith in Chriſt, check'd his Cowardiſe with theſe Words, "Thou "lieſt like a Daſtardly Fellow, as thou art; for We cannot be overcome, as long as I "am alive. And with that the Kings Battail came fiercely on the Engliſh, conſiſting of no leſs than 8000 Men of Arms, beſides footmen; but now the reſt of the French being clear'd, the Engliſh Marſhals, and the Earls of Warwick, Salisbury, and Suffolk, with their wearied Battails joyned the Prince, having firſt ſupply'd the exhauſted Quivers of their Archers with Arrows drawn from the Bodies of Dead and Dying Enemies. And thus Armed with Neceſſity and Hope from their Proſperous Beginnings; a Few weary and wounded Men went on boldly to engage with a Numerous and Freſh Army. The Fight was Deſperate, and for a while well maintain'd on both ſides; for here were good Men of War, and the Kings Preſence Armed them with deeper Reſolution. The King and his Son Philip happen'd to oppoſe the Engliſh Marſhals, the Earls of Warwick, Salisbury, and Suffolk, and with them were now joyned all the Gaſcogne Lords, as the Captal of Buſche, the Lord of Pamiers, the Lord of Mucidan, and the reſt aforenamed. To the French Kings Battail there came back time enough, the Lord John of Landas, and the Lord of Bodenay, who with their Men alighted on foot, and like Valiant Gentlemen enter'd into the thickeſt of the Battle. On one hand of the King there fought the Noble Duke of Bourbon, who had with him many Valiant Knights of Bourbonnois and Picardy: Hard by were the Poictevins with the Lord of Pons, the Lord of Partenay, the Lord of Dampmartin, the Lord of Montalboto, the Lord of Surgeres, the Lord John de Santerre, the Lord Guiſchard D' Angle, the Lord of Argenton, the Lord of Lymiers, the Lord of Montendre, the Lord James of Beaujeu, and the Lord de Chaſtell Vilaine. In another quarter fought the Earl of Ventadour, the Earl of Monpenſer, the Lord James of Bourbon, the Lord John of Artois, and the Lord James his Brother, the Lord Arnold de Cervoles, commonly called the Arch-Prieſt, who was clad in the Armour of the young Earl of Alenſon; there tarried alſo ſtill in the Field the Lord de la Torre, the Lord of Chalenton, the Lord of Montagre, the Lord of Rochefort, the Lord de la Charre, the Lord Dachone, the Lord Delmal, the Lord Norvel, the Lord Piers Buffiers, the Lord William Neſle, the Lord Arnold Reuel, the Lord Geoffry de St. Dizier, the Lord Guyventon de Chambley, the Lord Euſtace de Ribemont, the Lord of Holey, the Lord of Monſalt, and many more too tedious to Name; and ſome place here with more probability the Earl Douglas and his Scots; who yet ſuffer'd, as before We have related.

[c] Walſingh. Hypod. p. 124.

On the Engliſh Part the Prince [c] of Wales was no leſs Remarkable for his Valour, than for his Place and Quality, performing both the Part of a Prudent and Carefull General, and alſo of an Approved and Experienced Souldier, adventering, trying and performing whatever might be expected from a perfect and exalted Courage. All his Captains did their Parts with much Bravery and Reſolution: Among whom the Lord John Chandos merited no ſmall Praiſe, both for his diſcreet Conduct and unwearied tied Valour. 'Tis impoſſible to recount the Particulars of thoſe Noble Exploits, that were this Day performed by the Nobility of England: But this is certain, that as the Earls of Salisbury and Suffolk, Oxford and Others, were exceedingly remarkable in this Hot Service; ſo particularly the Noble Earl of Warwick fought ſo long, and with ſuch Fury, that his Hand was [d] galled with the exercise of his Sword and Poleax. Among others he himſelf took William de Melun, Archbiſhop of Sens Priſoner, for whoſe Ranſom alone he had afterwards no leſs than [e] 8000 Pounds. But all this Courage had been thrown away to no purpoſe, had it not been ſeconded by the extraordinary Gallantry of the Engliſh Archers, who behaved themſelves that Day with wonderfull Conſtancy, Alacrity and Reſolution: So that by their means in a manner all the French Battails received their firſt Foil, being by the barbed Arrows ſo galled and terrified, that they were eaſily opened to the Men of Arms. The Lord James Audely being ſtill followed by his Four Eſquires, fought all Day among the thickeſt Ranks of his Enemies, not without receiving many Wounds both in the Body and Viſage, as long as his Strength and Breath would hold; but when toward the end of the Battle his Eſquires perceived, that for loſs of Blood he began to faint, they carried him by main force out of the Field, and laid him under an Hedge hard by, where they unarmed him, and refreſhed him, binding up his Wounds as well as they could.

AN. DOM. 1356. An. Regni Angliæ XXX. Franciæ XVII.

[d] Dudg. Warwickſhire p.317. & M.S. in Bibl. Bodleian. Cantuar. K.84,123 vid. Dudg. Bar. 1 Vol. p.233.

[e] Pat. 37. Ed. 3. p. 1. m. 25.

King John of France for his part is allowed on all Hands, to have performed the Office both of a Good Captain and of a Valiant Knight; inſomuch, that it is ſaid, how if the Fourth Part of his Men had followed his Example, in all Probability the Victory had been his. There was [f] He on foot defending himſelf, and offending his Enemies with a weighty Ax of Steel in his Hands, which he uſed with much Praiſe. It is ſaid, [g] that Prince Philip, his youngeſt Son alſo, fought at this time ſo well by his Fathers ſide, and in his Defence (like another young Scipio) that thô he was taken at laſt Priſoner, yet for his forward Courage in War he obtain'd the Sirname of HARDY. Thô ſurely he muſt needs be now but of tender Age, being the Youngeſt of four Sons of a Father, who was but then [h] in the Forty fourth Year of his Age; and Prince Charles his Eldeſt Brother, was then but [i] Twenty. But it might be, that his Reſolution gave ſuch hopes even now, as to obtain the Title of HARDY from that Complementing Age, which called Philip of Valois, the FORTUNATE, and this King John the GOOD, and his Son Charles, whom no Truce nor Oaths could bind, the WISE. Yet I have ſeen another Account much more probable indeed, thô not ſo generally atteſted, how this Prince came by the Sirname of HARDY. 'Tis ſaid, that while he was Priſoner in England, together with his Father, King John being at King Edwards Table with him at Dinner, this young Prince Philip among Others of the Nobility of either Nation was appointed to wait: And that when a certain young Nobleman of England, who attended alſo, ſerved King Edward firſt, and then King John, this Philip up with his Fiſt, and gave him a Wherret on the Ear, ſaying, "What dare "you ſerve the King of England firſt, when the King of France ſits at the Table? The Nobleman offended therewith drew his Dagger, offering to ſtrike the young Prince, but King Edward loudly forbad him, and commending the Courage of the Royal Youth, ſaid to him in French, "Vous eſtes Phillippe le HARDI, i. e. thou art Philip the HARDY; from which that became his Sirname. But to return whence we have digreſſed.

[f] Froiſ. c. 164.

[g] Paul. Æmyl. p. 287.

[h] An° 1364. An° Ætat. 52. ergo hoc an. 44. Mezeray p. 66.

[i] Natus Anno 1336.

[k] James Meyer apud Holinſh. Engl. Chron. p. 976.

All this while the Prince of Wales, and the Lords about raged like Lions, and the Archers ſo well beſtowed their Shot, that the Frenchmen were at laſt broken here alſo, and a miſerable Slaughter enſued; all the beſt Men being either taken or ſlain, thô not a few choſe to ſave themſelves by Flight; among the ſlain were reckon'd [l] Peter Duke of Bourbon, the Duke of Athens Conſtable of France, the Vicount of Châlons, the Marſhal Clermont, the Vicount of Beauſe, the Lord Geoffry Charny, who bore the Royal Standard this Day, the Lord Euſtace Ribemont, whom King Edward had ſo generouſly treated at Calais ſome Years before, the Lord Guiſchard de Beaujeu, the Lord [m] Reginald de Carrian, the Lord William Neſle, the Lord de la Torre, Sr. Guyventon of Chambley or Chably, the Lord of Caſtle-Gaillon, the Lord of Argenton, and Others of the Higheſt Quality, to the Number of [n] Fifty; beſides the two Earls of Germany and Others, whom we have ſhewn to be ſlain before. But yet this Battail was not wholly diſcomfited, it was ſo numerous, and the King and ſome Lords about him fought ſo couragiouſly, thô ſeveral of their Men fled away.

[l] Froiſ. c. 162. Knighton p. 2614. n. 20. & Mezeray, &c.

[m] Du Serres p. 22. Fabian & Speed.

[n] Mezeray ibid.

Among the various Rencounters, Chaces and Purſuits made that Day in the Field, [o] it happen'd, that Sr. Edward Renty a Valiant Knight of Artois, who yet had left the Fight, when he ſaw Things deſperate, was purſued as he fled a private way all alone, by by a certain Knight of England, whose Name we cannot recover. The Englishman as he gave the Chace, still cried out after him, "Return again Sir Knight, it is a shame "to fly away so from a single Man. At last the Frenchman turned indeed, seeing it was so, that no Body else pursued him, and the Englishman thought to have stricken him in the Target with his Spear, but he failed: For Sr. Edward swerved aside from the stroke on purpose, and as he passed on in full Career, lent him such a full Blow on the Helmet with his Sword, that he was astonished, and fell from his Horse in a Swoon. Sr. Edward presently hereupon alighting, came to him with his Sword drawn, before he was fully recovered, and said, "Yield your self Sir, and promise to be my "Prisoner, whether you be rescued or no, or you are but a Dead Man. When the English Knight being come to himself, saw Death before him, and heard these Words, he accepted the Conditions, and yielded to go along with him, and sware himself Prisoner, and was afterwards released on payment of his Ransom.

[o] Froiſ. c. 163.

An. Dom. 1356. An. Regni Angliæ XXX. Franciæ XVII.

That same Day another French Gentleman of Picardy, an Esquire named John de Helenes, having forsaken the Field, met with his Page who deliver'd him his Horse, whereon he rode away all alone. Now there was in the Fight on the English Side the Lord Thomas Barkley, Son of Sr. Maurice Barkley who died before Calais (for this Story cannot belong to the old Lord Thomas, nor to his Son Maurice, as we have intimated before; tho Sr. William [p] Dugdale thrô inadvertency makes him both young and old, and to have won many Prisoners, wherewith he built Beverstone Castle, and to be a Prisoner himself at the same time) this Lord Barkley I say, [q] being at that time a young lusty Knight, who had first reared his Banner that Day, pursued the said John de Helenes all alone, till having followed him the space of a League, the French Esquire turned back upon him, laying his Sword in his Rest instead of a Spear, and so came running toward the Lord Barkley, who the mean while stood ready with his Arm raised to have smote him, but the Esquire seeing the stroke coming turned from it, and as he passed reached him such a Blow on the Vambrace of his Sword Arm, that the Lord Thomas his Weapon not being chained, fell out of his Hand to the ground. Whereupon he alighted suddainly from his Horse at the place where his Sword lay, but as he stooped to take it up, the French Esquire pricked at him from his horse with his Rapier, and thrust him thrô both the Thighs (in which he was not armed) so that he fell down, not being able to help himself. Then John alighting first seised the Englishman's Sword, which lay still on the ground, and therewith came to him, demanding whether he would yield or no? Sr. Thomas said, "Who are you, that I may know "whether 'tis fit to yield, and what is your Name? "Sir said he, I am called John de "Helenes, and am an Esquire of Picardy; but who are you? Truly replied the Knight, "my Name is Thomas, and I am Lord of Barkley, a fair Castle on the River of Severn "in Glouceſterſhire upon the Marches of Wales. Well Sir, said the Esquire, then you "shall be my Prisoner, and I shall take care to heal you of your Hurts, and bring you to my House in safeguard. I am content said the Knight, for you have won me by the Law of Arms, and so he sware to be his Prisoner, Rescue or no Rescue. Then the Esquire drew forth his Sword out of the Knights Thighs, and the Wounds being open he carefully wrapped and bound them up, and set him on his Horse again, and so brought him fair and softly to Chastelleraut about four Leagues farther, where he tarried above a Fortnight for his sake, till the Cure was pretty forward: And then he hired him a Litter, and so brought him at his ease to his own House in Picardy. Here he tarried more than a Year, till he was perfectly whole; and upon his Departure he engaged to pay for his Ransom six thousand Nobles, for the payment of which Summ [r] Henry Duke of Lancaster, and the Lord Frank van Hall became his Sureties; and so this Esquire was made a Knight by the Profit he had of the Lord Berkley. Surely the Rencounters of Love and War, as Froissard observes, are very variable: But especially this Battle of Poictiers was so full of sundry, strange and memorable Circumstances, that it is as difficult to recite them, as no doubt it would be pleasant to read them. But we shall pursue the end of the Matter, since we cannot attain to many more Particulars at this Distance, but what we have already drawn from Writers of that Age, and other Good Authorities.

[p] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 358.

[q] Froiſ. c. 163. & Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 358.

[r] Ex Autographo apud Caſtrum de Berkley. vid. Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 358.

All this while the Battle endured, thô apparently now enclining to the English, for notwithstanding all those Great Men fell in Defence of the King their Master, as became Valiant Souldiers and Loyal Men, yet still the French King had a Knot of gallant Souls about him, who disputed the Point so well, as if they alone intended to attone for the Baseness of those, who by turning their Backs had lost the Day. But now the English and Gascogne Lords by their importunate Valour had beat down the Standard-

Royal

Royal of France, and ſlain the Bearer thereof, as we ſaid before; and while many of the Enemies diſcouraged hereat fled away toward Poictiers, they puſh'd on the Victory ſo home, that now they won the laſt Stake alſo. In the firſt Breaking of the Preſs near the King were taken the Lord James of Bourbon, Earl of Ponthieu, the Lord John of Artois, Earl of Ewe, and Charles of Artois his Brother, Earl of Tancarville; theſe were taken under the Banner of the Lord John Greilly, Captal of Buſche, and Knight of the moſt Noble Order of the Garter; there were taken alſo the Captain of Poictiers, and the Seneſchal of St. Omers, the Lord of Bodenay, the Lord of Ventador, the Earl of Vendoſme, the Earl of Mons, and the Lord Arnold Cervoles, commonly called the Arch-prieſt, moſt grievouſly wounded; and many other Knights and Eſquires: At which time a great part of this Battail fled away, but were cloſely purſued by a Party of Gaſcoigners and Engliſh even unto the Gates of Poictiers. Here many were ſlain and beaten down Horſe and Man, for thoſe who defended the City, when they beheld the Enemy ſo near, cloſed their Gates upon their Friends for fear of being loſt themſelves. Wherefore in the ſtreet before the Gate was horrible Murther; ſo that the Frenchmen being now neither able to fly, nor to reſiſt, [f] yielded themſelves, as far as they might diſcern an Engliſh Man, whereby ſeveral Archers had four, five or ſix Priſoners apiece. The Lord of Pons, a great Baron of Poicton, was there beaten down in the ſtreet and ſlain, with many other Lords, Knights and Eſquires.

AN. DOM. 1356. An. Regni Angliæ XXX. Franciæ XVII.

[f] Frioſ. c. 164.

The mean while the Kings Battail was grievouſly handled; and there were taken about the Kings Perſon the Earl of Rochechoüart, the Vicount of Narbon, the Lord of Xaintogne, the Lord of Montendre, the Lord John Santerre, who had the repute of one of the beſt Knights in France, but he was ſo very much hurt, that he never had his Health after. There fell among the Dead the Lord Guiſchard D' Angle, who was afterwards recover'd, and leaving the French Side, became a Valiant Servant to King Edward, and at the Coronation of his Succeſſor, was made Earl of Huntington; and in King Edwards Time Knight of the Garter: But this Day he fought with ſingular Valour, even to the hazard of his Life, by the French Kings ſide. But the Lord Geoffry Charny before he dy'd, had an whole Tempeſt of War thundring upon him, till he fell beneath it; for all the Force of the Engliſh preſs'd upon him, becauſe he bare the Kings Standard-Royal; and beſides he had in the Field a Banner of his own, which was Gules, Three Eſchutcheons Argent.

But now the French Kings Battail was quite open'd, whereby the Frenchmen were ſo mingled among their Enemies, that ſometimes one Gentleman of France, had four or five Men upon him at once. There the Lord of Pompador was taken Priſoner by the Lord Bartholomew Burwaſh, and the Earl of Dammartin was ſlain by the Lord Reginald Cobham; and among 'um the Valiant Lord Geoffry Charny was there wounded to Death, with whom the Standard of France alſo fell to the ground. Then every Man preſs'd hard to take the King, and ſuch as knew him, cry'd out, "Sir, yield your "ſelf, or You are but Dead. There was then among the Engliſh a Knight of Artois, retain'd for Wages in the King of England's ſervice, called Sr. Dennis of Morbeque, who had ſerved King Edward about five Years, becauſe in his Youth he was fain to fly the Realm of France for a Murder, that he had committed at St. Omers. It happen'd ſo well for this Man, that he was near the King, when he was e'n ready to be taken; wherefore he ſtept forth into the Preaſs, and by the ſtrength of his Body and Arms, made way up to the French King, and ſaid in good French, "Sir, yield your "Perſon. The King looking on him ſaid, "To whom ſhall I yield? And where is "my Couſin, the Prince of WALES? If I might ſee him, I would ſpeak with him. Sr. Denis anſwer'd, "Sir, he is not hereabout; but if it pleaſe You to yield to me, I "ſhall bring You to him. Why? Who are you then, ſaid the King? Sir (ſaid he) I am "Denis of Morbeque, a Knight of Artois; but I now ſerve the King of England; "becauſe I am baniſhed the Realm of France, and have forfeited all I had there. Then the King gave him his Right Gauntlet ſaying, "Unto you I yield my ſelf. But ſtill there was ſo great a Crowding among thoſe, who pretended to have taken him, that the King and his youngeſt Son Philip, who now ſhared in his Fathers Fortune, could not be ſuffer'd to go forward.

The mean while the Prince of Wales, who was Couragious as a Lion, took great Delight and Pleaſure all that Day, to Fight and break the Power of his Enemies; and ſo did the Lord John Chandos, who never ſtirr'd from the Prince's ſide all the time of the Fight: He never troubled himſelf to take any Priſoners, thô never ſo Rich, but leaving that as too mean a Conſideration for him, he wholly apply'd himſelf to Fighting, and Chacing, and Deſtroying the Frenchmen. Whereever any ſtrong Body of the

An. Dom. 1356. An. Regni Angliæ XXX. Franciæ XVII.

the Enemy appear'd, thither went the Prince and my Lord Chandos, and brake their Ranks, and brought them to Confuſion, and then leaving others to perfect the Conqueſt, they removed to another Quarter, where they did the like. Thus the Noble Prince of Wales had much trouble and pains, before he won the Garland; but toward the end of all, about the time that King John was taken, the Lord Chandos ſaid unto him, "Sir, methinks it would be convenient for your Highneſs to reſt here a little, "and to ſet up your Standard on High in this Buſh, that your Men may draw hither "about your Perſon; for they are very much ſcatter'd abroad: And I can ſee no more "Banners nor Penons of the French in the Field. Wherefore pleaſe Sir to take ſome "reſt now, and refreſh your ſelf a little: For You are too much heated and chafed with "this Days ſervice.

Hereupon Sr. Walter Woodland was order'd to ſet up the Prince's Standard on High in the Buſh, and Trumpets and Clarions began to ſound a Retreat, and the Captains haſted to obey the Summons. The mean while the Prince pull'd off his Helmet, and the Knights of his Body, and thoſe of his Chamber were ready about him, and a Pavilion of Red Silk was pitch'd up for him; and then Drink was brought forth for the Prince, and ſuch Lords as were about him, whoſe Number ſtill encreaſed; and as they return'd from the Chace, there they tarried with their Priſoners in their Company. When the two Marſhals were come back to the Prince, he demanded of them, "whether they knew any tidings of the French King. They anſwer'd, "Sir, We "hear of nothing certain as to that Point; but We verily believe he is either Dead or "taken; for We are ſure, he is not gone out of the Field. Then the Prince ſaid to the Earl of Warwick and the Lord Cobham, "Sirs, I require You to ride forth and "learn what You can as to this Matter, that at Your return We may know the Certainty. Theſe two Lords took their Horſes again, and departed with an Hundred Spears from the Prince, and rode up a little Hill to view more plainly about them over the Field: From whence they might perceive a Flock of Men of Arms coming together toward them very wearily. Now among theſe was the French King on foot in great Danger of his Life; for the Engliſhmen and Gaſcoigners, who had taken him perforce from Sr. Denis of Morbeque, were now his Maſters, and among theſe ſome ſaid, "I have "taken him; nay, ſaid others, but I, and I, and I have taken him; and thus the Chief Men, and thoſe of moſt Power contended about him. Wherefore He to avoid the Danger that might enſue, ſaid, "Pray Gentlemen, contend not thus about me; but "Conduct me and my Son Civilly to my Couſin, the Prince, and concern not your ſelves, "who it was that took me: For I am ſo great a Lord, as to be able to Enrich you all, "who make any ſuch pretence. Theſe Words ſomewhat pacified them; but yet as they went along, they could not forbear making a noiſe, and a brawling about the taking of the King. But when the two foreſaid Lords of England ſaw, and heard that noiſe and ſtrife among them; they rode up to them and ſaid, "Sirs, what is the Mat- "ter, that You contend ſo one with another? My Lords, ſaid one of them, it is for the "French King, who is here taken Priſoner; and there are more, than Ten Knights and "Eſquires, who challenge to themſelves the Taking of Him. Then the two Marſhals open'd the Preaſs, and commanded aloud in the Prince's Name, that no Man whatſoever be ſo hardy, to make any noiſe, or to approach the Kings Perſon, unleſs they were ſo ordered. Then every Man made way for the Marſhals, and they alighted, and did Reverence to the King, and after that conducted Him and his Son in Peace and Safety to the Prince of Wales.

X. Now this mean while, [t] that the Earl of Warwick and the Lord Cobham were ſent away by the Prince to enquire after the French King, the Prince demanded of the Lords about him, if any of them knew, what was become of the Lord James Audley; and it was told him, that being grievouſly wounded, He lay there in a Litter hard by. "By my Faith, ſaid the Prince, for his Hurts I am heartily ſorry, but go and ſee, if he "can conveniently and without Danger be brought hither, or elſe I will make him a Vi- "ſit, where he lies. At this, two of the Princes Knights went to the Lord Audley, and ſaid, "Sir, the Prince deſires mightily to ſee You, and if You can't go to him, he ſays, he'll come hither to You. Ah! ſirs, ſaid the wounded Knight, I heartily thank the Prince, "that he would vouchſafe to think on ſo mean a Souldier as I am: And therewithall he called Eight of his ſervants, and cauſed them to carry him ſoftly in his Litter, where the Prince was. When the Prince ſaw him, he took him in his Arms and kiſſed and careſs'd him highly, ſaying, "Sr. James, I ought in eſpecial manner to Honour You: "For by your Valour this day You have merited the High Eſteem of Us all, and You "are juſtly reputed the moſt Heroick and Courageous of all others. Ah! Sir (ſaid the "Knight)

[t] Froiſ. c. 165.

"Knight) You say as it pleaseth You! I would it were so indeed; but alas! if I have AN. DOM.
"this day done any thing beyond my ordinary way in the service of such a Prince, and to 1356.
"accomplish my Vow, it ought not to be ascribed to any particular Prowess in me." Sr. An. Regni
"James (said the Prince) both I my self, and all others acknowledge You in the Busi- Angliæ
"ness of this Day to have been the best Doer in Arms: Wherefore with intent to furnish XXX.
"You the better to pursue the Wars, I retain You for ever to be my Knight with 500 Franciæ
"Marks yearly Revenues, which I shall Assign You out of my Inheritance in England. XVII.
"Sir (said the Knight) God grant, that I may do nothing unworthy the Grace, You "are pleased to shew me. And so they parted; for he was at that time so very Weak, that the Prince would not suffer him any longer to hazard so Dear an Health.

Just as the Lord Audley was carried back to his own Lodgings, the Earl of Warwick and the Lord Cobham return'd to the Prince, and presented the French King unto Him. The Prince for his part, not at all puffed up with so extraordinary Success, made his Reverence humbly to the King, and caused Wine and Spices to be brought forth, and he himself would needs serve the King in token of his Respect.

Thus [u] was this Memorable Battle won in the Fields of Beauvoir and Maupertuis, about two Leagues from the City of Poictiers, on the 19 day of September, being a Monday, in the Year of Grace MCCCLVI. It began about Nine in the Morning, and ended a little after Noon: But all the English were not return'd from the Chace till almost Night; wherefore the Prince's Banner was advanced aloft on a Bush, to direct his Men thitherward. There were slain at that time (as is reported by many sufficient Authors, as well Frenchmen, as others) the Chief and the most Valiant of the Nobility of France, [x] among whom were two Dukes, Nineteen Earls, Five Thousand, or as some say, Six Thousand Men of Arms, [y] those of the Common sort not being Numbred, tho some reckon them about 8000 more; the Chief of the slain were afterwards [z] buried in the Convent of the Jacobins at Poictiers, and their Arms painted in many places there. But the slaughter was however far less here, than at Cressy; because the English were not half so Numerous now, and the Prince would not too far pursue the Chace, till he had compleated the Victory; by which time all of the worser sort had quitted the Field, and those of the Better, were either slain or taken. The Place of Battle was left free to the English, the Dead Bodies solely at the Dispose of the Conquerour, and more than [a] an Hundred Warlike Ensigns were brought away in Triumph. When the English were all return'd from the Chace, they found how they had twice as many Prisoners as themselves were, whereof there were the French King, and the Lord Philip his Son, seventeen Earls, besides Barons, Knights, and Esquires, to the Number of [b] 1500, or as others say, [c] 2000 Men of Arms. Wherefore 'twas advised among them, because of the great Charge and Danger of keeping so many; that they should put several of them to Ransom in the Field immediately, as was done. And here the Prisoners found the Englishmen and Gascoigners very Courteous; for many were let go only upon their Faith and Troth to return again between that and Christmas to Bourdeaux, with their appointed Ransoms. And the Ransoms were all very easie and reasonable; for the English said, [d] "They would not set so high a Price upon a Knight "or Gentleman; but that he might still be left able to live after his Rank, and to follow the "Wars in an equipage agreeable to his Quality.

That Night the Army encamped hard by the Place of Battle, having disarmed all their Prisoners, and appointed certain in every Quarter to be ready with their Arms, besides the usual Watches. And every Man made much of his Prisoners; for whoever had taken any Captive that Day, he had him clearly for himself, either to acquit or Ransom him at his pleasure: Except only the French King and his Son, or whoever else, whose Ransom came to more, than 10000 Crowns: For by [e] Law of Arms, those, whose Redemption exceeds that Summ, belong to the King.

All the Prince's Men were enriched, as well by Ransoming, as by the Spoil of the Field, which they found there, consisting of Gold, Silver, Plate, and Jewels, besides Horses, Armour, and what they found about the Dead. But as then no Man valued Rich Harness, whereof there was great plenty left in the Field; for the Frenchmen [f] came thither in their best Furniture and Apparel, as making sure of the Day.

Now when the Lord James Audley was brought back to his Lodgings, his Wounds being well dress'd, and he something better refreshed of his labour and loss of blood, he sent presently for his Brother Sr. Peter Audley, for the Lord Bartholomew Burwash, the Lord John Willoughby of Eresby, the Lord [g] William Ferrers of Groby, and Sr. Ste-

[u] Froiss. c. 164. Mezeray, Du Chesne, Sandford, Ashmole, Fabian, Labbe, &c. CB Lit. Dom.

[x] Walsing. hist. p. 164. Froiss. c. 164. Paul. Æmyl. p. 287. Pol. Virgil. p. 381. Mezeray p. 45. Du Chesne, Ashmole p. 672. Fox Acts & Mon. p. 357.

[y] Walsing. ibid. n. 28.

[z] Du Chesne p. 677. C.

[a] Pol. Virgil. p. 381. Du Serres ad hunc annum p. 22.

[b] Paul. Æmyl. p. 287.

[c] Walsingh. hist. p. 164.

[d] Froiss. c. 169. fol. 84. b.

[e] Selden's Mare Clausum l. 1. c. 26. p. 171.

[f] Froiss. c. 167. fol. 84. a.

[g] Hic William Lego pro Froiss. Ralph ex Dug. 1 Vol. p. 268.

An. Dom. 1356. An. Regni Angliæ XXX. Franciæ XVII.

phen Coſſington, all being his Kinſmen and Allies; and then he ſent alſo for his Four Eſquires, who had ſerved him that Day ſo Loyally, and with ſo much Valour, and whoſe Names for Honour ſake I ſhall here remember, [h] Eſquire Delves of Doddington, Eſquire Dutton of Dutton, Eſquire Fowlehurſt of Crew, and Eſquire Hawkeſton of Wrynehill, all Cheſhire-Men; and from Eſquire Delves is Deſcended in a Right Line the Worſhipfull Sr. Thomas Delves of Doddington in Cheſhire Baronet, now living, in whoſe Houſe are ſtill to be ſeen, as a Memorial of the Action of this Day, the Statues of the Black-Prince, of my Lord Audley, and of the Four Eſquires aforeſaid.

[h] Aſhmole's Garter p.705. ex Lib. M.S. penes W. Flower nuper Norroy Reg. Armorum.

When theſe Hardy and Faithfull Eſquires were come into the Tent of the Lord James Audley, he ſaid unto his Relations, the Lords abovenamed, "Gentlemen, it "hath pleaſed my Lord, the Prince, to give unto me Five Hundred Marks of Yearly "Revenue; for which Gift I have done him but ſmall ſervice with my Body. Pray "now, obſerve theſe Four Eſquires, who have all along ſerved me Faithfully, and eſpe- "cially this Day; ſo that the Honour which I have obtained, was both purchaſed and "ſecur'd unto me by their Valour. In reward whereof I hereby give and reſign into "their Hands the ſaid Gift of 500 Marks, which my Lord the Prince hath given me, "(to be divided among them by Equal Portions) in like manner as the Prince gave it "unto me: I utterly diſinherit my ſelf thereof, and Endow them therewith without any "Condition or Repeal. The Lords and all that were preſent beheld each other, and ſaid among themſelves, how it proceeded of a Generous Mind, to beſtow ſo Honourable a Gift ſo freely, and ſo they anſwer'd him with one Voice, "Sir, be it with You, as it "ſhall pleaſe God: However We ſhall all bear Witneſs of this Your Deed of Gift, where- "ever we are.

XI. With that they all left him to his Repoſe, and ſome of them return'd to wait upon the Prince of Wales, who intended that Night to make a Magnificent Supper for the French King, and others, who were Priſoners of the Higheſt Quality: And this he might eaſily do now, as being ſufficiently furniſh'd with all manner of Proviſion, ſuch as the French had brought with them. Whereas before this his Men wanted Victuals ſo greatly, that ſome of them had not of three days taſted any good Bread. So that the [i] Raſhneſs of King John was notorious, who would needs give them Battle; whereas by holding them Beſieged in the place where they were, it was believed, he might have enforced them to yield, or at leaſt, by depriving them of their Advantagious Poſt, have obtained a Victory over them.

[i] Du Cheſne p. 676. D.

That [k] ſame Night therefore the Prince had a Magnificent Supper in his Pavilion, for Honour of the French King, and the Chief of the Lords, his Priſoners. He obliged the French King to ſit in his own Chair of State at the Head of the Table, and together with him, he cauſed his Son Philip to ſit down, as alſo the Lord James of Bourbon, Earl of Ponthieu, the Lord John of Artois Earl of Ewe, and the Lord Charles of Artois his Brother, Earl of Tancarville, being all of the Royal-Blood of France: Beſides whom there ſat the Earl of Eſtampes, the Earl of Graville, the Lord of Partenay and ſome few more, at the Kings Table; and the other Lords, Knights, and Eſquires of France, ſuch as were not wounded, ſat at other Tables. And all Supper-time the Prince [l] would needs ſerve in his own Perſon before the King in as Humble and Reſpectfull Manner, as he could deviſe, and for all the King could ſay, would not ſit down, affirming, "That he was not Worthy to ſit down with ſo Mighty a Monarch, as "the King was.

[k] Froiſ. c. 168. fol. 84.

[l] Matth. Villani l. 7. c. 20. Mezeray, Froiſ. &c.

But when for all this he perceived, that the Kings Countenance was too much caſt down, he attempted to raiſe his Spirits with ſuch Words as theſe, [m]

[m] Du Cheſne p. 678. Paul. Æmyl p. 287. Holinſh. Engl. Chron. p. 960. apud quos omnes tota hæc Oratio.

"Sir, there is no cauſe, that You, who are the moſt Brave and Valiant among Chriſtian Kings, ſhould continue thus Penſive and Troubled: Althô at this time your Arms "have not been favour'd by Him, in whoſe Diſpoſe all Battles are. For ſtill your Ge- "neroſity is acknowledged, Your Dignity preſerved, and Your Majeſty held Sacred, and "whatſoever elſe was truly Yours, remaineth ſtill entire, neither to be violated, nor em- "paired by Time or any other Force. God Almighty hath ordained, that as all other "things, ſo the Fortune of War ſhould remain in his Hands alone. Your Progenitors "have atchieved many Glorious Enterpriſes, as well by Sea as by Land: The whole "Compaſs of Europe, all the Eaſt, all Realms and Countries both far and near, are "filled with the Trophies and Victories of France. The Faith and Grandeur of the "Chriſtian Name have by your Predeceſſors and their Subjects, been defended and propa- "gated againſt the moſt Mighty and Puiſſant Captains of the Infidels. Your Valour and "the Reputation of your Arms are Celebrated and Renowned thrô the whole World: There is

"is no Nation that doth not confess its Obligations to the French, and no People, that may AN. DOM. 1356.
"not yet expect to be beholding to their Favours.

"Perhaps among so many innumerable Triumphs, One or Two Battles have succeeded a An. Regni "little otherwise than you would: The Usual Instability of Fortune would have it so, which Angliæ
"sometimes baffles the Force of Multitudes, and Conquers the Opposition of Men, Horse, XXX.
"and Armour. But it lies in the Power of your own Magnanimity to harden your Soul against Franciæ "Adversity, and to keep your own Mind still unconquer'd. XVII.

"Nor shall this Day detract any thing from you or yours; for as for my part I pro- "mise you, that this Realm of France, in which we are, and which hath produced and "nourished many of my Progenitors, shall find me Gratefull to Her, and mindfull of
"my Original, and toward your Majesty (if you will permit me to glory in that Title)
"a most humble and respectfull Kinsman.

"There are many Reasons to preserve Love and Friendship betwixt You and my Fa- "ther, which I hope will be not a little prevalent: For I know well the most intimate
"Thoughts and Affections of his Mind; and that You will easily come to a reasonable A- "greement with Him. And as for me, may he then refuse to own me for his Son, when "I cease to hold you in the same degree of Reverence, Honour and Respect, which I ow
"unto his own Person.

This wonderfull Submission in a Conquerour, a Young Prince, little more than five and twenty Years of Age, did almost melt the unfortunate Captive to Affectionate Tears. The French Lords, who saw him so humble in so high a Gale of Prosperity, and heard the Generous Language he so obligingly utter'd, [n] began to say softly among themselves, "That he had spoken nobly, and that in all probability, he would prove "a most Accomplish'd Prince, if God would grant him to live, and to persevere in the same
"good Fortune.

[n] Froiss. c. 168.

King John saw [o] plainly now, that at least he was not unhappy in this, that he had fallen into the Hands of a most obliging Conquerour: And thô inwardly afflicted in his Mind, he forced himself to a civil Smile, and looking obligingly to the Prince, he said, "[p] Thô it hath "been our Chance to fall into an inconsoleable Sorrow, yet for all that (Kind Cousin) We think
"it becomes us to smother our Griefs as much as we may, since thô by the Law of Arms,
"and the Chance of War, We be under the Subjection of another; yet it is under so Wor- "thy a Prince as your Self, by whom to be vanquish'd is no Dishonour: Especially since
"we were not, as Cowards or faint-hearted Runnagates, taken in flight or lying hid in a "corner, but in the open Field with Sword in Hand, where we were as ready to die as to "live, in defence of Justice. The [q] Prince replied, "Sir, methinks you for your part
"ought rather to rejoyce, thô all things did not fall out according to your Wish: For this "very Day You have won the high Renown of Personal Valour above all Others, that "bore Arms on your Side. Sir, I say not this to flatter your Sorrow, or to deride You;
"for all the Captains on our side, that saw what every one did, are unanimously agreed
"by just Sentence to award the Prize and Chaplet of Eminence unto your Majesties
"Person. Thus much all the English Lords that were with the Prince sincerely protested upon their Honours; and then some French Lords in Civility, speaking of the Lord James Audely, whom they heard to be grievously wounded; [r] King John said,
"That among all other Valiant Worthies, whom he had seen and heard of that Day on "either Part, he did both greatly admire, and more especially approve of the noble and
"couragious Exploits of that Valiant Lord. And more than this he spake not all Supper-time, except some short obliging Words, which now and then he utter'd to the Prince, who all the while waited at his Elbow. And of this generous Behaviour of that English Heroe, we have been the more bold to speak thus largely; not only because it is most true, being acknowledged by [s] all the French Writers themselves, but becaufe it is an excellent Pattern for all other Princes to follow; since Prosperity is so uncertain, and Humility and Moderation make so winning a Character; whereas Pride sullies the brightest Glories, and blasts the most verdant Laurels.

[o] P. Æmyl. p. 288.
[p] Stow p. 263.
[q] Froiss. c. 168. fol. 84. b.
[r] Stow p. 263. a.
[s] Froiss. Du Chesn. Mezeray, P. Æmyl. Du Serres, & Matt. Villani l. 7. c. 20. vid. Oder. Rainald. ad hunc annum § 9.

Supper being ended, [t] every one retired to his Lodging with his Prisoners, and then again they releafed several upon their Parole, whom the next Morning they permitted to depart on as easie Conditions as others enjoyed the Day before.

[t] Froiss. c. 169.

XII. Early the next Morning, while certain Heralds were sent out to view the Number and Quality of the Dead, the Prince having heard Mass publiquely in the Field, and caused [u] Thanks to be rendred to Almighty God for so signal a Victory, gave his Men time to take their Repast; and after that, in [x] sight of all the Captives, both highly commended and amply rewarded his Souldiers; And by that time all things being trussed up and ready, a March was sounded, and the Prince rode forth, taking the way toward Poctiers.

[u] Pol. Virgil. l. 19. p. 381. n. 14. & Froiss. c. 169.
[x] Pol. Virgil. ibid. n. 15.

An. Dom. 1356. An. Regni Angliæ XXX. Franciæ XVII.

The Night before there came to that City the Lord of Roye with an hundred Spears: He was not at the Battle, but as he was riding thitherward, he met the Duke of Normandy near to Chauvigny, who ſent him to Poictiers, with Charge to keep the Town, till he ſhould hear to the Contrary. When this Lord therefore being now in the Place, heard that the Engliſh Army was ſo near, and marching toward the City, he commanded all Men to Arms, and to haſte to their ſeveral Defences at the Walls, Gates and Towers. But the Prince paſſed by without the leaſt offer of Attempting them, either as [y] one ſays, mindfull of his Word to King John, for neither did he commit any more Hoſtility thrô all the way he went, or becauſe he was already ſo laden with Gold, Silver, Armour, Priſoners and other Carriages, that he thought it enough for this time, if he might bring all home ſecurely, together with the Perſon of the French King, which he valued far above all the other Riches he had won. Wherefore he took but ſmall journeys, not above four or five Leagues a Day, and always took up his Quarters betimes, and rode ever in Cloſe Order, ready arrayed for Battle; ſave only, that the Marſhals went on before, ſcouring the Country with 500 Men of Arms, to open the Paſſages where the Prince intended to go; but they met with no Body to encounter or impeach them, the whole Country was ſo terrified, and all Men of War were retired into ſtrong Holds.

[y] Pau. Æmyl. p. 258.

As thus the Prince of Wales rode along leiſurely, [z] he heard how the Lord Audely had diſtributed among his Four Eſquires, the Gift which he had given him of five hundred Marks per annum. Whereupon the Prince ſent for him, and he was brought in his Litter unto Him, and received very courteouſly at his hands; but by and by ſaid the Prince, "Sir James, We underſtand, that aſſoon as you were got to your Tent laſt "night, you diſpoſed of the Revenues we gave you, to Four of your Eſquires. We are "therefore deſirous to know why you did ſo; and whether our Gift was agreeable to you "or no? Sir (ſaid the Knight) It is true, that I have given it unto them, and now "I ſhall ſhew you the Reaſon why I did ſo. Theſe four Eſquires, that are here preſent, "have a long while ſerved me in many weighty Affairs, but Sir, in this laſt Battle they "ſtuck to me ſo ſurely, that if they had never done any thing elſe for me, I ought to "have been not a little Gratefull unto them. For Sir, I am but a ſingle Man, and yet by "their Aſſiſtance and faithfull Valour, I took upon me to accompliſh the Vow, which I "had made long ſince, and now am alive after I have performed it; whereas without "them I had ſurely died in the Enterpriſe. Wherefore Sir, when I conſidered the Love, "that they bear unto me, I had not been Courteous if I had not done well for them, "who have ſo well ſerved me, even as your Royal Highneſs hath ſet me an Example. "And (God be thanked) I have ſtill ſufficient Revenues left me by my Anceſtors to "maintain me according to my Quality in your Service. But Royal Sir, if I have done "this againſt your Pleaſure, I humbly requeſt your Pardon: For both I and my Eſ- "quires are ſtill as wholly devoted to your Service, as ever We were. At this the "Prince looking kindly on him, ſaid, "Sir James, I am ſo far from blaming any "thing that you have done in this Caſe, that I thank you heartily for it: And for the "Sake of theſe Valiant Eſquires, whom you praiſe ſo highly, I conſent that they "enjoy your Gift as you intended: But Sr. James, I muſt oblige you to accept of me "ſix hundred Marks more in the ſame manner, as I gave you the other.

[z] Froiſ. c. 169. & Cambden's Remains p. 238. Dudg. 1 Vol. p. 745. & Aſhmole's Garter p. 705.

Thus far Froiſard; and for Confirmation of his Report, it appears from the Teſtimony of our [a] Publique Records, that this Lord Audely for his ſingular Services at that time, had a Grant from that Renowned Prince of four hundred Pounds per Annum; which Grant was afterwards confirmed unto him by the King during Life, and for a Twelve-month after, to be received out of the Coynage of the Stanneries in Cornwall, and the Prince's Lands in that County.

[a] 3 May Pat. 33. Ed. 3. p. 2. m. 14. per Inſpeximus. Vid. Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 749. & Aſhm. Garter p. 705.

After this Manner did this Generous Engliſh Prince by his Liberality as well as Valour, take timely Care not only to render thoſe who ſerved him like Himſelf, but alſo to build a ſtrong Foundation of an Honourable Name, which ſhould be venerable to late Poſterity.

XIII. And thus did Edward the BLACK-PRINCE (now doubly dyed Black by the Terrour of his Arms) continue his March without [b] the leaſt Oppoſition thrô Poictou and Saintogne, till he came to Blaye, where he paſſed over the River Garonne, and ſo came in Safety and Honour to his Chief City of Bourdeaux. It can hardly be imagin'd, with what extravagant Joy and Triumph, and Honourable Feaſtings, and ſplendid Pageants this Victorious Prince was received into that City, both by the Clergy and Laity, all Sorts of People extolling his Praiſe, and rejoycing in his Preſence. From hence the [c] Prince wrote Letters into England to the King his Father, giving him him a full, but modeſt, Account of his Succeſs, and promiſing (God willing) the next Spring to bring over his Royal Priſoner into England: For by that Time he would have his Navy well equipped and furniſhed with Men of War. King Edward was wonderfully pleaſed with this extraordinary Succeſs of his Sons; but when the News of the Victory was divulged among the People, Men were almoſt beſide themſelves for Joy, the Conduits ran with Wine, Bonfires were continually flaming, Songs and Muſick, Plays, Feaſts and Wakes were in all Places. Thus the Vulgar. But the King [d] Himſelf like a Wiſe and Religious Prince, who knew the Inſtability of Fortune (even before he felt it Himſelf) by the Example of the French Kings ſo ſuddain and unexpected Fall, not only return'd his own Thanks to God Almighty for ſo ſignal a Victory, [e] but ſummon'd his Lords together, to whom he ſeriouſly declared, that this Victory was not obtain'd by any Vertue or Power of his Son or Subjects, but by the Grace of God alone; wherefore he enjoyned them all, neither by Feaſting nor otherwiſe to expreſs any looſe Joy or Vain-glory. And at the ſame time he further enjoyned Simon Iſlip Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and John Thoresby Archbiſhop of York, that for Eight Days together they ſhould thrô their ſeveral Provinces uſe Publique Proceſſions and Prayers for the Souls of thoſe who fell in the Battle; and alſo return ſolemn Thankſgivings to God for ſo ſignal a Mercy vouchſafed unto the Engliſh Nation: By which inſtance of Moderation he gain'd no leſs Glory to Himſelf, than his Son had done by his Victory.

[b] Froiſ. c. 169.

[c] Polyd. Virgil. p. 381.

AN. DOM. 1356. An. Regni Angliæ XXX. Franciæ XVII.

[d] Vid. Odor. Rainal. ad hunc an. §. 7. Matt. Villani l. 7. c. 21. P. Virgil. l. 19. p. 381. & Froiſ. ibid.

[e] Matt. Villani l. 7. c. 21.

XIV. Preſently after the Battle of Poictiers, the Cardinal of Perigort applied himſelf again to the Victorious Prince, in order to ſettle ſome kind of Agreement between the Two Realms. At firſt it is ſaid, [f] that the Prince would not vouchſafe to ſpeak with him, or ſo much as to ſee his Face, becauſe of the Chaſtelain of Empoſta, and others of his Retinue, who were found to ſtand againſt him in the Battle of Poictiers: For he could not believe as yet, but that the Cardinal ſent them thither. However when the Cardinal ſaw the Prince's Strangeneſs, and underſtood the true Cauſe thereof, he made uſe of the Mediation of the Lord of Chaumont, the Lord of Monferrant, and the Captal of Buſche, who were his Couſins, proteſting unto them in Verbo Sacerdotis, that he was not conſenting to that Action of his Men. And theſe Lords ſpake ſo much in the Cardinals Behalf, and gave the Prince ſo many Reaſons, that at laſt he was content to hear what the Cardinal could ſay for himſelf. And he having once gain'd that Point, excuſed himſelf ſo diſcreetly, that the Prince and his Council had no further Suſpicion of him. Whereupon he recover'd the Princes good Opinion, and redeemed his Men at reaſonable Ranſoms: For the Chaſtelain himſelf was ſet but at a Thouſand [g] Franks, which makes an 100 l. Sterling, which Summ he afterward paid. From this time the Prince received the Holy Father with ſo much Sweetneſs and Humanity, that he could not but highly commend him therefore in his Letters to the Pope; wherein alſo he ſet forth the Princes Moderation, which he ſhew'd toward the King of France. Inſomuch that his Holineſs ſent his Letters to the Prince, wherein he exhorted him yet farther to ſhew Clemency to the Conquered, and amidſt his Triumphant Fortune to accommodate his Mind to Peace, and to return Thanks to God Almighty: As appears more largely from the Letters themſelves, the Tenour [h] whereof followeth.

[f] Froiſ. c. 169. fol. 85. a.

[g] Frank 2 s.

"INNOCENT the Biſhop, Servant of the Servants of God, to Edward Prince "of Wales, Eldeſt Son of our moſt Dear Son in Chriſt, the Illuſtrious King of Eng-"land Greeting, and Apoſtolical Benediction. Althô O Son, You may, as we proba-"bly believe, after the manner of the World, glory in the Felicity of your Succeſſes; "yet we hold undoubtedly, that as one Devout toward God, and derived of Parents "devout alſo toward him, You do with reverence refer the Glory of your Triumphs, "and the Honour of your Victories to God your Creator, from whom is all Victory and "all Triumph: We hold, that in them you conſider the Effuſion of human Blood; "We hold, that you regard the Peril of Souls; and that therefore you do ſo much "the more humble your Self in the ſight of your God, by how much as a wiſe and pru-"dent Perſon, you may plainly perceive, that for thoſe you ought to return him Thanks; "for theſe to beg Pardon of him. For althô the ſame God, who beſtows his Gifts as "he pleaſes, hath made you Glorious with the Titles of Victories, and the Pomp of Tri-"umphs, yet he doth deteſt the Slaughter of his People; nor would have the Rancor "or Hate, the Right or Wrong of Rulers, to be compenſated with the Deſtruction of "faithfull and innocent Subjects. Which we in ſerious Meditation weighing with our "ſelves, nothing doubt, nay perhaps we are certain, that You, by how much you have "received more proſperous things of the Hand of the Lord, are ſo much the more prompt "to Peace, ſo much the more favourably enclin'd to Concord. Eſpecially ſince it is u[h] Odor. Rainal. ad hunc ann. §. 8. & 9. ex Tom. 4. Epiſt. Secret. p. 201, &c.

ſual

An. Dom. 1356. An. Regni Angliæ XXX. Franciæ XVII.

"sual for Powerfull Men, who follow Goodneſs, that Proſperity doth rather ſtir them "up dayly to Mercy; that Succeſs doth rather induce them perpetually to Gentle- "neſs. For Goodneſs is never taken notice of in any One, but onely when it is in "his Power to be Cruel; the Sweetneſs of Clemency is rarely known, unleſs when it "might deal ſeverely: Power therefore gives occaſion to Clemency, and a Cauſe alſo to "Goodneſs.

"This Occaſion therefore and this Cauſe We require of You, ſince you are able to "expreſs it; and for a Peace, to be by the Help of God reformed between our moſt "Dear Son in Chriſt, John the Illuſtrious King of France (whom the Event of War "hath brought into your Priſon) and your Self, we confidently approach your High- "neſs, deſiring You as affectionately as we can, and more earneſtly beſeeching You by "the Bowels of the Mercies of God, that rendring a return of Gratitude to the Lord "your God, for thoſe things which he hath given unto You, You would accommo- "date your Soul, prepare your Heart, and diſpoſe your Mind to Peace and Concord.

"For You know, that the Great King of Peace, by whom You live and reign, doth "command You to love Peace, and refuſes to dwell in the Hearts of the Unmercifull. "And leſt we ſhould more prolixly enlarge our Epiſtle, we add unto our Prayers, that "thoſe things which our Reverend Brother Talayrand Biſhop of Alby, and our Belo- "ved Son, Nicolas titulo Sancti Vitalis, Prieſt-Cardinal, Nuntio's of the Apoſtolick "See, or either of them, in their own Perſons or in Others, ſhall relate unto You as "to this Point, or declare unto You by Letters, You would undoubtedly believe; and "by a pious Proſecution fulfill them with the deſired Fruits of your Actions. Dat. Aven. V. Non. Octob. Anno Pontificatûs noſtri IV.

By other Letters alſo of the ſame Date the Pope highly applauded the Young Prince, for that he had honourably received the Cardinal Talayrand, and had in the midſt of Proſperity overcome that inſolence of Mind, which uſually attends Conquerours, and gave him his Thanks for having entertain'd the French King with ſuch ſingular Courteſie.

"Our Reverend Brother (ſays he) Talayrand Biſhop of Alby, Nuntio of the Apoſto- "lick See, wrote unto us by his Letters, that You confirming and enhancing the Nobility, "which you derive from your Stock by your Generoſity of Soul, and the exerciſe of Vertues, "have entertain'd him with ſuch Honours and ſuch Favours, as became a Son to exhibit "to his Father in Chriſt: And that (which is greater than all theſe) preparing your "Mind equally for all Events, and not being puffed up with any Proſperity of Succeſſes, "but always more humble in the ſight of the Lord your God, attributing all unto him, "from whom you have received all, You do graciouſly allow unto our Dear Son in Chriſt, "John the Illuſtrious King of France (whom the Event of War hath brought into your "Priſon) that Honour, which belongs to ſo great a Prince. Upon which account retur- "ning unto your Highneſs our deſerved Praiſes, and hoping undoubtedly that the Omni- "potent God, who hath reſpect unto the Lowly, but knoweth the Proud afar off, will "beſtow on You more abundantly and freely the Grace of his Benediction, &c. Dat. Aven. V. Non. Octob. Anno Pontif. IV.

i Froiſ. c. 169. fol. 75.

XV. All this while i did Edward the Black-Prince continue at Bourdeaux, having with his ready Mony bought up of the Lords, Knights, and Eſquires of Gaſcogne all thoſe French Priſoners, whom he deſign'd to carry along with the King into England: For as for thoſe whom the Engliſh Lords had taken, he intended not to buy them till they were brought ſafe home. The French King he lodged honourably in a magnificent Apartment in the Abby of St. Andrew, and Himſelf kept Court in the other Apartment of the ſame Abby, like unto it.

Now there were many Queſtions, Contraſts, and Challenges among ſeveral Knights and Eſquires of Gaſcogne, concerning the Taking of the French King; divers of them affirming, how they were the Men that took him. But Sr. Dennis Morbeque by Right of Arms and true Tokens, which he ſhew'd, as the Kings own Gauntlet, challenged him for his rightfull Priſoner. Yet for all that this Mans Cauſe ſeem'd ſo evident (inſomuch that the Pretenſions of all Others were ſilenced thereby) an Eſquire of Gaſcogne, called Bernard de Troutes averred, how he had more Reaſon to lay Claim to that Honourable Action. Between theſe two there was much Fending and Proving in Preſence of the Prince and other Lords, that ſat with him to hear the Cauſe. But when once it came to a Challenge between them, then the Prince commanded them both peremptorily to ſurceaſe, and to forbear any further proceeding, till they came into England, on pain of his Diſpleaſure; for he ſaid, no manner of Deciſion or Determination ſhould be made, but by the King his Father. However, becauſe the French King himſelf enclin'd more more to Sr. Dennis of Morbeque than to any other, and wish'd (as he said privately) that he alone might have the Honour, which he had so well deserved; the Generous Prince considering, that being a banished Man, he had little more than his Wages, and what he purchased in War, caused secretly to be deliver'd into his Hands 2000 Nobles, to maintain his Estate handsomly withall, against the time he should appear in the Court of England. And (to end this Matter once for all) when the next Year King Edward and his Council had determin'd the Cause in his behalf, the Prince [k] gave him 5000 Crowns of Gold more, as a Reward for that Service: For as we shew'd before, all Prisoners, who are valued above 10000 Crowns, belong not unto him that took him, but to the Prince.

AN. DOM. 1356. An. Regni Angliæ XXX. Franciæ XVII.

[k] Paul. Æmylius p. 288.

Thus the Prince of Wales tarried at Bourdeaux, providing and ordaining his Affairs, as he thought best, till it was Lent, during which time, the Souldiers of England and Gascogne spent in Mirth and Revell, especially in the Christmas Holy-days, all the Gold and Silver, which they had won with the hazard of their Lives. For Souldiers and Seamen, thô they court Money at the Highest rate of any others, take their leave of it as pleasantly, and as unconcernedly, as any Men whatsoever. Those Knights, [l] Gentlemen, and others, who had been present in the Battle of Poictiers, upon their return into England, were welcomed, treated, and caressed highly by all Men, whereever they came, and in all respects Prefer'd to others of their Rank and Condition: So Honourable is it to be Brave upon a good and just account. But on the contrary [m] all the Lords, Knights, and Esquires of France, who had fled from the Battle, were so hated, reviled, and pointed at, whereever they came, that they durst hardly venture to appear in any great Town or publick place of Resort.

[l] Froiss. c. 169.

[m] Froiss. c. 170.

Now about the time, [n] that this Battle of Poictiers was fought, Henry Plantagenet Duke of Lancaster, was in the County of Eureux in Normandy, and toward the Marches of Coutances, together with Prince Philip of Navarre, and the Lord Godfry of Harcourt in his Company. These Great Captains endeavour'd all they could to joyn the Prince of Wales before that Battle; but they could not by any means: Because all the Passages on the River of Loire were so surely guarded. However, hearing shortly after of the Prince's Success, they were wonderfully pleased; and Prince Philip of Navarre soon after went for England to speak with the King, about the further Progress of his Affairs, and the Duke of Lancaster (as we shew'd before) diverted into Bretagne to the Countess of Monford (where shortly after he went, and laid Siege to Rennes) having constituted the Lord Godfry of Harcourt his Lieutenant, who kept at St. Saviour le Vicount, his own Possession, to hold frontier War in those parts: And this he performed with such Zeal and Success, that he alarum'd the Regent of France, and obliged him to seek a Remedy, as we shall see by and by.

[n] Froiss. c. 170.

XVI. It is to be observed, that the Three Sons of King John, who fled from the Battle of Poictiers, were all Green and unexpert in managing Publique Affairs; especially in such a Confusion, as must needs follow so Great and Publique a Loss, and in the Kings absence too. Charles the Dauphin, thô the Eldest, yet knew not how to steer his Course in so tempestuous and turbulent a Season: However, as Regent of the Realm, [o] on the 29 of September, which was but Ten days after the Battle, he summon'd a Parliament of the Three Estates to meet him at Paris, on the 15 of October then next ensuing. At which time the said Duke, sitting as Regent in the Parliament Chamber, and the Three Estates being present, Peter de la Foreſt, Archbishop of Rouën, and Chancellour of France, "declared openly the great Misfortune, that had lately be-"fallen the Realm, by the taking of their King and Head at the Battle of Poictiers, "and exhorted them in a long and well-composed Oration to be aiding and assisting, "every Man to his Ability, toward the Redemption of their Lord and Sovereign. Whereupon Answer was returned by the Mouth of Dr. John Craon Archbishop of Rheims, in the Name of the Clergy, by the Mouth of Philip Duke of Orleans, King John's Brother, in the Name of the Nobility, and by the Mouth of Stephen Marcell, Burgess and Provost of Paris, in the Name of the Commons of the Towns of France, "That all of them were ready to assist in that Affair to the utmost of their Power; "but they prayed, that they might have a convenient time allowed them, to consult "together, and to consider, how to raise wherewithall to do it: Which was granted. So the Three Estates held their Consultation at the Fryers Minors, or the Grey-Fryers, in Paris for the space of 15 days: In which time they appointed among them to the Number of 50 Persons, to inspect and make an Enquiry after many Enormities and things, as then out of Order in the Realm. These Fifty superintendants chose from among themselves Six Representatives, to go to the Duke of Normandy, and to Request of him in their Name, [o] Fabian p. 282. Froiss. & Mezeray, & Du Chesne p. 678.

An. Dom. 1356. An. Regni Angliæ XXX. Franciæ XVII.

Name, that he would promiſe to keep ſecret what they were about to declare unto him, which he granted. And then they humbly beſought him to diſcharge all ſuch, as they ſhould name unto him, and to ſeiſe their Goods, as forfeited, to the Kings uſe. And firſt they named Peter de la Foreſt, Archbiſhop of Rouën and Chancellour of France, then Sr. Simon Bucy, Chief Preſident and Counſellour to the King, Sr. Robert de Lorize, the Kings Chamberlain; Sr. Nicolas Braque, Maſter of the Kings Palace; Ingelram de Celer Under-Treaſurer of France, John Brill de Berry Sovereign Maſter of the Moneys, and Chief of the Accompts to the King, and John Channeau de Chartres Treaſurer of the Kings Wars. All theſe Officers the ſaid Perſons, Delegates from the Fifty, would have to be diſcharged of their Offices for ever; and moreover they demanded of the Dauphin, that the King of Navarre might be deliver'd from his Impriſonment, and that He himſelf would pleaſe to be adviſed and counſelled by ſuch, as they ſhould aſſign unto him; [p] That is to ſay, Twelve Prelates, Twelve Knights, and Twelve Burgeſſes; which Thirty ſix were accordingly forthwith choſen for that purpoſe: But among them were many, of whom neither the Duke of Normandy, nor his Council, had any good opinion. And yet theſe Thirty ſix were not only to be as ſo many Tutors to the Duke, but as ſo many Tribunes, the whole Power of the Three Eſtates of Parliament, being in a manner Epitomized in them. When the foremention'd Officers of State heard, what Arbitrary Judges were like to ſit upon them, they thought it their beſt way to fly from the impending Storm, and take refuge in foreign parts, till they might hear better News. The Duke of Normandy, upon the firſt propoſal of theſe Requeſts, and others, as little agreeable, [q] gave this reply, "that he would know the opinion of his Council, and accordingly return them ſome "ſuitable anſwer: But firſt he deſired to hear, what aid the Three Eſtates would "give him toward the Redemption of the King, his Father. Whereunto they anſwer'd, "That the Clergy had granted one Deſme and an half to be paid within a "Year, provided they might obtain the Pope's leave, and that the Lords had granted "as much to be levied on their Lands; and that the Commons had granted the Tenth "peny of all their Moveables.

[p] Froiſ. c. 170.

[q] Fabian ibid.

On the Morrow following, the Duke aſſembled his Council in the Palace of the Louvre, and there ſhew'd them the High Demands of the Three Eſtates; whereupon many ſcruples were raiſed, and many Meſſages ſent too and fro between the Duke and them. But the Eſtates return'd this final anſwer, "That except he would re"form all the foreſaid Miſcarriages, and conform himſelf to their Minds for the Pub"lique Good, they would not give him any Aid with their Goods, as they had pro"miſed him. Wherefore the Duke, being in a mighty plunge, ſent ſecretly to his Father, then a Priſoner at Bourdeaux, to inform him of all the Premiſes; and the King wrote back to him again; "That he ſhould not by any means agree to their Inſolent "Demands; for He had rather continue ſtill a Priſoner to an Honourable Enemy, than "return home, to become a ſlave to his own Subjects. The Duke upon receit of theſe Letters, becauſe he would not have ſuch Matters to be ſcann'd in open Parliament, ſent for the moſt Eminent of all the Three Eſtates to come to him to the Louvre; and accordingly there came the two Archbiſhops of Rheims and of Lyon, and the Biſhop of Laon for the Clergy; Sr. Waren de Luxemburgh, Sr. John de Conflent Marſhal of Champagne, and Sr. John de Picquigny Governour of Artois for the Lords; and for the Commons and Burgeſſes of Paris, and other Towns, Stephen Marcel Provoſt of the Merchants, and Charles Cuſac.

Unto theſe the Duke communicated the News, he had lately received from the King, his Father, requiring their Advice, whether it were beſt that day to acquaint the whole Parliament therewith, or to defer it, till they might be more calm, and in a better humour: In the end, it was agreed, that he ſhould defer it, till the fourth Day after; all which time he waited to ſee, if they would grow more Dutifull, and more Modeſt in their Demands. But all was in vain, they ſtill ran as High as ever, and eſpecially in the matter of Changing the Officers, and of delivering the King of Navarre from the Caſtle of Crevecœur in Cambreſis, where he was confin'd: "For they ſaid, it would be "much for the Advantage of the Realm, if ſo Valiant and Compleat a Prince could "be brought to eſpouſe her Intereſt; now that in a manner all her Nobility was either "ſlain or taken in the Battle of Poictiers. Wherefore they inſtantly urged the Duke "at this time to deliver him; becauſe he was wrongfully impriſon'd. But the Duke told them all along, that he durſt not undertake to deliver him, ſince the King, his Father, had put him in Priſon, for what cauſe it was not his part to determine. However when He ſaw there was like to be no abatement of theſe heats, on the Fourth Day he came into the Parliament-Chamber, and said, "That he had not leisure as "then to attend to, and discuss all their Requests; because of tidings, which he had "lately received from his Father, and also from his Uncle, Charles Emperour of Ger- "many, some whereof he vouchsafed to communicate unto them; and so for that time adjourn'd them to the Day of All-Saints; when by Advice of his Council he wholly dissolved them, without any fruits of so promising an Assembly, or any Remedy against the Confusions of the times. At this sudden, thô deserved, Dissolution, the Estates murmured and repin'd; but however, before they parted, in order to the justification of their Proceedings, took Copies of their Requests made to the Duke, to carry to their several Countries and Corporations: and to shew them upon occasion in their own Defence. And thô afterwards the Duke required an Aid of the City of Paris, toward the Maintenance of his Wars, they told him plainly; "that they were "not obliged to any such thing, unless they were enjoyned by the Three Estates, "which therefore they desir'd might be reassembled: But this the Young Prince would by no means yield to, thô he was never so much press'd with Difficulties.

Day

AN. DOM. 1356. An. Regni Angliæ XXX. Franciæ XVII.

So unhappy was the Realm of France at this time, that when her Parliaments should rather for the present have wisely winked even at great Abuses, and have immediately apply'd their helping Hand to the Vitals, that were now endanger'd, leaving less important Mischiefs to be cured at a more seasonable time: On the contrary, she undutifully, as well as unadvisedly, quarrel'd with her Prince, about the Reformation of small Abuses, not considering, that she ought rather in such a Desperate juncture to have closed with Him, in providing Physick for the almost expiring State. Kings are not to be forced by the Insolent Populacy from the Necessity of their Affairs; but to be confided in, as Fathers, and to be rely'd on, as Generous and Benign Deputies of Heaven; from whom we are humbly to request, and not violently to extort.

More commendably did those of the Province of Languedoc, as the most remote part from Paris, so the most Free from the Contagion of its Insolence: For they, being [r] by Authority of the Earl of Armagnac, the Kings Lieutenant in those parts, assembled in order to make Provision for the Kings Redemption, did behave themselves both as Dutifull Subjects, and discreet men at the same time. For first they unanimously agreed to provide at their own proper Costs and Charges 500 Men of Arms, all Knights, with an Esquire to every one of them, and moreover a 1000 Souldiers on Horseback, a 1000 Arbalists, and 2000 others, all to have a Years pay from the State, viz. Each Spear to have for himself and his Esquire, or Serjeant, half a Floren per diem, every other Man to be allow'd 8 Florens a piece per Month. Moreover they ordain'd, that no Man should wear any precious Furrs, or other Rich stuff, and that all Women and Ladies should lay aside their Gorgeous Attire of their Heads, and wear neither Pearls, Gold, nor Silver about their cloaths, or upon their Girdles, as long as the King should remain Prisoner. And further, to testifie how deeply they resented this Publique Calamity, they generally abandon'd all Banquets, Entertainments, Masks, Dances, Plays, and other Diversions, during his Captivity. Besides all which, they freely granted a considerable Aid toward his Redemption, and made divers wholsome Ordinances, both to their own Honour, and the Profit of the Common-weal. Which Laudable Example of theirs, Champaigne also followed: But good Examples are not always so Influential as Bad; for almost all other parts chose rather to copy the obstinate Undutifullness of that Seditious Metropolis of Paris. And this City, after the usual Methods of Rebels, pretending to be in fear of Tyranny, when it was preparing to be seditious, was [s] now strengthen'd with Regular Fortifications, its Walls repaired, and Ditches enlarged, and all the Street of St. Anthony and St. Paul, which before belonged to the Suburbs, was now enclosed within the Walls, and Chains continually drawn cross the Streets. Thus was Paris of a very weak Place, made considerably strong by those popular Tribunes, Stephen Marcell Provost of the Merchants, and Ronsac the Sheriff, who thô they intended this Defence against their Prince, and so did wickedly; yet, as it proved some while after, in good time made it more teneable against a Publique Enemy, and so were by chance Benefactors to that City.

[r] Fabian p. 283. Du Serres p. 25, & Paul. Æmyl. p. 289.

[s] Mezeray p. 47.

XVII. Now [t] before this Fruitless Parliament at Paris was thus broke up, Word was brought to the Duke and the Three Estates, that the Lord Godfrey Harcourt made cruel War in Normandy, and overran the Country twice or thrice in a Week; sometime to the suburbs of Caën, sometimes to St. Lo, or to Eureux, or Coutances. Whereupon the Duke was however so much assisted by the Three Estates, as to be enabled to raise 300 Men of Arms, and 500 others, to go against the foresaid Lord Godfrey: Over which Troops the Duke set the Lord [u] Robert Clermont his Lieutenant in that

[t] Froiss. c. 171.

[u] Fabian p. 284.

An. Dom. 1356. An. Regni Angliæ XXX. Franciæ XVII.

Duke dom, together with the Lord of Ravenal, the Lord of Remilly, and two other Lords. These Forces marched from Paris, and came to Roüen, where they very much encreased, being joyn'd by many Expert Men of Arms of Normandy, and also an addition of several Knights with their Troops from Artois and Vermandois; as the Lord of St. Quintin, the Lord Lewis of Neufcastell, the Lord Edward of Renty, the Lord John de Fiennes, the Lord Ingram of Hesdin, and several others, who all rode to Coutances, and there made their Garrison.

* Froiss. c. 172.

When the Lord * Godfrey Harcourt, who was a Knight of great Valour and Conduct, heard, how the French were come to the City of Coutances, he assembled together as many Men of Arms, Archers, and others, as conveniently he could, and said, "he would ride forth and look upon the Frenchmen. Accordingly he marched from St. Saviour Le Vicount with little more than 700 Men in his Company, consisting for the most part of Normans and other Frenchmen, who holding for the King of Navarre, were generally in those days called Navarrois. That same day the Frenchmen also rode forth, having sent their Scouts before them, who brought back word of Sr. Godfrey's being in the Field with his Navarrois; as also Sr. Godfrey's Scouts brought him word of the French, whom they had seen, and of their Number; for they had view'd them well. "Then, said Sr. Godfrey aloud, since our Enemies are coming to "meet Us, We will by no means flinch from them: But that they may find Us "ready to receive them, let Us now order our selves to the best Advantage, and therewithall he set his Archers in the Front, and order'd his Battails at Leisure. When the Lord Robert Clermont came up with his Forces, and saw their Behaviour, he commanded his Men to alight on Foot, and being close cover'd with their broad Bucklers against the Archers, to stand still, and not to move forward, till the Word of Command. Then the Archers began to approach, and shot fiercely; but the Frenchmen stood the shock, lying close under their Shields; So that they suffer'd little or no harm. When therefore the Archers had spent all their Arrows thus in vain, they cast away their Bows, and retired back to their Men of Arms, who stood ready ranged along by an Hedge, and in their Front Sr. Godfry with his Banner before him, [y] being Gules two Bars Or. Then the French Archers began to shoot, and having spent all their own Arrows to much more purpose, than Sr. Godfry's Men had done theirs, they gather'd up the Arrows, which before had been shot against them, and returned them now with a good will. And now the French Men of Arms began to approach, and at the First meeting there was a severe and cruel Battle: But Sr. Godfrey's Infantry were soon put out of order and discomfited. When the Lord Godfrey saw this Misfortune, he prudently drew himself into a wing of Armed Men, closed about with Hedges, resolving there to Dispute the point with his Enemies: This being observed by the French Men of Arms, who after they had baffled the Archers, were Mounted again, they all alighted on foot once more, and encompassed the Place round, searching, which way they might best enter the Hedge, and come at their Enemies. Whereever the chief Brunt was, thither came Sr. Godfrey, bringing along with him Terrour to his Foes, and to his Friends Assurance: For he was of great strength and Courage, and very Expert in Arms; so that many Hundreds of the French were hurt or slain, before they could win an entrance upon him. But at last by obstinate Valour, the Disadvantage of the place was overcome, and then a most Bloody Fight ensued: Nor yet would the French have had much reason to boast, if Sr. Godfrey's Men had been mindfull of their Promise, which was at all adventures to live and die with him. But now after a short and faint Resistance the Major part of them began to flee, and left him to his Destiny. Sr. Godfrey being sensible of his Condition, and knowing, he was too far engaged to retire handsomly, resolved in his Mind rather to die upon the spot, than suffer himself to be taken Prisoner, and reserved to some publique shame. Wherefore being on foot, he took a ponderous great Ax in his Hand, and set fast his left leg before the other, to stand more sure; for one of his legs was a little crooked; but he was exceeding strong in the Arms. And in this posture he fought Valiantly a good while, cleaving Heads and Helmets, or whatever he could reach; so that none dar'd to abide his stroaks: Till at last two Frenchmen Mounted their Horses, and so both together ran upon him with their Spears; and therewith bore him forceably to the Earth: At which time, those who were on foot near him, thrust him into the Body under his Armour, and so slew him. And with him there were slain, or taken, every Man of his Company, that remain'd about him, to the Number (says [z] one) of 800; thô others reckon, as we said before, that his whole Forces consisted but of 700 in all. However those, who fled away in the beginning, escaped all safe to St. Saviour le Vicount; for the Frenchmen had not leisure

[y] True use of Armory, in the Life of the Lord Chandos p. 57. in Bibl. Cotton.

[z] Fabian p. 284.

to

to purſue them, for tending to Sr. Godfrey. This Battle was fought on the [a] Tenth of November, being a Thurſday, An°. Domini MCCCLVI. Some ſay, [b] that Prince Philip of Navarre was preſent in the Field at this time, and that He went not into England, as we ſaid before: However he was of no moment, as to the Succeſs of the Battle, but made ſhift, it ſeems, to eſcape away to the further embroiling of the Realm of France.

AN. DOM. 1356. An. Regni Angliæ XXX. Franciæ XVII.

The Lord Godfrey of Harcourt being thus ſlain, [c] the Frenchmen returned Conquerours to Coutances, together with their Priſoners and the Spoil of the Field, and ſoon after having quieted thoſe Parts pretty well, they returned into France to the Duke of Normandy, who by that time was publiquely Proclaimed Regent of France. On the [d] 4th of December following, the Caſtle of Pont de l' Arche near unto Roüen, which had long been in the Hands of Prince Philip of Navarre, was after a Siege of five Months yielded up on Conditions to the Regents Captains; the Navarrois not only to depart with Bag and Baggage, but to receive by way of Gratuity 6000 Franks for yielding up the ſaid Caſtle, which Summ amounts to 600 l. Sterling, every Frank being valued at two Shillings.

[a] Lit. Dom. C. B.
[b] Fabian ibid.
[c] Froiſ. c. 173.
[d] Fabian p. 285.

However [e] the Lands of Sr. Godfrey of Harcourt upon his Death fell to the King of England; for he had on certain Conditions engaged them unto Him and his Heirs for ever, having utterly diſinherited his Nephew the Lord Lewis of Harcourt, becauſe he ſo tamely reſented the Murder of his Uncle, the late Earl of Harcourt, as not to ſeek any Satisfaction; but ſtill continued a Friend to King John, who had ſo unjuſtly murther'd him. When King Edward heard News of this valiant Lords Death, he was very much concern'd at the Loſs; but however he ſent forth immediately by Sea more than 300 Men of Arms, Knights and Eſquires, beſides Archers, to go and take Poſſeſſion for him of St. Saviour le Vicount, which alone was well worth [f] 40000 Franks, or 4000 l. Sterling per annum, and made the Lord Robert Liſle his Captain over thoſe Lands, who was ſucceeded three Years after by the Lord Thomas Holland, who dying about a Year after, the King gave unto the Lord [g] John Chandos, in Conſideration of his manifold and notable Services, a Grant for Him and his Heirs for ever, of the Baronies of St. Saviour le Vicount, Daunvers and Dongeville, as alſo of the Lands and Knights Fees of St. Mary de Monteſarſellis and Romilly, and all the other Lands and Poſſeſſions of the ſaid Lord Godfrey of Harcourt: Whereupon the Lord Chandos built anew the Caſtle of St. Saviour, and for its better Defence frequently reſided there in Perſon, as we ſhall ſee hereafter.

[e] Froiſ. c. 173.
[f] Froiſ. c. 271. fol. 166. legit 400000 Franks, i.e. 40000 l. ſed corruptum hic puto; nam alibi æſtimat ad 30000 Franks tantum, omiſsâ unâ Decimâ.
[g] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 503. ex Clauſ. 34. Ed. 3. p. 1. m. 35.

XVIII. Now the [h] Pope, being extreamly ſollicitous to deliver the French from their preſent Conſternation, and to avert their impending Miſeries, thought fit to make uſe of Charles the Emperour towards a Settlement of Affairs, and ſending unto him Androine Abbot of Clugny, exhorted him to be a Mediator between the French and Engliſh, telling him, that the Glory of that Great Work was reſerved only for him; and that the Cardinals his Nuntio's, would joyn their utmoſt Endeavours. But with what Grief he was affected at the Captivity of King John will appear beſt from his Letters, the [i] Copy whereof followeth.

[h] Odor. Rainal. ad hunc annum §. 10. &c.

[i] Tom. 4. Epiſt. ſecret. p. 202. apud Odor. Rainald. ibid.

"INNOCENT the Biſhop, Servant of the Servants of God, to his moſt Dear "Son in Chriſt, CHARLES Emperour of the Romans, always Auguſtus. With ſuch "bitterneſs (O moſt Dear Son) and with a ſting of ſuch vehement Sorrow are our "Heart and Bowels wounded at the news of the Misfortune of our moſt Dear Son in "Chriſt, the Illuſtrious King of France, which we believe to have come to You be"fore the Receipt of theſe Preſents; that our Spirit hath almoſt failed us, our Vigour "is dried up, and in a manner all our Senſes are loſt. For who that is of a ſound "Mind, who that has but his Senſes, who that has but a Heart of Fleſh, who that has "any Humanity about him, would not burſt forth into Tears, would not ſigh from the "bottom of his Heart, would forbear grieving, would refrain weeping, would ceaſe la"menting? And indeed who could withhold from ſighing, at the Effuſion of ſo much "Chriſtian Blood, at the Fall of ſo many Nobles, at the Ruine of ſo many faithfull "People, and which is more deplorable at the hazard of ſo many Souls? For we be"lieve, that none has an Heart ſo ſtony, which the hearing of theſe things would not "break; that none is ſo obdurate, whom they would not melt and mollifie; none ſo "rocky, whom the Conſideration thereof would not ſoften. And whereas among the "manifold Afflictions, to which upon this account and otherwiſe we are obnoxious, we "awaken with a ſenſe of Grief our ſleeping Mind to a neceſſary Reparation of this Miſ"fortune (althô in a manner wholly deſperate of all Humane help and Aſſiſtance) un"to Him we lift up our Eyes darkned with ſorrow, unto Him we raiſe up the ſight of our

An. Dom. 1356. An. Regni Angliæ XXX. Franciæ XVII.

"afflicted Soul, unto Him we pour forth devout Prayers and Supplications, who commands the Sea and the Winds, and at whose Nod the breath of Tempests is allay'd; "that He being moved with gracious Compassion at so many grievous Scourges of his "People, extending from on high the Hand of his Power, would vouchsafe to deliver "us from these tempestuous Waves, and after the multitude of the Sorrows in our "Heart rejoyce our Soul with his Consolations. And we hope in him, that althô upon "the account of our sins he refuses to lend his Ear unto our Prayers, he will yet at least "take pity of the Calamities of his People, whom he hath redeemed with the gracious "Effusion of his own Blood.

"And hence it is, that firmly beleeving it proceeded from the Goodness of the same "our Redeemer, that You, who only of Mankind can apply a necessary Remedy to "these more acute Distempers, are in this time of Confusion retired into the utmost "Parts of your Empire next unto the Realm of France, We address our selves unto "You; That by the vertue of your Diligence and Prudence you would assuage the "fury of these Storms, and by the benefit of a calm Peace, remove the inconveniences "of War and Hostile Commotions, earnestly requiring you by Him, thrô whose Providence you are raised to the Imperial Dignity, that taking the Premises and other "things, which for brevity sake we omit, into due consideration, for the Reverence of "God, the Conservation of your Weal and Honour, the prospect of a general Advantage, and the Contemplation of our Intercession, You would not delay, but hastily "come down to prevent the Desolation of Catholick People, to hinder the Destruction of Christians, and to avert the Hazard of Souls. For unto You this Glory, unto "You this Honour, unto You this Praise is reserved of the Lord: For You are by "Blood allied unto the Parties, You (thô you be nearer to the One) will yet justly "respect the Cause of Both, and encline your eyes to Justice and not to Affinity: You "are (likely to be) an Effectual Umpire of Peace, and a Promoter of Concord, as "well on the Account of your Imperial Dignity, as of your Good-will and Charity.

"There also You shall have our Venerable Brother Talayrand Bishop of Alby, and "our beloved Son, Nicolas of the Title of St. Vitalis, Priest-Cardinal, Nuntio's "of the Apostolick See, whom you will find usefull Fellow-Labourers after this Good "Thing; and by whose Counsels and Help you may be directed and aided in what shall "occurr. Concerning which (because we have deliver'd certain Matters unto our Beloved Son Androine, Abbot of Clugny in the Diocese of Mascon, to be reported unto "your Clemency by Word of Mouth) We pray you more earnestly, that you would "give full credit to his Relations on our Behalf. Dat. Aven. V. Non. Octobr. An° Pontificatûs nostri IV.

[k] Matth. Villani l. 7. c. 46.

Upon the Receipt of these Letters the Emperour [k] summon'd a Diet to sit at Metz, then an Imperial City, in the Country of Lorraine, standing on the Moselle, to which Place he came a little before Christmas with Imperial Pomp, and no less than 20000 Horse attending him. He was served at Table by the Duke of Brandenburgh and other Princes of Course appointed to the said Service. There came thither to meet him among Others, his Nephew Charles Duke of Normandy, Dauphin of Vienna and Regent of France, to move him to put to his helping Hand in these Confusions: For the Realm was at that time not only at a loss from the Terrour of the English War, their King being Captive, and the Flower of their Nobility slain; but also from the Civil Broils then reigning: For the King of Navarre's Brother infested Normandy in Revenge of his Brothers Confinement: The Commons also raged against the Nobility, because they judged that by their Treason or Cowardise the King was taken. With which Note of Infamy the Heir of France himself was aspersed, who together with his Troops after a slight Resistance fled away and forsook his Father. To this Diet[l] at Metz there came also Ambassadors, as well from England as from France, but no effectual way of Concord could then be found by the German Princes: Of which Matter thus Rebdorf. In the Month of November the said Emperour, being invited by the Lords and Burgesses of France, after the foresaid Battle of Poictiers, came to the City of Metz, where he demanded of the Inhabitants the Rights of the Empire, and the Keys of the City. And thither came from Pope Innocent the Cardinal of Perigort, and the King of France's Son, the Emperours Nephew, who fled out of the said Battle with many Men of Arms; and a great Number of Nobles both of Germany and France were there with him, and tarried with him during the Festival of our Lords Nativity. But of the Peace there made between Wenceslaus Duke of Brabant, and Lewis Earl of Flanders; and of the Laws promulged at this time by the Emperour, we shall not say any thing, those Matters being foreign to our Purpose. The Curious Reader may refer himself for that to the [m] Authors quoted in the Margin.

[l] Matt. Villani l. 7. c. 46. [m] Rebdorf. in Annal. ad hunc annum Albert. Argentin. in Chron. Lib. Priv. Rom. Eccl. Tom. 1. p. 401. Extetiam in Arce St. Angel. & inter Collect. Platin. Tom. 3. p. 103, 128. & 156. & apud Goldast. in Collect. Constit. Imperial. Tom. 1. in Carolo IV. vid. Odor. Rainal. ad hunc annum §. 12. & 13.

On

On the * Tenth of December certain Coins of leſs value than uſual (which the Duke of Normandy by Advice of his Council, upon the account of his Neceſſities, had cauſed to be made) were proclaimed thrô Paris to be Currant Money, whereat the Commons yet were further incenſed. So that two Days after Stephen Marcell, Provoſt of the Merchants, went to the Louvre there to ſpeak with Prince Lewis Earl of Anjou, whom the Duke of Normandy had left his Deputy-Regent, upon his going to Metz to viſit the Emperour his Uncle, as we have ſeen. AN. DOM. 1356. An. Regni Angliæ XXX. Franciæ XVII.

Here the ſaid Provoſt and the Reſt with him deſired the young Earl to ſtop the Courſe of thoſe new Monies, for otherwiſe the People would think themſelves obliged to ſtop it themſelves: At laſt after a day or two's Delay, and a long Conteſt, the young Earl was fain to yield thus much to the Provoſt, and the reſt of thoſe humble Petitioners, as to ſtop the Money, till the Dukes further Pleaſure might be known; for which Purpoſe Meſſengers were immediately poſted away to learn the Dukes Reſolution as to that Point. And he, thô for a while he ſtood firm to his firſt Reſolution, was in the end compelled to ſtop the Proceedings, and to comply with the outragious importunities of the Rabble. * Fabian p. 285.

XIX. And thus we ſhall end this Remarkable Year, when we have ſubjoyned two ſhort Obſervations, which to Philologers may perhaps ſeem not uſeleſs: It hath been an old Report, that as Scipio Africanus, that Noble Roman Commander, was obſerved firſt to have brought Barbers into Rome; ſo our Black-Prince is ſaid [n] this time in Complaiſance to the French Nation, to have begun and authoriſed a Faſhion which hath continued ever ſince, of ſhaving the Beard, and letting the Hair of the Head grow, contrary to the Primitive uſe of the Engliſh Nation. Thô I muſt acknowledge this Relation agrees not well with the ancient Pictures of Men of that Age: And the learned Antiquary Eſquire Aſhmole ſome Years ſince deſcribed unto me a Medal, which he ſuppoſed to have belonged to one of the Princes Great Horſes, whereon he was figured Praying in Armour, ſave that his Helmet was off, and having a conſiderable Grown Beard. [n] Stow p. 263.

Nor is it altogether unworthy our Obſervation, [o] that after this Taking of King John of France, the Lords and Gentlemen of England began generally to leave off that ancient Uſage of bearing their Effigies on Horſeback in their Seals, and ſet their own Arms only in the Reverſe of their Seals on little Shields. [o] Dugd. Warw. p. 672. ex Joh. Rous Hiſt. M. S. de Reg. in Bibl. Cotton p. 253.

CHAPTER the SECOND.

The CONTENTS.

AN. DOM. 1357. An. Regni Angliæ XXXI. Franciæ XVIII.

I. Prince Edward brings King John of France and the reſt of his Priſoners, taken at the Battle of Poictiers, into England; their Paſſage thrô London; King Edward receives the Captive King with great Honour. II. Henry Duke of Lancaſter continues the Siege before Rennes; the Cardinals obtain a Truce between the two Kings. III. King David releaſed of his Impriſonment, returns into Scotland and ſettles Affairs. IV. At King Edwards Command the Duke of Lancaſter raiſes his Siege from before Rennes, having juſt before taken the Town on Conditions. V. Sr. Robert Knolles beats the Marſhal of France in Normandy. VI. The Lord of Granville takes the Caſtle of Eureux from the French by Stratagem. VII. The Riſe of Sr. John Hawkwood and Sr. Robert Knolles. VIII. The Original of a ſort of Free-Booters, called the Companions, in France. IX. The Inſolence of the Pariſians and their Provoſt towards the Dauphin. X. King Charles of Navarre, being got out of Priſon, foments the Diſorders, and grows Popular.

I. MOST part [a] of the preceding Winter the Victorious Edward Prince of Wales, buſied himſelf in Equipping a Navy to convey his Royal Prey and the reſt of the French Priſoners ſafely into England. During his intended Abſence in the Parts of Aquitain, he left behind him certain Valiant and Loyal Captains to defend the Country until his Return, namely the Lord de la Bret, aliàs Albret, the Lord of Mucidan, the Lord de L' Eſparre, the Lord of Pamiers, and the Lord of Rozan, with certain Troops both Engliſh and Gaſcoigners. And ſo on the [b] 24 of [a] Froiſ. c. 173 f. 86. & Mat. Vill. l. 7. c. 58. & 66. Knighton p. 2615. n. 13. Walſingh. Hyp. p. 124. & Hiſt. p. 164. & Speed p. 582. & Polyd. Virgil. l. 19. p. 381. &c.

An. Dom. 1357. An. Regni Angliæ XXXI. Franciæ XVIII.

[b] 24 of April being a Monday, and the day after St. George in the Third Week after Easter, he set Sail for England with certain Lords of Gascogne, and most of his English Captains about him. The French King was in a good Ship by himself, lest he should conceive any Offence or Molestation; but he was well guarded with no less than 200 Men of Arms, and 2000 Archers, who sailed close by him; for the Prince had been informed, how the Three Estates, by whom France at that time was governed, had laid ready in the Ports of Normandy and Crotoy two Great Navies to receive him upon his approach toward England, and if they might to take away the King of France and rescue him. But no such Matter appeared afterward, thô the Prince was detain'd at Sea Eleven days. On the Twelfth Day from his first Setting out, viz. on the [c] 5th. of May he landed at Sandwich in Kent (and not as some say, at Plymouth in Devonshire) where he tarried two Days to refresh his Compauy. On the Third Day he rode to Canterbury, where also he stayed for some time; and here the French King and the Prince of Wales made their Offerings at the famous Shrine of St. Thomas Becket. The mean while King Edward being informed of the Arrival of his Son with the French King in his Company, [d] gave Command to Sr. Henry Picard then Lord Mayor of London, to make ready the City Pageants, and to prepare for the Reception of King John, with all their Formalities in the most honourable Manner that might be. And now Prince Edward rode from Canterbury to Rochester, from thence the next day to Dartford, and the day after to London, whither he came on the 24 of May, being the Wednesday before Whitsunday, and was met in Southwark by more than a Thousand of the Chief Citizens on Horseback. King John being clothed in Royal Apparel was mounted on a large White [e] Courser in token of Soveraignty, and to be the more Remarkable; the Generous Prince of Wales riding by his side on a little black Hobby, as one that industriously avoided all suspicion of a Triumph. They took their way over London Bridge, and rode directly for Westminster, and in all the Streets as they passed, the Citizens of London set to publick View all their Riches, as Plate, Tapestry and the like, in honour of the French King; but especially they [f] boasted of their Warlike Furniture, and exposed that Day in their Shops, Windows and Belconies such an incredible Quantity of Bows and Arrows, Shields, Helmets, Corslets, Breast and Back-Pieces, Coats of Mail, Gauntlets, Vambraces, Swords, Spears, Battle-axes, Harness for Horses, and other Armour both Offensive and Defensive, that the like had never been seen in Memory of Man before. The [g] Concourse of People that came from all parts to behold this rare Spectacle, was so great, that the Solemnity of the Cavalcade held from Three of the Clock in the Morning till High-noon, about which time the Prince got to Westminster-Hall, where he presented unto the King his Father, then sitting in Great Majesty on a Royal Throne, the Person of King John his Prisoner. King Edward could not long retain the Severe Majesty of a Conquerour; for when the French King had humbled himself with such a serious, thô Manly Submission, as became his present Fortune, he was immediately touch'd with a due Consideration of the Instability of his own Affairs, by the instance of so great a Prince, whom now he beheld in so low a Condition; and so rising hastily from his Throne he [h] Caressed him with as much Honour and Respect, as if he had only come to give him a Visit. And the Father and the Son did so exactly resemble each other, as well in Generosity as Valour, that King Edward being now fully acquainted with the Particulars of his Sons humble Deportment after the Battle of Poictiers, declared that he was more sincerely satisfied therewith, than at the Victory it self. Nor did that Great King make use of this solemn Entrance of his Royal Captive, as a Matter of his own Triumph, but rather of a devout Procession: For [i] by his Order that very Day the Clergy of London came forth with their Crosses, and singing Anthems to meet the Prince, and after that, for two Days together publick Supplications and Prayers with Thanksgivings were celebrated thrô the Cities of London and Westminster.

That Day King Edward treated the French King, his Son Philip, and the rest of the Noble Captives at a Princely Rate, and order'd for the King an Apartment of his own Court to lodge in for the Present, till the Savoy should be prepared for him, being at that time a most splendid and magnificent Structure, belonging to Henry Duke of Lancaster, and so called [k] from its first Founder, Peter Earl of Savoy, Father to Boniface Archbishop of Canterbury, who was Uncle to Eleanor King Henry the Third his Queen.

To this Palace soon after he was convey'd, and there Honourably attended, King Edward himself, his Queen, and the Prince, giving him frequent Visits, and devising all the ways they might, both to Honour and Comfort him. But nothing is perfectly agreeable, while Liberty is wanting; and therefore, thô King John could not expect either more Diversion, or more Respectfull Behaviour in the Court of his Brother

[b] Lit. Dom. A. Paschæ 9. April. Festum D. Georgii 23 April.

[c] Knighton, in vigilia St. Joh. ante Port. Lat. quod idem est: Walsing. id. &c.

[d] Speed p. 582.

[e] Ita Mezeray ad ann. 1378. where Charles King of France had an Enterview with Charles the Emperour: He entertained him (says he) with all the magnificence imaginable, & paid him all manner of Respects, but such as denote Soveraignty, &c. And at his Entrance into Paris the King affected to be mounted on a white Horse, and order'd a black one for the Emperour.

[f] Knighton p. 2615. n. 19.

[g] Walsingh. hist. p. 164. & Hyp. p. 124. & Speed p. 582.

[h] Mezeray p. 49 ad hunc ann.

[i] Polyd. Virg. l. 19 p. 381. n. 42.

[k] Pol. Virg. p. 382. n. 3. Speed p. 539.

ther in Law, the Emperour; yet something hung upon his mind, which was not possible for him to shake wholly off, till he should find himself at his own disposé. 'Tis said, [l] that when the King of England and his Son, having often observed such a cloud of sorrow to obscure much of that serenity, which was expected from him at those Princely Diversions, wherewith they entertain'd him, asked him thereupon to lay aside all Melancholy Care, and sorrowfull thoughts, he made this Answer with a smile, [m] Quomodo Cantabimus Canticum in Terrâ alienâ? i. e. How shall we sing a Song in a strange Land? AN. DOM. 1357. An. Regni Angliæ XXXI. Franciæ XVIII.

[l] Pol. Virgil. l. 19. p. 382.
[m] Psalm. 137. v. 5.

Thus was King John and his Son, and the Chief of the Captive Nobles of France entertain'd in England; [n] of the other Prisoners, some were presently releasd upon King John's security in their behalf, and the rest were severally bestow'd in safe Custody.

[n] Pol. Virg. ibid.

II. While things went thus in England, Henry Duke of Lancaster, lay at the Siege before Rennes in Bretagne, which he had begun on the [o] Third of December in the preceding Year, and had made many Assaults, but to little purpose as yet; the Place was so well defended. For within was a good Garrison, set there by the Lord Charles of Blois, under the Viscount of Rouën, the Lord de Laval, Sr. Charles du Digne, and others. There [p] was also in Rennes at this time a Valiant young Batchelour, a Knight of Bretagne, called Sr. Bertram du Clequin, who soon after became a most Renowned Captain, and was at length sirnamed the Restorer of France. During this Siege there passed a Challenge between this Sr. Bertram, and a young Baron of England, named Sr. Nicolas Dagworth, a Valiant Son of that Valiant Lord Thomas Dagworth, of whose Actions, and Life, and Death, we have already spoken. The manner of the Combat was to run Three Courses with a Spear, to strike Three Blows with an Ax, and to give Three Stabs with a Dagger. And each of these Knights bare himself with such Expert Valour, that they performed the Challenge without receiving any harm, and so Honourably quitted the Field with equal stakes to their great Commendation from both Parties.

[o] Mezeray ad hunc annum.

[p] Froiss. c. 175. fol. 87.

This while the Lord Charles of Blois, being in the Country, was very sollicitous to raise the Siege, and besides his own Musters, daily importun'd the Regent of France for a strong reinforcement. But the Regent had his own hands so full, that he was not at leisure to do any thing Material in that Case: So the Siege lasted on, and the City began to be greatly oppressed.

Wherefore [q] on the 19 of June, being the Monday before the Feast of St. John Baptist, there came in all haste a Cardinal to the King at London, who said, "My "Lord, it was agreed between your Son the Prince of Wales and King John, when "they were at Bourdeaux, that the Siege before Rennes should be raised, and a seri- "ous Treaty of Peace be set forward between the two Realms. Now therefore, if "Your Majesty doth really design a Treaty, command the Siege to be removed. Hereupon the King by his Letters commanded the Duke of Lancaster upon forfeiture of Life and Limb, and whatever else he could forfeit, to desist from the Siege, and to come home as soon as might be; the French King also at the same time sending to his Subjects to desist a while from all Hostilities whatsoever. This Cardinal [r] was Bishop of St. Jean de Maurienne in Savoy; whose Letters of safe Conduct for himself and a Train of 30 Horse, bore Date at Westminster the 26th of May, this Year. In that very juncture came [s] hither from Pope Innocent VI. Talayrand Bishop of Alby, Cardinal of Perigort, and Nicolas Cardinal of St. Vitalis, to assist at a Treaty of Peace, to be held about Midsummer, this Year; the Kings [t] Letters of safe Conduct for them and their Train (consisting of 200 Horse) bearing Date the Third of June. These two Prelates together with the other Cardinal, lately come from Bretagne, as aforesaid, addressed themselves to the King at Westminster, and having [u] made their Salute in a kind of Adoration, as he sat in great and terrible Majesty on his Throne, One of them began to preach upon this Text, [x] Honor Regis Judicium diligit, i. e. The Kings Honour loveth Righteousness: After which they discoursed about their Commission, which contained thus much, that King Edward should have all the Lands, which his Predecessors held in France, on Condition, that Peace and Concord might be settled between the two Kings. To which King Edward answer'd briefly; "That "althô some of the Lands of his Predecessors had been lost for a time, yet he doubted not "of recovering them again, when it should please God: But that he would have nothing "to do with them; unless they came to the point in hand, concerning the Crown of "France, which he claim'd. They answer'd, their Commission extended not so far; wherefore the Matter rested, till they might hear from the Pope again, which they did not, till

[q] Knighton p. 2615. n. 44.

[r] Ashmole p. 658.

[s] Froiss. c. 173. & Knighton p. 2615. & Walsing. Hist. p. 164. Ashmole p. 658.

[t] Ashmole p. 658. ex Pat. 31 Ed. 3. p. 2. m. 25.

[u] Knighton ibid.

[x] Psalm. 99. v. 4.

An. Dom. 1357. An. Regni Angliæ XXXI. Franciæ XVIII.

till the 29 of August; or the Feast of the Decollation of St. John. But in all these Treaties the Pope was so notoriously partial in the French Kings Cause, that by reason thereof, and because of those many miraculous Victories, which even in spite of his Holiness, by an especial Providence of God, the English obtained, there were Rhymes scatter'd about the Pope's Court at Avignon, and in other parts of France, importing thus much in English, y Or est le Pape devenu Franceis;

Et Jesu devenu Engleis:
Or serra veou, qui fra plus;
Ou le Pape, ou Jesus. Knighton p. 2615. vid.

y The Pope is on the Frenchmens side,
With England Jesus doth abide:
'Twill soon be seen, who 'll now prevail;
For Jesus, or the Pope must fail.

And the truth of this sufficiently appear'd at the Return of the Pope's Answer at this time: For thô outwardly the Cardinals were enjoyned only to look to the Negotiation of the Peace, yet at the same time they had x with them a Bull from his Holiness, enjoyning every Bishop by Papal Authority to make a Visitation throughout their several Diœceses, and to pay their Procurations to the Cardinals; and it was said, how this Summ was by the Pope intended for the aid and sustaining of the French interest. At the same time his Holiness was pleased to demand of the Realm of England, the annuity of 1000 Marks, granted by King John of England to the Court of Rome, at the time when he resign'd his Crown to the Legate Pandulphus, declaring upon his resuming thereof, that for the future he would hold it of the Pope. But since his days the said Summ of 1000 Marks remain'd unpaid, even for the space of an 140 Years; all which arrearages were now demanded, in hopes, that King Edward would so be terrified into an easie Complyance in behalf of the French King. But He, who besides his own Couragious Heart had both a more Loving Clergy and Loyal Baronage, then had that unfortunate King John, answer'd wisely and roundly; "a That he would never pay any tribute to any Mortal whatsoever, because he held his "Kingdom, and would hold it, freely, and without subjection to any One, but only to God "Almighty. And yet we shall find, that in the 39th Year of this King, this Pope's Successor made the same Demand; and upon refusal threatned to cite him by Process to answer it at the Court of Rome; but the King, being strongly back'd by his Parliament, neither did the one nor the other.

x Knighton p. 2617. *n.*50.

a Knighton p. 2617. *n.*60.

b Knighton ibid. n. 46.

The Work of Peace-making was it seems so chargeable; that b at Michaelmas the Cardinals had of the Clergy of England 4 d. in the Mark, as well of Spirituals as Temporals; and yet no final Peace was made: Only c at last with much adoe they procured a Truce between the two Kings, and all their Allies (except the Lord Philip of Navarre, and his Allies, and also the Countess of Monford, and the Lord Charles of Blois) to endure until the Feast of St. John Baptist, or the 24 of June, which was to be in the Year MCCCLIX. Upon this Truce the French King had leave to remove with all his Houshold to Windsor Castle; where he and his Son Philip diverted themselves with Hunting and Hawking at their pleasure: But the other Prisoners continued still at London, where they had the Liberty to go to Court, when they pleas'd; only they were sworn to be true Prisoners, and by no means to endeavour an Escape. About this time King Edward d granted unto the Lord Thomas Holland Earl of Kent, the Custody of the Fort and place of Cruyck in Normandy, part of the Kings late Conquests, with all the Revenues thereunto belonging, to hold, durante Bene placito: And a Command was given to Sr. Donald Heselrige, Sr. Lewis Clifford, and Sr. Walter Mewes, to deliver them up to him, or his Lieutenant accordingly.

c Froiss. c. 173.

d *Ashmole's Garter p.*697. *ex Rot.*31 *Ed.*3 *m.*5. Dat. 18. Novemb.

III. We have declared largely enough, how King David of Scotland was taken Prisoner also at the Battle of Durham; and ever since that he wanted his Liberty, being e at this time in the Tower of London. But now upon the Conclusion of the foresaid Truce between England and France, the Cardinals together with the f Bishop of St. Andrews in Scotland, began to enter into a serious Treaty with King Edward about the Delivery of King David from his Long Imprisonment: Which Treaty was not a little further'd by the Prayers of Queen Joan of Scotland, King Edwards Sister. So that at last, on the g 3d of October there met at Barwick Commissioners on both sides, namely John Thoresby Archbishop of York, Thomas Hatfield Bishop of Durham, Gilbert Welton Bishop of Caerlile, the Lords Henry Piercy, Ralph Nevill, Henry Scroop, and Thomas Musgrave, on King Edwards part; and William Bishop of St. Andrews, Thomas Bishop of Cathnes, Patrick Bishop of Brechin, Chancellour of Scotland, Patrick Earl of March, Robert de Irskin, and William Levington Knights, Deputies of e Knighton p. 2616. *n.*13.

f Non enim ad Archiep. erecta est hæc sedes, ante Sixtum IV. *PP. qui id fecit An°.*1471

g *Rot. Scot.*31. *Ed.*3. m 2. Dorso. Vid. Ashmole's Garter p. 658.

Robert

Robert Stuart Guardian of Scotland on the other Part: Between whom these Articles were agreed on, viz. AN. DOM. 1357. An. Regni Angliæ XXXI. Franciæ XVIII.

"Imprimis, [h] That King David should never after bear Arms against the King of "England within this Realm; nor either Counsel or Abett any of his Subjects so to do.

2. "Item, That King David upon his Return into Scotland, should use his utmost "Endeavour to persuade his Lords and Others to agree, that the Crown of Scotland "might be held in Fee and by Homage of the King of England: But that if the Scots "could not be brought to yield to that, yet however King David should swear solemn- "ly to observe the Peace with the King of England punctually and duly.

3. "Item, That King David should oblige and bind himself and his Heirs, and the whole "Realm of Scotland, to pay unto the King of England and his Heirs within [i] ten Years "after, the Sum of one hundred thousand Marks Sterling.

4. "Item, That King David in the mean time deliver unto King Edward Twenty "good and sufficient Pledges and Hostages, for the Performance of these Covenants, as "namely the Lord John, Eldest Son and Heir to the Lord Robert Stuart, and Nephew "to King David, and together with him the Earls of Southerland, Douglas, Murray and "Mar, and Fife; the Baron of Vescy, Sr. William Cathanes, and Twelve others: All "who were to abide in England as Prisoners and Hostages for the King their Lord, till "the said Summ be fully paid and acquitted.

5. "Item, That a Decennial Truce in England, Scotland and the Isle of Man, be in- "violably kept between the two Realms, on pain of Forfeiture of Body and of Chat- "tels, and that after ten Years the Scots might be free to choose Peace or War, as they "should like best.

Of these Articles there were made Indentures and Publick Instruments, sealed with the Seals of both the Kings; and so King David after almost 11 Years Imprisonment, had his Liberty, and rode homeward with his Queen Joan, Sister to King Edward (who attended him like a loving Wife all the time of his Confinement) and came to Barwick on the Feast of St. Michael, where they were met by several of the Scotch Nobility, who brought along with them one Moiety of the Summ agreed on for their Kings Ransom, and the Hostages, who were to remain in England till the Remainder should be paid.

And then according to the Fifth Article above-written, the Decennial Truce between the Scots and English was solemnly Proclaimed: For all along till now, whatever Truce was taken between the two Nations, there was none entirely observed; but either by the Robberies of the Borderers on Land, or the Piracies of private Men by Sea, was continually interrupted by the Scots: Thô King Edward many times was content in a private manner to correct these Disorders without infringing the Publick Peace. Particularly this very Year, even while the two Kings were labouring what in them lay for an Everlasting Concord, [k] three Scotch Pirates with no less than 300 chosen Men of Arms, went cruising about the Coasts of England to trepan Merchants, and such as they could get they slew and rifled, doing that way much Mischief: But about Michaelmas there arose an high and strong Wind, which drove them, and many English Vessels also, as well of War as others, all together into Yarmouth Haven, where it pleased God, the Scots were taken every Man, and brought to a just account for all their Piracies.

'Tis said of this King David, [l] that during his Captivity here in England, being much part of the Time confined in Nottingham Castle, he left behind him in a Vault under the Castle curiously engraven with his own Hands on the Walls, which were of Rock, the whole Story of the Passion of our Saviour: For which one says, that Castle became as famous, as formerly it had been for Mortimers Hole.

But He being now acquitted of his Imprisonment, like a just Prince, sets himself seriously to perform the Articles of Agreement between him and his Brother-in-Law of England; and first according to a private Promise made unto King Edward, he rased and demolished the Castles of Dalswinton, Dumfres, Mortoun and Durisdere. Then [n] he called a Parliament, where he enacted sundry Laws for the Punishment and Disgrace of those, who had fled from the Battle of Durham; as in a Parliament [n] preceding that Battle he had very liberally rewarded all such, as had either been Notable for their Actions or Sufferings in his Service; among whom (says Hector Boethius) his Ancestor Hugh Boece, in Consideration of his Fathers Death on his Account in the Action at Duplin, was made Inheritor of the Barony of Balbrid, the King giving unto him in Marriage the Heiress of the said Barony. But now on the Contrary, he was as Severe in punishing the Cowardise or Disloyalty, as he thought it, of those who had deserted him in the Battle of Durham; among whom the Lord Robert Stuart, Prince of Scotland, was espe-

[h] Knighton p. 2617. *n.*40. *Du Chesne p.*680.

[i] Thô we find 24000 Marks of the said Summ upon Arrears 27 Years after. Vid. Dugd. 1 *Vol. p.*277. *ex Rot. Scot.*7. Ric. 2. *m.*8.

[k] Knighton. p. 2617. *n.*30.

[l] Speed's Maps Nottinghamshire *c.*34. §. 3. *fol.*65.

[m] *Holinsh. Chron. Scotl. p.*243.

[n] *Holinshead ibid. p.*240.

An. Dom. 1357. An. Regni Angliæ XXXI. Franciæ XVIII.

cially numbred: Thô both before that and ſince he had given ſufficient Teſtimonies of his Courage and Conduct, and had alſo by his Government, during his Maſters Impriſonment, and his Care, and (at laſt) Succeſs in working his Delivery, as plainly demonſtrated his Loyalty. But however King David, rather than acknowledge his own Raſhneſs in occaſioning that Overthrow, laid it ſo vehemently upon his Nephew Roberts Leaving the Field, [o] that now at laſt that Act (whereby the Crown of Scotland for want of Lawfull Iſſue begotten of Davids Body, was for ever entailed on the ſaid Prince Robert and his Heirs) was by his Procurement repealed, diſanulled, and wholly made void; and his other Nephew, the young Lord [p] Alexander, Son and Heir to the Earl of Southerland, by his youngeſt Siſter Jane, was declared Heir Apparent to the Crown of Scotland in the Room of Prince Robert, who was Eldeſt Son of the Lady Margaret King David's Eldeſt Siſter. Which Act all the Lords of Scotland were ſworn to obſerve and maintain.

[o] Holinſh. Chron. Scotl. p. 243. & Hector l. 15.

[p] Odor. Rainal. vocat Alexand. alii Johann. ſed Rainaldi fides præſtantior.

Whereupon the old Earl of Southerland, Father to this Prince Alexander, verily believing, that his ſaid Son could not now miſs of the Crown of Scotland, gave away the moſt part of his Lands, dividing them among his Friends and Relations, eſpecially to the Noble Families of the Hayes, the Sinclares, the Ogilbies and the Gourdons, thereby to bind them the faſter unto his Sons Intereſt. But all this Precaution fail'd, for ſhortly after the Lord Alexander his Son, being one of the Pledges, then remaining in England for the Security of King David's Ranſom, together with moſt of the other Hoſtages, died of the Plague which then again raged in this Kingdom, as we ſhall ſee ſhortly. Whereupon Prince Robert Stuart being then again eaſily reconciled to the King, was once more acknowledged, and by Act of Parliament eſtabliſhed Rightfully the Heir Apparent to the Crown of Scotland, in as full manner, as he had been before.

The mean while, eſpecially at the Inſtance of the Pope, the Clergy of Scotland agreed to contribute the Tenth Penny of all their Fruits and Revenues, towards the payment of their Kings Ranſom: And at the ſame time the ſaid King, nothing unmindfull of his Promiſe made to King Edward before his Deliverance, moved his Lords and Barons in a Matter, which yet himſelf was not willing to ſucceed in, thô being bound by Oath ſo to do, he urged it notwithſtanding with all the Application he could: Namely, [q] "That provided he himſelf ſhould deceaſe without Iſſue, they would agree, that the "Crown of Scotland and all the Rights thereof, ſhould be entirely transferred to the King "of England's Eldeſt Son, and to his Lawfull Heirs for ever. But to this unexpected Propoſal the Lords anſwer'd all with one Voice, That as long as any of them were able to hold a Sword in their Hands, they would never yield to be ſubject to England. King David was well pleaſed with this their Reſolution, and look'd upon himſelf now, as diſcharged from attempting any thing further that way: Becauſe he had only engaged to King Edward, "That if the Scotch Nobility would conſent, he would Entail the Crown "upon his Eldeſt Son.

[q] Odor. Rainal. ad ann. 1358. §. 4. & Scotici Scriptores, Holinſh. &c.

IV. But we have too long left the Duke of Lancaſter at the Siege of Rennes in Bretagne, from whence as we ſhew'd [r] before, King Edward, at the Cardinals Remonſtrance, had ſent him a peremptory Command to riſe forthwith upon ſight of his Letters. Now the mean while the Duke by a ſtrict and long Siege (for it began on the 3d of December in the Year foregoing, and ended not till the latter end of July in this Year) had mightily ſtraitned the Place, having moreover ravaged and eaten up the Country all about to ſupply his Army; but I dare not ſay with [s] Leland, that by a Detachment ſent from the Siege, he wan Autry and Semay, lying on the River Ayſne on the Marches of Lorraine; for to any one that conſiders the Diſtance of thoſe Parts from Bretagne, it will ſeem ridiculous to imagin it; I had rather in that Place read Vitray on the Vilaine, on which River the City of Rennes alſo ſtands. However [t] once Charles of Blois came thither with 10000 Men to raiſe the Siege, but when he ſaw the Engliſh Duke ready to receive him in the Field, and yet at the ſame time to make good the Siege with another Part of his Army, holding it not likely to ſucceed as then, he retired. Whereupon the Beſieged beginning to doubt of their Affairs, ſought for an occaſion to parly with the Duke, but they deſign'd to do it as it were by Chance, that ſo they might obtain the better Conditions. Firſt therefore they requeſt a ſafe Conduct for a Biſhop and ſix Knights, whom they ſent to re-conſecrate a Church without the Walls, which being polluted by a Murther committed therein had been ſhut up for ſome time. Theſe ſeven having obtained a ſafe Conduct, and the Work for which they went being done, upon their return thrô the Camp, were invited by the Duke to Dine with him: and there at Table in Diſcourſe it was queſtion'd, what might be the Meaning that the Defendants delay'd to yield up the Town, ſince there was no Body able [r] Vid. Lib. 3. c. 2. §. 2. p. 527.

[s] Leland Collect. 1 Vol. p. 824. vid. Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 788.

[t] Knighton p. 2616.

able to ſuccour them or to raiſe the Siege. The Biſhop having received Inſtructions before-hand, ſaid they ſhould not refuſe to yield upon good Conditions; the Duke ſaid, they could not expect any better Conditions as things were now, than to ſubmit Themſelves and Goods to his Clemency. However after much Altercation, Matters were brought at laſt to this Iſſue, "That the Inhabitants ſhould give to the Duke an [u] hun- "dred thouſand Scutes of Gold toward the Charges he had been at; ſo that they ſhould "be otherwiſe free both in their Body and Goods; and further, that they ſhould give "Security, that upon the Duke's Demanding the Town for the Uſe and Behoof of the "King of England, they would deliver it unto him, to ſet what Captain he ſhould pleaſe "over them. Theſe things were eſtabliſhed and agreed to on both ſides, and thereupon the Duke named them a Captain; but becauſe he would not expoſe the City to Plunder, he appointed only certain Troops to go and take Poſſeſſion of it in his Name, he himſelf tarrying without the Town with the Groſs of his Army. One [x] ſays, how he had ſworn not to riſe from before Rennes, untill he had entred in Perſon, and ſhould ſee his Banners planted upon the Rampiers: Wherefore his Men apprehending they ſhould grapple with the Difficulties of a ſecond Winter, and the Defendants fearing to be utterly famiſhed, the Treaty was thereupon promoted with more vigour on both ſides. And as for the Duke's Oath, Sr. Bertram Clequin, one of the ſix Knights that menaged the Treaty, found out an Expedient to ſave that: Which was, that he ſhould enter the Town with Nine more, and his Colours ſhould ſtand on the Gate for ſome hours. Without this Device, as it proved, he muſt have been obliged to depart without fulfilling his Oath; for preſently after, even on that ſame Day, being the laſt of June, the King of England's Letters aforemention'd came to his Hands, wherein he was commanded immediately to leave the Siege: Thô by good Fortune he had firſt got his Mony, and made full Agreement. Which Agreement, according to Orders ſet down in the King's Letters, was after that advanced into a Truce, [y] between the Earl of Montford and Charles of Blois and their Adherents, to endure untill the Firſt Day of May, An° MCCCLXI.

AN. DOM. 1357. An. Regni Angliæ XXXI. Franciæ XVIII.

[u] Fab. ſays but 60000. a Scute 6 s. 8 d. i.e. a Noble Engliſh.

[x] Mezeray ad hunc annum.

[y] Froiſ. c. 213. f. 108. a.

V. At the ſame time [z] there were certain Men of Arms and Archers, belonging to divers Caſtles in Garriſon both in Bretagne and Gaſcogne, of whom more than 600 joyning together went into Normandy, to further the Affairs of Philip of Navarre; where in a ſhort ſpace they took by Stratagem the ſtrong Town of Honfleur, which is directly oppoſite to Harfleur, on the other ſide the Seyne; and began to fortifie it for themſelves. But ſoon after the Marſhal of France, Robert Clermont, came upon them with 800 Men of Arms and 5000 Foot, and made a fierce Aſſault upon the Town; wherein yet he loſt no leſs than 500 Men: And ſtill the Engliſh defended themſelves, and the French laboured hard at the Walls to carry the Place by Force. But while thus the Fight continued, Sr. Robert Knolles and Sr. James Pipe, who [a] were the Duke of Lancaſter's Lieutenants in Normandy, came ſuddenly on the Frenchmens Backs, and with the ſlaughter of a Thouſand more of them, put the Marſhal and the reſt to flight.

[z] Knighton p. 2616. n. 40. &c.

[a] Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 109.

VI. Now the ſtrong [b] Caſtle of Eureux in Normandy, which was a part of the Natural Inheritance of King Charles of Navarre, and whence he bore the Title of Earl, had ſome while ſince been ſeiſed into the Frenchmen's hands, and was ſtill by them detained, to the exceeding Regret of the Citizens of Eureux and others, Subjects and Friends of the ſaid King of Navarre. Among others William Lord of Granville reſented it extreamly ill, that the King his Maſter ſhould be thus baſely impriſoned, and this his Caſtle and other Places of his injuriouſly detained by his Enemies. This Lord had an Houſe and Lands within two Leagues of the City, and could without any Suſpicion go in and out at his pleaſure; becauſe as yet he had never bore Arms for Prince Philip or the Engliſh againſt the French, for fear of loſing thoſe Lands which he held thereabout. And beſides when King John wan that Place, he took an Oath of Fidelity from all thoſe who held any thing in thoſe Parts, or elſe all had been ſeiſed to his own Uſe: And thus King John held the Country, but King Charles reign'd in the Hearts of the People. And yet if the French King had been now at home all had been well enough: But his Captivity, and the Confuſion of the French Affairs thereupon, gave more Courage to the Enemies of France to undertake Matters, which otherwiſe they durſt not have thought on: Eſpecially becauſe it was well known, that the Three Eſtates themſelves were deſirous of the Liberty and Proſperity of the King of Navarre. Upon theſe Conſiderations this Lord William of Granville began to form a notable and a bold Enterpriſe on the Behalf of the King his Maſter, which now we ſhall exactly relate. The Liberty he had of going to Eureux at his pleaſure, he made uſe of chiefly to visit a great Alderman of that City, whom he knew in former times to have been very firm and loyal to the King of Navarre. This Alderman had a particular esteem also for him upon the same and other Accounts, and entertain'd him always with the best sort of Provisions, and with much freedom of Discourse relating to several Matters; but still they would now and then have a Touch about the King of Navarre's being seised and thrown into Prison, whereat they were both highly displeased. But at last the Lord William said in private to the Alderman, "If you will be of my Mind, and "give me your Furtherance, I will undertake soon to recover both this Town and Castle "to the use of our Lord the King of Navarre. How can that be, said the Alderman? "For the Captain of the Castle is so true a Frenchman, that we can never expect to make "him consent to any such thing: And without the Castle nothing can be done; for 'tis "that over-aws the Town. Well, said the Lord William, I'll tell you now: First of all "you must try to get five or six substantial Citizens to your side, and every one of you "must then secretly provide a certain Quota of Men of Arms, to be ready by such a "Day in your Houses: And when you can assure me of thus much, I'll engage upon my "Life, that you shall enter the Castle without any Danger, by a Stratagem which I have "thought on. The Business being thus concluded, the Alderman handled the Matter so discreetly, that he wan an Hundred substantial Citizens to be of his side presently; all who provided certain Armed Men, who were to be ready on such a Day in their houses. When the Lord William knew that all things were Ripe, he fixed the Day, and informed the Alderman what Measures to take, and so prepared himself to put his Plot in Execution.

[b] Froiſ. c. 176.

An. Dom. 1357. An. Regni Angliæ XXXI. Franciæ XVIII.

Early in a Morning he arm'd himself, and over his Armour put on a Coat, and over the Coat a short Cloak, and so putting a short Battle-Ax close under his Arm, he walked forth with his Man after him toward the Castle. Being now near, he walked in a careless manner to and fro before the Gate, as he had often done before, by way of Preparation; till at last the Captain of the Castle came down and opened the Wicket of the Gate, and as it was his daily use stood there and looked about him, to see if the Coast was clear. When Sr. William espied him, he walk'd as it were by Chance that way, till being something near, he gave the Good Morrow to the Captain, who stood still and civily returned his Bon-jour; and so Sr. William drawing a little nearer they began to enter into Converse.

The Frenchmen of all other People are hugely desirous of News; but especially when any ways they are debarred from going abroad, as those are who keep Garrisons: Wherefore first of all in subtlety Sr. William asked the Captain, what News he had heard lately? The Captain who had nothing to tell, and therefore greatly desired to know something, answer'd, "Alas! I have no News in the World, but desire if you have "any to impart it to me. Sir, that I shall do most readily, said Sr. William, and then pro- "ceeded in this manner. "Sir, it is now current all about France, that the King of "Denmark and the King of Iseland are allied together, and have sworn to Sail forth, "and not return again into their own Countries, till they have utterly destroyed all "England; and that in their Course thither, meeting with the Prince of Wales upon the "Sea, as he was conveying the French King into England, they fought him and wan "the French King from him, whom they are now sending home in great Honour to Pa- "ris: For their Navy consists of more than an hundred thousand Fighting Men. And "the Englishmen are in such fear of them, that they know not what in the World to "do; for there goes an old Prophesie among them, "That England shall be destroyed by "the Danes. Then the Captain asked him, how he heard these News? Sir, said the "Lord William, an honourable Friend of mine, a Knight of Flanders, wrote this to "me for most certain, and together with the Letter he sent me the loveliest Chessboard of "Men, that ever I beheld in all my Life. That Device he put in by the by; because he knew the Captain took great pleasure in playing at Chess; and indeed this Project took, for the Captain immediately snatching hold on the last Word, said, "Sir, I "pray be so kind to let me see your Chess-Men. I'll send for them presently, replied Sr. William, on condition you'll play a Game with me for some Wine. And that being agreed on, he bad his Servant, who was privy to all his Design, to run and fetch him his Chess-men, and bring them unto him to the Wicket: Accordingly his Man ran into the Town, and the Captain and Sr. William enter'd in at the first Gate, the Captain fastning the Wicket after him with a Bolt only; for he would not lock it because of the return of the Chessboard. Then Sr. William asked him familiarly to open the Second Gate, saying, he might do it safely enough, seeing the First was fast. Then the Captain open'd that Wicket also, and let Sr. William enter with him to see the Castle in his Company.

The

The mean while his Servant had gone ſtraight to the Chief of thoſe Burgeſſes, who had Men ready Armed in their Houſes, and they immediately ſignified the ſame to all the reſt, and ſo being all aſſembled, and conveniently poſted on one ſide near the Caſtle Gate, he went up before and ſounded a little Horn, as he was before order'd to do by the Captain and Sr. William. The Lord of Granville hearing the Horn, ſaid to the Captain, "let us go out to the Second Gate, for my Man is coming; and with "that he himſelf paſſed forth at the Firſt Wicket, and ſtood ſtill without, watching his Opportunity. The Captain thinking to follow him ſet out one Foot, and ſtooping down put out his Head, but juſt then had Sr. William taken in his hand the little Ax from under his Arm, and therewith clave the Captains Head at one ſtroke, before he could get his other foot over, ſo that he fell immediately dead upon the Groundſel. Then Sr. William ran haſtily to the Outer Wicket and unbolted it, at which time he ſaw his Friends marching up apace to his Aſſiſtance. Now the Watchman of the Caſtle having heard the Horn, was much ſurprized, for the Captain, however lately he had forgot his own Order, had commanded that none ſhould ſound any Horn in the Town on pain of Death. Wherefore looking down from the high Tower he ſaw Men in Harneſs haſting towards the Caſtle Gate, whereupon he cried Treaſon. At that, as many of thoſe in the Caſtle as were ready, haſted to the innermoſt Gate, where they were extreamly ſtartled to behold their Captain Dead, and Sr. William with his Ax in his Hand, and all in ſhining Armour (for he had flung away his Cloak now) to defend the Entry. At that inſtant thoſe, who were to ſecond the Lord William being enter'd the Firſt Gate were come up alſo to the other, and ſo they eaſily drave back the Souldiers, and took and ſlew whom they pleaſed, and ſo became Maſters of the Caſtle.

AN. DOM. 1357. An. Regni Angliæ XXXI. Franciæ XVIII.

The Caſtle being thus won, the City preſently yielded, and caſt out their French Garriſon, at what time they ſent for the Lord Philip of Navarre, who being juſt then return'd out of England, went thither upon their Invitation, and made that his chief Garriſon, from whence on occaſion to infeſt all Normandy. Upon his Coming thither he was joyned with Sr. Robert Knolles, Sr. James Pipe, and other Engliſh Captains, beſides Gaſcogners, who all together made a conſiderable Garriſon, which afterwards prov'd highly prejudicial to the Realm of France.

VII. At this time there aroſe ſeveral Captains of England, who gather'd Companies unto themſelves, wherewith they made War at their Pleaſure; and gain'd Prizes by Spoils and Ranſoms, and arrived to great Wealth and Dignity. One of theſe was Sr. John Hawkwood, [c] an Engliſh Knight, born at Sible Heveningham, alias Heningham in Eſſex, being the Son of Gilbert Hawkwood a Tanner: He was bound an Apprentice to a Taylor in the City of London, by whoſe good leave he went very Young to the French Wars in the Service of the King. For his admired Valour he was honoured with the Order of Knighthood, and became in his Days a moſt Noble Captain. All Italy remembers the Fame he purchaſed in the Wars there, now fighting for the Duke of Milain, Barnabo, whoſe Daughter Donna he had in Marriage; now for the Pope and the Church, and another while for the State of Florence, in whoſe Service he died 38 Years after this. In Teſtimony of whoſe manifold good Offices to that State, the Florentines have depoſited his Bones in a ſumptuous Monument in their Cathedral, over which there is his Statue of Black Marble armed at all Points, with Hawks flying thrô a Wood upon his Shield, that being the Rebus of his Name. Thô ſome of his Friends raiſed for him a Cenotaph alſo here in England at Sible Heningham aforeſaid, the Arches of which Tomb repreſented Hawks flying thrô a Wood. Froiſard calls him Sr. John Hacton, Jovius, John de Aucut, or de Acuto, and [d] Others otherwiſe; but Hawkwood is the True Name. Take this Tetraſtick of Julius Feroldus in his Praiſe.

[c] Weever's Funeral Monum. p. 623. & Camden in Eſſex p. 324. &c.

[d] Matt. Villani calls him Gianni dell' Aguglio, Sartore Inghileſe. l. 9. c. 37.

Hawkwood, Anglorum Decus & Decus addite Genti
Italicæ, Italico præſidiúmque ſolo:
Ut tumuli quondam Florentia, ſic ſimulachri
Virtutem Jovius donat honore tuam.

O Hawkwood, England's Glory, ſent to be
The Bulwark and the Pride of Italy;
A Tomb juſt Florence to thy Worth doth raiſe,
And Jovius rears a Statue to thy Praiſe.

By the Lady Donna aforeſaid he had a Son, called alſo Sr. John Hawkwood, naturalized in the Eighth year of King Henry IV, ten Years after the Death of his Father, as [e] appears by the Record.

[e] Johannes filius Johannis Hawkwood miles, natus in partibus Italiæ, factus Indigena An° VIII Henrici IV. Mater ejus nata in partibus tranſmarinis. M.S. in Bibl. Cotton. & in Archiv. Turris Lond. 1 Part. Pat. 8. Hen. 4. m. 20.

Nor

An. Dom. 1357. An. Regni Angliæ XXXI. Franciæ XVIII.

Nor was Sr. Robert Knolles leſs remarkable in theſe days, who being born of mean Parentage in Cheſhire, was by his Valiant Acts advanced from a Common Souldier to a Great Commander; his firſt Riſe was in theſe Wars of Normandy, of which we are ſpeaking, where with his Engliſh Troops and Navarrois, he wan from the French Towns and Caſtles, driving the Country before him like ſheep, and winning Prizes at ſuch a Rate, that all Men * were willing to follow his Fortune: For he loaded all his Men with Plunder, and was himſelf worth more than an 100000 Crowns.

* Froiſ. c. 178.

VIII. But beſides this double torment, which the French Nation at that time felt both in Bretagne and Normandy, there aroſe in other parts of France a ſort of Freebooters; who were men, neither provoked, nor employ'd by any, but therefore provoked, becauſe not employ'd, they banded together to afflict, rob, and plunder the poor Country. The Chief whereof at that time was [g] Sr. Arnold Cervoles a Gaſcogner, who at the Battle of Poictiers was armed like one of the French Kings Sons; being commonly called the Arch-Prieſt. He was very wealthy, and had for ſome while at his own Charges retained a good Number of Men of Arms, and others of ſeveral Nations; with whom he lately ſerved the French King. But upon that Kings Impriſonment miſſing of his pay, he thought he could not better employ himſelf, and keep his Men together, than by paying himſelf at the Countries coſt. This Arch-Prieſt knew the Clergy was Rich, and therefore he took his way towards Provence, intending to give his Holineſs a Viſit, and to finger ſome of his Gold, and all along in his way thither he plunder'd, and pillag'd, and took Towns and Caſtles. Pope Innocent VI. was ſo terribly alarum'd at the noiſe of this approaching Storm, that he fell to retain Men of War on all hands, and made the Cardinals do the like; moreover [h] he wrote earneſtly to the Emperour Charles, requeſting his Aſſiſtance, as alſo to the Impriſon'd King of France, becauſe the Dauphin was of no Authority: But theſe Friends were far of, and Sr. Arnold came daily nearer and nearer, having haraſſed at his pleaſure in Venaiſſin, till coming toward Avignon, [i] the Pope and his Clergy not daring to truſt to their Arms, to be fairly rid of him, fell into a Treaty with him; till at laſt upon good ſecurity given and taken, he was permitted to enter the City with certain of his Troops, where he was as Honourably received, as thô he had been Son to a King. Heſrequently dined with the Pope and the Cardinals, and there obtained a Revocation of the Curſe lately laid upon him and his Men; and alſo a full pardon ab omni pœnâ & culpâ; which was made more reliſhing with an addition of 60000 Crowns of Gold, preſented unto Sr. Arnold; he thereupon promiſing to leave thoſe parts. This he punctually obſerved; but thô certain of his Men, being now ſatisfied of their pay, disbanded, he kept the greater part of them ſtill together, and only changing his Quarters continued his new Profeſſion.

[g] Froiſ. c. 177.

[h] Odor. Rainal. ad hunc annum §. 3. & 4.

[i] Froiſ. ibid. & Mezeray ad hunc annum.

[k] Froiſ. c. 178.

At the ſame time there [k] aroſe another Warlike Company of Robbers under one Griffith a Welch Captain, who kept between the Rivers of Loire and Seyne; ſo that none durſt travail on Horſe or Foot between Paris and Orleans, or between Paris and Montargis; but all the People of the Country fled before them, either to Orleans or to Paris. This Captain Griffith, whom ſome way or other his Men had made a Knight, became wonderfull Rich by his exceſſive pillaging and plundering. One day he would ride up almoſt to Paris, another day to Orleans, and a third to Chartres; inſomuch, that there was no Town, Caſtle, nor Village, except thoſe, that were fortify'd to purpoſe, which they did not overrun, rob, and plunder, as Eſpernon, Gaillardon, Rambouillet, Alais, Eſtampes, Chaſtres, Montereau, Pluviers en Gaſtinois, Milly, Artenay, Chaſtillon, Montargis, Illiers, and divers other great and ſmall Towns; that You'ld admire to think it. And beſides this they infeſted the Roads, robbing all Paſſengers, by 20, 30, and 40 in a Company; nor did they meet with any Reſiſtance, the Noble Realm of France was at that time in ſuch Diſorder. Theſe ſort of Men called themſelves La grand Compagnie, and Les Compagnons, and grew by Degrees numerous, and laſted long, and ravaged about in divers Countries to the great Terrour and Affliction of the whole Kingdom. For the Three Eſtates did ſo claſh with the Dauphin, and with one another, that they did to their Country more miſchief, than good; and the Regent was not able to do any thing of Moment, becauſe he wanted both Money and Authority. Wherefore the [l] Noble Men of France, and the Prelates of Holy Church being weary of the troubleſome Government of the Three Eſtates, voluntarily gave up their ſhare in the Rule, and permitted the Provoſt of the Merchants to call ſome of the Burgeſſes of Paris, and other Towns to an account; becauſe they had preſum'd to call others to account, whom they had no power to queſtion.

[l] Froiſ. c. 179. fol. 98.

IX. At this the Provoſt taking more confidence upon him, than hitherto he had done, began to aſſemble certain of the Commons of Paris, who were of his Mind; and to all these he distributed Hats, half-red, and half-sky-colour'd, to distinguish them from others. With 3000 of these fellows, being all armed, he marched from the Augustins to the Palace of St. Paul, where then the Dauphin was lodged, having about him sundry Prelates and Noblemen of France: But the Provost upon his coming, having seised on the Gates, and guarded all the Avenues, mounted boldly up into the Prince's chamber with a great Rout of Armed Rascals in his Company. Here he peremptorily desired the Dauphin to take upon him the Government, which belonged to him by Inheritance, that so the Realm, which one day would be his, might be defended better than it was, and that those Companions, who began to swarm about in the Nation, plundering, spoiling, and ravaging without controll, might be subdued. AN. DOM. 1357. AN. REGNI Angliæ XXXI. Franciæ XVIII.

to

The Dauphin said, he would willingly take in hand so good a Work, if he had wherewithall; but that it ought to be rather expected from those, who had received the Profits and Rents belonging to the Crown: And, says he, for the reason of this Matter I refer my self to all the World. At this, a [m] sign being given, John Lord of Conflent, and the Lord Robert Clermont, Marshals of France, with Dr. Simon de Bucy, a Counsellour of State, Three of the Dauphin's most trusty servants, are immediately slain before his face, and so near unto him, that the Blood gush'd out upon his Cloaths; "Ha! says the poor Prince, what Insolence is this? Dare you attempt against the "Blood of France? No, no, my Lord, says the Provost, fear you nothing; 'tis not "against your Person we pretend, but only these disloyal servants of yours, who have "now received their Reward for giving You such ill Advice. And therewith he took the Dauphin's Hat and clapt it on his own Head, at the same time putting his own upon the Dauphin's, so making him a Stale for that Popular Rebellion, by giving him the City Livery. The Dauphin's Hat was of a Brown-black, embroider'd with Gold, which this audacious Fellow wore all that day in token of his New Dictatorship: Wherefore he forced the abused Prince to pardon them for the Death of his Three Counsellours.

[m] Du Serres & Mezeray, &c.

X. But we shall refer the tedious narration of these Insolencies to the French Historians, to whom it more properly belongs; since 'tis enough for us, to set forth only so much of the Affairs of that Nation, as either may better explain our Domestick transactions, or are more strictly interwoven with them. And such a Matter was the [n] Release of Charles King of Navarre, from his Prison at Arleux in Picardy; which happen'd immediately after that affront put upon the Dauphin, the Castle being entred by Scalado, and the King deliver'd thence not without the knowledge, as was thought, of the Lord of Picquigny, to whose Care King John had committed the Custody of that Prince. Being thus freed, he was carried in Triumph to the City of Amiens, where having tarried till he had made his Peace with the Dauphin, he went with great Pomp to Paris, where he was welcom'd with Feastings and Splendid Entertainments, by the Duke of Normandy himself, at the Advice of the Provost, whom as then he would not, or durst not, displease. Here having been a few days, he made before the Dauphin and the Nobles of France a Florid Oration in Latine (for he was well learned and of a wonderfull voluble tongue, which was much advantaged by his Shape, Youth, and Presence) wherein "he complain'd of the hard and unworthy usage, which he had suffer'd from his neareſt and "dearest Relations, who of all Men ought especially to have upheld him. And that there "was no Man living, who could with any shadow of Reason doubt, but that he would live "and die in Defence of the Realm and Crown of France, as he was more particularly bound "to do; being both by Father and Mother extracted of the Right Line of France: Insomuch, that if he had a design (which yet he had not) of Challenging that Crown unto "himself, he could evidently prove, that he had more Right thereto, than the present Pretenders. This Poison was so neatly cover'd with the Flowers of his Eloquence, Majesty, Youth, and Beauty; (especially all Men being prepared to pity him upon the account of his late Imprisonment) that it was immediately swallowed down by most of his Hearers, and by them transmitted to the Vulgar. With whom also he us'd such Popular Arts, by caressing them, promising to ease them of Taxes, to stand by them and the like; that he was presently in far more Power and esteem at Paris, and with most of the Chief Cities of France, than the Dauphin was himself. Wherefore he began to send for his Friends to come and be about him; but as for his Brother Philip, neither at his Invitations nor the Provosts, would he ever venture himself among the Parisiens; for he would always say, "how in the Favour of the Common-people there was never any certainty: But if Fawning and Hosanna's went before, there followed in the Reer nothing but Crucifiges, Ruine, Shame, and Dishonour.

[n] Froiss. c. 180. Mezeray ad hunc annum, &c.

CHAP.

An. Dom. 1358. An. Regni Angliæ XXXII. Franciæ XIX.

CHAPTER the THIRD.

The CONTENTS.

I. King Edward ſolemniſes the Feſtival of St. George at Windſor in a moſt extraordinary manner. II. A Treaty ſet on foot between King Edward and King John, in order to the Redemption of the latter, but 'tis daſh'd. III. The Riſe of the Jaquery in France, with an Account of their horrid Cruelties and final Extirpation. IV. Diſcord between the King of Navarre and the Dauphin, and between the Dauphin and the Provoſt of Paris. V. The King and Duke reconcil'd; but the Provoſt continues plotting. VI. The Engliſh Navarrois revenge the Death of their Countrymen on the Pariſiens. VII. The Provoſt deſigning to betray Paris to the Engliſh, is diſcover'd and ſlain. VIII. The King of Navarre diſpleaſed at his Death, breaks with the Dauphin again: His ſeveral Garriſons; the Dauphins Difficulties. IX. The great Confuſion and Miſeries of France. X. The Conſtable beſieges St. Valery; the Captal of Buſche comes to the King of Navarre's Aſſiſtance. XI. The ſeveral Garriſons of the Navarrois. XII. The Lord Canon Robſert diſcomfits a Party of them. XIII. The happy Eſtate of England; two Kings keep Chriſtmaſs with King Edward. XIV. The Death of the Queen Mother of England; and of the Queen Conſort of Scotland, and of Orcanes the Great Turk. XV. A Quarrel between the Biſhop of Ely and Blanch Lady Wake; and another between the four Orders of the Preaching-Fryers, and the two Univerſities of Cambridge and Oxford.

[a] Knighton p. 2617. n. 60. & p. 2618. n. 10. & M.S. vet. Angl. in Bibl. C.C.C. Cantab. c. 230. Holinſh. Engl. Chron. p. 963.

IN the [a] beginning of this Year King Edward iſſued forth his Royal Proclamation throughout all England, that all Knights Strangers from any Part of the World, who had a mind to come to the Feaſt of St. George, to be ſolemnly held by him on the 23[d] of April at Windſor, ſhould have his Letters of ſafe Conduct to paſs and repaſs the Realm at their Pleaſure, for the ſpace of three Weeks, without the leaſt Impediment or Danger, there to partake, every one according to his Degree and Merit, of thoſe Honours and Prizes which attended the Princely Exerciſe of Juſts and Tournaments. And this high Feaſt the King held in the greateſt Splendour imaginable, beyond all that he had ever done before; for the Honour chiefly of the French King, and others of the Nobility of France. To this ſolemn Juſts came the Duke of Brabant, Sr. Frank van Hall, Sr. Henry Eam of Flanders, and many Great Lords and Knights of Almain, Gaſcogne, Scotland and other Countries. The Queen of Scotland alſo, and many other Great Ladies, as well of England as of other Nations, came to Windſor to this Feaſt in their gayeſt and richeſt Apparel: And thô it is not our Purpoſe to dwell long on Deſcriptions, ſurely the Pomp and Magnificence of this Famous Entertainment ſet forth as well King Edwards Greatneſs, as any other Grandeur of State whatſoever. But King John, who expected by an high Ranſom to pay ſomething toward theſe vaſt Profuſions, ſaid merrily, [b] That he never ſaw nor knew ſuch Royal Shews and Feaſtings, without ſome after Reckoning for Gold and Silver.

[b] M.S. vet. Ang. in Bibl. C.C.C. Cantab. c. 230. ibid.

And we find, that about the ſame time he made uſe of one ſhift to raiſe Mony; for it was now ſet forth by Proclamation, [c] that all ſuch the Kings Subjects, as were poſſeſſed of Lands or Rents to the Value of 40 s. ſhould appear before the King, there to receive the Order of Knighthood, if he ſhould ſo think fit, under Penalty of being fined according to the Law: And among others it is recorded, that Richard Bermingham of Bermingham in Warwickſhire paid a Fine of 10 l. for his Pardon, becauſe he did not obey the Proclamation.

[c] Dugd. Warw. p 647. a. ex Pat. 32. Ed. 3. p. 2. m. 25.

II. A little before this, the [d] Pope being concerned at the inteſtine Troubles of France, and finding that the Preſence of the King was neceſſary to allay them, ſent the two Cardinals of Perigort and St. Vitalis with Letters to the Dauphin, bearing Date at Avignon VIII Kal. Januarii, An° Pontificatûs VI. Wherein he admoniſhed him to uſe his utmoſt Endeavours ſpeedily to redeem his Father, to compoſe all Civil Diſcords, and to attend to the Cardinals Advice in thoſe Matters.

[d] Odor. Rainal. ad hunc annum § 3. ex Tom. 6. Epiſt. ſecret. p. 6.

[e] Knighton p. 2618. n. 10.

The mean while King Edward, [e] as ſoon as the Solemnity at Windſor was over, removed moved his Court to London, and there began to treat so seriously with King John, that all Men believed a Perpetual Peace would now take place between them. Yet it was long before Matters could be brought to any tolerable Issue: For King Edward [f] required Homage of King John for the Realm of France, as holding it of Him, whose Right it was; and upon this Condition he proffer'd him his Liberty and a perpetual Friendship. But King John, who had not lost either his Courage or Honour by this Adversity, made this resolute Answer, "That he intended whatever came of it, to leave the Realm of "France free and entire to his Children, as he had received it from his Fathers: That "Affliction might well engage his Person, but not the inviolable Rights of his Crown, "nor the Liberty of that Country where he had the honour to be Born; and over which "neither the Imprisonment nor Death of any single Person had such Influence; especi- "ally as to him, who should always reckon his Life well laid down for the Immortal "Preservation of France. This Generous Magnanimity of King John gave King Edward occasion not only to commiserate his Calamity, but also more tenderly to respect and honour him, as a Person worthy of a better Fortune. So that at last, especially because his Dearest Son, the Prince of Wales, had promised unto him both in his Tent the Night of the Battle, and afterwards at Bourdeaux, that Peace and Concord should take place, as much as in him lay, if by any means he might prevail with his Father; the King being willing to do his Son Honour, yielded to more easie Conditions of Peace, at least such as seemed so to King John, who declared he was ready to pay any Summ of Mony as should be demanded; but to subject the Crown of France to any Other, that he should never yield to for all the Terrours imaginable. So it was agreed, [g] "That "the whole Countries of Gascogne and Guienne, Poicton, Touraine, Saintogne, Peri- "gort, Quercie, Limosin, Angoulmois, Ponthieu, Boulonois, Guisnes and Calais, should "remain wholly and entirely to the King of England and his Heirs for ever, without "any Homage or Duty paying therefore. And in lieu thereof King Edward to re- "nounce for Him and his Heirs, all his Right to the Title and Crown of France; as "also his Claim, which by any manner of Means he might have to the Dukedom of "Normandy, the Earldoms of Anjou and Maine. The King of France being moreo- "ver to pay unto the King of England for his Ransom [h] Three Millions of Crowns of "Gold, which amounts to 500000 l. Sterling: Whereof 600000 Crowns to be laid "down presently, 400000 the Year after, and the Remainder the next two Years fol- "lowing. And that Fourteen of the Chief Nobility of France should lie as Hostages "in England, till the whole Summ is paid; which done, King John to be set at Liber- "ty, and honourably conveyed into his own Country. These Articles were sent over to Avignon to be confirmed and ratified by the Pope, and also to the Dauphin, to be by him communicated to the Three Estates; the success whereof we shall shew in due Place. And so the two Cardinals, who had now been more than a Year in England, took their leave and went home again, having the Kings safe Conduct as far as to Calais. This Agreement between the two Kings was established by Oaths interchangeably made, and with their mutual Kissing each Other, and the Fame thereof was spread all about; but however on one side or other, Sincerity was supposed to be wanting. Those Wri- ters [i] that favour the French Interest, lay the blame upon King Edward, saying, that when he beheld the Commotions in France, he did his utmost to foment them, that so he might subject the Realm unto himself; and that he might fling the Odium of the Breach upon the French, he [k] contrived to hinder them from raising the Mony, which was to be paid ready down; and that he secretly assisted the King of Navarre with Men, to enable him the more to embroil that Kingdom. But all this we shall easily prove to be the Invention of Malice or Mistake: For as to the stopping of the Mony, 'tis [l] af- firmed by good Authority, "That soon after the Departure of the Cardinals, there "came certain Persons from France with [m] twelve hundred thousand Crowns in Part of "Payment for their Kings Ransom: But King Edward refused the Mony, for that they "had not brought the Hostages with them, as it had been agreed. They in their De- "fence answer'd, that a great Part of France was ravaged by the English, contrary to "the Form and Nature of the Agreement; that the People of France durst not go to "their own Houses. The King told them, that such Englishmen, who tarried in France "after the Agreement made, were Outlaws, Felons, Murderers, Theeves and Robbers, "and Delinquents against the Laws of his Kingdom, and as such, out of his Protecti- "on, nor could he justifie them. And further, there is found rather an instance of King John's Insincerity in this matter; for the same [n] Author assures us, that when the English Ambassadors were returning from Avignon, having compleated their Bu- sinesses, it was found out, that King John, contrary to his Oath, had sent Letters into

AN. DOM. 1358. An. Regni Angliæ XXXII. Franciæ XIX.

[f] Du Serres, &c.

[g] Holinsh. Eng. Chron. p. 963. & Matt. Villani l. 8. c. 51. & l. 9. c. 9.

[h] Ita Authentica Articulorum copia; Churchill's Divi Britan. p. 242. Fabian p. 240. &c.

[i] Vid. Odor. Rainal. ad hunc annum §. 3.

[k] Matt. Villani l. 8. c. 101.

[l] Knighton p. 2618. n. 56. &c.

[m] Forte esset 6 cent. Mill. ut suprà.

[n] Knighton p. 2619. n. 24.

An. Dom. 1358. An. Regni Angliæ XXXII. Franciæ XIX.

France, importing, "That whatsoever he had agreed to for Convenience sake in the "present Necessity of Affairs, it was never in his Mind to part with one Foot of the Land "of France unto the King of England. And the Bearer thereof was taken at Sea, and upon Search these Letters found about him sealed with King John's Privy Seal. Upon notice of this double Dealing, King Edward thought fit to confine him a little more closely; and so first order'd him to be convey'd to Hereford Castle, from whence the next Year [o] his Keeper Sr. John Kirketon was order'd to remove him to Somerton-Castle in Somersetshire; where also for some time he remain'd under Custody of the Lord William Deincourt, and Sr. William Colvile, who therein supplied the Place of his Brother the Lord Robert Colvile, he being indispos'd at that time: And lastly, he was removed thence to the Tower of London, his Son Philip being constantly with him. But (as we said before) these Removes were made the next Year, when King Edward was in France.

[o] Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 168. 1 Vol. p. 388. Holinsh. Engl. Chron. p. 964. & Knighton ibid. Ashmole p. 659.

III. The mean while, as if all the Vials of Gods Wrath were now to be poured out all together upon that unhappy Prince's People; there arose in France another Plague, more terrible than any hitherto mention'd. For whether on occasion of the Oppression of the Great Men, or the intolerable Presumption of the Poor; soon after the Deliverance of the King of Navarre, [p] a sort of Rascally Clowns began their seditious Assemblies in Beauvoisin and Brie, about Soissons and the River of Marne, which threatned a total Destruction to all the Nobility and Gentry of France. For they prov'd just such Levellers, as some twenty three Years after, in the Days of King Richard II, Wat Tyler and Jack Straw were here in England.

[p] Froiss. c. 182. f. 88. &c. Mezeray, Du Serres, &c.

At first they were not passing an Hundred or such a matter, who gathering together out of the little Villages without any Head or Captain, and being met somewhere in Beavoisin, said among themselves, "How their Nobles, Knights, Esquires and Gentle-"men were a shame and burthen to the Land, and that it would be as laudable to de-"stroy them for their Villany, as profitable for their Wealth. And they all cried out, "that it was true, and said with one Voice, "A shame on him, that doth not his best to "root out all the Gentlemen of the Land. Being thus suddenly gather'd and agreed, without either Captain or Weapons, except what their own ungodly Madness armed them with, as Prongs, Staves, and the like; they went forthwith to a Knights house hard by, which having broke up, they slew him and his Lady, and all his Children great and small, and fired the House upon them; which done they proceeded to another House, a Castle, where they took the Captain thereof a Knight, and bound him fast to a Stake, and ravished his Wife and his Daughter before his Face, and then slew the Lady and her Daughter, and the rest of his Children, and lastly, tormented the Knight himself to Death, and burnt and beat down the Castle; the like whereof they did to several other Castles and Gentlemens Houses. And still as they went on, they encreased like a rowling Snow-ball, so that presently they were grown to above 6000 in Number; for all ungracious Villains like themselves fell to them. Wherefore all the Gentlemen about the Country, with their Wives and Children fled away before them, ten or twenty Leagues off for their better Security, leaving both their Houses and Goods at the discretion of these base Rascals.

Thus did this disorderly Multitude range about, robbing and burning of Houses, Palaces and Mansions, murdering and tormenting all Gentlemen they could lay their hands on, and ravishing young Ladies and Gentlewomen, and committing such horrid Villanies, as can hardly be imagin'd: And he of their Company who was most daring and exquisite in Cruelty and Wickedness, had the highest Esteem among them. At first they had no Head to follow or obey, but now there was found among them one Jaques of Clermont in Beauvoisin, who was so diabolically excellent at these Damnable Inventions of doing Mischief, that as the most ungracious of all, they chose him for their King and Captain, naming him Jaques the Good-Man: And thence their whole Tribe obtain'd to be called [q] the Jaquerie.

[q] Cotgrave in his Dictionary says, they had the name of la Jaquerie, or les Jaquiers, from a short Country Jacket worn in those days. Non mihi hæc arridet Opinio.

This incarnate Devil of a King, having first cruelly slain a Noble Knight of those Parts, caused him to be spitted and roasted at a Fire, in sight of the Lady his Wife and Children, and after that ten or a dozen had in most shamefull manner violated the Lady, they compelled her to eat her Husbands Flesh, and then put to Death both her and her Children. And at this rate they raged and prevailed in Beauvoisin, about Corbie, Amiens and Mondidier, destroying and burning more than threescore good Houses and Castles. And at the same time the like Fury seised the Peasants and other villanous Wretches in Brie and Artois, but especially in Brie; so that all the Ladies, Knights and Esquires of those Parts were fain to fly away to Meaux on the Marne for their Defence.

fence. And among them were the Dutcheſs of Normandy, and the Dutcheſs of Orleans, the one Siſter in Law, and the other Daughter in Law to King John, with ſeveral other Ladies and Gentlewomen; all who were obliged to fly thither for preſervation of their Lives and Honours. And all the Country on each ſide the Marne, as between Paris and Noyon, and about Soiſſons and Creſſy en Valois, and on the other ſide, as far as Mortmireil and Eſpernay, was overrun by theſe Wretched Creatures; and more than an hundred Caſtles and ſtrong Edifices, belonging to the Nobility and Gentry utterly defaced and ruined. Wherefore the Gentlemen of Beauvoiſin, Corbois and Vermandois, being alarum'd at the horrible Outrage of theſe People, ſent to their Friends in Flanders, Hainalt, Brabant and Luxemburgh for their Aſſiſtance. Whereupon being ſpeedily re-enforced, they took Courage and rode about the Country in ſtrong Bodies, and whereever they met with any of theſe ungracious Levellers, they ſlew them without Mercy, and hanged them on the trees in Cluſters; and ſurely it was high time to take them up, for if they had all been joyned together, they had made above an hundred thouſand Men. When any were taken and queſtion'd, why they did ſuch Deviliſh deeds, they had nothing to ſay; "but that they could not help it, they only did as "they ſaw others do; it being their deſign to deſtroy all the Nobles and Gentlemen in "the World.

AN. DOM. 1358. An. Regni Angliæ XXXII. Franciæ XIX.

One day the King of Navarre ſlew of theſe People above 3000 near Clermont in Beauvoiſin; and at the ſame time there came out of Pruſſia from the Holy War Gaſton Phœbus Earl of Foix, and his Couſin John Greilly Lord of Kendale and Benanges, and Knight of the Garter, commonly called the Captal of Buche, a true and conſtant Lover of the Engliſh Nation. When the Truce was taken between the two Realms, this Noble and Valiant Gentleman, with the Lord [r] Walter Fauconberg, an Engliſh Baron, and ſeveral others, as well French and Gaſcogners, as Engliſh, went into Pruſſia to fight againſt the Enemies of the Chriſtian Religion; and being now upon their Return on the Borders of France, they heard of the great havock theſe unhappy Multitudes made among the Nobility; and that the Dutcheſs of Normandy, and the Duke of Orleans and his Dutcheſs, with more than 300 other Ladies and Gentlewomen, were in great fear fled unto the City of Meaux for refuge. Wherefore the foreſaid Lords agreed to go and comfort theſe Ladies, and to offer their Lives in their ſervice; for thô the Captal and other Engliſh Lords were there, yet a Truce being now between the two Kings, they might ſafely ride thrô any part of that Kingdom; and beſides the Cauſe it ſelf was able to juſtifie them, all the Country ſtanding in need of ſuch Protectors. They were in all Threeſcore moſt accompliſh'd Men of Arms, Lords and Knights, beſides their Eſquires and ſervants, all who were well provided for War; and being come in time to Meaux, they were heartily welcome to the Duke of Orleans, and the Ladies with him, and immediately the French Lords and Gentlemen thereabouts joyn'd them.

[r] Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 4.

The mean while the Raſcals of the Jaquerie hearing what a Number of Ladies, Gentlewomen, and Noblemens Children were gather'd together in Meaux, taking unto them the Rebels of Valois, and ſome of the Commons of Paris, marched thither, as to a certain Prize. Upon their firſt ſetting forth they were about 9000, and every day they encreaſed, as they paſſed on, till they came to Meaux; the Commons of which City, out of Fear, as they pretended, or rather in connivance at their Wickedneſs, ſet open their Gates, and gave them leave to enter. Immediately all the Streets were full of them, even to the Market-place; where all the Nobles, Knights, and Ladies were lodged in a ſtrong houſe, environ'd by the River of Marne.

Yet notwithſtanding the Preſence of theſe Valiant Knights, when the Ladies ſaw ſuch Multitudes of the Rabble coming againſt them, they were in an heavy taking for doubt of their Lives and Honour. But at that inſtant the Earl of Foix, the Lord John Greilly, the Lord Fauconberg and their Company, being all gallantly mounted, rode toward the Gate that looks to the Market-place, and ſallied forth in Warlike Order, ſetting fiercely upon the Levellers, who were but indifferently Armed, and held but little Array, being more ignorant in the Arts of War, than in the Practiſe of Brutiſh Cruelty. Beſides the Three Lords aforeſaid, there was alſo the Duke of Orleans with his Banner, and their whole Number exceeded not 500; but they were all well-armed, Expert and Gallant Men, and led on by Captains of High Courage and Conduct. Wherefore when this Raſcally Rabble ſaw theſe Warriers all in ſhining Armour ſallying forth on their Barbed Horſes, ready to Defend the Place, the foremoſt of them gave back in great Confuſion, and the Gentlemen fell in upon them with ſwords, Spears, and Battle-Axes. But when the Barbarous Clowns felt and ſaw the mighty ſtroaks they gave, and how nothing they had, could reſiſt them, they all began to turn their backs, and for haſte fell foul upon one another. Then all the Noblemen having quitted the Barriers, and won the Head of the Street, ruſhed forth in good Martial Order, and flew in with great Fury among the thickeſt of their Enemies; whom they beat down by heaps, and ſlew them like Beaſts, driving them before their faces ſo haſtily, that Hundreds of them leap'd into the River. In ſhort, they ſlew of them that day more than 7000, and not one of them had eſcaped, but that the Victors were ſo wearied with the Execution, that they were not able to follow the Chace, and pick them up from all parts, where they were ſcatter'd. Now at laſt when all theſe Men of Arms were return'd to the Town, with one conſent they ſet it on fire, and burnt it to the ground and all the Commons of the Town, whom they could encloſe therein; becauſe they had ſo perfidiouſly taken part with the Jaquerie, and let them in at their Gates. Their Captain Jaques the Good-man, being here taken alive, was ſent to the Dauphin, [f] who underſtanding that he had aſſumed the Name of a King, cauſed him to be Crown'd with a Trevet, or the Three-legged Frame of an Iron Skellet, red-hot, and ſo to be hang'd, in Requital of all his Barbarous Cruelties.

An. Dom. 1358. An. Regni Angliæ XXXII. Franciæ XIX.

[f] In Geſtis Innocent. VI. apud Boſqu. vid. Odor. Rainald. ad ann. 1359. §. 1.

After this notable Diſcomfiture, and the terrible Example done upon Meaux, they were never able to make any conſiderable Head again: For the young Lord Ingelram de Coucy, a Valiant Baron both of [t] England and France, with certain flying Troops of both Nations ſcoured about thrô all the Country; and ſtill as faſt as he could pick them up, he put them to Death without pity.

[t] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 761.

IV. But neither yet were the inteſtine Broils of France allayed; for by reaſon of the King of Navarre's popularity (eſpecially becauſe he preſum'd to retain certain Engliſhmen at his wages within Paris it ſelf) the [u] Duke of Normandy doubting the Event of ſuch open Inſolence, as alſo the ſeditious Deſigns of the Provoſt of the Merchants and his Abettors, left the City in Diſpleaſure with thoſe Friends he had about him, and rode to Pont-Charenton on the River Marne, where he began to Muſter Men of War, and preſently ſent his Defiance to Stephen Marcell, the Provoſt, and all his Partakers. The Provoſt was mightily ſtartled at this, and doubted greatly, that ſome time or other, the Duke would come upon them in the Night, and overrun the City; for at that time Paris had neither deep Trenches, nor any other Defence in a manner, except thoſe Walls of Bone, her Inhabitants. Then immediately he ſet Labourers and Pioneers to work about the City, who made large and deep Trenches, and began High Walls, and ſtrong Gates, and Baſtions, and other Defences; there being 300 Men continually employed about the Work for the ſpace of one whole Year. Surely it was a Mark of Extraordinary Greatneſs to furniſh an Army, and at the ſame time, almoſt in an inſtant to fortifie ſo vaſt and ſpacious a City, as Paris: And whatever the occaſion was, moſt certainly never any Provoſt did an act of more Advantage to that Place; for had it not been for theſe Defences, the City had not only been ſhortly after taken by King Edward, but upon ſeveral other occaſions eaſily overrun and ſpoiled.

[u] Froiſ. c. 183.

[x] Froiſ. c. 185.

Now when the [x] Duke of Normandy had compleated his Muſters, and gather'd together to his Aſſiſtance ſundry Perſons of Honour, not only of the Realm of France, but alſo out of the Empire, and elſewhere for pay; ſo that he had more than 3000 Men of Arms, beſides others; He preſently went and laid Siege to Paris, toward the Gate of St. Anthony, along by the River of Seyne, himſelf being lodged at St. Maur des Foſſez, and his Men thereabout, who every day went and skirmiſhed even to the Walls of Paris: But ſtill the Provoſt's Workmen proceeded; for the Souldiers within the City defended them upon all occaſions. Sometimes the Duke lay at St. Maur, and ſometimes at Charenton; ſo that nothing could come to Paris on that ſide, either by Land or Water: For he had cauſed both the Rivers of Seyne and Marne to be well kept, and had burnt all the Villages about Paris, which were not encloſed, the better to curb the Inſolence of that Rebellious City. And ſurely he had ſerved Paris it ſelf in the ſame manner; if it had not been pretty well fortify'd: However none durſt go in or out for fear of his Men, who rode on both ſides the Seyne at their Pleaſure; there was none to Reſiſt them.

Yet there were in the City ſeveral Loyal and well-diſpoſed Perſons, as John Maillart, and his Brother Simon, and many of their Relations and Friends, who were very much troubled at the Duke of Normandy's Diſpleaſure with the City, and would very willingly have ſubmitted unto him, and have beg'd his Pardon: But the Provoſt had ſo inveigled the Vulgar by his Popular pretences, that no Man durſt contradict him, unleſs he had a Mind to be torn in pieces. The Provoſt for his part ſtill kept in with the King of Navarre, following his Directions in all things, and all the while he had had Men at Work, both Day and Night by turns; for Defence of the City; and moreover retain'd Souldiers on all hands, as well Navarrois, as Engliſh Men of Arms, and Archers, and other of the Companions: For no other Engliſhmen durſt make War in France; becauſe hitherto there was a Truce between the two Nations. AN. DOM. 1358. An. Regni Angliæ XXXII. Franciæ XIX.

When the King of Navarre ſaw this Difference between the Duke and the City, he began to call to Mind the Words of his Brother Philip; That there was no Truſt to be repoſed in the Vulgar, and therefore doubting the Worſt, if Matters ſhould proceed, he very fairly took his leave of them (thô not without many kind Promiſes) and drew off to St. Dennis: Where he began to retain Souldiers in great Numbers; but the City of Paris paid their Wages. The Duke of Normandy had now lain at Charenton ſix Weeks, and the King of Navarre almoſt as long at St. Dennis; and between them both, all the Vicinage was in a manner deſtroy'd and eaten up.

V. But in this ſad juncture it pleaſed God to raiſe up certain Eminent and Worthy Perſonages, to labour effectually to compoſe Matters, firſt between the King and the Duke; and then alſo between the two Realms. And here we muſt not forget the great Diligence of the Pope, [y] who by his Letters both to the Dauphin and the King of Navarre, earneſtly exhorted them to a final Concord, ſo profitable to the Realm, and ſo comfortable to all Good Men. Beſides the Archbiſhop of Sens, then newly Ranſom'd out of England, the Biſhop of Auxerre, and the Biſhop of Beauvais, the Lord Charles of Monmorency, the Lord Moreau de Fiennes, and the Lord of St. Venant, joyned together to do their utmoſt in this pious way of Pacification. Theſe ſix went ſo often between the Parties, interceding, qualifying, arguing, and conjuring, and bare themſelves with ſuch diſcretion; That now the King of Navarre of his own meer good Will, without the leaſt Conſtraint, went to Charenton to the Duke of Normandy, and excuſed himſelf of what he was ſuſpected, eſpecially of the Death of the Lords of Clermont and Conflens, and of Doctor Simon Bucy, and of the Affront, which the Provoſt had done unto him in the Palace at Paris: Swearing, "that it was all without his Conſent and knowledge, and promiſing the Duke to embarque with him, "and joyn iſſue in all his Affairs both good and evil, and to make the Pariſians give "him ſatisfaction for what they had done. Hereupon there was Peace made between the King and the Duke; the latter whereof ſaid, "He was willing to pardon the Pa"riſians, on Condition, that he might have the Provoſt and 12 other Burgeſſes, ſuch as "he ſhould name, to puniſh after their Demerits.

[y] Odor. Rainal. ad hunc annum. §. 2. & 3. ex Tom. 6. Epiſt. Secret. p. 6. & 7.

After this Agreement the King of Navarre returned to St. Dennis, and the Duke went to Meaux in Brie, which had ſuffer'd ſo much lately on occaſion of the Jaquerie: Both the King and the Duke disbanded the greater part of their Troops now; and ſeveral of the Burgeſſes in Paris, eſpecially ſuch as had been concern'd in promoting the Treaty, had invited the Duke to come to Paris, promiſing to render him all the Dutifull Reſpect imaginable. But the Duke reply'd, "How he would ſurely keep "the Peace, which he had made and ſworn to, without any breach or flaw on his part: "But as for ſetting his Foot within Paris, that he was reſolved never to do, till he had "ſatisfaction for the Affronts put upon him.

When the Duke of Normandy had thus broke up his Siege, the Provoſt of the Merchants and the Chief of his Partakers, went frequently to St. Dennis to viſit the King of Navarre; and they told him, "How for his ſake they had incurred the Duke's "Diſpleaſure, for that they had deliver'd him out of Priſon, and brought him in ſuch "Honour to Paris: Wherefore they deſired him, for Gods ſake, to have ſome re"ſpect to their ſafety, and not to repoſe too much Confidence either in the Duke or "his Council; nor leave them as a ſacrifice to attone for all the Publique Miſcarriages. The King who was very ſubtle, reſolving now, however things went, to make the beſt Market for himſelf, reply'd, "Certainly, Friends, you ſhall ſuffer no harm, but I will "bear a part therein: But to be armed againſt the worſt Events, I would adviſe You, "ſince at this time You have the ſole Government of Paris in Your Hands, to furniſh "Your ſelves with Gold and Silver; ſo that if You ſhould be thruſt out of your Places, "You may have a Friend left at a Pinch. And what You can thus heap together, for "its better ſecurity, ſend it hither to me, as privately as may be, to be kept for Your "uſe: And I ſhall take Care of it, and retain under hand Men of War, who upon oc"caſion ſhall defend You againſt your Enemies. After this Agreement the Provoſt of the Merchants ſent twice every Week to St. Dennis two Sumpters, cram'd with Florens, to the King of Navarre, to whom the Money was very heartily welcome.

VI. All

An. Dom. 1358. An. Regni Angliæ XXXII. Franciæ XIX.

VI. All this while there had [z] been in Paris a great Number of Men of Arms and Archers, as well of England, as Navarre, retained for wages by the Provoſt and Commons of the City, to defend them againſt the Duke of Normandy. While the War laſted, theſe Men behav'd themſelves with great Diſcretion, being always upon their Guard, and holding together as One Man. But the Peace being now made between the Pariſians and the Duke, they began to ſeparate, many of them going from Paris to the King of Navarre, who notwithſtanding the Peace retain'd them for his ſervice. But Sr. James Pipe in Confidence of his Friend, the Provoſt, tarried ſtill at Paris with about 300 Men, who went about ſporting themſelves merrily, and ſpending their Money, as if they had been at York or London. One day among the reſt, while they were thus divided and ſcattered abroad, whether any occaſion of quarrel was given, or whether Opportunity was the only occaſion, the Men of Paris roſe againſt the Engliſh and ſlew Threeſcore of them, and had ſlain them every Mothers Son, had it not been for the Provoſt, who to appeaſe the Commons for the Preſent, pretended to be as incenſed againſt the Engliſh, as they themſelves, and ſo immediately ſeiſed on 150 of them, whom he flang into Priſon, ſwearing they ſhould all die for it: So that the Pariſians were content, and ſtirred no further. But when 'twas Night the Provoſt cauſed them to be all deliver'd out of Priſon, reſtor'd them their Arms, and ſent Sr. James Pipe and the remainder of his Men out of the Gates in ſafety. When the Pariſians the next morning underſtood of their Eſcape, they were highly offended with the Provoſt, who wiſely diſſembled the Matter, till by degrees it was forgot. However theſe Engliſhmen, being thus hardly ſaved, went to St. Dennis to the King of Navarre, who took them alſo into his pay, and here the other Engliſh and Navarrois hearing, how perfidiouſly the Pariſians had ſerved their Fellows, whom they themſelves had hired to defend their Town, they all ſware a Bloody Revenge, and forthwith ſent their Defiance to the Pariſians, and began hot War againſt them, and put to the ſword all manner of People that adventur'd to come out of the City: Whereupon the Pariſians deſired the Provoſt to arm a ſufficient Number of Men, and to ſend them forth againſt theſe Engliſh Robbers. To this the Provoſt agreed, ſaying, that he himſelf would lead them forth againſt the Enemy, and ſo having within a day or two got together 1200 Choſen Men, he marched forth of the City in the Head of them. But hearing that the Engliſhmen, who grieved the City of Paris ſo much, were now about St. Cloud, he divided his Men into two parts, as it were with a Deſign, that ſo the Enemy ſhould not eſcape them, and appointed a place near the Seyne over againſt St. Cloud, where both Diviſions ſhould meet together again. So they took two ſeveral ways, the greater Number marched all day taking a Compaſs about Mount Martre; but all in vain, for they could not find their Enemies: The mean while the Provoſt, who had the leſſer Diviſion by half, marched forward a little for ſhew, but preſently wheel'd about, and toward Noon return'd into the City [a] at St. Martins Gate, having done nothing at all. The other Brigade, not knowing the leaſt of all this, tarried in the place appointed, between Mount Martre and the Windmills, expecting the Provoſt, till the day began to decline, at which time they alſo thought beſt to return homeward. So they went back without any good Order or Array, for they little thought at that time to meet with any Danger. Wherefore they went on heavily by heaps, ſome bearing their Helmets in their Hands, others at their backs, ſome having their Swords in their Hands naked, and others in their Scabbards. As they were thus careleſly marching from St. Cloud-ward, the way that leads to Paris at the Gate of St. Honore, they ſuddenly fell among 400 Engliſhmen, who had laid an Ambuſh for them in a low way at [b] Bois de Boulogne. The Engliſh were all well appointed, and in good Order, and as ſoon as ever they perceived the Frenchmen within their Ambuſh, they ſet upon them with all the Fury imaginable; ſo that at the firſt brunt there fell above [c] 200 Frenchmen; whereupon the reſt betook themſelves to their heels; but were cloſely purſued and beaten down like Dogs, without any pity; ſo that there fell in the Chace above [d] 400 more; for the purſuit was made even to the Barriers of the City. And the next Morning the Friends of the ſlain, coming forth to ſearch their Dead for burial, fell into another Ambuſh of the Engliſh; ſo that Sixty more Pariſians being now ſlain, were left in the ſame Condition with thoſe, whom they deſign'd to bury.

z Froiſ. c. 186. fol. 100.

a Du Serres, &c.

b Du Serres, &c.

c Froiſ. c. 186. &c.

d Froiſ. ibid. & Mezeray, &c.

VII. Thus were the Pariſians juſtly ſcourged for their Seditions, Inſolence, and Diſloyalty; and which was worſt, knew not where to have Remedy; for the King of Navarre was cold in lending them his uſual Aſſiſtance, partly becauſe he had now made Peace with the Duke of Normandy, and alſo becauſe of the Violence they had done done to their Protectors, the English; for which he was willing to let them smart a little: And the Duke of Normandy winked at this their Misery; because his Enemy, the Provost, was still their Governour. So that they were in continual fear Day and Night, not knowing whom to trust, nor where to seek for help; since they believed, that the Provost himself had betrayed them in the last Action. AN. DOM. 1358. An. Regni Angliæ XXXII. Franciæ XIX.

But when the [e] Provost and his Partakers were informed, how the Commons in private murmur'd against them, and cried shame of them, they secretly consulted among themselves, how to save the last Stake: For they had no longer any Confidence in the People; and could never expect to find any Mercy from the Duke of Normandy, whom they had so highly offended. Especially he himself having lately sent word in general to all the Commons of Paris, that he would no longer be at Peace with them, unless he might have deliver'd up into his hands Twelve Parisians whom he should name, to do with them after his Pleasure: In which number the Provost and his chief Friends were sure to be reckon'd. Whereupon they all concluded, "That it was far "better for them to betray than to be betrayed, to kill than to be kill'd, and to live "under the Protection of Strangers, than to die by the Hands of their own Country-"men. Being thus resolved, they secretly made an Agreement with the Englishmen (those that made War against Paris, for the King of Navarre knew nothing of this Plot) that on such a Night the Provost with his Friends should be at the Gates of St. Anthony and St. Honore, at the Hour of Midnight, ready to let in the English and Navarrois, who were to be near at hand, well appointed to overrun, rob and utterly destroy the City, except only such Houses, as should have certain Marks agreed on between them; but in all other Houses, where such Tokens were not to be seen, to plunder and destroy Men, Women and Children.

[e] Froiss. c. 187.

To this height of Wickedness was the Provost by Degrees carried, proving at last a Diabolical Incendiary, instead of a good zealous Patriot, as at first he was; because his indiscreet Zeal for the People made him at the beginning too bold with his Prince, whose Patience when he had abused beyond all hopes of Pardon, not daring to trust the Rabble, for whose sake he had offended; he now resolves for the saving of his own Neck, to destroy all, even the Innocent with the Offenders, had not God blasted his unnatural Design.

For that same Night, on which all this was to have been done, John Maillart and his Brother Simon, with Pepin des Essards, and several other Honest and Loyal Burgesses of Paris, having (as some think) by means Divine, or at least Humane, received an Intimation, that on that Night the City was mark'd out to be destroyed, armed themselves secretly and informed their Friends of the Danger, that more might be in readiness upon Occasion; and so with a compleat Guard, being themselves upon the Watch, they went the Rounds. In their Progress a little before Midnight they came to St. Anthonies Gate, where they found the Provost of the Merchants with a small Company, having the Keys of the Gates in his hands. Then said John Maillart to the Provost, "Stephen, what do you here at this time of Night? The Provost answer'd, how he "was there to look to the safety of the City. "By God, quoth Maillart, you shall not "come off thus, for it is plain by the Keys there in your hands, that you are not here "at this time of Night for any Good. Said the Provost, John, you lie falsly in your "Throat. Nay, quoth John, 'tis thou Stephen, that liest like a false Traytor, and there-"withall offer'd a Blow at him, and commanded his Guard to slay the Traytors. At this the Provost turn'd about and would have fled, but John Maillart, althô he was his Godfather, knockt him down to the ground with an Ax, and never left till he had slain him. There died with him six more of his Friends, among whom were [f] Simon Palmier and Philip Guyphart, the rest being all seised and clapt in Prison. By this the People began to rise at the Alarm and come into the Streets; but John Maillart and his Company hasted to the other Gate of St. Honore, where they found the rest of the Provost's Friends, whom they accused of Treason, and having dispatched such as would not be taken, lead the rest away to Prison. After which they proceeded to take the Accomplices, such as had been confessed privy to the Design, by those whom they found at the Gates: And these they took in their Beds, and at their Houses with small ado, and sent them away to Prison.

[f] Du Serres, &c.

This is the best Account of several that I have met with. For Du Serres as may be seen, is a Man, that usually models the Circumstances of his Narrations more agreeably to his own Wit or Fancy than to Truth: But whoever is minded to compare his Relation with ours, may consult it both as he reports it, and as Froisard and [g] Fabian, from the French Chronicles, do more particularly declare the whole Transaction. We are unwillingly by [g] Fabian p. 302.

these

An. Dom. 1358. An. Regni Angliæ XXXII. Franciæ XIX.

these Foreign Matters detained from the History of England: Thô not only what we have already said, but something more also is necessary to be spoken for the better clearing of what is to follow.

VIII. To be short therefore, [h] upon this Mans Death the Parisians made their Peace with the Duke of Normandy, who thereupon came to Paris with the Lord Arnold D' Endreghan, and many other of the Nobility in his Company, and was lodged in the Palace of the Louvre. But yet not even here did the Domestick Troubles of France cease: For King Charles of Navarre, being highly displeased at the Death of his Friend the Provost, by advice of his Brother Philip, sent presently a new Defiance to the Duke of Normandy and his whole House, to the Parisians, and to the whole Body of the Realm of France. And now he began to retain Souldiers on all hands, as well English (under their Captains Sr. James Pipe and Sr. Robert Knolles) as Germans, Brabanders, Hainalders, Luxemburgers and Others; all who were called Navarrois, because they fought in Navarre's Quarrel. The Mony, which the Provost had so frequently and so largely sent him, stood him now in good stead; and he was no way sparing of it to his Souldiers; so that all Men were glad to serve him.

[h] Froiss. c. 187. & 188. f. 101. Fabian & Mezeray, &c.

The King himself held his principal Garrison at Melun on the River Seyne; and the Lord Philip his Brother, had Garrisons at Mante and Meulan on the same River; and every day their Forces encreased, because their Pay was so large and certain: And presently they reduced the strong Town of Creil, standing on the Oyse, into their Power. Being therefore Lords of the Rivers Seyne, Marne and Oyse, they soon won the strong Castle of le Herelle, which lies between Compeigne and Amiens, after which they took Mauconsel and St. Valery.

But we must beg the Readers Patience, if we are something more particular in this matter, not only because many English Captains were concerned herein (thô they acted now in the King of Navarre's Name only, and not by any Commission from King Edward, nor so much as his Consent) but also because the Actions themselves are well worthy of Memory for their variety and importance: And also the Sequel of our Story will be more clearly understood thereby.

Now therefore the Captain of Creil was the Lord Fondregas of Navarre, who so aw'd the Parts about him, that none could pass from Paris to Compeign, or to Noyon, to Soissons, Laon, or other Places without his safe Conduct; so that while he held that Garrison, he gat more than an 100000 Franks by granting of Pass-ports only. The Captain of le Herelle was the Lord John Picquigny, by Birth a Picard, but by interest a Navarrois, and a Rebel to his Lord the French King, who had entrusted the King of Navarre to his Keeping, but he not only let him have his Liberty, but embraced his Cause ever after. His Garrison very much straightned those of Mondidier, Perone and Amiens, and all the Land of Picardy along by the River Soame. In Mauconsel were 300 Men of Arms under these Captains, Rabigois of Derry an Irishman, Franklin and Hawkins, two Esquires of England, Sr. Robert Knolles his Companions: And these were Masters of the Country round about them: And all the Great Towns of those Parts that were not fortified, were fain to pay certain Sums of Florens weekly by way of Contribution-money for their Redemption; as also the Abbeys and other Religious Houses were fain to do, or else they had been utterly destroyed. In Saint Valery also there was a strong Garrison of five hundred Navarrois under Sr. William de Bonmare and Sr. John Segar an Englishman; and these were Lords of all the Country, as about Abbeville, the Ports of Crotoy, of Rue and Montrevil, even unto Dieppe in Normandy.

[i] Froiss. c. 189.

When the Duke of [i] Normandy, who was then at Paris understood, how these Garrisons ravaged about, and wasted the Country in the Name of the King of Navarre, and that their Strength and Numbers encreased dayly, being himself unable to raise any considerable Forces for want of Mony, he sent to all the Good Towns in Picardy and Vermandois, desiring, "That like good Loyal Frenchmen they would make a Purse among "themselves, and send as many Souldiers, as they could bear, into the Field against the "Common Enemy. The Cities and Good Towns very readily agreed to so just a Request, and set an Assessment among themselves according to every Mans Ability, to settle a Fund sufficient for so many Men of Arms, Footmen and Crossbows.

The Bishop of Noyon was the chief Leader of these Forces, being assisted with the Lord Ralph de Coucy, the Lord Ralph de Rayneval, the Lord of Chauny, the Lord of Roye, and Sr. Matthew de Roye his Brother, the Lord of Coudun, with many other Knights and Esquires of Picardy and Vermandois. Being all rendezvous'd near Noyon, they strait went and lay before Mauconsel; for they took that to be the weakest Garrison son of all that belonged to the Navarrois, and yet it had been a great Nuisance to the Inhabitants of Noyon and Vermandois. Having invested the Place they made several Assaults, and gave the Besieged their Hands full: Wherefore the three Captains within sent by night a Messenger to the Lord John of Picquigny, who held Garrison at le Herelle, all the other Navarrois Garrisons in those Parts being subjected unto him. When he heard of their Condition, he took care to expedite their Succours; and besides a Detachment from his own Garrison, which he resolved to lead thither in Person, he sent very privately to the Lord Fondregas Captain of Creil, to send such a Quota of Men to joyn him in such a Place at such a time without fail: Which was done accordingly. Being all met they made a 1000 Spears and upwards, and so rode silently together in the Night by Direction of a good Guide, and early the next Morning they came before Mauconsel. That Morning there was such a Fog or Mist, that a Man could hardly see the breadth of an Acre from him, under favour whereof they came upon the Besiegers unseen, for they were nothing aware of them, but most of them asleep, and the Watch but thinly set, for they suspected nothing on that side. The Navarrois strack suddenly into the Host, and fell on with a Shout, slaying of Men, and beating down Tents and Pavilions at a prodigious Rate. The Frenchmen were so surprised, they had no time to Arm, wherefore in Despair they fled directly toward Noyon, which was next at hand, and the Navarrois after them in the Chace.

AN. DOM. 1358. AN. REGNI Angliæ XXXII. Franciæ XIX.

Between Noyon and Orcan Abby, and between Noyon and Pont l' Evesque, was made a dismal slaughter of the French; their Dead lay on the ground by Heaps in the Ways, and among the Hedges and Bushes: For the Pursuit was made to the very Gates of Noyon. The City it self was in great danger of being lost: For it was said by several that were present on both sides, that if the Navarrois could have but dream'd of any such thing, they might have entred the Town without the least Opposition; for those within were so terrified, that they forgot to shut the Gate toward Compeigne. The Bishop of Noyon himself was taken at the Barriers, and sware himself Prisoner, or else he had been slain outright: With him were taken the Lord Ralph of Coucy, the Lord of Rayneval, the Lord of Chauny and his two Sons, the Captain of Rouvray, the Lord of Coudun, and two other Lords, besides an 100 Knights and Esquires: But there were slain above 1500, the greatest part of which Loss fell to the share of those of Tournay; for 'tis said, that of 700 who came from that City, scarce so many Dozen returned home; the rest being all either slain or taken. For those who had been besieged in Mauconsel, sallied out to second these their Deliverers, which made the Victory more entire. This Discomfiture happen'd on the [k] 22[d] of August, being the Wednesday next after the Feast of the Assumption of the Blessed Virgin, Anno Domini MCCCLVIII.

[k] Lit. Dom. G. Froiss. c. 189. fol. 102.

The Navarrois led the most part of their Prisoners to Creil on the Oyse for the more Security, because that was looked upon as one of the strongest Places. This their Victory over the French did greatly enrich them, as well upon the account of the Armour and Provisions they wan, as of the Ransoms of their Prisoners. As for the Burgesses of Tournay and other Towns, they remitted them all home, some for Money, and others for such things as they wanted most, as Spear-Heads, Axes, Swords, Coats, Doublets, Horses and the like. The Knights and Esquires were ransom'd for Gold and Silver, or good Horses for the Saddle; but of poor Gentlemen who had nothing to pay, instead of a Ransom they accepted of their Service, for one, two or three Quarters of a Year, as they could best agree. For as for Wines and other Provision they had Plenty enough, the Country afforded them sufficient: And nothing could be brought to the good Towns but by stealth, without a safe Conduct from some one of these Garrisons, which was sold dearly. But they always excepted in their safe Conduct three things, Good Hats, Estridge Feathers, and Spear-Heads: For these things they chiefly desired themselves.

The Abby of Orcan was almost quite ruin'd (thô against the will of Sr. Rabigois) by the Men of Mauconsel, who also with the help of one Robert Scot took the good Town of Beaulieu by Scalado, which they fortified and made a Garrison, leaving 400 Souldiers there, whom they paid by the Month. This and the other Garrisons of the Navarrois and Englishmen so bridled the whole Country, that they e'n did what they pleased; sometimes riding about in Armour, and sometimes going from Fortress to Fortress unarmed: For there was none to resist them; the Knights thereabouts having enough to do in Defending what they had left.

The young Lord Ingleram de Coucy, who was the Chief in those Parts on the French Side, caused his Castles and Houses to be so well kept, that the Navarrois could find no

An. Dom. 1358. An. Regni Angliæ XXXII. Franciæ XIX.

Advantage there. And the Lord Canon Robsert was so watchfull over them, that they feared him above all others: For many times he cut off several of them, as he could pick them up about the Country.

We spake before how the Lord John of Picquigny kept Garrison at le Herelle, not far from Amiens in Picardy, being a fast Friend to the King of Navarre, as who had not only against his Trust deliver'd him from Prison, but also openly affronted the Dauphin for his Sake. This Man dealt under-hand with Firmin Cockerell Mayor, and certain of the Burgesses of Amiens, and used so much Address, Subtlety and fair Language, that they were at last persuaded to introduce him into the City. For this purpose they had secretly conveyed into their Houses certain Armed Men, who were to joyn the Navarrois upon their coming thither. Accordingly one Evening the Lord John of Picquigny, the Lord William of Granville, he that had so subtlely taken the Castle of Eureux, the Lord Fondregas, and two or three more Persons of Quality, marched silently, and came with 700 Fighting Men to the Gate of Amiens, that looks towards Herelle, in confidence of their Friends within, who according to their Promise had left the Gate ready open for them. As they were entred, those Armed Men who lay expecting them in the City, being hid in Chambers or Cellars, came forth and assembling together, cried aloud, Navarre. At this frightfull Noise the Citizens awoke, and rose and went to Arms, crying Treason, Treason, making all speed toward the Gate where the Noise was, between the City and the Suburbs. These few made indeed some Resistance, but too inconsiderable, to beat the Enemy back: So that if the Navarrois had briskly push'd their first Advantage forward, they had most certainly carried the Place. But while they stood dallying to see, what number of Friends they had within, and how their Enemies were order'd to receive them, there came thither a timely Succour to the Town. For by a strange Chance, or rather some secret Impulse, the Lord Moreau of Fiennes Constable of France, and the Earl of St. Paul, who were at Corbie with a strong Garrison, took a Resolution to ride forth that Night to Amiens, and made such haste, that by another Gate they came into the City by that time the Navarrois had won the Suburbs, and were now contending to win the City also: Which surely they had presently done, but for this wonderfull and unexpected Obstacle. But these French Lords immediately upon their Arrival, drew to the Gate where the Medley was so hot, with their Banners display'd, and in good Order to receive them: But they offer'd not to issue forth at the Gate, because they saw the Fauxbourgs irreparably lost. The Inhabitants the mean while being hugely encouraged with their Presence, lighted up Torches and Links, and made Fires, that all things appeared as plain as at Noon Day.

[1] James Meyer Ann. Flandr. *l.*13.*p.*183.

When the Lord of Picquigny saw these unexpected Succours, doubting he might lose more than he could win; he caused the Retreat to be sounded, and so retired in very good Order; but they had already overran all the Fauxbourgs, which they plunder'd, and now in their Retreat set on Fire, sparing neither Houses (of which there were above 3000) nor Churches, nor any thing else: And so they return'd with their Plunder and Prisoners to their several Garrisons.

As soon as the Enemy was thus drawn off, the Constable and the Earl of St. Paul sent a Troop to every Gate of the City, commanding the Officers on pain of Death to suffer no Man to go out of the Town that Night. So early next Morning, taking to their Assistance several Aldermen of the City, they went to certain Burgesses houses, who were suspected of Treason. Of these they took seventeen with the Mayor, who were immediately convicted, and beheaded openly in the Market-place, the Chief whereof was the Abbot of Gars, who had, as it was proved, consented to the Treason, having lodged the greater part of the Armed Men within his House.

In the City of Laon also about the same time, were put to Death for a like Cause six of the Chief Burgesses; and the Bishop himself had been served in the same manner, if they could have got him: For Treason was laid to his Charge, of which he could never acquit himself: But He having a timely intimation of the Discovery, gat off in Disguise, and went straight to the King of Navarre, then at Melun on the Seyne, who received him joyfully.

IX. Such Miseries in those Days was the Flourishing Realm of France subjected to; insomuch, that althô the Navarrois and other Robbers by open Violence made such Havock abroad, yet were they also by secret Treachery in as great Danger at home: For as War and Desolation stood battering them without Doors, so Treason lay undermining them within. Wherefore all the Nobility and Gentry, and whoever had the Custody of Towns and Castles, stood upon their Guard and kept good Watch continually.

And

AN. DOM. 1358. An. Regni Angliæ XXXII. Franciæ XIX.

And ſurely ſo it behoved them to do; for the King of Navarre had many Well-Wiſhers in that Kingdom; ſo that if a Wonderfull Providence had not been concerned to prevent the total Ruine of France, it had inevitably ſeen its laſt days then. For he being wholly tranſported with an irreconcileable hate againſt his Native Country, not content with theſe Miſeries, which he had already created, [m] began to ſollicite the King of England alſo, and to urge him inceſſantly to a War; repreſenting unto him, that now was the only time to make the Crown of France his own for ever. King Edward could not but obſerve a ready way to effect his Deſigns in this Confuſion; but knowing the Ambitious and Inconſtant Humour of the King of Navarre, he could not truſt him: And ſo either out of a juſt Reſpect to the Truce, or fearing that upon the appearance of his Forces, all theſe Domeſtick Parties would unite againſt him, as is uſual in ſuch caſes, he omitted, or rather ſcorn'd, to make uſe of this Opportunity. But ſurely, that which ſome French [n] Authors ſay, how by ſmall Succours ſent to Navarre, he deſign'd to ballance the Parties, to the intent to weaken them both, is abſolutely falſe and precarious: For 'tis confeſt by [o] Froiſard and the better ſort of the French Writers alſo, that during the Truce, King Edward was not at all concerned in Navarre's quarrel with France, and thô ſeveral Engliſhmen were notoriouſly engaged in theſe Wars, yet it was both [p] without the Conſent and againſt the Will of the King of England; as he himſelf ſolemnly [q] proteſted to the French Ambaſſadors, upon their Complaint of thoſe licentious Souldiers, ſaying, that they were Murtherers and Felons, and out of his Protection, and ſuch as he would by no means juſtifie; as we remember to have obſerved before. Althô afterward indeed, when the War was open again between the two Realms, the King in conſideration of their Valour and Abilities for his ſervice, gave them his Pardon.

[m] Du Serres, &c.

[n] Mezeray & Du Serres, &c.

[o] Froiſ. c. 202.

[p] Walſing. hiſt. p. 166. n. 1.

[q] Knighton p. 2618. n. 60.

All this while the Duke of Normandy and his Brethren were at Paris, unable to ſteer the Veſſel of Government in ſuch an unruly Tempeſt, as might even diſcourage the moſt Expert Pilot. The [r] Merchants and Traders durſt not go forth of the City about their buſineſs; for whoever did ſo, was ſurely taken or ſlain, the Realm was ſo full of Navarrois; who were Maſters of all the plain Country, and of the Rivers, and of divers Cities and good Towns; ſo that the Lands were left Fallow and uncultivated by reaſon of theſe troubles, and whatever Fruits proſper'd and came to Maturity, were taken up by the Souldiers; whereupon ſo great a Dearth fell in France, that a barrel of Herrings was ſold for 30 Crowns of Gold, and other Proviſion both of Corn and Fleſh at a proportionable Rate; and this ſcarcity endured in that Kingdom more or leſs for almoſt four Years, ſo that the poorer ſort of People died for Hunger. But ſalt eſpecially was very Dear; for there was none to be had, but of the Duke of Normandy's Officers, and they ſold it at their own Rates; thereby to heap up Mony to pay the Souldiers. To ſay the Truth, whoever conſiders, how the Frenchmen themſelves were the firſt occaſion of all theſe Calamities, by not complying with thoſe juſt Propoſals, made unto them by the Regent, for the Defence of the Realm and their Kings Redemption, will either be apt not much to pity theſe their ſufferings, or to curſe the undutifull Proceedings of that Parliament for their ſakes.

[r] Froiſ. c. 191. fol. 103.

X. Now the Conſtable of France, [s] namely the Lord Moreau de Fiennes, and the Young Earl of St. Paul, who had in the midſt of ſo many Misfortunes happily ſucceeded in Relieving Amiens from the Navarrois, obtained general Thanks and Praiſe over all Picardy: So that all the Knights and Eſquires thereabouts reſorted to their Banners, deſiring to be employ'd by them about the Reſtoration of their Abuſed Country. The Conſtable encouraged hereby reſolv'd to lay Siege to St. Valery, and therefore ſent for a ſupply of Men to all the Good Towns of Picardy, Artois, and Flanders; as to Tournay, Arras, Lille, Douay, Bethune, St. Omers, St. Quentin, Perone, Amiens, Corbie, and Abbeville; each whereof ſent him their ſeveral Quota's accordingly. Many other Knights and Eſquires drew thither upon the Fame of the Conſtables good Beginning, eſpecially from Hainalt, becauſe of ſuch Lands, as they held in France; as the young Lord Verchin, Seneſchal of Hainalt, and Sr. Hugh Dantoing his Couſin with a goodly Troop along with them. When thus the Conſtable was furniſhed with an Army conſiſting of 2000 Men of Arms and 12000 others, he went and ſat down before St. Valery, on the Mouth of the Soame. But the Place was not eaſie to be taken, for there were two valiant and expert Captains Governors of the Place, namely Sr. William de Bonmare, and Sr. John Segar, with 500 tall Fellows in their Company; and they were well furniſhed with Artillery to offend their Enemies: And the Beſiegers ſent to Abbeville and Amiens for ſeveral Engines of Battery, wherewith they caſt huge Stones into the Town, to the great trouble and vexation of the Navarrois.

[s] Froiſ. c. ibid.

During this Siege there arrived at Cherbourg in Normandy the Noble Lord John

An. Dom. 1358. An. Regni Angliæ XXXII. Franciæ XIX.

Greilly Captal de la Buſche, and Couſin to the King of Navarre, under whoſe Pay he had been newly retain'd. Soon after his coming, he rode to Mante upon the Seyne, where he found the Lord Philip of Navarre. Having tarried a few days with him, he departed thence ſecretly with all his Men, and rode in one Night thrô Vexin and Beauvoiſin, till he came to Clermont, a great Town in thoſe Parts, but eaſily by him taken, becauſe without either Ditch or Fence. Early the next Morning he aſſaulted the Caſtle, and thô it ſeem'd impregnable, by the help of his Engliſh Archers he took it by Scalado; Sr. Bernard de la Salle being the firſt that enter'd it. For he having ſharp Spikes in his Greaves and Gantlets, would readily clamber up the higheſt Walls like a Cat, and had after that manner ſcaled ſeveral Fortreſſes before. Here the Captal kept Garriſon a long while after, and by help of the Navarrois in the Neighbouring Caſtles, as Creil, Herelle and Mauconſell, kept all the Country at his Devotion, none being able to oppoſe him.

XI. Thus was the Realm of France warred upon on all ſides in the Title and Name of the King of Navarre, and many other Cities, Towns and Caſtles were taken in Brie, Valois and the Biſhoprick of Noyon, about Soiſſons, and Laon, and Pont ſur Seyne. About Provins alſo in Brie, and Troye in Champaigne, Auxerre and Tonnerre in Burgundy, there was ſuch Havock made, that none durſt ſhew their Heads out of any of the Good Towns between Châlons and Troye, and between Troye and Challon ſur Saône. Now the Caſtle of Beaufort en Champaigne had been of a long time the juſt Inheritance of Henry Plantagenet Duke of Lancaſter, [t] in Right of the Lady Blanch of Artois, Wife to Edmund Crouch-back, Younger Brother to King Edward the Firſt, and Grandfather to the ſaid Duke Henry. In this Caſtle Sr. Peter Audely, Brother to the Lord James Audely was Governour at the ſame time; and he alſo in favour of the King of Navarre, to whom the ſaid Duke his Lord, was nearly related, overran all the Country thereabout. And at Pont ſur Seyne, and ſometimes at Nogent upon the ſame River, was the Lord Euſtace Dambreticourt with 500 Men, who ravaged all the Country about him; and in another Fortreſs of Champaigne there was a Valiant and Hardy Eſquire of Germany, who did the ſame in his Station. Theſe three laſt mentioned, namely, the Captal, Sr. Peter Audely, and Sr. Euſtace, held in their Hands more than fourty Caſtles and ſtrong Houſes, and when they had a Mind to take the Field together, amounted to 2000 Men of Arms and upward. The whole Country was entirely ſubjected to them, and they robb'd, plunder'd and ranſomed where they pleaſed; as they did to the Good Towns of Damery and Eſpernay, to Vertus, and all the Towns along the River Marne, and all round the City Rheims: Moreover they took the Good Town of Roſnay, and the ſtrong Caſtle of Hans in Champaigne, and all other conſiderable Places thereabout, as far as to St. Anthonies in Pertois. Yet beſide theſe in Burgundy and Pertois there lay Theobald of Chanfore, and his Brother John Chanfore, who in the King of Navarre's Quarrel had taken a ſtrong Caſtle in the Biſhoprick of Langres, called Monſaugeon, where they kept their Garriſon conſiſting of 400 Men, who were not ſlack in doing their Part. And between Laon and Rheims, Rabigois of Derry held Veilly with 600 Men; he was ſo punctual in his Pay, that the Souldiery deſired above all to ſerve him. Under him was one Robert Scot an Engliſh Eſquire, who in Chriſtmas-Time went and wan the ſtrong Caſtle of Roucy with all its Proviſion and Ammunition, and robbed the Town: Here he made his Garriſon, whereby in time he much damnifi'd the Country; for he held the Place all that Winter and the Summer following. Together with the Caſtle he took the Earl of Roucy, with his Wife and Children, for whoſe Ranſom he had ſhortly after 12000 Florens of Gold, of the Coin called the Moton; every [u] Moton being valued at about Five Shillings Sterling. All this while the Duke of Normandy [x] durſt not ſtirr out of Paris, leſt that unconſtant People ſhould upon his Abſence invite thither the King of Navarre, who was too potent already: So that even an Enemy that was not too ungenerous, would pity the Condition of that flouriſhing Realm of France, which lay now untill'd and unmanur'd, thô too much fatned with the Blood of its Natives.

t Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 121.

u Fabian p. 236

x Mezeray p. 57.

XII. And yet the good Loyal Frenchmen had ſeveral times the better of their Enemies, as particularly the Lord Canon Robſert, who was the firſt, that after the Conſtable's Succeſs at Amiens, raiſed up a Light for his diſtreſſed Country. The Manner [y] was thus: One day the Earl of Vermandois, otherwiſe called the Lord of Pynon, rode forth with 60 Spears only in his Company, deſigning to go to a certain French Fortreſs: It happen'd at the ſame time, that from the Navarrois Garriſons of Veilly and Roucy about 300 Spears rode forth alſo to ſeek Adventures: But they had no Chief Captain with them. Being near the Town of Creil, they ſaw the Lord of Pynon riding y Froiſ. c. 192.

ding in good close Order under his Banner, and taking the way toward Creil. Both Parties soon perceived each other to be Enemies, and the Lord Pynon found he could not well escape them without Battle: Wherefore he coasted by Creil, but when he observed the Navarrois to begin to cut short their way to him, then he fled upon the Spur, and the Navarrois followed him, crying St. George, Navarre. These last were better horsed than the former, so that within half a League riding they came up to the Frenchmen, at which instant the Lord of Pynon espied a great Sandpit, large and deep, surrounded about with a strong Hedge, and having but one Entrance, little and streight, which might easily be defended. When he saw the Advantage of this Place, and the present Necessity, because he could fly no further, he said to his Company, "Sirs, a "Foot, a Foot quickly: 'Tis better for us here to expect the Success, that God will "send us, good or bad, and the mean while to defend our selves couragiously, than to "be slain without Resistance, or be taken flying away. At this He and all his Men alighted to take the Pit, and the Navarrois also left their Horses, when they beheld what the Frenchmen did. Now in the Lord of Pynon's Company there was a certain Esquire, who said to his Page, "Leap now upon my Horse and spare him not, but ride Post to "the Castle of Pierre-Pont, and desire the Lord Canon Robsert to come hither with all "expedition to our Rescue. Sir, (said the Page) thô I find him there, how is it pos-"sible he should come hither in any reasonable time, since he is at least five Leagues "from hence? Well (answer'd the Esquire) "Do you your part diligently, and leave "the rest to God. Away went the Page, as hard as he could for his Life, and left his Master and his Company preparing themselves for a Resolute Defence. The Navarrois of the Garrisons of Veilly and Rouzy assailed them with all the Art and Fury that might be; but the Lord of Pynon by extraordinary Courage, and the Advantage of the Pit, held out stoutly, from Eight in the Morning till after High-Noon.

The mean while the Page rode upon the Spur to Pierre-Pont in Laonnois, and there did his Message to the Lord Canon Robsert; he said, he would do his utmost for the Lord of Pynon immediately, for he had two or three Troops ready mounted, and he knew the Place well. Then he sounded his Trumpets, and mounted in the Head of sixscore Horse; at the same time sending a Page of his to Laon, which was hard by in his way toward Creil, to inform the Captain there of the Matter, and to desire his Assistance. He for his part would not tarry till those of Laon were ready, but rode forth a great Gallop, till he came to the Place, where the Lord Pynon and his Men were hard put to it by the Navarrois. He came just in the Nick, as his Friends began thrô wearines to decline; nor could they have subsisted half an Hour longer. Immediately he couched his Spear, and struck in among the Navarrois, three whereof he overthrew at the first Brunt; and then he fell to his Axe, wherewith he gave such Strokes, that none durst abide him. In like manner his Men prevailed, being fresh and lusty, against the weary Navarrois, insomuch, that they slew of them upon the Spot more than an 150; and those who fled away, were met with by the Captain of Laon, who was then coming thitherward to assist the Lord of Pynon; so that of 300 Navarrois there escaped clear away but 15, the rest being either slain or taken. The Lord Canon Robsert was highly applauded in France for this Act of his; He bare for his Arms in a Field Vert a Lion Rampant Or.

These are the chief Occurrences, that happen'd in the Realm of France this Year: For the Siege before St. Valery lasted still, that Place not being taken till about Lent in the Year following, as we shall shew hereafter.

XIII. As for Affairs at home in England, they were in a full Calm all the while; Riches, Peace and Prosperity, the Products of Success and Victory, being generally spread over the whole Isle. About the Feast of All-Saints, King David of Scotland, by the consent of his Nobility, came hither to visit King Edward, [z] unto whom he offer'd his Service, to go arm'd along with him in his Wars, where he pleased, "so that thereby his "Realm might in some measure be eased of paying the Ransom, which had been set "upon him: He further desired the King, that the Merchants of Scotland might freely "traffick here in England, as the English Merchants should also do in Scotland, as one "Nation and People, without any impediment or reproach; and that their Mony might "be current with Ours, and Ours with Theirs; and that their young Scholars might be "admitted to study in our Universities, whereby he hoped a mutual Love and Friend-"ship would be propagated between the two Nations. This pious and reasonable Request King Edward granted, but as for the Tender of his Service in the Wars, he said, he hop'd to have no more occasion of making War in France, there being now such a likelihood of a lasting Peace to be established between the two Nations.

[z] Knighton p. 2619. n. 2. circa

But

An. Dom. 1358. An. Regni Angliæ XXXII. Franciæ XIX.

An. Dom. 1358. An. Regni Angliæ XXXII. Franciæ XIX.

But ſhortly after he heard, [a] how the French indeed were willing to pay unto him 600000 Florens in Part of the Three Millions, for the Redemption of their King, but they refuſed to deliver him ſuch Hoſtages as he demanded for his Security: Which when he underſtood, being extreamly incenſed, he ſent word to the Eſtates of France, that then they ſhould look to themſelves, and be ready to receive him, by the time wherein the Truce was to expire.

King David of Scotland tarried ſeveral Weeks with his Queen at London, having his Lodgings prepared in the Gray-Fryers, now called Chriſt-Church: During his Stay, there were many friendly Entercourſes, between him and the two Kings of England and France; King Edward feaſting and careſſing them in Royal Manner; for it was not till the next Year, that King John was cloſely confin'd, thô we have mention'd it before. Particularly this Year, he kept his Chriſtmas with them both at London; where he ſat between the two Kings at one Table, and not as ſome report, between the two Captive Kings in Oſtentation of his great Fortune; for as it appears, theſe two Kings were not Captives together in England during any one Chriſtmas at all; King John being brought Priſoner into England in May, and King David being releaſed the September following. But King David, as his Gueſt, might now be reaſonably expected to ſit at his Table: And King John, as Davids Friend and Edwards Couſin, to have ſo much Reſpect ſhewn unto him for that time at leaſt. Beſides, ſince Pride is ſo loathſome, eſpecially to them over whom ſhe inſulteth; it is not to be imagin'd, that theſe two Kings ſhould ever after ſo entirely love and reſpect King Edward as they did, had he entertain'd them with ſuch ſupercilious Haughtineſs at this time. That Monarch's Soul was elevated to ſuch a degree of Generoſity, that he abſolutely reigned in the Hearts of theſe two Princes, who came, after they were at Liberty, of their own Accord, to viſit him as a Friend, as we ſhall ſhew in due Place.

[a] Walſing. Hyp. p. 125. n. 10. & Knighton p. 2618. n. 60.

XIV. This [b] Year the Lady Iſabella, the Queen Mother of England, who was Daughter to Philip the Fair, King of France, and Siſter to Lewis Hutin, Philip the Long, and Charles the Fair (all ſucceſſively Kings of France) departed this Life in her great Climacterical or 63[d] Year, after almoſt 28 Years Confinement, becauſe of her Concern in the Ruine of King Edward the II, her Lord and Husband. Her Puniſhment was eaſie and temper'd with Reſpect, for all the while ſhe had a liberal Allowance of 4000 l. per annum, and freedom enough, thô under the Eye of a Keeper; and the King her Son did once a Year at leaſt pay her a Viſit, and often ſhew'd her many notable Diverſions and Princely Recreations. Alan Buchet in his Annals of Aquitain, and from him [c] James Meyor ſays, that being big with Child by Mortimer, ſhe was preſently put to Death by her Son Edward; but the Notoriety of this Falſhood appears, not only from the concurrent Teſtimonies of all Authors and Records, but eſpecially from this, that beſides many others at divers times, we ſhall find Pope Innocent the IV to direct his Letters unto her, bearing [d] Date Avin. XIV Kal. Julii An° Pontif. IV. i. e. An° Dom. 1356. Wherefore let thoſe Authors look to their Credit as well as they can; 'tis certain they wanted Care or Honeſty; but to return. This Queen was married to King Edward the II in the 12 Year of her Age, was his Wife 20 Years, and his Widow about 31, being as was thought, a Widow of her own making. And yet truly I am perſuaded, partly from the Conſideration of her long and happy Life after, as well as from many other Circumſtances apparent from the Hiſtory; that upon her firſt coming with Armed Force into England, ſhe had no deſign in the World againſt the King her Husband, but only againſt the Spencers: But that Mortimer and Others, who were already obnoxious to the Law, upon the account of Treaſon, for their own Security drove her on ſo far by their Cunning, that ſhe was not able to retire: And afterwards when the King was depoſed, they ſo terrified her with making her believe, that if ever he recover'd his Crown, he would certainly burn her, that ſhe complied with the Deſign for his Deſtruction. However ſhe proved occaſionally almoſt Fatal to her Native Country of France, her Birth affording that Title to King Edward, which in thoſe Days produced a War of above Fourſcore Years Continuance; wherein, beſides many thouſand great Loſſes, that Realm ſuffer'd three Memorable Defeats, as at Creſſy and Poictiers under King Edward, and at Agencourt under King Henry the V. And even unto this Day the Kings of England are from her furniſhed with a juſt Pretence, whenever they ſhall pleaſe to reſume a Quarrel with that Kingdom. She died at the Caſtle of Riſings near London, on the Wedneſday before St. Bartholomew's Day, being [e] the 22[d] of Auguſt, An° Dom. MCCCLVIII. having firſt lived to ſee her Son the moſt Glorious Prince of all Europe, and the Right, which ſhe had convey'd unto him, to be in a manner aſſerted by the Deciſion of God Himſelf, in the Captivity of the French King, by the Valour

[b] Sandford's Geneal. hiſt. p. 146. Walſingh. hiſt. p. 165. Stow's Chron. p. 264. & Survey of London p. 421. & Knighton p. 2618. n. 54.

[c] James Meyors Annal. Flandr. l. 12. p. 152.

[d] Extant Tom. 4. Epiſt. Secret. p. 158. vid. Odor. Rainal. ad ann. 1356. §. 4. & aliàs.

[e] Hoc ann. G. Dom. Lit.

of

of her Grandſon the Prince of Wales. She was moſt honourably interred on the 27th. of September following, being a Thurſday, in the Midſt of the Quire of the Gray-Friers, now called Chriſt-Church, in London, under a magnificent Tomb of Alabaſter: The Church not being yet dedicated. AN. DOM. 1358. An. Regni Angliæ XXXII. Franciæ XIX.

Queen Joan alſo of Scotland, ſirnamed Joan of the Tower, Siſter to King Edward of England, and Daughter to Queen Iſabel aforeſaid, deceaſed toward the end of this Year without Iſſue: But that it is better to leave an Honourable Report than Children behind. And certainly if King David her Husband had never been oppreſſed with Adverſity, ſhe might have been accounted happy, but then ſhe had never been extolled with that Commendation, which her Vertue and Conjugal Affection doth claim from all Poſterity. For [f] during the ſeven Years Exile, which King David had formerly led in France (when he was expelled his own Kingdom by the Engliſh Forces) ſhe would by no means forſake Him or his Fortune; but faithfully and conſtantly adhered to him both then, and alſo all the time of his Impriſonment here in England, which was for the ſpace of Eleven Years more. She died at Hartford (the Court being there at that time) and was buried in the Gray-Fryers Church in London, hard by the Body of Queen Iſabell her Mother.

[f] Holinſh. Scotl. p. 244.

And laſtly the Great Orchanes, Son of Ottoman, the Second Emperour of the Turks, died [g] either in the end of this Year, or in the beginning of the next, in the 760th Year of the Hegira Current, after he had reigned to the great Dammage of Chriſtendom 32 Years. His Son Morat or Amurath, the firſt of that Name, ſirnamed alſo Gazes, ſucceeded him in the Empire; of whoſe Death we ſhall not ſpeak in this Hiſtory, becauſe he outlived our King Edward, reigning juſt the ſame Number of Years, as his Father had done before him. And thus as the Death of King Edward II was attended with the Funerals of a King of Scotland, a King of France and a Turkiſh Emperour: So his Dowager, Queen Iſabell, was immediately followed by Joan Queen of Scots, and Orcanes Emperour of Turky; not to mention that Politick Death of King John of France, whoſe Majeſty lay now buried in Impriſonment.

[g] Labbe's Chron. Techn. ad ann. 1359.

XV. About this [h] time there happen'd a great Quarrel between Thomas Lylde Biſhop of Ely, and the Lady Blanch Plantagenet, Siſter to Henry Duke of Lancaſter, and Relict of Thomas late Lord Wake of Lydel. The Occaſion was this, the Biſhops Men had burnt a Mannor of the ſaid Lady Wakes, and ſlain one of her Men; whereupon ſhe made her Complaint to the King of this Grievance. The King ſent his Juſtices, viz. Sr. Henry Green, and Sr. William Shareſhull and Others, to make Inquiſition in the Caſe. And the Biſhop being cited before them, it appeared that he was altogether culpable, becauſe he had knowingly harboured the Murderer; quòd eum poſt perpetratam Feloniam receptâſſet ſcienter. Whereupon Judgment being pronounced againſt him, his Temporalities were ſeiſed into the Kings Hands, and he obliged to give Sureties for his forth Coming. He ſoon after made ſhift to get over the Sea to Avignon, where he complain'd to the Pope, how the King had ſeiſed his Temporalities againſt the Rights of the Church. His Holineſs hereupon by his Bull, cited to appear at his Court the Kings Juſtices and their Adherents, as Sr. Henry Green, Sr. William Shareſhull, William Norton, William Thorpe and Sr. Simon Drayton, whom for refuſing to appear he Excommunicated. This Bull was ſent to John Synwell Biſhop of Lincoln, to publiſh to the People, with an Injunction, that if any of the Excommunicate were dead, he ſhould cauſe them to be dug out of their Graves, and caſt them out of the Churchyard. He did ſo to Sr. Simon Drayton, who was then dead and buried, and took him out of his Grave, and drew his Body forth at a hole, which he had dug in the Church-wall, and caſt it forth out of the Churchyard. And hearing that the Lord John Engain, who had been concerned in the ſaid Affair, was alſo [i] then newly dead, he ſent to the Abbot of Bury, to do the ſame unto his Body; but the Lord Thomas Engain his Son hindred the execution by Force. When the King heard of theſe things, he was very much moved, and ſent word to the Pope, that nothing had been done but according to the Laws and Cuſtoms of his Realm; and ſo at laſt, thô not without ſome difficulty he obtain'd Abſolution for them. What ſome [k] obſerve, that the Original of this matter proceeded from the Biſhop of Ely's boldneſs in Reprehending the King for ſetting up an unworthy Perſon to be Biſhop of Coventry and Litchfield, is to be look'd on as an Errour; for that See was not void till almoſt two Years after this, whereas the [l] end of this Action is truly referred unto this Year. However, becauſe ſome of the Perſons Excommunicate had been of the Kings Privy Council, Proclamation was preſently made throughout the Realm, that hereafter no Man ſhould preſume on pain of Death to bring into the Realm, or to procure, or publiſh any Papal Letters, Citations, Excommunications

[h] Knighton p. 2620. n. 10. vi. Walſingh. hiſt. p. 165. Godw. Catal. Biſh. p. 269. & Antiq. Britan. p. 146. &c.

[i] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 467.

[k] Antiq. Britan. & Godw. Catal. Biſh. ibid.

[l] Godwin ibid. Knighton ibid. Walſing. ibid. & Odor. Rainal. ad hunc an. §. 4.

or

An. Dom. 1358. An. Regni Angliæ XXXII. Franciæ XIX.

or Censures: And some of the Bishop of Ely's Servants were clapt up in the Tower, and others in Newgate where they died, for presuming contrary to this Prohibition to deliver Letters to John Stepney Bishop of Rochester, then Lord Treasurer of England: But as for those threatning Letters, which the Pope is said to have written to King Edward hereupon, I believe nothing of them; because Odoricus Rainaldus is altogether silent as to any such thing.

Now was [m] also moved the famous Controversie between the Universities and the 4 Orders of Preaching Fryers, which was on the behalf of Oxford managed at this time by that Learned Prelate Richard Fitz-Ralph Archbishop of Armagh, Primate of Ireland, and Chancellour of the said University; the said Richard arguing against the said Fryers before the Pope, for that they were a Nuisance both to the Clergy and the two Universities, and trusting to their Privileges, by which they were admitted to receive the Confessions of dying Men, they used to entice away young Men, as well out of Publick Schools, as from their Parents Houses, whom having once brought into their Societies, they would never after permit them to return to their Friends: Whereby Men withdrew or kept back their Sons from the Universities, lest these Fryers should thus steal them away: So that, says he, [n] whereas in my own Time there were in Oxford 30000 Students, within a while after there were but 6000. And indeed, how excessively these Fryerly Swarms encreased in all Nations may appear from one Instance, [o] where the General of the Franciscans Order promised to the Pope (then about an Expedition against the Turk) to bring him into the Field 30000 expert Warriers out of the Number of St. Francis his Order, and yet that enough should remain at home to perform the requisite Devotions. But at this time the Pope made such use of those Fryers, that Armachanus prevailed not against them, thô he maintained his Cause in Nine Learned Propositions boldly and manifestly; [p] because the English Clergy stuck not to him as they had promised; and the Fryers had great store of Mony, whereby they were so far from losing Ground, that they procured at this time a new Confirmation of their Privileges. But those that desire more Particulars as to this Point, may refer themselves to the Authors quoted in the Margin of this latter part of the Chapter.

[m] Odor. Rainal. ad hunc annum §. 5. Walsingh. hist. p. 165. Gesta. Innoc. VI. apud Bosq. Antiq. Oxon. li. p. 181. Fox & M. S. Bib. Vat. Sign. n. 3765. & M. S. in Bibl. Bodl. & Speed p. 583.

[n] Fox Acts & Mon. p. 532.

[o] Sabell. Enne. ad. l. 6.

[p] Walsing. Hist. p. 165. n. 20. Speed p. 583.

CHAPTER the Fourth.

The CONTENTS.

An. Dom. 1359. An. Regni Angliæ XXXIII. Franciæ XX.

I. A Method of Agreement pitch'd upon by the two Kings, but rejected by the French Parliament, whereupon King Edward resolves for War. II. St. Valery yielded up to the French: Prince Philip coming too late to its Rescue hardly gets off well. III. Sr. Peter Audley attempts Châlons, but gains little. IV. The Earl of Roucy taken by the Navarrois a second time. V. Melun besieged, but the Quarrel is ended by the Reconciliation of the King of Navarre and the Regent. VI. The Lord Eustace Dambreticourt taken Prisoner by the French. VII. A strange Judgment upon a Souldier for Sacrilege. VIII. The Garrisons of the Navarrois decline suddenly. IX. Upon the Death of Sr. Peter Audley, Sr. Eustace Dambreticourt is redeemed by the English Navarrois, and made their Captain. X. Sr. Robert Knolles his Expedition; he retires being overmatched: Submits to the King, and obtains his Pardon. XI. The Flemings revolt from King Edward. XII. A solemn Just held by King Edward, his Four Sons and Nineteen Great Lords, in the name and stead of the Lord Mayor and Aldermen of London. XIII. John of Gaunt marries the Duke of Lancasters Daughter. XIV. King Edward chooses the place of his Sepulture in Westminster-Abbey.

I. NOW on the Feast of St. John Baptist, or the 24th. of June, the Truce between England and France (which from the Battle of Poictiers had been continued till then, with expectation, that a full Peace should be established thereby) was wholly [a] expired. And thereupon all the Garrisons in France, as well Navarrois, as English, began to make War in the Title of King Edward, as before most of them had done in the Title of the King of Navarre; who was now again outwardly reconciled to the Dauphin. But least any way should be left untri'd for for the prevention of those Miseries, which are necessarily attendant upon War. Some Months before the Expiration of the said Truce, King [b] Edward, with his Son the Black-Prince, and King John, with the Lord James of Bourbon, held a friendly Treaty at London between themselves only; Where at last a Peace was consented to, and agreed on between both the Parties, on these Conditions, viz.

[a] Fro. f. c. 201. f. 107. b.

AN. DOM. 1359. An. Regni Angliæ XXXIII. Franciæ XX.

1. That Aquitain should remain entirely to King Edward and his Heirs for ever, together with Gascogne, Poictou, Touraine, Santogne, Perigort, Quercy, Limosin, Angoulesmois, Calais, Guisnes, Boulonois, and the Earldom of Ponthieu, without any Resort or Homage, or Tribute to be paid therefore; even as Absolutely as he held his Kingdom of England.

[b] Froiss. ibid. & Du Chesne p. 681. D. & Polyd. Virgil. l. 19. p. 383.

2. Item, That King John should pay four Millions of Crowns of Gold for the Ransom of Himself, and the other French Lords, Prisoners, that is to say, three Millions for Himself, and the Fourth for the Lords of France.

In Consideration of all which King Edward would give over, and wholly remit all his Right in and to the Dutchy of Normandy, Anjou and Maine; and renounce and lay aside the Right, which he had to that Crown, and never after take upon him the Stile, Quality, or Title, of King of France.

This Agreement was Signed and Sealed by both the Kings on the 24 of March, and a Copy thereof sent into France to the Duke of Normandy, by the Lord James of Bourbon, and the Lord Arnold D' Endreghan, which latter was still a Prisoner, and lately before returned into England, having obtained leave to visit France upon Parole.

These Lords crossing the Seas landed at Boulogne, whence they rode to Paris, where they found the Duke of Normandy and his Council, together with the King of Navarre, unto whom they produced King Johns Letters. The Regent having perused them, asked Counsel of the King of Navarre, who remitted him to the Three Estates, who being assembled, it seem'd unto them, that the Conditions of the Agreement were too grievous to be born; whereupon with one Voice, the King of Navarre and the Dauphin also concurring, they returned this final Answer unto the two Lords; "That "the Contents of the Letters which they had brought, were so prejudicial to them and "to their Country, that they had much rather endure far greater misery, than they had "already done, than ever suffer so considerable a loss and empairment of the Realm of "France; and that they could not either in Honour or Conscience desire the Li-"berty of their King himself, when it could not be effected without Enslaving the "Kingdom.

When this Answer was brought to King John into England, he shook his Head for Anger and said, "Ah! Son Charles, Son Charles! You are lead by the King of Na-"varre, who is too cunning for you, and will deceive Fourty such as you are. And therewithall turning to King Edward, who was present, he said, "Sir, the fatal Obsti-"nacy of my infatuated People is providing another Trophy for your Victorious Arms; "You must again shew them the Effects of War, before they will understand the Ad-"vantages of Peace. But thrice-unhappy I, who cannot be at Liberty, till I see my "Subjects once more vanquished; nor can oblige them to their Duty, but by the Arms "of my Conquerour.

King Edward was of himself sufficiently enraged at this Dealing of the French, and sware, that when the Truce was expired, "They should see War in the Bloodiest shape "that he could dress it in. Surely (said he) before next Winter be past over, I shall invade the Realm of France with such a Power, and shall tarry there so long, that I will either end the War to my Satisfaction, or make Peace to my Pleasure and Honour. And then he sent Word to the Dauphin, "to look to Himself, for when the Truce "was out, he would most certainly give him a Visit at Paris, to see how able he was "for a War, which himself had thus pull'd upon his own Head. At which time he set about the greatest Preparations, that ever he had made before in all his Life: About which we shall now leave him for a while, and resume somewhat of those Matters, which we left unfinished in the preceding Year.

II. We then shew'd, as we remember, how the [c] Constable of France and the Earl of St. Paul, with the Lords and Knights of Picardy, Artois, Ponthieu and Boulonois had sat down before St. Valery, where they held a long and hard Siege, and made many brisk Assaults, employing at the same time Engines of Battery and other Instruments of War. Among other Chances that fell during this Siege, it happen'd, that the Lord of Baugency approaching the Castle one day in a Vessel to consider of its Strength that way, was stricken with a Springal and slain. Wherefore this Siege continued from the beginning of August 1358, untill March this Year, the besiegers designing to reduce the Place by Famine, since they could not succeed any other way: So all the Streights and Avenues were well watched, that nothing could be conveyed to the Besieged either by Land or by Water. Hereupon by Lent their Provision being in a manner wholly wasted, when they found no hope of Subsistance from within, or of Succour from abroad, they advised to treat with the Constable, that upon yielding up the Fortress they might have their Lives and Goods saved, and liberty to march whither they pleased. All this was granted them, saving that they were not permitted to bear away any Armour or Weapons; thô the Earl of St. Paul was very loath they should have such easie Conditions; for he knew, that shortly they must of necessity have yielded up simply. But he little thought, that at that very instant the Lord Philip of Eureux the King of Navarre's Brother, was upon his March to raise the Siege, which he was resolved to attempt, at least, if the Castle had not been thus yielded up before, whereat he was infinitely displeased.

[c] Froiss. c. 193. f. 104.

An. Dom. 1359. An. Regni Angliæ XXXIII. Franciæ XX.

[d] Froiss. c. 194.

When the [d] French Lords had trussed up Bag and Baggage, and were upon the point of Departing from St. Valery, which they had now Garrison'd for themselves, they heard news of the approach of the Lord Philip of Navarre. Now this Lord Philip was Governour of all his Brothers Lands, especially in the Country of Eureux, and had at his Command all the Men of War, which were Enemies to the Crown of France. The Lord John of Picquigny had privately informed him, that the Garrison of St. Valery would infallibly be lost, unless he attempted a Rescue. Wherefore he resolved to go and raise the Siege. And so he secretly gather'd together about Mante and Meulan 3000 Men, among whom were the young Earl of Harcourt, the Lord William Granville, Sr. Robert Knolles of England, the Lord John of Picquigny, and several other Knights and Esquires. Prince Philip was within three Leagues of St. Valery with this Army, when he met with Sr. William de Bonmare, and Sr. John Segar, of whom he had the whole Account of the Siege and Yielding up of St. Valery, whereat he was extreamly displeased. The French Lords had news likewise of Prince Philips Approach, and resolved to meet him and give him Battle: But he hearing that the Enemy was at least 30000 Strong, had no mind to expect them, but with all speed turn'd off to the Right hand, and passing the River of Somme entred the Fortress of Long in Ponthieu, with all their Carriages and what else they had. They were scarce well entred, when the French Army who followed them, came thither also, about the time of Evening-Prayer, and still their Number encreased; the Foot coming by degrees after the Men of Arms, who rode on before in hopes to overtake the Navarrois. Wherefore the French Captains determin'd to rest for that Night before the Fortress till their Men might come up, and then all together to attack the Place the next Morning. The Navarrois who were within, finding they had little or no Provision for a Siege, left the Place about the hour of Midnight, and went away at a Back Gate, and marched as fast as they could toward Vermandois, having reached above two Leagues of their way before the French knew of their Escape: Then they presently went to Arms, and began to follow the Navarrois by the Track of their Horses. The Navarrois in the mean time passed on a great way before, till they came to Thorigny, a little Village standing on an Hill, in the middle way betwixt St. Quentin and Perone in Vermandois: So that from thence one might view the whole Country round about. Here they resolved to rest a while, and refresh themselves and their Horses, and if they must needs fight, there they had the best Advantage of Ground to deal with their Enemies. They had not been long here devising about their present Condition, when they might behold all the Country beneath them cover'd with the French, who were in Number more than 30000 Men. Whereupon they came forth of their Quarters, and ranged themselves in Three Battails on the Hill ready to receive them. The first Battalia was committed to the Care of Sr. Robert Knolles, Prince Philip himself had the Second, and the Third was lead by the young Earl of Harcourt, each of them consisting of 700 Choice Men, besides 300 Archers. Then they were all commanded to cut their Spears to a five Foot length, and in the hanging of the Hill they caused their Valets to set all their Spurs in the Earth, with the Rowels upward, to make the Enemies Ascent the more difficult. At which time Prince Philip made several Knights, the Chief whereof were the Earl of Harcourt, and the young Lord of Granville.

The Frenchmen being come up to the Navarrois made an Halt, and alighted on Foot, as indifferent for the present whether to give or take Battle: Some were for going up the Hill immediately, and so to have fought them. But those who had more Judgment said, "Our Men are almost tired with Travel, and many of them not yet come up, and "it will be late presently; so that considering all things, we had best tarry here this "Night,

"Night, and having the Day before us to ſet upon them to morrow freſh and with all "our Forces. This Reſolution prevailing, there they encamped for that Night, ſetting all their Carriages round them for their better Defence; which when the Navarrois perceived, and that they ſhould not be fought with as then, in the Evening they returned into the Town again: Where they kindled huge Fires and made great Smoke, thereby to perſuade their Enemies, that they deſign'd to lodge there that Night. But being before-hand reſolved what to do, when it was dark night they all mounted their Horſes, and left the Town in great ſilence, riding toward the River of Somme, which with the help of a Guide they paſſed at a little Village near Bethencourt. Then they rode toward the Wood of Bouhain, which they coaſted, and went that night above ſeven Leagues; thô of thoſe that had bad Horſes, or had loſt their Way, not being able to recover the Track of this ſilent Army in a Dark Night, ſome were taken Priſoners by thoſe of the Garriſon of Bouhain, and others were knockt on the head by the Bores of the Country. The Frenchmen knew not of their Eſcape till it was near Day-light, at which time they haſted as faſt as they might to St. Quentins, in order to paſs the Somme at the Bridge there, ſo to make a nearer Cut to intercept the Navarrois, whom they expected to meet coming back, in their Return toward Normandy. So they rode toward St. Quentin, which was but two Leagues off, and came thither by that time it was Day, the Conſtable and the Earl of St. Paul riding foremoſt. The Watchmen on the Gates of St. Quentin hearing a noiſe of Horſes and Men approaching, were in ſome doubt of themſelves, becauſe they knew the Enemy to be abroad in thoſe Parts; but yet they were ſomewhat more aſſured, becauſe the Bridge was drawn up: Wherefore they adventured to call aloud ſaying, Sirs, "what manner of Men are You, that approach our "Town at ſuch an unſeaſonable time? The Conſtable anſwer'd, "We are ſuch and "ſuch, who deſire to paſs this way, ſo to get before the Navarrois, who are ſtolen out of "Thorigny, and are fled from us; wherefore in the Kings Name we command you to "open your Gates and let us through. The Watchmen then told him, how the Keys were in the City with the Jurates, but they had ſent two Men for them who would ſhortly return. But to thoſe Men that went for the Keys, the Jurates anſwer'd, that no Gates ſhould be opened there without the Conſent of the whole Town; and before their Minds could be known the Sun was up. Then thoſe who were appointed to make anſwer to the Conſtable, went up to the Walls over the Gate, and look'd out and ſaid to the Conſtable, and to the Earl of St. Paul, "Lords, we deſire your Ex-"cuſe for the preſent, for the Commons of the Town are reſolved in this dangerous "Juncture not to open their Gates to any Armed Men: But they are pleaſed that five or "ſix of you may enter, if you are ſo minded; and as for the reſt they may go about "their buſineſs. The Lords of the Army were extreamly vext at this Mockery, and gave them many angry Words and horrible Threats, but for all that the Gates were kept ſhut; ſo that when the Conſtable ſaw, that after all theſe Delays he could never expect to overtake the Navarrois, he disbanded his Men in no very good Humour: But the Earl of St. Paul went to his Caſtle of Bouhain ſo vext and diſpleaſed at the People of St. Quentin, that no Body hardly durſt ſpeak to him.

AN. DOM. 1359. An. Regni Angliæ XXXIII. Franciæ XX.

The mean [c] while the Navarrois rode on by great Journeys to Veilly upon the Ayſne, having alſo by help of a Guide paſſed the River of Oyſe, and there they reſted and refreſhed themſelves after their great Travel. And then finding themſelves paſt all danger, they returned thrô the Iſle of France and Beauvaiſis into Normandy, riding by ſmall Journeys from Fortreſs to Fortreſs; for they were Maſters of the Rivers and plain Country. So being ſafely arrived in Coutantine again, they made War as before in Normandy, the King of Navarre being then at Melun on the River of Seyne with conſiderable Forces.

[c] *Froiſ.c.*195. *fol.*105.

Now the Lord Thomas Holland [f] was Governour of the Caſtle and Fort of St. Saviour le Vicount, and of all the Caſtles and Places, which formerly belonged to the Lord Godfrey of Harcourt, having with him of his [g] Retinue the Lord Nicolas de St. Maure, aliàs Seymor and Others; But he being King Edwards Lieutenant in thoſe Parts, made no manner of War during the Truce.

[f] Dugd. 2 *Vol. p.*74.

[g] *Dugd. ibid. p.*89.

III. At the ſame time Sr. Peter Audley, Brother to the Valiant Lord James Audley, [h] was Captain of Beaufort Caſtle in Champaigne between Troye and Châlons, which Caſtle of old belonged to Henry Plantagenet Duke of Lancaſter, as part of his Inheritance, in right of his [i] Grandmother Blanch Queen of Navarre, Counteſs Palatine of Champaigne and Brie, Daughter of Robert Earl of Artois (Brother to St. Lewis King of France) and Dowager of Henry de Champaigne King of Navarre. This Sr. Peter Audley was a Man of great Valour and good Conduct; but his ardent delight in War rendred him leſs juſt, than Honour required; ſo that now he was not content to maintain and keep the Duke of Lancaſter's Caſtle, but he muſt alſo undertake Actions, that were no way warrantable, as long as the Truce was in being. He had already conſider'd with himſelf, [k] that if he could get over the Marne ſome Night a little above Châlons, and ſo come ſecretly to St. Peter's Abbey, he might eaſily thereby get into the Town. This purpoſe of his he delay'd to put in practiſe, till he underſtood the River of Marne was very low, and then with great privacy he aſſembled his Men; for he commanded at leaſt Five or Six Fortreſſes about him. Being therefore at laſt 400 ſtrong he began his March one Night as ſoon as it was dark from Beaufort Caſtle, and by Country Guides came to the place, where the Marne was Fordable; here they all alighted on Foot, and having deliver'd their Horſes to their Valets, waded over the River all in ſafety. Being got over, they Marched in good Order, fair and ſoftly toward St. Peter's Abbey; but as they went along, the Wind being on that ſide, ſeveral Watchmen, that were about in the Town next the Abbey (which was without the Walls, thô by a Gate it open'd into the Town) heard plainly the noiſe of their Armour, which clatter'd and made ſome noiſe upon their Motion. When firſt they heard it, they wonder'd what it ſhould be; for ſometimes the noiſe ceaſed, namely, when the Navarrois ſtood ſtill; and again it grew plainer and nearer, viz. when they moved forward. However upon the whole, one of them ſaid, "I believe there are ſome Thieves of England and Navarre coming "hither now to ſurprize the Town; let us ſearch out the Matter and Raiſe the City "betimes. And with that ſome went into the Town to give the Alarum; and others toward the Abbey, to ſee what was the buſineſs: But before theſe latter came thither, Sr. Peter Audley and his Men had got into the Abbey-Court (for the Walls thereof were not above Four Foot high) and immediately Marched forth at the Abbey Gate into the City by a great Street directly before them. At which time the Watchmen gave the Alarm, crying Treaſon, Treaſon. Whereupon the whole City haſted to their Arms, gather'd together, and came againſt Sr. Peter; but many of them were ſlain at the Firſt Brunt, and Sr. Peter by obſtinate Valour wan the firſt Town even to the Bridge over the Marne. But this mean while, the Citizens being very Numerous roſe in all places, and armed themſelves, and ſtood ſtiffly to it, to defend that Deſcent into the City. It happen'd unluckily for them that Sr. Peter de Châlons, who with an 100 Men of Arms, had been Captain there for above a Year before, had newly forſaken them, becauſe they did not pay him his Wages duly. So that they were in great Danger of being utterly loſt, had not another Captain by accident come in to their Aſſiſtance, now in the time of their greateſt Exigence. For the Lord Otho de Grancey, having had ſome inkling the day before, that Sr. Peter Audley prepared to ride abroad; ſuſpected, that his Deſign was upon Châlons; and becauſe he knew, there was at that time no conſiderable Captain there, he gather'd about 60 Spears, and rode great part of that day and the night following, till he reach'd the Place. Sr. Peter the mean while aſſaulted the Bridge, and the Engliſh Archers paſſed over on the Joiſts of the Bridge, and ſhot ſo fiercely together, that the Citizens began to deſpair of making good the Place much longer. While the Skirmiſh laſted thus, there came thither on the City ſide Sr. Otho de Grancey with four or five Captains of Quality, and 60 Men of Arms in his Company. Immediately upon his coming, being rightly informed of all things, he march'd ſtraight to the Bridge and diſplay'd his Banner, being very deſirous to meet the Navarrois. At [l] his coming the whole City was refreſhed, and followed his Banners gladly: But when Sr. Peter Audley ſaw theſe Burgundians ready to aſſiſt the Citizens, he retreated the ſame way he came, and finding his Valets with the Horſes in their expected Place, he and his Men remounted without any Impediment, and ſo return'd with ſmall winnings to Beaufort Caſtle. Of their Retreat the Citizens of Châlons were heartily glad (for they had been in a bodily Fear) and thanked God, and the Lord of Grancey alſo, for the Good-will he had ſhewn them; for which they made him an immediate Preſent of 500 Franks; beſides double Pay for a Month both for him and all his Men: And then they deſired Sr. John Sars, who was there preſent, and their Neighbour, to come thither by ſuch a time with ſo many Men to Counſel and Defend them. To this their requeſt he agreed for ſuch and ſuch Wages for himſelf and his Men, and then he fell to Repair the Fortifications of the City, where it needed; the Charges whereof the Town paid.

[h] *Froiſ.c.*195.

[i] *Sandford's Geneal. Hiſt. p.*105

An. Dom. 1359. An. Regni Angliæ XXXIII. Franciæ XX.

[k] Froiſ. ibid.

[l] Froiſ. c. 196.

IV. At the ſame time the Garriſons of Veilly and Roucy made among themſelves a ſecret Rendezvous, and went, and took by Aſſault the Fortreſs of Siſſone, where they ſet

ſet a good Garriſon conſiſting of ſeveral Nations: Over all whom they made Chief Captain, One Hanekin Francois, a lewd, barbarous Fellow of Colen, on the River Rheyn. He was a moſt bloody Butcher indeed, not knowing any Mercy for thoſe whom he overcame; for he burnt and ravaged in the Country thereabouts, putting to the Sword, without any juſt quarrel or provocation, Men, Women, and Children, if they paid not ſuch Ranſoms, as he asked. Now it happen'd, that the Earl of Roucy, who mightily laid to heart the loſs of his Town and Caſtle of Roucy, which the Navarrois, as we ſhew'd, had taken from him the laſt Year; apply'd himſelf ſo effectually to the French Knights and Eſquires about him, that at laſt he gat together an 100 Spears, beſides Fourty Men of Arms from the City of Laon; and the Earl of Porcien, the Lord Gerard of Coincy, the Lord Montigny in Oſtervandt, and ſeveral other Perſons of Quality in his Company. Theſe all riding toward Siſſone, found by the way certain Navarrois of the ſame Garriſon, who were burning of a Village, and prepared to ſet upon them. When Hanekin ſaw theſe new-Comers, he commanded all his Men on Foot, and placing the Archers in the Front, began the Battle boldly.

AN. DOM. 1359. An. Regni Angliæ XXXIII. Franciæ XX.

At the firſt Brunt the Fourty Laonnois baſely deſerted their Friends, and ran away upon the Spur; however the other Frenchmen ſtood ſtill to their tackle, and fought long and couragiouſly: Yet Fortune was not for them; for the Navarrois were far more Expert, and at leaſt equal to them in Number. So that there the Earl of Roucy, being ſore wounded, was again taken Priſoner (this being the ſecond time he was ſo ſerved within the ſpace of leſs than a Year) and with him were taken the Lord Gerard of Coincy, the Lord of Montigny in Hainalt, and many others; the reſt, except a very few that fled, being ſlain in Battle.

V. Not long [m] after the yielding up of St. Valery in that manner, as we have related, the Duke of Normandy ſent three Thouſand Spears, beſides others to go and lay Siege to Melun on the Seyne, which was then held by the Navarrois. This Army was commanded in Chief by the Lord Moreau de Fiennes, Conſtable of France, and with him were the Earl of St. Paul, the Lord Ingleram de Coucy, the Biſhop of Troye, the Lord Broquart of Feneſtrages à Lorrainer, Sr. Peter du Barre, and Sr. Philip of Dormois, and others, who came and ſat down before Melun. There were then preſent in the Place three Queens, two of them being Queen-Dowagers of France, namely Jane, formerly Conſort to King Charles the Fair, and Aunt to the King of Navarre, and Blanch late-Conſort of King Philip de Valois, and Siſter to the King of Navarre, and the Third was the Queen of Navarre her ſelf, Siſter to the Duke of Normandy. The Navarrois themſelves were not a little ſurpriz'd, when they beheld the Place formally Beſieged by ſo conſiderable an Army: But the Three Queens were extreamly affrighted at the Engines and Springalls, which being brought thither from Paris play'd upon the Fortreſs continually. Wherewith, together with the frequent Aſſaults, the Ladies were ſo terrified, that they deſired at any rate to be rid of that trouble, whatever it ſhould coſt the King of Navarre, their Kinſman; and earneſtly entreated the Captains, who were the Lord James Pipe, and Sr. Hugh Calverley, Engliſh Natives, to yield up the Place. But they comforted the Ladies all they could, and told them how they had no need to fear any thing; for within a few days they ſhould ſee the Siege happily Raiſed: "For (ſaid they) the King of Navarre, who is now at Vernon, "and Prince Philip his Brother, have ſent us word, that they have gather'd a great Ar- "my about Mante and Meulan, and will ſhortly bring them hither to raiſe the Siege; "and that rather than fail, they would drain all their Garriſons for that purpoſe. On the other ſide, the Duke of Normandy, who knew all this to be true, entertain'd in his pay Souldiers from all Parts; whom daily he ſent to reinforce the Siege at Melun. So that in all probability, it muſt have come to a bloody Battle, each Party ſending their utmoſt ſtrength that way: But that the Cardinals of Perigort, and St. Vitalis, being aſſiſted by other well-diſpoſed Perſonages on either Part, laboured now ſo effectually, that at laſt they obtain'd a temporary Truce, between the Parties, in order to the carrying on of a Treaty at Vernon. Thither on a day appointed came the Duke of Normandy and his Council, and the King of Navarre, with his Brother Philip and his Council. In ſhort there was now a Peace made between theſe two Princes, the King ſwearing for the future to be true to the Crown of France, and the Duke obliging himſelf to pardon 300 Knights; althô yet ſome few were excepted from the Peace, whom the Duke would not Pardon by any means. But Prince Philip of Navarre would not concern himſelf about this Peace; but rated the King his Brother ſmartly; telling him, "how he was enchanted with theſe Flattering Overtures, and "proved very forgetfull of the King of England's Favours, to whom he was by Oath

[m] Froiſ. c. 197.

"and

An. Dom. 1359. An. Regni Angliæ XXXIII. Franciæ XX.

"and Covenant engaged, and who had always ſhew'd himſelf ready to ſuſtain his "Quarrel.

With theſe Words he left the King, his Brother, in an Huff, and with four Perſons only in his Company, rode Poſt to St. Saviour le Vicount, which was, as we have ſhew'd, an Engliſh Garriſon, under the Command of the Lord Thomas Holland, a great Baron of England, and [n] afterwards in Right of his Wife, Earl of Kent and Lord Wake, who received him very gladly, and ſaid, how he had acquitted himſelf with commendable Loyalty and Honour towards the King of England.

[n] Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 74. Mill's Catal. Honour p. 765.

However [o] by this Treaty of Peace the King of Navarre had the quiet Poſſeſſion of certain Towns and Caſtles in Normandy, and on the Borders thereof, beſides Mante and Meulan. And now a Reconciliation was made between the Duke of Normandy, and the young Earl of Harcourt, chiefly at the Interceſſion of the Lord Lewis of Harcourt, who was of the Duke's Council, and of his Houſhold: So that the Duke gave in Marriage unto the ſaid Earl, the Daughter of the Duke of Bourbon, who was Siſter to his own Dutcheſs.

[o] Froiſ. c. 198.

Upon this Peace the Siege before Melun brake up, the Place becoming thereupon of the French Intereſt: Thô the Realm of France gain'd little eaſe or reſpite by all this; for the Truce between England and France being ſoon after expired, thoſe who before in the King of Navarre's Title had made War in Normandy, Beauvais, Picardy, Champaigne, or Brie, now began to make War as hotly in the ſaid Places in the Title of King Edward of England.

VI. Now the young Knight Sr. Euſtace Dambreticourt, had been for more than a Year ſignally Notorious for the Injuries he did to France in theſe times of Confuſion; for [p] in Champaigne he had no leſs than 700 Fighting Men under him; by whoſe Aid he wan great Riches, as in Plunder, Ranſoming, and ſafe Conducts. So that at laſt no fewer than Twelve good Fortreſſes were at his Command; and as then he was in the Flower of his Age, a luſty, young, amorous Batchelour. And the Year [q] after this he Married the Lady Elizabeth, Daughter to the Marqueſs of Juliers, but now Counteſs Dowager of Kent in England; althô upon the Death of John Plantagenet, late Earl of Kent, ſhe had vow'd Chaſtity, and was ſolemnly Veiled a Nun by William Edingdon Biſhop of Wincheſter, at Waverley in that Diœceſe. For this Noble young Nun, upon report of Sr. Euſtace's great Renown in Arms, began, without having ſeen him, to ſet her Love about this time upon him, and often ſent him choice Geldings, and Horſes of Service, with Love-Letters and other Favours; wherewith Sr. Euſtace was ſo elevated in his Courage, that every day he grew more Notable: So that all his Men thought themſelves happy, they gain'd ſuch Riches under his Conduct. But the Duke of Normandy, who had heard of all his outragious Violences, upon the breaking up of the Siege of Melun, deſired the Lord Broquart of Feneſtrages, a Lorrainer, who had 500 Companions at his Command, to go into Champaigne, and help to expell this Sr. Euſtace and his Engliſhmen, that made War in thoſe Parts; on which account he undertook to pay him for himſelf and his Troops, ſuch a certain Sum of Florens. Upon this Sr. Broquart, having encreaſed his Forces with the Aſſiſtance of the Biſhop of Troye, the Earl of Vaudemont, the Earl of Joinville, the Lord John of Châlons, and others from Champaigne, Lorraine, and Burgundy, to the Number of 3500 Men in all; they began to ſet forward againſt the Enemy. Firſt they came to the ſtrong Caſtle of Hans in Champaigne, which had been held by Engliſh Navarrois, a Year and an half; but now it was taken at the Third Aſſault, and fourſcore Engliſhmen ſlain, even every Man in the Caſtle; there was none had any Mercy ſhewn him.

[p] Froiſ. c. 198. &c.

[q] Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 94. & 95.

After this hot Service the Frenchmen went to Troye to refreſh themſelves; and within two or three days, they ſent out a ſtrong Detachment of 1200 Spears, and 900 others, under the Lord Broquart of Feneſtrages, who took the way directly toward Nogent on the River Seyne. Early that Morning Sr. Euſtace Dambreticourt, having heard of the Frenchmens being about in the Country, choſe out of his Garriſons 400 Spears, and 200 Archers, and with thoſe Troops marched forth of the Caſtle of Pougny to find his Enemies. He rode on a ſtately Gelding, Armed at all Points, except his Headpiece, which an Eſquire carried after him, his War-Horſe being led by his ſide. He had hardly paſſed the Seyne at Mery, when he heard tidings of the French, as they alſo by this had heard of him. But ſurely had he known the Number of thoſe, who came againſt him, he would have deſired the Aſſiſtance of his Neighbour, Sr. Peter Audley, and the Lord de la Bret, who could well have ſpared him 400 Fighting Men; if they had not come to his Aid in Perſon. Upon the Firſt certain knowledge of his Ene-

Enemies, and of the way they took, he gather'd his Men together without the Town of Nogent ſur Seyne, and took the height of a little Hill among the Vines; and ſet his Archers ready before him. When the French Men of Arms came up in ſight of him, they ranged themſelves in Three Battails: The firſt was led by the Biſhop of Troye, and the Lord Broquart of Feneſtrages, the Second by the Lord John of Châlons, and another good Captain, the Third by the Earl of Vaudemont, and the Lord Joinville; beſides a Fourth Battail of 900 Foot, which was not yet come up. The mean while Sr. Euſtace ſpake aloud to his Men, "Gentlemen, let us Fight with a "good Courage, for if this day be ours, we ſhall be Lords of all Champaigne, which "was once an Earldom. And I hope this day by your Valiant Aſſiſtance to do ſuch a "piece of Service for the King of England, whom I account the Rightfull King of "France, that he will beſtow this Earldom upon Me: And you ſhall all be the bet-"ter for my Advancement. Then he called unto him certain Young Gentlemen, as the Couragious Manny (who being his Couſin, and Nephew to the Lord Walter Manny, was conſtantly Honoured with the Epithet Couragious) John de Paris, and Martin of Spain, with ſome others, whom then, and there he Knighted: And all his Men being placed on Foot in a ſtrong Battail (his Archers a little forward on the left hand) he himſelf ſtood in the Front of his Men of Arms, his Standard waving before him, which was Ermin, three Hameds Gules.

AN. DOM. 1359. AN. REGNI Angliæ XXXIII. Franciæ XX.

When [r] Sr. Broquart of Feneſtrages, who was both very expert and couragious, ſaw, that Sr. Euſtace deſigned not to come down to him; and that he had wiſely placed his Archers to gall them on the right ſide, where they had not their Shields, he ſaid aloud, "Let us firſt of all fall on, whatever happens, changing our Shields to the Spear Hand, "till we have paſt the Archers. And in this manner his Battail conſiſting of 400 Men of Arms, marched up towards the Engliſh. They pretty well eſcaped the Archers, by that ſudden Device, but Sr. Euſtace received them ſo ſharply, that at the firſt Brunt he ſlew of them more than Threeſcore, and had well-nigh totally diſcomfited the whole Body, when of a ſudden the ſecond freſh Battail, of equal Number with the former, came on with great Reſolution; and at the ſame time the third Battail came on a Wing at their Left hand, both a Defence and Comfort to the other two. The French were almoſt Four to One, viz. 1200 Spears againſt 400, and 900 Foot againſt 200; but however the Engliſh played their Part gallantly, and Sr. Euſtace preſently with his own hands ſlew four of the moſt Hardy among his Enemies. When Sr. Broquart beheld this his Proweſs, he ſtrack at his Vizor over other Mens heads, till he beat out three of his Teeth; but Sr. Euſtace left not off fighting for the pain, he then began to make his Enemies feel more ſevere effects of his Anger. And ſtill the Engliſh were ſo united in a cloſe Phalanx, that the French could as yet make no Impreſſion upon them; and the Archers of England ſhot ſo thick on the Enemies left Flank, that they durſt not approach to break them. Then the French Men of Arms began to wheel about to the Left, and as they went the Engliſh Battail faced them without once breaking their Order: For all the File-leaders and Bringers-up were the Choiceſt Men in Front, Flank and Reer. But at that inſtant the 900 French Infantry came into the Field well covered with broad Targets, who marching directly againſt the Archers, wholly brake their Array, for their Shot gave them but little trouble, they were ſo well protected with the mutual Defence of their Shields. When thus the Archers were broken, the ſecond Battail of the French Men of Arms rode in among them, and took or ſlew moſt of them, but a very few eſcaped. After which they went againſt the Engliſh Valets, and won all the Horſes, except thoſe which the Valets carried away upon the Spur. The mean while the two remaining Battails of Men of Arms entertained the Engliſh on one ſide, and the Fourth Battail of Footmen (after they had beaten the Archers) on the other ſide; ſo that at laſt all their Array was broken, and Sr. Euſtace his Standard beaten down and torn in pieces, and moſt of his Men taken or ſlain. The Lord Euſtace himſelf fell into the hands of a worthy Gentleman called Sr. Henry de Quingey a Burgundian, who had much ado to ſave his Life; for the Commons of Troye would fain have had him ſacrificed, becauſe of the terrible Havock he had made among them in the Country of Champaigne. With him were taken alive Sr. John of Paris and Sr. Martin of Spain, with many other Knights and Eſquires; and thoſe that eſcaped gat into the Fortreſs of Nogent, but they were not many, the greater Part not being able to quit the Field in any time, becauſe their Horſes were all taken. The Couragious Manny was left for dead among others in the Field, but a while after the Battle, when the Enemy was marched off, thô grievouſly wounded, and almoſt exhauſted for want of Blood, he chanced to open his Eyes, and then being ſomething re-

[r] Froiſ. c. 199. &c.

viv'd

An. Dom. 1359. An. Regni Angliæ XXXIII. Franciæ XX.

viv'd with the fresh Air, he lifted up his Head a little, but saw nothing about him except Dead Men lying on the Ground. By and by he enforced himself so far, as to rise as well as he could half way, and so sat down a while and look'd about, and found he was not far from the Castle of Nogent which was an English Garrison. Hereupon he never left creeping by little and little, till at last with much difficulty, and much danger of Relapsing he came to the Foot of the Tower: Where making signs to them that look'd down, that he was a Friend, he was received into the Fortress, and had his Wounds presently dressed, and carried himself so regularly and temperately, that within a few Weeks he was perfectly healed. This Battle was thus fought [t] in the Year of our Lord MCCCLIX, on the Vigil of St. John Baptist, or the twenty third of June.

[t] Froiss. ibid.

VII. After this Discomfiture of the Englishmen near Nogent sur Seyne, the French Lords and Men of Arms return'd to the City of Troye with all their Booty; but they durst not bring thither any of their Prisoners for fear of the Common People, who sought to kill them; wherefore they sent them to be kept in other French Garrisons. But when Sr. Eustace Dambreticourts Men, whom he had left in the Garrison of Pougny, heard of this their Loss, they presently trussed up Bag and Baggage, and marched off into better Quarters; for they were not enough to maintain the Place. The same did those who held other Fortresses, which depended on the Lord Eustace: For they greatly doubted the Bishop of Troye, and the Lord of Fenestrages: But Sr. Peter Audley, thô he had lost a good Neighbour of Sr. Eustace, held his Garrison still at Beaufort, Sr. John Segar at Nogent, and the Lord de la Brett at Gye upon the Seyne. About that time some of Sr. Peter Audley's Men rode forth and took a Neighbouring Town called Rosnay, and plunder'd it. Here [t] while the Curate was at Mass, an English Esquire is said to have gone into the Church, and to have taken the Chalice, wherein the Priest should have consecrated, from the Altar: Which Wine he poured out on the ground; and being therefore with much Christian Gravity blamed by the Priest, he struck him over the Face with his Gauntlet, that the Blood gush'd out upon the Altar; and so went his way with the Chalice and Patine along with him. It is affirmed (and I dare not omit so memorable an Instance of God's Judgments, thô it displease never so many) that this same Esquire being presently after mounted in the Field, his Horse began suddenly to turn about, and flounce, and curvet so fiercely, that none durst come near him: Till at last he and his sacrilegious Master fell both together Dead on the ground, and soon after they crumbled away to Powder. Whereupon all the other Souldiers, that were eye-witnesses of this dreadfull Judgment, were so terrified, that they vow'd never more to violate any Church or Holy Place while they lived.

[t] Froiss. c. 200.

VIII. In these days, as if it pleased Almighty God to afford some short Breathing to the afflicted Realm of France, before King Edward came over to add to her Afflictions, the greater part of these licentious Plunderers of a sudden fell to decay, and declin'd so fast that it was miraculous. And first [u] in the strong Castle of le Herelle within four Leagues from Amiens, the Lord John of Picquigny, who had been so perfidious to his Lord and Master the French King, was now in God's just Judgment repaid by his own Servant, his Chamberlain, by whom, as was said, he was strangled in the Night, together with Lucas de Bequesy one of his chief Counsellors; whereupon the terrour of that Garrison was much diminished. Those that were in Mauconsell, thrô meer want of Provision, were enforced to sell their Fortress to the People of Noyon for 12000 [x] Moutons of Gold, and licence to march off with their Arms, Bag and Baggage. The Noyonnois were glad to be rid of them at any Rate, and upon their Departure rased the Castle to the ground, lest it should again fall into the hands of any such ill Neighbours: But of the Garrison some went to Creil, others to Clermont, to Veilly, Pierpont, Roucy or Sissonne, as they thought best. But Sr. John Segar had not so good Fortune in selling his Fortress of Nogent to the Bishop of Troye: Thô the Bishop gave him a Bond for the Payment of such a Summ of Florens, and his safe Conduct to come and receive it. Sr. John trusting to the Conduct went to the City of Troye, and alighted at the Bishops Palace, who desired him to stay three or four days, promising his Money by that time; and to this Sr. John agreed in Confidence of the Bishops Protection. But when it was known among the Rabble, that the Captain of the Garrison of Nogent, who had done them so much Mischief, was come now to receive more of their Money, for selling what he had before stole from them, they said among themselves, "What means our Bishop to trifle and mock us thus, since he entertains in his House the most notorious Robber and Plunderer in all France, and would [u] Froiss. c. 200.

[x] Cotgrave dicit hoc Numisma non factum ante an. Dom. 1371. sed errat, ut ex Froiss. & aliis.

"would have us supply him with our Money? Nay rather, now we have him here, let "us make him pay dearly for what he has already forced from us. To this Resolution all the Common People agreed; for Interest and Revenge together are too great Incentives to be resisted by any, but those whose Reason is well grounded, and to whom Justice and Natural Honour are not indifferent. Presently some flew to the Gates of the Town, that he should not escape them, and others to the Number of about 6000 went armed to the Bishops Palace to kill him. When the Bishop heard the Reason of this Uproar, he said, "Certainly Friends, Sr. John is come hither under my safe Con- "duct, and you all know the Terms of the Treaty and Bargain made between us, for "'twas not done without your Consent. Why will ye now retract what you have en- "gaged, and desire to prove both Cruel and Perfidious, as you must needs be, if you "do any harm unto this Man. Thus the Bishop began to argue, but Reason is seldom heard by an enraged Multitude; wherefore let him say what he would, they rushed by him into the Hall by force, and thence into several Apartments, and sought so narrowly, that at last they found him, and immediately cut him all to pieces. And thus ended Sr. John Segar, a Man to be commended for his Valour, had he taken care to have employ'd it on just and lawfull Occasions only: But Vertues ill used prove Vices; and therefore, thô he was an Englishman, we allow him no Rank among the truly Honourable.

AN. DOM. 1359. An. Regni Angliæ XXXIII. Franciæ XX.

About the [y] midst of August the Archbishop of Rheims, with the Help of the Parisians and others of the Vicinage, Knights and Esquires from Rhetel, Laon and other Places, went and laid Siege to the Castle of Roucy, which having held out five Weeks, was then by the Besieged yielded up, on Condition they might have their Lives and Goods saved, and Liberty to go whither they would: Of all which they had Letters Patents sealed by the Archbishop, and the Earls of Porcien and of Brayne. But for all that, when they were without the Castle, the Common People fell upon them, and maugre all the Lords and Captains could do, slew most of them. They had much ado to save the Captain Hanekin Francois, who perhaps deserved that favour least of any, if we consider the Barbarous Cruelties wherewith he had been delighted: But however the Earl of Roucy now at last in this manner recover'd his Castle.

[y] Froiss. c. 201. fol. 108.

IX. After [z] the Taking of Roucy Sr. Peter Audley fell sick, and died in his Bed within the Castle of Beaufort; for whom all the Garrisons of the Companions in those Parts were extreamly sorry. At last the Englishmen and Almains thereabouts (since now they made War in the King of England's Name) thought no Man fitter to be their Captain than the Lord Eustace Dambreticourt, who was then perfectly healed of his Wounds, but was still a Prisoner. Then they send an Herald, called Faulcon, to the Earl of Vaudemont, and to Sr. Henry de Quingey, who had taken him in the Battle of Nogent, to treat about his Redemption. His Ransom was set at 22000 Franks, and yet the English Garrisons in Champaigne made a Purse, and paid it down for him gladly, not doubting but by his Conduct to win ten times as much in a short time. So Sr. Eustace was set at Liberty, and had restored unto him again his War-Horse and his Gelding, that were taken with him at the Battle of Nogent, and which he valued next his own Liberty; because they were sent him from that Fair Nun, the young Lady Elizabeth Countess Dowager of Kent in England. When the English had Sr. Eustace among them, they made him their Chief Captain; and all Men of War drew to him, for the Renown which he had purchased in the Field. And he soon after to give them an Hansell of his Valour, about the time that King Edward of England besieged Rheims, fell into the Country of Rhetelois, where none of the Companions had been before, and surprized the good Town of Attigny standing on the River Aisne, where he found an hundred Pipes of good Wine of Champaigne, most whereof he sent as a Present to the King his Master, as we shall shew hereafter: And here he made his chief Garrison, from whence he overran all the Country about Rheims; and spoiled Espernay, Damery, and the good Town of Vertus, where they found great Riches, and made another Garrison. The Garrison of Vertus overran all the Country about the River Marne, up as far as la Fert Millon, and that of Attigny ran dayly to Mezieres on the Meuse, to Donchery and other good Towns thereabout.

[z] Froiss. c. 202. &c.

Now the Lord Broquart of Fenestrages, who had won the Battle of Nogent against Sr. Eustace Dambreticourt, and by that, and other Successes prov'd not a little instrumental in ridding Champaigne of those Garrisons of the Companions, was but ill requited by the Duke of Normandy for all his Services, there being still due unto him 30000 Franks. Frequently by his Messengers he called upon the Duke for this Money, but could never get any agreeable Answer, for they always return'd without the Money or

An. Dom. 1359. An. Regni Angliæ XXXIII. Franciæ XX.

Bills of Receipt either. Hereupon the Lord Broquart being juſtly provoked, ſent his Defiance to the Duke and to the whole Realm of France; and preſently enter'd a good Town called Bar ſur Seyne, containing above 900 Houſes, all which having plunder'd and burnt, becauſe he could not take the Caſtle, he carried off all his Prey and Priſoners to his own Garriſon. And beſides this, he left not till he had done more Miſchief in Champaigne, than either the Engliſh or the Navarrois had done: And after all that, the Duke was fain to agree with him, and pay him much more than he had at firſt demanded. Whereupon he went into his Country of Lorrain, leaving behind him a ſevere Memento for Princes to be juſt to their Mercenaries, and not to provoke them when they have no power to reſtrain them.

[a] Froiſ. c. 203. Walſing. hiſt. p. 166.

X. In theſe days [a] Sr. Robert Knolles of England, who by his great Valour and Fortune in the Wars, aroſe from a ſmall beginning to vaſt Wealth and Power, made an Expedition from the Marches of Bretagne with a ſmall Army of 3000 Men, and rode along by the River Loire, till he came into Berry; where he paſſed on, burning, deſtroying, and ravaging the Country. Of his Acts in Bretagne, together with the Lord James Pipe, Sr. Otho Holland and Sr. Thomas Fowkes, we ſhall here forbear to ſay any thing; becauſe ſuch a Diſcourſe would be now unſeaſonable; wherefore we refer the Reader to the [b] Authors in the Margin, and only for this time ſhall ſhew, how he proceeded in this his Expedition.

[b] Fabian p. 236. & Knighton p. 2619.

[c] Froiſ. c. 203.

It is thought, [c] he deſign'd to march thrô Auvergne, and ſo to viſit the Pope and his Cardinals at Avignon, and to finger ſome of their Florens, as Arnold Cervoles, the Arch-Prieſt, had already done. And ſurely he made great Havock, whereever he went, deſtroying Towns, Caſtles, and Cities, in ſuch manner and number, that long [d] after in Memory of him, the ſharp points, and gable ends of overthrown Houſes, Chappels and Minſters, were called Knolles his Miters. Before his Paſſage into Berry [e] he burnt and plunder'd the Suburbs of Orleans on the Loire, none daring to come forth of the City againſt him, his Name was ſo dreadfull at that time. And before that, when he took the Town of Ancenis in the Marches of Bretagne, the Inhabitants were ſo ſurpriſed at the terrour of his Name, that many of them leaped into the Loire and were drown'd, and not a few brake their Necks from the Walls for fear; ſo that being at laſt come within 12 Leagues of Avignon, the Pope and the Cardinals were in a wonderfull Conſternation for doubt of him; and ſome Clergy-men made theſe Rhymes of him, [d] Weevers Fun. Monum. p. 436. & Lamb. Peram.

[e] Knighton p. 2619. &c.

Roberte Knollis, per te ſit Francus mollis;
Ipſius tollis prædas, dans vulnera Collis.

Sr. Robert Knolls, All France controls;
He takes their Prey, And them doth ſlay.

But as he was approaching towards the Court of Rome, he heard that the French Lords were making themſelves ſtrong to encounter him about Clermont in Baſſe Auvergne; wherefore he alter'd his Reſolution of Viſiting Avignon, and turn'd back with a Deſign to look upon his Enemies, till being within one Days journey of them, he [f] took the Advantage of an Hill and fortified himſelf there, while his Spies rode forth to diſcover the French Army. In the Evening they brought back Word, that their Numbers were more than Treble to thoſe of Sr. Robert's, and that they were all well Armed, and ſeem'd to be order'd diſcreetly.

[f] Froiſ. c. 204.

The next Day the French Army came and encamped on a Mountain near the Engliſh, ſo that each might ſee the others Fires: And the Morning after they began to draw nearer, till about Noon they came to another Mountain right over againſt Sr. Robert; there being only a low Meadow of about 12 Acres of Land between them. Upon this appearance of the Enemy, the Engliſh preſently made ready their Battails to fight, and ſet their Archers in the hanging of the Hill before them. Againſt them the French diſpoſed themſelves in two great Battalia's, each of them containing 5000 Men; the Firſt was lead by Berault or Beroaldus, the young Earl of Clermont, Dauphin of Auvergne, who having juſt then received the Order of Knighthood from his Uncle the Lord Robert Dauphin, firſt that Day reared his Banner, which was Auvergne and Martegues Quarter'd: Beſides this young Earl and his Uncle, there was in this Battail the Lord of Montaign en Combraille, the Lord of Taraſcon, the Lord of Rochefort, the Lord of Sorigniac, the Lord Godfrey of Boulogne, and divers other Knights and Eſquires of Limoſin, Quercy, Auvergne and Rovergue. The ſecond Battail had theſe Prime Leaders, the Earl of Foreſtes, the Lord John of Boulogne, Earl of Auvergne, the Lord D' Archy and his Sons, the Lord Dachon, the Lord Duzes, and Sr. Reginald de Foreſtes Brother to the Earl, with many other Gentlemen; all who were very deſirous to come come to a Battle. As on the other side Sr. Robert Knolles and his Men seem'd no less willing to receive them; thô the French amounted to 3000 Men of Arms, besides 7000 Others, and Sr. Roberts Company made not up full 3000 Men in all. An. Dom. 1359. An. Regni Angliæ XXXIII. Franciæ XX.

In this Order both Armies stood facing each other, till 'twas almost Night, without any Proffer on either hand to come nearer, saving that certain young Gentlemen descended down on each side to skirmish in the Meadow, and to break a Lance or so for Love of their Ladies; and whosoever wan his Antagonist had him for his Prisoner. In the close of the Evening they both drew to their Lodgings, having set a good Watch for fear of Surprise: But the French Lords held a Council of War, where 'twas resolved, that at the hour of Midnight they should all march down the Mountain on that side, which was fartheſt from the English, and fetching a course of two Leagues, come up at the back of the Mountain where the Enemy lay, and so give them a Camisade: For on that side, the Hill was much more easie of Ascent, and they supposed to come upon them so early, as to find them unready and out of order.

However this Device was not carried on so privately, but that Sr. Robert had knowledge thereof by an English Prisoner, who stole out of their Camp and brought him word of it: Then Sr. Robert advis'd with his most experienced Captains, who thought, all things consider'd, that it was not best to abide the Power of the Frenchmen at that time; especially because they were so far outnumbred, and in an Enemies Country. So immediately they trussed up their Baggage, and by help of Guides, marched away with great silence. At Midnight the French, pursuant to their late Order, ranged themselves in Battle Array, and so fetch'd a Course about to come upon the Backs of the English; and by that time it was Day light they were at the Mountain, where contrary to their expectation they found no Body. With that they sent certain Horsemen to go up to the top, and look about and see, if they could view any thing of them; and after a while these Men came down and told them, "how they saw them marching towards "Esgurande and Milvaches, and believ'd they design'd for Limoges. The French Lords at this News being out of hopes to overtake them, brake up their Expedition for that time, and disbanded their Men: Soon after which there was a Match made up between the young Lord Beroald Dauphin of Avergne, and the Earl of Foresles his Daughter, which he had by the Duke of Bourbons Sister.

After this Expedition Sr. Robert Knolles, who by these unlawfull Wars in time of Truce was [g] risen to the Wealth of an Earl, began to reflect upon himself, how heinously he had offended the King his Master, and thereby was become outlaw'd; and now that the Wars were open again between England and France, being very desirous to recover his Royal Favour, that so he might be admitted to bear Arms upon a more just Account, he began to make Friends in the Court of England, and sent great Presents to the Prince of Wales, and other the Kings Sons, earnestly entreating them to move the King in his Behalf; and unto the King himself he [h] absolutely offer'd "whatsoever he had any way acquired in France, whether Castles, Towns, Goods or Chattels, or any other thing, he willingly submitted them all to his Liege Lord to dispose "of at his Pleasure, only desiring his full and gracious Pardon; and if it should please "his Majesty to permit him to hold any of his Acquests, as a Royal Demesne, and "only Durante Bene placito, he should think himself happy in being thereby somewhat enabled to serve his Majesty according to his Hearts Desire. This handsome and humble Submission extreamly pleased the King and his Sons, and so he not only obtain'd a full Pardon, but also a Grant of many Castles and Lordships in Consideration of his Abilities for the War, and because he had so entirely put himself upon the Kings Goodness. Yet that same Year he fell into the hands of his Enemies about Michaelmas, but as they were leading him away, he had the good Fortune to be rescued by his old Friend Hanekin Francois, who by chance rode that way; and not only saved his Friend so opportunely, but overcame his Enemies, of whom he took Fourty good Prisoners.

[g] Walsingh. hist. p. 166.

[h] Knighton p. 2619. n. 65. &c.

XI. This mean [i] while the Commons of Flanders being wrought upon by the French King, and their own Earl Lewis, rebelled against King Edward, whom before they had acknowledged for their Supream Lord, and drove away the Merchants of England into Brabant, and refused to admit the Easterlings to traffick within their Precincts; and all those Citizens of Bruges, whom they found firm to the English, they either banish'd or imprison'd; not a few of them being beheaded at the Command of the Earl of Flanders. Whereupon King Edward issued out his Royal Proclamation, commanding that all Flemmings, of what Condition soever, except only the Kings Farmers, should be ready to take the Sea, so as to void the Realm by the Feast of [k] St. Margaret then next ensuing, suing, on pain of Death without any more Delay. And becauſe the War was now open between England and France, the Frenchmen were alſo envolved in the ſame Penalty with the Flemmings at the ſame time.

[i] Knighton p. 2620. n. 56.

[k] 20 July.

An. Dom. 1359. An. Regni Angliæ XXXIII. Franciæ XX.

XII. Now was King Edward buſie in providing for the War, which he deſign'd in his own Perſon to carry beyond the Seas, and had already ſent his peremptory Command over all the Realm to his Commiſſioners of Array in all Counties, toward the Equipping of a Royal Army worthy to attend him, who reſolved now wholly to reduce France to his Devotion, or to die in the undertaking. Nor yet was this Magnificent Prince ſo abſolutely taken up with this grand Affair, but that his Active Soul was as much at liberty as in the moſt Halcyon Days of Peace: For in the [l] Rogation Week, being the latter end of May, a ſolemn Juſt was proclaimed to be held at London for [m] three Days together, in which Proclamation John [n] Luffin Mayor, John Barnes and John [o] Bury, the Sheriffs, with their Brethren, the other one and twenty Aldermen as Challengers, undertook to hold the Field againſt all Comers. But at the time appointed, in their Name and in their Stead came the King privily with his four Sons, Edward the Black-Prince, Lionel, John and Edmund, which latter was then in the 18 Year of his Age, together with 19 other Great Barons of England: The King repreſented the Mayor, the Black-Prince bore the Perſon of the Senior Sheriff John Barnes, Prince Lionel acted the Part of John Bury the other Sheriff, and ſo the whole Corporation of London was perſonated by the Royal Family and Nobility of England, in Preſence of the Kings of France and of Scotland, and an infinite number of Spectators. They were not now armed as Princes or Barons; but the King and his Sons, and the reſt of the Challengers bare the City Arms both on their Shields and Surcoats, and held the Field the whole three Days with great Honour, eſpecially to the ſatisfaction of the Citizens, while they took them really for what they ſeem'd; but they were extreamly raviſh'd with joy, when they underſtood that the King himſelf and his Children had done them the Honour to fight ſo gallantly under their Cogniſance.

[l] Paſcha 21 April. Lit. Dom. F.

[m] M.S vet. Ang. in Bibl. C.C.C. Cantab. *c.*230. Holinſh. Engl. Chron. p. 963. Walſingh. hiſt. p. 165. &c. The Names of the Mayor and Sheriffs vid. apud Fabian p. 236. Stows Survey of London p. 553. & Sr. Rich. Baker p. 147.

[n] Aliàs Louſkin.

[o] Aliàs Buris.

XIII. The Sunday before Rogation-Sunday, being the [p] 14 of the Kalends of June, that is, after our Account the 19 of May, the Lord John Plantagenet (from the Place of his Birth ſirnamed alſo of Gaunt) who was the Kings Third Son, and Earl of Richmond, being now in the 19 Year of his Age, took to Wife by Vertue of a ſpecial Diſpenſation from the Court of Rome, the Lady Blanch his Couſin, Second Daughter to Henry Plantagenet Duke of Lancaſter: The Solemnity of the Marriage being kept at Reading in Barkſhire about 16 Miles from Windſor, a Week before the Tourneament, which we have juſt now mentioned.

[p] *Walſing. hiſt. p.*166. & M.S. vet. Ang. in Bib. C.C.C. Cantabr. *c.*230. &c.

XIV. About this time King Edward and the Prince his Son, in great Devotion viſited moſt of the Shrines, and other Holy Places in England, offering up their Prayers every where for a Bleſſing upon their Arms, or for an happy, laſting and honourable Peace. And one day among the reſt, while the King was in the famous Abbey of Weſtminſter, viſiting the Ancient Monuments of his Predeceſſors, he [q] choſe a Place for his own Sepulture and Burial in the Chappel of St. Edward hard by the Shrine of that Royal Saint and Confeſſor: Commanding his Son the Prince, and his other Children upon his Bleſſing, when it ſhould pleaſe God to call him out of this tranſitory Life to a better, to lay his Body there and no where elſe. And thô the Prince his Son died before him, yet we find the reſt of his Sons were not forgetfull of this his Fatherly Injunction; for there he lies buried to this Day, as we ſhall ſhew more particularly, when we come to treat of his Death, which happen'd 18 Years after.

[q] M. S. Vet. Angl. in Bibl. C.C.C. Cantab. *c.*230.

CHAPTER the Fifth.

The CONTENTS.

I. The Foreign Succours being come to Calais, King Edward ſends thither the Duke of Lancaſter, who leads them forth, thereby to eaſe the Town. II. King Edward follows the Duke with an Army of an 100000 Men. III. The Names of his Chief Leaders, with the Numbers and Order of the Army; the King marches from Calais toward Rheims in Champaigne. IV. An Adventure between the Lord Galahaut de Ribemont bemont, French, and the Lord Reginald van Boulant, Engliſh. V. The Lord Bartholomew Burwaſh takes the French Maſter of the Croſsbows: King Edward lays Siege to Rheims. VI. The Lord Euſtace Dambreticourt ſends Relief to the Engliſh Army: Cernoy en Dormois, and other Places taken by Detachments from the Camp before Rheims. VII. The King of Navarre breaks with the Dauphin again: The Lord of Gomegines taken Priſoner by the French. VIII. The Lord Bartholomew Burwaſh takes Cormicy and raſes it.

AN. DOM. 1359. An. Regni Angliæ XXXIII. Franciæ XX.

I. ALL this while the whole Realm of England, and the Dominion of Ireland were hot in Preparations for War; and King Edwards Friends wherever they were, reſolved at this time to embark with him in this bold Enterpriſe; eſpecially ſuch Lords and Knights of the Empire, as had ſerved him before. Theſe Men [a] made great Proviſion of Horſe and Arms, and other Neceſſaries according to their Degrees and Qualities; and when they were ready, they all came together by the way of Flanders to Calais, and there waited till the King ſhould come from England: But he did not come thither ſo ſoon as was expected, becauſe he had ſo many weighty Matters to ſettle, before he could leave his Kingdom. During therefore this time of their Stay, many more Strangers flocking thither, there was hardly room in Calais for Lodging, or Stabling for the Horſes; and beſides Bread and Wine, Hay, Oats, and other Proviſion was very ſcarce, ſo that they could hardly be got for Gold or Silver; wherefore there [b] were ſome inſolencies committed by the Strangers, as is uſual in ſuch caſes: But ſtill the general Comfort was, King Edward would preſently come thither, and the News ran always that he would be there the next Week. And yet if he had been there, all things would have been much dearer, and Lodgings harder to be got; onely indeed then 'twas expected, that the King would draw off preſently into the Field. Thus the Lords of Almain, Bohemia, Brabant, Flanders and Hainalt, tarried there at their great Charges from the beginning of Auguſt till October; ſo that many of them were fain to ſell the beſt part of their Jewels, and ſome had ſpent almoſt all they had. Whereupon ſome Quarrels aroſe between them and their Hoſts, and ſome Miſchief was done, and more had been, if the King, finding now that his Affairs would not be ripe till after the time he had appointed (which was the 8 of September) had not ſent over the Great Henry Duke of Lancaſter with 400 Men of Arms and 2000 Archers, to lead theſe Strangers forth, leſt they ſhould eat up the Town of Calais: For he had heard, [c] that many more were come, than either he expected or deſired, hoping belike to enrich themſelves by the Spoils of France. The Strangers received the Duke upon his Arrival with great Joy, and asked him News about the King, and when he would follow; and complain'd a little how they had been diſappointed. The Duke excuſed unto them the Kings Delay, by telling them that it was not poſſible ſo ſoon to furniſh ſo great an Army as the King deſign'd to bring over, with all manner of Neceſſaries for ſo long a time, as he intended to ſtay in thoſe Parts. "And ſays he, ſurely Gentlemen, to lie here idly till then is neither "honourable nor profitable. I am therefore reſolved to ride forth into France, and "do ſomething the mean while: Only I deſire of you ſo much Money as will pay off "your ſeveral reckonings here at your Quarters, and I'll furniſh you with Proviſion of "Victuals to carry on your Sumpters. Theſe Gentlemen were aſham'd to deny the Duke, what it ſeems they had deny'd their Landlords, and ſo they all ſatisfied their Hoſts punctually, and new ſhod their Horſes, and truſſed up their Baggage, and rode forth with the Duke, and went to St. Omers, being in all 2000 Men of Arms, beſides Archers and other Footmen. St. Omers they paſſed by without Medling, and ſo they went to Bethune, which they left likewiſe, and rode forward about 6 French Leagues further, till they came to Mount St. Eloy, a large and rich Abbey within two Leagues of Arras. Here they tarried four Days to refreſh themſelves and their horſes, for they found Proviſion enough in the Abby, and then they marched about ten Leagues further, and paſſed the River [d] Somme, and began to aſſault Bray ſur Somme a conſiderable Town in Picardy, where the Duke cauſed his Men to wade up to the ſhoulders that they might get to the Walls, and ſo a fierce Attack was made, in which Sr. Thomas Murrers an Engliſh Banneret was unfortunately ſlain with a ſhot from the Walls, and ſeveral others wounded: For the Inhabitants made a good Defence by the Aſſiſtance of the Earl of St. Paul, and the Lord of Rayneval and other Gentlemen, who a little before came into the Town at a back-Gate with 200 Spears. The Duke of Lancaſter therefore failing here, went along by the River Somme in great want both of Bread and Wine, till he came to Ceresy, a Town on the ſame River between Bray and Corbie,

[a] Froiſ. c. 205. fol. 99.

[b] Knighton p. 2621. n. 10.

[c] Froiſ. ibid.

[d] Leland Collect. Vol. 1. p. 824. & Dugd. Bar. 1 Vol. p. 788. Froiſ. ibid. & Knighton p. 2621. n. 40. &c.

An. Dom. 1359. An. Regni Angliæ XXXIII. Franciæ XX.

bie, where he found good Plenty of both, and having ſupplied himſelf therewith, he repaſſed the River in the ſame place (for the Bridge was not broken) and went to Chipilly, where he tarried to refreſh his Men the remainder of that Day and all Night, it being then the Feaſt of All-Saints. On that very Day he had notice, that King Edward was arrived with all his Forces at Calais, and commanded him on ſight of his Letters to draw thitherward to meet him.

II. Now [c] before the King had left England, he gave command, that all the French Priſoners ſhould be ſeparately put in divers ſtrong Caſtles, and that the French King himſelf, and his Son Philip, ſhould be ſurely kept in the Tower of London, without any ſuch liberty, as he had before. And the Lord Thomas [f] of Woodſtock, the Kings Youngeſt Son, being then ſcarce Five Years of Age, was now conſtituted his Fathers Lieutenant and Lord Warden of England, during this his intended Abſence in France; ſeveral of the moſt Politick Pre'ates and Counſellours of the Realm being appointed to act under his Authority. There were alſo ordained certain Lords, Knights, and Eſquires, with their ſeveral Retinues, to look to the Defence of the Realm, and to be ſtill ready to defend the Marches, Caſtles, and Havens of the ſame. And things being thus ſettled at home, the King himſelf, with his Four Sons, rode forth to Sandwich in Kent, where he intended to go on board with all his Army. The Kings Summons at this time had been particularly ſevere; for except ſuch and ſuch, none were permitted to ſtay at home [g] between the Age of Twenty and Threeſcore: So that after many Thouſands had been turned back for ſome fault or other, there remain'd at leaſt an [h] 100000 of the moſt choſen Men, and the beſt Arm'd throughout the whole Iſle of Brittain. And to receive them and their Proviſion there lay ready rigged at Sandwich 1123 Sail of Ships, the latter [i] 123 Sail being thoſe very Ships which had already convey'd the Duke of Lancaſter to Calais, with an infinite Quantity of Proviſion to be laid up in Magazines againſt the Kings coming.

[c] Froiſ. c. 206.

[f] Walſing. hiſt. p. 166. & Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 169.

[g] Knighton p. 2623. n. 10.

[h] Mezeray & Matt. Villani l. 9. c. 53. p. 539. & Walſing. hiſt. p. 166.

[i] Matt. Villani l. 9. c. 53 p. 539.

King Edward therefore being come to Sandwich, and having ſeen all his Men Muſter'd between Sandwich and Dover, declared aloud to all his Chief Captains, and cauſed to be proclaim'd thrô the Army, [k] "That it was his Reſolution to go over "into France, and never to return again alive, till either by War, he ſhould have "ended the Controverſie, or elſe obtain a Peace both to his Honour and Advan"tage; otherwiſe, that he would looſe his Life in the Attempt. And therefore (ſaid "he) if there are any among You, that is not very willing to partake with me in what"ever God ſhall pleaſe to ſend us, Honour, or Diſhonour; Peace, or War; Life, or "Death; that Man hath now my Free leave to depart. But of this ſort of Men there was not one found in this Army: For they all anſwer'd, "They were reſolved to live "and die with their Warlike King. Hereupon the King took ſhipping at Sandwich in the Dertmouth the 28 day of October, being the Feſtival of St. Simon and Jude, and a Monday, inter auroram diei & ortum Solis; as the Words of the Record expreſs, and landed that Evening at Calais, [l] about the time of Evening Prayer. Being thus happily arrived, order was given to empty the Ships of all the Horſes, Armour, and Proviſion; and the next day the King held a Council of War, to conſider what Courſe to take. Some were for adviſing him firſt to invade Flanders, and Revenge all the Injurious and Unfaithfull dealing of the Flemmings: But He, who came over with a Deſign to reduce France to equal terms, or to waſte it with Fire and Sword, rejected that Counſel, as not ſo convenient for the preſent, and commanded, that all Men ſhould be ready within five days, ſaying, "that he intended to ride after his Couſin, the Duke of Lancaſter. So early in a Morning [m] on the Fourth of November, being a Monday, he left Calais with all his Men and Carriages, in the beſt Order, that ever was us'd by any Army, marching out of a Town. The mean while the Duke of Lancaſter, who according to his Orders was returning toward Calais, being now within four Leagues of that Place, met with ſuch Multitudes of Souldiers, that they ſeem'd to cover the Face of the whole Country; all ſo richly beſeen, with Feathers in their Creſts, their Arms bright and ſhining, and their Banners and Enſigns waving in the Air, that it ſeem'd to him the moſt Delightfull thing in the World, to behold them marching all in Battle Array, fair and ſoftly. When the Duke and the German Lords met the King, he received them very graciouſly, and feaſted them Royally: But after Dinner the Lords Strangers, as Almains, Brabanders, Hainalders, and other Mercenaries, came all together before the King, and told him, "how they had ſpent all their Mo"ney, and pawn'd and ſold all their jewels, and other Goods, except only their "Horſes and Armour: So that little or nothing was left them, wherewithall to do "him any Service, according to the Deſign of their coming; nor yet had they e"nough

[k] M. S. Vet. Angl. in Bibl. C. C. C. Cantabr. c. 230. & cæteri omnes.

[l] Circà horam Veſperarum. Clauſ. 33. Ed. 3. m. 9. Dorſo vid. Aſhmole p. 669.

[m] Froiſ. c. 207. Holinſh p. 964.

"nough left to bear their Charges home into their own Countries, if they ſhould now "go home. Wherefore they humbly entreated his Majeſty, that of his Royal Boun- "ty; he would pleaſe to take their caſe into conſideration. The King told them; "how their Propoſal being unexpected, he could not at that preſent give them a full "and final anſwer, but, ſaid he, Gentlemen, I think you are ſufficiently wearied at "this time; wherefore go and refreſh your ſelves and your Beaſts at Calais for three "or four days, and to night or to morrow, when I have adviſed with my Privy Coun- "cil, I will take Care to ſend You ſuch an anſwer, as may in reaſon content You. With that they took their leave of the King and of the Duke, who now joyn'd him, and ſo rode forward toward Calais; by that time they had ridden about half a League farther, they met with a vaſt Number of Carriages, after which came the Prince of Wales in the Head of his Great Battail, Arm'd moſt gloriouſly at all Points; His ſhield of Arms, which were France and England quarter'd, over all a Labell of Three points Argent, was richly diapred with Gold; the ſame being curiouſly emboſſed and depicted with Embroidery on his Surcoat and the Capariſons of his Horſe, and on his Creſt was a Lion gorged with a Labell, as afore. All his Men likewiſe were gallantly Armed, and for Multitude ſeem'd to overſpread the whole Country. Thus the Black-Prince rode fair and ſoftly, ready ranged in Battle Array, as thô he had been to engage immediately, being ſtill diſtant a League or two after the King his Father (for the Carriages took up the ſpace between) and having a Wing both of Horſe and Foot on each ſide: Which Order the Strangers were extreamly taken with.

AN. DOM. 1359. An. Regni Angliæ XXXIII. Franciæ XX.

But when they had view'd this gallant Appearance, and Reverently ſaluted the Prince and his Lords, and were likewiſe received graciouſly of the Prince, juſt upon their taking leave, they declared alſo unto him their great neceſſity, to which their long ſtay in thoſe parts had reduced them; Deſiring, that his Highneſs would pleaſe to conſider their Condition: And he promiſed to do them what kindneſs he could. Whereupon they all rode on to Calais-ward, and the Prince marched after his Father. Within two days the King ſent three Knights to the Strangers then at Calais with this Meſſage; "That he had not brought with him Treaſure enough to fulfill their "Deſires, and to anſwer his own Deſigns too. But if they would bear him Com- "pany, and partake with him in what ſhould happen at a venture; then if good For- "tune ſhould fall, they ſhould have their proportion, on condition they demanded no "Wages, nor Reparation for any loſs or damage: For (ſaid the Meſſengers) you know "your ſelves, that more than Three Parts in Four of you, came hither of your own "heads only; and the King our Maſter hath brought with him enough of his own "Subjects to ſerve for this Expedition. This anſwer was not over-pleaſing to the Strangers, who had taken much pains, and ſpent their Money, and ſome had engag'd to leave their Horſe and Arms for ſatisfaction in their Quarters. But more than this they could not now obtain of the King; except that he ſent them indeed as much Money, as might ſuffice to carry them home into their own Countries. Yet for all this ſome of thoſe Lords went again to the King to ſerve him on his Conditions: for they thought it diſhonourable to turn home again after ſuch Preparations, without doing any thing.

III. Thus King Edward marched forward with this great Army, conſiſting of above an 120000 Men in all; his Conſtable Roger Lord Mortimer Earl of March, the ſecond of that Name, riding on before him with 500 Men of Arms, and 2000 tall Archers; Then followed the King with 3000 Men of Arms, and 5000 Archers on Horſeback, beſides Welchmen, and others on Foot; after him were 500 luſty Pioneers with Mattocks and Pick-axes to level the ways, and make them fit for the Carriages. Then came all the Carriages conſiſting of [n] 6000 Chariots, Carts, and Waggons; every Cart having to it at leaſt Four good Horſes, brought out of England, to carry Proviſion for the Army, and many other uſefull things, ſome ſuch, as had been ſeldom ſeen before in any Camp, ſuch as Hand-mills to grind their Corn, Moveable Ovens, and Forges, the one to bake their Victuals, and the other to make ſhoes for Horſes, and the like. After all the Carriages, came the Prince of Wales with his Three Brethren, and their ſeveral Retinues, of whom were 2000 Spears, and 4000 Archers on Horſeback; beſides the Infantry, Bill-men, and Bow-men; all ready ranged for Fight: But they marched not above Four Leagues a day, becauſe of their Footmen and Carriages. In this manner it was that they were met by the Duke of Lancaſter, and the Lords Strangers in a fair Plain between Calais and the Abbey of Liques, and immediately, as I ſaid, joyn'd by the Duke and thoſe Germans, and other Strangers, whom the King of England had retain'd. And here I ſhall take leave to preſent unto the [n] Froiſ. c. 216. & Holinſh. p. 965.

An. Dom. 1359. An. Regni Angliæ XXXIII. Franciæ XX.

the Reader the Names of the moſt eminent Leaders in this Army (than which a Fairer never paſſed the Sea out of England, either before or ſince that time) as well ſuch as came over with the King, as thoſe, who went with the Duke of Lancaſter before him. Firſt the moſt Magnificent and Invincible Monarch EDWARD the Third, King of England, and France, and Lord of Ireland; Then his Four Sons, Edward of Woodſtock Prince of Wales, Duke of Cornwall and Earl of Cheſter, Sirnamed the BLACK-PRINCE, Lionel of Antwerp, Earl of Ulſter, and afterwards Duke of Clarence; John of Gaunt, Earl of Richmond, and Edmund of Langley, afterwards Earl of Cambridge and Duke of York; theſe were the Kings Four Sons, the Fifth being a Child was left in England; There was alſo Henry Plantagenet Duke of Lancaſter, the Kings Couſin-German; Roger Lord Mortimer Earl of March, Conſtable of England, Thomas Beauchamp Earl of Warwick, and Robert Hufford Earl of Suffolk, Marſhals of the Hoſt, Ralph Stafford Earl of Stafford, William Montagu Earl of Salisbury, and King of Man, Humphry Bohun Earl of Hereford and Eſſex, and William Bohun his Brother, Earl of Northampton, and John Vere Earl of Oxford, [o] who indeed went not over with the King, by reaſon he had not made his Will; but that being done, he followed him ſoon after. Beſides theſe Princes, Dukes and Earls, there were theſe Lords, that follow, Dr. John Synwell Biſhop of Lincoln, and Dr. Thomas Hatfield Biſhop of Durham; the Lord Henry Piercy and his Eldeſt Son, Sr. Henry, who was afterwards the firſt Earl of Northumberland of that Name, the Lord Ralph Nevill of Raby, the Lord Edward Spencer, Nephew to the late Lord Hugh le Deſpencer, the Grandchild, a moſt Noble and Warlike young Gentleman; the Lord John Chandos, the Lord Walter Manny, the Lord Reginald Cobham, the Lord John Grey of Codonore, the Lord John Moubray, the Lord Roger de la Ware, the Lord Thomas Felton, the Lord John Willoughby, the Lord James Audley, the Lord Ralph Baſſet of Drayton, the Lord John Charleton the Kings Chamberlain, the Lord Bartholomew Burwaſh, the Lord John Fitz-Walter, the Lord Edmund Pierpoint, the Lord John Botetourt, the Lord William Huntingfield, the Lord Robert Morley, the Lord John Touchet, Sr. Richard Pemburge, Sr. Nele Loring, Sr. Stephen Coſſington, Sr. Hugh Haſtings, Sr. William [p] Truſſel, and many others, too Long to Name, beſides the Lords and Gentlemen Strangers, among whom were Sr. Henry Eam of Flanders, with 200 Spears in his Retinue, Sr. Frank van Hall, with as many more; Sr. Reginald Boulant with 60 Spears; beſides 500 Germans under the Marqueſs of Nuys; and others, whoſe Names, I had rather omit, than ſet them down, as I find them, unorthographically.

[o] Dugd. 1. Vol. p. 193. vid. eund. ad ſingulorum nomina in ſuo Baronagio.

[p] Dugd. Warw. p. 538.

The Army rode thrô Artois, paſſing by the City of Arras, and took the ſame way, which the Duke of Lancaſter had gone before: But they found nothing to live on in the plain Country; for what had been left undeſtroy'd, was gather'd into ſtrong Towns. Thô beſides the Continual Depredations made about in the Country by the Men of War, the Earth had lain in a manner untill'd for three Years together: So that if Oats and Wheat had not been brought out of Hainalt and Cambreſis, to ſupply thoſe parts, the People of Artois, Vermandois, Laonnois, and Rhemois had died for Hunger. Nor was King Edward ignorant of all this, before he came out of England; wherefore he made ſuch wonderfull Proviſion of all things neceſſary, except only of Oats, Hay, and Straw, for which he made as good ſhift as he could. But that which made the want of Litter more grievous, was, that ſoon after his coming the Weather was very Rainy, and the Ways began to be deep, which prov'd a great trouble both to Horſe and Man. But becauſe ſuch Matters were not ſtrange in the declining of the Year; the King encouraged himſelf with Patience, reſolving to bear, what he could by no means prevent.

[q] Froiſ. ibid. c. 207.

However the King rode thus by [q] ſhort journeys, till he came into a dryer Country to Bapaume in Artois; about which Place there happen'd an adventure, between a Lord of France, and a German Lord of the Engliſh part, well worthy a particular Relation. Only it is to be premiſed, that all the Towns, Cities, Caſtles, and Paſſages in Picardy and Artois, where the King was ſuſpected to paſs, were well guarded with Souldiers, partly ſuch, as the Dauphin and Parliament had ſent thither, and partly alſo ſuch, as the Great Towns had themſelves hired for their better ſecurity. In the City of Arras was the Earl of St. Paul with 200 Men of Arms; the Conſtable of France was at Amiens; the Lord of Monſault at Corbie, Sr. Edward of Renty, and Sr. Ingram of Heſdin at Bapaume, and Sr. Baldwin Danequin, Maſter of the Croſsbows at St. Quentin; and the like Proviſion was made for other Places: For by this it was generally noiſed about, that King Edward deſign'd to go and lay Siege to Rheims in Champaigne, intending when he had won the Place, there to be [r] anointed with the Holy Oyl, & Crowned King of France.

[r] Mezeray p. 58.

IV. But

IV. But now the Inhabitants of Perone in Vermandois, which lay directly in the King of Englands way, were wholly deſtitute of an able Captain and Commander to defend them, and that City being ſcituate upon the River of Somme, when they underſtood it was King Edwards Cuſtom to march along by Rivers, they expected the Engliſh to be upon them every Day, and were infinitely perplexed on that account. At laſt they bethought themſelves of a Valiant Captain, called Sr. Galahaut de Ribemont, who was now unengaged in the City of Tournay, being a Baron of high Courage and Conduct, and Couſin to the Lord Euſtace Ribemont, who fell in the Battle of Poictiers. To him therefore now they ſend very kind Letters, inviting and requeſting him to come and be their Captain with ſuch a certain Number of Men of Arms, they promiſing to allow him 20 Franks per diem for himſelf and ten for every Knight in his Company; and for every other, one Frank a Day. The Lord Galahaut was a Knight of great Courage and Experience in the Wars, and very deſirous to be employed in any Hazardous Attempt for Glory: Wherefore he accepted the civil Propoſals of his Neighbours of Perone, and ſent them word, that he would not fail to be with them the ſecond Day after. So he rode preſently from Tournay with no more than 30 Spears in his Company, but ſtill as he went on his Number encreaſed: And particularly Sr. Roger of Coulogne, to whom he had ſent to come and joyn him in ſuch a Place, came to him accordingly with 20 Men of Arms more. So that now Sr. Galahaut being fifty Spears ſtrong, beſides others, as he was marching towards Perone, came and took up his Lodgings within two Leagues of the Engliſh Army, in a little Village in the Fields, which was quite void of Inhabitants; for all the People of the Country were fled into ſtrong Holds for fear; and he deſign'd the next morning for Perone, near unto which this little Village ſtood. Now after Supper when they had ſet their Watch, and diſcourſed of ſeveral things relating to the preſent Juncture, the Lord Galahaut ſaid to his chief Captains then in Council with him, "To morrow early we ſhall be at Perone, but yet before we go thither, I would adviſe, "that we ride a little nearer toward our Enemies, for I believe there are thoſe among "them, who to get Honour or Booty, will ride abroad in the Morning; ſo that we "may chance to meet with ſome or other of them, who may help to pay our Shot. To this Advice his Council agreed, and kept it private in their own Breaſts; being all ready for that purpoſe by break of Day with their Horſes ſadled. Then they mounted and rode forth in good Order, leaving the Road to Perone, and coaſting the Woods to ſee if they could find any good Adventure. At laſt they came to a certain Village, where the People had fortified the Church for their Security, and there Sr. Galahaut alighted; for he was ſure to meet with Bread, Wine and other Proviſion in this Place; and thoſe within offer'd him to take what he would, for they knew him to be a Friend. While they tarried here to refreſh themſelves, Sr. Galahaut called two Eſquires unto him, one whereof was named Bridol of Talmond, whom he commanded to take their Horſes and ride forth into the Field and diſcover the Country about, whether they could meet with any thing of Moment, and ſo to come back, and bring him word thither, for he would ſtay there for them.

AN. DOM. 1359. An. Regni Angliæ XXXIII. Franciæ XX.

Now on the Engliſh Part the Lord Reginald of Boulant a German, of the Duke of Lancaſters Retinue, had ridden forth the ſame Morning, and finding no Adventure was now returning to the Army again; at which time he met with theſe two French Eſquires about a League from Sr. Galahaut's Station. The Eſquires at firſt took them to be ſome French Men of Arms, who had laid an Ambuſh thereabouts; but when they perceived them to be Germans, they agreed to pretend to be of their Party; for otherwiſe they could not eſcape them. At this Sr. Reginald of Boulant demanded of them in High Dutch, who they were, and to whom they did belong; to which Eſquire Bridol, who was skill'd in that Tongue, anſwer'd, "Sir, we are Engliſhmen of the Retinue "of the Lord Bartholomew Burwaſh. Why, where is the Lord Bartholomew ſaid Sr. "Reginald? Sir, ſaid the Eſquire, He is now in yonder Village. What means he to "tarry there ſaid the Knight? Sir, ſaid the Eſquire, he expects our Return: For he "ſent us abroad to ſee if we could meet with any Forage hereabouts in the Country. "On my Word ſaid Sr. Reginald, here is none, for I have been abroad all this Morning "and can find nothing: Wherefore go back and bid him come away, that we may "both ride together toward St. Quentin, to ſee if ſo at leaſt we may mend our Mar-"ket. Sir, ſaid Eſquire Bridol, who are you then, that would have our Lords Com-"pany? They call me, ſaid the Knight, Reginald van Boulant, only ſay ſo much to "my Lord Bartholomew, that's enough. With that the two Eſquires returned upon the Spur to the Village to their Maſter, who asked him what Tidings? "Sir, "ſaid they, we have ſeen enough, for in yonder Wood there is the Lord Regi-

An. Dom. 1359. An. Regni Angliæ XXXIII. Franciæ XX.

"nald of Boulant, who hath been riding about this Morning with 30 Spears, and he "desires your Company to ride with him toward St. Quentin. How (said Sr. Gala-"haut) what is that you say? Sr. Reginald de Boulant is a Knight of Germany, and re-"tained under the King of Englands Pay. All that (said the Esquires) we know ve-"ry well; but we pretended to be Englishmen, and told him that you were the Lord "Bartholomew Burwash, whereupon he desired your Company, as we said before. At this Sr. Galahaut studied with himself a little, and then asked Advice of his Friend Sr. Roger of Coulogne and other his Captains, what they would have him to do in this Case. "Sir (said they) since of your own Accord you always sought out for Ad-"ventures, now they fall into your Hands, you may well afford to take them: For by "Right of Arms a Man ought to offend his Enemy when once so declared, either by "Stratagem or open Force, as Opportunity serves best. To this Sr. Galahaut readily a-greed, and presently leap'd on his Courser, and clapt on his Helmet with the Visor down, because his Face should not discover him, and the same did all his Company. So they left the Village and took the Fields, having already determin'd what to do, and rode forth on the Right hand toward the Wood, where Sr. Reginald waited for them with not above [f] 30 Men of Arms in his Company; whereas Sr. Galahaut had about 70 by this time. When Sr. Reginald saw them he displayed his Banner before him, and rode forth fair and softly to meet them verily taking them for Englishmen. Being come up he raised the Visor of his Helmet, and saluted the Lord Galahaut by the Name of Sr. Bartholomew. Sr. Galahaut thought not to discover himself yet, till he had train'd them further off; wherefore he only answer'd faintly in English, "Let "us ride on; and so set himself among his Men on the one side, as Sr. Reginald was with his, on the other. When Sr. Reginald saw this their Manner, and how Sr. Galahaut rode sometimes near him without exchanging a Word, shewing his Face or unfolding his Banner, then he began to suspect the matter. So that after he had rode thus about the space of a quarter of an Hour he made an Halt, and stood still under his Banner among his Men, and said aloud, "Sir Knight, I am not well assured what you "are, I think you are not Sr. Bartholomew Burwash, for I know him well, and he would "have been more familiar with me. So that I see you are not the Man, and therefore "you are like to tell me your Name before I ride any farther in your Company. Then Sr. Galahaut lifted up his Visor and made towards him, thinking to have laid hold on the Reins of his Bridle, and crying aloud, "our Lady of Ribemont, while his Fellow Sr. Roger of Coulogne cried, "Coulogne to the Rescue. When Sr. Reginald saw this, he was not in the least dejected, but drew out his Sword, and just as Sr. Galahaut endeavour'd to have seised his Bridle, ran him clear through the Body, and drew out his Sword again, and immediately clapping spurs to his Horse took the open Field, and left Sr. Galahaut grievously wounded. But several of Sr. Galahaut's Esquires, pursued after him so hotly, that seeing he must either turn again, or incurr Reproach, he faced about like a Valiant Gentleman as he was, and stood the formost, and gave him such a warm Reception, that he had no more desire to follow him, and in this manner he served three or four of his Pursuers, wounding and bruising them all; and if he had had a good Ax in his hand, he had surely slain a Man at every Blow. By this Means and the goodness of his Horse, he made shift to escape himself without the least harm. His Friends received him gladly, and his Enemies and all that heard the Action applauded his good Presence and Courage for coming off so well: Thô most of his Men were either taken or slain, but a very few enjoy'd their Masters Fortune. For when Sr. Galahauts Men saw their Captain wounded in that manner, they fell upon the Germans with all the Fury imaginable, till they had slain, taken or routed them every Man. The Sword had not penetrated any of Sr. Galahaut's Vitals; wherefore they dressed up his Wound and bore him carefully to Perone. But he never perfectly recover'd that hurt, for he was a Man of such indefatigable Courage, that he would by no means spare himself in time of War, althô his Case required it; wherefore he lived but a little while afterward.

[f] Froiss. c. 207. fol. 102.

V. The mean while King Edward [t] marched thrô Artois, where he found a poor Country, and little or no Provision; but being entred Cambresis, he met with plenty of all things; For there nothing was taken care of, because that Country, as holding of the Empire (since the Death of Lewis of Bavaria) and not of France, took it for granted, that the English would not hurt them; but King Edward was not of that mind. He was now lodged at Beaurevoir bordering on Cambresis, where because of the Goodness of the Country he tarried four Days to refresh his Men and Horses; many great Detachments the mean while overrunning the whole Country, as well of Cam-

[t] Froiss. c. 208. &c.

bresis

bresis as Vermandois. Whereupon Peter Bishop of Cambray, and other Lords of that Country with the Burgesses of the Good Towns, having obtained safe Conduct, sent their Deputies to the King of England to expostulate with Him, and to know by what Title and for what Cause he committed those Hostilities. Answer was return'd, that "it was because heretofore they had been Confederates with France, and Enemies to "England, of which as yet they had given no sign of Repentance: But had since "that also received Frenchmen into their Towns and Castles, and had rebelliously held "out against England: On all which Accounts they thought it lawfull to use them "now as Enemies. This was all the Answer they could have, and they were fain to be content therewith. After this King Edward marched forth into la Tierasche, foraging the Country about on all sides, and bringing in Prey to the Army. One day the Lord Bartholomew Burwash rode before St. Quentin, where by chance he met with the Captain of that Place, [u] Sr. Baldwin Danequin Master of the Crossbows, between whom began a terrible Medley, wherein many were overthrown on both sides; but the English obtain'd the Victory without the loss of one Man, and Sr. Baldwin himself was taken Prisoner by the Lord Bartholomew's own Hands: But soon after paying his Ransome he had his Liberty, and thereupon [x] went to defend the Town and Castle of Tonnerre in Burgundy. With this Success, which was obtained on the 26 of November, Sr. Bartholomew return'd to the King, whom he found at the Abby of Fenney, where was good store of Provision both for Horse and Man. Thence the Army removed, and went into le Rhemois, or the Marches of the City of Rheims in Champagne, the King taking up his Station at St. Vall beyond Rheims, the Prince of Wales at St. Thierry, and the Duke of Lancaster and other great Lords in other Villages about the City, which the King now design'd to block up. Within the Place at that time was the Lord John de Craon, Archbishop of Rheims, the Earl of Porcien, and Sr. Hugh Porcien his Brother, the Lord de la Bonne, the Lord of Carency, the Lord of Annore, the Lord of Lore and divers other Captains, Knights and Esquires of those Parts. King Edward intended after his manner to offer them the choice of his Favour before he gave them a tast of his Fury; and many times [y] he proffer'd them by his Heralds to exalt and magnifie their City above all others in France, if they would give their Consent that he should there receive the Crown of France, promising to use them all most graciously. But when he saw that he was not heard, believing that they did thus, because they were ashamed to surrender without having received any Loss, he began to threaten them with a long Siege and the Desolation of their Land, if they refused to do what he demanded. But neither fair Overtures nor foul did avail any thing: For by Common Assent this was their Answer, "That they had their Lawfull "King, to whom they intended, whilst they had Breath in their Bodies, to be loyal, "true and faithfull; and if he used Force against them, they design'd to defend themselves by Force. Nor were these Mens Deeds disagreeable to their Words, for they maintain'd their Loyalty so well, that the Place suffer'd no great Dammage during the whole Siege, which lasted from the Feast of St. Andrew till the beginning of Lent. For besides that the City was very Defensible and well provided of all things, the King would not suffer any Assault to be made, because he would preserve his Army entire for a greater purpose. And truly the Lords of England wanted a little Rest at that time, for they began their Siege in the Heart of Winter, and there were high Winds and much Rain about St. Andrews, and they wanted Litter for their Horses, for the Country had layen in a manner waste for well nigh two or three Years before; so that little Forage was to be got abroad, under 10 or 12 Leagues off, whereby there fell many dangerous Rencounters, wherein the English sometime wan and sometimes also lost.

AN. DOM. 1359. An. Regni Angliæ XXXIII. Franciæ XX.

[u] Froiss. ibid. sed Knighton vocat pro Danequin, Bald. Barton. p. 2621.

[x] Froiss. c. 210. fol. 103.

[y] Matt. Villani l. 9. c. 67. p. 549.

VI. During this Siege several strong Detachments were sent abroad from the Army, especially into the Country of Rhetelois in Champagne, to Warcq, to Mazieres, to Donchery, and to Mouson; some whereof would absent from the Camp three or four Days together, ravaging and plundering the Country, and then return again to the Camp before Rheims. At that same time Sr. Eustace Dambreticourt being newly redeem'd from Prison, had begun to manifest by his Hostilities in France, that he was at liberty. He had lately won [z] by Surprize the Town of Attigny on the River Aisne in Retelois, where he found plenty of Provision of all sorts, but especially of good Wines, whereof he sent the greater part to the King of England and his Son the Prince, then lying at the Siege of Rheims, who received it very kindly at his Hands.

[z] Vid. l. 3. c. 4. §. 9. p. 561.

Among the divers Adventures, which fell during this Siege, it happen'd, that the Duke of Lancaster, the Earls of Richmond and March, the Lord John Chandos, the

An. Dom. 1359. An. Regni Angliæ XXXIII. Franciæ XX.

Lord James Audley, the Lord Bartholomew Burwash, the Lord of Mucidan, and Sr. Richard Pountchardon, rode forth about the Fields of Châlons in Champaigne, where 'tis believed, that [a] Attila King of the Hunns was overthrown with the Loss of an Hundred and Eighty Thousand Men, by the joynt Forces of Merovee King of France, Theodoric, or Therry King of the Gothes, and Ætius the General of the Roman Empire: Thô Jornandes makes this Battle to have been fought near unto Tholouse, and not to Châlons. However in these Fields the foresaid English Lords ranged, till they [b] came to Cernoy en Dormois, a fair and strong Castle; which upon view, they resolved to attempt: For it was a place of considerable moment. In this Castle there were two Valiant Knights, Captains, the Chief whereof was Sr. John Caples, who bare for his Arms, Or, a Cross Ancree, Sable. The English assaulted the Castle vigorously, till the Lord Mucidan, being among the foremost, was slain with a stone from the Walls, to the infinite regret of the English Lords, and especially of his own Men, the Gascogners, who loved him entirely for his winning Carriage and resolute Conduct. So that upon his Death, all the Lords sware, that they would not stir a foot thence, till they had taken the Place, and revenged the blood of so worthy a Gentleman: And then the Assault was renew'd with all the Fury imaginable. The Gascogners especially, being enraged at their Loss, plunged into the Ditches like Madmen, without any care of themselves, and approached the Walls, and mounted up with their Targets over their heads; while the Archers of England sent their Arrows so thick together, that the Enemy durst hardly appear upon the Walls at their Defences, and whoever did but presume to peep over, was in evident Danger of their shot. By this means, thô not without the loss of many Men, the Castle was at last taken by force, and the two Captains only with some few Esquires received to Mercy; all the rest were put to the Sword, as Sacrifices to the Ghost of the Lord of Mucidan.

[a] Anno. Dom. 453.
[b] Froiss. c. 208. Knighton p. 2621. True use of Armory p. 54. Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 788, &c.

Thence they [c] marched about two Leagues farther to Autry en Dormois, lying on the River Aisne, which was accounted stronger than Cernoy, but before they came thither, the Inhabitants fled. Thence they went back to St. Menehou in Champaigne (a fortified Town also) whence upon their approach the Inhabitants fled likewise; whereupon they all returned to the Camp before Rheims, and related to the King what they had won, and whom they had lost.

[c] Knighton p. 2621. n. 20. & Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 788.

VII. Near this [d] time the inconstant and turbulent King of Navarre fell off again from the Dauphin, without any known cause or provocation, and leaving Paris of a sudden, retired to Mante on the River Seyne, whence he sent his Defiance to the Duke and his Brethren, who wonder'd upon what Pretence or Title he thus renew'd his Hostilities. Under pretence however of his Quarrel an Esquire of Brussels, named Walter Ostraste, surprized the strong Castle of Rolebois on the Seyne, about a League from Mante, where he kept a Garrison, which did afterwards very much incommode the Parisians, and the Vicinage.

[d] Froiss. 208.

While the Siege [e] before Rheims lasted, the Lord of Gomegines, an Hainalder, who went to England with a Message to the Queen from King Edward, when he sent the Lords Strangers back to Calais, repassed the Sea now again, and rode into Hainalt with certain Knights and Esquires of Gascogne, and of England in his Company; intending from thence to repair to King Edwards Camp before Rheims. These Men (the young Lord of Gomegines, being inflam'd with a desire to advance his Reputation in War) encreased to the Number of 300 Men of Arms, and then set forth in the Head of them from Maubeuge, and went to Avesnes in Hainalt, whence he proceeded to Terlon. Now the Lord of Roye, who lay in Garrison at Roye in Picardy, with a sufficient Number of Knights and Esquires, heard of these Preparations of the Lord of Gomegines, and that he was going to serve King Edward in the Siege before Rheims, and must of necessity (as he also knew) pass through Tierasche; and being exactly inform'd at what time he was to set forward, sent word thereof to certain Captains, his Friends, of the French party: But especially to the Lord Canon Robsart, an Experienced and Valiant Gentleman, who then menaged the young Earl of Coucy's Lands, and lay at the Castle of Marle in Tierasche. The Lord Robsart at the time appointed joyn'd the Earl of Roye with 40 Spears: But the Earl was Commander in Chief of the whole Enterprise, not only in consideration of his Quality, but because he had been the first Deviser thereof. So he led forth in all 300 Men of Arms, and went and laid an Ambush, where he knew the Lord of Gomegines musts needs pass, who suspecting nothing of this Matter, was already enter'd Tierasche, taking his way toward Rheims, where King Edward lay. On a morning he came to a certain Village, called Hercigny, where he thought to refresh his Men a while, and so to proceed: But as his Men were setting up up their Horſes, he himſelf, being young, luſty, and deſirous of Honourable hazards, ſaid, that for his part he would ride a little way out of Town, to ſee if he could meet with any forage, and thereupon ſelecting out 50 Men, he marched out of the Village, a Valiant Eſquire of England, named Chriſtopher Moor, bearing his Banner before him. AN. DOM. 1359. An. Regni Angliæ XXXIII. Franciæ XX.

[e] Froiss. ibid.

Now the Frenchmen, who knew all their Motions, were not far off from the ſaid Village, in a cloſe Ambuſh, thinking, becauſe the other equall'd them in Number, not to ſtir till Night, and then by ſurpriſing the Town, make their Advantage: For they were fully informed of their being there. But it ſeems the Lord of Gomegines thruſt himſelf now into their hands, before they had hoped for ſuch fortune themſelves. When the Frenchmen ſaw him at firſt with ſo ſmall a Company, they wonder'd, who it ſhould be, and ſent out a couple of light Horſe to view them, who returning, brought word, that they were a party of thoſe they had expected.

At this they all brake out of their Ambuſh, crying Roye in the Name of the Lord of Roye, who rode foremoſt with his Banner diſplayed before him; and the Lord Flamone of Roye his Couſin, was with him, together with Sr. Lewis of Robſart, and the Lord Canon Robſart his Brother, Sr. Triſtram of Bonroy, and others. When the Lord of Gomegines ſaw what a caſe he was in, like a reſolute Gentleman he ſtood ſtill to receive them, and ſcorn'd to flinch a Foot. But at the very firſt brunt he was overthrown, Horſe and Man, and finally there taken Priſoner, and with him two Eſquires of Gaſcogne, who had fought with ſingular Valour, as did alſo Chriſtopher Moor Eſquire, who bare the Standard; but at laſt together with that fell into the Frenchmens hands. To be brief, all on that ſide, were either ſlain, or taken; except the Valets, who eſcaped by running away; the Enemy ſlighting to purſue them, eſpecially ſeeing they took not the way to the Town, where the reſt of their Men lay, to diſcover unto them what had been done.

But the Field being [f] now clear'd, the Conquerours took their Horſes and rode into the Village upon the ſpur, crying Roye, in the Name of the Lord Roye; whereat thoſe in the Town were extreamly ſurprized, to ſee their Enemies ſo near them, they not knowing, what was become of their Captain, and beſide moſt of them were unarmed and ſcatter'd abroad in the Town. Wherefore being out of hope to make any tolerable Defence, they began to yield themſelves, and the Frenchmen beſtow'd them about in their Lodgings: The Lord Canon Robſart had a great many Priſoners, becauſe he was beſt known to the Engliſh and Gaſcogners by his Banner; with which they had been acquainted. But ſome fled into a little Houſe of Defence, at the end of the Town, which was moated about, and might perhaps have proved a Refuge at that time, had they been all of one mind; but ſome ſaid, it was beſt to make good the place, becauſe it was ſtrong enough to ſecure them, till they might ſend word to the Army before Rheims; from whence they ſhould doubtleſs have a ſpeedy Succour: Others ſaid, 'twas difficult to ſend, now the Enemy was there, and impoſſible to defend it, till the return of an anſwer. While thus they were concerting of Reaſons, the Lord of Roye with one deciſive peremptory threat commanded them to yield up immediately: For if they put him to the trouble of taking them by force, they were all no better than dead Men. At theſe Words the ſtouteſt of them all began to miſdoubt the Event, and ſo they preſently agreed to yield only on ſecurity of their Lives. After this all the Priſoners were ſent to the Caſtle of Coucy, and other French Garriſons, to be kept, till their Ranſoms ſhould be paid: But when King Edward heard of the Matter, he was greatly diſpleaſed; but was obliged to digeſt it as well as he could: For the only cure for irreparable Afflictions, is Patience. And this Adventure happen'd in the latter end of December, in the Year of our Lord MCCCLIX; the Siege then enduring before Rheims.

[f] Froiſ. c. 209, &c.

VIII. On the 20 [g] of the ſaid Month the Lord Bartholomew Burwaſh, Knight of the moſt Noble Order of the Garter, went with a Detachment from before Rheims, and laid Siege to the Town and Caſtle of Cormicy; which was near unto his Quarters; for all the Great Lords were diſpoſed about in ſtrong Bodies abroad in the Country, as well for Conveniency of Quarters, as to ſtop up all the Avenues; that no Proviſion ſhould enter the City. This Fortreſs belonged to the Archbiſhop of Rheims, and was now by him ſo well furniſh'd, that it ſeem'd far enough out of all Danger: For therein was a ſquare ſtone Tower, with Walls of a Wonderfull thickneſs, and at all Points ſufficiently provided for a Siege; and moreover the Town it ſelf was fenced with a Double Ditch and High Walls. But againſt this Place came the [g] Froiſ. c. 209. & Knighton p. 2622. & Lord Montagne's Eſſays. c. 5. l. 1. p. 11.

An. Dom. 1359. An. Regni Angliæ XXXIII. Franciæ XX.

the Lord Burwaſh, together with the Lord John Botetourt, and other Knights, as well of his own Retinue, as belonging to the Prince of Wales, to the Duke of Lancaſter, and the Earl of Richmond: Theſe Men with unſpeakable Boldneſs preſently upon their coming aſſaulted the Town, paſſed the Ditch, mounted the Walls, and took it the firſt Night. When immediately the Lord Bartholomew, who commanded in Chief, knowing the ſtrength of the Caſtle, ſet a good Number of Pioneers at Work, promiſing them Large Wages, if they haſted to finiſh their Task effectually. Theſe Men, encouraged thus by their Lord, began to Work night and day, till at laſt with much obſtinate labour they had gone far under the Great Square Tower, ſtill ſetting up huge Props of Oak as they went along, and carrying the Earth out in the night: So that the Beſieged knew nothing of their being undermin'd. In about ſixteen days, the Miners having done their Work, ſo that the Tower was ready to fall, when they pleaſed, their Captains went to Sr. Bartholomew, and aſſured him of their Succeſs; whereat he was well content, but commanded them to proceed no farther, till they heard from him: For he was reſolv'd in his Mind to try all fair means to reduce the Place, before he would fire the Mine, as thinking it more Honourable for a Chriſtian Captain to overcome his Enemies, than to deſtroy them. Wherefore taking along with him the Lord John Botetourt, he went toward the Caſtle, and made offer to ſpeak with ſome of thoſe within. The Chief Captain there at that time was one Sr. Henry de Vaulx, a Knight of Champaigne, who came to the Battlements of the Caſtle, and demanded what they would have? Sr. Bartholomew anſwer'd, "Captain, I would, that You "forthwith yield your ſelves, and all You have into my Hands, for elſe You are "no better than Dead Men upon my Word. "Pray, how ſaid Sr. Henry? That's "a pleaſant Matter indeed! And therewith he began to ſmile; We are proof a-"gainſt the hardeſt Siege, and You ask us to yield up ſimply: But ſurely Sir, We "are not ſo low either in Wit or Courage, as You take us to be. Well, ſaid Sr. "Bartholomew, then your Blood muſt lie upon your own Heads: For if You knew "in what Danger You are at this time, You would yield up ſimply without any "more adoe: But if You have no Faith, You cannot be ſaved. Why? Quoth "Sr. Henry, what Danger are We in? I ſee none: Unleſs it be, that We are "like to loſe your good Company, becauſe You deſpair to take us. "Sir, ſaid the "Engliſh Captain, that You may then underſtand your Condition, come forth your "ſelf with ſo many more, as You pleaſe; and I'll ſhew You, how I have You all "at my mercy: And after that, if You ſhall be minded to hold the Caſtle, upon "my Honour, You ſhall have liberty to return back unhurt, and there to take your "Fortune. Sr. Henry with three more of his Captains came forth in confidence of the Engliſh Knight's Word, and went to him, and there he ſhew'd them all the Mine, and how their great Tower ſtood only on Stages and Props of Timber. When Sr. Henry ſaw this moſt imminent Danger, in which both He and all his Men were, he ſaid with much Submiſſion, "Honourable Sir, it is true, We were all at your "Diſpoſe, when we thought our ſelves moſt ſecure: Surely this Favour of yours "extended to us, proceeds from a Noble and Generous Spirit. We therefore hence-"forth yield our ſelves, and all We have to your pleaſure. Then Sr. Bartholomew took them as his Priſoners, and all the Reſt within the Caſtle, and ſent in Men to take all the Goods, and what was of any Value; and that done, he cauſed Fire to be put into the Mine to burn the Props; and at laſt the Tower clave inſunder with an hideous Noiſe, and fell ſuddenly into Ruines. "Look You now, ſaid Sr. Bartholomew "to Sr. Henry, and mark, if I did not tell You the Truth. Sir, reply'd He, We thank "You for this great Courteſie: For if ſome other had ſuch an Advantage over us, "We ſhould not have fared ſo well. Thus was the ſtrong Caſtle of Cormicy taken, and overthrown, and the Priſoners brought to the Camp before Rheims.

CHAP-

CHAPTER the SIXTH.

The CONTENTS.

I. The Duke of Normandy's Method to reſiſt King Edward; the French take land at Winchelſea, and after doing much harm are beaten away. II. The Kings Lieutenant in England takes Order againſt the like Miſchief for the Future. III. The King of England riſes from before Rheims, and marches in Hoſtile manner thrô Champaigne. The Lord Roger Mortimer, Earl of March, dies. IV. The great Pomp and Order of the Engliſh Army. V. King Edward is bought off from deſtroying Burgundy, and turns toward Paris. VI. He ſits down before Paris; two Treaties offer'd at in vain. Whereupon the King challenges the Dauphin forth to Battle; the Lord Walter Manny skirmiſhes at the Barriers; a remark on Mr. Stow. The King reſolves for Bretagne, and to renew the Siege before Paris at a better ſeaſon. VII. A Party from Paris worſted by an Engliſh Ambuſh. VIII. The great Miſeries of France, with the Predictions of a certain Fryar concerning the ſame. IX. The Dauphin finding a neceſſity for Peace, ſends overtures after King Edward, who being moved by a Remarkable Tempeſt, enclines to accept them. A Treaty had thereupon. X. A True and Authentick Copy of the Famous Peace made at Bretigny, near Chartres. XI. The two Eldeſt Sons of England and France ſolemnly ſworn to uphold the Articles of the ſaid Peace, with the Manner thereof. The Pariſians, not ſtaying till the Concluſion of the Peace, buy certain Fortreſſes of the Engliſh. XII. King Edward returns for England, ſhews King John the Copy of the Agreement, and ſends him over to Calais. XIII. The Pope quickens King Edward to finiſh the Peace: King John's difficulties for want of Money. XIV. King Edward goes over to Calais, and conſummates the Peace. XV. The Copy of King Edward's Letters of Renuntiation; wherein he lays down his Title to France. XVI. The Copy of King John's Renuntiation of certain Lands and Territories in lieu thereof. XVII. The Names of the Grandees ſworn on both ſides. XVIII. The Copy of King Edward's Orders to all his Captains, enjoyning them to deliver up their Reſpective Places to the French King. XIX. Other things relating to the ſaid Peace, and alſo a ſtep to reconcile the two Pretenders to Bretagne. XX. King John's joy at his Freedom, and the mutual Friendſhip of the two Kings: King John takes his leave of King Edward, and goes to Boulogne. XXI. King Edward returns with the Hoſtages for England; where he gives Order for their favourable uſage: The Pope congratulates the French King his Liberty. XXII. The Death of the Earl of Oxford, of the Earl of Northampton, of the Earl of Hereford and Eſſex, of the Earl of Warwick's Brother, and of Thomas Holland Earl of Kent: Alſo of the King of Cyprus.

I. IF any Man ſhould ask me, what the Duke of Normandy, what the Lords and the Captains of France, and what the Three Eſtates of that Kingdom did at this time, now that they had ſuch an Enemy in their very Bowels: Why ſurely, the Parliament being alarum'd with this Publick Danger began to be at Friends among themſelves; all the Lords and good Captains of France roſe up vigorouſly in their Country's Defence, and the Duke of Normandy with the Lords of his Council, and other his Friends and Allies gather'd together a vaſt Number of Men of Arms to the Metropolis of that Kingdom, and ſet ſufficient Garriſons (as we have partly intimated before) in moſt of the other Cities and Fortreſſes, where they ſuſpected King Edward had an Eye. But being warn'd by the late ill Succeſs of his Father, and the great Loſſes of his Grandfather; the Duke reſolved no more to give the King of England Battle, but rather to hold him ſhort by removing all manner of Proviſion into ſtrong Places, and in the mean while to ſtand only on the Defenſive Part, well knowing, that Hunger and Delay would ſoon cool the Fury of the moſt Valiant Souldiers, and that the mightieſt Treaſures of the Richeſt Kings would eaſily be exhauſted by ſuch a tedious War.

The [a] mean while, as well to divert the War from his own Doors, as to repay thoſe Inju-

[a] Knighton p. 2522. n. 40.

An. Dom. 1360. An. Regni Angliæ XXXIV. Franciæ XXI.

Injuries he felt, he had gather'd together into the Ports of Normandy a mighty Navy, which had Orders to sail into England, and exercise there all manner of Hostility. Some of these Souldiers, to the Number of 240 Lances, were met about Honfleur by Sr. Thomas Fowkes an English Captain, who with 27 Lances only, and about an 100 Archers, set upon them, overthrew them, and took of them Prisoners no less than 120 Men of Arms, among whom were the Lord Lewis Harcourt Lieutenant of Normandy, for the Regent, the Lord John Bigott Marshal, the Lord Baldwin de la Huse, with two of his Brethren, the Lord of Bracquemont and his Brother, the Bailiff of le Caulx and another Baron his Kinsman.

But this was too small a Wound to be felt by the Navy of France, who notwithstanding consisted of no less than [b] 120 Sail, and [c] 20000 Armed Men, under the Conduct of the Earl of St. Paul, who made for England, and coasting about the [d] Borders of Kent and Sussex, landed at Rye and Hastings, where they spoiled the Towns, slew the People, and did much harm to the poor Fishers. But especially on St. Mathias his Day they suddenly took Land at Winchelsea, [e] where they slew all they met with, sparing neither Age, Sex, nor Order, but only such Matrons or Virgins, whose Youth and Beauty made them desirable, were cruelly reserved for a Life far worse than Death. Among many abominable and execrable Deeds done at this time by this Piratical Sort of Villains, one most horrid and diabolically impious is related, namely, that upon their first Landing, hearing that most of the Inhabitants were at Church, it being time of Mass, they ran immediately thither, where without any Regard to the Place, having committed many Murders, and robbed the Altar and the Vestry, at last they found there a very comely young Gentlewoman of exact Shape and Beauty, who came thither with her Neighbours to hear Mass. Her these unchristian Villains abused there in the very Church, making use of her Body so long one after another, till the unhappy Woman died under their hands. An Abomination like [f] that of the wicked Gibbeathites, whose intemperate and barbarous Lust had well nigh occasion'd the total Extirpation of one of the Tribes of Israel.

But while these ungodly Wretches were thus busied in Spoiling, Robbing, Murdering, and worse Matters, the Townsmen, who had fled, had raised the Country [g] in such Multitudes, that the Frenchmen durst not stand them. Yet before they could reach their Ships, they fell so foul upon one another, thrô the precipitant haste they made to the Water, that what with those, who were killed, and those, who were drowned, they lost above 400 Men. Besides, while the greater part of the Fleet was thus busied in the Plunder, some of our Mariners came upon the rest, and contended with them so well, that they wan of them 13 Vessels laden with Wine and other Provision, and carried them away. Thô now at last the French also, having set fire to the Town of Winchelsea, which yet was presently quenched, carried away great Spoils and many Prisoners, among whom [h] were Nine very Beautifull Women, whom they so filthily abused, that 'tis shamefull to relate or think it.

II. All England [i] was so alarum'd at this Action of the French (especially because it was reported, how they had a wonderfull strong Navy at Sea, ready to do the like at other Places, besides the perpetual infesting our Merchants) that a Decree came forth from Prince Thomas of Woodstock, King Edwards Son and Lieutenant in England, by Advice of his Council; that all Laymen whatsoever between the Age of sixteen and sixty should be arrayed for the Wars, and of these the lustiest and the best Armed, and the tall Archers should be sent to the Cinque Ports to the Kings Admirals for defence of the Kingdom. The Archbishops also and Bishops thrô their respective Dioceses granted great Indulgences to all those, who went to Sea against their Enemies; particularly, that every of them might choose his Confessor at his pleasure. The Bishops also themselves, the Abbots and Priors, Rectors, Vicars, Chaplains and all Men of the Church, were ready on the Land to defend the Country against the Common Enemy; some as Men of Arms, and others as Archers, by injunction of the Church. And all Persons Beneficed, who could not serve in their own Persons, were bound to maintain one in their stead able for the War; all to be ready whenever the French should land, and Necessity require them to march against the Enemy. At which time the City [k] of London rigged forth a Navy of 80 Sail, consisting of 14000 Men of Arms and Archers, to revenge upon the Coasts of France the Mischief done at Winchelsea. Thô [l] Others say, how this Fleet was commanded by the Kings Admiral, and consisted of an 160 Sail, which passing from London up the Thames, scoured the Sea to Boulogne, and after that to Harfleur in Normandy, where they made great Spoil, even over all the Region called le Pais de Caulx, which is a Part of Normandy, lying between the Rivers Seyne and

[b] Matt. Villani l.9.c.83.p.558.
[c] Knighton ib.
[d] Fabian p.234.
[e] Walsing. Hist. p.166. n.30. Dom. Lit. E D.
[f] Judges c. 19. & 20. &c.
[g] Knighton p. 2622. n.60.
[h] Knighton p. 2623. n.1.
[i] Knighton ib. n.10. & Walsin. hist. p.166.
[k] Walsing. hist. p.167. n.20. & M.S. vet. Angl. in Biblioth. C.C.C. Cantabr. c. 230.
[l] Knighton p. 2623. n.30.

and Breſle, and terminated by the Brittiſh Ocean on the one ſide, and by the Biſhoprick of Rouën on the other. AN. DOM. 1360.

III. Now had King Edward lain before Rheims above [m] ſeven Weeks, all which time he never offer'd to attack the Place: For he knew well, it would have been either wholly in vain, or very expenſive of his Subjects Blood. But by this time being wearied out with this tedious way, eſpecially becauſe Forage was ſo difficult to be got, that his Men began to loſe their Horſes, and to want Victuals themſelves, he reſolved now to riſe from before the Place, and marched forth in good Order, the way that leadeth to Châlons in Champagne, which paſſing by he proceeded toward Troyes, and encamped about Mery ſur Seyne, all his Hoſt covering the Face of the Country for above 8 Leagues together. While the King lay here, the Conſtable went with the Vantguard to attempt St. Florentin, where Sr. Edward Renty was Captain; but after a great Aſſault made in vain he gave it over: About which time the King came up to him, and departed thence to Tonnerre in Burgundy, which City he took by Aſſault, but the Caſtle he could not win: For the Lord Moreau de Fiennes, Conſtable of France, and Sr. Baldwin Danequin Maſter of the Croſsbows, were there in Garriſon with a great Number of choſen Men. But becauſe the King found here 3000 Veſſels of Wine, he was pleaſed to tarry there five whole Days to refreſh his Army, in which time thô he gave many Aſſaults to the Caſtle, he was yet never the nearer. Thence paſſing over the River Armancon he refuſed the way on the Right Hand, and went a little declining to the Left to Noyers, which he took without any Aſſault; for their Lord and Captain was ſtill a Priſoner in England ever ſince the Battle of Poictiers. Thence [n] he marched to Mont-Real, and ſo to Avallon on the River Couſſon, where he tarried from Aſhwedneſday to Midlent, becauſe of the great Opportunity he found thereabout of receiving Supplies of Proviſion for his Army from a valiant Engliſh Eſquire, named John Argentine, who bore for his Arms Azure, an Eſcutcheon of Pretence, Argent. This Man had won the Town of Flavigny, not far thence, wherein he found ſufficient Proviſion of all Sorts to ſerve the whole Army for a Month; and accordingly he conſtantly ſupplied the King therewith: Beſides which his Marſhals and Van-currours overran the Country, waſting and ravaging all about, and they alſo brought in much prey daily.

An. Regni Angliæ XXXIV. Franciæ XXI.

[m] Froiſ. f. 103. c. 209. §. 3. Knighton ibid. & Du Cheſne p. 682. & Guil. Paradin Annal. de Bourgogne l. 2. p. 345.

[n] Froiſ. Holinſh. Aſhmole p. 660. &c.

During the Kings ſtay here, namely on the 26 of February, [o] being the Thurſday in Quadrageſima, there departed this Life at the Town of Rouvray on the Couſſin near Avallon in Burgundy, the Noble and Valiant Young Lord Roger Mortimer Earl of March, and Conſtable of the Engliſh Army, leaving behind him one onely Son named Edmund, then about nine Years of Age: Upon whoſe Death we find, [p] that the King made the Lord John Beauchamp Brother to the Earl of Warwick, Conſtable of the Army, as alſo of Dover-Caſtle, and of the Cinque-Ports, the Letters Patents bearing Date, apud Avallon in Burgundiâ Primo Martii.

[o] Lit. Dom. ED. Paſcha 5 April.

[p] Rot. Franc. 34. Ed. 3. m. 45. vid. Aſhmole's Garter p. 695. & p. 692.

IV. Now the [q] King and his Chief Lords had with them in this Expedition, as we ſaid before, beſides the uſual Carriages, Hand-Mills to grind their Corn, Ovens to bake Bread, Meat or Paſties; Spits and Cauldrons to roaſt or boil, and Forges to make Shoes for their Horſes: And over and above all this there were brought in Carts a ſort of little Boats made artificially of Leather, every one being able to hold Four Men to row on Ponds or in Rivers, and to fiſh in them at their Pleaſure: Which Device proved both pleaſant and very convenient to the Lords of England during the ſeaſon of Lent. The King had alſo for his Diverſion thirty Faulconers on Horſeback, with Hawks, and ſixty Couple of Hounds, and as many Grey-hounds, beſides thoſe Hawks and Hounds, which his Sons and the Chief of the Nobility had, wherewith they hunted and hawked by the River at their Pleaſure. And during all this Expedition, from the time they left Calais till their coming to Chartres, where the famous Treaty for Peace was ſet on foot; the whole Army was divided into three Great Battalia's, every Battalia ſubdivided into three Bodies, each whereof lodged a-nights, well-nigh a League from each other. The Duke [r] of Lancaſter, and the Earls of Northampton and Salisbury were in the firſt Great Battail, the King Himſelf in the Second, and the Black-Prince with his Three Brethren in the Laſt.

[q] Froiſ. c. 210. f. 103. b.

[r] Knighton p. 2623. n. 50. & Matt. Villani l. 9. c. 85. p. 559. &c.

V. While King Edward lay thus at Avallon, [s] Philip the young Duke of Burgundy, by Advice, and at the Requeſt of all the Country, ſent unto him in order to a Treaty, Sr. Anſelme de Saulieu Chancellour of Burgundy, Sr. John de Vienne, who had defended Calais ſo worthily againſt King Edward, and Sr. Hugh de Vienne his Brother, Sr. John Derie, Sr. William de Thoraiſe and Sr. John de Mont-martin. Theſe Lords found King Edward in ſo good an Humour, that they preſently obtained this Compoſition; "That

[s] Froiſ. ibid. & Paradin Annales de Bourgogne l. 2. p. 346. & Mezer. & Holinſh. p. 965. Fabian p. 238. Speed & Matt. Villani l. 9. c. 82. & 84. p. 557. &c.

An. Dom. 1360. An. Regni Angliæ XXXIV. Franciæ XXI.

"the King of England giving Security for Himself, and all his Subjects, not to ravage, "rob or commit any Hostilities within the Territories of Burgundy for the space of three "Years then following, in Lieu whereof the Duke should pay unto the King in ready "Money the Summ of [t] 200000 Florens of Gold, which amounts to 35000 l. Ster-"ling. Besides which the Burgundians were to administer to the King and his Peo-"ple whatever Provision of Victuals or other things they wanted for their Money. Some suppose [u] that the Burgundians having little Love at this time for the House of France, and verily believing, that King Edward would attain the Crown of that Realm, entred a Secret Alliance with him, on Condition that then the Duke of Burgundy should be the First Peer of France.

However when this Agreement between the King and the Duke was sealed and engrossed, and mutual Security given, the King of England decamped from before Avallon, intending directly for Paris; and so he passed the River of Tonne at Coulogne beside Vezelay, and the Army spread along by the River, almost to Clamecy at the Entry of Nivernois: Which [x] Country also compounded with the King as Burgundy had done. But he laid waste all the Country in Gastinois and Brie, thrô which he marched toward Paris with an high Hand. In this [y] March the Prince of Wales passed with his Battalia by a little Town on the Loing in Gastinois, called Moret, till he came to a strong Fortress, named le Plessis aux Tournelles, near the Forest of Provins, which was then an English Garrison, but had been beleaguered by the French for some time; who having fortified their Camp with a strong Tower fenced with Ditches, gave many fierce Alarms to the Englishmen. And thô now they heard for certain, that the Prince of Wales approached that way, they had such Confidence in their Works, that they would not stirr from the Place: But yet they were deceived, for the fifth day after the Princes Coming their Tower was won, and most of them within put to the Sword, no more than 47 who were the Chief among them being taken alive, of whom were the Lord of Bonneville, the Lord of Angreville, Sr. John de Barrois, and Sr. William du Plessis.

[t] De hac Summâ variant Authores; Knighton & Du Chesne & Froi. 200000 Motons: Mat. Villani 100000 Motons: Paradin 200000 Florens: Walsingh & M. S. vet. Ang. in Bibl. C.C.C. Cantab. 70000 Florens: Paul. Æmyl. 100000 numm. Aureos: Polyd. numerum non definit; sed Mezer. Holinsh. Speed, aliique mecum sentiunt.
[u] Matt. Villani l.9.c.82. & 84. p.557. & 558.
[x] Mezeray ad hunc ann p.59.
[y] Fabian p.238.

VI. Thus at length King Edward succeeded so in his Victorious Progress, that on the last [z] Day of March, being the Tuesday before Easter, he [a] came with his Army before the City of Paris, and took up his Quarters at Bourg la Reine within two little Leagues of Paris, the Army being encamped all along at Longemeau, between Mont-lehery and Chastres, and in the Towns thereabout even to Corbeil. At sight of this Formidable Army, Charles Duke of Normandy, and Regent of France, began to think of some Offers towards a Treaty, especially because King Edward [b] in reverence of the approaching Festival of our Lords Resurrection forbare all Hostilities, intending not formally to lay his Siege till after Easter. Hereupon [c] by the especial Intercession of Father Simon de Langres, Provincial of the Jacobin Fryars, and Legat from Pope Innocent VI, King Edward yielded to admit of a Treaty, to be seriously held at the Maladerie or Spittle of Longemeau on the Good-Friday following, the Solemnity of the Day being look'd on as an Enforcement of so Christianlike an Undertaking. At the Time and Place there appeared for King Edward, Henry Plantagenet Duke of Lancaster, Thomas Beauchamp Earl of Warwick, William Bohun Earl of Northampton, the Lord John Chandos, the Lord Walter Manny and Sr. William Cheney; and for the Regent of France, there appeared the Lord Moreau de Fiennes Constable of France, the Lord Bouciquault Marshal, the Lord of Garenciers, the Lord of Vignay en Vienne, Sr. Simon Bucy and Sr. Guischard D' Angle: But we pass by the Debates of this Treaty, because they came to no good Effect. Wherefore King Edward the rather to quicken the French to a sincere desire after Peace, on [d] Easter-Tuesday removed something nearer to the City of Paris: Whereupon on the Fryday following, being the Tenth of April, at the earnest Importunity of the foresaid Simon de Langres, and of Androine de la Roche Abbot of Cluigny, who was then newly come from the Pope for that Purpose; another Treaty was appointed to be held, but neither yet could Matters be brought to any good issue: So that again they parted, leaving the Breach as wide as ever. Wherefore on the Sunday following King Edward drew down his whole Army before Paris, and embattail'd them in a Field by St. Marcels in three Great Battalia's, each Battalia being divided into Three Bodies, and then he forthwith sent the Duke of Lancaster with his Heralds to the Regent of France, who was within the City with a great Army, to demand Battle of him, assuring him, [e] that if now King Edward should lose the Day, He would never after claim or assume any Right or Title to the Crown of France: But for all this the Cauteous Regent declin'd to answer his Desire. While the Messengers were about this Demand, the King honoured no less than [f] 400 Esquires and Young Gentle-

[z] ED. Lit. Dom. Pascha 5. April.
[a] Vid. Froiss. c. 210. Fabian p. 238. Mat. Villani l.9.c.85. & 86. p.559. &c.
[b] Knighton p. 2623.n.40.
[c] Fabian, Holinsh. &c.
[d] 7 April.
[e] Walsing. hist. p.167.n.10. & M.S. vet. Angl. in Bibl. C.C.C. Cantab. c.230.
[f] Speed p.583. & M.S. id. ibid.

Gentlemen with the Order of Knighthood, among whom [g] were John Lord Fitz-Walter, Robert Lord Vavasour, Thomas Spencer, John Nevil and William Torceaux; but Collart Dambreticourt, younger Son to Sr. Sanchio Dambreticourt, and Esquire of the Kings Body declin'd the Honour at that time, by saying, that he could not find his Headpiece and Corslet: For he had made an Oath to do some notable piece of Service, before he would accept the Order of Knighthood. But when upon the Return of the Duke of Lancaster and the Heralds, the King heard how he should not have Battle, he was wonderfully displeased, and upon the Lord Manny's Request, sent him forth with all the new-made Knights, and such others as were thereto appointed to skirmish at the Barriers, and to burn what they could of the Suburbs, so to [h] provoke the Frenchmen to come forth, or at least to offer more ample Conditions. The Assault was vigorous, and lasted from Morning till Noon, and the French defended their Post at the Gate and Barriers with Valour becoming their Circumstances; nor would they have been content to have stood so long on the Defensive Part only, for there were many Noble and Resolute Knights and Gentlemen within the City at that time: But it was the Duke of Normandy's peremptory Command, that no man on pain of his Head should presume to issue out of the Barriers without his Order: So well had that Prince (afterward sirnamed the Wise) learn'd how to deal with this English Hannibal, not only by the Example of the old Roman Fabius, but of two nearer Relations, even of his own Father and Grandfather, whose frequent and great Losses proceeding from their too forward Courage, taught him now to oppose a Shield to this Conquering Sword, and not easily to put his last Stake to the Fortune of a Battle.

AN. DOM. 1360. An. Regni Angliæ XXXIV. Franciæ XXI.

[g] Froiss. c. 211.

[h] Mezeray ad hunc an. p. 59.

But however one [i] says, that after Noon, when the Lord Walter Manny's Skirmish was over, about 30 of these new-dubbed Knights went to the Barriers, requiring a few Courses on Horseback according to the Law of Arms in those Days: Against whom (says he) came forth 60 Frenchmen (if the Number is not mistaken for Thirty, as I rather believe) and between these there arose an hot Skirmish. But in the end the English by the Grace of God had the better, having slain some, grievously wounded others, and obliged the rest to retire.

[i] Knighton p. 2623. n. 60.

It is said, that while the King stood before Paris, the [k] Day being very dark and misty, together with a great quantity of Hail, there happen'd so bitter a Cold, that several Men died as they sat on their Horses; wherefore unto this time, says my Author, that Day is called the Black-Monday. But this no doubt is a mistaken Relation of that horrible Storm and Cold, which the King met withall afterwards, as we shall shew in due Place. These Actions being over, the Lord Walter Manny returned to the Army, which tarried still in those Fields all that Day and the Night following: But the next Morning being a Monday, and the 13 of April, seeing no Provocations could bring the Dauphin to a Battle, and that it was morally impossible to force, otherwise than by Famine, so great a City (which was not only now well fortified, but [l] furnished with great plenty of Souldiers, besides the vast Numbers of Inhabitants) the King therefore resolved to rise from thence, till a more favourable season; and the mean while to go forth with Fire and Sword through Beauce and le Maine, till he came into Bretagne, where having refreshed his Army, he intended to return to the Siege of Paris in July or August at the furthest, and so to famish them by a long Siege. For as we shew'd before, He had made a Vow, never to return into England, till he had brought France to his Terms, either by Fair means or by Force. Accordingly on the Monday after Easter [m] he raised his Camp, and began to march towards Mont-lehery.

[k] *Stow p.*264. Where he says, this happen'd on the 14 of April, and the Morrow after Easter-Day: Whereas Easter-Day that Year fell on the 5 of April; and on the 13 of April, which was the Monday after Easter K. Edward left Paris. Thô Mr. Ashmole thrô haste passes over this Fault of Stows.

[l] *Fabian p.*239. ex Chron. Franc.

[m] Froiss. c. 211. *fol.*104.

VII. The mean while certain Knights of England and of Gascogne, having found a convenient place, determin'd with themselves to lie in Ambush: For they expected, that among so many Valiant Lords and Gentlemen then in Paris, some of them would not fail to follow the Army; thô only to cut off straglers, and such as lag'd behind. Accordingly by the Kings Order the Ambush was laid in an empty old house, about 3 Leagues from Paris, consisting of 200 chosen Men of Arms, English and Gascogners, under these Captains, the Lord Nevill, the Lord Moubray, Sr. Richard Pontchardon, the Captal de Busche, Sr. Edmund de Pamiers, and the Lord of Courton; the Three first of England, and the other of Gascogne. Now when the Frenchmen within Paris had seen the Decamping of the English Army, it was thus discoursed among certain young Knights and Gentlemen there; "Surely it would be well worth "our while to make a sally, as secretly as we may, and to follow the English Army "at a distance; for its more than probable, we may happen to win some notable Ad- "vantage. Hereupon the Design was embrac'd by the Lord Ralph de Coucy, Sr. Ralph de Ravenal, the Lord of Monsault, the Lord of Helay, the Chastelan of Beauvais, the Begue of Vilaine, the Lord of Beaujeu, the Lord Flamone du Roye, Sr. Peter of Savoy, and others, to the Number of an [n] 150 Spears in their Company. They sallied out in good order, all very well Horsed, taking the way of Bourg la Reine, till they had passed beyond the English Ambush. With that the Ambush brake forth from behind them, and follow'd after them, crying, "St. George, England! The Frenchmen look'd back in great surprize to be so taken tardy; but when they saw there was no flinching, they stood their ground with a ready Courage, setting themselves in the best Order, to receive them on the points of their Spears. The Rencountre was very rough, and many on both sides were reversed on the Earth; for they were all well Horsed: Such as could, mounted again, and after this brunt with Spears, they drew their Swords and fell in among one another, giving and receiving several rude stroaks; so that the Action deserved more Spectators: For many Noble Deeds of Arms were performed at this time, and the Battle lasted for a while doubtfull. On the English part the Captal of Busche is said to have approved himself most eminently that day; as also on the French side, the Lord of Ravenal fought like a truly Valiant Knight, for he gave many gallant proofs of his Skill and Courage, under his own Banner, till his Standard-Bearer being slain, he himself was taken Prisoner: For now the English and Gascogners prevail'd; so that the Victory was clearly theirs: Thô indeed they exceeded the French in Number about one Fourth Part. The other seeing the Scales turn against them, fled away directly toward Paris, thô continually they were fain to face about, and fight as they fled, they were so closely pursu'd. And if the English had not doubted a Rescue from Paris, now that their Horses began to be weary, every Man of them had been either taken or slain: But upon that account they were content to follow the Chace no farther than Bourg la Reine, where they took Nine Knights and Esquires more, and having by this Success a little secur'd the Reer of the Army from the French Pursuers, they return'd with what they had got to Mont-lehery, where the King lay that Night, and then very courteously set their Prisoners to their Ransom, permitting them to go that same Night, whither they pleased, only engaging their Faith to pay them by such a time at the utmost. On the English part [o] we find about this time, that the Lord Roger de la Warre was taken Prisoner by Monsieur John Haubert; but that it was in this Action, I have no warrant to affirm: Thô this was the very last, that we hear of, till the Gates of Janus were shut in that Kingdom.

An. Dom. 1360. An. Regni Angliæ XXXIV. Franciæ XXI.

[n] Vid. Froiss. c. 211. fol. 104. b. lin. 22.

[o] Dudg. Bar. 2 Vol. p. 16. ad an. 34. Ed. 3. m. 12. ex Autogr. penes Cler. Pell.

Now King Edward's [p] Design, as we have already intimated, was to march for the present into Beauce, and so keeping along by the River of Loire, to go into Bretagne, [q] to the end he might subdue it wholly on the behalf of the young Earl of Montford, his Son in Law; for him to hold it of the Crown of England, and the mean while to refresh his Army; for now that Country had enjoy'd a long respite from the Wars. Which done he thought to return about August at the time of Vintage, and lay a formal Siege to Paris; because of the Oath which he had made, before his Departure out of England; namely, that he would never return alive, till he had reduced France to terms agreeable to his Honour.

[p] Froiss. c. 211. &c.

[q] Pol. Virg. l. 19. p. 383. n. 40.

VIII. And over and above the great Army, he led along with him, [r] he had sundry Garrisons in Champaigne, and Brie, in Picardy, Normandy, and almost over all the Realm of France, besides those of the good Towns and Cities, who took his part, either for Conscience, or hopes of Preferment, or of their own good Wills; not to mention the King of Navarre, who at this time also made War in the Marches of Normandy. And over and above all this the Lord Eustace Dambreticourt, [s] who still held Garrison at the Fortress of Attigny on the River Aisne, made great havock in those parts, and found no opposition. All his imagination night and day, was only to lay stratagems, how to surprize Towns and Castles, and to win Prisoners, and rich booty, and to purchase a Name, that might sound Famous in the Ears of his Lady, the Countess Dowager of Kent. One Night among others, he rode to a strong Town and Castle in Laonnois near Montegu, which was called Pierrepont, and because it was very strong, and scituated also in a Marish ground on the River of Serre, all the Country thereabout had brought thither the very best of their goods for security. Hither came Sr. Eustace with part of his Garrison in the Night, and not scrupling to pass the Dangerous Marishes by such Guides, as he had, but going in great silence, his Men assisting one another quite thorough them, he came unperceived to the Walls, and finding the Watch asleep, mounted, slew them, enter'd the Town, and wan it without any Resistance. Here they found more Rich Booty, than ever before they had had met with at one time; all which they took away with them, and so having burnt the Town (thô they could not hurt the Castle) the next morning they return'd home again, laden with Spoil and Booty. AN. DOM. 1360. An. Regni Angliæ XXXIV. Franciæ XXI.

[r] Froiss. c. 211. fol. 104.

[s] Vid. l. 3. c. 4. §9. p. 561.

About this time also, the [t] Earl of Armagnac, then of the French side, gave Battle to Gaston Phœbus Earl of Foix, who was reputed a Friend to King Edward, in the parts of Gascogne, in which Battle the said Earl of Armagnac was overthrown with the loss of 15000 Men by the said Earl of Foix, who himself suffer'd very little, or no Damage. But I will not dissemble, that however so great a Loss of Frenchmen might be accounted some gain to the English; yet the Earl of Foix was not at this time on the English part, as will manifestly appear to those, who shall consider, that within a page or two following, in the very first Article of the Peace, the Earl of Foix together with the Earl of Armagnac, and others, is reckon'd among the Friends of the French Crown. There was [u] indeed a Quarrel of some continuance, and of very ill Consequence, between these two Great Lords, transmitted unto them by Inheritance, concerning the Purparties of the Estate of Gaston de Bearn; but that related nothing to the Quarrel of England or France, and besides was again renew'd, even when both the Parties were Friends to England; till, as we shall see in due place, it was fully made up by the BLACK-PRINCE, when he came to Bourdeaux, to his Government of the Principality of Aquitain.

[t] Knighton p. 2624. n. 10.

[u] Vid. Mezeray p. 63. & 64. ad an. 1362.

Thus was the Famous Realm of France with Civil Dissentions and Foreign Enemies, streightned on all hands; so that without a very particular Providence, it had been impossible for King Edward to have failed in an absolute Conquest of that Crown: [x] Thô Matthew Villani attributes his failing therein, rather to the Animosity, Hate, and Disdain, which the Frenchmen bare against the English Nation; insomuch that they could not endure to hear of them; but had them ever in despite, as a Vile and Base People. Perhaps this might have been his judgement, but I think not, that it was ever a Popular Opinion in France, or however, that it was ill-grounded and senseless, will appear to those, who know, how [y] both the Ancient Franks, and the English Saxons had one and the same Original.

[x] Matt. Villani l. 9. c. 82. p. 558.

[y] Antiqui Frãci, ut & Saxones, à Getis, sive Gothis, oriundi: Qui in Cimeriâ vocabantur Cimerii, in Sarmatiâ Sarmatæ, in Thraciâ Thraces; & sic Cimbri, Germani, Saxones, Celtæ, Franci, qui & Galli, pro locorum varietate. Vid. R. Sheringham de Anglorum Gentis origine. p. 164, &c.

In these days [z] there lived a certain Fryar Minor, a Man well seen both in Sacred and Profane Letters, whose Name was John de Rochetailladée; in Latine, Joannes de Rupe-scisâ: He had preached of a long time in the City of Avignon, with a Life answerable to his Doctrine: But of late Pope Innocent VI. had clap'd him up close Prisoner in the Castle of Baignols in the Territory of Nismes, between Avignon and Mompellier. The occasion of his Imprisonment was, because he seemed a little too bold with the Clergy, taxing them of many enormous Sins, and denouncing sundry heavy Judgements, shortly to fall upon them, especially on the Prelacy, for their great Pride and Sensuality. Particularly he secretly touched the outragious Ambition of the Church of Rome, with this pretty Apologue or Moral, making use of an old Fable to a new purpose: [a] Once on a time all the Birds under Heaven made their Assembly in a certain place, where, when all the Rest appear'd in good plight, decently deck'd with Plumes and Wings, both for Use and Ornament, there was one only, of shape indeed Majestick and Divine; but all callow, and wholly destitute of Feathers: So that she could neither fly abroad, nor consequently sustain her self with Nourishment. Then the whole Assembly being moved with respect and pity, agreed from their own Bodies to supply this Bird with Feathers, that she might provide for her self and fly about, as well as others. But in process of time, when this Bird beheld her self so finely adorned, and perceived the Universal Respect she had among the Winged Nation, she grew so proud and Insolent, that in the end she provoked the Birds in a General Council, to demand every one his own Feathers back again: And so she was left to her former Poverty, Shame, and Nakedness; This Fryar also in his various Discourses and Sermons, foretold many things, that he said should come to pass within the Realm of France, and among the Grandees of Christendom in general, for their grievous Oppressions of the Poor. And particularly he doubted not by Letters to rebuke the sins of the French Court, [b] and before the Battle of Poictiers to threaten King John himself with the approach of some heavy Calamity. And [c] oftentimes he spake confidently of many wonderfull things, averring, that he would prove all his words by the Authority of the Apocalipse, and other Canonical Books of the Prophets and Inspired Men; the true Understanding whereof was open'd unto him by the Holy Ghost: Upon which account, he said, he spake not as a Prophet, but only, as one, who had the Gift of expounding those Ancient Prophecies, and from them to shew unto all Christian People the very Years and Times, when such and such things should happen. According [z] Froiss. c. 211. Paul. Æmyl. p. 299. Ashmole p. 660. Fox Acts & Mon. p. 359, &c.

[a] Paul. Æmyl. ibid. &c.

[b] Paul. Æmyl. p. 299. C.

[c] Froiss. c. 211. fol. 104.

to

An. Dom. 1360. An. Regni Angliæ XXXIV. Franciæ XXI.

to which his Expoſitions, many wonderfull and unexpected Accidents did really fall out in thoſe times, which he had limited. He wrote many Books full of much Learning, one whereof came forth in the beginning of the Year 1346; wherein were written ſuch marvellous Predictions, that they almoſt exceed Belief; thô the Event declared them to be reall: As for Example, propounding therein a Queſtion to himſelf; "What was to be the Iſſue of theſe Wars and Commotions in France, he anſwers; That all, which had been already, was not to compare, to what ſhould be ſeen hereafter. For, ſays he, the Wars in France ſhall not be ended, till the Realm be in a manner wholly exhauſted and left Deſolate; and that from the Years 1346, 1347, 1348, 1349, unto the Year 1360, &c. The Princes and Gentry of the Land ſhould be afraid to ſhew their faces among the People of low Condition, aſſembled out of all Countries, without any great Head or Captain, who ſhould do in France after their pleaſure. Which ſaying we have already ſeen moſt evidently fullfilled, as well in thoſe Robberies and Inſolencies of the Companions, as in the Riſe and Progreſs of the Jaquerie; not to mention the Wars of King Edward, and the Seditious Tumults raiſed by the Pariſians and the King of Navarre; whereby that Kingdom ſeem'd to be reduced to the laſt Extremity.

[d] Froiſ. c. 211. fol. 104. b.

IX. Upon all which Conſiderations the [d] Duke of Normandy, who was ſtill at Paris with his two Brethren, and their Uncle the Duke of Orleans, began now with his Council to weigh the Matter more maturely: They all well knew the Courage and fierce Reſolution of the King of England, and that he daily added to the already-inſupportable Miſeries of France; whereby it evidently appear'd, that it was impoſſible for the Realm to ſubſiſt much longer, without ſome conſiderable Reſpiration. For all the large Rents and Revenues both of Church and State, were already either quite loſt, or hugely impaired: So that the moſt Wealthy in Lands could make little or no Advantage of them. And moreover it was known, how King Edward intended before Autumn to return to the Siege of Paris, having ſworn never to leave France, till he had brought her to his Dovotion. Wherefore it was reſolved by the Duke of Normandy, and his whole Council, that King Edward muſt be apply'd to for a Peace, and ſome advantagious Offers in order thereunto be made unto Him.

There was now in Court at Paris, a Reverend and Diſcreet Perſonage, the Chancellour of France, named William Aiſcelin de Montegu Biſhop of Teroüenne, by whoſe Direction moſt of the Publique Affairs had lately been Order'd; for his Advice was always found both ſound and faithfull: With him were aſſociated two other Sage Prelates, Androine de la Roche, Abbot of Cluigny, and Father Simon de Langers. Theſe Reverend Perſons upon their Remonſtrance of the neceſſity of Affairs at that time, went from Paris by Conſent of the Duke and his Council, and together with Sr. Hugh de Geneve Lord of Autun, followed after King Edward with certain Articles of Peace, whom they found in Beauce riding toward Gaillardon. Immediately they addreſſed themſelves unto him with all humility, deſiring him for the Love of God to permit them once more to hold a Treaty, in order to a Peace between France and Him, and their Allies. The King expecting now more large Offers, granted their Requeſt; and ſo a Treaty was enter'd upon between them and the Engliſh Commiſſioners, Edward Prince of Wales, Henry Duke of Lancaſter, and others; but ſurely thoſe Authors, who make Roger Earl of March, one of their Number, are widely miſtaken; for he died, as we have ſhewn at leaſt above a Month before, viz. on the 26 of February, at Rouvray in Burgundy, being then Marſhal of the Kings Army. This Treaty was [e] held cloſely for ſome time; but all the while King Edward kept on his March, as he thought fitting; yet ſtill the French Commiſſioners would by no means leave him; but rode along after him, and proſecuted their buſineſs with all the application imaginable: For they ſaw the King, their Maſter, was in Priſon, and his Realm ſo haraſſed on all hands, that there was no hope left, without a Peace could be purchaſed. On the other ſide, King Edward is ſaid to have demanded ſuch high things, and ſo prejudicial to the Realm of France, that the Regent's council could not in Honour admit of them. So that all the while of the Treaty, which laſted for about 17 days, the Commiſſioners ſent every day Poſt to the Duke of Normandy, who lay then at Paris, an account of the Progreſs they had made, ſtill deſiring an enlargement of their Powers. And this account of theirs was always ſecretly inſpected and canvaſſed in the Regents Chamber, and their Commiſſions further enlarged and ſent unto them in writing, Witneſſed and Sealed by the Regent and his Council.

[e] Froiſ. ibid.

Now was King Edward come near to Chartres, the Ambaſſadors ſtill following him with their Propoſals, and then again, as frequently before, they made large offers,

there-

Honoratiss.o Viro Dn.o IOHANNI PEAKE, Militi, Orphanotrophij apud LONDON: Hospitij Christi dicti Præsidi Meritiss., nec non Dignissimo Dn.o Nathanaeli Hawes, Armigero, Ejusd. Hospitij Thesaurario, Reliquisq; illius Gubernatoribus Dignissimis, Colendissimisq; Hanc EDWARDI Tertij Figuram, veluti Θεσπεσίου & Educationis olim præbitæ Monumentū Gratus dicat Iosua Barnes.

Thus arm'd fierce EDWARD did his Troops advance,
Resolv'd to Wast ye Stubborne Realm of France:
But Gracious Heaven stops his enraged Hand,
And loudly pleads in Thunder for the Land.
EDWARD obeys his Great Creator's Will:
To yield to Heaven is but to Conquer still.

thereby to obtain a final Concluſion of the War, and to ſettle a firm and laſting Peace between the two Nations. But the King ſtill rejected all their Offers, being, as is ſaid, reſolved now to be Crowned King of France, and to live and die in that Eſtate. AN. DOM. 1360. An. Regni Angliæ XXXIV. Franciæ XXI.

But God who holds the Hearts of Princes in his Hands, and turns them like the Rivers in the South, having alſo limited the bounds of all Succeſs, began to make King Edward know at this time, that it was in vain to endeavour to reſiſt his Will; before whom Horſe and Armour are but as Stubble, and the Strength of the Mighty as a Thread of Tow, when it toucheth the Fire. For when the Duke of Lancaſters Perſwaſion could not mollifie his Mind, there fell a miraculous Adventure, which was judged no other than the Finger of God himſelf, and that wholly converted him. But firſt the Duke, who thô ſo renowned in War, was for his many Heroick and Princely Vertues [f] called the Good Duke of Lancaſter, began one Day ſeriouſly to move the Kings Mind to accept of the French Propoſals, ſaying, "Sir, the War which your Majeſty "hath thus long waged in France. hath been as yet to all Men wonderfull, and to your "Self favourable and glorious; But ſurely your Men only win Riches thereby, and "all the trouble and care, and expence and hazard, belong more immediately to your "Perſon. Sir, this War is not only a Gulf to devour the Treaſures of You and your "People, but alſo a great loſs of Time; for if all things are duely conſider'd, You "may chance to make War all the Days of your Life, and yet never come to the end "of your Deſign. Sir, in ſhort, ſince the Fortune of Battles is variable, and You may "perhaps loſe more in one Day than You have won in twenty Years; I would adviſe "your Majeſty to accept the Offers, which are now made unto You in a time where-"in You may leave the War both to your Honour and Advantage. Theſe reaſonable and prudent Words, thus utter'd with a Loyal Mind by the Duke of Lancaſter, for the Good of the King and his People, being ſeconded by the immediate influence of Heaven, fully wrought upon the enraged Prince and enclin'd him to Peace. But ſurely the Occaſion which wholly brought him over was very remarkable, if not miraculous; for preſently upon theſe Words, while yet the King was inexorable, and refus'd to give the French Commiſſioners any agreeable Anſwer, there [g] fell from Heaven ſuch a wonderfull Storm and Tempeſt of Thunder, Lightning, Rain and Hail among the Engliſh Army, that it ſeem'd as if the whole Fabrick of Nature was falling to pieces; and withall it was ſo exceſſive Cold at the ſame time, that it cannot be imagin'd; ſo that together with all theſe Arrows of Gods Anger, there periſhed no leſs than 6000 Horſes, and well-nigh a 1000 Men, among whom were ſeveral Perſons of Quality. Particularly the Lord Robert Morley was ſlain outright, and the Lord Guy Beauchamp, Eldeſt Son to the Earl of Warwick, being wounded to Death in this Storm, died thereof on the 28 day of April at the City of Vendoſme in Beauce; [h] where alſo he was buried in a Chappel behind the High-Altar toward the Eaſt, having a Fair Monument of Alabaſter, with his Pourtraicture thereon neatly carved, and over his Harneſs a Surcoat of his Arms, with this Inſcription on the Verge of his Monument, Icy Giſt Monſiegneur Guy de Beauchamp, Fitz de treſnoble & puiſſant Homme, Monſieur Thomas de Beauchamp Conte de Warwick, Mareſchal d' Angleterre, qui treſpaſſa le XXVIII jour d' Averil l' Ann. MCCCLX. The boldeſt Heart of all theſe Valiant Souldiers trembled at the apprehenſion of this Dreadfull Judgment: But King Edward like a Good and Pious Prince, look'd upon it as a loud Declaration of the Divine Pleaſure: Wherefore immediately alighting from his Horſe, he kneeled down on the ground, and caſting his Eyes toward the Church of our Lady of Chartres, made a ſolemn Vow to Almighty God, That he would now ſincerely and abſolutely incline his Mind to a final Peace with France, if he might obtain good Conditions; at which time alſo he made a Devout Confeſſion of his ſins, and ſo took up his Lodging in a Village near Chartres called Bretigny, where the French Commiſſioners being come the next day with more ample Inſtructions, the King was content to accept of Peace.

[f] Catal. of Hon. p.324.

[g] Froiſ. c. 211. f. 105. Du Cheſ. p.684. Mezeray p. 59. Walſing. hiſt. p.167 n.30 Knighton p. 2624. n.10. M.S. vet. Angl. in Bibl. C.C.C. Cantab. c. 230. Aſhmole p.660. Jacob. Meyer Annal. Flandr. l.13 p.184. & Odor. Rainal. & omnes.

[h] Dugd. Bar. 1 Vol. p.235. & id. Warwickſh. p.319. ſed in anno obitûs LI, malè ſcribitur utrobiq; pro LX, quod notandum.

The Treaty [i] was menaged between Edward Prince of Wales, and Charles Regent of France, their Proctors and Agents in the Name of both the Kings, theſe two Princes and all the Subjects of either Realm. Thoſe who were deputed on the Engliſh Part, were Sr. Reginald Cobham, Sr. Bartholomew Burwaſh, Sr. Frank van Hall Bannerets, Sr. Miles Stapleton, Sr. Richard la Vache, Sr. Nele Loring Knights, and others of the King of Englands Council. Thoſe other on the French ſide, were the Elect of Beauvais, Charles Lord Monmorency, Monſieur John le Meingre Marſhal of France, Monſieur Ainart de la Tour Lord of Viviers, Monſieur Ralph de Ravenal, Monſieur Simon de Bucy Knights, Monſieur Stephen de Paris, and Peter de la Charite Counſellours, with many Others deputed by the Dauphin.

[i] Aſhmole p.660

At

An. Dom. 1360. An. Regni Angliæ XXXIV. Franciæ XXI.

At first, namely on the Seventh of May, a Truce was agreed on, to continue till Michaelmas following, and thence till Michaelmas ensuing; which upon the Return of King Edward into England, was by Writs bearing Date the 24 of the said Month, commanded to be published throughout all the Sea-Ports in England; and by a like Writ notice was given to the Duke of Lancaster, to proclaim it thrô Gascoigne. And the next Day, viz. the 8 of May, the Articles relating to a Final Peace were agreed to on Behalf of both the Kings.

This is that Famous Treaty made at Bretigny near Chartres, so much spoken of by Writers, to which the Eldest Sons of England and France were Principal Parties, commonly called the Treaty of RENUNTIATION of both Kings; in regard that the King of France Renounced the Soveraignty of several Territories to King Edward; and he on the other side Renounced his Title to France and some other Places. As will more particularly appear from the Copy of the Treaty it self, as it was compared with the Original, kept at Paris by one that was Master of the Rolls there.[k] [k] Extant Gallicè apud Du Chesn. l. 15. p. 684. & Dr. Stillingfl. M.S. ad hunc titulum copia Tractatûs magnæ Pacis in Latino, inter Reges Angliæ & Franciæ factæ apud Bretigny juxta Carnotum, &c. Extant etiam Anglicè in MS. Doctoris Johan. Spencer Coll. C. C. Cantab. Magistri. Vid. Rot. de Tractatu Pacis Franciæ ad an. 34. Ed. 3. m. 10.

X. "EDWARD, Eldest Son of the Noble King of England, Lord of Ireland and "of Aquitain, Prince of Wales, Duke of Cornwall and Earl of Chester, To all who shall "see these present Letters, Greeting. WE give You to understand, that of all the "Debates and Discords whatsoever, moved and commenced between our most Re- "doubted Lord and Father, the King of England on the one Part, and our Cousin the "King, and his Eldest Son, Regent of the Realm of France on the other Part, for "the benefit of Peace; it is ACCORDED, on the Eight of May in the Year of "of Grace, One Thousand Three Hundred and Sixty, at Bretigny near Chartres, in "Manner and Form following, viz.

1. "Imprimis, That the King of England, besides what he holdeth in Guienne and "Gascoigne, shall have for himself and his Heirs for ever, all those things which fol- "low, to hold them in like Manner, as the King of France, or his Son, or any of his "Ancestors, Kings of France did hold them; that is to say, what was held in Sove- "raignty, to be held in Soveraignty, and what in Demaine, in Demain, for the Times "and in the Manner hereunder specified. The City, Castle and Earldom of Poictiers, "and all the Land and Country of Poicton, likewise the Fief of Thoüars, and the Land "of Belleville; the City and Castle of Saintes, and all the Land and Country of "Saintogne, on this side and on that side the Charente, [l] with the Town and Castle "of Rochelle and their Appurtenances: The City and Castle of Agen, and the Land "and Country of Agenois. The City and Castle, and the whole Earldom of Perigeux, "and the Land and Country of Perigort: The City and Castle of Limoges, and the "Land and Country of Limosin: The City and Castle of Cahors, and the Land and "Country of [m] Cahorsin: The City, Castle and Country of Tarbe: The Land, Coun- "try and Earldom of Bigorre: The Earldom, Land and Country of Gaure: The Ci- "ty and Castle of Angoulesme, and the Earldom, Land and Country of Angoulesmois: "The City and Castle of Rodes, and the Land and Country of Rovergue. And if "there are any Lords, as the Earl of Foix, the Earl of Armagnac, the Earl of L' Isle, "the [n] Vicount of Carmaine, the Earl of Perigort, the Vicount of Limoges and O- "thers, who hold any Lands or Places within the Bounds of the said Places, they shall "make Homage to the King of England, and all other Services and Duties, due because "of their Lands or Places, in like manner, as they have done in time passed.

[l] This Clause omitted in Du Chesne's Copy; sed ex Johannis Regis Franciæ Recapitulatione & aliis addo & res ipsa probat la Rochelle Anglis traditam

[m] i.e. Quercy.

[n] Hunc addo eâdem ratione, quâ clausulam superiorem.

2. "Item, That the King of England shall have all that which the King of Eng- "land, or any of the Kings of England anciently held in the Town of Monstrevil on "the Sea.

3. "Item, the King of England shall have the Earldom of Ponthieu all entirely, saving "and excepting, that if any things of the said County and its Appurtenances have "been alienated by the Kings of England, which have been to other Persons, than to "the King of France, then the King of France shall not be obliged to render them to "the King of England. And if the said Alienations have been made to the Kings of "France which have been for the time, without any [o] Mean, and the King of France "holds them at present in his Hand, he shall leave them to the King of England en- "tirely; excepting that if the Kings of France have had them in Exchange for other "Lands, the King of England shall deliver to the King of France that which he had "by Exchange, or quit those things so alienated. But if the Kings of England which have "been for the time, have alienated or conveyed any things to other Persons, than to "the King of France, he shall not be obliged to restore them. Also if the things a- "bovesaid owe Homages, the King shall give them to another, who shall do Homage "to the King of England, and if the things do not owe Homage, the King of France

[o] i.e. Middle Person.

shall

" ſhall put in a Tenant who ſhall do him Service, within a Year following after he ſhall " be gone from Calais. AN. DOM. 1360. An. Regni Angliæ XXXIV. Franciæ XXI.

4. " Item, That the King of England ſhall have the Caſtle and Town of Calais, " The Caſtle, Town and Lordſhip of Merk, the Caſtles, Towns and Lordſhips of San- " gate, Cologne, Hames, Wale and Oye, with the Lands, Woods, Mariſhes, Rivers, " Rents, Lordſhips, Advouſons of Churches, and all other Appurtenances and Places " lying between the Limits and Bounds following. That is to ſay, to the Border of " the River before Graveling, and ſo by the ſame River round about Langle, and by " the River which runs beyond the Poil, and by the ſame River which falls into the " great Lake of Guiſnes as far as Fretun, and thence by the Vally about [p] Calculi " Hill, encloſing that Hill, and ſo to the Sea, with Sangate and all its Appurtenances.

[p] i.e. Chalkhill.

5. " Item, That the King of England ſhall have the Caſtle, Town, and the whole " Earldom of Guiſnes entirely, with all the Lands, Towns, Caſtles, Fortreſſes, Places, " Men, Homages, Lordſhips, Woods, Foreſts and Rights thereof as entirely, as the " Earl of Guiſnes laſt deceaſed had them in his Time: and that the Churches and the " good People being within the Limitations of the ſaid Earldom of Guiſnes, of Calais " and Merk, and of other Places aboveſaid, ſhall obey the King of England in like man- " ner, as they obey'd the King of France, or the Earl of Guiſnes for the time being. " All which things of Merk and Calais being contained in this preſent Article, and the " Article next preceding, the King of England ſhall hold in Demaine, except the He- " ritage of the Churches, which ſhall remain to the ſaid Churches entirely whereſoe- " ver they be; and ſo except the Heritages of other People of the Country of Merk " and Calais, ſeated without the ſaid Town of Calais, unto the value of an Hundred " Pounds per annum of currant Money of that Country and under: Which Inheritances " ſhall remain to them even to the Value aboveſaid and under. But the Habitations " and Inheritances being within the ſaid Town of Calais with their Appurtenances, ſhall " remain to the King of England in Demain, to order them after his Pleaſure. And " alſo to the Inhabitants in the Countie, Town and Land of Guiſnes, ſhall remain all " their Demains entirely and fully, and ſhall return to them again forthwith, ſave what " is ſaid of the Frontiers, Metes and Bounds, in the laſt preceding Article.

6. " Item, It is accorded, that the ſaid King of England and his Heirs ſhall have " and hold all the Iſles adjacent to the Lands, Countries and Places above-named; " together with all other Iſlands, which the King of England holdeth at this preſent.

7. " Item, It is accorded, that the ſaid King of France, and his Eldeſt Son the Regent, " for them, and for all their Heirs and Succeſſors, as ſoon as may be, and at the fur- " theſt by the Feaſt of St. Michael next coming in one Year, without fraud or deceit, " ſhall render, yield and deliver to the ſaid King of England, and to all his Heirs and " Succeſſors, and ſhall convey unto them all the Honours, Obediences, Homages, Al- " legiances, Vaſſalages, Fiefs, Services, Recogniſances, Rights, mere and mixt Empire, " and all manner of Juriſdictions High and Low, Reſorts, Safeguards, Advouſons, Pa- " tronages of Churches, and all manner of Dominions and Superiorities, and all the " Right which they have, or may have had, which did appertain, doth appertain, or " might appertain by any Cauſe, Title, or Colour of Right to them, to the Kings, " and to the Crown of France, by occaſion of the Cities, Counties, Caſtles, Towns, " Lands, Countries, Iſles and Places before-named, and of all their Appurtenances, and " Dependances whereſoever they ſhall be, and of every of them without retaining [or " holding back] any thing to them, to their Heirs or Succeſſors, or to the Kings, or to " the Crown of France. And alſo the ſaid King and his Eldeſt Son ſhall command by " their Letters Patents all Archbiſhops, Biſhops, and other Prelates of Holy Church, " and alſo all Earls, Vicounts, Barons, Nobles, Citizens, and Others whatſoever of " the Cities, Counties, Lands, Countries, Iſles and Places above-named, that they o- " bey the King of England and his Heirs, at their certain Commandment in ſuch ſort, " as they have obeyed the Kings and the Crown of France. [[q] And by the ſame their " Letters ſhall acquit and diſcharge them in the beſt manner that may be, of all Ho- " mages, Fealties, Oaths, Obligations, Subjections, and Promiſes, in any ſort by any of " them made to the King and Crown of France.]

[q] This Clauſe added out of King Johns Recapitulation of the Articles.

8. " Item, It is agreed, that the King of England ſhall have the Cities, Counties, " Caſtles, Lands, Countreys, Iſles and Places above-named, with all their Appurte- " nances and Appendages, whereſoever they ſhall be to hold to him and to his Heirs and " Succeſſors, Hereditably and for ever in Demain, that which the Kings of France have " had there in Demain; and alſo in Fiefs, Services, Soveraignties or Reſorts, that " which the Kings of France have had there in ſuch manner: Saving notwithſtanding

An. Dom. 1360. An. Regni Angliæ XXXIV. Franciæ XXI.

"what was ſaid above in the Article of Calais and Merk. And if of the Cities, Coun"ties, Caſtles, Lands, Countries, Iſles and Places above-named, or any of the Sove"raignties, Rights, Mere and Mixt Empire, Juriſdictions and Profits whatſoever, "which any King of England did there hold, or their Appurtenances and Appendages
"whatſoever, any Alienations Donations, Obligations or Charges, have been made by "any of the Kings of France, which have been for the Time within Seventy Years
"paſt, by whatſoever Form or Cauſe it be, that all ſuch Donations, Obligations or "Charges, are now at this time, and ſhall be henceforth made void, repeal'd, aboli-
"ſhed and annihilated, and all things ſo given, alienated or charged, ſhall really and de "facto be reſtored and delivered to the ſaid King of England, or to his Special Depu"ties, in the ſame entire Condition they were to the Kings of England before or "ſince the ſaid 70 Years, without Fraud or Deceit, ſo ſoon as may be, and at the "fartheſt by the Feaſt of St. Michael next enſuing within one Year: To be held by the "ſaid King of England, and all his Heirs and Succeſſors for ever, by Right of Inheri"tance in manner above-written. Except what is ſaid before in the Article of Pon-
"thieu, which ſhall remain in Force; and ſaving and excepting all thoſe things given "and alienated to Churches, which ſhall remain peaceably in all the Countries here a"bove and under named: Provided that the Rectors of the ſaid Churches ſhall dili"gently pray for the ſaid Kings as for their Founders, wherewith their Conſciences are "charged.

9. "Item, It is agreed, that the King of England ſhall have and hold all the Cities,
"Towns, Caſtles and Countries above-named, which anciently the Kings of England
"did not hold, in the ſame ſtate and manner, as the King of France or his Children "hold them at preſent.

10. "Item, It is agreed, that if within the Bounds of the ſaid Countries, which did
"anciently pertain to the Kings of England, there ſhall be any Places, which otherwiſe
"belonged not to the Kings of England, but were poſſeſſed by the King of France
"at the day of the Battle of Poictiers, which was the 19 Day of September, in the "Year One Thouſand three Hundred Fifty and Six, they ſhall be, and remain to the "King of England and his Heirs in manner as before.

11. "Item, It is agreed, that the King of France, and his Eldeſt Son the Regent,
"for themſelves and for their Heirs, and all the Kings of France and their Succeſſors
"for ever, ſhall without deceit, as ſoon as may be, and at the furtheſt by the Feaſt of "St. Michael next enſuing in one Year, render and deliver unto the King of England,
"and to all his Heirs and Succeſſors, and ſhall convey unto them all the Honours, Re-
"galities, Obediences, Homages, Allegiances, Vaſſalages, Fiefs, Services, Recogni"ſances, Oaths, Rights, Mere and Mixt Empire, all manner of Juriſdictions high and "low, Reſorts, Safeguards, Dominions and Soveraignties, which did pertain, or do per"tain, or might any ways pertain to the Kings and Crown of France, or to any o"ther Perſon becauſe of the King or Crown of France, at any time in thoſe Cities, "Counties, Caſtles, Lands, Countries, Iſles and Places above-named, or in any of "them, and in their Appurtenances and Appendages whatſoever, or in any of the Per-"ſons, Vaſſals or Subjects whatſoever, whether Princes, Dukes, Earls, Vicounts, "Archbiſhops, Biſhops, and other Prelates of the Church, Barons, Nobles and others
"whatſoever, without retaining in them, or reſerving any thing to Themſelves, their "Heirs or Succeſſors to the Crown of France, or to any other Perſon whatſoever:
"Whereby they, their Heirs or Succeſſors, or any King of France, may challenge or "demand any thing in time to come of the King of England, his Heirs and Succeſ-
"ſors, or of any of the Vaſſals and Subjects aforeſaid, in regard of the Countries and "Places above-named: So as all the above-named Perſons, and their Heirs and Succeſ-
"ſors for ever, ſhall be Liege-men and Subjects to the King of England, and to his "Heirs and Succeſſors; and that the King of England, his Heirs and Succeſſors, ſhall
"Have and Hold all the Perſons, Cities, Counties, Lands, Countries, Iſles, Caſtles
"and Places above-named, and all their Appurtenances and Appendages: And the Pre-
"miſes ſhall remain unto them fully, freely and for ever, in their Dominion, Soveraign-
"ty, Obeiſance, Allegiance and Subjection, as the Kings of France at any time ever "had or held them. And that the ſaid King of England, his Heirs and Succeſſors, "ſhall have and hold for ever all the Countries above-named with their Appurtenances "and Appendages, and other Places ſpecified before, with all Franchiſe and perpetual "Liberty, as Sovereign and Liege-Lords, as Neighbours to the King and Realm of "France, without recogniſing any Sovereign, or doing any Obedience, Homage, Reſort
"and Subjection; and without doing in any time to come, any Service or Recogniſance

"to

"to the Kings, or to the Crown of France, for the Cities, Counties, Caſtles, Lands, "Countries, Iſles, Places and Perſons above-named or for any of them. AN. DOM. 1360. An. Regni Angliæ XXXIV. Franciæ XXI.

12. "Item, it is agreed, that the King of France and his Eldeſt Son ſhall Renounce "expreſsly the ſaid Reſorts, and Sovereignties, and all the Right, which they have "and may have, in all thoſe things, which by this preſent Treaty ought to belong "to the King of England. And likewiſe the King of England and his Eldeſt Son "ſhall renounce expreſly all thoſe things, which by this preſent Treaty ought not to "be deliver'd to, or abide with, the King of England, and eſpecially the Name and "Right of the Crown and Kingdom of France, and the Homage, Sovereignty, and "Demain of the Dukedom of Normandy, of the Dukedom of Tourain, and of the "Counties of Anjou and Maine, the Sovereignty and Homage of the Dukedom of "Bretagne, the Sovereignty and Homage of the Country and Earldom of Flanders, "and all other Demands, which the King of England hath made, or could make, a-"gainſt the King of France, for whatſoever cauſe it may be, ſaving and excepting "what by this Preſent Treaty ought to remain, or to be rendred to the King of "England and his Heirs. And the two Kings ſhall convey, reſign, and leave the one "to the other for ever, all the Right that each of them hath, or may have in all "thoſe things, which by this Preſent Treaty ought to remain, or to be rendred to "each of them. And the two Kings ſhall confer and appoint together at Calais con-"cerning the Time and Place, where and when the ſaid Renuntiations ſhall be "made.

13. "Item, To the end that this Preſent Treaty may be the more briefly accom-"pliſhed, it is agreed, that the King of England ſhall cauſe the King of France to be "convey'd to Calais within three Weeks after the Nativity of St. John Baptiſt, "next coming (all juſt Impediment ceaſing) at the expence of the King of England, ex-"cepting the Charges of the Houſhold of the King of France.

14. "Item, It is agreed, that the King of France ſhall pay to the King of England "Three Millions of Crowns of Gold (two whereof countervail a Noble of the Money "of England;) and there ſhall be paid to the ſaid King of England or his Deputies, "ſix Hundred Thouſand Crowns at Calais within Four Months, to be counted after "the King of France ſhall arrive at Calais: And within a Year thence next follow-"ing ſhall be paid Four Hundred Thouſand Crowns, ſuch as aforeſaid, at the City of "London in England; and from thence every Year next following there ſhall always be "paid Four Hundred Thouſand Crowns more, ſuch, as aforeſaid, in the ſaid City, till the "whole Three Millions ſhall be fully paid.

15. "Item, It is agreed, that at the Payment of the ſaid ſix Hundred Thouſand "Crowns at Calais, and on the Delivery of the Hoſtages here under-named to the King "of England, within Four Months, accounting after that the King of France ſhall come "to Calais, as is ſaid, with the Town, Caſtle, and Fortreſſes of Rochelle, and the "Caſtles, Fortreſſes, and Towns of the Earldom of Guiſnes, and all their appurtenances "and Dependencies, the Perſon of the ſaid King ſhall be wholly acquitted from Pri-"ſon, and come into his own Power, without any Impeachment; but he ſhall not arm "himſelf, nor his People, againſt the King of England; till the time, that he ſhall have "accompliſhed what he is obliged unto by this preſent Treaty. And the Hoſtages, "as well Priſoners, taken at the Battle of Poictiers, as others, who remain for the King "of France, are as followeth: That is to ſay, Monſieur Lewis Earl of Anjou, Mon-"ſieur John Earl of Poictiers, Sons to the King of France, the Duke of Orleans Bro-"ther to the ſaid King, the Duke of Bourbon, the Earl of Blois and Lewis his Bro-"ther, the Earl of Alenſon, and Monſieur Peter of Alenſon his Brother, the Earl of "St. Paul, the Earl of Harcourt, the Earl of Porcien, the Earl of Valentinois, "the Earl of Brayne, the Earl of Vaudemont, the Earl of Foreſt, the Vicount of "Beaumont, the Lord of Coucy, the Lord of Garencieres, the Dauphin of Auvergne, "the Lord of Hangeſt, the Lord of Monmorency, Monſieur William de Craon, Mon-"ſieur Lewis of Harcourt, and Monſieur John de Ligny. And as for the Names of the "Priſoners taken at the Battle of Poictiers, they are theſe; Philip of France, the Earl of "Eu, the Earl of Longeville, the Earl of Ponthieu, the Earl of Tancarville, the Earl of "[r] Joigny, the Earl of Sancerre, the Earl of Dammartin, the Earl of Ventadour, the "Earl of Salebruche, the Earl of Auxerre, the Earl of Vendoſme, the Lord of Craon, "the Lord of Derual, the Marſhal D' Endreghan, and the Lord of Aubigny.

16. "Item, It is agreed, that the ſaid Sixteen Priſoners, who are to remain Hoſtages "for the King of France, as is ſaid, ſhall by this means be diſcharged of their Impri-"ſonment without paying any Ranſom for the time paſt, in caſe they have not al-

[r] Ità Corrigo Ligny apud Du Cheſne authoritate M. SS. Anglici Doctoris Spencer, quod legit Oigny, & Latini Doctoris Stillingfleet, quod legit expreſsè Joigny: Præter quod illius nomen inter Captivos appareret, uti probâſſe meminimus.

An. Dom. 1360. An. Regni Angliæ XXXIV. Franciæ XXI.

"ready agreed on ſome certain Ranſom, by Covenant made before the Third day of "May laſt paſt: And if any of them be out of England, and ſhall not render himſelf "as an Hoſtage at Calais, within the Firſt Month after the ſaid three Weeks fol- "lowing the Feaſt of St. John (all juſt Impediment ceaſing) he ſhall not at all be "diſcharged his Priſon, but ſhall be Conſtrained by the King of France, to re- "turn into England, as Priſoner, or to pay the Penalty promiſed by him, [f] if he did "not return.

[f] Du Cheſne & incurred by his Default in not returning.

17. "Item, It is agreed, that in lieu of the ſaid Hoſtages, which ſhall not come to "Calais, or which ſhall die, or depart out of the Power of the King of England, with- "out leave, the King of France is obliged to ſend others of a like Eſtate with them, "as near as may be, within three Months, next after that the Bailiff of Amiens, or "the Mayor of St. Omers ſhall be certify'd hereof by Letters of the ſaid King of "England.

[t] Du Cheſne hunc articulum præcedenti adjungit: Nos ſequimur M. SS. ſuprà citata.

18. "And the [t] King of France at his Departure from Calais, may take in his Com- "pany Ten of the Hoſtages, ſuch as the two Kings ſhall agree upon: And it ſhall "ſuffice, that of the foreſaid Number of [u] Fourty, there ſhall remain the full Number of "Thirty.

[u] This ſhews, that in the XV Article, where in all the Copies, French, Engliſh, and Latine, 'tis read Charles of Blois, or his Brother, and the Earl of Alenſon, or Monſieur Peter of Alenſon, his Brother; in both places it ſhould be and for or (as I have corrected it) or elſe the Number of the Hoſtages amounts but to 38, and not to 40, as it is here expreſly ſaid.

19. "Item, It is agreed, that the King of France, within Three Months after he "ſhall be gone from Calais, ſhall ſend unto Calais for Hoſtages Four Perſons of the "Town of Paris, and Two Perſons of every other of the Towns, whoſe Names fol- "low; that is to ſay, of St. Omers, Arras, Amiens, Beauvais, Lille, Douay, Tournay, "Rheims, Châlons, Troyes, Chartres, Tholouſe, Lyon, Orleans, Compiegne, Rouën, "Caën, Tours, and Bourges; and that they ſhall be the moſt ſufficient of the ſaid Towns "for the accompliſhment of this preſent Treaty.

20. "Item, It is agreed, that the King of France ſhall be brought from England to "Calais, and ſhall ſtay at Calais Four Months after his coming; but he ſhall not pay "any thing the Firſt Month becauſe of his Keeping: But for every other Month "following, that he ſhall ſtay at Calais, thrô default of himſelf, or of his Subjects, he "ſhall pay for his Keeping ſix Thouſand Ryals, ſuch as are current at this preſent "in France, before his Departure from Calais; and ſo proportionably for the time he "ſhall ſtay there.

21. "Item, It is agreed, that as ſoon as may be, within One Year next after that "the King of France ſhall depart from Calais, the Lord John Earl of Monford, ſhall "have the Earldom of Monford with all the appurtenances, he doing for the ſame "Liege Homage to the King of France, and all ſuch Duties and Services, which a "good and Loyal Liege-Vaſſal ought to do to his Liege Lord, becauſe of the ſaid "Earldom. And alſo his other Heritages ſhall be rendred unto him, which are not "of the Dutchy of Bretagne, he doing Homage, or other Duty therefore, as it apper- "taineth: And if he will challenge any thing in any of the Inheritances, which are of the "ſaid Dutchy, beſides the Country of Bretagne, good and ſpeedy Reaſon ſhall be done "him by the Court of France.

22. Item, Concerning the Queſtion as to the Demaine of the Dutchy of Bretagne, "which is between the ſaid John of Monford on the one Party, and Charles of Blois "on the other Party, it is agreed, that the two Kings having called before them, or "their Deputies, the Principal Parties of Blois and Monford, ſhall by themſelves, or "Special Deputies, as ſoon as may be, inform themſelves of the Right of both Par- "ties, and do their beſt to ſet them at an Agreement, touching what is in Controverſie "between them. And in caſe the ſaid Kings by themſelves, or their Deputies, ſhall "not be able to bring them to an Agreement within One Year, next after that the "King of France ſhall be arrived at Calais, then the Friends of the one Party and of "the other ſhall diligently inform themſelves of the Right of the Parties in manner "aboveſaid, and ſhall endeavour to bring the ſaid Parties to an Agreement to the beſt "of their Power, and as ſoon as may be. And if they cannot bring them to an Agree- "ment within half a Year next following, they ſhall then report unto the ſaid two "Kings, or to their Deputies, all that which they ſhall have found about the Right "of the Parties, and touching the points of Diſcord, which ſhall remain between them "both. And then the two Kings by themſelves, or their Special Deputies, as ſoon "as may be, ſhall ſet the ſaid Parties at an Agreement, or ſhall declare their final ſen- "tence about the Right of the one Party and of the other, and the ſame ſhall be put "in Execution by the two Kings. And in caſe they cannot do this within half a "Year next following, then the ſaid Principal Parties of Blois and Montford, ſhall do "what they ſhall think beſt; and the Friends of the one Part and of the other, ſhall aid "either "either Part, as they pleaſe, without any Impeachment from the ſaid Kings, and "without any Damage, Blame, or Reproof by either of them at any time for the cauſe "aforeſaid. And if it ſo happen, that one of the ſaid Parties will not ſufficiently ap- "pear before the ſaid Kings, or their Deputies, at the time which ſhall be appointed for "them; And alſo in caſe, that the ſaid Kings, or their Deputies, ſhall have ordain- "ed and declared, that the ſaid Parties ſhould be at concord, or ſhall declare their "ſentence for the Right of the one Party, and either of the ſaid Parties will not a- "gree unto the ſame, nor obey the ſaid Declaration; then both the ſaid Kings ſhall "be againſt him with all their Power, and aid the other Party, which is content to "agree and to obey. But the two Kings ſhall in no caſe, neither in their own pro- "per Perſons, nor by others, make, or enterprize War one againſt the other for the "cauſe aforeſaid: And always the Sovereignty and Homage of the ſaid Dukedom ſhall "remain to the King of France.

23. "Item, That all the Lands, Countries, Towns, Caſtles, and other Places yield- "ed over to the ſaid Kings, ſhall be in ſuch Liberties and Franchiſes, as they are at "this preſent: And theſe Franchiſes ſhall be confirmed by the ſaid Lords, the Kings, "or by their Succeſſors, and by every of them, ſo often as they ſhall be duly required "thereto; if they be not contrary to this preſent Agreement.

24. Item, that the ſaid King of France, ſo ſoon as he can, and at the fartheſt "within one Year next after that he ſhall depart from Calais, ſhall without deceit ren- "der and cauſe to be rendred de facto to Monſieur Philip of Navarre, and to all his "Publique Adherents, all the Towns, Caſtles, Forts, Lordſhips, Rights, Rents, Pro- "fits, Juriſdictions, and Places whatſoever, which the ſaid Monſieur Philip, as well "in his own Right, as in the Right of his Wife, or which the ſaid Adherents, do hold "or ought to hold in the Realm of France. Neither ſhall the ſaid King do unto "them at any time, Reproach, Dammage, or Impeachment for any thing done here- "tofore; but ſhall forgive them all Offences and Miſpriſions for the time paſt, by oc- "caſion of the War. And of this they ſhall have his Letters good and ſufficient, ſo "as the ſaid Monſieur Philip, and his ſaid Adherents ſhall return to his Homage, do "unto him their Duties, and be unto him Good and Loyal Vaſſals.

25. "Item, It is agreed, that the King of England for this time only may give un- "to whom it ſhall pleaſe him in Heritage, the Lands and Inheritance, which ſometimes "appertained to Godfry of Harcourt, to be held of the Duke of Normandy, or of any "other Lords, of whom they ſhould be holden of Right, by the Homages and Ser- "vices anciently accuſtomed.

26. "Item, It is agreed, that no Perſon, or Country, which have been of the Obedi- "ence of the One Party, and by this Agreement ſhall come to the Obedience of the O- "ther Party, ſhall be Impeached for any thing done in time paſt.

27. "Item, It is agreed, that the Lands of the Baniſhed and Adherents of the One "Party and of the Other, and alſo of the Churches of the One Kingdom and of the "Other, and all they, who are diſinherited or expelled from their Lands and Heri- "tages, or are charged with any Penſion, Taillage or Debt, or otherwiſe grieved in any "manner whatſoever, becauſe of this War, ſhall be reſtored intirely to the ſame Rights "and Poſſeſſions, which they had before the War began. And that all manner of "Forfeitures, Debts, and Miſpriſions, done by them or any of them in the mean "time, ſhall be wholly pardon'd; and that theſe things ſhall be done as ſoon as may "be, effectually, and at the fartheſt within one Year next after that the King of France "ſhall be gone from Calais; excepting what was ſaid in the Article of Calais and Merks, "and other Places in the ſaid Article named; excepting alſo the Vicount of Fronſac, "and Monſieur John de Galard, who are not compriſed in this Article; but their "Goods and Heritages ſhall remain in the ſame State, wherein they were before this "preſent Treaty.

28. "Item, It is agreed, that the King of France ſhall effectually deliver unto the King "of England, as ſoon as may be, and at the fartheſt before the Feaſt of St. Michael the "Year next coming after his Departure from Calais, all the Cities, Towns, Countries, and "other Places abovenamed, which by this preſent Treaty ought to be deliver'd unto the "King of England.

29. "Item, It is agreed, that the Towns, Forts, and whole County of Ponthieu, "the Towns, Forts, and whole County of Montrevil, the City and Caſtle of Sainƈte, "the Caſtles, Towns, and Forts, and all that which the King holdeth in Demaine in "the Country of Sainƈtogne, on this ſide and beyond the Charente; the Caſtle and "City of Angouleſme; and the Caſtles, Forts, and Towns, which the King of France "hold-

An. Dom. 1360. An. Regni Angliæ XXXIV. Franciæ XXI.

"holdeth in Demaine, in the Country of Angouleſmois, with Letters and Mandates of "releaſing of Fees being deliver'd to the King of England, or to other eſpecially de- "puted for him; then the King of England at his own proper Coſts and Charges, ſhall "deliver all the Forts taken and poſſeſſed by himſelf, his Subjects, Adherents, and Allies, "in the Countries of * France, Anjou, Touraine, Maine, Berry, Auvergne, Burgundy, "Champaigne, Picardy, and Normandy, and in all other Parts, Lands, and Places of "the Realm of France, except thoſe of the Dutchy of Bretagne, and the Countries and "Lands, which by this preſent Treaty ought to belong and remain to the King of England.

* Liſle de la France.

30. "Item, It is agreed, that the King of France ſhall cauſe to be deliver'd to the "King of England, his Heirs, or Deputies, all the Towns, Caſtles, Forts, and other "Lands, Countries, and Places abovenamed, with their Appurtenances, at the proper "Coſts and Charges of the ſaid King of France; And alſo that if he ſhall have any "Rebels, and ſuch as will not obey, to render, yield up, or reſtore to the King of "England, any Cities, Towns, Caſtles, Countries, Places, or Forts, which by this "Preſent Treaty ought to appertain unto Him, then the King of France ſhall be obli- "ged to cauſe them to be deliver'd to the King of England at his own Charges: And "in like manner the King of England ſhall cauſe thoſe Forts, which by this preſent "Treaty ought to appertain to the King of France, to be deliver'd at his own Charges: "the ſaid Kings and their Subjects with them, ſhall be obliged mutually to aid one a- "nother in this reſpect, if they ſhall be thereto required, at the Wages of the Par- "ty ſo Requiring: Which ſhall be a Floren of Florence per diem for a Knight, half "a Floren for an Eſquire, and for others proportionably. And of the ſurplus of double "Wages, it is agreed, that if the pay aforeſaid ſhall be too little, reſpect being had to "the Price of Victuals in the Country, it ſhall be done at the Appointment of Four "Knights elected thereto, that is to ſay, of two on the One Party, and two on "the Other.

31. "Item, It is agreed, that all the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, and other Prelates of "Holy Church ſhall in regard of their Temporalities be ſubject to that King of the two, "under whom they hold their Temporalities: And if they have Temporalities under both "the Kings, they ſhall be ſubject to each of the two Kings, for the Temporalities which "they hold of either of them.

32. "Item, It is agreed, that good Alliance, Friendſhip and Confederation ſhall be "made between the two Kings of France and of England, and their Realms, in main- "taining the Honour and Conſcience of the One King and of the Other, notwithſtanding "any Confederations, which they have on this ſide, or beyond the Sea with any Perſons, "whether of Scotland or Flanders, or of any other Country whatſoever.

33. "Item, It is agreed, that the King of France and the Regent, his Eldeſt Son, "for themſelves and for their Heirs, Kings of France, ſhall, as much as may be done, "forſake, and altogether depart from the Alliances, which they have with the Scots, "and ſhall promiſe, as much as may be, that neither they nor their Heirs, nor the Kings "of France for the time being, ſhall give or lend to the King of Scotland, or to the "Subjects thereof, preſent, or to come, any aid, favour, or comfort, againſt the ſaid "King of England, or againſt his Heirs and Succeſſors, or againſt his Realm or Subjects "in any ſort: And that they ſhall not make any Alliances with the ſaid Scots againſt "the ſaid King of England and Realm of England in time to come. And likewiſe the "King of England and his Eldeſt Son, ſo much as it can or may be done, ſhall forſake "and depart from all thoſe Alliances, which they have with the Flemmings, and ſhall "promiſe, that neither they, nor their Heirs, nor the Kings of England for the time be- "ing, ſhall give or lend to the Flemmings, preſent, or to come, any aid, favour, or "comfort againſt the King of France, his Heirs, or Succeſſors, or againſt his "Kingdom, or Subjects in any ſort: And that they ſhall not make any Alliances "with the ſaid Flemmings againſt the ſaid King and Realm of France in time to come.

34. "Item, It is agreed, that the Collations and Proviſions made by the One Par- "ty and by the other, of Benefices falling void during the War, ſhall hold good and "remain in Force: And that the Fruits, Iſſues, and Revenues, received and levied "of any Benefices, and other Temporalities whatſoever, in the ſaid Realms of France "and England, by the One Party, or by the Other, during the ſaid Wars, ſhall be quit- "ted on both ſides.

35. "Item, that the Kings aforeſaid ſhall be obliged to cauſe to be confirmed all the "Matters aforeſaid by our Holy Father the Pope, and they ſhall be Ratified by Oaths, "Sentences, and Cenſures of the Court of Rome, and by all other Tyes in the "moſt binding manner that may be: And there ſhall be obtained from the Court

of

"of Rome, Diſpenſations, Abſolutions, and Letters, touching the Accompliſh"ment and Perfection of this Preſent Treaty; and they ſhall be deliver'd to the "Parties, at the fartheſt within three Weeks after the King ſhall be Arrived at "Calais.

36. "Item, That all the Subjects of the ſaid Kings, which will ſtudy at the ſtudies
"and Univerſities of the Realms of France and of England, ſhall enjoy the Privileges "and Liberties of the ſaid ſtudies and Univerſities, in like manner, as they might have "done before the Preſent Wars, and as they do at preſent.

37. "Item, To the end, that the Matters aforeſaid treated and diſcourſed, may be "more ſtable, firm and valid, there ſhall be done and given theſe Confirmations fol"lowing, that is to ſay, Letters ſealed with the Seals of the ſaid Kings, and of their
"Eldeſt Sons, the beſt that can be made by the Councils of the ſaid Kings: And the "ſaid Kings, and their Eldeſt Sons, and their other Children, and others of the Line"age of the ſaid Kings, and other Noblemen of their Realms, to the number of Twen"ty, on either Party ſhall ſwear, that they will obſerve and endeavour to maintain, as "much as concerneth each of them, without fraud or deceit, the ſaid Matters treated "and agreed on; and accompliſh them without ever going to the Contrary, and with"out empeaching the performance thereof: And if there be any Perſons of the ſaid
"Realms of France and of England, who ſhall rebell, or will not accord to the Pre-
"miſes, the ſaid Kings ſhall uſe all their ſaid Power of Body, Goods and Counſel, to "reduce the ſaid Rebels to true Obedience, according to the Form and Tenor of the "ſaid Treaty. And moreover the ſaid Kings ſhall ſubmit themſelves, their Heirs and "Realms to the Correction of our Holy Father the Pope, that he may conſtrain by "Sentences and Cenſures of the Church, and other due ways, Him who ſhall rebell,
"according as Reaſon ſhall require. And among the Confirmations and Securities afore-
"ſaid, the ſaid Kings and their Heirs ſhall renounce by Faith and by Oath all War and all
"Proceedure of Fact: And if thrô the Diſobedience, Rebellion, or Power of any Subjects of "the Realm of France, or any juſt Cauſe, the King of France, or his Heirs or any of them
"ſhall not be able to accompliſh all the Premiſes, the King of England and his Heirs, or any "of them, ſhall not nor ought not to make War againſt the ſaid King of France, nor his "Heirs, nor his Realm; but both together ſhall endeavour to bring the Rebels to true O"bedience, and to accompliſh the Premiſes: And if any of the Realm or Obeiſance of the "King of England will not reſtore the Caſtles, Towns or Forts which they hold in "the Realm of France, and obey the Treaty aforeſaid, or for juſt cauſe cannot accom-
"pliſh that, which He ought to do by this preſent Treaty, neither the King of France,
"nor his Heirs, nor any for them, ſhall make any War upon the King of England or "his Realm, but both together ſhall put to their Power, to recover the Caſtles, Forts
"and Towns aforeſaid, and to be a Means, that all Obedience and Accompliſhment
"may be done to the foreſaid Treaties: And there ſhall alſo be done and given of "the one Party and of the Other, according to the Nature of the Fact, all manner of "Confirmations and Securities, that they can think on or deviſe, as well by the "Pope, and the College of the Court of Rome as otherwiſe, perpetually to hold and "preſerve the Peace, and all other Matters here-above recorded.

38. "Item, It is agreed by the preſent Treaty and Accord, that all other Accords, Treaties
"or Conferences, if any have been made or debated in time paſt, ſhall be null and of no
"Force, and altogether made void; neither may the Parties at any time relieve them-
"ſelves, nor make any Complaint the one againſt the other, on occaſion of the ſaid
"Treaties or Accords, if any ſuch hath been as is ſaid.

39. "Item, That this preſent Treaty ſhall be approved, ſworn and confirmed by "the two Kings at Calais, when they ſhall be there in Proper Perſon: And after that "the King of France ſhall be gone from Calais, and ſhall be within his own Power,
"the ſaid King of France, within one Month next following his ſaid Departure, ſhall
"make Letters Patents Confirmatory of the ſame, and ſuch others as ſhall ſeem ne-
"ceſſary, and ſhall ſend and deliver them at Calais to the ſaid King of England or "his Deputies in the ſaid Place: And alſo the ſaid King of England, when he receives
"the ſaid Letters Confirmatory, ſhall deliver back his Letters Confirmatory, like unto "them, to the King of France.

40. "Item, It is agreed, that neither of the Kings ſhall procure, or cauſe to be pro"cured by Himſelf or Others, that any Innovations or Grievances be done by the "Church of Rome, or others of Holy Church, whoſoever they be, againſt this preſent "Treaty, upon either of the ſaid Kings, their Coadjutors, Adherents or Allies what"ſoever; nor upon their Lands or Subjects, by occaſion of War, nor for other Cauſe,

"nor

An. Dom. 1360. An. Regni Angliæ XXXIV. Franciæ XXI.

"nor for Services, which the ſaid Coadjutors, Adherents or Allies have done to the "ſaid Kings, or any of them: And if our ſaid Holy Father the Pope, or any other "would do ſo; the two ſaid Kings ſhall hinder it to their Power ſincerely without fraud.

41. "Item, Concerning the Hoſtages which ſhall be deliver'd to the King of Eng- "land at Calais, and concerning the Manner and Time of their Departure, the two "Kings ſhall determin at Calais.

XI. Theſe Articles being thus agreed on, firſt by the Commiſſioners of King Edward, and of the Regent of France, were alſo after that allowed by both the Principals; thô the Regent is ſaid to have yielded thereto in a manner by Force and Conſtraint, becauſe he ſaw the Realm was no longer able to ſubſiſt, amidſt thoſe Deſolations and Ruines which the War brought. However ſending back the Teſtimony of his Hand and Seal, that he had conſented thereto, in order to the full Completion of this Treaty, a Truce was taken to continue between the two Kings, their Adherents and Confederates, from that time to the Feaſt of St. Michael then next following, and from thence on for a Year; that ſo all Matters in order to a firm and perpetual Peace, might be duely and rightly deviſed and eſtabliſhed. The mean while, till King John might be at Liberty, only the two Eldeſt Sons of the Kings were ſolemnly ſworn to uphold and maintain this Agreement; and firſt the Prince of Wales ordained on his Part [y] Four Barons of England, that is to ſay, the Lord Ralph Stafford, Earl of Stafford, the Lord Reginald Cobham, the Lord Guy Brian, and the Lord Roger Beauchamp of Bletſo, who were received into Paris, as Meſſengers from Heaven, all the Bells ringing, and the People thronging the ſtreets as to ſee a Triumph; all the Street where they paſſed [z] being ſpread and tapiſtred (if we may believe it) with Cloth of Gold. They went ſtraight to the Palace, where the Regent, his Brethren, and their Uncle with many Lords and Prelates received them honourably: Du Cheſne ſays, that here in the Great Hall in preſence of all the People, the Engliſh Lords made their Oath, and ſware in the Name of the King their Maſter, and of his Sons, upon the Holy Euchariſt, and upon the Holy Evangeliſts, to accompliſh and hold the ſaid Articles. From the Hall they were conducted to a Magnificent Feaſt, and from thence to the Chappel, where the Regent ſhewed them many Jewels and Relicts, and preſented them with one Great Thorn, which was believed to have belonged to the Crown of our Saviour. After this they return'd, and the Regent on his Part deputed Four Nobles of France, who went immediately after to Louviers in Normandy, where at that time the Prince of Wales was, and there made for him the ſame Oath in Preſence of the ſaid Prince.

[y] Tillet has ſix, and Fab.

[z] Du Cheſne p. 692. C.

But it is my Opinion, that theſe Lords on each Side went rather to take the Oath firſt of the Dauphin, and then of the Black-Prince, as moſt other Writers affirm; the manner whereof [a] Walſingham thus deſcribes, "That at Paris in the time of Low Maſs, "when they had thrice ſang, O Lamb of God which takeſt away the ſins of the World, "Grant us thy Peace, Charles the Dauphin and Regent of France, went up to the Al- "tar, and laying his Right Hand on the Paten, wherein lay the Holy Euchariſt, and "his Left on the Goſpel, he took his Oath in theſe Words, We Charles do ſwear upon "the Holy Body and the Goſpels of our Lord, firmly what in us lies, to keep this Peace "and Concord, thus formed between the two Kings, and by no means to go againſt the "ſame. So help Us, &c. And the like Oath was afterwards taken by the Prince of Wales in preſence of Four Barons of France, in the Church of Louviers in Normandy. Of both which there were made Letters Patents, bearing Date that at Paris on the Tenth Day of May, and the other at Louviers on the Sixteenth of the ſaid Month Anno Domini MCCCLX. Who brake this Sacred and Solemn Oath firſt, we ſhall ſee hereafter, and throughly diſcuſs the Occaſion, which I doubt will appear too frivolous to be excuſed in that manner, as is done by ſome French Hiſtorians.

[a] Walſingh. hiſt. p. 167. & Hypod. p. 527. vid. Odor. Rainal. ad hunc annum. §. 1. Fabian p. 241. &c.

This mean while the Pariſians, [b] by the Dauphins good Leave, redeemed the Forteſſes of Herelle, la Neufville in Haye, Pont St. Maixence, Lyhon, Freſcheville, Deiteville, Baſlieu le Sicq, Chevreuſe, and la Ferte ſous Jouërre, becauſe of their Importance, for the price and Summ of 24000 Florens of Gold, of the Coin of King Philip of Valois, which they paid to the Earl of Warwick and the Captal of Buſche, not enduring to ſtay, till the Peace being confirmed, they ſhould be rendred gratis.

[b] Du Cheſne p. 692.

XII. Within a few Days after the firſt Form made at Bretigny was eſtabliſhed, King Edward being ſincerely deſirous to haſten the Accompliſhment and Perfection thereof, having raiſed his Camp from about Chartres, marched by Pont de L' Arche over the Seyne, and by Abbeville over the Soame in peaceable manner, and ſo went to Calais, where he gave order for the embarquing his Men. In this Town he made his Offerings, and paid his Devotion in the Church of St. Mary, after which repairing to the

Port

Port of Harfleur in Normandy, he thence took Shipping with his Sons for England, and landed at [c] Rye in Kent, on the 18 Day of May in the Evening, having left the Earl of Warwick to look to his Men of War at Calais, in Guienne and elſewhere, and to ſee that on his Part the Peace, which had been already proclaimed thrô France, was duely kept. AN. DOM. 1360. An. Regni Angliæ XXXIV. Franciæ XXI.

The next Day the King being come to London, [d] cauſed King John to be brought privately from the Tower to his Palace of Weſtminſter, in the Chappel whereof he ſhew'd him the Treaty made and ſworn to by the Regent his Son, whereat he, who deſired nothing more than Liberty, at what Price or Compoſition ſoever he obtained it, thanked God for his Bounty and Goodneſs in this matter, and readily agreed to ratifie and confirm it in his own Perſon. After this he rode with the Prince of Wales from London to Windſor to pay a Viſit to the Queen, and having received many great and ſplendid Entertainments from the King, he return'd again to London, and paid his Devotion at the Famous Cathedral of St. Pauls, where he made large and Princely Offerings [e] at the Shrine of St. Erkenwald once Biſhop of London, it having been newly Beautified about 3 Years before. The manner whereof, as well in Memory of that Prince's Piety, as for the rarity of the Matter, and alſo that thereby we may make a gueſs at the great Wealth of the ſeveral Shrines in thoſe Days, we ſhall here more particularly ſet down: King John therefore at this time having heard Maſs at the High Altar, made his Approach very devoutly to the Shrine of St. Erkenwald, where he offer'd 12 Nobles; at the Annunciation he laid down 12 more, at the Crucifix near the North-Door 26 Floren Nobles, at his firſt Approach to the High Altar Four Baſons of Gold, and at the hearing of Maſs after the Offertory, he gave the Dean then Officiating, 5 Floren-Nobles; and laſtly, he gave in the Chapter-Houſe 50 Floren-Nobles, to be diſtributed among the Officers of the Church.

[c] Aſhmole p. 662.
[d] Du Cheſne p. 692.
[e] Dugd. Hiſt. Cathedr. St. Paul p. 21,22.

The mean while King Edward [g] iſſued out his Warrant, bearing Date the 17 of June, to the Lord John Beauchamp, then Conſtable of Dover-Caſtle, and of the Cinque-Ports, forthwith to arreſt and equip a ſufficient Number of Ships to carry over King John and his Family to Calais within the time agreed on; and accordingly all things being now ready for his Departure, he was by King Edward himſelf honourably conducted to the Sea-ſide, the Lord Philip his Son, and the other Lords of France, Priſoners, being with him. He embarqued at the Downs, being attended by the Black-Prince, the Duke of Lancaſter, the Lord John Chandos, and many other Great Barons, who all arrived at Calais on the Ninth of July, where the King was honourably received and lodged in the Caſtle, there to expect King Edwards Coming.

[g] Aſhmole p. 662.

XIII. Now before theſe Things were brought thus far, the Pope, having heard how forward the Peace between the two Realms was, ſent his Letters to King Edward, [h] bearing Date Prid. Non. Julii, An°. Pontif. VIII. Wherein he expreſſes his great Joy for the happy Proſpect of a laſting Peace, and quickens the King to a Conſummation of the Affair; and that he would ſhew himſelf not only Willing, but Liberal, as to the Redemption of the French King.

[h] Vid. Odor. Rainal. ad hunc an. §. 2. ex Tom. 8. p. 1. Epiſt. Secr. P. 93.

All this while was King John at Calais, but King Edward remained ſtill in England, till he might hear, that the firſt Payment was in ſome readineſs for Him: For it is to be remembred, that, according to the XIV Article, there ought to be paid Six Hundred Thouſand Crowns of Gold, before King John could be permitted to go from Calais: A great Summ, and which could not ſoon be collected by his Officers, thô but a ſmall Part of that exceſſive Summ of 3000000, which amounting to 500000 l. Sterling, was ſo vaſt a Matter in thoſe Days, that it [i] is thought to have given occaſion for this French Proverb, J'ay payé tous mes Anglois, i. e. I have paid all my Engliſh, that is, my Creditors, which is us'd, when with much ado a great and heavy Debt is fully cleared. Wherefore King John was [k] forced now to ſtay almoſt 3 Months of the limited Four, e'r he could raiſe the foreſaid Summ, during which time notwithſtanding, he had frequently News from the Dauphin and his other Children, who at his deſire were now at Amiens. 'Tis ſaid, [l] that Prince Galeas, Lord of Milain, and of divers other Towns in Lombardy, furniſhed this Firſt Payment, on Condition, that King John ſhould give one of his Daughters for a Wife to his Son John, with the Earldom of Vertus for her Dowry: And we find, that his Third Daughter Iſabella was ſhortly after married to the ſaid John Galeas.

[i] Vid. Cotgrave's Preface to French Diction. p. 5.
[k] Du Cheſne p. 693.
[l] Du Cheſne ib. Mezeray ad an. 1361.

XIV. However the greater Part of the Firſt Payment being now at laſt ready, and all thoſe who ought to be Hoſtages for the Reſt, being rendred up at St. Omers, King Edward preſently embarqued for France, and on the [m] 9 of October being a Fryday, arrived ſafely at Calais. Upon his Arrival he went ſtraight to the Caſtle to viſit King

[m] Fabian p. 242 b. ED. Lit. Dom.

An. Dom. 1360. An. Regni Angliæ XXXIV. Franciæ XXI.

John, who welcom'd him with a loving and cheerfull Countenance, agreeable to that ſincerity, whereof he was a profeſſed Maſter. As King Edward was taking his leave to retire to his Lodgings prepared for him in the Town, King John deſired him to come the next Day with his Sons and take a Dinner with him. The Invitation King Edward accepted, but entreated that it might be deferred till the Monday following; and ſo that Day, being the 12 of October was fixed. At Dinner-time King Edward had the Firſt Seat, and held State, next to him ſat the French King, thirdly the Black-Prince, and laſtly the Duke of Lancaſter: No more ſitting at Table. While they were at Dinner, the Earl of Flanders came to the Caſtle, to pay a Viſit to both the Kings; but eſpecially to congratulate the Return of King John, who received him with all imaginable Kindneſs. When this Royal Entertainment was over, Two of the King of Englands younger Sons, and two of the French Kings, took leave of their Fathers and rode towards Boulogne, where at that time the Dauphin was. He met them half way, and conducted them the other half to Boulogne, where they all reſted that night: The next Morning the Dauphin having left the two Engliſh Princes there, as it were Pledges for his Security, rode himſelf forth to Calais; firſt he waited on his Father, and afterwards both his Father and he went to King Edwards Palace to Dinner, where they were received with much Honour, and entertain'd at a moſt Royal Feaſt. On the Wedneſday, being the 14 of October, the ſaid Dauphin took his leave of King Edward and of the King his Father, and rode back to Boulogne, upon whoſe ſafe Return King Edwards two Sons rode back again to Calais.

On the Saturday Seven-night after, which was the 24 of October, the Peace was fully ſworn to, and eſtabliſhed by the two Kings in this manner; The Two Kings being ſeated in two diſtinct Traverſes in the Church of St. Nicolas at Calais, High Maſs was ſung before them by Androine Abbot of Cluigny, to the Offering whereof neither of the Kings came. But when the Pax came to be kiſſed (by which Ceremony was ſignified, that the Peace of Chriſt ſhould ever remain between them, They to love each other as Chriſtian Princes, after his Command and Example) the French King, to whom it was firſt carried, refuſed it in Modeſty, after which King Edward not admitting it in Generoſity; King John roſe firſt, and went toward King Edward, who being aware thereof, roſe up haſtily and ran to meet him, where both again refuſing the Pax, they kiſſed each other with hearty Demonſtrations of a mutual Friendſhip.

At this Maſs both the Kings were ſeverally ſworn in Solemn Manner to maintain truly and perpetually the Articles of the ſaid Peace: And for the further Security thereof, many of the Chief Lords of both Realms were ſworn to help to preſerve the ſame to their Powers; eſpecially the [n] two Eldeſt Sons of England and France; and at the ſame time the Duke of Orleans in the Name of King John, and Prince Philip of Navarre in the Name of the King his Brother, ſware to forget all Injuries on both Sides, and to cultivate a mutual Friendſhip for the future: Theſe Oaths were thus taken both on the Evangeliſts and on the Euchariſt; and the two Kings received the Sacrament in both kinds thereupon. And they were ſo well ſatisfied with the Conduct of the foreſaid Abbot, [o] that they jointly requeſted of the Pope to beſtow on him a Cardinals Cap, for his diligent and effectual Service therein. And thô we find the Pope in his Anſwer deſires on certain Accounts to be excuſed for the preſent, yet it is certain, [p] that at the next Creation which happen'd the Year after, he was made a Cardinal of the Title of St. Marcellus.

[n] Odor. Rainal. ad hunc an. §. 3.

[o] Odor. Rainal. ibid.

[p] Victorell. ad an. 1361. p. 917

At the ſame time the Hoſtages (who according to the 15 and 18 Articles, were to be deliver'd, as well for the Security of the Payment of the Kings Ranſom, as of the Reſtoration of thoſe Places, which as yet were not put into the Engliſh Hands) were deliver'd unto King Edward; and alſo there were then paid unto him [q] 400000 Scutes of Gold, in Part of the Firſt 600000, King Edward giving further time for the Payment of the remaining 200000, till Chriſtmas and Lady-Day following. Which done, both the Kings gave forth interchangeably their Letters Patents concerning theſe things, all bearing one Date, and containing one Form, only Mutatis Mutandis. The Tenor of King Edwards (wherein he lays by his Title of France) being as followeth, viz.

[q] Aſhmole p. 662. ex Rot. de Tract. Pacis, &c.

XV. "EDWARD, * by the Grace of God, King of England, Lord of Ireland "and of Aquitain, to all, unto whom theſe Letters ſhall come, Greeting. We give "you to underſtand, that of all the Diſſenſions, Debates and Diſcords moved or here- "after to be moved, between Us and our Right Dear Brother the French King, certain "Commiſſioners and Deputies of ours, and of our Dear Son the Prince of Wales, ha- "ving ſufficient Power and Authority for Us, and for Him, and for our whole Realm "on

* Froiſ. c. 212. fol. 105.

"on the one Party, and certain other Commiſſioners and Deputies of our Dear Brother "the French King, and of our Dear Nephew, Charles Duke of Normandy and Dauphin of "Vienna, Eldeſt Son to our ſaid Brother of France, having Power and Authority for his "Father and for Himſelf, on the other Party, were aſſembled at Bretigny near to Char- "tres. At which place it was agreed and accorded by the ſaid Commiſſioners and "Deputies of either Party, upon all Diſſentions, Debates, Wars and Diſcords what- "ſoever; And the Deputies of Us and of our Son, for Us and for Him, and alſo the "Deputies of our ſaid Brother, and of our ſaid Nephew for them both, did ſwear upon "the Holy Evangeliſts to hold, keep and accompliſh this Treaty: By the which Accord, "among other things, our Brother of France and his ſaid Son are bound, and promiſe "[r] to deliver and reſign unto Us, our Heirs and Succeſſors for ever, all the Counties, [r] Article 1.
"Cities, Towns, Caſtles, Forts, Lands, Iſles, Rents, Revenues and other things as "followeth (beſides that which already We have and hold in Guienne and in Gaſ- "cogne) to poſſeſs for ever, both Us, and our Heirs and Succeſſors, all that is in De- "main in Demain, and all that is in Fee in Fee, by the Times and in the Manner hereaf- "ter ſpecified; that is to ſay, the City, Caſtle and County of Poictiers, and all the "Land and County of Poictou, with the Fief of Thoüars, and the Land of Belleville, "the City and Caſtle of Saintes, and all the Land and Country of Saintogne, on both "ſides the River Charente, with the Town and Fortreſs of Rochelle and their Appur- "tenances: The City and Caſtle of Agen, and the Country of Agenois, the City and "Caſtle of Perigeux, and all the Country thereto belonging; the City and Caſtle of "Limoges, and the Lands and Country of Limoſin; the City and Caſtle of Cahors, "and the Land and Country of Quercy; the City, Caſtle and Country of Tarbe; the "Land, Country and Earldom of Bigorre; the County, Land and Country of Guare; "the City and Caſtle of Angouleſme, and the County, Land and Country of Angouleſ- "mois; the City and Caſtle of Rodes, and the Land and Country of Rouvergue; and "if there be any Lords in the Dutchy of Guienne, as the Earl of Foix, the Earl of "Armagnac, the Earl of Liſle, the Vicount of Carmaine, the Earl of Perigort, the Vi- "count of Limoges or Others, holding any Lands within the foreſaid Bounds, they ſhall "do Homage, and all other Services and Duties, due and accuſtomed for their Lands "and Places, unto Us, in like manner and form as they have done in time paſſed, as "We or any other Kings of England anciently have had. And alſo [t] in the Town of [t] Article 2.
"Monſtrevil upon the Sea we are to have, as either We or other Kings of England "in time paſt have had; and in the Lands of Monſtrevil our Brother of France pro- "miſeth to make a Declaration thereof unto Us, as ſpeedily as he can, after his coming "into France: And alſo the County [t] of Ponthieu entirely, ſave and excepted, if any [t] Article 3.
"thing be alienated away by any of the Kings of England in time paſt, whereby the "ſaid County and Appurtenances have been holden by other Perſons than the French "Kings, neither our ſaid Brother, nor his Succeſſors ſhall be obliged to render them "unto Us. But if the ſaid Alienations have been done by the French Kings for the "time being, without any Mean, and our ſaid Brother now have them in his Poſſeſſi- "on, he ſhall leave them entirely to Us; except that the French Kings have had them "in Exchange for other Lands. But if the Kings of England for the time being "have alienated, or conveyed any thing to any other Perſon, than to the French Kings, "and they peradventure are now devolved into the hands of our ſaid Brother, then he ſhall "not be obliged to reſtore them unto Us. He is alſo to render unto Us all ſuch things "as ought to pay any Homage to Us, and to our Succeſſors, and if they owed not Ho- "mage unto Us and to our Succeſſors, then he ſhall put in a Tenant, who ſhall do Us "Service within a Year after he ſhall be departed from Calais. Alſo [u] the Caſtle and [u] Article 4.
"Town of Calais, the Caſtle, Town and Lordſhip of Merks, the Towns, Caſtles and "Lordſhips of Sangate, Coulogne, Ham, Wale and Oye, with the Lands, Woods, Ma- "riſhes, Rivers, Rents, Revenues, Lordſhips, Advouſons of Churches, and all other "Appurtenances and Places, lying within the Bounds and Limits following, that is to "ſay, from Calais to the River before Graveling; and alſo from the River that falleth "into the great Lake of Guiſnes, as far as Fretun, and thence along the Valley about "Calculi-Hill, encloſing that Hill, and ſo to the Sea, with Sangate and all its Appur- "tenances. Alſo the [x] Caſtle, Town and whole Earldom of Guiſnes, with all the [x] Article 5.
"Towns, Caſtles, Forts, Lands, Places, Homages, Men, Seignories, Woods, Foreſts "and all Rights to them belonging, as entirely as the Town of Calais, of Merks, and "other Places before-named, as well to obey Us, as they have obeyed our ſaid Bro- "ther, or the Earl of Guiſnes for the time being: And that the Churches of the good "People being within the Limitations of the ſaid Earldom of Guiſnes, of Calais and

AN. DOM. 1360. An. Regni Angliæ XXXIV.

An. Dom. 1360. An. Regni Angliæ XXXIV.

"Merk, and of other Places aboveſaid, ſhall obey the King of England in like manner, as they have obey'd either the King of France, or the Earl of Guiſnes: All which things of Merk and Calais being contained in this preſent Article, and the Article next preceding, We to hold in Demain, except the Heritage of the Churches, which ſhall ſtill remain entirely to the ſaid Churches whereſoever they be; and alſo except the Heritage of other People of Merk and Calais, under the value of an 100 l. Land per annum, of Money currant in that Country, which Inheritances ſhall remain to them even to the Value aboveſaid and under. But the Habitations and Inheritances within the Town of Calais, with their Appurtenances, ſhall abide ſtill to the Inhabitants: And alſo in the Lands, Towns and Earldom of Guiſnes, all their Demains ſhall ſtill remain unto them, except what hath been ſaid before, of the foreſaid Limits and Bounds in the Article of Calais: Alſo [y] all the Iſles adjacent to the Lands, Countries and Places before-named, with all other Iſles, the which we held at the time of the ſaid Treaty. And it is agreed, [z] that our ſaid Brother and his Eldeſt Son, ſhould renounce all manner of Soveraignty, Reſort and Rights, that he or either of them ſhould have; and that We ſhall hold them as his Neighbour without any Reſort or Soveraignty to our ſaid Brother, or to the Realm of France; and all the Right that our ſaid Brother hath in the foreſaid Things, he yieldeth and conveyeth unto Us for ever. And alſo it is agreed, that We likewiſe, and our ſaid Son do expreſly renounce all things, that ought not to be granted unto Us by this Treaty; and eſpecially the Name, Right and Title to the Crown of France, and to the Realm, and to the Homage and Soveraignty thereof; as alſo to the Demain of the Dutchy of Normandy, of the County of Touraine, of the Counties of Anjou and of Maine; and of the Sovereignty and Homage of the Dutchy of Bretagne, except the Right of the Earl of Montford, which he ought to have or might have in the Dutchy and Country of Bretagne, the which we reſerve, and by expreſs Words put clean out of this Treaty: Saving, that We and our ſaid Brother, when we come to Calais, ſhall order that Matter by Advice of our Councils there as we hope, ſo as to ſettle Peace and Concord between the ſaid Earl of Montford, and our Couſin the Lord Charles of Blois, who challengeth and demandeth the Right to the Heritage of Bretagne; And We renounce all other Demands that we do or may make whatſoever they be, except ſuch things aforeſaid, as ought to remain unto Us, and to be deliver'd unto Us by Vertue of this Treaty: And that We transfer and convey away all the Right, which We might have in any of theſe Things, that ought not to be delivered to Us by Vertue of this Treaty: Concerning all which Things, after divers Alterations about the ſame, eſpecially becauſe the ſaid Renuntiation, Conveyance, Quitting and Leaving of all the ſaid Things ſhould be accompliſhed, as ſoon as our ſaid Brother hath deliver'd unto Us or to our Deputies, the City and Caſtle of Poictiers, with all the Land and County of Poictou, and the Fee of Thoüars; the City and Caſtle of Agen, and all the Land and Country of Agenois; the City and Caſtle of Perigeux, and all the Land and Country of Perigord; the City and Caſtle of Cahors, and all the Land of Quercy; the City and Caſtle of Rodes, and all the Land and Country of Rouvergue; the City and Caſtle of Sainctes, and all the Land thereunto belonging; the City and Caſtle of Limoges; and whatever We, or any of the Kings of England anciently held in the Town of Monſtrevil with the Appurtenances; alſo the County of Ponthieu whole and entirely; ſave and except, according to the Tenor of the Article contained in the ſaid Treaty, where it maketh mention of the ſaid County; alſo the Caſtle and Town of Calais, and the Caſtle, Town and Lordſhip of Sangate, Coulogne, Hames, Wale and Oye, with the Lands, Rivers, Mariſhes, Woods, Rents, Lordſhips, and other things contained in the Article thereof making mention: Alſo the Caſtle, Town and whole County of Guiſnes, with all the Lands, Caſtles, Towns, Forts, Places, Men, Homages, Lordſhips, Woods, Foreſts and other Rights, according to the Tenor of the Article thereof, making mention more plainly in the ſaid Treaty; with the Iſles that we hold already, that is to ſay, at the time of the ſaid Treaty and Peace, [I ſay concerning all theſe Things] We and our Brother the French King, have promiſed by Faith and Oath each to other, the ſame Treaty and Peace to hold, keep and accompliſh, and not to do any thing contrary thereto; and both We, and our ſaid Brother, and our Eldeſt Sons are mutually bound by Obligation and Promiſe, by Faith and Oath, the one Part to the Other, except certain mutual Renuntiations, according to the Tenor and Form of the ſaid Articles and Peace as followeth; * Item, it is agreed, that the King of France, and his Eldeſt Son the Regent, for them and for their Heirs for ever, as ſoon as may be, and at the far-

[y] Article 6.

[z] Article 7.

* Article 8. &c.

"theſt

"theſt by the Feaſt of St. Michael next coming in one Year, without Fraud or Deceit "ſhall render, yield and deliver to the ſaid King of England, his Heirs and Succeſſors, "and convey unto them all the Honours, Obediences, Homages, Allegiances, Vaſſa- "lages, Fiefs, Services, Recogniſances, Rights, Fealties and Imperial Juriſdictions, "High or Low, Reſorts, Safeguards, Advouſons, Patronages of Churches, Lordſhips "and Sovereignties, that appertain or may appertain in any manner of wiſe to the Kings, "and to the Crown of France, or to any other Perſon, becauſe of the King or of the "Crown of France whereſoever it be, in Cities, Towns, Caſtles, Lands, Iſles, Coun- "tries and Places before-named, or in any of them, or their Appurtenances and Appen- "dages whatſoever, whether Dukes, Earls, Vicounts, Archbiſhops or other Prelates of "Holy Church, Barons, Nobles and others; nothing thereof being to the Kings or "Succeſſors of the Crown of France reſerved; ſo that neither They, nor any of their "Heirs or Succeſſors, nor any French Kings, nor Others by reaſon of the King or "Crown of France, make any Challenge or Demand in time to come of the King of "England, his Heirs or Succeſſors, or any of his Men or Subjects aforeſaid, becauſe of "the ſaid Countries or Places: So that all Perſons aforeſaid, their Heirs and Succeſ- "ſors, and all other Perſons, Cities, Counties, Lands, Countries, Iſles, Caſtles and "Places aforeſaid, and all their Appurtenances and Appendages ſhall hold of the King "of England perpetually, peaceably and freely; the ſaid King of England to have o- "ver them Dominion, Sovereignty, Obeiſance, Allegiance and Jurisdiction, as the Pre- "deceſſors of the French King have had in time paſt; and that the Kings of England, "their Heirs and Succeſſors ſhall have and hold peaceably all the foreſaid Countries, in "their full Franchiſes and Liberties for ever, as Lords and Liege Sovereigns, and as "Neighbours to the King and Realm of France, without Acknowledging of any Sove- "reignty, Obeiſance, Homage, Reſort or Subjection, and without doing in time to "come any manner of Service or Recogniſance to the King, or to the Crown of France "for the Cities, Counties, Caſtles, Countries, Lands, Iſles, Places and Perſons be- "fore-named, or for any of them. Alſo it is accorded, that the French King and his Eldeſt "Son ſhall expreſly Renounce the ſaid Reſorts and Sovereignty, and all the Right that "they have or may have in all theſe Things, ſuch as by this preſent Treaty ought to "appertain to the King of England; and in like manner the King of England and his "Eldeſt Son Renounceth all things, ſuch as by this preſent Treaty ought not to be "deliver'd unto him, and Renounceth all other Demands of the Realm of France, and "eſpecially the Name, Right, Claim and Arms of the Crown and Realm of France; "the Homage, Sovereignty and Demain of the Dutchy of Normandy, and of the "Dutchy of Touraine, and of the Counties of Anjou and Maine, and of the Sovereign- "ty and Homage of the Earldom and County of Flanders, and all other Demands, "which the King of England made at the time of the ſaid Claim, or might make in "time to come to the ſaid Realm of France, by any manner of Cauſe whatſoever; "except all that by this Treaty ought to be deliver'd to the King of England and his "Heirs: And they to transfer, convey and mutually quit each King to the Other, for e- "ver all the Right, which they ought otherwiſe to have in theſe things, which by this "preſent Treaty are to be deliver'd to each of them, at the Time and Place when and "where the ſaid Renunciations ſhall be exchanged. And becauſe, that our ſaid Bro- "ther of France and his Eldeſt Son, to hold and perform the Articles of the ſaid Peace, "have expreſly Renounced the Reſorts and Sovereignties compriſed in the ſaid Articles, "and all the Right which they ought to have or might have, in all the ſaid things which "our ſaid Brother hath deliver'd and left unto Us; and all other things which from "henceforth ſhall abide and pertain to Us by Vertue of the ſaid Treaty and Peace; We "alſo in like manner expreſly renounce all ſuch Things, as by the ſaid Treaty are not "to be deliver'd unto Us or to our Heirs: And likewiſe all Demands that we have "made, or might make of our ſaid Brother of France; and particularly the Name and "Right of the Crown and Realm of France; the Homage, Sovereignty and Demain "of the Dutchy of Normandy, and of the Dutchy of Touraine, and of the Counties "of Anjou and Maine; and the Homage and Sovereignty of the Earldom of Flanders, "and all other Demands that we have made, or might make of our ſaid Brother, for "whatſoever cauſe it be, ever except all that, which by this preſent Treaty ought to "remain to Us and to our Heirs. And We ſhall transfer, convey and leave to Him, "and He to Us, and ſo mutually each to Other, in the beſt manner, and as ſpeedily as "We may, all ſuch Right, as Each of Us ought or may have in every thing, which by "this Treaty and Peace ought to abide and remain with, and to be deliver'd to each "other of Us: Reſerving ſtill to the Churches and to Men of the Church, all that

AN. DOM. 1360. AN. Regni Angliæ XXXIV.

"which

An. Dom. 1360. An. Regni Angliæ XXXIV.

"which to them appertaineth or may appertain; and all that is uſurped and withheld "from them by Occaſion of the Wars, ſhall be again recompenced, reſtored and deli- "ver'd: And alſo all the Towns, Forts and Habitations, with the Dwellers in them "ſhall remain and abide in their full Liberties and Franchiſes, as they did before they "came into our Hands and Dominion, and that to be confirmed unto them by our "ſaid Brother of France, if he ſhall be required ſo to do; and that We do not the "contrary in any of the foreſaid Things or Subjections. And as to Us and all things "to Us, our Heirs and Succeſſors pertaining, We ſubmit our Selves (in this Point) "to the Juriſdiction and Coercion of the Church of Rome; and We will and conſent, "that the Biſhop of Rome ſhall confirm all theſe things, in giving Monitions and Ge- "neral Commands for the Completion thereof againſt Us, our Heirs and Succeſſors, and "againſt our Subjects, Commons, Colleges, Univerſities, or ſingle Perſons whatſoe- "ver; and in giving General Sentences, Excommunication, Suſpenſion or Interdiction to be "laid upon Us or Them, who ſhall do the Contrary: And that the ſaid Sentences may "fall upon Us or Them, as ſoon as We or They act or endeavour by ſeiſing any Town, "Caſtle, City, Fort, or any thing doing, ratifying or conſenting, in giving Counſel, "Comfort, Favour or Aid, privily or openly againſt the ſaid Peace: Of which Sen- "tences the Parties offending not to be aſſoyled, till full ſatisfaction be made to all "them, who have had or ſuſteined any Dammage in that Behalf. And moreover, to "the intent that this ſaid Peace be more firmly kept and holden for ever, We will and "conſent, that if any Pacts, Confederations, Alliances and Covenants, howſoever they "be called, ſhall be any way prejudicial to the ſaid Peace, at this time or hereafter to "be made; even ſuppoſe they be firm and deliver'd on certain Penalties, or by Oaths "confirmed, or otherwiſe ratified or embulled by our Holy Father the Pope or any o- "ther, they ſhall notwithſtanding be ipſo facto cancell'd and of none effect, as contra- "ry to the Weal Publick, unprofitable to Peace and to all Chriſtendom, and diſplea- "ſing to God Almighty: And all Promiſes and Oaths in ſuch Caſes ſhall be excuſed "and diſanulled by our Holy Father the Pope; ſo that none be bound to hold or "keep any ſuch Promiſes, Oaths, Alliances or Covenants, to the intent that hereaf- "ter the like may not be attempted: And if any endeavour the Contrary, that it be "void and of none effect. And as for our Part, We ſhall not fail to puniſh all ſuch as "Violaters and Breakers of the Peace, both in their Bodies and Goods, as in equity "and reaſon the Caſe ſhall require: And if We procure, or ſuffer to be done the Con- "trary (which God forbid!) then We will that We be reputed for falſe and untrue, "and that we incurr ſuch Blame and Infamy, as a King Sacred ought to iucurr in ſuch "a Caſe. And We ſwear on the Body of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt to hold, keep and "accompliſh the ſaid Peace, and to do nothing contrary thereto, neither in our own "Perſon, nor by any other, in any manner of caſe. And to the intent that theſe ſaid "Bonds ſhould be fulfilled, We bind Us, and our Heirs, and all the Goods of Us and "of our Heirs, to our ſaid Brother of France and to his Heirs; and alſo We ſwear "on the Holy Goſpels by Us corporally touched, that We will perform, hold and ac- "compliſh in the foreſaid Caſes, all the ſaid Things by Us promiſed and accorded. "And We will, that in like caſe our ſaid Brother or his Deputies, in Place, Time and "Manner as aforeſaid, preſent unto Us his Letters, with a like Aſſurance on his Part "compriſed therein to the Effect and Strength of our Letters, which We have promi- "ſed and delivered as aforeſaid: Always ſaved and reſerved by Us, our Heirs and Succeſ- "ſors, that the ſaid Letters above-incorporated be of none Effect, nor bring unto Us "any manner of Prejudice or Dammage, untill the time that our ſaid Brother and Ne- "phew have made, ſent and delivered unto Us the foreſaid Renunciations according to "the manner above-deviſed: And till that be done, theſe our Letters not to be againſt "Us, our Heirs or Succeſſors in any manner of wiſe, but in the foreſaid Caſe. In wit- "neſs whereof We have ſet our Seal to the preſent Letters; Dated at Calais, 24 of "October in the Year of our Lord MCCCLX.

XVI. The ſame Letters were ſet forth in the Name of King John of the ſame Date, and beſides them there [a] are others, which contain the Renunciation of the French King, the Tenor whereof followeth. "JOHN, by the Grace of God King "of France, to all, unto whom theſe Preſents ſhall come, Greeting: We give you "to know; that We have promiſed, and do promiſe to render, or cauſe to be ren- "dred and deliver'd really, and de facto to the King of England, Our Moſt Dear "Brother, or to his Eſpecial Deputies in that part, at the Auguſtin Fryars within "the Town of Bruges, on the Day of the Feaſt of St. Andrew next coming, in one "Year, Letters ſealed with our Great Seal, bound with Silk and Green-Wax, on Con- "dition

[a] M. S. Reverendi admodùm Edvardi Stillingfleet S.T.P. Eccleſiæ Cathed. D. Pauli Decan. Cui titulus, ſequitur Renuntiatio pura per Regem Franciæ.

"dition that our ſaid Brother ſhall make the Renuntiations, which he ought to make "on his Part and on the Part of our Moſt Dear Nephew, his Eldeſt Son, and ſhall "have rendred them to our People, or Deputies at the ſaid Place and Time, in Man- "ner, as they are obliged; of which our Letters, the Tenor word for word follow- "eth. JOHN, by the Grace of God, King of France, We give to know unto all pre- "ſent and to come; that whereas Mortal Wars have long endured, between our Moſt "Dear Lord and Father, late King of France, when living, and after his Deceaſe be- "tween Us on the one Part, and the King of England, our Brother, who challenged un- "to himſelf to have Right to the ſaid Realm, on the other Part, having brought ma- "ny great Damages, not only unto Us and to all our Realm, but to the Neighbouring "Realms alſo, and to all CHRISTENDOM: For by the ſaid Wars oftentimes have "happen'd Mortal Battles, Slaughters, Ravagings, and Deſtruction of People, and Pe- "ril of Souls; Deflowring of Damſels and Virgins, Dehoneſtation of Married Women "and Widows, Burning of Towns, Abbeys, Mannors and Edifices, Robberies and Oppreſ- "ſions; a Diſuſe of the Roads and Ways; Juſtice faileth; the Chriſtian Faith is "waxen cold; and Merchandiſe decayeth; and ſo many other Miſchiefs and horrible Deeds "have enſued thereupon, that the Numbers thereof cannot be ſaid nor written: Where- "by thoſe of our Realm, and of other Realms in Chriſtendom, have ſuſtained many "Afflictions and Irreparable Loſſes: Wherefore We, conſidering and revolving the Evils "aforeſaid, and how it is probable, that Worſer may follow in time to come; and ha- "ving great Pity and Compaſſion of our Good and Loyal People, who ſo firmly and Loy- "ally have bore themſelves for ſo long a time in true Conſtancy and Obedience towards "Us; by expoſing their Bodies and their Goods to all Dangers, without declining ex- "pences or charges; whereof We ought to keep a perpetual Remembrance: We have "therefore ſeveral times yielded to a Treaty of Peace, chiefly by means of the Honourable "Fathers in God, ſeveral Cardinals, and Meſſengers of our Holy Father, the Pope, our "Beloved and Faithfull, the Abbot of Cluigny, Father Simon de Langres, Profeſſor in "Divinity, Maſter of the Order of Fryars-Preachers, and Hugh de Geneve *Lord of "*Autun, who were then with the ſaid King of England in his Hoſt, and went and came "ſo often between Charles *our moſt Dear Eldeſt Son, and between the ſaid King of "*England, our Brother, and in ſundry places held Treaties on the one Part and on the "Other, to Confer and Treat of a Peace between Us (who were then in England) and "the ſaid King of England, and the Realms of the One and of the Other. And at laſt "they aſſembled the Treaters and Procurators on the part of Us and of our ſaid Son, for "the Matters above written, and the ſpecial Deputies, Procurators and Treaters of our "Nephew, the Prince of Wales, Eldeſt Son of the ſaid King of England, our Bro- "ther, having Power and Authority from his ſaid Father in that part at Bretigny *near "*Chartres: At which place it was conferred, treated, and accorded by the Treaters and "Procurators of the One Part and of the Other, concerning all the Diſcords, Diſſen- "tions, and Wars, which We and the ſaid King of England, our Brother, have had "One againſt the Other: The Which Treaty and Peace the Procurators of our Son for "Us and for Him, and our ſaid Nephew, the Prince of Wales, Eldeſt Son of the ſaid "King, our Brother, for his Father and himſelf, ſware on the Holy Goſpels to hold and "maintain: And after that our ſaid Son ſware ſolemnly for Us and for Himſelf, and "our ſaid Nephew, the Prince of Wales, having Power thereto, ſware for his ſaid Fa- "ther, our Brother, and for Himſelf; and We, after theſe things thus done, and unto "Us reported and declared, conſidering, that the ſaid King of England, our Brother, "had agreed and conſented to the ſaid Treaty, and would hold, keep, and accompliſh that "and the Peace, on his part, the ſame Treaty and Peace, being undertaken by advice and "conſent of ſundry of our Blood and Lineage, Prelates of Holy Church, Dukes, Earls, "as well Peers of France, as others, Clergy and Men of the Church, Barons, Knights, "and other Nobles, Burgeſſes, and other Wiſe Men of our Realm, to appeaſe the Wars, "and the Evils, and Griefs aforeſaid, wherewith the People had been ſo hardly uſed, "rather than for our Deliverance, to the Honour and Glory of the King of Kings, and "for Reverence of Holy Church, of our Holy Father, the Pope, and of his ſaid Meſ- "ſengers, have conſented, and do conſent unto, and ratifie, admit, and approve thereof: "And whereas by the ſaid Treaty and Peace, We ought to deliver and reſign, and do "give, deliver, and reſign, as is contained in our other Letters made therefore more ful- "ly unto our ſaid Brother, the King of England for ever, for Him and his Heirs and "Succeſſors, to hold perpetually and for ever, all thoſe things which follow, in like man- "ner, as We and our ſaid Son, or any of our Anceſtors, Kings of France, have held "them in time paſt: That is to ſay, what is in Sovereignty, to hold in Sovereignty, and "what

AN. DOM. 1360. An. Regni Angliæ XXXIV.

An. Dom. 1360. An. Regni Angliæ XXXIV.

" what in Demaine, to hold in Demaine; namely, the City, Caſtle, and Earldom of Poi" ctiers, and all the Land and Country of Poictou; alſo the Fief of Thoüars, and the " Land of Belleville; the City and Caſtle of Sainctes, and all the Land and Country of " Sainctogne, on this and on that ſide the Charente; the Town and Caſtle of Rochelle,
" and their appurtenances; the City and Caſtle of Agen, and the Land and Country of " Agennois; the City, Caſtle, and Earldom of Perigeux, and the Land and Country of Pe-
" rigort; the City and Caſtle of Limoges, and the Land and Country of Limoſin; the Ci- " ty and Caſtle of Cahors, and all the Land and Country of Quercy; the City, Caſtle,
" and Country of Tarbe; the Land, Country, and Earldom of Bigorre; the Earldom,
" Land, and Country of Gaure; the City and Caſtle of Angouleſme, and the Earldom, " Land, and Country of Angouleſmois; the City and Caſtle of Rodes, and the Land and
" Country of Rouvergue; and moreover that which the King of England, or any of the " Kings of England, anciently held in the Town of Montreuil upon the Sea, and its ap-
" purtenances: Item, the County of Ponthieu all entirely, ſave, and except, according " to the Tenor of the Article, contained in the ſaid Treaty, which makes mention of the " ſaid County; Item, the Town and Caſtle of Calais; the Town and Lordſhip of Merk;
" the Towns, Caſtles, and Lordſhips of Sangate, Coulogne, Hames, Wale, and Oye;
" with the Lands, Woods, Mariſhes, Rivers, Rents, Lordſhips, and other things con- " tained in the ſaid Article; Item, the Caſtle, Town, and Earldom of Guiſnes all entirely,
" with all the Lands, Towns, Caſtles, Forts, Places, Men, Homages, Lordſhips, Woods,
" Fees, and Rights, according to the Tenour of the Article, making mention thereof
" more fully in the ſaid Treaty; and the Iſles adjacent to the Lands, Countries, and
" Places aforenamed, together with all other Iſlands, which the ſaid King of England
" holdeth at preſent, or held at the time of the ſaid Treaty: And whereas by the Form
" and Tenor of the ſaid Treaty and Peace, We and our ſaid Brother, the King of England,
" owe and have promiſed by Faith and by Oath, One to the Other, and are bound, We and
" our ſaid Brother, and our Eldeſt Sons aforeſaid, by obligation and promiſes, by Faith and
" by Oath, made on the One Part and on the Other, certain Renunciations the One to the " Other, according to the Form and Tenor of two Articles, contained among others in the " ſaid Treaty and Peace, the Form whereof is this: Item, it is accorded, that the " King of France and his Eldeſt Son the Regent, for them and for their Heirs, and " for all the Kings of France and their Succeſſors, as ſoon as may be, and at the far-
" theſt by the Feaſt of St. Michael next coming in one Year, without fraud or deceit,
" ſhall render, yield, and deliver to the ſaid King of England, and to all his Heirs and " Succeſſors, and ſhall convey unto them all the Men, Honours, Regalities, Obedi-
" ences, Homages, Allegiances, Vaſſalages, Fiefs, Services, Recognizances, Oaths,
" Rights, Mere and Mixt Empire, all manner of Juriſdictions, High and Low, Reſorts,
" Safeguards, and Lordſhips, and Superiorities, which appertain'd, or may in any wiſe
" appertain to the Kings of France, and to the Crown, or to any other Perſon, becauſe
" of the King and Crown of France, at any time, in Cities, Counties, Caſtles, Lands, " Countries, Iſles, and Places aforenamed, or in any of them and their appurtenances
" and appendages whatſoever, or in the Perſons thereof, Vaſſals, or Subjects whatſo-
" ever, be they Princes, Dukes, Earls, Vicounts, Archbiſhops, Biſhops, and other
" Prelates of the Church, without retaining or reſerving any thing therein to themſelves,
" their Heirs and Succeſſors, or any of the Kings of France, or any other whatſoever,
" becauſe of the King and Crown of France, whereby they, their Heirs and Succeſſors,
" or any King of France, may challenge or demand any thing in time to come of the " King of England, his Heirs and Succeſſors, or of any of the Vaſſals and Subjects a-" foreſaid; in regard of the Countries and Places abovenamed; ſo as all the above-na" med Perſons, their Heirs and Succeſſors ſhall for ever be Liege-men and Subjects to " the King of England, and to his Heirs and Succeſſors; and that the King of England,
" his Heirs and Succeſſors, ſhall have and hold all the Perſons, Cities, Counties, Lands, " Countries, Iſles, Caſtles, and Places above-named, and all their Appurtenances and " appendages: And the Premiſes ſhall remain unto them fully, freely, and for ever, in their " Dominion, Sovereignty, Obeiſance, Allegiance, and Subjection; as the Kings of France
" at any time ever had, or held them: And that the ſaid King of England, his " Heirs and Succeſſors, ſhall have and hold for ever all the Countries above-named, with " their appurtenances and appendages, and other things aforeſaid, with all Franchiſe
" and perpetual Liberty, as Sovereign and Liege-Lords, and as Neighbours to the King " and Realm of France, without Recognizing any Sovereign, or doing any Obedience,
" Homage, Reſort, or Subjection, and without doing in any time to come any Service " or Recognizance to the Kings, or to the Crown of France, for the Cities, Coun" ties,

"ties, Caſtles, Lands, Countries, Iſles, Places, and Perſons above-named, or for any of "them. Item, It is agreed, that the King of France and his Eldeſt Son, ſhall Re- "nounce expreſly the ſaid Reſorts and Sovereignty, and all the Right, which they "have and may have in all thoſe things, which by this preſent Treaty ought to be- "long to the King of England: And likewiſe the King of England and his Eldeſt Son "ſhall expreſly Renounce all thoſe things, which by this preſent Treaty ought not to "be deliver'd unto, or abide with, the King of England, and eſpecially the Name and "Right of the Crown and Realm of France; the Homage, Sovereignty, and Demaine "of the Dutchy of Normandy, of the Dutchy of Touraine, of the Earldoms of An- "jou and Maine, the Sovereignty and Homage of the Dutchy of Bretagne; the So- "vereignty and Homage of the Country and Earldom of Flanders; and all other De- "mands, which the King of England hath made, or may make againſt the King of "France for whatſoever cauſe it may be, ſaving and excepting, what by this preſent "Treaty ought to remain and be rendred to the King of England and his Heirs. And "the two Kings ſhall convey, reſign, and quit, the One to the Other for ever, all "the Right, that each of them hath or may have, to thoſe things, which by this pre- "ſent Treaty ought to remain and to be rendred to each of them; as for the time and "place, when and where the ſaid Renunciations ſhall be made, the two Kings ſhall con- "fer and agree together at Calais: Now We, to uphold and accompliſh the Articles, "Peace, and Accord aforeſaid, do Renounce expreſly all Reſorts and Sovereignties, and "all Right, which we have and may have in all the things aforeſaid; which We have "rendred and deliver'd, and reſign'd to the ſaid King of England, our Brother, and "which from this time forth ought to remain and appertain unto him by the ſaid Treaty "and Peace: In reſpect, that He and the ſaid Prince, his Eldeſt Son, have Renoun- "ced expreſly all thoſe things, which by the ſaid Treaty ought not to be rendred unto, "nor to remain with, the ſaid King of England, our Brother, for him and for his Heirs "and all Demands, which he maketh or may make againſt Us: And eſpecially the Name "and Right of the Crown and Realm of France; the Homage, Sovereignty, and Demain of "the Dutchy of Normandy; of the Dutchy of Touraine; of the Counties of Anjou and "Maine; the Sovereignty and Homage of the Dutchy of Bretagne; the Sovereignty and "Homage of the Earldom and Country of Flanders; and all other Demands, which the "ſaid King of England maketh or may make of Us, for any cauſe whatſoever; ſaving "and excepting what by this preſent Treaty, ought to remain and to be rendred to the "ſaid King of England and his Heirs: And unto him We convey, yield, and reſign, "and He unto Us, and each to Other, to the beſt of our Power, all the Right, which "either of Us might, or may have in all thoſe things, which by the ſaid Treaty and "Peace ought to remain and be deliver'd to either of Us: Saving ſtill and reſerving "to the Churches and to Men of the Church, that which to them appertaineth, and all "that which hath been uſurped and detained from their Hands by occaſion of the Wars; "that this be rendred and delivered unto them: And that the Towns, and Forts, and "all the Inhabitants thereof ſhall be and remain in ſuch Liberties and Franchiſes, as "they were before they came into our Hands and Dominion, and that to be confirmed "unto them by the ſaid King of England, if he ſhall be thereto required; and that We "do not the contrary in any of the Matters aforeſaid; And (as to this point) We ſub- "mit our ſelves, our Heirs and Succeſſors, to the Juriſdiction and Coërcion of the Church "of Rome, and We Will and conſent, that our Holy Father, the Pope, ſhall confirm all theſe "things, in giving Monition and General Commands for the accompliſhment thereof, a- "gainſt Us, our Heirs and Succeſſors, and againſt all our Subjects, be they Commons, "Colleges, Univerſities, or ſingle Perſons whatſoever, and in giving General Sentences "of Excommunication, Suſpenſion, or Interdiction, to be incurred by Us and by them "who ſhall do the contrary: And that the ſaid Sentences may fall upon Us, or them, "as ſoon as We, or They, act or endeavour, by ſeiſing any Town, Caſtle, City, Fort, "or any thing doing, ratifying, or conſenting, in giving Counſel, Comfort, Favour, "or Aid, privily or openly againſt the ſaid Peace: Of which Sentences they ſhall not "be abſolved; till they ſhall have made full ſatisfaction to all thoſe, who by that Act "have ſuſtained or ſuffer'd Damages: And moreover to the Intent, that this ſaid Peace "be more firmly kept and holden for ever, We Will and Conſent, that if any Pacts, "Confederations, Alliances, and Covenants, howſoever they be called, ſhall be any way "Prejudicial to the ſaid Peace, at this Preſent, or in time to come; even ſuppoſe, they "be confirmed and deliver'd on certain Penalties, or by Oath, or ratified by Authority of "our Holy Father, the Pope, or any other, they ſhall notwithſtanding be ipſo facto can- "celled and of none effect, as contrary to the Common Good, to the Advantage of the

AN. DOM. 1360. An. Regni Angliæ XXXIV.

An. Dom. 1360. An. Regni Angliæ XXXIV.

"Publick Peace, unprofitable to all CHRISTENDOM, and displeasing unto God: And "all Oaths made in such Cases shall be released and disannulled by our said Holy Fa- "ther, the Pope; that none be obliged to keep and hold such Oaths, Alliances, or Co- "venants; to the intent that in time to come the like may not be done, and if any en- "deavour the Contrary, that it be immediately void and of no effect, and rendred null "and of no Vertue. And as for our parts, We shall punish all such, as Violators of "the Peace, both in their Bodies and their Goods, as the Case shall require, and Reason "willeth: And if We procure, or suffer to be done, the Contrary (which God forbid!) "then We will, that We be held and reputed False and Untrue, and We will incurr "such blame and infamy, as a King Sacred ought to incurr in such a Case: And We "swear on the Body of our Lord JESUS CHRIST, to hold, keep, and accomplish the "things aforesaid, and not go contrary thereto, neither by our selves, nor by others in "any manner of Case. In Witness whereof We have caused these present Letters to "be Sealed with our Seal. Given, &c. in the Year of Grace 1360. And because "that the said things, and every of them may be held and accomplished from point to "point, and in form and manner aforesaid, We bind Us and our Heirs and all the "Goods of Us and of our Heirs, to our said Brother of England and to his Heirs; "and We swear on the Holy Gospels, by Us corporally touched, that We will per-"form, hold, and accomplish in the foresaid Case, all the said things by Us pro-"mised and accorded, as is aforesaid. And We will, that in case our said Brother and "our said Nephew, shall have made the said Renunciations, and sent and deliver'd "them as is said, and our said Letters shall not be deliver'd to our said Brother at "the time and place in form and manner aforesaid, then our present Letters and all "that is comprised therein, shall have as much Vigour, Effect, and Fruit, as have had "our other Letters, by Us promised to be deliver'd, as aforesaid: Always saved and "reserved by Us, our Heirs, and Successors, that the said Letters, above-incorpora-"ted, be of none effect, nor bring unto Us any manner of Prejudice or Damage; untill "the time, that our said Brother and Nephew have made, sent, and deliver'd unto Us, "the foresaid Renuntiations, according to the manner above devised; and that these "our Letters be not against Us, our Heirs, and Successors, in any manner of Wise, "but in the case aforesaid. In Witness whereof We have set our Seal to the Present "Letters. Dated at Calais the XXIV day of October, in the Year of Grace MCCCLX.

XVII. Besides these there were several other Letters devised and set forth, bearing the same Date; as [b] Another Copy of King John's Renuntiation; and a more Correct Form of the Peace bearing King Edward's Name; which the King sware to a new, and these Great Men, following, as it is worded in the form; "Our most Dear "Eldest Son, Prince of Wales, and our Younger Sons, Lionel Earl of Ulster, and Ed-"mund of Langley, and our Cousins Monsieur Philip de Navarre, and the Dukes of "Lancaster and Bretagne, the Earls of Stafford and Salisbury, the Lord of Manny, "Guy de Brian, Reginald de Cobham, the Captal de Buche, the Lord of Monferrant, "James Audley, Roger de Beauchamp, Ralph de Ferrers, Captain of Calais, Eustace "Dambreticourt, Frank van Hall, John de Moubray, Henry de Piercy, Nicolas de "Camborthe, Lord of Cominges, Richard Stafford, William de Grandison, Ralph Spi-"gurnel, Gaston de Greyly, and William Burton, Knights. So likewise on the King of "France's side were then sworn, his Sons, the Dukes of Anjou and Maine, and of Berry "and Auvergne, the Duke of Touraine, the Duke of Orleans, his Brother, and his Cousins, "the Duke of Bourbon, and James de Bourbon, John de Artois, Peter of Alenson, John of E-"stampes, Guy de Blois, the Earl of St. Paul, the Earl of Auxerre, the Earl of Har-"court, the Earl of Tancarville, the Earl of Sancerre, the Earl of Joigny, the Earl "of Salebruche, the Earl of Breme, the Lord of Coucy, the Lord of Craon, the Lord of "Fiennes, the Dauphin of Auvergne, the Lord of Monmorency, William de Craon, the Lord "of St. Venant. Besides all which both the Kings undertook to make the rest of their Children, and the greater part of their Nobility, Prelates, and others, to take the same Oath in order to uphold the said Peace.

[b] M.S. Dr. Stillingfleet.

XVIII. These Letters, [c] called the Charter of Peace, and Letters of Renuntiation, as well of the One King, as of the Other, being all fairly drawn up, engrossed, and sealed, were then read openly in the Council Chamber, in Presence of both the Kings, their Eldest Sons, and their Councils, and seemed to either Party to be right good and well-ordained: And then again the two Kings, and their Eldest Sons, sware solemnly on the Holy Gospel by them Corporally touched, and on the Body of our Lord, to keep and perform, and by no means to violate any of the Premises. And yet further by advice, and at the request of the French King and his Council, and toward toward the latter end of their Conference, the King of England was urged, to give and ſend a General Commiſſion to all thoſe, who as then, under colour of the War, held Towns, Caſtles, and Forts in the Realm of France, whereby they ſhould be commanded to avoid and depart. And King Edward, who at that time deſired nothing, but that Friendſhip, Good-will, and Peace might be nouriſhed between him and his Brother of France, as he had ſworn and promiſed; readily agreed to this Reaſonable Requeſt, and thereupon forthwith Order'd his Council, to draw up a Commiſſion in the Beſt Manner, that might be, according to the very Mind and Intent of the French King and his Council, whereupon the Chief of both the Kings Councils drew aſide with their Scribes and Secretaries, and between theſe, by Conſent of both Parties, two Commiſſions were drawn up and engroſſed, the [d] One at Large, and particularizing the Places ſo to be deliver'd, and the other more General, but ſuch, as being ſent to all and ſingular of his Captains in all parts of France, was no leſs effectual; the Tenour of which Letter followeth,

[c] Froiss. c. 212. fol. 107.

AN. DOM. 1360. An. Regni Angliæ XXXIV.

[d] M.S.Dr. Stillingfleet.

"EDWARD, * by the Grace of God, King of England, Lord of Ireland, and Duke "of Aquitaine; To all our Captains, Keepers of Towns and Caſtles, Subjects, Adhe- "rents, and Allies, being in the Parts of France, as well in Picardy, Burgundy, An- "jou, Berry, Normandy, Bretagne, Auvergne, Champaigne, Maine, Touraine, as in "all the bounds and limitations, of the Demaine and Tenure of France, Greeting. "A final Peace and accord having been made between Us and our Brother of France, "our Allies and Adherents, compriſing all the Debates and Diſcords, that have "been in time paſt or may be; to which We have ſworn on the Body of Jeſus "Chriſt, and alſo our Eldeſt Son, and our other Children, and others of our Blood, "with divers Prelates, Barons, and Knights, and the moſt Noble of the Realm of "England; and in like manner hath ſworn our ſaid Brother, and our Nephew the "Duke of Normandy, and other our Nephews, his Children, and divers Prelates, Ba- "rons, and Knights of the Realm of France, to keep the ſaid Peace: Yet leſt it "might ſo fortune or fall out hereafter, that any Men of War of our Realm, or of "our Subjects, ſhould take upon them to do, or attempt any thing contrary to the "Peace, in taking, or with-holding, Forts, Towns, Cities, or Caſtles, or in taking of "Pillage, Priſoners, or Merchandiſe, or any other thing againſt the Peace; the which "to Us would be right Diſpleaſant, and We neither may, nor will ſuffer any ſuch "thing to paſs under the ſhadow of Diſſimulation in any manner of wiſe; but will "with all our Power in all the ſaid things find a Remedy: We therefore Will, Re- "quire, and Ordain, by the Advice of our Council, that None of our Subjects, of "whatſoever State or Condition they be, preſume to do, or endeavour to do any "thing contrary to the ſaid Peace, in taking any Pillage, or in taking or with- "holding any Forts, Priſoners, or Goods, whatſoever, pertaining to the Realm of "France, or to our ſaid Brother, his Subjects, Allies, and Adherents, or any other "whatſoever they be: And whoſoever ſhall be thus Guilty of Doing againſt the "ſaid Peace, and will not leave or ceaſe ſo to do, or will not reſtore again the Damages "by them done, within a Month after they ſhall be thereto required by our Officers, "Serjeants, or Publick Perſons; that then by that Deed alone, without any further "Proceſs or Condemnation, they be all reputed for out-law'd, as Men caſt out of "our Realm and Protection, and alſo out of the Realm and Lands of our ſaid Bro- "ther, and all their Goods ſhall be forfeited to Us and to our Demaine, and if they "may be found within our Realm, We Will and Command expreſly; that on them "Puniſhment be forthwith taken, as on Traytors and Rebels againſt Us, according "to what is accuſtomed to be done in the Crime of High-Treaſon; without giving "in that caſe any favour, or remiſſion, ſufferance or pardon: And in like manner to "be done to our Subjects, of whatſoever Eſtate they be, who in our Realm on this "ſide the Sea, or on the other, take, occupy, or hold any Fort whatſoever, againſt the "Will of thoſe, to whom they ſhould pertain, or that burn, or ranſom Towns, or Perſons, "or commit any Robbery, or take any Pillage in Violation of the Peace, and in moving "War within our Dominions, or on our Subjects.

* Froiſ. ibid.

"And We do hereby command and expreſly enjoyn all our Seneſchals, Bailiffs, Pro- "voſts, Governors of Caſtles, and other our Officers (in avoiding of our high Diſplea- "ſure, and on pain of loſing their Offices) that they publiſh, or cauſe to be publiſhed "theſe Preſents, in certain notable Places within their Rules and Precincts; and that this "our Command once ſeen and heard, no one be after that ſo hardy to remain longer "in any Fort, pertaining to the Realm of France, and exempted from the Ordinance of "the Treaty of the ſaid Peace, on pain of being proceeded againſt, as an Enemy to Us

An. Dom. 1360. An. Regni Angliæ XXXIV.

"and to our said Brother the French King, and that they see all these Things be duly "and punctually observed: And We give all persons concerned to know, that if they "be negligent and fail thus to do, beside the foresaid Penalty, We shall cause them to "make good all Dammages unto those, who by their Default or Negligence shall be "so grieved or endammaged: And moreover We shall inflict such further Punish-"ment on them as shall make them an Example to all Others. In Witness whereof We "have made these our Letters Patents. Given at Calais the 24 Day of October, in the "Year of our Lord MCCCLX.

XIX. Besides all this there were several other Letters of Alliance made, even for the space of 15 Days together, which was the time that these two Kings, their Sons and Councils were at Calais; all which time was chiefly spent in Conferring, Devising and Settling new Ordinances, not contrary to the old, but such as should better explain and confirm them. And for the greater Security, all the Letters bare one Date: All which were enrolled in the Chanceries of both the Kings, but as it is tedious to refer them hither, so also is it needless.

All these mutual Renuntiations, Covenants and Agreements were drawn up, sworn to and sealed at the same time, but [e] not as yet Exchanged, because as yet the King of France was not at Liberty; and the Towns, Castles and other Places could not as yet be deliver'd. But it was now nevertheless agreed and promised, that they should be surrendred to the Special Deputies on both Sides by Midsummer following, if it might be; and the Renuntiations sent at the Assumption of our Lady next ensuing to the Church of the Augustin Fryars at Bruges, to be deliver'd to those deputed to receive them. Or if they were not sent till Allhallontide after, then they were to be deliver'd in the said Church on St. Andrews day following; at which Time and Place both Kings engaged to send thither, and cause to be deliver'd to the Deputies of both Parties, their and their Eldest Sons Renuntiations: But if they were not then deliver'd, not any thing agreed on was to take Effect. There was also another Instrument Dated at Calais at the same time, whereby King Edward was obliged to deliver up to the French King before Candlemas come Twelve Months, all those Castles and Towns which he now held, being Places that by Vertue of the Treaty were not to remain with him; the Particulars whereof from the Records are to be seen in my worthy Friend Esquire [f] Ashmole's Elaborate History of the Garter. For the Surrender of all which the King of England made forth Commissions to several Persons, bearing Date at Calais as aforesaid.

[e] Ashmole p. 663. ex Rot. de Tract. Pacis Franc. 34. Ed. 3. m. 7. & 8.

[f] P. 663. &c. ex Rot. præd. de Tract. Pacis Franc. m. 5.

Now [g] also the two Kings made a League for them, their Heirs and Successors of perpetual Friendship and Alliance, to become thenceforward Faithfull Friends, and to assist each other against all Persons whatsoever, except the Pope and the Emperour: And moreover, they made a solemn Renuntiation to all Wars against each Other, their Heirs and Successors, Realms and Subjects; to both which League and Renuntiation their Eldest and other Sons signed, and divers of the Nobility on both Sides were sworn. And then also a Proclamation issued forth from King Edward to Thomas Holland Earl of Kent, and to all other Captains of Towns, Castles, Forts, &c. held for the King in France, for them to give Notice to all Places within their Command, of this Peace and final Accord thus made between the two Kings.

[g] Ashmole p. 664. ex Rot. Tr. Pacis Franc. 34 Ed. 3. m. 6.

After [h] all these Articles, Letters and Commissions were made, devised, finished and deliver'd, by the Advice and Consent of the Councils of England and France; so that as to that Point both the Kings were well contented; then they fell into a close Communication concerning the Lord Charles of Blois, and the Lord John of Montford, and their several Claims to the Dutchy of Bretagne; for each pretended the whole and sole Right to that Heritage. Some have been so bold in venting their Opinions, as to say that King Edward and his Council were not over-warm in this Matter, and surely in meer Policy he might well enough be supposed something cool: For if now the Wars of Bretagne should be shut too, there had been no Vent left for those many boistrous Troops, which as yet lay in several Garrisons, and upon their resigning those Fortresses must needs otherwise have filled England with Theeves and Robbers. But certainly, whoever impartially observes the honourable and sincere Practices of King Edward upon all Occasions, and duly compares them with what relates to this Matter in the Articles and Letters foregoing, will not so rashly attribute the ill Success of the Treaty of Bretagne to King Edwards Insincerity; but rather to the Impracticableness of the Affair it self: Since two such Valorous Young Princes had so fair a Pretence to so Noble a Dukedome, that there could hardly remain any Prospect of deciding the Controversie without the Sword, or the Death of one of the Parties. But however it was, when now upon upon Conference this New Treaty seem'd so hard to be brought to any good Issue, Henry Duke of Lancaster, who was a most valiant and expert Souldier, but chiefly favour'd the Earl of Montford, and wish'd his Advancement, spake these words to the King of France, in Presence of the King of England and the greater Part of both the Kings Councils: "Sir, said he, the Truce that was taken before Rennes between the "Lord Charles of Blois, and the Earl of Montford is not yet expired, but is still to hold "to the first Day of May next coming. The King of England my Master here pre- "sent, by Advice of his Council, and with Consent of my Lord the Prince his Son, "shall before that time send the Young Duke, the Lord John of Montford, with "certain of his Council into France to your Majesty, with full Power and Authority "to confer and determine about the Right, which the said Lord John ought to have, "as succeeding his Father in the Dutchy of Bretagne. So then by You and your Coun- "cil, and by Ours together, some agreeable Way may be taken between them; for "the better Security of which Affair, I think it would be well to prolong the said "Truce yet farther, till the Feast of St. John Baptist next following. According to this Device of the Dukes, so it was done and concluded, and the Truce relating to Bretagne prolonged to the Feast of St. John Baptist, and then they fell to other Matters.

[h] Froiss. c. 213.

AN. DOM. 1360. An. Regni Angliæ XXXIV.

XX. And [i] now that the Peace between England and France was fully confirmed, King John was so elevated with the Assurance of Returning into his Country, that he then first seem'd sincerely to rejoyce since his being taken Prisoner. He shew'd unto King Edward such an hearty Good-Will, that it appear'd plainly to have no mixture of Dissimulation; and to his Nephew the Prince of Wales, he declared all the endearing Signs of Royal Love and Affection that might be: As also King Edward and his Son the Prince were exceeding Frank, Generous and obligingly Open unto him. These two Illustrious Monarchs, who from this time till Death parted, called themselves Brethren, as a mutual remembrance of their Brotherly Amity, gave now unto Four Knights of either Party, such as chiefly in their stations had promoted this Peace, 8000 Franks of Yearly Revenues for them and their Heirs for ever; King John giving the said Summ to Four Knights of England, and King Edward a like Revenue to Four Knights of France. And at the same time, because the Lands of St. Saviour le Vicount in Coutantine in Normandy were the King of Englands Right by a Deed of Gift and Sale from the Lord Godfry Harcourt deceased, which Lands were not comprised in the Ordinance of the Treaty of Peace; so that whoever held those Lands, must do Homage therefore to the French King; King Edward [k] now in respect of the many Laudable and Heroick Services of that Valiant and Renowned Knight the Lord John Chandos, gave unto him and his Heirs for ever, a Grant of the Baronies of St. Saviour le Vicount aforesaid, of Daunvers and Dongeville, as also of the Lands and Knights Fees of St. Mary de Montefarsellis and Romilly, and of all other the Lands and Possessions of the said Godfry of Harcourt: Which Princely Gift King John at the Request of King Edward confirmed now unto the said Lord John Chandos, he doing Homage therefore unto him, bating that Allegiance, which he owed unto his Master the King of England.

[i] Froiss. c. 213, f. 108.

[k] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 503.

And now, when all the foresaid Agreements were as well made and devised, and as firmly established, as Human Wit could contrive; so that it seem'd by reason of the sundry strict and solemn Engagements, Counter-bonds and mutual Obligations, between the two Kings and their Sons, that the Peace would prove everlasting; and when the Hostages were all come to Calais, and the 400000 Crowns of Gold were paid down to the King of England, and the remaining 200000 secured, which was the First Payment, then King Edward made a most Royal and Magnificent Supper for the French King within the Castle of Calais, at which the Black-Prince and his Three Brethren, Lionel, John and Edmund, with the Greatest Lords and Barons of England, served the two Kings bare-headed. After Supper the two Kings bad each other Good Night in the most Obliging Manner imaginable; King Edward remaining still in the Castle, and King John going to his Lodgings in the Town, which had been prepared for him upon his being set at Liberty.

The next Morning [l] being the 25 of October, and a Sunday, King John and all those, who were to go with him took his leave of Calais, and rode forth of the Town in the Forenoon, King Edward himself conveying him a Mile onward of his Way; and then the two Kings took their Last Leave of each other with Kissings and Embracings. King Edward return'd to Calais, but John from that time left his Horse, and would go by way of Pilgrimage on Foot to our Lady of Boulogne, to pay his Vows [l] Fabian p. 243.

for

An. Dom. 1360. An. Regni Angliæ XXXIV.

for his Delivery; the Prince of Wales, and two of his Brethren, Lionel and Edmund bearing him Company. At Boulogne they were all received with great Joy by the Duke of Normandy, who tarried there for them; and after Dinner the French King, and all the Great Princes and Lords of England and France there present, went on Foot to the Church of our Lady, where with great Devotion they made their Offerings, and then returned to the Great Abby, which was furnished to receive the French King and the Lords of England. The next Day the King of France [m] set forth sundry Commissions, Proclamations, Copies of the Peace and Renunciations, all bearing Date at Boulogne 26 of October, being of the same Nature with the Letters and Papers afore-mentioned; and on that same Day the Prince of Wales, and his Brethren with all their Company took leave of King John, and return'd to Calais to the King their Father.

[m] Dr. Spencers M.S. & Dr. Stillingfleets M.S. ubi Copiæ Litt. ita Dat.

XXI. As for King Edward, now that he had so happily effected his Designs, on the last of October, he went on Board and set Sail for England, with the Princes his Sons, and the Hostages of France in his Company, being Thirty of those Fourty mention'd in the XV Article; only Lewis King Johns Son, who then had but the Name of Earl, was now lately by his Father made Duke of Anjou and Maine, and John his Brother, at that time Earl of Poictiers, was now made Duke of Auvergne and Berry, because the Earldom of Poictiers by Vertue of the Peace belonged to King Edward.

On the First of November early in the Morning the King of England landed safely at Dover, and two Days after went to Canterbury, where he made his Offerings at the Shrine of St. Thomas, and return'd his Thanks to God for bringing his Wars to so happy a Conclusion. He came not to London till the Ninth of November, at what time he gave Command * to all his Officers on certain Penalties, that they should bear themselves kind and favourable to the Lords of France his Hostages, and to the Burgesses of the Good Towns, and all their Company; and upon occasion to take their Part and defend them from all Affronts, Injuries and Abuses whatsoever: Which Command of the Kings was punctually observed; so that the Frenchmen took their Pleasure about the City, and used Hunting and Hawking, and rode into the Country to take the Air, and went to Masks and Balls, and visited the Ladies and Gentlewomen without any Controul; they found the King so Courteous and Free unto them.

* Froiss. c. 113. ad finem.

On the 27 of November the Pope directed his Letters Gratulatory to the King of France, wherein he sets forth his own great Joy at the News of his happy Delivery, advises him to cherish and observe the Peace with King Edward, to respect the Clergy, to follow Justice, to defend the Poor, to admit Sage and Prudent Persons to his Council, to repress Pillagers, and those who robbed both Church and State. The Copy of which Letter is to be seen [n] in Odoricus Rainaldus, bearing Date Aven. V. Kal. Decemb. Anno Pontificatûs VIII.

[n] Odor. Rainal. ad hunc ann. §. 4

XXII. And now we have ended the most Remarkable Matters of this Great Year, but we must not forget to shew, how God Almighty usually tempers the Felicities of this Life with Losses and Afflictions; as, thô so happy and honourable a Peace was established with England, several High and Noble Personages to her great Loss went now unto their latest Homes, besides all those of the Nobility and Others, who died by that strange Tempest before Chartres; and besides the Lord Roger Earl of March, whom we have already shewn to have departed this Life on the 26 of February at Rouvray in Burgundy.

On the [o] 24 of January there deceased in the English Army before Rheims, the Noble and Valiant Lord John Vere Earl of Oxford, Lord of Bolebec, Lord and Baron of Samford, and Lord High-Chamberlain of England, in the 47 Year of his Age; being succeeded in his Lands and Dignities by the Lord Thomas Vere his Eldest Son and Heir, at that time 23 Years old. So that 'tis a Mistake in Walsingham and in Stow, who for want of Judgment follows implicitly others Errors; where Thomas Earl of Oxford is said to have died at this time, whereas it should be John, who was Father to Earl Thomas.

[o] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 193. ex Escu. 34 Ed. 3. n. 84. Leic. & Catal. Hon. p. 686. ubi tamen per errorem dicitur obiisse an°. 1358.

On the [p] 16 of September there also died, the High-born and Noble Lord William Bohun, that Martial Earl of Northampton, Lord High-Constable of England, and Knight of the Garter, who was younger Brother to Humphry Bohun, Earl of Hereford and Essex, Knight also of the same Glorious Order, and Son to Elisabeth the [q] Seventh Daughter of King Edward the First of England, whose two Sisters by the same Daughter of King Edward, were married, the Eldest to James Butler, the First Earl of Ormond of that Name, from whom is descended the present Thrice-Noble

[p] Dugd. 1. Vol. p. 186.

[q] Catal. Honor. p. 1071. & Speed p. 552. & Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 183.

Duke

Duke of Ormond, and the Second Sister was married to Hugh Courtney First Earl of Devonshire. Shortly [r] after, his Brother Humphry Bohun, Earl of Hereford and Essex departed also this Life without Issue, so that his Titles were added to Humfry Bohun, Son and Heir of this William Earl of Northampton; but he dying some thirteen Years after left only two Daughters, so that the Male Line of this Noble Family became thereby extinct. AN. DOM. 1360. An. Regni Angliæ XXXIV.

[r] 15 Octobr. an. 1361. vid. Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 185. & Catal. Honor. p. 1074.

On the [f] Second of December there died that Valiant Warrier Sr. John Beauchamp, Younger Son to the Earl of Warwick, Constable of Dover, Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports, and one of the Founders of the most Noble Order of the Garter. He was buried betwixt two Pillars on the South-side of the Middle Isle in the Body of St. Pauls Cathedral in London, where he had a Noble Monument, vulgarly by Mistake called Duke Humphry's Tomb, the Sculp whereof is yet preserved [t] in Sr. William Dugdale's History of St. Pauls. In his Life-time [u] he had built the fair House in the Parish of St. Andrew near Baynards Castle, where he usually resided: But this being after his Decease sold to King Edward III, was made use of for the Kings Great Wardrobe; and the Parson of the Parish making his Complaint, that Sr. John to build this House had pulled down many small ones, which paid him Tithes, the King ordained that House to pay the Parson in lieu thereof 40 s. per annum for ever.

[f] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 231. Ashmole p. 695. Stow p. 264.

[t] Dugd. Hist. Paul. p. 52.

[u] Stow's Survey Lond. p. 408.

On the [x] 28 of the said Month died the Noble and Valiant Lord Thomas Holland, Knight also of the Garter, and in Right of his Wife, Earl of Kent and Lord Wake; thô it doth not appear, that ever he had any Creation to that Dignity. His Wife was that celebrated Beauty of the Age, Joan, commonly called the Fair Maid of Kent, Daughter of Edmund Plantagenet, Sirnamed of Woodstock, Earl of Kent, and after the Death of her two Brothers Edmund and John, who died successively without Issue, Countess of Kent. But Common Historians call her Countess of Salisbury; the small Foundation whereof We shall now examine. This Lord Thomas Holland [y] had first made a Contract with her, upon which (as he afterwards alledged) Carnal Knowledge did ensue. Whereupon, understanding, while he was in France, that William the second Earl of Salisbury had a purpose to Wed her, by his Petition to Pope Clement VI, he complain'd of this injurious Design, fairly representing his own Precontract, and the knowledge he thereupon had of her. But that for all this the said Earl, taking Advantage of his Absence in Foreign Parts, had made a second Contract with her, and unjustly detain'd her from him: At this his Holiness, having fully discussed the Matter, gave Sentence for him, and accordingly he enjoy'd her; the Earl of Salisbury, as it seems, acquiescing therein by an after Marriage [z] with Elizabeth, second Daughter of John Lord Mohun of Dunstor Castle. By this Princely Paragon he left behind him [a] two Sons, Thomas Holland Earl of Kent, who lived many Years after, John Holland, in time, Earl of Huntington and Duke of Excester, and a Daughter, Maud, first Wife of Peter Courtney, Nephew of Hugh Courtney, first Earl of Devonshire, and after his decease Married to Valeran, Earl of St. Paul. The Incomparable Widow, Mother of these Children, was now about two and Thirty Years of Age, but her Vertues were so singular, and her Charms so strong and attractive; that still she made shift to Captive no less a Man, than him, that had taken King John Prisoner; for the Black-Prince took her to Wife the Year following, as in due place We shall see.

[x] Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 74. &c.

[y] Liber Islep dict. in Arch. Cantuar. Bibl. Vid. Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 74.

[z] Catal. Honor. p. 1044.

[a] Catal. Honor. p. 765.

At this time [b] Hugh King of Cyprus died, leaving his Kingdom and the Defence thereof to his Son Peter; Hugh, the Son of an Elder Son Guy, being put by: This King Peter was a Man of great Valour and Fortune in the Wars against the Saracens; of whom We shall shortly have an occasion to take some Notice.

[b] Odor. Rainal. ad an. 1360. §. 13.

CHAP.

An. Dom. 1361. An. Regni Angliæ XXXV.

CHAPTER the Seventh.

The CONTENTS.

I. King Edward causes all his Lords and Prelates to swear to uphold the Peace, and sends Ambassadors to the Pope for a confirmation of all. II. The manner of King John's Reception at Paris after his long Imprisonment. III. The unwillingness of the Frenchmen to admit of King Edward's Government. IV. King Edward being put in Possession of all the Lands, which were to fall to him by the Treaty, makes the Lord John Chandos his Lieutenant in those parts; the said Lords Praise and Character. V. The English Garrisons deliver'd up to the French King; many of the common Souldiers whereof joyning together turn Robbers: They begin to do much mischief about Champaigne and Burgundy. VI. King John sends against them the Lord James of Bourbon, whom they overthrow. VII. Their formidable Progress; the Pope fearing their Insolence procures them to be drawn off into Italy. VIII. A second Great Plague in England, the strange Prodigies forerunning it; Its excessive Fury; it sweeps away the Good Duke of Lancaster; the Lord John Moubray and Three other Lords; with six Bishops and the Archbishop of Armagh. IX. The Black-Prince Marries the Lady Joan, Countess of Kent. X. Prince Lionel made the Kings Lieutenant of Ireland; with his Behaviour in that Place. XI. King Edward restores unto the Priors Aliens, what he took from them in the Eleventh Year of his Reign.

I. KING Edward, of England [a] having kept his Christmass in great Splendor at Woodstock, near Oxford, went after the Holydays to his Parliament, which he had summon'd to meet him at Westminster on the [b] 24th of January: Where he communicated unto the Three Estates all the Articles, and the whole Process of the Peace, which he had made with the King of France. Both Houses were entirely satisfied with the whole Affair; and on the last of January the Archbishop of Canterbury with great Solemnity celebrated the Mass of the Holy Trinity, returning Thanks to Almighty God; in which Service there was this small, but comprehensive Scripture, [c] Brethren, rejoyce, be Perfect, be of good Comfort, be of one Mind; live in Peace: And the God of Love and Peace shall be with you. The Grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the Love of God, and the Fellowship of the Holy Ghost be with you all. Amen. After Mass, the King and his Sons standing up in presence of the French Hostages, Torches being lighted and Crosses held over the Eucharist and Missale, all those of the Peers, who had not sworn already to keep the Peace, took now their Oath, which also they read from Papers or Scrolls written, and signed with their own Hands; the Archbishop beginning thus, viz. We Simon, Archbishop of Canterbury, do swear upon the Holy Body of God and his Holy Gospel, firmly, as much as in Us lies, to keep the Peace and Concord agreed on between the two Kings, and to do nothing contrary thereto. This being done, every Man, as he had taken the Oath, gave up his Paper to the Kings Notaries, to be laid up as a Witness to Posterity. After the same Method King John made his Lords and Estates of Parliament to swear to uphold the said Peace to their Power; and thereupon sent his Ambassadors to the Pope for his Apostolical Sanction and surer confirmation thereof: As also King Edward did the like on his part, and among his Ambassadors We find the Lord Guy [d] Brian to be One. And thus at last was this Peace as fully established, and as strongly bound on Earth, as Humane Wisdom, or Authority, could Devise, or secure.

[a] Walsing. hist. p. 170. n. 40. & M.S. vet. Angl. in Bibl. C.C.C. Cantab. c. 231.
[b] Stow p. 264.
[c] 2 Cor. c. 13. v. 11, &c.
[d] Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 151.

II. But we should say something more particularly of the French King and his Affairs: We waited on him from Calais to Boulogne, and there left him; tho he did not stay long in that place; for in the [e] beginning of November he went thence to Monstrevil, and thence Four Leagues farther to Hesdin, and so to the Good City of Amiens, where he tarried almost till Christmas. On St. Thomas his Day, being a Monday, he rode thence to Paris, where he was Honourably received of the Clergy with with ſolemn Proceſſions, and the Univerſal Joy of all the People; who convey'd him with great Demonſtrations of Loyal Affection to his Palace. Here He and his Son Philip, and the reſt of the Cavalcade alighted; a moſt Royal and Magnificent Dinner being prepared for them. But it is not my buſineſs to declare with what Welcome the French King was received by all manner of People, at his return into his Realm. For he was indeed a Better Prince, than One would gueſs by his Ill-Fortune, and had now been a Priſoner no leſs, than Four Years, One Month and ſix Days, viz. from the 19 of September 1356, on which day the Battle of Poictiers was fought, to the 25 of October 1360, when he was fully acquitted and went from Calais to Boulogne. Wherefore his preſence was much deſired of all his Subjects, and they welcom'd him, where e'r he came, with ſhouts and Viveleroys, and preſents of Gold and Silver, and other Fair and Rich Gifts. And the Prelates and Barons of all his Realm came to Paris to Viſit and Congratulate him, and they entertain'd him with Shews, and Feaſts, and other Diverſions to comfort his Mind, according to their Duty. And the King was hugely pleas'd with theſe things; it being agreeable to have a Right Taſte of Recreation, after ſo much and ſo bitter Affliction.

[e] Froiss. c. 214.

AN. DOM. 1361. An. Regni Angliæ XXXV.

III. Soon after this King Edward ſent over the Sea ſuch Perſons, as were Commiſſion'd by Him to take Poſſeſſion in his Name of thoſe Lands, Countries, Earldoms, Bayliwicks, Cities, Towns, Caſtles, and Forts, that were to be deliver'd unto him by Vertue of the Peace and Treaty. But this Matter was not over-haſtily perform'd; for divers Lords in Languedoc would not at firſt obey the French Kings Orders to yield themſelves to hold of the King of England; althô King John frankly quitted them of all the Faith, Homage, and other Tyes, wherewith they had been bound unto Him: It ſeem'd ſo hard to them to forget their Natural Lord, and yield to obey Strangers. Of this Humor eſpecially were the Lords of the far Marches, as the Earl of la Marche, the Earl of Perigort, the Earl of Cominges, the Vicount of Chaſteau Darry, the Vicount of Carmain, the Lord of Pincornet, and divers others; all who were extreamly ſurprized, that the French King ſhould offer to acquit them of the Reſort and Homage, which they ow'd to him, and enjoyn them to pay it to the King of England. And ſome of them began to argue, and ſaid, that the King ought not ſo to acquit them; for they affirmed, how there were in Gaſcogne Charters, and Privileges above 500 Years old, granted unto them by Charlemagne King of France; which ſignified, that their Reſort and Allegiance ſhould not be put to any other Court, but his only. And therefore at firſt they ſcrupled the Kings Commands; but King John, who was reſolved to hold and perform the Articles of the Peace with all ſincerity, ſent his Dear Couſin the Lord James of Bourbon unto them all ſeverally, who by good Words and ſound Reaſons, ſhewing them both the neceſſity of Affairs, and that it was the Kings abſolute Pleaſure and Reſolution, perſwaded the moſt part of the ſaid Lords, as the Earl of Armagnac, the Lord De la Bret, the Earl of Foix, and many others, thô much againſt their Wills, to become Liege-men to the King of England. The ſame Difficulty was found in the parts on the Sea-ſide, as in Poictou, Rochellois, and Sainctogne: Unto them this Compoſition of their King ſeem'd very grievous; when they ſaw, that thereby they were in a manner cut off from their Natural Country, and that they muſt ſubmit to the Government of ſtrangers: But eſpecially the ſtrong City of Rochelle, would not of a long while admit of the Engliſh Yoke, but excus'd themſelves unto the King, and beg'd earneſtly of him ſtill to continue their Protector, and they wrote to him in the moſt endearing manner poſſible, deſiring him in their Letters, and by their Repreſentatives, "that for Gods ſake, he would pleaſe never to acquit them of the Faith, that they "ow'd unto him, nor put them out of his Demaine into the hands of Strangers; ſay-"ing, how they had rather be Taxed yearly even to the half of their ſubſtance, than "to be ſubject to the Engliſh, which was a thing wholly inſupportable to all true "Frenchmen. King John by theſe their frequent and humble Remonſtrances ſaw well their Faith and Loyalty to him, and was very compaſſionate of their caſe; but he was a Prince of that Honour; that he had rather loſe half his Kingdom, than break his Word; and it was his ordinary ſaying: That if Faith and Truth were baniſhed from the reſt of Mankind; nevertheleſs they ought to be found in the Mouth of Kings. Beſides he was called upon by King Edward's Deputies, for by this backwardneſs of the French Nation, when it ſeems things were not made ready againſt Midſummer, the Firſt of the times appointed for compleating theſe Matters, King Edward [f] on the 15 of November following, conſtituted, Sr. Thomas Vuedale Knight, and Thomas Duncent, [f] Aſhmole p. 663. ex Rot. Franc. 35. Ed. 3. m. 3.

An. Dom. 1361. An. Regni Angliæ XXXV.

cent, Licentiate in the Laws, his Agents, whom he ſent to Bruges, with Power to make requeſt to the King of France for the effectual Accompliſhment of all things concluded on at Calais; and to require, that He and his Son ſhould make the Renunciations and Tranſports according to all the foreſaid agreements, on the Reception whereof they were enabled to give Acquittance in the King, their Maſters Name. Theſe things quickned King John in his endeavours to reduce his People to acquieſce in his Determinations; wherefore he wrote to thoſe of Rochelle, "Deſiring them to ſhew "their Loyalty, which they ſo much profeſſed, in denying themſelves for his ſake; "that otherwiſe the Peace would be broken upon their account, which would be a "great Imputation to his Honour, and no leſs Prejudice to the whole Realm of France. Hereupon when the Rochellers ſaw no other Remedy, and that whether they would or no, ſince their King would not admit of their excuſes, they ſhould be compelled to undergo this hatefull Yoke; then at laſt after much adoe, they yielded full ſore againſt their Wills, the Honeſt Men of the Town ſaying to one another, "Well, "we ſhall then from henceforth obey the Engliſh; but our hearts are tyed for ever to "the French Intereſt.

And here it may be a matter of our Wonder, how it came to paſs, that King Edward ſhould ever expect otherwiſe from Frenchmen born; but that they would bear a foreign Rider with a Mind always ready to fling him off, upon the firſt occaſion, as afterwards it proved indeed. Surely, in this caſe, I cannot tell what to ſay; ſince that Prince's Wiſdom is by no means raſhly to be call'd in Queſtion; unleſs, that he thought it reaſonable to expect as true Service from theſe Men, as he and his Anceſtors had conſtantly found from the Inhabitants of Gaſcogne and Guienne; and beſides, being himſelf a Juſt and Gracious Prince, he might have a confidence by his Good and eaſie Government to bind them unto him for ever; as ſurely he did ſeveral, and had done all, had all been alike capeable of being juſtly affected with Obligations: But indeed nothing is more changeable and irrational, than the Vulgar, and more forgetfull of Benefits.

IV. However thus the King of England, had now the Poſſeſſion and Seiſin of the whole Dutchy of Aquitain, even from the River Loire to the Pirenean Mountains; and on the other ſide toward Flanders, of all the Earldom of Ponthieu and Guiſnes, and of all the Lands, which he ought to have on that ſide the Sea, that is to ſay, in the Realm of France, by Vertue of the ſaid Treaty. And ſo this Year the Lord John Chandos paſſed over the Sea, as Regent and Lieutenant for the King of England, in whoſe Name he began to take Poſſeſſion of all the ſaid Lands, and received the Faiths and Homages of all the Earls, Vicounts, Barons, Knights, and Eſquires, and had deliver'd unto him by the Lord James of Bourbon, all the Towns, Forts, and other Places, which were to be deliver'd by the Tenor of the Peace. And every where he ſet Captains, Conſtables, Bayliffs, and Officers, ſuch as he thought good to ordain: But himſelf reſided for the moſt part at Niort, a ſtrong and great Town on the Borders of Poictou, ſtanding on la Sevre Niortoiſe, [g] about Nine Leagues from Rochelle: Where he kept a Court, like a Prince, having an allowance ſufficient for that purpoſe. For King Edward, who underſtood Men, as well as any King in his Days, ſent him thither upon the account of his Sweet and Winning Behaviour, which being accompanied with exquiſite Prudence and unparallel'd Courage and Conduct; made him appear the fitteſt Perſon to enter firſt upon that Government. And becauſe he knew Authority would grow cheap without external Pomp and Splendor, he allow'd him to keep an houſe like a Prince, and ſet the higheſt Marks of Honour upon him; empowring him [h] even to grant Pardons for Treaſon, Murder, and Felony, the King promiſing to Ratifie under his Great Seal, whatſoever he ſhould do in ſuch caſes. Nor was this Noble Gentleman unworthy of this Advancement: For, as Froiſard ſays, he was a Good Knight, Courteous and Benign, Well-ſhap'd, Liberal, Heroick, Wiſe, and Faithfull in all Matters: And had worthily behav'd himſelf among all Lords, Knights, Ladies, and Damſels; ſo that there was no Knight in his Days more generally beloved and praiſed of all People.

[g] Ita Ferrar. in Noverogus, i. e. Niort.

[h] Aſhmole p. 702.

V. Now the mean while, [i] that the Deputies of the King of England were taking Poſſeſſion of the foreſaid Lands according to the Tenor of the Treaty; there were certain other Deputies appointed by the ſaid King, on the Marches and Limits of France and elſewhere, who being joyned with others commiſſion'd from the French King for that purpoſe, were to deliver up unto him all that which being then in Poſſeſſion of the King of England, ought to go now to the King of France. In order thereto theſe Deputies began to cauſe all manner of Men of War, to avoid and depart out of the [i] Froiſ. c. 214. fol. 109. b.

Holds

Holds and Garrisons which they held; for the Kings Command ran strictly, that all such who held of England, should on peril of their Lives and Goods, and of being reputed as Enemies and Traytors to the said King, immediately leave and deliver up such Forts as they occupied to the French King and his Deputies, they being his by Vertue of the Peace. Now those Captains, Knights and Esquires, who were natural Subjects to the King of England, and who valued their Duty, readily obey'd the Kings Command, and rendred up or caused to be rendred the Places under them: But some refused to obey, pretending now to make War in the Name and Title not of King Edward, but of the King of Navarre, thô that King was now a Friend to the House of France. There were also many Strangers, great Captains and Robbers, who would not depart upon any account, as Almaines, Brabanders, Flemings, Hainalders and others, besides some wicked Renegadoes both of England and France, who being poor, thought it the best way to enrich themselves by making War still in France. And moreover many Hundreds of Common Souldiers, whom their Captains, having resign'd up their Fortresses according to King Edwards Command, had dismissed and disbanded, gather'd themselves now together again, as thinking it better to continue the Wars with others like themselves, than to return home to their poor Trades; and perhaps many of them durst not go home again, they were guilty of such Villanies, or so mightily in Debt.

AN. DOM. 1361. An. Regni Angliæ XXXV.

These Men being thus gather'd together elected from among them new Captains, the main Qualities which recommended them to their Choice, besides Courage and Skill in Arms, being Cruelty, Lust, and Love of Rapine. At first they rode about in small Companies, and made their general Rendezvous in Champaigne, then in Burgundy, where they assembled in great Numbers, being called Les Tard-Venus, or the Late-Comers in respect of the other Companions, who had before pillaged and destroy'd the Flower of all the Country. These Robbers for their first Handsell went and took by Surprise the strong Fortress of Joinville, where they found great Riches; for all the Country thereabouts had entrusted the best of their Goods to the strength of that Place. The Spoils taken here were estimated to the Value of an hundred thousand Franks, and given up wholly to the Conquerours, who kept the Castle for some time, overrunning and wasting from thence the Country of Champaigne, and the Bishopricks of Verdun in Burgundy, and Langres in Champaigne, and when they had sufficiently ravaged these Parts, then they sold the Castle of Joinville to those of the Country for 20000 Franks. This done, they enter'd into Burgundy, where they rested themselves, expecting a Reinforcement of Men like themselves; all which time they were not idle, but practised many Villanous Deeds: For they had among them several Knights and Esquires, Renegadoes even of those Parts, who directed where and how to get Plunder and do Mischief. They lay a long while about Besancon, Dijon and Beaulne, chief Cities of Burgundy, and robbed and commanded all the Country about; for there were none to encounter them. After this they took the Town of Givry in Bresse which they plunder'd, and so tarried thereabout, because that was a plentifull Country, and daily their Numbers encreased: For all the Common Souldiers, that came out of English Fortresses, and had leave of their Captains to go whither they pleased, drew thitherward continually; so that by Lent they were in all about 16000 strong.

Now when they saw themselves so considerable, they began to ordain among them Captains and Leaders, whom they promised to obey in all things: For even wicked Societies cannot hold together without Order: And the Chief of their Captains were these, Sr. Seguin de Batefoil a Knight of Gascogne, who had no less than 2000 Fighting Men: Taillebert of Talleboton, Guyot du Pyn, the little Mechin Battailler, the Wicked Hanekin Francois, the Burgrave de Lesparre, Nandon de Bergerac, the Burgrave de Boure, the Burgrave of Bretuel, Nucharg, Aberdenny a Scot, Bourdonnel a German, Bernard de la Salle an Hainalder, Lortingo de la Salle his Kinsman, Robert Briquet, Edmund of Ortigo, Sr. Garses du Chastel, Gironet de la Baulx, Carnelle and Others: Who being thus gather'd together about Midlent, resolved to go to Avignon to give the Pope and Cardinals a Visit, more for the love of Prey than Devotion; for whatever Treasure the Church might then have in Heaven, they laid up some Treasures also on Earth, as well as Men of the World. Wherefore these Late-Comers went thitherward thrô the Land of Masconnois, intending for the Earldom of Foretz or Forestes that plentifull Country, and towards Lyon on the River Rhosne.

VI. When King John heard of all this, and how these Robbers daily encreased and ravaged his Realm, he was infinitely displeased, for his Council told him, that without a speedy remedy these Evil Companions might encrease so strangely, as to be able to do more Mischief than ever was done by the Englishmen themselves in time of War: Wherefore they advised him to send against them a well form'd Army without any more delay. Then the King wrote his Special Letters to his Cousin, the Lord James of Bourbon, [k] Earl of la Marche, who was at that time in the Town of Mompellier in Languedoc, having newly put the Lord John Chandos in Possession of divers Lands, Cities, Towns, Castles, Forts and other Places thereabout, belonging to the King of England by Vertue of the Peace, as we said before. The King in his Letters desired his Cousin of Bourbon to be his Chief General, to muster Souldiers to a sufficient Number, till he should find himself able to keep the Field, and then go forth and fight against these Companions and root them out. The Lord of Bourbon immediately on receipt of these Letters, went Post to the City of Agen in Agennois, whence he issued out his Letters, and sent Messengers into all Parts, desiring and commanding in the Kings Name, all Knights and Esquires to come to him ready appointed for the War, which was done accordingly: For this Lord James of Bourbon was generally beloved over all France; so that every one obey'd him readily, and drew to the Place of General Rendezvous towards Lyon on the River Rhosne, from Auvergne and Limosin, from Provence and Savoy, and from the Dauphiné de Vienne; and moreover many Valiant Knights and Esquires were sent from Burgundy by the Young Duke who was not yet dead. With all these Forces the Lord James of Bourbon marched forth from Lyon, and the Parts of Masconnois and Beaujolois, and entred the Earldom of Forestes, where his Sister was Lady in Right of her Children; for the Earl of Forestes her Husband was then newly dead: Wherefore she govern'd the Country by the Hands of Sr. Reginald of Forestes her Husbands Brother, who received the Lord James of Bourbon and his Company with great joy, and feasted him to his Power; as did also his two Nephews, who presented their Service to their Uncle the Earl of la Marche, to ride with him in Defence of their Country against the Companions, who were by this time about Charolle and Tornus, drawing thitherward. For when they understood how the Frenchmen were gathering together to suppress them, their Captains presently went to Council, to advise how to maintain themselves: At this time they found their Number to be no less than 16000 Fighting Men, wherefore they said among themselves, "Let us then go boldly against these Frenchmen, who are so desirous to find us out, "and let us fight them at some Advantage if we can, or else without, for we are e- "nough: If Fortune favour us at this time we shall be rich for ever, as well by the "Prisoners we shall take, as by the Booty of the Field; and also we shall gain such "Reputation to our Arms, that none hereafter will dare to withstand us; and if we "lose we have no more to care for. Being thus agreed, they dislodged and went up the Mountains, designing to pass into the Land of Forestes and to come to the River of Loire; but in their way they found a Good Town called Charlieu in the Bailywick of Mascon, where they made a fierce Assault which lasted an whole Day; yet the Place was so well defended by the Gentlemen of the Country, that they could win nothing there. Then they marched forward, sending abroad several Detachments to scour the Country of Beaujolois, where having done considerable Dammage, they entred the Bishoprick of Lyon. In their March they would be sure to take some small Hold or other every Day, where they lodged usually for the Night following, making sad Havock of all things whereever they came. One day particularly they took a Castle called Brignais, about three Leagues from Lyon, with the Lord thereof and his Lady in the Place; and there they lodged and refreshed themselves, and here they were certainly informed how the Lords of France were drawn into the Fields, and stood ready to receive them.

An. Dom. 1361. An. Regni Angliæ XXXV.

[k] Mezeray.

[l] Froiss. c. 215. fol. 110.

The Lord James [l] of Bourbon was now again return'd to Lyon, when he understood that the Companions drew near him apace, having won the Castle of Brignais and many other Holds, and brought the Country into great Desolation: At this News he was extreamly displeased, because he was Guardian to his Nephews, the Earl of Forestes Sons, and had the Care of their Lands. Wherefore he drew into the Field and muster'd his Men, and found them to be an Army sufficient to cope with the Enemy; but first he sent out his Currours to view the Face of the Enemy, and to consider well their Number and their Order, and where he should surely find them. In the mean time these subtle Companions had taken a Mountain at Brignais near Lyon, where they so order'd themselves, that they could not be perfectly view'd, and so the best Armed Troops were conceal'd behind, and the Residue who were worse armed, and a far smaller Number stood ready ranged along in Order of Battle on the Hill side. These Men only only were seen by the Lord of Bourbons Currours, whom they permitted leisurely to view them, thereby to feed them with an Errour that might prove their Bane. Being come back to the Earl of la Marche, these Men told him what they had discover'd, saying to him and the Lords about him; "Sirs, we have seen yonder Company your "Enemies, and have viewed them well to our Power, and all things rightly consider'd "according to the best of our Judgment, they exceed not five or six Thousand; nor "are they very well arm'd neither. "Look you there now (said the Lord of Bourbon, "speaking to Sr. Arnold of Cervoles the Arch-Priest) "Sir, you told me before this, "that they were to the Number of 16000 Fighting Men, and now you all hear to "the Contrary. Sir, said the Arch-Priest, I never believed them to be under that "Number I'll assure you: But if they be, God be thanked, it is so much the better for us: "Therefore now consider what you will do. In the Name of God said the Lord of Bourbon, we will go and be the Aggressors; and with that he order'd his Battails, and set them in good Array, for now he might see his Enemies before him. Then he made certain New Knights, as the Lord Peter his Eldest Son, whose Banner was raised that Day, also his Nephew the young Earl of Forestes, the Lord of Tournon, the Lord of Malinier, and the Lord Groslee of Dauphiné, besides whom there were present at this time the Earl of Uzes, Sr. Reginald of Forestes, the Lord Lewis of Beaujeu, and Sr. Robert of Beaujeu his Brother, Sr. Lewis of Challon sur Saone, Sr. Hugh de Vienne, and divers other Good Knights and Esquires, to the Number [m] of 2000 Men of Arms, all desirous to advance their Honours, and to overthrow these Companions, that thus ravaged the Country without any pretence or reason. The Arch-Priest and divers of the most expert Knights, that were present said plainly, how it would be best to wait till their Enemies had left that Mountain, and so they should have more Advantage over them: But this Counsel being overrul'd, Sr. Arnold Cervoles the Arch-Priest had order to begin with his Battail, for he was a good Commander, and had with him 1600 Chosen Men. Now the Companions on the Mountain saw well all the French Order, but the French could discover nothing of them, but only those who being evil arm'd, were set there to amuse and deceive them. And yet even those Men were very advantagiously posted; for the Ascent of the Hill was difficult, and they had among them a 1000 Cart-load of great Stones, which did them that Day extraordinary good Service. The Frenchmen who are naturally soon wrought into Security and a confidence of Success, were very eager to set upon their Enemies: But for all that they could do, they could not ascend the Mountain directly to come to them, it was so steep, wherefore of necessity they were obliged to coast about, till they came almost unto them. But then this worst-arm'd Battail of the Companions, who had by them a vast provision of sharp and heavy Stones, began to cast them down on them that approached, with such Violence, that they beat down, slew, hurt and maimed a great Number: Insomuch that they neither could nor durst approach any nearer. Wherefore presently the first Battail of Frenchmen was so sore beaten, bruised, disorder'd and trampled on, that all the Day after they were able to do but little Good. To their succour therefore came now the Lord James of Bourbon, his Son and his Nephews with their Banners, bringing up the other two Battails, who all went forward with great Courage only to be flung away, as we shall shortly see; so that 'tis a great pitty they had not taken the Arch-Priests Advice, and order'd their Affairs more discreetly. Now as the Lord James and the other Lords, with their Banners and Penons before them approached valiantly, coasting the Mountain, the worst-armed Battail of the Companions entertain'd them with their old Trade of flinging Stones so fiercely, that the boldest of them was glad to stand at a Bay. And while the French were thus attempting to get forward, and their Enemies to keep them off, the great, fresh and well-armed Battail of the Companions, consisting of 10000 chosen Men, which had not yet been seen, found a way and came about the Mountain well ranged, and having cut their Spears to six Foot length, came on with a great Shout, and fell in among the Frenchmen, of whom at the first Meeting they overthrew Hundreds to the Earth. Truly for such a Surprise the French did their Devoir and fought valiantly; but the Companions had the Advantage by the suddenness of their Attack, and were in a manner equal to them in Number; but above all they fought with such Ardour and Courage, that it was wonderfull: And still the Stones came thundring on the Frenchmens Helmets and Shields, riveing of Bucklers, and striking down, bruising and maiming of Men: So that the Victory presently enclined to the Worse Side, and a Righteous Cause miscarried for want of Discretion. The Arch-Priest did all that a good Captain and a Valiant Gentleman was capable of doing, but at last he was there taken Prisoner, having ving first received many grievous Wounds; and with him several Knights and Esquires of the first Battail. The Lord James of Bourbon Earl of la Marche, and his Son Sr. Peter, were both very much wounded; the young Earl of Foreſtes, his Uncle Sr. Reginald, the Earl of Uzes, Sr. Robert of Beaujeu, Sr. Lewis of Challon, and above an 100 Knights more were taken. Thoſe that fled from the Battle escaped to Lyon, whither also, thô not without much labour and difficulty, the Lord James of Bourbon, and his Eldest Son Sr. Peter, were brought on Shields by their trusty Servants. For their Hurts all the City was very sorry, and the Ladies and Gentlewomen of the Town went themselves to visit them, and to dress their Wounds; but within three Days the Lord James of Bourbon died, and Sr. Peter his Son followed him a little after, to the general Regret of all Mankind especially of the King of France: Yet neither he nor any else, had any other Remedy but Patience, and a Resolution to revenge their Death. This Battle was thus fought at Brignais near Lyon, on the * 26 of March being a Good-Friday, in the Year of our Lord MCCCLXI.

AN. DOM. 1361. An. Regni Angliæ XXXV.

[m] Froiss. 2156 f. 111. b.

An. Dom. 1361. An. Regni Angliæ XXXV.

* C. Lit. Dom. Pasch. 28 Mart.

VII. At this Disaster all the Country was struck with horrour, and it was generally feared, that the Companions would be rendred invincible by these Successes, and would also grow more numerous thereupon, unless it should please God to put a speedy stop to their mad Career. But as for them, they grew more insolent and wicked than ever, being now strong and formidable, and rich also with the Booty of the Field, and the Ransoms they were to have for Prisoners. And immediately after this Victory, having surmounted all Opposition, they overspread the whole Land of Foreſtes, and rob'd and ravag'd, and did what they pleased wherever they came: For now they were so strong, that hardly here and there a few of the most Defensible Fortresses were able to resist them. Wherefore within a while after, that the Desolation which they carried along with them, had render'd the Country unable to bear them any longer, they divided into two Parts; the Lesser by far consisting but of 3000 Fighting Men, followed Sr. Seguin Batefoile, who went and kept Garrison at Ance on the Soane about 4 Leagues from Lyon, which Place he fortified exceedingly; and here he flesh'd himself, till he was gorged like any Horsleech. For he commanded all the Marches thereabouts, that Country being as then one of the most plentifull in the whole World; that is to say, all the Land on each side the River of Soane, as Masconnois, the Archbishoprick of Lyon, Beaujolois, as far as to la Marche, Bourbonnois and Nivernois: All which Parts he overran and rob'd, and ransom'd People at his pleasure. Being glutted here he sent forth some Troops which wan by Scalado the good City of Brioude in Auvergne, where afterwards he tarried above a Year, having so well fortified it, that he now feared neither Siege nor Surprise: And from hence he overran the Lands about Clermont, Monferrand, Riom, La Cheze Dieu, Nonnotte, Issoire and all the Country of Avergne, the Earl thereof being then an Hostage in England; at all which Places he did much Mischief and got huge Spoils. And having thus at last utterly harassed the Country, he then went away by Composition into Gascogne whence he came, and ever after lived more regularly.

The mean while the greater Part of this Company amounting to 13000 Men and upwards, after the Battle of Brignais, took their way towards Avignon, saying, they would now visit the Pope and his Cardinals, and have some of their Money, or else live upon their Lands: And so in their March they tarried here and there, to gather up the Ransom of such Prisoners as they had taken, and to see if the Peace between France and England would hold or not. In their way they took Towns and Fortresses as they pleased, none daring to hold out against them; their Renown being so great, and the Experience as well as Courage of the People of those Parts being so little: For they had not been used to the War. Now the Captains of these Robbers had intelligence, how that in the City of Pont St. Esprit about seven Leagues from Avignon, all the Treasures and Riches of the Country were gathered together, in Confidence of the Places Strength. Wherefore they held a close Consult among themselves, how to win this Fortress; for besides the Spoil thereof, they should then be Masters of the River Rhosne, and consequently of the City of Avignon. At last according as they had devised, Guyot du Pyn and the Little Mechin rode with their Troops, being 3000 Select Men and Horses, no less than fifteen Leagues in one Night, so that the next Morning by Break of Day they came suddenly to Pont St. Esprit, which they presently took by Surprise, and so became Masters of all that was therein; the more the Pitty: For there they slew many an Innocent Person, and violated many Honest Damsels, and wan innumerable Riches, and Provision enough to keep them all an whole Year.

When

When the other Companions, Engliſh, Gaſcogners, French, and Germans, who yet held Garriſons in France, and would not deliver them up at the Command of any Man living; for they ſaid, "they muſt live, and War was the only trade they could "live by: I ſay, when theſe Men heard of the Succeſs of thoſe other Companions, then they yielded up what they held on Compoſition, and marched all toward Pont St. Eſprit, in hopes to partake with them in their Succeſs. And here altogether they held their Chief Garriſon, being at liberty, now to ride into France, and now into the Empire, as they pleas'd, without Danger. From hence almoſt every day they ſent out ſtrong Detachments even to the Gates of Avignon, whereat the Pope and Cardinals were in a great Conſternation: For they heard, how their Chief Captains were the greateſt Enemies to Religion, and Deſpiſers both of God and Man. So that Pope [n] Innocent VI, and the College of Cardinals, ſeeing their Danger, ſent a ſerious Embaſſy to the Emperour of Germany, and the Lords of Almaine, and moreover they ordained a ſolemn Croiſade, or an Holy Expedition againſt theſe more than Heathen Chriſtians; ſince they did their endeavour to deſtroy all Chriſtendom, as other Bands, like them, had attempted before; without the leaſt juſt Pretence or Title of Reaſon. For indeed they robbed, and took whatever they could lay hands on, Holy or Profane, violating and raviſhing Nunns, and other young Maids and Women, without the leaſt remorſe, and ſlaying Men, Women, and Children without Mercy; thô they had never given them the leaſt ſhadow of offence: And thoſe, who were moſt notorious in the Practiſe of theſe Villanies, were in greateſt eſteem with them. Upon which account the Pope and his Cardinals preached openly this Croiſade, and abſolved ab omni pœnâ & culpâ all thoſe, who would undertake this cauſe of Religion, and would adventure their Bodies to deſtroy this accurſed People. The Lord Peter of Monſtier, Cardinal of Arras, by ſome called Cardinal of Oſtia, was appointed chief Captain of this Croiſade, who immediately leaving Avignon, went to Carpentras, where he began to retain all manner of Men of War, eſpecially ſuch as deſired to ſave their Souls in purchaſing by the hazard of their Bodies the foreſaid Pardons and Indulgences: But of other Wages there was not a Penny to be had. Whereupon this formidable Expedition vaniſh'd into Air, all Men leaving the undertaking, when they heard the Conditions; and ſome of them went into Lombardy, others into their own Countries; and not a few to thoſe very Companions againſt whom they were deſigned. So that daily their Numbers encreaſed, and they extreamly haraſſed the Pope, the Cardinals, and the Merchants about Avignon, doing much miſchief untill Midſummer, in the Year one Thouſand Three Hundred Sixty and One: And then the Pope and his Cardinals happily remembred them of a Noble and Valiant Knight, called John Marqueſs of Monferrat in Italy, who held War and had done a long while againſt the Lords of Milain. Him the Pope invited to Avignon, and treated with him to take all theſe Men into his Pay, and to lead them away thence into Lombardy to his Wars there. The Marqueſs lik'd the motion well, and began to fall in Treaty with the Chief Captain of the Companions, who was at this time an Engliſh Man, named Sr. John Hawkwood, and at laſt agreed with the Marqueſs on conſideration of 60000 Florens of Gold to be divided among his Officers, and ſuch and ſuch Wages to be conſtantly paid, to go along with him into Lombardy: So that firſt there might be obtain'd from the Pope, a Full Abſolution ab omni pœnâ & culpâ; all which being agreed and perform'd, and the Florens paid down by the Pope, they deliver'd up Pont St. Eſprit, and left the Marches of Avignon, and went forth with the Marqueſs into Italy, to the great joy of the French King and all his Realm; althô many of them ſoon after returned into Burgundy; and Sr. Seguin of Batefoile would not forſake his Garriſon at Ance. But however France was in a far better Condition, being thus happily purged of thoſe noxious Humors, which began to corrode and prey upon her Vitals.

AN. DOM. 1361. An. Regni Angliæ XXXV.

[n] Froiſ. ibid. Odor. Rainald. ad hunc an. §. 5. Rebdorf. Annal. &c.

The mean while theſe Companions were led by the Marqueſs into Piedmont; where by their help he prevailed [o] mightily againſt the two Lords of Milain, Galeas, and Barnabo, and conquer'd Alba Pompeia, Pavia, Novarre, and other Towns, Caſtles, Lands, and Fortreſſes belonging unto them, and had ſeveral Rencounters and Skirmiſhes with them to his Honour and Advantage: So that within a Year he obtain'd the better hand of the Brothers of Milan, and had of them in a manner what he demanded: Thô afterwards the ſaid Lords by their good Policy ſurmounted theſe Matters, and brought off the better part of theſe Companions to their own ſide; whereupon their Dominion was enlarged, and they ruled in great Proſperity, as we ſhall ſhew more fully in another place.

[o] Paulus Jovius in Galeacio ſecundo, & Matt. Villani l. 10. c. 43. &c.

VIII. Nor

An. Dom. 1361. An. Regni Angliæ XXXV.

VIII. Nor was England much more happy all this while; thô now in full Peace, thô now free from all Foreign or Domeſtick Enemies; thô now ſhe had no ſuch Thieves or Robbers to diſturb her Quiet. For there [p] fell in England a New Calamity this Year, a Plague ſomething like the former, and which in reſpect thereof was called the Second Plague, nothing near ſo Diſmal and Univerſally Fatal, as the Former; but much more Deſtructive of the Nobility and Prelacy, where ever it went.

[p] Odor. Rainal. ad hunc an. §. 3. John Harding, &c.

Nor was this Viſitation unaccompanied with Prodigies; for on the [q] Fifth of May, being a Wedneſday, the Eve of the Aſcenſion, at 14 Minutes after Ten in the Morning, there happen'd a very remarkable Eclipſe of the Sun; which is mention'd alſo in the Turkiſh Annals; and there followed ſuch a ſtrange Drought, that there enſued great ſcarcity of Corn, Fruit, and Hay. That ſame Month it rained Blood in Burgundy, and on the 27 of the ſaid Month at Boulogne in France, there appeared in the Air a Bloody Croſs, from Morning until Six in the Evening, at which time being ſeen of many it began to move, and ſeem'd preſently to fall into the middle of the Sea. After which there came forth of Woods into Towns many Foxes in the Dusk of the Evening, which devoured Men alive in thoſe parts. And in the Summer of this Year both in England and France, in Deſerts and plain Countries, there appeared ſuddenly at ſeveral times two Caſtles in the Air; the One full South-Eaſt, and the Other South-Weſt, whence there iſſued two Hoſts of Armed Men, the One whereof, viz. That which came from the South-Eaſt, bare Argent, and the other Sable, which engaging together, the White would beat the Black; but afterwards the Black recollecting their Forces would fall upon the others, and extort the Victory back again: And then each Party would return to the Caſtles from whence they came, and ſo all things diſappeared. Thoſe, who are particular in theſe unuſual Matters, add, that after Michaelmas the Roſe-beds brought forth Roſes of a perfect Growth, Colour, and Smell; and that Crows, and other Birds brought forth their young at the ſame time. And in England on the 17 of January, namely on the day of St. Anthony the Abbot, there aroſe out of the South ſuch an horrible and dreadfull Tempeſt of Wind with an Earthquake, as the like was never known before; for it blew down after an incredible manner, ſtrong and mighty Buildings, Towers, Steeples, Chimneys, Houſes, Woods, Orchards, and all kind of Trees, bearing many a great way off with the very Roots, and doing Wonderfull Harm to Churches, Bells, Walls, Mills, and Houſes, eſpecially in the City of London: And this Storm continued by fits more or leſs for the ſpace of five, ſome ſay ſix, others eight days. And in the ſame Year many Men, Beaſts, Trees, and Buildings, were deſtroy'd with Thunder and Lightning from Heaven; and the [r] Devil appeared Bodily in humane ſhape to many People, as they travelled in divers places in the Country, and ſpake unto them to their great Affrightment.

[q] Labbe Chron. Technica ad hunc ann. & M.S. vet. Angl. in Bibl. C.C.C. Cantabr. c. 231. Walſingh. hiſt. p. 171. habet 6to Maii C. Lit. Dom. Paſc. 28. Martii. Vid. etiam Odor. Rainal. ad hunc an. § 5. Walſing. ibid. M.S. id. ibid. Fabian Lanqet, Stow, Knighton p. 2626. Pol. Virg. l. 19. p. 385. John Harding c. 184. &c. de omnibus hiſce Prodigiis.

[r] M.S. vet. Angl. in Bibl. C.C.C. Cantab. c. 230. ad finem.

Let no ſupercilious Critick be too raſh in condemning me for inſerting ſuch Matters here; as if thereby We Magiſterially impoſed upon the Belief of any Man. For we expect no more Credit from ſuch an One, than his Reaſon and Judgement may allow; nor do we put any ſtreſs on theſe things: But however think it our Duty to relate even doubtfull narrations, when they are ſo generally atteſted, as We find theſe to be. Eſpecially becauſe there is no Age, but has produced ſomething as ſtrange and incredible; nor no Hiſtorian, that pretends to be ſo diſcreet, as not to take notice of ſuch preternatural Accidents.

However at this time there happen'd a Second Plague, which we ſhall ſpare to deſcribe more fully any other way, than from its Effects; becauſe in the Firſt Plague, which was of the ſame kind, we were ſo large and ſo particular. It took away, as we ſaid before, Perſons of the Higheſt Rank and Quality; yet neither did it ſpare the meaner ſort; but eſpecially it rag'd among Young Men and Children, being leſs [s] fatal to Women; as if chooſing to be Cruel, as well to the Better Sex, as to the better part of that Sex. Whereupon, 'tis ſaid, [t] that afterwards the Widows of thoſe, who died, took unto them husbands at random, of ſtrange Countries, or Vile Condition, forgetting their Eſtate and Families.

[s] Walſing. hiſt. p. 171. n. 36.

[t] M.S. vet. Angl. in Bibl. C.C.C. Cantab. c. 231.

On [u] St. John's day and the day following, there died little leſs than 1200 at London; at Paris above 30000 in the whole Year; and beſides the many Thouſands of Common People that died at Avignon, there fell no leſs than [x] Nine Cardinals, and Seventy other Prelates. But here in England I ſhall not ſtand to enumerate, how many of the Vulgar periſhed; our Loſs will eaſily appear from the Quality and Worth of thoſe Few, whom I ſhall now name.

[u] Matt. Villani l. 10. c. 45. p. 54.

[x] Matt. Villani ibid. Mezeray p. 63. & Odoric. Rainal. ad hunc annum § 4.

And

And first of all there died a Man Worthy to live for ever, even the Great, High-born, Valiant, and Liberal Prince, Henry Plantagenet, who was taken away [y] by the Plague, on the 24 of March, being the Eve of the Annunciation of the Blessed Virgin, or as some say, [z] on the Tuesday after the said Feast, which that Year fell on the 30th of March. England had less wanted him, now that the War was ended; if he had not been as Eminent for Counsel in Peace, as he was remarkable for Military performances. He was only Son to Henry de Torto-Collo, who was younger Brother, and next Heir to Thomas Earl of Lancaster, who was Eldest Son to Edmund, Sirnamed Crouchback, Second Son to King Henry III of England, and Brother to King Edward the First, Grandfather to King Edward the Third. This Illustrious Person in his life time did nothing degenerate from the Blood Royal of England, of which he so largely partook; as may be seen in those many foregoing Passages of this History, which speak of his Warlike Actions. His many Heroick Vertues obtain'd him the Glorious Sirname of Good, he being generally called the Good Duke of Lancaster. Wherefore his Death was universally Lamented, especially by the Poor, by the Clergy, and by Scholars, to whom he was a Constant Friend and Patron. Nor was King Edward [a] less concerned for the loss of so Renowned a Kinsman and Captain; as were also all the Barons of England, Lords, Knights, and Esquires: For he was in his Days an Ornament to the Nobility, a Patron to the Church, a Prop to Learning, a Glory to the Souldiery, and a shield unto his Prince. He was [b] buried on the South-side of the High-Altar in the Collegiate Church of Leicester, which [c] himself had founded and set over it one Dean, Twelve Canons, Prebendaries, as many Vicars, and others, all sufficiently provided with Revenues: Besides he consummated the Hospital there, which his Father had begun, wherein were maintain'd an 100 Infirm and Poor people, [d] 50 Men, and 50 Women; together with 10 lusty and able Women, to serve the said Infirm Ones, with Meat and Drink, and other bodily Necessaries, day and night. Both which Hospital and College of Canons he sufficiently endowed for ever; and indeed they were the Greatest Ornament of that City, until the heavy Hand of King Henry VIII among other the like Foundations, laid their Ruines at his own Feet: At which time the College Lands [e] were valued at 595 pounds 7 shillings and 6 pence per annum.

AN. DOM. 1361. An. Regni Angliæ XXXV.

[y] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 789.
[z] Dugd. Warw. p. 165. ex Esc. 35. Ed. 3. p. 1. n. 122.

[a] Froiss. c. 216.

[b] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 789.
[c] Knighton p. 2625. Speed's Maps in Leicester.

[d] Stow p. 265.

[e] Stow p. 265.

He left behind him two Daughters, his Heirs, the Lady Mathilda the Eldest, then 22 Years of Age, at that time Married to William of Bavaria, Son to Lewis the Emperour, and Duke of Zealand, Holland, Hainalt, and Friseland; the other Daughter, named Blanch, then 19 Years of Age, and the Wife of John of Gaunt, Earl of Richmond, but upon the Death of her Eldest Sister (which happen'd shortly after) without Issue, in her Right, Duke of Lancaster, Earl of Darby, Lincoln, and Leicester, Steward of England, and also Lord of Brigerac, Beaufort, and Nogent: Who had by her Henry, Sirnamed of Bolingbroke, who afterwards traiterously deposing King Richard the Second, became King of England by the Name of Henry IV.

Soon after his Death the Lady [f] Mathilda, his Eldest Daughter, came into England to claim her Purparty of the Inheritance; where she died presently; being, [g] as was thought, poison'd, that the Inheritance might not be divided among Foreigners; but go entirely, as thereupon it did, to her Younger Sister, who was Married in England.

[f] Knighton p. 2625.
[g] Id. p. 2626. n. 31.

Besides this Great Prince, there [h] died this Year of the same Plague the Lord John Moubray, a most Valiant and Noble Knight of England, who was styled Lord of the Isle of Haxiholme, and of the Honours of Gower and Brembre. He died at York on the 4th of October, leaving behind him John his Son and Heir, a Valiant Young Gentleman, then of full Age; whom he had by his Wife, the Lady Joan of Lancaster, Sister to the Duke of Lancaster aforesaid. But this Young Lord John Moubray brought more [i] Honour and Possessions to his House and Name by taking unto him for Wife, the Lady Elisabeth, Daughter and Heir to John Lord Seagrave, by Margaret his Wife, Daughter and sole Heir to Thomas of Brotherton ([k] Second Son to King Edward the First) Earl of Norfolk and Marshal of England. From which Marriage [l] are Descended all the Dukes of Norfolk and Earls of Nottingham, of the Sirname of Moubray and Howard, the Earls of Suffolk and Barkshire; and particularly the Thrice Noble Henry Lord Mordant, the present Earl of Peterborough, [m] Son of John Earl of Peterborough, by his Lady Elisabeth, sole Daughter and Heir of William Howard, Lord Effingham, Eldest Son to Charles Earl of Nottingham. Nor ought We to forget the Death of the Valiant Lord [n] Edward Montague, Brother to William the first Earl of Salisbury of that Name, which happen'd in this Year; he leaving behind him only one Daughter,

[h] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 127.

[i] Dudg. ibid. p. 128.
[k] Fifth Son, but Second surviving.
[l] Sandford's Geneal. Hist. p. 110.
[m] Dugd. Bar. 2 Vol. p. 279. & p. 312.
[n] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 653. & Mills Catal. Honor. p. 531.

An. Dom. 1361. An. Regni Angliæ XXXV.

at that time XII Years of Age, then Wife to the Lord William Hufford, Eldeſt Son to the Earl of Suffolk.

Beſides this [o] there died the Lord Reginald Cobham, a Baron of great Renown in thoſe days, leaving behind him a Son of his own Name and Character: Alſo William [p] Lord Fitz-Warine, of the Houſe of the Lord Fulk Fitz-Warine, and Sr. Nicolas [q] St. Maure, aliàs Seymor, a conſiderable Baron of the Realm. Beſides whom there were now taken away ſix Biſhops, [r] as Michael Northborough, aliàs Northbrook, Biſhop of London, who was ſucceeded by Simon Sudbury; Reginald Brian Biſhop of Worceſter, whoſe Chair was ſupply'd by John Barnet; Thomas Lylde Biſhop of Ely, a good Benefactor to Peter-Houſe College in Cambridge, whoſe loſs was repaired by the Succeſſion of Simon Langham; alſo Robert Stratford Biſhop of Chicheſter, into whoſe place came William Lenne, aliàs Lenlimere; and John Synwell Biſhop of Lincoln, whoſe Succeſſor was John Buckingham, Lord Privy Seal; but theſe two latter died in the beginning of the next Year. There died alſo at this time that Famous Scholar, Richard Fitz-Ralph Archbiſhop of Armagh, Primate of Ireland, and Chancellour of the Univerſity of Oxford; of whom we [s] have ſpoken more largely elſewhere: Only it is here to be added, that this Archbiſhop [t] had ſuch a Reputation for Holineſs and Integrity of Life; that he is ſaid to have been conſpicuous for Miracles even after his Death; ſo that Pope Boniface IX gave order for an Inquiſition to be made thereafter, deſigning thereupon to Canonize him; as 'tis generally believ'd, he deſerved.

o Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 68.
p Id. 1 Vol. p. 447.
q Id. 2 Vol. p. 89.
r Walſing. hiſt. p. 171. Godw. Catal. Bps & Stow p. 265.
s Hujus hiſt. l. 3. c. 3. §. 15. p. 552.
t Vid. Odor. Rainal. ad ann. 1358. § 6. & Wad. in Annal. Minor. Tom. 4. ad eund. ann.

IX. But yet among theſe frequent Funerals, there was a Glorious Torch of Hymen lighted up at Court this Year: For the moſt Heroick Prince of Wales, who was all along unconquerable in War, laid aſide now his Lions skin, and began to be ſoften'd with the warm Fires of Love. The Object of his Affections was that Incomparable Paragon of Beauty the Lady Joan, commonly called the Fair Counteſs of Kent, at this time a Widow: And yet neither in Age much unequal to this Great Prince, nor in Vertue, or Nobility, thô a ſubject, unworthy of him. She was now in the 33d Year of her Age, and the Prince in the One and Thirtieth of his: He being Great Grandchild to King Edward the Firſt, and ſhe Grandchild to the ſaid King by a ſecond Venture: He, the Glory of his Sex for Military performances and other Princely Vertues; and She the Flower of hers, for a Diſcreet and Honourable Mind, ſweetned with all the Delicacies of a moſt ſurprizing Beauty. However, 'tis [u] ſaid, the Prince only intended at firſt to endeavour to encline her to the Love of a certain Knight, a ſervant of his, whom he deſign'd to advance thereby; but that after ſundry Denials, with which he would not be put off, ſhe told him plainly, "how when ſhe was "under Ward, ſhe had been diſpoſed of by others; but that now being at Years of Diſ- "cretion, and Miſtreſs of her own Actions, ſhe would not caſt her ſelf beneath her "Rank; but remembred, that ſhe was of the Blood Royal of England, and therefore "reſolved never to Marry again; but to a Prince for Quality and Vertue, like Him- "ſelf. The Black-Prince was a Paſſionate Admirer of every Gallant Spirit; how then could he do otherwiſe, but take ſatisfaction from ſo obliging a Declaration; when he well knew, that all ſhe ſaid, was true, and beheld her ſtill Miſtreſs of ſuch Graces and agreeable Qualities, as might worthily recommend her to the Love of the Greateſt Prince on Earth? He preſently therefore returns her Compliment with an Affectionate Kiſs, and from that inſtant reſolved to become her ſervant. Soon after which, having eaſily obtain'd the Conſent of the King, his Father, and an eſpecial Diſpenſation from the Pope (not only becauſe he was ſo near of Kin unto her, but had [x] alſo ſtood Godfather for her Eldeſt Son Thomas) he was ſolemnly Married unto her, to the great ſatisfaction of the King and the whole Court.

u Joh. Harding c. 185. f. 186.
x Aſhmole p. 676.

X. Much about this time alſo his Brother, Prince Lionel, one of the Lovelieſt ſhape in the World, being about Twenty three Years of Age, is [y] ſaid to have taken to Wife the Lady Elizabeth, ſole Daughter and Heireſs of William de Burgo, aliàs Burgh, aliàs Burke, once Earl of Ulſter in Ireland, in whoſe Right and Title he became Earl of Ulſter. But here we muſt excuſe, or at leaſt explain Sr. William Dugdale: Whoſe Words run thus, [z] that in the 35 of this King, to wit, this very Year, being made Lieutenant of Ireland, he took to Wife Elizabeth, &c. Which Words naturally ſeem to imply, that he was not Married till this Year unto the foreſaid Lady. And yet this account is evidently too late by almoſt ſeven Years; for it appears, that his Daughter Philippa, which he had by this Lady, [a] was born no leſs than ſix Years before, An°. 1355, or the 29th of Edward the Third; and that ſeven Years hence, namely An°. 1368, [b] ſhe was 13 Years of Age; and that 3 Years after, viz. [c] An°. 1371 She brought

y Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 167.
z Id. ibid.
a Sandford's Geneal. Hiſt. p. 221.
b Id. ibid. p. 222. & Dugd. ipſe Bar. 2 Vol. p. 168.
c Monaſt. Angl. 2 Vol. p. 228. a.

brought forth her First-born Daughter Elizabeth, unto her Husband Edmund Mortimer, Earl of March. Otherwise She must have been a Mother at Nine Years of Age, which is impossible. AN. DOM. 1361. An. Regni Angliæ XXXV.

But to proceed, Prince Lionel her Father, [d] was this Year made Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, to which Charge he repaired immediately: And upon his Coming thither published an Inhibition to all Irish-born, not to dare once to approach his Court, nor to take up Arms, or to follow the Wars, thô in his Service, upon any account. After which he vanquished Obrian the Rebel; and yet once on a sudden, thô all things were quieted, he lost an Hundred of his Men, no Man could tell how, while they lay in their Quarters. Which secret Mischief was judg'd to have been occasioned by that unpleasant Decree aforesaid: Whereupon Prince Lionel taking better Advice, began to receive the Natives of Ireland into the same degree of Favour, as other Lieutenants had formerly held them in, shewing a Princely Candour and tender Concern for their Welfare, by which means he wan the Hearts of that stubborn People, and ever after prosper'd in his Affairs relating to that Country. He advanced to the Honour of Knighthood several of their most forward Gentlemen, among whom were these, Preston (which Family was since better known by the Name of Gormanston) Holywood, Talbot, Cusac, Delahide, alias Hide, Patrick, Robert and John de Fraxinis, all Persons of great Fame in the Wars. And during his Stay in those Parts he removed the Exchequer to Catherlagh, and bestow'd on Defence of that Town 500 l. Sterling.

[d] Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 167. & Holinsh. Chron. Irel. p. 72.

XI. Now that the Wars between England and France were ended, King Edward was pleased to restore unto the Priors Aliens their Houses, Lands and Tenements (which [e] 23 Years before he had confiscated to his own Use, letting them out to Farm) as by his Letters Patents may appear, [f] the Tenor whereof followeth, viz.

[e] Vid. hujus Hist. l. 1. c. 10. §. 5. p. 113.

[f] Weevers Funer. Monuments p. 339.

"EDWARD, by the Grace of God King of England, Lord of Ireland and of A- "quitaine, to all who shall see or hear these Presents, Greeting. Whereas the Priory "of Montacute in the County of Somerset, by reason of the Wars between Us and "France, with all the Lands, Tenements, Fees, Advousons, together with the Goods "and Chattels belonging to the same, hath been of late taken into our Hands, and
"by Us farmed and rented forth as appeareth by divers Patents: Now therefore since "Peace is betwixt Us and the Noble Prince, our most Dear Brother King of France,
"We for the Honour of God and Holy Church, restore unto the said Prior, the Priory
"with all the Lands, Tenements, Fees, Advousons, and whatsoever else belonging to the "same, the same to hold in as free manner as they held it before. And withall We "forgive and Release all Arrearages of Rents, which might be due unto Us by reason "of any former Grants. In Witness whereof We have made these our Letters Patents:
"Dated at Westminster the Sixth of February, in the Thirty Fifth Year of our Reign.

The like Letters of Restitution were granted to all the rest of the Houses of Aliens thrô England: All which Priories Aliens were many Years after [g] utterly suppressed and dissolved by another Martial King, Henry the Fifth, and their Lands given by him and his Son Henry VI, to Colleges of Learned Men in Cambridge and Oxford, and to other Monasteries.

[g] Weevers Fun. Monum. p. 339.

CHAPTER the EIGHTH.

The CONTENTS.

I. An Embassy from the Kings of Armenia and Cyprus; whom King Edward entertains with Justs and Tourneaments. II. King Edward creates his Eldest Son Prince of Aquitain, with the Copy of his Charter. III. The Prince prepares to go over with his Family: An occasional Prophecy concerning the next Successor to the Crown after King Edward: The Prince's Reception in Aquitain; he creates Officers and settles his Court at Bourdeaux. IV. A Parliament at Westminster, the Jubilee of King Edwards Age: He creates his Sons, Prince Lionel, Duke of Clarence, John, Duke of Lancaster, and Edmund, Earl of Cambridge; and bestows many large Favours upon his People. V. The King holds a solemn Hunting with great Royalty. The Lord Faulconberg dies; Sr. John Copland murthered.

An. Dom. 1362. An. Regni Anglie XXXVI.

IN the beginning of this Year there came into England an Honourable Embaſſie of Gallant Knights of Armenia and of Cyprus, ſent from the two Kings of thoſe Countries, who were now engaged hotly in a War with the Saracens, to requeſt the King of England for his Aid, either in Men or Money, or in both, towards the carrying on of thoſe Holy Wars; or at leaſt-wiſe to prepare the Kings Mind againſt the time that the King of Cyprus ſhould come hither for that purpoſe, which he did not long after. The King received them graciouſly, and they were in a fair way to ſucceed with him according to their deſire; and he for his Part as well to entertain theſe Gentlemen Strangers, as to divert the Princes and Lords of France now in Hoſtage with him, began [a] on the Firſt of May to ſolemnize a Royal Juſts and Tourneament in Smithfield, which was held with great Honour for Five Days together, the King himſelf, the Queen and their Children being preſent, with the moſt Part of the Nobility of England, and thoſe Noble Gueſts of France, Spain, Cyprus and Armenia.

[a] Walſing. Hiſt. p. 172. Stows Survey of London p. 421.

II. A while after King Edward adviſed with his Council about the better Eſtabliſhing of his Affairs; and it was reſolved, [b] that ſince the Prince of Wales was now upward of Thirty, and a Married Man, the King his Father ſhould give unto him the whole Dutchy of Aquitain, to hold by Homage of the Crown of England: Eſpecially becauſe the Lords and Knights of thoſe Parts (althô the Lord Chandos was not only blameleſs, but dear among them) did perpetually importune the King to ſend his Son the Prince unto them. It is eaſily remembred, that in the late Treaty of Peace, among other things it was agreed and ſworn to, both by the French King and his Eldeſt Son, afterwards called Charles V, that all the Dutchy of Aquitain ſhould from that time forward for ever remain to King Edward of England and his Heirs and Succeſſors in ſuch manner, as that they ſhould not owe or pay any Homage or Reſort unto the King or Crown of France therefore; but to be held by Them with all Freedom and Liberty perpetual, as Sovereign Lords, Allies and Neighbours to the King and Realm of France, without acknowledging any kind of Superiority, or making any Obedience, Homage or Subjection, and without yielding in time to come any Service or Recogniſance to the King or Crown of France, for either the Whole or any Part of thoſe Lands, whether Cities, Earldoms, Caſtles, Countries, Lands, Iſles, Places or Perſons, named in the Articles of the ſaid Treaty.

[b] Froiſ. c. 216.

Now therefore King Edward having a full and peaceable Poſſeſſion of the ſaid Dutchy of Aquitaine, according to the Tenor of the ſaid Agreement, [c] reſigns and gives unto his Son the Black-Prince, by his Royal Charter, all the Land of Guienne and Gaſcogne, by the Name of a Principality for his Life, in which Charter he created him Prince of Aquitain and Gaſcogne; and alſo granted unto him thoſe other Caſtles, Towns and Counties of Poictou, Saintogne, Angouleſmois, Agenois, Limoſin, Quercy, Rovergue, and all other Places on the Borders of Gaſcogne, which by Vertue of the Peace were to fall to King Edward, reſerving to himſelf Power of Erecting Guienne into a Kingdom, and retaining alſo to himſelf the Reſort and Sovereignty both over the Principality and the Reſt that went with it: And this Charter was Dated the 19 of July 1362, being the 36 of Edward the Third. But beſides this Charter of Donation and Creation, there was another bearing Date the ſame Day, of Explanation, whereby the King more particularly declared the Senſe of his Reſervation of the Reſort and Sovereignty, and beſides of an Ounce of Gold Yearly payable unto him by the Prince, at his Palace of Weſtminſter on Eaſter-Day. The Charter of Creation is incorporated in that of Explanation; the Margin of the [d] Roll being Pro Edvardo Principe Aquitaniæ & Walliæ, i. e. For Edward Prince of Aquitain and of Wales. The Charter of Explanation is French, and that of Creation Latine, in the Originals, which the Reader may find in [e] Mr. Selden; I ſhall here take leave to render the whole in Engliſh.

[c] M.S. vet. Ang. in Bibl. C.C.C. Cantab. c, 232. & Hiſtorici omnes.

[d] Rot. Vaſcon. 36 Ed. 3. m. 18. n. 17.

[e] Seldens Titl. Honor. Part. 2. ch. 3. p. 487. &c.

"The King to all thoſe, who ſhall ſee or hear theſe Letters, Greeting. Whereas this "preſent Day We have given to our Right Dear Eldeſt Son, Edward Prince of Wales, "the Name, Renown and Title of the Principality of Aquitain, transferring unto his "Perſon for his Life only, all the Cities, Counties, Caſtles, Lands, Countries, Towns, "Forts, Iſles, Provinces and Places, which We have and ought to have by Vertue of "the Peace laſt made between Us and our Right Dear Brother the King of France, in "the Country of Aquitain; and alſo thoſe which We have and hold, or ought to have and "hold in all Gaſcogne, together with the Homages, Allegiances, Honours, Obeiſances, "Vaſſalages, Fees, Arreer-fees, Services, Recogniſances, Rights, Meer and Mixt Em-"pire, and Juriſdictions, High, Mean and Low, Safeguards, Advouſons and Patronages

"of

" of Churches, Metropolitan and Cathedral, Abbies, Priories, Monaſteries, Hoſpitals,
" both Secular and Regular, and of other Benifices of the Church, appertaining unto Us
" by Cauſe or on Occaſion of the Premiſes; the Duties, Cens, Rents, Confiſcations, Emo-
" luments, Profits, Reverſions, and all manner of Rights, and all other Appurtenances
" and Appendages, as entirely and perfectly as We hold them, or as any of our Progeni-
" tors have held them in any time paſt, to hold under Us and our Dominion of Aquitain,
" by Liege Homage, as theſe and other things are more largely compriſed in our other Let- " ters made to this Purpoſe, the Tenor whereof followeth.

" EDWARD, by the Grace of God King of England, Lord of Ireland and of A- " quitain, to our Moſt Dear Eldeſt Son Edward, Prince of Wales, Greeting. All tem" poral Dignities, as Rays breaking from the Sun, do proceed from the Throne Royal:
" So that from hence the Perfection of their firſt Original may not feel the Detriment " of Contempt, but rather being exalted above Care and Anxiety, may ſo much the " more perſiſt ſecurely, and be govern'd and continually protected in Proſperity, by how " much in Adverſity it was ſuſtained by more and more excellent Defences. The King-
" ly Throne ſtands firm, when it is environ'd with the Power of many Princes; and
" the Subjects rejoyce more frequently to behold the Perſon of their Principal Lord in
" the lively Pictures of their Blood and Lineage; and count it their Happineſs, that " ſince their Principal Lord cannot be Perſonally preſent in all Provinces of his Domini" ons, yet they may behold Him, who if Nature keeps her right Courſe, is to be his " Heir, continually ſtanding by them: From whence the inſolence of Tranſgreſſors, by
" the Honour and Power of the Right committed unto him, may for the ſafeguard
" of the Loyal, be more frequently puniſhed, and the laudable and fruitfull Perfor" mances of others may be recompenced with the return of a worthy Retribution.
" We therefore being moved on this Conſideration, O our moſt Dear Son, and for ma" ny other Reaſonable Cauſes, intending by a liberal Recompence to do Honour unto " You, who lately in the Parts of Aquitain and Gaſcogne, while there the frequent " Storms of War raged, for our Sakes did not refuſe the Summer Duſt and the Labour " of War, but under the Name and Title of our Lieutenant have ſupported the Bur-
" then of our Cares, and with your Preſence ſupplied our Abſence, out of our Princely " Prerogative do convey and grant unto You by theſe Preſents, the Principality of the " under-written Lands and Provinces of all Aquitain and Gaſcogne; Willing and Gran" ting, that of all and ſingular the ſaid Places, Lands and Provinces in our Name, next
" and immediate under our Throne and Government, You from henceforth be the true
" Prince, and freely during your Natural Life, enjoy the Honour, Title, Appellation
" and Name of Prince of Aquitain; even althô hereafter theſe Provinces ſhould be ere" cted unto the Title and Dignity of a Kingdom; and from this time We do eſpecial-
" ly reſerve unto our Selves a Power of Erecting them into a Kingdom. And that the " Honour of this Name thus granted may prove hereafter, God willing, more advanta" geous unto You, of our meer Bounty and certain Knowledge, We give and grant " unto You, and to your ſingle Perſon only, convey, in the beſt Right and manner that " We can, the Cities, Caſtles, Towns, Lands, Places and Provinces under-written, and " whatſoever Right of Poſſeſſion and Propriety We have, or any way have had, or " that any of our Progenitors hath any way had heretofore to them or in them (the " direct Lordſhip or Superiority thereof being always eſpecially to Us reſerved) to wit,
" the City and Caſtle, and all the Land and Country of Poictou, together with the " Fief of Thoüars, and the Land of Belleville; the City and Caſtle, and all the Land " and Country of Saintogne on this ſide and on that ſide the Charente; the City and " Caſtle, and all the Land and Country of Agennois; the City and Caſtle, and all " the Land and Country of Perigort; the City and Caſtle, and all the Land and " Country of Limoſin; the City and Caſtle and all the Land and Country of Quercy;
" the City and Caſtle, and all the Land and Country of Tarbe; the Land, Country
" and Earldom of Bigorre; the Earldom, Land and Country of Gaure; the City, " Caſtle, Land and Country of Angouleſmois; the City, Caſtle, Land and Country of " Rouvergue; the City and Caſtle of Dax, and the Town and Caſtle of St. Sever;
" [f and alſo the City and Caſtle of Bourdeaux, and the City and Caſtle of Baionne]
" and all the Cities and Caſtles, Towns, Places, Lands and the whole Country, as " well of Guienne as of Gaſcogne; To HAVE and to HOLD from Us under Liege " Homage (the ſaid Direct Lordſhip and Soveraignty to Us as aforeſaid, reſerved) un" to your Self, as long as you Live, all and ſingular the Cities, Caſtles, Towns, Places,
" Lands, Counties and Provinces aforeſaid, together with all the Iſles thereto belong" ing, Homages, Allegiances, Honours, Obeiſances, Vaſſalages, Fees, Arrear-Fees, Ser" vices,

f Theſe enclo-ſed words were at firſt omitted in this Char-ter; but af-terwards inſer-ted in this Place; the Charter being renewed with the ſame Date and the addi-tion only of thoſe words. Seldens Titl. of Honour. Par. 2. ch. 3. p. 492.

An. Dom. 1362. An. Regni Angliæ XXXVI.

"vices, Recogniſances, Rights, Meer and Mixt Empire, and with Juriſdictions, High, "Mean and Low, Safeguards, Advouſons and Patronages of Churches Metropolitan and "Cathedral, both Secular and Regular, and of other Eccleſiaſtical Benefices whatſoe- "ver to Us appertaining, by Occaſion or Cauſe of the Premiſes, the Duties, Cens, "Rents, Confiſcations, Emoluments, Profits, Reverſions, and all their Rights and Pur- "tenances, as entirely and perfectly as we hold or have held them, or as any of our Pro- "genitors had or held them in time paſt. And for the ſtronger Support and Confirma- "tion of your Name and Honour, We grant unto You eſpecial Authority and Power in "the Lands, Places and Rights aforeſaid, to give and grant unto Perſons deſerving ei- "ther in Fee or Demain for ever, or for a time, thoſe Lands or Places, which of old "did not belong to our Demain; as it ſhall pleaſe You and ſeem beſt. Alſo to make "Coin, and ſtamp Monies of Gold and Silver, or any other, and to grant unto the Ma- "ſters and Workmen of the Mint, Indulgences and Privileges, uſually to ſuch given; "and alſo to Amortize Lands, Places and Rents, freely or under Finance, which are gi- "ven at preſent to Mortmaine, or ſhall be given or left hereafter: Alſo to Enoble Per- "ſons Ignoble; and Seneſchals, Judges, Captains, [g] Conſuls, Secretaries, Publick "Solicitors, Receivers, and any other Officers to create, ordain and ſet in every Place "of the ſaid Provinces; and the ſaid Officers ſo placed and ordained, when and as of- "ten as need ſhould be, to remove and to ſet others in the place of them ſo removed: "Baniſhed Perſons and Criminals whatſoever belonging to the ſaid Provinces, preſent, "paſt and to come, to their Condition, Good-name and Country, together with their "Goods moveable and immoveable, to reſtore and call back; and unto them full Par- "don and Remiſſion of their Offences, done and to be done in the foreſaid Provinces "(althô therefore they have been condemned to Death, or ſhall be condemned, and "have been of other Provinces) to give, grant and confirm: To any Cities, Caſtles "and Places, Churches and Perſons of the Church, Monaſteries, Colleges, Univerſi- "ties, and ſingle Perſons, of what Condition ſoever they be, Privileges, Immunities, "Franchiſes, Liberties and Indulgences, perpetual and temporal whatſoever, to give and "to grant: And if of old given and granted, together with the Cuſtoms and Uſages "(provided they be not contrary to the Peace and Accord laſt made between Us and "our moſt Dear Brother the King of France) by our Authority to confirm, when "and as often as you ſhall be required ſo to do; and any other things whatſoever to "do and exerciſe, which the True Prince of the ſaid Provinces might or ſhould do "for the Welfare and Government of the Inhabitants thereof, and for the Quiet of "his Subjects. All and ſingular which Premiſes We will have given, alienated, granted, "beſtowed, authorized, reſtored, revoked, pardoned, remitted, conceded, confirmed, "done, acted and performed by You and your Deputies; and from this time as hereto- "fore, they ſhall have a like perpetual Validity, as if by Us they were done, acted and "performed as aforeſaid. And moreover and above, and as there ſhall be need for "their greater Validity, from this time as heretofore, We commend, allow and ap- "prove, and by the Tenor of theſe Preſents confirm them. Datum ſub Magni Sigilli "Noſtri Teſtimonio in Palatio noſtro Weſtmonaſterii die 19 Menſis Julii, Anno Do- "mini Milleſimo, Tercenteſimo, Sexageſimo, Secundo, & Regni Noſtri Triceſimo Sexto.

[g] In moſt Cities of Aquitain the chief Governors are ſtiled Conſuls, Cotgrave's French Dictionary in voce Conſul.

"Now to take away all Doubts and Contentions, which may ariſe hereafter about this "Matter, and to the end that the Affair may be more clear, over and above, and again "We reſerve to our Selves, and to our Majeſty Royal, expreſly and by Tenor of theſe "Preſents, the Direct Supremacy, and all the Sovereignty and Reſort of the whole Prin- "cipality of Aquitain and Gaſcogne, and of all the Cities, Counties, Caſtles, Lands, "Countries, Towns, Forts, Iſles, Provinces and Places, and of all Prelates, Earls, Vi- "counts, Barons, Nobles and other Subjects, and Inhabitants of the ſaid Provinces, "which We have given to our ſaid Eldeſt Son, and conveyed unto his Perſon by the Te- "nor of our Letters hereabove incorporated: And We will and declare, that the Imme- "diate Supremacy, the whole Sovereignty and Reſort abovemention'd, be and remain for "ever to Us and to our ſaid Majeſty, to uſe the ſaid Reſorts in time and place, as We "ſhall think fit, which We will not, nor intend to, leave nor convey to our ſaid Son, by the "Title of a Principality, nor by any other thing whatſoever compriſed in our ſaid Let- "ters. And for an evident Token and clear Demonſtration, that our ſaid Son ſhall hold, "and ought to hold, under Us of our ſaid Majeſty, and by Liege Homage, the which he "hath made unto Us at preſent, all the ſaid Things and every of them; He ſhall be ob- "liged to pay unto Us every Year at our Palace of Weſtminſter, on the Feaſt of Eaſter, "one Ounce of Gold, whereof he hath already given Us Poſſeſſion and Seiſin, as in to- "ken and Recognition of our Supream Dominion: The which thing by the Name of Re-

"venue

"venue and annual Tribute, We impose on, and really and de facto ordain of certain AN. DOM.
"Knowledge, and of our Authority and full Power; and will, that he pay it at the Place 1362.
"and Time abovesaid, reserving unto our Selves express and especial Power, to diminish An. Regni
"or enlarge the said Imposition and annual Tribute, or appoint it to be paid unto Us in Angliæ
"other things at other times and elsewhere, as it shall seem good unto Us to do for the time to XXXVI.
"come, in gracious Consideration and Regard had to the Estate of our said Son, and to the "Charges which are convenient of necessity to maintain and support him in the Govern- "ment of the foresaid Countries. Donne per Tesmoignance de nostre Grant Seal a nostre Palays de Westmonster le XIX jour de Juyl, lan de Grace Mill. Triscentes. Sexante and Deux & de nostre Regne, Trente, Sisme.

III. When the Prince of Wales had made his Homage to the King his Father for this Principality of Aquitaine, and had received these Letters Charters, the King order'd him to prepare his Family, according to the Dignity that he now held, and then to pass the Seas in the Name of God, and enter upon his Government. For he saw well, that his Son was of great Conduct, Prudence, and Courage, and in the full Vigour of his Youth, capable for any Government whatsoever: He intended also hereby, to render him the better instructed, and as it were Tutor'd with Experience against the time, that by his Decease he should succeed to the Crown of England; and he well understood, that by the Acquisition of so great a Principality, he would be able and Rich enough to keep as Royal a Court, as any King should do; for at this time, not to mention the Earldom of Kent, and the other vast Lands and Possessions, which he had with his Princess, He was Prince of Aquitaine and Wales, Duke of Cornwall, and Earl of Chester. The Young Prince readily obey'd his Fathers Pleasure, and busied himself the remainder of this Year about preparing for the Departure of himself and his Lady, the Princess, with all their Family. After Christmas the King and Queen, and all the rest of their Children, Sons, and Daughters, went to Barkhamsteed near London, a Mannor of the said Princes, to visit and take their last leave of him: And there they were altogether for several days, during which space there were many serious Debates between the King and the Prince, and also many Notable and Royal Diversions and Entertainments. Froisard, the French Historian [l] was then present in the Prince's Court, and he says, that at that time he heard an Ancient Knight, named Sr. Bartholomew Bruels, in discourse among the Ladies, say, how he had seen a certain Book, written by way of Prophesie, called le Brusc, in English the Broom; alluding, no doubt, to the Sirname of the Kings of England, Plantagenet, which Henry the Second obtain'd from the Flower of the Broom, named in Latine Planta Genistæ. "This Book, said He, expresly declares, that neither the Prince of Wales, "Eldest Son to King Edward, nor the Lord Lionel Earl of Ulster, nor the Lord Thomas "of Woodstock, should ever come to the Crown; nor none of King Edwards Sons "should ever come to the Crown: But that the Realm of England should within a "while devolve to the House of Lancaster. Whatever this Book was, or by whatever Art written; in this it failed not: For the Black-Prince dying before his Father, and Prince Lionel also, Henry of Bolingbroke Earl of Darby, Son to John of Gaunt Duke of Lancaster, usurped the Crown from Richard of Bourdeaux, Son and Heir to the said Black-Prince, and King of England at that time; in whose House the Dignity Royal Remain'd to the Third Generation; when the Yorkists wrested the Scepter into their own Hands, and held it, till the Uniting of both Houses. But to return.

[l] Froiss. l. ult. fol. penult. c. 299

All things being now ready, the Prince of Wales [k] in the beginning of February went on Board his Fleet, whereof the Earl of Warwick was Admiral, and took the Sea with a strong and Princely Retinue, and arrived on the Fourth day at Rochelle, where he was received with great Demonstrations of Joy, and tarried among them four Days. The mean [l] while the Lord John Chandos, who for more than a Year had Governed all Aquitaine, as the King of England's Lieutenant, heard, how the King, his Master, had now given all those parts by the Name of a Principality to his Son, the Prince of Wales, and how he was come to Rochelle, in Order to enter upon his Government. Whereupon He presently made ready Horses and Chariots, and set forth from Niort with a goodly company of Men of Arms, Knights, and Esquires, toward the City of Rochelle, to pay his respects to the Prince, and to bid him Welcome to his Government. The Prince and Princess received my Lord Chandos exceeding Graciously; and there passed many mutual Embraces between the Lords and Knights of England. But on the Fifth Day from the Prince's Arrival, the Prince and the Lord Chandos with all their Retinues, which were very considerable, rode from Rochelle to the [k] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 233. Walsing. hist. p. 172.

[l] Froiss. c. 217.

An. Dom. 1362. An. Regni Angliæ XXXVI.

the City of Poictiers, in great Pomp and Glory, the double Face of Peace and War, of the Ladies and Men of Arms, making a Delightfull Mixture of Mars and Venus, of the Court and of the Campaigne. At Poictiers he was met with infinite Respect and Joy by all the Lords, Barons and Knights of Poicton and Saintogne, and here, where his last Triumph was gain'd upon the French King, he first received the Fealties and Homages of those French Gentlemen, whom he had subjected thereby. From Poictiers he went to Bourdeaux, where he kept his Court in as Splendid a Manner, as if he had been King of France; his Beloved Princess being with him all the while. Unto Bourdeaux there came to see him all the Earls, Vicounts, Barons, and Knights of Gascogne, such as were subject to the Crown of England: Whom he entertain'd most Graciously, behaving himself in the eyes of them all so Honourably; that they were extreamly satisfied with his Noble and Generous Dportment, and promised themselves much prosperity under his Government. Hither also came to visit him and to pay him their Homage, the Earls of Foix and of Armagnac; Lords of great Power and near of Blood; but at this time there was an High Disgust between them. They had, as we [m] shew'd before, for a long while made Bloody War against each other, on the account of a particular Quarrel of their own; which the King of France * durst not undertake to compose, for fear of displeasing the King of England, whose Vassals they were for the Lands then in contest between them. But however now Prince [n] Edward took up the Matter, and made a final Peace and Agreement between them. For besides the obliging Words he gave them, and the close Arguments he us'd to perswade them, the many mutual heavy Losses, which they had already suffer'd, made them much more inclinable to admit of an Accommodation.

[m] Vid. l.3. c.6. §.8. p. 581.
* Mezeray p. 63.
[n] Froiss. c. 217.

This done the Prince made the Lord John Chandos, his Constable of all Aquitaine, and the Lord Guischard D' Angle, his Marshal; the latter being by Birth a Frenchman of Angoumois; but by the Tenor of the Peace a subject of England, as ever after he continued to his great Honour. And into other great Offices the Prince set such Knights of his House, as he most favour'd, and filled all Constableships and Bailywicks with English Knights and Gascogners, such as he was most assured of, or were best recommended unto him by their own Vertue, or the testimony of Vertuous Men. And here a while We will leave him Governing in Peace, till War shall call him forth again to reap another Glorious Victory.

IV. The mean while King Edward held his High Court of Parliament at Westminster, where [o] all the Peers were expresly commanded to be present, and not one permitted to appear by Proxy. This Session lasted from the 13 of October to the 13 of November, in which one Months time he made more good Laws, and bestow'd more Acts of Grace upon his People, than some other Kings have done in all their Life time. The Causes of this Assembly were [p] declared by the Lord Chief Justice, Sr. Henry Green, to be for redress of Matters relating to the Church; for observation of the Peace; to settle Affairs with Scotland; and to enhance the Price of Wooll: All which were well order'd, as may be seen in the Records and Printed Statutes of this Year. And whereas some say, [q] that the King at this time, contrary to his Oath, set up a Staple of Wooll at Calais; it should have been consider'd, that when a Prince, at the Request of his Parliament, promises to do, or not to do, a thing, if at another time, the Reason of things being then alter'd, this very Parliament requires the Contrary; the King ought not to be charged with breach of promise in complying with them. Because the very occasion of his Promise seems at first to have been the Good of his People, which same thing is also afterwards the occasion of his not observing it. And We find [r] in the Records, that when the Lords were commanded to speak, what they thought of the Repair of Merchants to Calais, they all agreed, how it seem'd to them a Matter very profitable to the Realm: To which point the Commons, thô at first they demurr'd, till they might have conference with the Merchants, at last yielded also themselves. Wherefore the King shortly after [s] sent over XXVI of the most considerable Merchants of the Realm, to hold the Staple there for three Years, and to keep and defend the Town, every Merchant having six Men of Arms, and four Archers at the Kings Charges, and besides the Mayor of the Town, he also appointed another to be over the Staple, the King being to receive for Maletot Twenty shillings, and the foresaid Merchants, Wardens of the Town, 40 pence, of every Sack of Wooll.

[o] Walsing. hist. p. 173. Speed 584.
[p] M.S. Rot. Parl. 36. Ed. 3. n. 2. p. 88. Sr. Rob. Cotton's Abridgement p. 92, &c.
[q] Stow p. 255.
[r] M.S. id. & Sr. Rob. Cotton ibid.
[s] Knighton p. 2626. n. 40, &c.

It was [t] in this Parliament Enacted, that neither Gold, nor Silver should be used in Apparel, Knives, Girdles, Chains, Rings, or other Bodily Ornament by any Man, who could not expend Ten pounds by the Year. And that none, who could not expend expend an 100 l. per annum, ſhould preſume to wear Silks, Furs, or other pretious Garments. But I ſhall paſs over the other Statutes made in this Parliament, becauſe they are every where to be had in Print, but only thoſe Acts of Grace, which King Edward did unto his People, are not to be left in ſilence. AN. DOM. 1362. An. Regni Angliæ XXXVI.

[t] Walsingh. hist. p. 173. n. 10. & 20.

Now on the 13 of November, which was the Birth-Day of this Great Monarch, at which time he had exactly finiſhed 49 Years of his Age, and was come to the Entrance of the Fiftieth, King Edward, as he was a Man of more exalted Thoughts than any other in his Days, reſolved to keep a Jubilee of his Age in the moſt remarkable and ſolemn Manner imaginable; at leaſt to the greateſt Satisfaction of thoſe under his Government. Of Jubilees in general, and of their Original we [u] have already ſpoken, wherefore we ſhall repeat nothing of that in this Place; but immediately diſpatch our preſent Narration. Only we ſhall obſerve this, that King Edward had this extraordinary Privilege to ſee two Jubilees, beſides that of Pope Clement the Sixth; this Firſt being upon the Account of his having arrived to the Fiftieth Year of his Age, and the other, of which we ſhall ſpeak in its Place, becauſe he had then Reigned as many Years: But now we are entertain'd with this under our Hands. On the 13 of November, which was the Firſt Day of our King Edwards Life, and the Laſt of this Parliament, when the Petitions of the Commons were anſwer'd, and they with loyal and well-affected Minds had unanimouſly [x] granted unto the King for three Years 26 s. & 8 d. of every Sack of Wooll, beſides a Subſidy of Woolls, Fells and Skins, [y] then by the Kings Command roſe up the Lord Chancellour Sr. Henry Green aforeſaid, and declared, that the King being arrived to the Fiftieth Year of his Age, intended to ſhew ſeveral Acts of Grace and Mercy unto his People; and firſt, that he deſign'd to advance unto Honour ſuch of his Sons as were of full Age; namely, that his Son Lionel (then being in Ireland) ſhould have the Title of Duke of Clarence, to Him and to the Heirs Male of his Body lawfully to be begotten, in Right of his Wife [z] Eliſabeth, Daughter of William Earl of Ulſter, Son of John de Burgo, by Eliſabeth de Clare, Sole Daughter and Heireſs of Gilbert Rufus Earl of Clare, the Name of Clare being changed into Clarence. And hereupon [a] an Addition of the Arms, belonging unto the Houſe of Clarence, was elegantly inſerted into the Label of this Dukes Coat, viz. Argent with the Fourth Part of a Scutcheon Gules. The Lord Chancellor further declared, that his Son John ſhould be Duke of Lancaſter in Right of his Wife, for her Eldeſt Siſter, Daughter to the late Duke, was now dead in England, as we intimated before; and laſtly, that his Son Edmund ſhould be Earl of Cambridge in Fee. After which in [b] full Parliament the King Girt his Son John of Gaunt with a Sword, and ſet on his Head a Cap of Furr, and a Circlet of Gold with Pearls thereon, and created him Duke of Lancaſter, [c] with all the Liberties and Regalities of an Earl Palatine in the County of Cheſter, as alſo Earl of Leiceſter, Lincoln and Darby, with the Office of High-Steward of England, in the Right of his Wife Blanch, whereof he gave him his Charter. This done he [d] Girt his Son Edmund with a Sword, and Created him Earl of Cambridge, whereof he gave him a Charter: So that the incomparably Diligent Antiquary and Herald Sr. William Dugdale himſelf appears here to have ſlipt a little, when he ſays, [e] that Prince Edmund (thô he was then in Ireland at this time) was created Earl of Cambridge: The Miſtake I ſuppoſe, happen'd from the Words foregoing, which take Notice that Prince Lionel was then in Ireland.

[u] Vid. L. 2. c. 10 §. 1. p. 449.

[x] Walſingh. hiſt. p. 172. n. 30. [y] M.S. Rot. Par. p. 90. & Sr. Rob. Cottons Abridg. p. 92, &c.

[z] Vid. Mills Catal. Hon. p. 334.

[a] Id. Mills Catal. Hon. p. 336.

[b] M.S. Rot. Par. p. 90. Sr. Rob. Cotton p. 94.

[c] Mills Catal. Honor. p. 326.

[d] M.S. Rot Par. p. 90. Sr. Rob. Cotton p. 94.

[e] Dugd. Bar. 2 Vol. p. 54.

At the ſame [f] time the King granted his General and Special Pardon to all, without Fine or paying of Fees for the Seal; ſet all Debtors and Priſoners at Liberty, and recalled thoſe that were Baniſhed; and for the better eaſe of his People in their Law-Sutes, and alſo perhaps leſt England ſhould any longer bear thoſe Marks of Slavery, he ordained, that hereafter all Pleas ſhould be uſed in Engliſh, and that all Law-Caſes, Pleadings, Sentences, Decrees, Judgments and Contracts, ſhould be written and enrolled in the Engliſh or Latine Tongue, the French being wholly laid aſide. But whether by length of Time the Cuſtom had been too ſtrongly radicated, to be ſo ſuddenly broke off, or whether by the Wit and Subtlety of the Lawyers, this Law was not long after in part eluded: For thô to this Day our Pleadings are in Engliſh, yet our Law-Caſes remain in French, or rather as Polydore, in the Norman Language, which Cuſtom was firſt introduced by William the Conquerour. Only it is here to be obſerved, that althô the Printed Statute, touching Pleading in the Engliſh Tongue (Chap. 15.) doth agree with the Record, yet where the Print ſays, that all ſuch Pleas ſhould be enrolled in Latine, the Record doth nothing warrant the ſame. Beſides this King Edward now confirmed Magna Charta, which in his whole Reign he is ſaid to have done no leſs than 12 ſeveral times. Nor ſhall I omit, that althô of our Kings ſince his Days few have lived ſo long, none have reigned ſo long; wherefore they had no Opportunity to imitate King Edward in theſe things, yet [g] from Occaſion of this Jubilee of his they have ſince uſed that Famous Cuſtom on Maundy Thurſday, being the Day before Good-Friday, to beſtow their Alms more largely than uſually, and in Imitation of our Saviours Humility, to Waſh, Feed and Clothe as many poor People, as they themſelves are Years Old.

[f] Polyd. Virg. l. 19. p. 385. Speed p. 584. Walſing. Hiſt. p. 172. Favine le Pariſ. Theatre of Hon. l. 5. c. 1. p. 60. & M.S. vet. Angl. in Bibl. C.C.C. c. 232.

An. Dom. 1362. An. Regni Angliæ XXXVI.

[g] Polyd. Virgil. idid. Speed, &c.

V. The Parliament being ended, the King rode forth with all the Chief Dukes, Earls, Barons and Lords of the Realm, together with the French Hoſtages in his Company to ſeveral great Foreſts, [h] as Rockingham Foreſt in Northamptonſhire, Sherwood Foreſt in Nottinghamſhire, and Clunne Foreſt in Shropſhire, and many other Woods, Parks and Foreſts, where he hunted all ſorts of Noble Game in Seaſon; and all the while he expended extraordinary an 100 Pounds one Day, and an 100 Marks the other; and ſo on while the Sport continued, which was both long and very divertiſing.

[h] Knighton p. 2627. n. 20.

About this time the [i] Noble Lord Walter Fauconberg, a Valiant and Hardy Baron of this Realm, departed this Life, leaving behind him Thomas his Son and Heir, then ſeventeen Years of Age. And thô with all my Diligence, I cannot find the manner or the occaſion, yet for the Eminence of the Perſon, I ſhall not paſs by the Murder of Sr. John Copland, the ſame who at the Battle of Durham took the King of Scotland Priſoner, as we have ſhewn already. This Valiant and Worthy Gentleman, upon what Quarrel doth not appear, was this Year [k] murder'd by the Lord John Clifford of Ewyas, who thereupon was forced to fly the Land, and could by no means obtain his Pardon till about 15 Years after, or the laſt of King [l] Edward, when upon the Teſtimony of divers Engliſh Peers in Parliament of his ſingular Valour, and of his ſpecial Services in the Wars in France, the King at laſt upon the inſtant Requeſt of the ſaid Peers and Commons of England, then aſſembled in Parliament, gave him his Charter of Pardon.

[i] Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 4.

[k] Knighton p. 2626. n. 30.

[l] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 341.

CHAPTER the NINTH.

The CONTENTS.

I. King John of France, on the Death of the Duke of Burgundy without Iſſue, takes Poſſeſſion of the Country, and goes to viſit the Pope at Avignon; Pope Innocent VI dying, Urban V ſucceeds. II. The King of Cyprus comes to Avignon to get aid againſt the Saracens; A Combat fought there; A Croiſade proclaimed, whereof the King of France is made the General. III. The King of Cyprus viſits the Emperour; the Emperours Opinion concerning the Holy War: The King of Cyprus goes to other Chriſtian Princes. IV. King Edward allowing the French Hoſtages ſome Liberty, the Duke of Anjou makes his Eſcape. V. The Kings of Cyprus and Denmark, and the Duke of Bavaria come into England: King Edwards Anſwer to the King of Cyprus, upon his demanding Aſſiſtance for the Holy War. VI. A Parliament at Weſtminſter. VII. A Convocation, wherein the exceſſive Number of Holydays are retrenched. VIII. The Death of the Dutcheſs of Clarence, of Edward Bailiol once King of Scotland, and of the Biſhop of Bath and Wells. IX. A Man, who after execution at the Gallows recover'd, is pardon'd by the King. X. The King of Cyprus and the Shrine of St. Hugh of Lincoln robbed. XI. King David of Scotland comes into England upon a Viſit: A long and hard Froſt.

An. Dom. 1363. An. Regni Angliæ XXXVII

I. IN the preceding Year King John of France undertook a Journey to Avignon to viſit the Pope and Cardinals, but he choſe to ride through the Dukedom of Burgundy, becauſe that Provence was newly fallen unto him, by the Death of Philip the young Duke, Grandſon of Duke Eudes the VI, and Son of that Philip, who was ſlain at the Siege of Aiguillon, and of the Lady Jane of Boulogne, who afterwards was married to King John, and died the Year before this her Son. In [a] his Perſon was extinct the Firſt Branch of the Dukes of Burgundy, being of the Houſe of France, which had produced no leſs than twelve Dukes, and had laſted the ſpace of 330 Years. For this young Prince died [b] about Eaſter 1362, without Iſſue, himſelf being being but Fifteen, and his Lady Margaret of Flanders not above Eleven. When therefore King John [c] was ready for his Journey, and had appointed his Son Charles Regent and Governour during his Abſence, he began his Progreſs from Paris about the latter end of July 1362, having with him in his Company, his Couſin the Lord John of Artois, Earl of Tancarville, the Earl of Dampmartin, the Lord Bouciquault Marſhal of France, and many other Grandees. Having by ſmall Journeys and great Expence rode thrô Burgundy, he came in the beginning of September to Villeneufe without Avignon, where Lodgings were provided for Him and his Attendants. He was entertained with great Magnificence of Feaſting by the Pope and the whole College of Cardinals, and many interchangeable Viſits were made between the King and Them: But in the heighth of all [d] Pope Innocent the VI, having ſat Nine Years, Eight Months and Twenty Days, departed this Life at Avignon on the Twelfth of September. Whereupon there aroſe much Difference among the Cardinals about Chooſing of a new Pope, for each of them aſpired to the Dignity himſelf, eſpecially the Cardinal of Boulogne, and the Cardinal of Perigort, who were by far the Greateſt, and had moſt powerfull Friends. Wherefore after much Altercation the reſt of the Cardinals agreed to put the Deciſion of the Matter to theſe Two, who finding thereby, that neither of them could obtain the Papacy themſelves, agreed together, that neither any of the reſt ſhould have it, but rather that they would pitch upon ſome other Indifferent Perſon. There was at that time in the Parts of Lombardy one, [e] who was employ'd thither by Pope Innocent about Affairs with the Lords of Milain, named William Griſant, by ſome named Grimoardi, Abbot of St. Victor of Marſeille, a Devout and Holy Man, of unblameable Life and eminent Learning, who was called Anglicus; whereupon [f] many have believed him an Engliſh Man; thô I rather believe he might obtain that name becauſe he was a Gaſcogner, and ſo by Birth ſubject to the King of England. This Man the Two Ambitious Cardinals choſe, rather out of Envy to their Fellows, than thrô any Love to Him or his Vertue. He [g] was elected on the 28, or as Some ſay on the laſt of October, and Crowned on the Sixth of November following, being a Sunday, at which time he took the Name of Urban V. It is ſaid of him, [h] that having long waited at the Court of Avignon in fruitleſs expectation of Preferment, he complained to a Friend of his ſaying, "I believe verily, if all the Churches of the World ſhould fall, "there would none fall upon my Head. Whereupon this Friend of his coming to viſit him after his Coronation, ſaid all ſmiling, "You lately complain'd (moſt Holy Father) "that if all the Churches in the World ſhould fall, yet none you thought, would fall up-"on your Head. Behold now, how God hath diſpoſed things, for all the Churches in the "World are now fallen upon your Head together. Soon [i] after this Mans Creation, King John heard News, that Peter of Luſignan, King of Cyprus intended ſhortly to come to Avignon, to give his Holineſs a Viſit, and that in order thereto he had already paſſed the Sea; whereupon he reſolved to tarry ſtill at Avignon till his Coming, being very deſirous to ſee him, becauſe of the great Renown he had heard of him both for his Valour and Piety, and particularly of the great Honour he had won in the War againſt the Saracens; and that among other his Succeſſes, he had lately taken from them Sattalia the chief City of Pamphylia, and put all the Infidels to the Sword. This Peters Anceſtor, Guy of Luſignan, King of Jeruſalem, [k] purchaſed the Iſland and Kingdom of Cyprus, of our Richard the Firſt, King of England, ſirnamed Cœur du Lyon, by Exchange for his Kingdom of Jeruſalem, ever ſince which it remain'd in the hands of the ſaid Guy and his Deſcendants.

[a] Favine le Pariſiens Theater l' Honour l. 4. c. 3. p. 7.

[b] Paradin Annal. Burgund. l. 2. p. 348.

AN. DOM. 1363. An. Regni Angliæ XXXVII.

[c] Froiſ. c. 216. fol. 112.

[d] Labbei Chron. Techn. ad ann. 1362.

[e] Vid. Odor. Rainal. ad ann. 1362. §. 6. & Ciacon. cum Victor. p. 925. &c.

[f] Walſing. hiſt. p. 172.

[g] Labbei Chron. Techn. ad ann. 1362. Lit. Domin. B.

[h] Walſingh. hiſt. p. 172.

[i] Froiſ. c. 216. fol. 112.

[k] Speed p. 477. §. 40. in Ricardo Primo.

II. King Peter came to Avignon [l] about Candlemas in the beginning of this Year, of whoſe Coming the whole Court was glad; and moſt of the Cardinals, together with the French King, went forth to meet him, and conducted him with much Honour to the Popes Palace, where they were highly careſſed, and after a ſplendid entertainment the two Kings returned to their Lodgings prepared for them in Villeneufe. Thus they tarried during all the ſeaſon of Lent, and made frequent Viſits to the Pope, and diſcourſed him of many ſerious Matters, concerning which they came thither. While the Kings were at Avignon, there happen'd a Controverſie in Arms (which by the Court Martial was adjudged to be tried by Combat) between two Noble and Experienced Knights, namely Sr. Edmund de Pamiers and Sr. Fulk de Orillac, the King of France being to ſit as Judge of the Field. Both the Knights behaved themſelves with that Activity, Skill and Reſolution, that is was no eaſie matter to ſay who was the Better: So that when after a long and gallant Fight, neither had any apparent Advantage of the other, and both their Spears and Swords being broken, they were proceeding to Pole-Axes, King John preſently flang down his Wardour, [l] Froiſ. c. 217.

An. Dom. 1363. An. Regni Angliæ XXXVII.

and caused the Combat to cease; after which He reconciled them together. Now the King of Cyprus spake more than once to the Pope, his Cardinals and the French King, "That it would be both an exceeding Honour and Advantage for all "Christendom, if some Powerfull Christian King would undertake to lead the Way o-"ver the Sea and rear his Banners against the Enemies of the Christian Faith; who for "want of such Opposition overran all Asia, and hung now like a dreadfull Storm over "Europe. These Words the French King consider'd well, and resolved with Himself, if he might live Three Years longer, to be One among the Foremost in this Holy Expedition; not only out of a pious Consideration backed with the Words of the Pope, and the King of Cyprus, but also for two other Respects; the one because his Father King Philip had made a Vow so to do, to the [m] Breach whereof he constantly attributed all the Miseries, which had befell France since that time; and the other, that by so doing he should not only drain his own Country of those Evil Companions, who harassed his People without any just Title or Pretence; but also thereby prove an Instrument of saving their Souls, by making them draw their Swords in the more righteous Cause of Christ. These were his Reasons, and this his Resolution, which he kept secret to himself till Good-Fryday, at which time Pope Urban himself preached in his Chappel at Avignon, in the Presence of both the Kings of Cyprus and of France, and also of Waldemar King of Denmark, who was newly come thither for the same purpose. Sermon ended the French King in great Devotion stept forth and professed himself a Champion of Christ, and took upon him the Croisade, which he solemnly sware personally to set about, and to begin the Voyage within two Years from that Time, it [n] being then the last of March. He also requested the Pope to yield his Consent and Furtherance thereto, and by his Bulls to authorise this his pious Undertaking. The Pope not only most readily agreed to this Request, but also granted him his Pontifical Diploma, Dat. Aven. Pridie Kal. April. Anno Pontif. I. Wherein he constitutes him Governour and Captain General of all the Christian Armies, and produces these three Causes of that Expedition; First, the Indignity of the Matter, that Christians should suffer those places, which our Saviour had honoured with his Footsteps, and the Mysteries of our Redemption, to be defiled and trodden down of the Mahometans: also the seasonable Occasion of Recovering Syria; now that the strength of the Saracens was exhausted with a Pestilence; and lastly the great Necessity of repressing the growing Tyranny of the Turks, when 'twas to be feared, that all Christendom would be a prey unto them, unless their Fury should meet with a timely Check. Talayrand the Cardinal of Perigort was the Popes Legate in this Holy Expedition, and then Methods were taken how to support the Design with Tithes and other pecuniary Collections; the Prelates were commanded to publish this Croisade from their Pulpits, and to distinguish those who took it upon them with the Sign of the Cross. And then Excommunication and an Anathema was set forth against them, who should offer to dissuade the French King from his pious Design of recovering Syria: On which account circular Letters were sent, and solemn Prayers were appointed to engage the Divine Assistance. The Pope also sent his Letters to the Emperour Charles, to King Edward of England, to Lewis of Hungary, and to other Kings and Princes, that they would now employ all their power and Conduct toward the reducing of Asia unto Christ; and because King John could not conveniently set forth till about two Years after, by reason that his Realm was so unsettled, and he could not in less time finish his Musters, and other vast Preparations thereupon; wherefore he tied himself to a certain Day, which was to be the Kalends of March in the Year of our Lord, One Thousand, three Hundred, Sixty and five: The King of Cyprus resolved in the mean time to go about and visit all the great Courts in Europe, and as he should succeed to go over before the King of France, to whom the Pope [o] promised considerable Assistance. And thus a mighty Resolution was taken up, and the Cross of Jerusalem was worn by John King of France, Waldemar King of Denmark, and Peter King of Cyprus; [p] also by Talayrand, commonly called the Cardinal of Perigort, thô he was Earl of Perigort, and Bishop Cardinal of Alba; the same was done by the Earl of Artois, and the Earl of Eu, the Earl of Tancarville, the Earl of Dampmartin, the Lord Arnold D' Endreghan, the Lord Bouciquault, and the Grand Prior of France, and many other Lords and Knights then and there present. The King of Cyprus was extreamly overjoy'd at the great Zeal he found in all these Christian Worthies, and thought his Journey well bestow'd in so great a purchase towards the Advancement of Religion. But yet not content with this, he design'd to proceed and visit Charles the Emperour, and all the Princes and Chief Lords of the Empire; he intended likewise to see the King of England, the Prince of Wales, and

[m] Odor. Rainal. ad hunc an. §. 14.

[n] Pascha 2 Apr. Lit. Dom. A.

[o] Odor. Rain. ad hunc ann. §. 19.

[p] Froiss. c. 217.

and all other Potentates of Christendom, to stir them up singly at least to a Contribution in Men or Money toward so pious and general an Undertaking. And the Pope gave him many Absolutions and Pardons, and full Authority to publish them, the better to encline all Devout persons to joyn with him in so Holy and Meritorious a Cause, as it was in those Days accounted. And surely the King of Cyprus wherever he went, easily engaged the Love of all Men; for besides the Reputation which he had got in Arms, and that himself had long been a Souldier in the same Quarrel, he gave such good Reasons, and spake so elegantly, and perswaded so pathetically, that all Men of War had far rather hear him than a Sermon of the Pope's to that purpose: And so on this point they rested. Having therefore thus forwarded his Business here, he took his leave saying, how he would go and visit the Emperour, and the Lords of the Empire, and promised to return thither again by Brabant, Flanders and Hainalt; and so he was dismist by the Pope and the French King, who both acquitted themselves towards him very honourably, the latter presenting him with many rich Gifts and Jewels, and the former with Pardons, Absolutions and Indulgences for Him and all his Men, which as the Superstition of the Times went were no less Valuable. After the King of Cyprus his Departure, whom the King of Denmark accompanied, King John also took his leave of the Pope, and went to Mompellier to visit Languedoc; for he had not been in those Parts of many Years before.

AN. DOM. 1363. An. Regni Angliæ XXXVII.

III. The mean while the King of Cyprus rode so long by his Journeys, till he came to Prague the chief City of Bohemia, where the Emperour then was, of whom he was graciously received, as also of all the Lords of the Empire there present. It is said, [q] that the Emperour told the King of Cyprus, "That he applauded his Words, and "approved of the Popes pious Endeavours, as also of the French Kings Resolution, "and of the King of Denmarks; and that for his own part he neither wanted Wealth "nor Will to set about the Holy War, if he thought it would really be so much "for the Benefit of Christendom, to shed the Blood of many good Men for the "Affairs of Syria; that it was impossible to recover those Countries without much De"struction of Christian People, of which Slaughter to make no account was the part "rather of an Hangman than of a Prince. That moreover a Country so surrounded with "Enemies, if it should be won, could not by any be long retain'd in Obedience; where"fore to him it seem'd not the part of a Christian to seek the purchase of so little "false Glory with the hazard of so many Lives. But however lest any should imagin, that he declin'd these Matters upon the account of Frugality, he offer'd the King of Cyprus as much Money, as might probably suffice for that War, which he presently caused to be paid unto him. The Emperours Liberality was imitated by the Dukes of Bavaria, Austria and Saxony his Brethren, the Marques of Moravia, and the Duke of Luxemburgh and others; of all whom he received considerable Sums of Gold: Three Weeks he tarried at Prague, labouring all the while to bring over Profelytes to his intended Expedition against the Infidels, and wherever he went, while he was within the Bounds of the Empire, his Charges were born by the Emperour. After this he rode into the Dukedom of Juliers, and thence into Brabant, where he was received with much Honour by the Duke and Dutches, and highly entertain'd in their chief City of Bruffels with Feastings, Justs, Tourneaments and other Princely Diversions, and at his Departure he was largely presented with Jewels and other rich Gifts; and after all he went into the Earldom of Flanders to visit Earl Lewis, who treated him with great Magnificence at Bruges, and in all things gave him full Satisfaction. Here he staid therefore the remaining part of the Summer, still minding the main Business, for which he had left his own Country, and earnestly exhorting the Earl, and other Lords and Gentlemen, to embarque in the same Bottom with him, where Christ and his Holy Vicar were sure to be the Pilots, and Earthly Honour and Immortal Glory lay ready for them at the end of their Voyage: And all the Lords that heard him approved of his Words, and declared themselves willing to follow him.

[q] Pantaleon de Ord. Johannitarum Rebus Gestis l.4.p.102.

IV. The mean while King Edward had dealt very Graciously with all the French Hostages; but especially [r] unto Four of the Chief of them he shew'd Great Favour, namely, unto the Duke of Orleans, the Duke of Anjou, the Duke of Berry, and the Duke of Bourbon. For he permitted these Four Princes to reside at Calais for such a time, and during their stay there, each of them to have four days liberty to ride abroad into the French Pale, on the Marches of Calais; provided, that at the end of four days they return'd to Calais by Sun-setting. And this Grace the King allow'd with a Good Design, that so having some opportunity to be near their Friends, they might the sooner gather up the Money still remaining due for King John's Ransom, [r] Froiss. c. 218.

An. Dom. 1363. An. Regni Angliæ XXXVII.

Ransom, and thereby releaſe themſelves and their fellow Hoſtages. Theſe Four Lords being thus at Calais, ſent frequent Meſſengers to the French King, and to the Duke of Normandy, "deſiring them to make quick diſpatch in working their Delivery, as "they had promiſed and ſworn unto them, when they went Hoſtages into England: "For if they were neglected any longer, they were reſolved to look to themſelves; "becauſe, as they ſaid, they were not properly Priſoners, but only ſureties for ano- "ther: And that if the Principal would not concern himſelf to perform the Cove- "nants, for which they were Pledges, it would be high time to ſhift, as well as they "could, for themſelves. Thus eager were the Young Princes to be at liberty; but King John and the Duke of Normandy, and their Council, were ſo deeply taken up in Matters of a more preſſing Nature, what in preparing for the Croiſade, and what for other Wars, which the Inconſtant King of Navarre began again to renew in France, having already ſent into Lombardy for certain Troops of the Companions to come to his Aſſiſtance, that they had no leiſure as then, to take the Remonſtrance of theſe Dukes into conſideration, or to ſend them any ſatisfactory Anſwer: Whereupon the Duke of Anjou, being young and angry, and neither well conſidering his Fathers Honour, nor his own, took the opportunity, one of the Four Days allow'd him, to ride clear off; whereat King John was infinitely diſpleaſed.

V. By this time the King of Cyprus, having diſpatch'd his Affairs with the Earl of Flanders, came at laſt to Calais, where he found the remaining three French Dukes of Orleans, Berry, and Bourbon; the Duke of Anjou, being, as we ſhew'd, newly eſcaped away. Theſe Three Dukes, together with the King of England's Captains, who had the charge of them, received the King of Cyprus into Calais, where they were all together for two or three days; till there came from England a Safe Conduct, bearing Date 6[f] December, and to continue in Force, till Midſummer following for the King of Cyprus, the King of Denmark, and Albert Duke of Bavaria. Then theſe two Kings and the Duke aforeſaid, took ſhipping for England, and arrived at Dover a little before Chriſtmas, where tarrying two days to refreſh themſelves and their Retinues, and till all their Carriages and Horſes were unſhipped, they rode by ſmall journeys eaſily, till they came to London. Here at the Kings Command they were Honourably met by the Young Earl of Hereford, Eſſex and Northampton, by the Lord Walter Manny, the Lord Edward Spencer, the Lord Ralph Ferrers, Sr. Richard Pemburge and Sr. Richard Sturry, together with the Lords of France, Hoſtages, who conducted them to the Lodgings prepared for them. 'Tis to no purpoſe to mention all the Great Dinners and Publick Entertainments, wherewith King Edward received theſe Grand Perſonages, he ſhewing by all ways imaginable the high Reſpect he had for them, and for the Pious Enterpriſe they had all taken in Hand. But unto the King of Cyprus he made a free declaration of his Mind, ſaying, "That from his Soul he deſired to be "reckon'd among the Heroick Champions of the Chriſtian Faith; but he added, how "it could not be warranted by the Word of God, that Religion was to be propaga- "ted by the Sword, or that it was a thing pleaſing to God, to endeavour the Reco- "very of the Land of Paleſtine; at the expence of ſo much Chriſtian Blood, as it "hath too often coſt already, or that it was the Duty of a Chriſtian King, without "any abſolute neceſſity to leave his own Subjects, over whom God hath ſet him, to "ruſh into Foreign Wars, which had no immediate relation to him: But only in this "caſe, where a Pagan Prince doth unjuſtly ſeek to ruine or deſtroy any Chriſtian "Prince, that it would be the Intereſt of other Chriſtians, near unto him, to protect "and maintain his cauſe with their United Powers againſt the ſaid Infidel. That as "for him, he was not to be look'd on in that capacity; neither could he be ſpared "from the Realm; for thô (bleſſed be God!) he had now Peace both abroad and "at home; yet it behov'd him not only to look to the Peaceable Government of "his Realm, but alſo to ſtand upon his Guard; leſt by occaſion of his Abſence an "Advantage might be taken againſt him, which he might never be able ro repair: But as "to a Friend and to a Chriſtian King, who had come ſo far for the cauſe of Chriſtendom, "he promiſed him very conſiderable Sums of Money, and leave to take as many Volun- "tiers, as he could raiſe thrô the Realm.

[f] Aſhmole p. 665.

VI. Before this [t] there was a Parliament Summon'd this Year to meet the King at Weſtminſter, as on the Fryday in the Octaves of St. Michael, being the Sixth of October; of which I ſhall take leave to glean ſome few remarkable Obſervations. On the Fryday aforeſaid both houſes not being full, the Lord Chief Juſtice, Sr. Henry Green, in preſence of the King, Lords, and Commons, by the Kings Order, prorogued the Parliament, till Fryday following. At which time Simon Langham Biſhop of Ely, and Lord [t] M.S. Rot. Par. p. 92. An°. 37. Ed. 3. & Sr. Rob. Cotton's Abridgement p. 96, &c. Vid. Statute Book p. 120.

Lord Chancellour of England, declared before the Lords and Commons the Reaſons, why the King had called the ſaid Parliament; namely, "becauſe he was deſirous "to know the Grievances of his Subjects, and particularly that he might by the "help of their advice redreſs what wrongs had been done againſt the Liberties of Ho-"ly Church; and alſo all Enormities, eſpecially about exhibiting of Petitions. Then there were appointed Receivers and Tryers of Petitions for England, Ireland, Wales, and Scotland; alſo for Aquitaine and other Foreign Places and Iſles. On the Wedneſday after Commandment was given, that no Man ſhould tranſport Woollen Clothes, Sheep, Butter, Cheeſe, Malt, or Ale; only that the Merchants of Almaine might export Worſteds, and ſtraight Clothes, and the Merchants of Gaſcogne might carry forth Woollen Clothes to the Value of the Wines imported. AN. DOM. 1363. An. Regni Angliæ XXXVII.

Then the Commons gave the King their moſt humble thanks for the great Goodneſs he had ſhewed, and confirmed unto them with his own Mouth the laſt Parliament: And they humbly pray, that the King would enjoyn the Archbiſhops and all others of the Clergy, that they would put up their joynt Prayers to God Almighty, for the Proſperity of his Majeſty, in Order to the Peace and good Government of the Land, and for the continuance of his Majeſties Good-Will towards his Commons. The ſame prayeth the King. That the Coyners be order'd to Coyn half their Bullion into half-pence and farthings, for the uſe of the Poor. The King hath ſo appointed. That Remedy may be had againſt Merchants, Hoſtelers, Regraters, and Foreſtallers of Wares, Fiſh, Wine, and Corn. The Ordinance for Fiſh ſold at Blackney in Norfolk ſhall be kept, to look to the Execution whereof William Wickingham and John Barry are appointed. That an Order be ſet forth againſt Merchants for exporting of Corn, Meal, and other ſuch Proviſion. A Proclamation to the contrary hath been, and is now again newly made. That Remedy be had againſt Wears, and ſuch other Engines on Rivers, as are a great annoyance to Boats. The Statute made for that purpoſe ſhall be kept. That the Houſe of Commons may chooſe Juſtices of the Peace for every County; and that thoſe whom they ſhall ſo chooſe, be not diſplaced upon any ſurmiſes. Let the Houſe of Commons name Able Men, and the King will chooſe, as he thinks beſt. That ſuch Perſons, as in the time of the Great Peſtilence, did let out their Mannors, which they held of the King in Capite, to ſundry Perſons for term of Life, without Licence, may accordingly continue the ſame, untill the Land become more populous. The King will be adviſed. That thoſe, who bring in any Wines from any of the Kings Dominions, may be obliged to bring Teſtimonial under Chief Officers hands of the Prizes of the ſame; ſo that upon their Arrival the Juſtices of the Peace may ſet Prizes agreeable thereto. The Statute therefore made ſhall ſtand. The Printed Statutes for the [u] moſt part agree exactly with the Records, except that where the Print touching Wines hath Conchers, the Record hath Engliſh Conchers; and that of the Seventh Chapter in the Print touching Silver Veſſels, and of the Nineteenth for finding of Hawks, there is no mention found in the Record.

[u] Vid. quomodò Rot. Parl. & Sr. Rob. Cotton. p. 97, &c. n. 20. &c.

This Parliament was continued by ſeveral Prorogations, till the Third of November, when the Lord Chancellour in Preſence of the King, Lords, and Commons, declared, that the King was reſolved to execute the Statute of Apparel, and therefore charged them all to promote the ſame. After which he demanded of both Houſes, whether they would have ſuch Matters, as they agreed on, to be by way of Ordinance or of Statute; they anſwer'd by way of Ordinance, that they might amend the ſame at their Pleaſure, and ſo it was done. Then the King thanked them for their Pains taken, and ſo diſmiſt them for that time.

VII. A Convocation [x] of the Province of Canterbury, being held this Year under Archbiſhop Iſlip, the Holy-days were by a Canon retrenched to a far leſs Number than before; which indeed amounted to few more, than We now obſerve in England: Excepting to particular places, the Days of Dedication of Churches and the Saints days, Patrons thereof, and alſo the Double Feſtival of [y] St. George; liberty being left to Work on any other Saints Days.

[x] Regiſt. Arch. Cant. Simon Iſlip fol. 186. b. & Selden's Titl. Honor. c. 5. §. 43. p. 815.

[y] Lindwood de Feriis C. ex Scripturis.

VIII. This Year [z] departed this Life the Fair young Lady Elizabeth, Dutcheſs of Clarence, leaving one only Daughter behind her by Duke Lionel, her Husband, called Philippa, who afterwards was Married to Edmund Mortimer, Third Earl of March, Lord and Baron of Wigmore, Trim, Clare, and Connaught, as alſo of the Lordſhip and Town of Ludlow: By him She had Roger Mortimer, Fourth Earl of March, whoſe Son Edmund dying without Iſſue, his Daughter Anne was Married to Richard Plantagenet Earl of Cambridge, Son to Edmund Langley Duke of York, Fifth Son of King [z] Knighton p. 2627. n. 40.

An. Dom. 1363. An. Regni Angliæ XXXVII.

King Edward the Third, and ſo convey'd her Title to her Son Richard Duke of York, who thereupon openly challenged the Crown of King Henry the Sixth, the Son of Henry the Fifth, the Son of Henry the Fourth, the Son of John of Gaunt, King Edwards Fourth Son; when as by the Mothers ſide, himſelf was the Son and Heir of Anne, Daughter and Heir of Roger Mortimer, Son and Heir of Edmund Mortimer, by the Lady Philippa, ſole Daughter and Heireſs of Prince Lionel Duke of Clarence, King Edward's Third Son. And thô this Richard failed in the attempt, yet his Son Edward, afterwards call'd the Fourth, obtain'd the point, having deſtroy'd the Houſe of John of Gaunt, in the Third Generation after his Son Henry of Bolingbroke, had depos'd King Richard the Second by Rebellion. King Edward ſolemnized the Funerals of this great Dutcheſs of Clarence, and [a] gave Command to the Keeper of his great Wardrobe, to deliver out Four Cloths of Gold Baudekin, or Tinſell, and Nine of Baudekin of Lucca, to be offer'd for himſelf and his Queen at her Funeral. Her Body [b] was ſolemnly interred in the Chancel of the Auguſtine Fryers at Clare in Suffolk. Queen Philippa (who together with the Lady Catherine Counteſs of Warwick, and Daughter to Roger Mortimer, Firſt Earl of March, had ſtood her Godmother) took her young Daughter Philippa into her Care and Protection, She being then in the Eighth Year of her Age.

[a] Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 167.

[b] Sandford's Geneal. Hiſt. p. 220.

This Year alſo Edward Bailiol, who was in his time King of Scotland, till he reſign'd his Title to King Edward of England, [c] departed this Life at Doncaſter in Yorkſhire without Iſſue, being the laſt of the Family of John Bailiol: So that hereby there was no pretence left to any to diſturb the Then-uncontroverted Right of David Bruce King of Scotland, and conſequently of Prince Robert Stuart, who being the Eldeſt Son of King David's Eldeſt Siſter, ſucceeded him in the Kingdom, upon King David's Dying alſo without Iſſue, as we ſhall ſee about Ten Years hence.

[c] Knighton p. 2627. n. 50.

On the [d] Fourteenth of Auguſt Dr. Ralph Shrewsbury Biſhop of Bath and Wells departed this Life, being ſucceeded by Dr. John Bernet, who was tranſlated thither from Worceſter, and William Wittleſey Biſhop of Rocheſter, ſupply'd his place at Worceſter, whoſe vacant See was filled by Dr. Thomas Trillick Dean of St. Pauls, London.

[d] Godw. Catal. Bps p. 371. & Walſing. hiſt. p. 173. Dugd. Warw. p. 557.

IX. About this time [e] one Walter Winkeburne was for ſome Capital crime or other ſo violently proſecuted by one of the Knights Hoſpitallers, that whether Guilty or no, he received Judgment to be Hanged, and Hanged he was. Being after ſuch a time cut down, as he was carried for Dead to be laid in the Church-yard of St. Sepulchers at Leiceſter, he began to revive in the Cart, and being thereupon carried for ſafeguard into the Chnrch, was there perfectly recover'd, and carefully watched by the Clergy of Leiceſter, leſt the Sheriff ſhould take him away to hang him again; while ſome were ſent to tell the King, who was then in thoſe Parts, of the Adventure, and to beg his Charter of pardon; ſince the Perſon had in a manner ſatisfied the Law, and that his miraculous Recovery might ſeem no bad Argument of his Innocency: Accordingly King Edward preſently after granted him his Charter of pardon in the Abbey of Leiceſter, ſaying theſe Words, which Knighton affirms, that himſelf heard from him, "Since God hath given him Life, I'll give him my Charter. Such another Caſe happen'd at London in my Time about the Year 1670, upon the Body of one Savage an hopefull young Man, who gave great teſtimony of his Repentance both before and at the place of Execution. After he had hung a full Half Hour, his Body being granted to his Friends for Burial, they perceiving ſome ſigns of Life to remain, put him into a warm Bed, and at laſt perfectly recover'd him; thô by his own Confeſſion he had been guilty of the Murther and Robbery laid to his Charge. But he had not ſuch Fortune as this Walter Winkeburne; for before King Charles the Second could be made acquainted with the Accident, the Sheriff having an inkling of the matter, by the indiſcretion of his Friends, came and took him away to the Gallows again, where finally he died.

[e] Knighton p. 2627. n. 40.

X. In this Seaſon, either becauſe the Wars being now ended, thoſe who had been Souldiers, had rather do any thing than return to their former Occupations, or thrô relaxation of Diſcipline, there [f] aroſe Swarms of Theeves and High-way Men in ſeveral parts of England, who ſet upon Travellers and brake up Houſes, and robbed Churches and the Shrines of Saints, and carried away the more pretious Reliques, and all the Rich Offerings: Particularly they robbed the Abbey of Thornton in Leiceſterſhire, and took away the Image of our Lady of Mirivale out of her Chappel, and the Image of our Lady of Monks-Kirkby; and the like they did in many other places, thô moſt most of the Authors were taken and hanged. Some of these People stole away the Head of St. Hugh, formerly Bishop of Lincoln, which, after they had spoiled it of all the Gold, Silver and precious Stones belonging unto it, they flang away in a Field, and went to London to sell their ill-gotten Goods; but afterwards being themselves rob'd of all their Gains, and thereupon confessing their Sacrilege, they received their reward at the Gallows. Among other Instances of these licentious Robbers violence and contempt of the Law, Peter King of Cyprus himself, as he rode about here in England, with a small Attendance in confidence of King Edwards protection, was [g] set upon by a Gang of these Fellows, and inhumanely strip'd and rob'd of all he had about him: Which with other things might easily give occasion to Foreigners of concluding our Nation Uncourteous, Barbarous and Inhospitable; but that it is not the part of discreet Judges to attribute that unto an whole People in general, which is only the Character of the most rascally and villanous sort of Theeves among that People. However King Edward was extreamly incensed hereat, and did what he could to bring the Authors to condign punishment; and in order thereto granted unto the City of London more ample power to do Justice, and to deliver up Prisoners within their Liberties to the Kings Justices, as they used to do before, thô without Licence.

[f] Knighton p. 2628. n. 10, &c.

AN. DOM. 1363. An. Regni Angliæ XXXVII.

[g] Walsing. hist. p. 173. n. 30.

XI. About this time King David of Scotland [h] came also into England to visit King Edward, and to see if he might obtain a Relaxation of some part of his Ransom, but we don't hear any thing of his Success therein. However he stayed some time here, as well in respect to King Edward, as for the sake of the Kings of Cyprus and Denmark, whom he had never seen before. So that shortly after, King John of France coming also into England, there were present here at one time Four Stranger Kings, as John King of France, David King of Scotland, Peter King of Cyprus, and Waldemar King of Denmark.

[h] Knighton p. 2627. n. 10.

This Year [i] it is remembred, that there happen'd a grievous hard Frost, attended with an unusual Cold, which continued from the Seventh of September, as some say, thô others have December, to the Fourteenth of the Kalends of April following, which was Occasion of incredible Harm, as well to the Land in General, as to poor People in Particular.

[i] Knighton p. 2627. n. 50. Walsingh. hist. p. 173. n. 30. Fabian p. 246. M.S. vet. Angl. in Bib. C. C. C. Cantab. c. 232. Sr. Rich. Baker p. 143. &c.

CHAPTER the TENTH.

The CONTENTS.

I. King John of France comes over into England. II. King Edward gives him an honourable Reception. III. An Alderman of London entertains Five Kings at one Time. IV. The King of Cyprus returns into France, and visits the Black-Prince, then Prince of Aquitain; by whom he is received with great Honour. V. King John sickens and dies in England. VI. The King of Navarre on News thereof breaking out again, the Duke of Normandy sends for Sr. Bertram of Clequin to oppose him: A Story of Sr. Bertrams Original. VII. Sr. Bertram by Stratagem takes Mante and Meulan from the Navarrois. VIII. The King of Navarre makes the Captal of Busche his General, who prepares to ride against Sr. Bertram of Clequin. IX. Sr. Bertram reinforced; the Lord Beaumont de la Val taken Prisoner by Sr. Guy of Granville a Navarrois. X. King John's Funeral Rites performed in England, his Body buried in France; a Day appointed for the Coronation of the Duke of Normandy. XI. The Particulars of the famous Battle of Cocherel, between the Captal of Busche and Sr. Bertram of Clequin, wherein the Captals Forces are overthrown, and himself taken Prisoner. XII. Sr. Guy of Granville saves the Life of his Father the Lord Granville, and redeems him by Exchange for the Lord Beaumont de la Val. XIII. Charles Duke of Normandy, Crown'd King of France at Rheims, and makes his Brother Philip Duke of Burgundy. XIV. Sr. Bertram buyes the Castle of Rolebois; the Duke of Burgundy sent with an Army to reduce the rest. The Army dividing into three Bodies acts separately under the Duke, Sr. Bertram and the Lord de la Riviere. XV. Prince Lewis of Navarre grows strong about Bourbonnois; a Party of his takes la Charité by Surprise. XVI. The Duke of Burgundy wins Marcheville and besieges Cameroles: The Lord de la Riviere takes Aquigny by Composition; Cameroles won and demoliſhed; Connay beſieged. XVII. Prince Lewis and his Garriſon of la Charité do their Pleaſure: The Earl of Monbelliard invading Burgundy, King Charles remands the Duke thither, who yet takes Connay firſt, and then goes and chaces away the Earl of Monbelliard and waſts his Lands. XVIII. The Conſtable of France lays Siege to la Charité, and is enforced by the Duke of Burgundy. XIX. The Place taken by Compoſition.

An. Dom. 1364. An. Regni Angliæ XXXVIII.

I. KING John of France, who had all this while made vaſt Preparations for the Holy War, which he had ſo ſolemnly undertaken, [a] was now at the City of Amiens in Picardy with all the Lords of his Council, before whom he ſeriouſly declared, "That he had a Mind to croſs the Seas, and "pay a Viſit to his Brother of England, and the Queen his Siſter, for which cauſe "he had aſſembled them to let them know his Reſolution. All his Council for the main were againſt this, ſo raſh Attempt, as they thought it, of their Kings, and ſeveral of their Prelates and Barons told him plainly, "That it would not be either for his Honour "or Advantage, ſo eaſily to put himſelf into the power of a Reconciled Enemy. "Meſſieurs, ſaid King John, let me believe my own Judgment: I have found by Ex- "perience ſo much Faith and Honour in the King of England my Brother, and in the "Queen and their Children, that I can never commend them too highly: Wherefore "as to that Point I am confident they will embrace me with all Sincerity and Friend- "ſhip. I deſire alſo to confer Perſonally with King Edward about this Croiſade, which "we have undertaken; and beſides I intend to excuſe my Son the Duke of Anjou, "who like an indiſcreet Young Man, by his Unlicenſed Return into France, has en- "trenched upon my Honour. To theſe Words none durſt make a Rejoinder, for they ſaw he was abſolutely determin'd as to that Matter. Then the King appointed his Son Charles the Dauphin, to be again his Lieutenant and Regent of the Realm, during his Abſence, and he promiſed the Lord Philip his youngeſt Son, to make him at his Return Duke of Burgundy, and Inheritor of that Dutchy. And ſo Order being given to provide all things neceſſary for the Voyage at Boulogne, he rode from Amiens to Heſdin, where he ſolemniſed the Feſtival of our Lords Nativity, together with Earl Lewis of Flanders, who came thither to meet him, and tarried with him four Days. On St. Innocents Day he left Heſdin and went to Boulogne, where he took up his Lodgings in the Abbey, expecting till the Wind might ſerve, having in his Company the Earl of Eu, the Earl of Dampmartin, the Grand Prior of France, the Lord Bouciquault, Sr. Triſtram de Magnilieu, Sr. Peter and Sr. John Villers, Sr. John de Auneville, Sr. Nicolas de Bracquemont and divers other Lords, Knights and Eſquires.

[a] Froiſ. c. 218. fol. 114.

Many of our Writers ſeem too indiſcreetly to ſurmiſe, as if one Occaſion of King John's coming to England at this time was for Love of the Counteſs of Salisbury, which Opinion the Noble Lord of [b] Orrery hath lately authoriſed with his excellent Pen. But it is to be conſider'd, that my Lord wrote a Poem for Delight, and not an Hiſtory for the Eſtabliſhment of Truth; wherefore he is not to be accuſed: And yet Sr. Richard Baker, and others of his Character, are by no means to be pardoned, who ſo lightly make ſuch unwarrantable Reflections without weighing the Matter. If they mean by the Counteſs of Salisbury, the Firſt Earl Montagu's Lady, that was Madam Catharine, Daughter of the Lord Grandiſon, and ſhe was dead [c] above 12 Years before this time. If they refer to the Fair Lady of Kent ſo much talk'd of, we have ſhewn how ſhe was two Years ſince married to Prince Edward, and it appears that ſhe was now with him in Aquitain, of which King John could not be ignorant: And if they ſhall be forced to own the Lady Elizabeth, Daughter to the Lord Mohun of Dunſtor, [d] who only was at this time Counteſs of Salisbury, and Wife to the Second Earl Montagu; let them bring the leaſt ſhadow of Authority, or ſhew that ever they themſelves thought upon that Perſon before, and I yield. But otherwiſe I muſt profeſs, that I cannot without Reſentment ſee the Honour, not only of a Noble Lady, but alſo of two Kings, John and Edward, who are both ſaid to have been in Love with her, thus ſhamefully traduced by Men of either no Induſtry or no Honeſty: But to proceed.

[b] In his Play called the Black-Prince.

[c] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 647.

[d] Dugd. ibid. p. 648.

King John of France, when all things were ready for his Voyage, and the Mariners told him the Wind ſtood fair for England, [e] went on Board, and ſet ſail from Boulogne with his Guard and other Attendants, about the hour of Midnight, and arrived ſafely at Dover about Ten the next Morning, being the Day before the Vigil of the Epiphany, or the Fourth of January, [f] which was a Thurſday, in the Year of our Lord MCCCLXIV.

[e] Froiſ. c. 219. f. 114.

[f] G F. Lit. Dom.

II. King Edward was at that time with his Queen and the whole Court at Eltham in in Kent, about 8 Miles from London; to which Place News was brought him of King Johns Arrival. Hereupon he presently sent forth certain Honourable Knights of his Court to bid him Welcome, and to conduct him forward on his way; as the Lord Bartholomew Burwash, Sr. Alan Boxhull, Sr. Richard Pemburge and Others, who rode Post to Dover, where they found King John, and in their Masters Name gave him Welcome, saying, "How the King of England was extreamly satisfied with the obli-"ging Honour of that Royal Visit. King John replied, he never doubted of a Welcome from his Dear Brother of England. The next Day they all mounted their Horses and rode to Canterbury, where having din'd, King John would needs visit the Cathedral, where he offer'd a Rich Jewel at the Shrine of St. Thomas; and there they tarried the remainder of that Day. On the Sunday Morning they set forth all together toward Eltham, where the King of England was, with a great Number of his Nobility, ready to receive his Dear Brother of France. On Sunday after Dinner King John came thither, where he was highly caressed and embraced by the King and Queen of England, and between that and Supper-time there was nothing but Princely Diversions, of Dancing, Singing and Carolling. But especially the young Lord Ingelram of Coucy set himself forth to entertain the two Kings, and danced so pleasantly, and sang so sweetly, that he extreamly satisfied the Whole Presence, and wan the Commendations both of the French and English Nobility, who were all delighted to behold and hear him; for all that ever he did became him wonderfully. At this time the Lady Isabella, Eldest Daughter to King Edward, began to cast her Affections upon that Gallant Lord, and became so serious therein, that shortly we shall find it a Match. Soon after the Court removed from Eltham toward London, but in the way the Lord Mayor and Aldermen with an Honourable Retinue met the two Kings on Black-Heath, and so conducted them over the Bridge thrô the City with Sounding of Trumpets. AN. DOM. 1364. AN. REGNI Angliæ XXXVIII.

III. King John was conducted to the Savoy in great Honour, where he was lodged with those Hostages that were of his Blood, as the Duke of Orleans, the Duke of Berry and the Duke of Bourbon, the Earl of Alenson, the Lord Guy of Blois, the Earl of St. Paul, and divers Others. He was well entertain'd among these his Relations, with whom he constantly conversed, at the same time making and receiving frequent Visits to and from King Edward of England, King David of Scotland, King Peter of Cyprus, King Waldemar of Denmark, Albert Duke of Bavaria, Lionel Duke of Clarence, John Duke of Lancaster, and Edmund Earl of Cambridge; many Sumptuous and Princely Sports and Banquets passing among them. And the City of London was at that time so flourishing, that not only the Lord Mayor, but most of the Aldermen in their Turns, had the Generosity and Ability to invite and entertain all these Great Kings and Potentates singly, and together, as Occasion served. Particularly Sr. Henry Picard, [g] a Merchant Vintner of Gascogne, who some Years before had been Lord Mayor of London, one Day made a Splendid Feast at his own House, now called the Vintry, over against St. Martins Church; at which Entertainment were present the Kings of England, Scotland, France, Denmark and Cyprus, the Duke of Bavaria, the Chief Hostages of France, and King Edwards Sons (excepting the Black-Prince then in Aquitain) and many of the Chief Nobility of England. And after Dinner he kept his Hall for all Comers, that were willing to play at Dice and Hazard; his Lady Margaret at the same time keeping her Chamber for the Entertainment of the Princesses and Ladies.

[g] Stows Survey of London p. 87. & 255. a & b.

IV. King John went [h] as often as he pleased, privately by Water to visit King Edward at his Palace of Westminster, and both the Kings, when upon their Communication they were put in mind of the Lord James of Bourbon, who was slain two Years before at the Battle of Brignais near Lyons, greatly bewailed his Loss, as who was a Person of a most agreeable Conversation in all Noble Company. The French King had brought with him into England, a [i] Moiety of one Million of the Three he was engaged to pay for his Ransom, and desired that some of the Hostages might be deliver'd; but that King Edward would not grant. However King John tarried still in England disporting himself, and taking his Pleasure in and about London and Westminster, his chief Residence being at the Savoy, at that time [k] one of the Faireſt Mansions in England belonging to the Duke of Lancaster: And the late Duke Henry had bestowed no less than 52000 Marks thereon. King David of Scotland came also to pay some part of his Ransome, and hoped to prevail with King Edward to acquit him of the Remainder; but he could not obtain that Point. The King of Cyprus, having purchased a Choice Band of English Gentlemen Volunteers, and received many large Presents from King Edward, [l] repassed the Seas with King Waldemar of Denmark in his Company, and [h] Froiss. c. 219. f. 114. b.

[i] Knighton p. 2627. n. 20.

[k] Knighton p. 2627. n. 10.

[l] Froiss. c. 218.

An. Dom. 1364. An. Regni Angliæ XXXVIII.

and went to Boulogne, and thence to Amiens, where he found the Duke of Normandy and his Council, by whom he was hugely careſſed, and related unto them his Succeſs in England, and how he had left King John in Health, whereat they were all pleaſed. Having been here a while he ſaid, "That for all this he thought he had neither done "nor ſeen any thing of Moment, untill he ſhould have ſeen the Prince of Wales, "adding, that by the Grace of God he would go and viſit him and the Lords of "Poictou and of Aquitain. The Regent approved of his Reſolution, but deſired him at his Return to come thrô France and viſit his Father, whom by that time they expected from England. King Peter promiſed to do thus much, and ſo took his leave and rode toward Beauvais, and paſſed the River of Seyne, and ſo thrô Perche and Tourain over the Loire, till he came to Poictiers, where he was informed how the Black-Prince was at his City of Angouleſme. The Prince was then buſie in providing a Solemn Feaſt, Juſts and Tourneaments, which he deſign'd to hold with Fourty Knights and as many Eſquires, for the Love of his Beautifull Princeſs, who was juſt then brought to Bed of an Hopefull Son called Edward, after his Fathers Name. When Prince Edward heard how the King of Cyprus was coming to viſit him, he ſent forth the Lord John Chandos with a great Number of Knights and Eſquires of his Court to meet and conduct him forward, which they did accordingly. And ſo King Peter was honourably convey'd to Angouleſme, where he was received by the Prince with all the Demonſtrations of Joy and Reſpect imaginable. He found himſelf alſo extream Welcome to all the Lords of England, and of Poictou and Sainctogne, ſuch as were then at the Princes Court, namely to Sr. John Chandos, to Sr. Thomas Felton and his Brother Sr. William Felton, Sr. Thomas Beauchamp, Sr. Simon Burley, Sr. Neal Loring, Sr. Roger Delaware, Sr. Richard Pountchardon, Sr. Baldwin Frevile Seneſchal of Saintogne and many more, beſides the Lords of Aquitain, as the Vicount of Thoüars, the young Lord of Pons, the Lord of Partenay, Sr. Guiſchard D' Angle and Others. The King of Cyprus was highly feaſted and careſſed by the Prince, and the Lords of his Court, and when he had tarried there about a Month, the Lord John Chandos rode with him thrô the Country to divert his Mind, and ſhew him what was Curious and worth Obſervation. He was Nobly entertain'd at Rochelle, and other Places by the Engliſh Governors there, and having viſited the Country all about in the moſt Remarkable Places, he returned again to Angouleſme, at what time the Prince held the foreſaid Solemnity in Honour of his Princeſs with great Pomp and Splendour, and a Glorious Retinue of Men of Arms. The ſight of theſe Mens valiant Juſtings, made the King deſire to have ſome of their Company along with him againſt the Infidels: And ſo after the Solemnity of the Feaſt was over, he accoſted the Prince and the Lords of his Court, ſhewing unto them diſtinctly the Principal Reaſon of his Coming thither, namely, "How he had taken upon him the Red "Croſs which he wore, and how the Pope had by his Authority confirmed it, and "what Honour and Privileges remain'd for thoſe, who ſhould joyn with him in this Expedi-"tion, and how the French King, and the Lord Talayrand the Cardinal, and divers other "Great Lords and Princes had devoutly ſworn to embarque in the ſame Enterpriſe. Then the Prince and his Knights anſwer'd him kindly and ſaid, "How truly it was an Expedi-"tion well worthy the Conſideration of all Men of Honour, and that by the Grace of "God, when once the Matter was enter'd upon, and the Paſſage laid open, he ſhould "not be alone; but ſhould find among them thoſe that would be glad at any Rate, "together with Religion, to advance their Honours. With theſe Words the King of Cyprus was well pleaſed, and ſo being laden with Gifts from the Prince and Princeſs, he took his leave, the Lord Chandos at the Princes Command, waiting upon him to the Bounds of the Principality. But the Lord [m] Thomas Beauchamp Earl of Warwick, the Lord Thomas [n] Roos, and divers [o] other Stout Barons of England and Gaſcogne, went quite thrô with deſign to aid him in the Wars in the Holy Land: Being no leſs than 300 Select Horſe Knights and Eſquires, beſides Archers and others their Friends and Servants, who at the requeſt of the Pope had Letters of Safe-conduct from the Governour of Dauphiné and le Viennois, to paſs without any moleſtation or interruption through thoſe Parts; Sr. James de Arteville being appointed with Ten Officers in his Company, to guide and conduct them to the Limits of Piedmont.

[m] Dugd. 1 *Vol. p.*232.
[n] *Thoroton Nottingh. p.*116 ubi John male pro Thomas.
[o] *Walſing. hiſt. p.*174.

V. The mean while King Peter having ſent them before, returned to Paris, where he thought to have found the French King, but he miſt of his Expectation: For that Prince was not returned out of England, but lay dangerouſly ſick at his Lodgings in the Savoy at London, and every day grew worſe and worſe to the infinite Regret of King Edward and his Queen: For all the Phyſicians agreed, that his ſickneſs was Mortal. All this was not unknown to the Duke of Normandy, who was at Paris, being

Regent

Regent in his Fathers Abſence; for the Lord Bouciquault was return'd from England to inform the Dauphin in what a Deſperate Condition the King lay. The King of Navarre alſo was fully acquainted with the News, but was very little concerned at it; for he hoped to make War more eaſily in France, if King John ſhould die; and it is to be noted, that this unquiet Prince [p] pretended a Right to the Dutchy of Burgundy, which King John had already ſeiſed into his Hands, but becauſe the Inhabitants ſo earneſtly deſired a Duke of their own, he deſigned to give it to his youngeſt Son Philip at his return out of England; for he lov'd him the beſt of all his Children, becauſe he ſtuck ſo cloſe to him at the Battle of Poictiers. Being therefore deſirous to take hold of the Opportunity of King Johns Sickneſs, he ſent his Letters to the Lord John Greilly Captal of Buche his Couſin, who was at that time with the Earl of Foix, deſiring him to come unto him in Normandy; for that he deſign'd to make him Generaliſſimo of all his Forces. Whereupon the Captal preſently ſet forward toward Normandy, and gather'd up as he went along ſeveral Knights and Eſquires, Engliſh, Gaſcogners and others, who were willing to partake with ſo Renowned a Captain in his Adventures: But they were not over many.

AN. DOM. 1364. An. Regni Angliæ XXXVIII.

[p] Mezeray p.62

This mean while on the VI [q] of the Ides, aliàs on the 8 Day of April, King John of France departed this Life at the Savoy in London, whereat King Edward, and the Queen and their Children were exceeding ſorry, becauſe of the great Love and Friendſhip, that was between them ever ſince the Peace of Bretigny. One ſays, [r] that upon his Death-bed, having one time ſent for King Edward, he began very earneſtly to beg his Pardon, confeſſing unto him, "That from his firſt Coming into England, he had "Confederates in London and other Places, who ſecretly collected the Fineſt Gold of "the Kingdom, and made it into Plates, and put it up in Barrels hooped with Iron to "ſend into France; and how they had bought up to the Number of 1000 Bows and "Arrows, and a great Quantity of other Arms to the ſame Purpoſe: All which he "now confeſſed to the King, and in whoſe Hands the ſaid Things now were; and al"ſo that he had illegally and unjuſtly withheld from him the Crown of France untill "the Peace made at Bretigny: For all which he now moſt heartily beg'd his Pardon. And King Edward forgave him with much Tenderneſs, but cauſed all the Gold and Arms aforeſaid to be ſeiſed on, and ſeverely puniſhed thoſe Engliſh Men, whom he found offending in the Premiſes; among whom were [s] many Lombard Merchants, who being diſcovered by ſome of their Fellows, were clapt up in the Tower, till they had compounded as the King pleaſed.

[q] Labbei Chron. Techn. ad hunc annum.

[r] Knighton p. 2627. n.60.

[s] Walſingh. Hyp. p.128. n.40.

VI. Immediately upon King Johns Death, [t] the Duke of Orleans his Brother, and the Duke of Berry his Son, who were ſtill in England among the Hoſtages, and wonderfully dejected at his Departure, wrote Word thereof to the Duke of Normandy, whereat he was extreamly troubled. But knowing that there was now no Remedy, and that Himſelf was the next Heir to the Crown of France; and that the King of Navarre was preparing to give him a Baffle at his firſt ſetting forth, he thought it high time to rouſe and put on the Spirit of a King, and endeavour to eſtabliſh his Affairs on all hands.

[t] Froiſ. c. 219. f.115.a.

At that time there flouriſhed a gallant Captain in Bretagne a Valiant and Hardy Knight, named Sr. Bertram de Clequin, of whoſe Name and Original it will not be amiſs for us to enquire a little; thô only for the great Renown he afterwards arrived to, and the many Noble Deeds of Arms which he performed, as we ſhall ſee in the Proceſs of this Hiſtory. About the Year of our Lord 800, [u] Charlemain being then King of France, there reigned in Bougie in Barbary a King called Aquin, in whoſe time the ſaid Charlemain was taken up in his Spaniſh Wars, which laſted him in all for about Nine Years: For the Kingdom of Spain is a large and great Country, whoſe Beginning was reckon'd heretofore at St. Jean Pied de Port, and ſo it went along including the Realms of Biſcay, Navarre, Aragon and Portugal, of Conimbria and Lisbon, of Sevile, Toledo, Corduba, Caſtille and Leon, up as far as the Streights of Gibralter, where is the ſhorteſt Paſſage into Barbary. In this Country was that Great French Monarch, when the foreſaid Aquin an African King, whoſe Dominions lay directly over Spain, undertook to divert him from purſuing his Victories among the Saracens, and went into Bretagne, and landed at the Port of Vannes with a Mighty Army, his Wife and Children being alſo in his Company. On the Sea ſide hard by Vannes he built a great and ſtrong Tower called by him Glay, which in the Phœnician Tongue ſignifies a Caſtle, and there he made his chief Reſidence; but daily he ſent forth his Captains, and conquer'd about in Bretagne at his pleaſure. Charlemain heard in Spain how King Aquin proceeded without Oppoſition; however he would not return turn back to make Head againſt him, but ſaid, "Let him alone in Bretagne for a "while, we ſhall eaſily rid the Country of him, when once we have throughly eſta- "bliſhed the Chriſtian Faith in theſe Parts. Accordingly when he had finiſhed his Affairs there, he returned into Bretagne, and there one Day gave Battle to King Aquin, and overthrew him with a mighty Slaughter, ſo that he fled to his Caſtle of Glay, where he found a good Ship ready for him at the Foot of the Tower, into which he enter'd with his Wife and Children, and a few of his Servants, and eſcaped away: But in ſuch a Hurry, that he forgot a young Son of his ſcarce a Year old, who then lay aſleep in the Tower. This Child was found and brought to Charlemain, who received him gladly, and cauſed him to be baptized, Rowland and Oliver, two Heroick Princes of thoſe Days, being his Godfathers, who named him Oliver, and the King gave unto him all the Lands that his Father Aquin had conquer'd in thoſe Parts. The ſame in proceſs of Time became a moſt Valiant Knight, and was called Sr. Oliver de Glay Aquin, becauſe he was found in the Tower of Glay and was Son to King Aquin. This Original, whether true or falſe was afterwards aſſigned to Sr. Bertram de Clequin, when he came to the height of his Honour, but at this time he was not greatly taken Notice of, except among the Knights of Bretagne that were of his Retinue, with all whom he was highly eſteemed and well beloved, ſtill making War in the Behalf of the Lord Charles of Blois, by whom he was recommended to the Duke of Normandy; and he had a little before employed him in thoſe Parts.

[u] Froiſ. l. ult. c. 90. f.103.

An. Dom. 1364. An. Regni Angliæ XXXVIII.

VII. Now when the * Duke of Normandy heard of his Fathers Death, and of the Preparations of the King of Navarre againſt France, he ſaid to his Marſhal the Lord Bouciquault, "I would have you forthwith ride with your Troops into Normandy, where "you ſhall find a Valiant Knight, a True and Loyal Frenchman, called Sr. Bertram of "Clequin, and look that you and he together make up a ſufficient Power of Good "Souldiers to reſiſt the King of Navarre, and to guard the Paſſages of the River Seyne: And therewithall he gave him ſome ſecret Orders how to proceed. Sr. Bouciquault promiſed to do his Devoir, and ſoon after went with a competent Number of Knights and Eſquires, and took his way toward Normandy by St. Germain, having declared to his Men thô feignedly, how he deſign'd to go to the Caſtle of Rolebois, wherein was a Garriſon of thoſe Villanous Companions, who did ſo much Miſchief thrô moſt Parts of Chriſtendom. Rolebois was a ſtrong Fortreſs on the River of Seyne about a League from Mante, at that time full of the ſaid Companions, who made War indifferently both againſt the French King and the King of Navarre; their Captain was one Vantair Auſtart an expert Man at Arms, Bold and Hardy, a Native of Bruſſels, who kept them at limited Wages, and on ſuch and ſuch Conditions under his Obedience. Whereby he rob'd and held in awe all the Country about him; ſo that none hardly durſt go between Paris and Mante, towards Roüen or to Pont-Oyſe, whether they were French or Navarrois, it was all one to them. But eſpecially they conſtrained thoſe of Mante, which was then Garriſon'd by the Navarrois, more grievouſly, becauſe of their Neighbourhood to them. Now therefore when the Lord Bouciquault left Paris, he gave it out openly, that he intended to go againſt Rolebois, to revenge himſelf of the Companions there. But before he came thither he made an Halt, waiting for Sr. Bertram of Clequin, who had ſecret Knowledge of all beforehand. However as Sr. Bertram marched forth to meet Sr. Bouciquault, he attempted by fair Words to obtain the Caſtle of Eureux, but being anſwer'd with Stones, he left them, and ſoon after came to the Place where Sr. Bouciquault expected him, not far from Rolebois. At their joyning they made up 500 Men of Arms; and then the two Captains laid their Heads together about putting their Deſign into Execution, which was indeed to get the City of Mante by any means. The Reſult was that Sr. Bouciquault with an Hundred in his Company ſhould ride in great haſte toward Mante, as if they were in doubt of their Lives, pretending to be chaſed by thoſe of the Garriſon of Rolebois, and ſo ſhould beg of them for God-ſake to open their Gates, and let them in for ſafeguard of their Lives. Which Point being once obtain'd, then the Gates were to be ſecur'd, at what time Sr. Bertram with his whole Company ſhould be ready at hand to back them, and ſo they thought to enter the Town and do what they pleaſed: But if they ſhould fail this way, they knew of no other how to ſucceed. This Method therefore being reſolved on, the Captains kept the Determination private in their own Breaſts, without the leaſt intimation in the world to any of their Men. Sr. Bouciquault early one Morning rode toward Mante with his hundred Men, and Sr. Bertram with the other 400 wheel'd about another way, and went and laid himſelf in Ambuſh near the ſaid Town, only Sr. Bertrams part was firſt acted. As Sr. Bouciquault began to come in ſight of the Town, his Company at his Command fell into Diſorder, like Men utterly routed, and fled toward Mante upon the Spur; but ſo that Sr. Bouciquault came firſt thither with but Ten Men about him, the reſt following at ſome diſtance one after another. Sr. Bouciquault like a Man in great fear, call'd aloud at the Barriers, "Ah! Ye good People of Mante for God-"ſake open your Gate and ſave our Lives; for here come after us theſe villanous Mur-"derers and Theeves of Rolebois, who have routed us and now purſue us to Death. Then the Watchman demanding who they were, he continued I am the Lord Bouci-"quault Marſhal to the Duke of Normandy, and ſent by him to fight with thoſe of "Rolebois: But the Rogues have prevailed and diſcomfited us, ſo that I am forced "to fly againſt my Will; and here they will take me and thoſe few of my Men who "are left, unleſs you will pleaſe to open your Gate and allow us Sanctuary. Thoſe upon the Watch believing all he ſaid, replied, "Sir, we know well, that the Gar-"riſon of Rolebois are our Enemies as well as yours; for they care not upon whom they "make War: But on the other hand the Duke of Normandy, to whom you are Mar-"ſhall, hateth us, becauſe of our Lord the King of Navarre, ſo that we may well be "afraid of a Trepan, if we ſhould let in any of his Servants. "Sirs, ſaid he, by my Faith "you ſhall have no harm of me; I am not come hither into this Country, but only a-"gainſt the Theeves of Rolebois, and we are not paſſing threeſcore of us left alive; "and they are all dead without you have pitty upon us ſpeedily. Upon theſe words they open'd the Gates and let Sr. Bouciquault in, and always by little and little the reſt of his Men followed; ſo that between the hindmoſt of his Men, and the foremoſt of Sr. Bertrams, who had now left their Ambuſh, the Men of Mante had no leiſure to ſhut their Gates again. Yet Sr. Bouciquault as a Man wholly innocent, withdrew to an Inn and unarm'd himſelf, the better to blind them of the Town, that they ſhould not too much miſtruſt him. But at that inſtant Sr. Bertram with his 400 Men came on upon the Spur, galloping furiouſly into the Town and crying, "St. Yves, a Clequin! To the Death of all the Navarrois; and ſo enter'd and ſlew in the Town and Houſes, and robbed and took Priſoners at their pleaſure. At that ſame time, and by the ſame Directions another Company of Bretons was diſpatched away to Meulan, about three Leagues from Mante, and lying on the Seyne alſo, which Place they likewiſe took by Stratagem; "For ſay they, we are Men of Arms ſent hither by the Lord William of "Granville, who is now at Mante with as many more. Now the Men of Meulan could not ſuſpect any Falſhood in this; becauſe they came the way from Mante, and knew well they could come no other way, nor paſs the River of Seyne but at the Bridge of Mante; wherefore they eaſily believed them and ſet open their Barriers and Gates, at which time theſe Bretons enter'd, but preſently ſet themſelves in an Hoſtile Poſture and cried St. Yves, a Clequin! And ſo ſlew all manner of People down before them, none being able to reſiſt, but flying away in Deſpair, when they ſaw themſelves ſo ſuddenly betrayed. Thus were the ſtrong Cities of Mante and Meulan taken at one time to the great ſatisfaction of the Duke of Normandy, but to the no leſs regret of the King of Navarre, who by theſe two Places had found an eaſie Entrance into the Iſle of France at his Pleaſure; both which were now cut off from him.

* Froiſ. c. 219. f. 115.

ny

AN. DOM. 1364. AN. REGNI Angliæ XXXVIII.

VIII. Wherefore in all other his Towns and Caſtles he began to ſet more diſcreet Captains, and gave more ſtrict Orders concerning Opening their Gates; and that ſame Week the Captal of Buſche came to him to Cherburgh with 400 Men of Arms, which was a very ſeaſonable and agreeable Refreſhment to the exulcerated Mind of the King of Navarre, who made him very welcome; but complain'd of his Loſs of Mante and Meulan bitterly. "Well Sir ſaid the Captal, if it pleaſe God we ſhall take the Field "ſhortly, and I hope to ſucceed ſo well as to recover thoſe Places again with intereſt. "It is ſaid, how the Duke of Normandy is going to Rheims to be Crowned; but per-"haps we ſhall a little diſturb the Solemnity. The King of Navarre for his part was ſo glad that he had the Captal with him (who was one of the moſt Renowned and Hardy Captains in the World, and as we have ſhewn before, one of the Knights, Founders of the moſt Honourable Order of the Garter) that he declared, how he would forthwith make an Inroad into the French Pale; and thereupon he ſent forth his Summons, and ſent for Souldiers into all Parts, where he thought to get any for Love or Money. Among others there was at that time an Engliſh Knight in Normandy named Sr. John Jones, a right Valiant and Expert Man of War, who was Captain of three hundred Choſen Men, and had before that drawn his Sword in the King of Navarre's Quarrel: Now again therefore he is invited to the ſame Service, which he readily embraces and comes accordingly.

IX. When the Duke of Normandy (for ſo we beg leave to call him for diſtinction ſake, sake, till we shall see him Crown'd) understood of these hot Preparations of the King of Navarre, and that the Captal of Busche was to be his General, he wrote to Sr. Bertram Clequin, desiring him and his Bretons to keep Frontier War upon the King of Navarre; on which account he engaged to supply him with sufficient Forces to dispute with his whole Power, and he commanded the Lord Bouciquault at the same time to stay with his Troops and keep Mante and Meulan. According to these Orders Sr. Bertram went with his Troops of Bretons to Vernon, whither shortly after the Duke of Normandy sent unto him the Earl of Auxerre, the Vicount Beaumont, the Lord of Beaujeu, and divers other Knights and Esquires, with a competent Number of choice Souldiers. Besides, at that time several Lords and Knights of Gascogne, Subjects to the Prince of Wales and Aquitain, went into France to offer their Service to the Duke of Normandy; as the Lord of Albret, the Lord Edmund of Pamiers, Sr. Arnold of Cervoles the Arch-Priest, Sr. Petiton Courton or Coutras, the Soldiche of Estarrac and others, to whom the Duke gave many thanks, and order'd them to go into Normandy and joyn Sr. Bertram; but the Lord of Albret only sent his Men, himself tarrying behind with the Duke. At the same time there lay on the Frontiers of Bretagne towards Normandy, a Breton Knight of the French Interest, named Sr. Beaumont de la Val, who was Captain of fourty Spears besides Others, all of his own Country. This Knight rode one day and came before Eureux, where he did much harm to the Out-houses, and alarum'd the whole City and Castle also; the Captain of which latter was Sr. Guy of Granville, Son to the Lord William Granville, who had so subtilly taken the Castle of Eureux by stratagem some Years before, as we have related. When he heard the first Noise of the Fray, he presently armed himself, and commanded certain of his Men to do the like, and so mounted his Horse and took the Field; by which time Sr. Beaumont de la Val, having accomplished what he had designed, was now marching off again. But Sr. Guy rode after him in the Head of his Men, crying aloud, "Beaumont, "you shall not go off thus, you must first speak with them of Eureux, that they may know "you better against another thime. Sr. Beaumont hearing this, faced about like a Couragious Gentleman, and setting his Spear in his Rest, came roughly against Sr. Guy, who sat ready to receive him on the Point of his Spear. The two Knights met fully and performed their Course so gallantly, that both their Spears shiver'd to pieces, yet neither of them fell, or was so much as moved. Now as they had passed this first Course, and were returning again with their Swords drawn, both their Companies joyn'd in Fight, at which Meeting many on both sides were overthrown. The Bretons fought as well as was possible, but Sr. Guy's Men fought so too; and besides he was back'd with continual Assistance from the Town, so that they were every Man either slain or taken. Sr. Beaumont de la Val was taken by the hands of Sr. Guy himself, who led him as his Prisoner into the Castle of Eureux together with the rest, who remained alive. For this Adventure Sr. Guy was greatly commended, and grew much in Favour with the King of Navarre and the Men of Eureux, whom he had so notably revenged.

An. Dom. 1364. An. Regni Angliæ XXXVIII.

X. We shewed before how King Peter of Cyprus, after his Departure from the Black-Prince, returned to Paris to the Duke of Normandy, whom he found there with his Brethren, the Duke of Anjou, and the Lord Philip afterwards Duke of Burgundy, all in Mourning, and expecting the Body of the King their Father out of England. Now King Edward having a pious Regard to the late Love and Good-will between King John of France and Himself, attended his Death with due Sorrow, and having [y] caused his Bowels to be buried in the Cathedral of St Pauls, and [z] appointed for him solemn Obsequies in divers Places of the Land, he conducted his Body to the Sea-side with a Royal Magnificence, and at his own Charges sent it over the Seas into France, to be by his Sons deliver'd to the Sepulchre of his Ancestors. The mean while the King of Cyprus was extreamly cast down at the News of King Johns Death, especially because thereby his intended Expedition against the Infidels was in a manner wholly quash'd, and so he put himself into Mourning also. But [a] when he heard of the Herse's Arrival, he went from Paris with most Part of the Clergy of that City on Foot, and a little beyond St. Dennis met with the Royal Body, which was attended thither out of England by the Earl of Artois, the Earl of Dampmartin, the Grand Prior of France and Others; all who had been lately joyn'd with the Duke of Normandy and his Brethren. And so in the Church of St. Dennis he was interred with great Solemnity on the Seventh of May being a Tuesday, the Archbishop of Sens saying the Mass at his Funeral; after which succeeded a Magnificent Supper, and the next Day all the Princes, Lords and Prelates return'd to Paris, where a Parliament was held by the Duke of Normandy, to advise about about Settling the Kingdom. Here it was concluded, that on Trinity-Sunday following, [b] being the 19 of May, the Duke of Normandy, who hitherto had used no greater Title, should be solemnly Crowned in the Cathedral of Rheims, to which Coronation the Duke invited his Uncle Wenceslaus, Duke of Brabant and of Luxemburgh, and Son to Charles the Emperour; together with Lewis Earl of Flanders, and other Princes his Relations and Allies.

[y] John Harding c. 184.
[z] Ex vet. Cod. de Epis. & Priorib. Dunelm. Eccles. & Walsing. hist. p. 173. & Ashmole p. 665. Speed, &c.
[a] Froiss. c. 220. fol. 116.

AN. DOM. 1364. An. Regni Angliæ XXXVIII.

[b] Pascha 24 Martii, Lit. Dom. GF.

XI. But while these things were in Agitation, the Frenchmen and Navarrois were drawing near each other toward the obtaining of a Battle, to which they came, about two or three Days before the Coronation. Now [c] the Captal of Busche had made his Rendezvous in and about the City of Eureux in Normandy, and being fully provided, and having left Sr. Michael Dorgery Captain of the Place, instead of Sr. Guy of Granville, whom he had sent to Conches to keep Frontier War there, he began his March from Eureux with an Army of 700 Spears, 300 English Archers on Horseback, and 500 other Chosen Men of War, Archers and Footmen. For he was fully informed, how the Frenchmen were abroad near those Parts, thô at that time he knew not exactly where they were, but resolved to find them out. In this small but well-compacted Body of Men were several Valiant Knights and Esquires, particularly a Banneret of the Realm of Navarre, called the Lord of Salses, an expert Man at Arms, also the Lord Peter of Samville, the Lord William of Granville, the Lord Bertram de la Franque, Sr. Bascels of Mareville, Sr. Geoffry of Roussillon and many Others: But Sr. John Jones an English Knight lead the greatest Number of Archers and Men of Arms of any Gentleman there; and all of them were very desirous to meet Sr. Bertram de Clequin, and to give him Battle.

[c] Froiss. c. 220. f. 116. vid. in Vitâ Captal de Busche apud Lib. dict. True Use of Armory in Bibl. Cotton.

On Monday in Whitsun-week the Captal began his March from Eureux towards Passy, and Pont de l' Arche, for he thought the Frenchmen would pass the River of Seyne either at Vernon, or Pont de l' Arche, if they had not passed already. But on the Tuesday as he rode forth of a Wood, he accidentally met with an English Herald called Faulcon, who but that same Morning had passed by and seen the French Army. The Captal knew him at the first sight, both by his Face and Ensigns of his Office, and began to make much of him for the King of England his Masters Sake. He demanded whence he came, he said from Paris; then the Captal asked him, if he could tell any News of the Frenchmen who were abroad. "Sir said he, in the Name "of God, I should know pretty well where they be, for I came from them but this Mor- "ning, and they seem as desirous to find you, as you are to find them. Where are they, said the Captal, beyond Pont de l' Arche, or on this side? They passed the "River, replied Faulcon, at Vernon, and I believe by this time they are got as far as "Passy. What Number do you judge them to be, said the Captal, and who are their "Prime Leaders? Pray Sir, let me know that. Sir said Faulcon, I judge them to be at "least 1500 Fighting Men, and their Chief Captains are Sr. Bertram de Clequin, who "commands the greatest Number, his Troops consisting mostly of Bretons: Then there "is the Earl of Auxerre, the Vicount de Beaumont, the Lord Lewis de Châlons, the Lord "of Beaujeu, the Master of the Crossbows, the Lord Edward de Renty, and of your "Gascogners, there is Arnold de Cervoles the Arch-Priest, the Lord Edmund de Pa- "miers, the Lord Soldiche de l' Estarrac; and the Lord Albrets Men were there. When the Captal heard these Gascogners named, he was much surprised, and blushing for Displeasure said, "Faulcon, is this true that you say? Are these Lords of Gas- "cogne there and the Lord of Albrets Men? Yes Sir, answered the Herald, most cer- "tainly. And where then is the Lord of Albret himself said the Captal? Sir, replied "Faulcon, I left him at Paris with the New King there, who is now preparing to go to "Rheims; for they say, that on Sunday next he is to be Crown'd there. Then said the Captal, laying his hand on his own Head in great displeasure, "By St. Anthonies "Cap, Gascogne against Gascogne! Sir, said Faulcon, "Hard by there tarries for me an "Herald sent from the Arch-Priest, who earnestly desires to speak with You. "Say "ye so, said the Captal, you may e'n tell the French Herald, that he need not trou- "ble himself any further; but let him return and tell the Arch-Priest, since he ap- "pears in the Field against me, I'll have nothing to do with him. At this Sr. John "Jones stept forth saying, "Sir, why will you not vouchsafe to speak with him? Perhaps "he may have some Proposal or secret Advice for our Advantage. Nay said the Cap- "tal, 'Ill warrant you, there is little Good intended for us; for the Arch-Priest is so "contentious a Person; that if he comes hither, hee'l do nothing but brawl and bran- "gle, and all the while observe our Strength, Order and Number, which may prove of "ill Consequence to us: And for that reason I desire not to speak with him now.

An. Dom. 1364. An. Regni Angliæ XXXVIII.

And with that the Herald Faulcon was dismissed back to the French Herald, who tarried for an Answer under an Hedge hard by, and excused the Captal unto him so discreetly, that he went away satisfied, and told the Arch-Priest what he had heard from Faulcon.

Thus Both Parties were informed of each other, but the Captal, having understood the Number of his Enemies, and doubting by the Greatness of their Leaders, that they were yet far more than Report made them, dispatch'd away immediately a Light Horseman to the Captain of Eureux, desiring him presently to send unto him all manner of Companions, or Souldiers of Fortune and Others, whom he could spare, well armed and mounted, and who should all find him at la Croix St. Leoffroy; for thereabout he thought to meet the French, and he said he would most surely fight them where're he found them. Sr. Michael Dorgery the Captain of Eureux, sent him accordingly above Sixscore lusty young Men, Natives of the Town, besides Others. So all that Tuesday the Captal lodged on a Mountain, and the Frenchmen the mean while marched forward to find him, till they came to a River which led toward Eureux, but had its Rise near Conches, and there they took up their Quarters near to Aquigny for the remainder of that Tuesday, in a fair Meadow along by the Rivers side. The next Morning both Parties sent out their Currours to see, if they could bring any fresh Tidings of each other; and then it appeared, that they were not above two Leagues asunder. At that time the Captal rode by the Guidance of Faulcon towards the French that same way, by which he had travelled from them, and about Noon he came into the way to la Croix St. Leoffroy and passed the River Eure; when they might plainly see the French before them ordering their Battails; but there were with them so many Ensigns and Streamers, that they seem'd to be double the Number they really were. Wherefore the Captal rested his Men a while near a little Wood that was there, and the mean while called his Captains together, and gave Directions how he would have them order their Men. All the Carriages and Pages he sent into the Wood for their Security, and so ranged his Troops into three Battalions all on Foot in most decent Order. In the Front stood Sr. John Jones, with his 300 Men of Arms and Archers of England, and his Friend [d] Sr. James Planchine with 200 more, both Archers and Men of Arms; and these were all Chosen and Resolute Men. The Second Battail he led himself with 600 Fighting Men, and with him was the Lord of Salses, a lusty young Knight of Navarre, the Lord William of Granville, and the Lord Peter of Samville. The Third he committed to the Lord Geoffry of Roussillon, the Lord Bertram de la Franque, and Sr. Bascels of Mareville; and that Battail also consisted of 600 Men. Being thus order'd, he took the Advantage of a little Hill hard by on the Right hand, between the place where he order'd his Men, and the Wood. And on the Brow of the Hill he stood in Battle Array directly before his Enemies, with his Banner raised high on a Bush of Thorn, about which stood sixty Chosen Men of Arms for its safeguard: To the intent, that if his Men should be scatter'd, they might repair thither and rally again, and so he determin'd not to descend from the Mountain for any Cause whatsoever, but to let his Enemies come to him, if they intended to fight him. The Captals Banner was Or, Five Escalopes Argent on a Cross Sable, which Arms were richly depicted on his Shield; and on the Crest of his Helmet was a dreadfull [e] Medusa's Head Sable, the Snakes Argent.

[d] True Use of Armory p. 120

[e] True Use of Armory p. 110 p. 147. ubi tamen malè legitur Midas Head: Vid. Ashmoles Garter. Plate 5.

By this time were the Frenchmen also orderly ranged in three Battalia's, besides a Rereguard, or strong Body for a Reserve: The [f] First was lead by Sr. Bertram of Clequin and all his Bretons, and he was design'd to oppose the Captal: The Second was govern'd by the Earl of Auxerre, with whom were the Vicount Beaumont, and the Lord Baldwin Danequin Master of the Crossbows, and several other Knights of France, Picardy and Normandy, as Sr. Edward of Renty, Sr. Ingelram of Hesdin, Sr. Lewis of Pequescourt and Others: The Third was commanded by the Lord Arnold of Cervoles, commonly called the Archpriest, with whom were the Lord of Châlons, the Lord of Beaujeu, the Lord John de Vienne and Others, and in the Rereward were all the other Gascogners; as the Lord of Pamiers, the Lord Soldiche of Estarrac, Sr. Perdiccas of Albret, with the Lord of Albrets Troops, but he himself was not there; together with the Lord Petiton of Courton and several Others. These Gascogners observed particularly the Behaviour of the Captal, and how his Standard was raised high on a Bush, and the Guard that was set to defend it. Whereupon they agreed, that when the Armies were hotly joyn'd in Battle, they should themselves endeavour to conquer the Captals Banner, believing if they might gain that Point, to be soon Masters of the Field. And besides they had another Device, which proved that Day very serviceable [f] Froiss. c. 221. f. 117.

to

to the Lords of France: For while in a Council of War they held a long Debate how to behave themſelves, ſo as morally to ſecure the Victory; a certain Gaſcogner Lord let fall a Word, which was very ſeaſonable and well accepted. "Gentlemen, ſays he, "We all know well, that the Captal is as Worthy a Knight as can be found in any "Land, and that as long as he is able to endure, he will be very terrible to Us; both "by reaſon of his extraordinary Valour and Conduct: Let us therefore ſet apart Thir- "ty Choſen Men of Arms on Horſeback, and let theſe Thirty mind nothing elſe this "Day, but to ſet upon the Captal, at the ſame time that our Rereguard attempts to "win his Standard; and ſo by the ſtrength of their Horſes to break the ſtreſs, till they "can get to him to take him; immediately upon which to bear him out of the Field: "For otherwiſe I cannot bode any good end of this Battle; the Perſon of the Captal is "that, whereon all his Men do wholly depend: If he is ſafe, they win all; if we win "him, the Victory comes to us of Courſe. The Knights of France and Bretagne ap- proved hugely of this Project, and reſolved to put it in Execution; ſo they ſelected accordingly Thirty of the moſt Valiant Men of Arms, and mounted them on Thirty of the beſt Horſes in all the Company, and drew them out on one ſide of the Field, well informed before-hand what to do, and all the reſt of the Army remained on Foot in Battle Array as they had been ranged. Now as yet there was no one, that pretended to have the Chief Command over all, in the French Army, becauſe there were ſeveral Perſons of far higher Quality than Sr. Bertram of Clequin: Wherefore in this Council of War they conſulted what ſhould be their Word that Day, and to whoſe Banner they ſhould all repair. At laſt they all agreed to cry our Lady of Auxerre, and to make the noble young Earl of Auxerre their Captain. But he began with great Modeſty to excuſe himſelf ſaying, "Gentlemen, I moſt heartily thank you all for the great Ho- "nour you are pleaſed to confer upon me, but certainly as for my Part, I ſhall by no "means at this time accept thereof. No-- I am too Young and Unexpert to ſuſtain "ſo great a Charge; for this is the Firſt Expedition that ever I was concern'd in: Here "are many good Captains, as Sr. Bertram of Clequin, Sr. Arnold of Cervoles, the Ma- "ſter of the Croſsbows, the Lord Lewis of Châlons, the Lord Edmund of Pamiers, "Sr. Edward of Renty and the like: Theſe have all been in many great Hazards, and "alſo have held conſiderable Employs in the Wars, and I am ſure underſtand Milita- "ry Conduct far better than as yet I do. Wherefore Lords, I deſire your Pardon at "this time. Then the Lords and Captains began to look on one another, and at laſt ſaid, "O Noble Earl of Auxerre, you are the moſt Eminent among us all, and therefore it is "all the Reaſon in the World You ſhould now be our Head: For Nobility reconciles "Authority to a Captain. Certainly Gentlemen, replied the Earl, You ſay after your "Pleaſure: But this Day I am reſolved to be but as one of your Companions; and till "I ſhall be able to rule, will learn to obey. Come Life, come Death, I promiſe to ſhare "with you in this Adventure; but as to the Chief Rule, You ſhall never perſwade me "to that. Then again the Captains beheld each other, and at laſt unanimouſly agreed, that ſince Sr. Bertram of Clequin was the moſt practiſed in War among them all, they would for that Day obey him, and the Word ſhould be our Lady of Clequin. And thus the Tueſday was ſpent, and both Armies prepared to fight the next Morning.

AN. DOM. 1364. An. Regni Angliæ XXXVIII.

Early the next Day the Frenchmen being drawn out in Battle-array into the former Field, came and preſented themſelves before their Enemies; and ſtood a long while without receiving any offer of Battle. They beheld the Navarrois on the heighth of the Hill, who ſeemed reſolved not to ſtirr thence, but rather to expect them to attack them there in their Strength, which was very diſpleaſing to the Frenchmen, becauſe it was apparently diſadvantageous to mount the Hill; and the Sun was alſo very hot, and the beſt of them began to grow faint and weary: For they were in a manner Faſting, having neither taken Wine nor other Victuals that Morning, becauſe they imagin'd to have Battle preſently, but they miſtook their Aim; and ſo the Day was nigh half gone before things were brought to a Reſolution. For when the French Lords perceived the Captals humour, they went to Counſel again, to learn what was beſt to be done, and whether they ſhould go and fight with their Enemies or no. Some were directly for it and ſaid, it would be a great diſhonour to do otherwiſe: But the more ſober and beſt adviſed maintained the Contrary, ſaying, "If we go and fight "them in that advantageous Poſt, which now they hold, it will certainly redound to "our great Dammage, if not utter Loſs; for upon our Aſcent of every Fifteen of us, "Three are ſure to fall, if not more. And when once Men drop faſt in an Army, the "Terror and Ruine ſpreads far over all that Side. Thrô ſuch hazardous Repreſentations given forth by the moſt experienced Officers, they were withheld back; and the Cap- tal in all Probability had ſucceeded, if not for one ſmall Matter, which however ſeem'd well done by him, but contributed not a little to his Overthrow. The Captal had with him certain Knights and Eſquires, Normans, his Priſoners, whom, when he ſaw the French ready to come upon him, leſt in Battle they might turn againſt him, he let go now upon Parole. Theſe Men ſtole privily into the French Hoſt, where being brought before the Lords then in Council, they ſaid, "Gentlemen, con-"ſider what you do: For if you let this Day paſs without Fighting, your Enemies "will be much ſtronger by to Morrow; it being confidently diſcourſed among them, "that Prince Lewis of Navarre will joyn them by that time with 400 Men of Armes. Theſe Words greatly animated them to ſet upon the Navarrois forthwith; but ſtill the Diſcreeter ſort held them back ſaying, "Gentlemen, let us but wait a little lon-"ger and ſee what they'll do firſt: For their Hearts are ſo bold and preſumptuous, "that they would as gladly fight with us, as we with them; and ſince we are ſo wea-"ry and faſting, and many of our Men chafed by ſtanding thus long in our Armour, "ſurely if after all we attempt the difficult Aſcent of that Hill, we are no better "than loſt. You ſee it is now Noon, therefore let us withdraw for the preſent to our "Lodgings, and there having refreſhed our ſelves, we may take other Counſel againſt "to Morrow. Theſe Conſiderations much ſhook the Reſolution of the ſtouteſt Men there, for they were loth to defer Fighting, till the Enemy might be rendred more ſtrong, and yet they durſt not attack him in that Place, becauſe many of their ſide were faint and weak, and to go up-Hill againſt an Enemy requires the greateſt Vi-gour that may be. At laſt Sr. Bertram of Clequin their General, pitch'd upon the Right Counſel; for he ſaid, "Gentlemen, we know well our Enemies are deſirous e-"nough to fight with us; and yet we ſee, that they intend not to leave their Poſt, "unleſs we draw them thence by the means that I ſhall ſhew you. Let us make an "Offer, as if we deſign'd to retreat, and not to give them Battle this Day; and to "that end we will ſend our Valets with our few Carriages and Horſes over the Bridge, "and pretend all to march back to our Quarters. But ſtill as we go, we muſt all be "ready to return upon Occaſion: And ſo we ſhall try what they will do. If they are "willing to fight us, they'll come down the Hill in purſuit of us: And if once we gain "that Point, we ſhall readily Face about upon them, and deal with them more eaſily. But "if they come not, our own Men will be more encouraged to ſee them ſtand in fear "of us; and however we ſhall be the Freſher for to Morrows Service. This Counſel being approved by all the Chief Captains, they went to their ſeveral Enſigns, and cauſed a Retreat to be ſounded, and commanded all their Valets to repaſs the Ri-ver before them, and take over their Carriages; and theſe were followed by ſome Troops of Men of Arms, who for the greater blind, went over in a careleſs Manner faintly.

An. Dom. 1364. An. Regni Angliæ XXXVIII.

When Sr. John Jones, who was an Experienced Knight (thô now he committed a fatal Errour) and had always a huge deſire to give the Frenchmen Battle, ſaw the manner of their Retreat, he ſaid to the Captal, "Sir, let us immediately purſue them: "Don't you ſee how they fly; they fly by St. George. Ah! ſaid the Captal, Sr. "John, Sr. John, never believe that. For what they now do is by Stratagem, only to "deceive us to our Ruine. Sr. John ſeem'd content with the Captals Opinion; but being come among his Men in the firſt Battalion, he ſaid aloud, "St. George, they "that love me, let them now follow, for I am reſolved to go and fight theſe French-"men, that are ſtealing away from us. And with that he graſped his Spear in his hand, and went forth in the Head of his Men before all the Battails, and made ſuch haſte, that he had got down the Hill with moſt of his own Troops, before the Captal knew any thing of the Matter. But when now he underſtood and ſaw, that Sr. John Jones was gone down the Hill againſt the Enemy, without the Conſent of his Chief Cap-tain, he thought it proceeded of Preſumption and Contempt of Martial Diſcipline. However knowing it not a time to chide as then, nor to diſhearten his Men by vainly complaining of the Raſhneſs of the Action, he ſaid aloud to thoſe that were about him, "Sr. John Jones ſhall not fight without me this Day; Courage my Friends, and "Banner advance in the Name of God and St. George! And therewithall the other two Battails began to march in good Array down the Hill into the open Field. When the Frenchmen ſaw all their Demeanor, and how the Enemy voluntarily quitted their Place of Advantage, they were very glad and ſaid one to another, "Lo! now we may "ſee, what we have ſo much deſired all this day. And with that they all faced about in their appointed Order, and returned to meet their Enemies, being ranged on Foot, except thoſe Thirty Horſemen, who had Orders to ſeiſe the Captal. But as ſoon as Sr.

Arnold

AN. DOM. 1364. An. Regni Angliæ XXXVIII.

Arnold of Cervoles the Archprieſt, ſaw that a Battle muſt needs enſue, he ſaid to his Standard-Bearer and to all his Officers, "I charge you all as you love me, or fear my "diſpleaſure to keep the Field, and to do your Devoirs, till the Buſineſs of the Day "ſhall be decided. But as for me I muſt withdraw, and not come among you again "during this Fight: For I am under an Oath never to fight nor bear Arms in Perſon "againſt one certain Knight, who is now in the Field on the other ſide: And ſo I "would have you ſay to thoſe, who ſhall chance to ask for me. This Oath the Archprieſt had made to the Captal of Buſche, and therefore, before the Battle, endeavour'd to accommodate Affairs by ſpeaking with him, or at leaſt to have warned him of the Frenchmens ſtratagem againſt his Perſon. But the [g] Captal ſeeing him now armed in the Field againſt him contrary to his Oath, was ſo diſpleaſed, as not to vouchſafe him a Conference, whereby he loſt himſelf. However the Arch-prieſt being now mindfull of his Obligation left the Field, with one only Eſquire to wait on him, and repaſſed the River, leaving his Troops notwithſtanding behind him: Whereupon the reſt of the Army never miſt him, becauſe they ſaw his Banner there all the while, and ſo verily believed him to be Perſonally preſent.

[g] True Uſe of Armory p. 122 in Vitâ Captal de Buſche id. p. 128.

In the beginning of the Battle, when Sr. John Jones ſaw the Frenchmen returning in ſuch good Order upon him, he perceived his Error, and knew well he had too unadviſedly left his former Poſt; but however, like a Man not uſed to fear, when he found the Captal and the reſt of the Army would not forſake him, he marched toward his Enemies with great Reſolution, hoping to extort a Victory by pure Valour. He chanced to be matched with Sr. Bertram of Clequin and his Bretons, all expert and choſen Men of War, who notwithſtanding found no Childrens Play from Sr. John and his Engliſh Troops. He for his part before he joyned, made an Halt to review and encourage his Men, and then he brought his Archers forward, who before were in the Reer; and ſo the Archers began the Battle, ſhooting fiercely againſt the Frenchmen. But they were ſo well armed, that they received but little harm thereby; wherefore ſoon they came to Handy-ſtroaks on all ſides, and the Men of Arms fell on one another with Spears, Swords and Axes; ſo that the Fight was bloody and furious. The Gaſcogners eſpecially, who were on the French Part, came againſt the Captal and his Gaſcogners with ſuch fury and animoſity, as is uſually ſeen between Countrymen, when they come againſt one another in a civil War or otherwiſe. Thus were the French and Navarrois hotly engaged on all Hands, and by wreſtling and ſtrength of Arms, they wan Spears, Axes and other Weapons from one another, and took Priſoners, and ſlew and wounded on both Sides with ſuch Courage and Bravery, that it was wonderfull to behold. And truly the Frenchmen had need at that time not to ſleep or ſtand idle, for they dealt with Men of approved Valour and Conduct; wherefore it behoved them all to play the Men, and to defend their Bodies to the utmoſt of their power, and to take all manner of Advantages; or elſe moſt certainly they had loſt the Day. And ſurely the Bretons and Gaſcogners on the French ſide behav'd themſelves like good Souldiers, and did many Wonders in Arms; as alſo did the Navarrois, Engliſh and Gaſcogners on their Part. But now while the Battle waxed thus hot, and Victory was gallantly courted on both Sides, but ſeem'd as yet inclinable to neither; the Thirty choſen Men of Arms, who were appointed to ſet upon the Captal, and ſtood hitherto aloof on Horſeback, caring for nothing but the execution of their Deſign, came all together upon the Captal of a ſudden, as he was fighting with a maſſy Ax in his Hand, wherewith he gave ſuch Mortal ſtroaks, that hitherto none durſt abide him. But theſe Thirty Men breaking the Preaſs by force of their Barbed Horſes, fell all together upon him at once, and ſo ſeiſed his Perſon and took him Priſoner. At that inſtant the fury of the Battle waxed much hotter than before, the Frenchmen being animated with ſo notable a Succeſs, and the Captals Men crying out To the Reſcue. But all their Endeavours for his Reſcue prevailed little, all their Horſes being removed far out of the way; and beſide the Captal was immediatly convey'd out of the Field by thoſe Horſemen that had taken him, who never reſted till they had convey'd him as far as Vernon upon the Seyne. Before the Captals taking, it was hard to judge to whom the Victory enclin'd; but now the Matter was preſently decided: For at that inſtant, while the Engliſhmen and the other Navarrois were labouring to reſcue their General, the Gaſcogners on the French Part, as namely the Troops of the Lord of Albret, and the Lord Edward Pamiers, the Lord Soldiche of Eſtarrac, and Sr. Petiton of Courton with their Retinues, divided themſelves into two Bodies, the one whereof kept the Field where they fought before, and the other addreſſed themſelves couragiouſly toward the Captals Standard, which ſtood high on a buſh of Thorn, with ſixty Choſen Men of Arms for its Defence.

They

An. Dom. 1364. An. Regni Angliæ XXXVIII.

They came on with a mighty Shout, but were bravely received; for those who guarded the Standard were Chosen Men of War, especially Sr. Bascells of Mareville, and Sr. Geoffry of Roussillon their chief Captains: Wherefore many were taken and rescued on both Sides, and many wounded, reversed and slain, before the matter was determin'd. But at last the Navarrois that kept the Standard, being far outnumbred were overcome; and the Lord Bascels of Mareville slain, and the Lord Geoffry of Roussillon taken Prisoner, and the Captals Standard was pulled down and torn all to pieces. The mean while the Bretons, Frenchmen, Picards and Burgundians acquitted themselves to their great Commendation, which they had need enough to do, for the Navarrois had once made them give back; at which time they slew the Vicount of Beaumont, which alone was a great Loss on the French Side; for he was a young Valiant Knight, and of fair hopes, whose Body yet his Friends made shift to bear out of the Field. And at that time the Navarrois stood so fair for the winning Cast, that 'tis thought they had notwithstanding obtain'd the Victory, if just then as they were upon the very point of Prevailing, the other Battle, who had won the Captals Standard had not come upon them, and the Rereward also was brought by Sr. Bertrams order, who together wholly turned the Scales on the other Side: However 'tis said by Authors of those Days, how it was hardly ever seen, that two such little Armies should so long maintain themselves with such obstinate Valour, all on Foot fighing hand to hand, as they were intermingled together, with Swords, Spears and Axes of Steel, contending for the Day. On the French Part, Sr. Petiton of Courton, and the Lord Soldiche of Estarrac, received so many Wounds, that they were carried out of the Field, in a condition almost as hopeless as the Vicount Beaumonts: The Lord Baldwin Danekin, Master of the Crossbows of France, was slain, together with Sr. Lewis of Pequescourt and divers others. On the part of the Navarrois Sr. John Jones, who began the Fight, did that day all that was possible for a good Knight to perform; but at last, after he had received many grievous Hurts, he was taken Prisoner by an Esquire of Breton of Sr. Bertram of Clequins Retinue, and by him born out of the Field; but he died of his Wounds before next Morning. With him was slain the Lord of Salses and most of his Men, and as we have shewn the Lord Bascels of Mareville; there were taken the Lord William of Granville, the Lord Peter of Samville, the Lord Geoffry of Roussillon, Sr. Bertram de la Franque, and many Others; and in short, few or none of the Navarrois escaped, being now ranked either among the Prisoners or the Dead. This Battle was fought in Normandy, [h] near to a Place named Cocherel and la Croix St. Leoffroy, almost exactly between Eureux and Vernon, on the Wednesday before Trinity-Sunday, being the 15 of May, in the Year of our Lord MCCCLXIV.

[h] Mezeray Chr. Abridg. Tom. 3. Part. 2. p. 70.

XII. After this Discomfiture, when all the Dead were spoiled, and the Wounded dressed, and the most part of the French Army had repassed the Bridge to draw to their Quarters, to rest and refresh themselves after this hard Service; there appeared in the Field another Body of Men marching up against them. The Captain of this Company was Sr. Guy of Granville, Son to the Lord William of Granville; who had that morning left his Garrison of Conches, and with fifty Spears rode with all convenient speed to the Captals aid, if by any means he might come time enough to the Battle. When the Frenchmen saw him they call'd out to their Fellows, that had passed the River, and sent several over to acquaint the whole Army, saying, "Gentlemen, turn hither "again; for here is a Fresh Body of our Enemies coming hitherward. Now Sr. Bertram of Clequin and his Troops were still on this side; but every of them extream weary: However when Sr. Bertram saw this appearance of more Navarrois, he raised his Standard on high upon a Bush; that his Men might all draw thitherward, and sounded his Trumpets, and faced about toward the Enemy, setting his Men in order with great Diligence. But when Sr. Guy of Granville heard them cry our Lady of Clequin, and saw neither the Captal, nor any other of his Friends there; but many Dead Men lying on the Ground, he concluded, that his Party had lost the day, and so return'd back without doing any thing. And surely this Valiant young Gentleman, thô he came not time enough to save his Father from being a Prisoner, did yet make a shift both to save his Life, when he was in Danger of losing his Head, and also to redeem him from Prison afterward. For Charles the King of France, [i] who not being of that Honourable Disposition with his Father John, was rather enclin'd to subtlety and unprincelike Cruelty, shortly after caused the Lord Peter of Samville to lose his Head, and had done the like to the Lord William of Granville, the same who by stratagem won the strong Castle of Eureux in Normandy; thô Prisoners of War and none of his Subjects: But Sr. Guy of Granville sent word to the French King, that if he put his Dear Father

[i] True Use of Armory in the Life of the Captal of Buche p. 129.

Father to Death, or to any Bodily loſs or pain, he would ſerve the Lord De la Val, a conſiderable French Nobleman, then his Priſoner, in the ſame manner, and alſo all other Frenchmen, that ſhould ever after fall into his Hands. By this means the Valiant young Gentleman commendably ſav'd his Fathers Life, and ſhortly after he was deliver'd in Exchange for the foreſaid Lord of Bretagne. The [k] Night enſuing the Battle, the Frenchmen lodged in their own Camp on the other ſide the River, and took good Care of their Priſoners, and then there was much ſpeaking and enquiring after the Archprieſt, it being now known, that he was not preſent at the Fight; but his Men excuſed him, as he had directed them: However they could not preſently clear him from all ſuſpicion of Treachery; for his Courage, no Man there could doubt in the leaſt. The next day the Frenchmen diſlodged, and went to Rouën, where they left the greater Part of their Priſoners; but the Captal was convey'd from Vernon to Paris.

AN. DOM. 1364. An. Regni Angliæ XXXVIII.

[k] Froiſ. c. 222.

XIII. This was an auſpicious Hanſel to King Charles, now upon the entrance of his Reign; and we ſhall find him hereafter to have frequently ſuch Succeſſes againſt his Enemies, thô moſtly by Fineneſs and Stratagem, and altogether without his Preſence, as this happen'd. On the [l] Trinity-Sunday following this Succeſs, being the 19 of May, Charles Duke of Normandy, Eldeſt Son and Heir to John late King of France, was Crowned and anointed King of the ſaid Realm in the Cathedral Church of our Lady at Rheims, and together with him his Beautifull Conſort, Queen [m] Jane, Daughter to Peter Duke of Bourbon, and the Lady Iſabella de Valois. The Ceremony was performed by the hands of the Archbiſhop of the ſaid Place: And it is [n] remarkable, that the Emperours Son, Wenceſlaus of Bohemia, Duke of Luxemburgh and Brabant, John Duke of Lorraine, and Robert Duke of Bar, notwithſtanding they were Strangers and Vaſſals of the Empire (thô indeed related to the King) did at that time perform the Office of Peers of France, the firſt repreſenting the Duke of Normandy, the Second perſonating the Earl of Champagne, and the Third the Earl of Tholouſe. The Duke of Burgundy (which Philip his Brother was now in Title and Deſignation) and Lewis Earl of Flanders, held their uſual Places, and Lewis Duke of Anjou, repreſented the Duke of Aquitaine. Beſides theſe Great Perſonages, there were preſent at this Solemnity, [o] Peter King of Cyprus, Waldemar King of Denmark, the Earls of Eu and of Dampmartin, of Tancarville, and of Vaudemont, with the Chief Prelates of that Kingdom, and many other Lords, all who were Feaſted for five days together. On the Fryday following the New King return'd in great Pomp to Paris; where he was received with infinite expreſſions of Publick Joy and ſatisfaction. And then he put his younger Brother Philip into Poſſeſſion of the Dutchy of Burgundy, [p] who ſhortly after rode into thoſe Parts, with a great and ſplendid Retinue, and took Livery and Seiſin of the Country, and received Homage of all the Barons, Knights, Cities, Caſtles, and good Towns of the ſaid Dutchy, and having ſettled all things there, return'd to Paris to the King, his Brother. At that time it was, that the Archprieſt found himſelf obliged to make uſe of all his Friends to excuſe him to the King, who was much offended at him; becauſe he was not preſent in the Battle of Cocherel; but now being admitted into the Preſence he made it appear, that he was bound by Oath not to be armed in Perſon againſt his Friend, the Captal, who himſelf, at the requeſt and inſtance of the Lord of Albret, had been a little before releaſed of his Impriſonment only upon his Parole; and being by this time ſufficiently convinced, that he had unjuſtly ſuſpected the Archprieſt's Faith, was now very ſerviceable in helping to make his excuſe to the King; and to thoſe Lords of the Council, that held him in ſuſpicion. Beſides all which the Archprieſt himſelf (not to mention the many great Services, he had formerly rendred to the Crown of France) had lately near Dijon in Burgundy overthrown 300 Companions, robbers of the Country, whoſe Captains were Guyot du Pyn, Taillebert of Talleboton, and John de Chafour.

[l] Froiſ. c. 223. Labbe Chron. Techn. ad hunc ann. & Mezeray p. 69.

[m] Mezer. p. 106

[n] Mezeray p. 69

[o] Froiſ. c. 223.

[p] Paradin Annal. de Bourgogne l. 3. p. 352

About this time the ſaid King Charles of France cauſed the Lord Peter of Samville, who had been taken in the Battle of Cocherel, to loſe his Head in the City of Rouën, and had ſerved the Lord William of Granville in the ſame manner; had not his Son Sr. Guy of Granville threatned the Lord Beaumont de la Val, then his Priſoner, with the like ſeverity. Whereupon that Lords Kindred and Friends made ſuch earneſt ſuit to the King; that he was content to deliver the Lord Granville in Exchange for the Lord de la Val, as we ſaid before.

XIV. Soon after the foreſaid Battle of Cocherel, Sr. Bertram of Clequin bought the ſtrong Caſtle of Rolebois for the Sum of 3000 Franks, which he paid to Sr. Vantaire Auſtard, the Captain thereof; whereupon he return'd quietly into Brabant, from whence he he came. Yet there were other Troops of Companions, that held ſtill together in Fortreſſes in Normandy, le Caulx, Perche, Beauſſe, and other places, which prov'd very incommodious to the Realm of France, ſome of them making War in the Name of the King of Navarre, others on their own account only to get ſpoil, and to rob, without Law or Reaſon. Wherefore King Charles [q] ſent his Brother the Duke of Burgundy, againſt theſe Pillagers, commanding him to root them out of the Land; in order whereto the ſaid Duke made his Rendezvous in the City of Chartres. Soon after he took the Field, his Forces conſiſting of 5000 Men of Arms, beſides Footmen, and others; among whom were Sr. Bertram of Clequin, Sr. Bouciquault Marſhal of France, the Earl of Auxerre, the Lord of Beaujeu, Sr. Lewis of Châlons, Sr. Edmund of Pamiers, Sr. Lewis of Ravenal, the Beague of Vilaine, Sr. Nicolas du Line, New-made Maſter of the Croſsbows, Sr. Edward of Renty, Sr. Ingelram of Heſdin, and many other Eminent Captains. When they found themſelves ſo ſtrong, they thought to divide into Three Bodies; One whereof conſiſting of a 1000 Men of Arms, Sr. Bertram of Clequin led into Coutantine, even to the Marches of Cherburgh to keep the Frontiers there, that the Navarrois ſhould not paſs to endamage the Country of Normandy; and with Sr. Bertram were the Earl of Auxerre, and the Earl of Joigny, the Lord Arnold D' Endreghan, and many Knights and Eſquires, both of Bretagne and Normandy. The Second Body was committed to the Lord de la Riviere, with whom were many good Knights and Eſquires of France and Picardy, as Sr. Hugh de Chaſtillon, the Lord of Samny, Sr. Matthew of Röye, the Lord of St. Eloy, the Lord of Creſpy, the Lord of Campy, Sr. Edward of Renty, Sr. Ingelram of Heſdin, Sr. Monſange, and others, to the Number of 2000 Men of Arms; and theſe were ſent into the Earldom of Eureux; but the Duke himſelf with the remaining 2000 Men of Arms, and a vaſt Number of others went and laid Siege to Marcheville in Chartraine, a ſtrong Caſtle, held by the Navarrois, againſt which he carried many Engines from Chartres, which perpetually play'd upon the Caſtle with huge ſtones, to the infinite trouble of thoſe within.

An. Dom. 1364. An. Regni Angliæ XXXVIII.

[q] Froiſ. c. 223. & Guil. Paradin Annal. de Bourgogne l. 3 p. 252

XV. While theſe Three Armies were thus in Beauſſe and in Normandy, making War againſt the Navarrois, the King of Navarre was not aſleep as to his own Defence. The Lord Philip of Eureux, his Brother, was dead indeed a little before this; but he had another younger Brother, called Lewis of Navarre, of no leſs towardlineſs for the War, nor leſs addicted to his Intereſt. This Lord Lewis had likewiſe defy'd King Charles of France, becauſe the War which the King his Brother undertook, did alſo concern a good part of his Inheritance. After the Battle of Cocherel he made his Muſters on all hands; and wan certain notable Captains of the Companions to enter his pay; ſo that by this he was at leaſt 1200 Spears ſtrong: The Chief Captains of which Troops were Sr. Robert Knolles, and Sr. Robert Cheiny, Knights of England; and Sr. Robert Briquet of Larſuel, but as yet Sr. Robert Knolles had not joyn'd him. However his Forces encreaſed daily, his Head Quarters being between the Rivers of Loire and Allier; ſo that he overran a great part of the Country of Bourbonnois, as about Moulins, St. Pierre le Moutier, and St. Pourcain. One day 300 of his Men, having Sr. Bernard de la Salle and Ortingo for their Captains, went, and paſſed the Loire, hard by les Marches, and rode till they came to la Charité on the River Loire, a Town large and well-encloſed; which they immediately enter'd by Scalado, but ſtood ſtill together in one place, till the Morning; for doubt of ſome Ambuſh laid to entrap them by the Townſmen, whom they heard to be in a perpetual hurry: The mean while the Townſmen, giving up the Place for loſt, only took care to convey all their beſt Moveables into Boats, which were ready in good Number on the Loire, and ſo before Morning got off with them, their Wives and Children, and went to Nivers, which was not above ſix Leagues from thence. When it was day, the Navarrois, Engliſh and Gaſcogners, that had thus ſcaled the Town, marched thrô the Streets, where they found all the Houſes void: However they determin'd to keep a Garriſon there, and make it more defenſible; becauſe it ſtood ſo opportunely to command the Country on both ſides the Loire. Wherefore preſently they ſent word to Prince Lewis of Navarre, who was then in the Marches of Auvergne, for a Reinforcement; and he furniſh'd them with 300 Spears, who were led by Sr. Robert Briquet, and paſſing thrô the Country without the leaſt Oppoſition, went over the ſtone Bridge, and entred la Charité. And now being all together, they thought themſelves ſtrong enough to make good the Place, and ſo began to fortifie apace, and to ravage about to let the Country know, who they were.

XVI. All this while the Duke of Burgundy had held Siege before Marcheville, whereby

by he ſo ſtreightned the Garriſon, that at laſt they were content to yield up the Town, their Lives and Goods ſaved; which Conditions being granted them, they departed. The Duke order'd Sr. Bouciquault Marſhal of France, and Sr. John de Vienna Marſhal of Burgundy, to take poſſeſſion of the Town; over which he ſet an Eſquire of his, named William of Chartres, with Fourty Men of Arms, and ſo departed, and went to Cameroles; to which he laid Siege, becauſe it ſtood in the plain Country, and had been a very troubleſome Neighbour to the Inhabitants of Chartres. AN. DOM. 1364. An. Regni Angliæ XXXVIII.

While this Siege laſted, the Lord John de la Riviere, who had the Second Diviſion, conſiſting of 2000 Spears, laid his Siege to Aquigny, near to Louviers in the County of Eureux; wherein was a Garriſon of Engliſh, Normans, Frenchmen, and Gaſcogners, all Navarrois, who had held that place ever ſince the Battle of Cocherel, and now maintain'd it with great Obſtinacy; for they had good ſtore of Ammunition and Proviſion of all ſorts; and yet notwithſtanding they were at laſt ſo ſtreightned, that they were fain to yield up the Caſtle, their Lives and Goods ſaved: After which they went with all they had, and were by the Lord de la Riviere's Conduct ſafely convey'd to Cherburgh; where they remain'd. The Lord de la Riviere, having Garriſon'd Aquigny, marched directly toward the City of Eureux, but there he was not able to prevail.

And now the Duke of Burgundy had conſtrained the Garriſon of Cameroles to yield up to his pleaſure; which done all the Souldiers Strangers he took to Mercy; but as for thoſe Frenchmen, whom he found among them, becauſe they had been Renegado's, Robbers, and Enemies to their King and Country, he hanged them up every Mothers Son. And then certain of the Chief Burgeſſes of Chartres came unto the Duke, humbly deſiring that of his Goodneſs, and as a reward for the Engines of Battery, which they had lent him, he would pleaſe to grant unto them the ſole Diſpoſal of the Fortreſs of Cameroles, which had formerly been ſo troubleſome to them. To this requeſt the Duke readily agreed, and then the Burgeſſes immediately ſet Labourers at Work, who raſed the Caſtle down to the ground. After this the Duke went to the Caſtle of Dreux on the River Blaiſe, in the plain Country of Beauſſe, which was a Neſt of the Companions likewiſe; all whom, having carried the Place by fine force, he cauſed to be put to the Sword. Thence he marched to Preux, and inveſted it round, and gave many vigorous Aſſaults, before he could obtain any advantage; at laſt the Beſieged thought beſt to yield, their Lives only ſaved, but as for their Goods they all fell to the Conquerour; with whom alſo the Frenchmen found therein, were detained Priſoners. When the Duke had taken poſſeſſion of this place, he committed it to the Cuſtody of Sr. Peter du Bois, a Knight of Beauſſe, whom he order'd to repair the Fortifications, and defend the Place. After this he went to Chartres, where he tarried five days to refreſh himſelf and his Men; and then he laid his Siege to Connay, a Caſtle, that had been troubleſom to the whole Country; and cauſed ſix great Engines of Battery to be raiſed up againſt it.

XVII. But while he did theſe things, his Enemies gave him ſundry Diverſions: For the Lord Lewis of Navarre overran all the Low-Country of Auvergne, and brought thoſe Parts into much Diſtreſs; for thô he kept the Field, there was none to oppoſe him. Thoſe alſo of the Garriſon of la Charité did what they pleas'd round about them. And the Earl of Monbelliard likewiſe with his Allies of Almain, was entred into the Dutchy of Burgundy by the way of Bezancon, where he began to ravage over all the Country, in revenge, that his Pretences to the ſaid Dukedom were not allowed; but another was brought in over his Head. Upon News of theſe unexpected Commotions in Burgundy, the King ſent to the Duke, commanding him immediately to raiſe his Siege from before Connay, and come back to Paris in order to march into Burgundy againſt the new Invaders. The Duke, however his own Dominions were in danger, was not a little concerned at this Meſſage; becauſe he had made a ſolemn Vow not to riſe from before Connay, till he ſhould be Maſter of the Place. But now thoſe of his Council told him; "That ſince the King ſent for him, he might lawfully de-"part notwithſtanding his Vow, for that no Vow could cancell that previous Duty, "wherein he was bound to his Prince: Hereupon he reſolved to quit the Siege, but making as yet no ſhew thereof, he ſent his Marſhal to demand of the Beſieged, whether they would yield up abſolutely to the Dukes Pleaſure or no? They returned Anſwer, "No, they would not do that; but however on Condition they might have "their Lives and Goods ſaved, they were now content to yield. The Offer was gladly accepted, and they permitted to depart with Bag and Baggage: After which, the Duke having deliver'd the Caſtle to a Knight of Beauſſe, called Sr. Philip of Artenay, with Order to repair the Fortifications, went from thence to Chartres, where he left the greater Part of his Forces under the Care of the Earl of Auxerre; the Lord Bouciquault, and Sr. Lewis of Sancerre, and so rode forth to Paris with Sr. Lewis of Alenson, the Lord of Beaujeu, the Lord John de Vienna, and all the Burgundians in his Company, and went thence to the King his Brother, whom he found at Meaux in Brie; and there he tarried but one Day. On the Morrow he rode on till he came to Troyes in Champaigne: Thence he went to Langres, and still as he proceeded he enforced himself with Men of War. At Langres he was met by a considerable Body of Burgundians, who to their Power had maintained themselves hitherto against their Enemies, and were now extream glad of their Lord, the Dukes so seasonable coming among them. The Chief Captains of these Troops were the Arch-priest, the Lord of Chasteau Villain, the Lord of Grancy, the Lord of Vergny, the Lord of Sobournon, the Lord of Rugemont, Sr. Hugh de Vienna, the Bishop of Langres, and a Wealthy Man called John of Boulogne, with others. Being thus enforced he marched against his Enemies, who made at least 1500 Spears, and yet durst not abide him, but retired beyond the Rhine: Notwithstanding he followed them beyond Monbelliard, burning and destroying the Earls Lands as he went; and so having sufficiently revenged his Wrongs for that time, he returned with most of his Troops to Paris.

An. Dom. 1364. An. Regni Angliæ XXXVIII.

XVIII. This mean while King Charles, his Brother, had sent the Lord Moreau de Fiennes his Constable, and his two Marshals, Sr. Bouciquault and Sr. Moron de Branville, with a goodly Number of Men of Arms, to go and lay Siege to la Charité on the River of Loire, which they did, and skirmished almost every Day with the Besieged: But as yet prevailed not. Wherefore now the King sent the Duke of Burgundy with a 1000 Spears more to reinforce the Siege; so that now they made up in all 3000 Men of Arms besides Others. These held frequent Skirmishes with the Besieged, wherein both Parties suffer'd considerably; but especially those of the Garrison, who were not in all a Thousand Men. And the Duke of Burgundy to encourage his Men the more, at one Sally of the Navarrois made many Knights Bannerets, who at that time raised their Banners, as Robert of Alenson, Son to Charles Earl of Alenson, who being King Philips Brother, was slain at the Battle of Cressy, about 18 Years before; the same Honour had Sr. Lewis of Auxerre, Son to the Earl of Auxerre, who died at the same time, and younger Brother to the present Earl. Thus the Siege continued to the great Terror of that Garrison, who were so mightily streightned therewith, that they would willingly have yielded up the Fortress upon Composition; but that the Duke refused them so much Grace. "I'll have them yield up absolutely to my Pleasure, says "he, I have already taken away from them the use of the River, so that they must "expect no more Provision that way: Let them stand out longer at their utmost peril.

XIX. Now Prince Lewis of Navarre knew of all these Difficulties his Friends were in, and having ravaged a while at his Pleasure in the Marches of Auvergne, he ardently desired to raise the Siege before la Charité. He had already 2000 Fighting Men, but not thinking them sufficient to cope with the Duke, he sent into Bretagne to Sr. Robert Knolles, Sr. Walter Hewet, Sr. Matthew Gournay, and other Valiant Knights and Esquires of England, then in those Parts, to come and serve him in this Action. These Knights would all very willingly have come to his Aid, but they were already engaged in the Siege before Auray, a Town of Lesser Bretagne, about 3 Leagues from Vannes Westward, towards Blavet. For now the two Pretenders to the Dutchy of Bretagne, having rejected all terms and Methods of Reconciliation, flew out into open Hostility; the Lord Charles of Blois making his Musters at Nantes, and the Lord John of Monford laying Siege at the same time to Auray. So that when the Lord Lewis of Navarre saw, that he could not obtain the Service of those English Knights, who now assisted the Earl of Monford in the said Siege, he returned by Command of the King, his Brother, to Cherburgh, leaving la Charité to her Fortune. But however this Garrison had the good Luck to escape by the same Occasion, which had hindred their Relief: For immediately after Prince Lewis was retired into Normandy, because Sr. Charles of Blois might be more powerfully aided, the King of France sent to the Duke of Burgundy, commanding him to receive the Garrison of la Charité, their Lives saved, on condition they would swear not to bear Arms on the King of Navarre's Behalf for three Years to come. Thus the Garrison had their Lives saved, but were fain to leave all their Goods behind, and so being secur'd by the Dukes Safe Conduct, went away on foot thrô the Realm of France. And then the old Inhabitants, whom they had before frighted away to the City of Nivers, came back again to their former Habitations, and the Duke returned with Honour to Paris.

CHAP. XI.

AN. DOM. 1364. An. Regni Angliæ XXXVIII.

CHAPTER the ELEVENTH.

The CONTENTS.

I. The French King assists Charles of Blois, and King Edward at the same time sends Help to John of Monford, both who prepare to decide their Right to the Dukedom of Bretagne by Battail. II. Charles of Blois marches forth of Nantes against John of Monford. III. Who prepares to receive him. IV. The Frenchmen order their Men. V. And the Lord John Chandos orders his Engliſh, giving a Reserve to be menaged by Sr. Hugh Calverley. VI. The Lord of Beaumanoire obtains a Truce between the Parties for one Day, in order to bring them to some Agreement. VII. The Lord Chandos breaks off the Treaty, and both Sides prepare for Fight. VIII. The famous Battle of Auray fought between Charles of Blois and John of Monford, wherein the latter wins the Day and the Dukedom, by the Death of the former. IX. The Number of the slain and Prisoners on both Sides. X. Earl Monford weeps over the Body of Charles of Blois, with the Character and Praise of the said Charles. XI. Earl Monford gives Truce to the Country to come in and bury their Dead; he returns to the Siege before Auray; the Kings of France and of England diversly affected with the News. XII. A Treaty for a Match between the Daughter and Heiress of Lewis Earl of Flanders, and Edmund Earl of Cambridge, King Edwards Fifth Son, being pretty forward, is suddainly dash'd by the French Kings subtlety. XIII. The Christians obtain a Cadmean Victory against the Turks and Infidels.

I. KING [a] Charles of France at the Request of his Cousin the Lord Charles of Blois, had yielded to lend him towards the Conquest of his Inheritance a Thousand Spears, and besides that he wrote to Sr. Bertram of Clequin, who was then in Normandy, enjoyning him by all means, on sight of his Letters, to go as strong as he could into Bretagne to the Aid of his Cousin Charles of Blois, against his Antagonist Sr. John of Monford. Sr. Bertram having received the Letters, was glad at his heart to be thus commanded to what he so earnestly desired himself; for he always took the Lord Charles to be his only Lawfull Lord, and true Duke of Bretagne. Wherefore as speedily as he could, he went out of Normandy into Bretagne with his own Retinue only, and such Troops as he could raise of himself, the Marshal Bouciquault prosecuting the War in Normandy in his stead. He found the Lord Charles of Blois and his good Lady at the City of Nantes in Bretagne, to whom he was extream Welcome for this his seasonable and eminent Succour. Then they held a Council of War, what Course they had best take; for there was the greater part of all the Lords and Knights of Bretagne come thither to the Lord Charles his Assistance, whom they all reputed and held for the True Duke of Bretagne: And they were all of Opinion, that 'twas best to go and raise the Siege of Auray, and fight Earl Monford if he would abide it. Thither also were come many Great Barons of France, as the Earl of Auxerre, the Earl of Joigny, the Lord of Franville, the Lord of Prye, the Beague of Villers, and many other Lords, Knights and Esquires. But of these Preparations there were brought Tidings to the Earl of Monford (who together with the Lord [b] William Latimer of England, lay now at the Siege before Auray) and how the Lord Charles had purchased many Powerfull Assistants out of the Realm of France, besides the great Forces he had gather'd up in Bretagne. Wherefore immediately he sent word thereof into the Principality of Aquitain, to the English Knights and Esquires of the Princes Court; but especially to the Noble Lord John Chandos, desiring him and them heartily, now at this great and last Pinch to send him a Competent Assistance, not doubting, but that in Bretagne they should find many a fair and honourable Adventure, for which all men of Honour ought especially to seek, toward the Advancement of their Names. When the Lord John Chandos, who greatly desired the Prosperity of this Noble Earl, saw how earnestly he wrote unto him, he went immediately and asked leave of the Black-Prince his Lord and Master, who told him, "He "was well content, that he should go to the Assistance of his Dear Brother-in-Law;

[a] Froiss. c. 224. f. 120. b. &c.

[b] Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 32. & Walsing. hist. p. 174.

An. Dom. 1364. An. Regni Angliæ XXXVIII.

[c] Vid. l. 3. c. 6. §. 10. Art. 22. p. 588.

"becauſe (ſaid he) this is no Breach of the Peace between England and France: For "the Frenchmen in like manner take Part with Sr. Charles of Blois againſt the Earl of "Monford, and have a Licence ſo to do from the French King himſelf. And thus "much was expreſly agreed on in the [c] XXII Article of the Peace of Bretigny, that if the "two Parties cannot be reconciled, the Friends of either of them ſhall aid either Par-"ty, as they pleaſe, without any impeachment from the ſaid two Kings, or without "incurring, or bearing any dammage, blame, or reproach for the cauſe aforeſaid. With this anſwer Sr. John Chandos was extreamly ſatisfied, and provided accordingly; deſiring ſeveral Knights and Eſquires, both of England and Aquitain to bear him Company in this his Attempt: Thô but a few Gaſcogners (I know not upon what Grounds, for 'tis evident they lov'd him well) went with him; but ſeveral Engliſh Knights that were there, except ſuch whom the Prince's Service detain'd, embraced the Invitation heartily. So having collected 200 Spears, and as many Archers Voluntiers (for the Prince would not appear in the Matter) he lead them thrô Sainctogne and Poicton, till paſſing the Loire he entred into Bretagne, and came ſafely to the Siege before Auray. Here he found the young Earl of Monford, who received him with great joy, as who divin'd himſelf a Victory from his Coming; and ſo did Sr. Oliver Cliſſon, Sr. Hugh Calverley, Sr. Robert Knolles, Sr. Walter Hewet, Sr. Matthew Gournay, and others both Engliſh and Bretons, who all generally concluded there could no ill Succeſs fall unto them, now that they had the Lord Chandos in their Company. Upon the account of whoſe Reputation in Arms ſundry Knights and Eſquires of England paſſed the Sea, being deſirous to advance their Honour in Fighting againſt the Frenchmen; all who came in good time before Auray, where they were heartily welcome to the Earl of Monford; and ſome of them brought [d] Letters from the King of England directed to the Lord Chandos, wherein he was required to take particular care of his moſt Dear Son Monford, and in time of Battle conſtantly to attend his Perſon. And now the whole Number of Engliſh and Bretons amounted to about 2000 Men of Arms, and about 900 Archers on Horſeback, beſides Footmen.

[d] True Uſe of Armory in Bib. Cotton. Lord Chandos his Life p. 62.

II. All this while Sr. Charles of Blois was in the City of Nantes, where he made his Muſters, and gather'd together Men of War from all Parts, where he could procure them for Love or Money: For he had perfect Intelligence of all the Earl of Monfords Preparations. But eſpecially he required all thoſe Lords, Knights and Eſquires of Bretagne, who had already own'd his Cauſe and Title, and rendred Homage unto him, as to their Lord, to come now and help him to defend his Inheritance againſt his Enemies. Upon theſe Summons there came unto him the Vicount of Rohan, the Lord of Rochefort, the Lord of Leon, the Lord of Raix, and the Lord of Rieux, the Lord of Maleſtroit, the Lord of Quintin, the Lord of Avaugeur, the Lord of Lodeac, the Lord of Ancenis, the Lord of Lomine, the Lord of Ponto, and Sr. Charles of Dinant with divers others, whoſe Names we cannot at ſuch a Diſtance recover. All theſe together with their ſeveral Retinues were quarter'd in the City of Nantes, and in the Villages thereabout, and together with the Aid from France, conſiſted of 4500 Men of Arms, beſides Croſsbows and Footmen. Theſe Lords in a Council of War adviſed the Lord Charles, now that he was ſo ſtrong, not to waſte any more time there, but preſently to march forth againſt his Enemy and give him Battle.

This Counſel the Lord Charles reſolved to purſue, and being now ready to march, the ſprightly and Maſculine Lady, his Wife, the Lady Jane, Daughter of Guy Earl of Pentebria, who was Elder Brother to John of Monford, ſtept forth and ſaid theſe Words unto him, in preſence of Sr. Bertram of Clequin, and many other Lords and Knights of France and Bretagne, "Sir, You are now going to fight for mine Inheri-"tance and your own (for what is mine, is yours alſo) which the Earl of Monford "claims wrongfully, and without cauſe, God Almighty knows! And all the Lords of "Bretagne here preſent know very well, that I am indubitate Heireſs thereto. There-"fore, my Dear Lord and Husband, I heartily require of You, not to make or accept "any Compoſition, Agreement, or Treaty of Peace with Earl Monford; unleſs the "whole Body of the Dutchy ſhall be yielded to remain entire with Us and our "Heirs for ever. This her Husband promiſed to do, and then ſaluted, and took leave of his Dutcheſs, as they call'd her; and ſo directed his march toward Vannes: At which place he made an Halt, as well to refreſh his Army, as to inform himſelf of his Enemies behaviour, and to adviſe, how to get ſome advantage in ordering his Men. Here there was much altercation and debate among his Council, for certain of the graver ſort, who were wholly ſway'd by Chriſtian Principles of Charity, made ſuch friendly Overtures, that the Lord Charles of Blois, who was of a ſweet and Candid Diſpoſition, had perhaps been perſwaded to accept of a Peace, and to Divide the Dukedom, had he not been ſo adjured by the laſt Words of his Lady, and alſo now ſet on by the encouragement of the Hotter ſort of his Captains; that he abſolutely declared, he neither could, nor would propoſe, or admit of any ſuch kind of Treaty. AN. DOM. 1364. An. Regni Angliæ XXXVIII.

did

III. Now between Vannes and Auray, where the Earl of Monford held Siege, it was about the ſpace of Three Leagues; ſo that News was preſently brought to the Earl, that the Lord Charles of Blois was coming with the goodlieſt Company of Men, armed at all Points, that ever was ſeen in France. [c] Froiſ. c. 225.

At theſe tidings the Engliſhmen rejoyced greatly, the better ſort for the opportunity of gaining Honour, and the Companions for the occaſion of reaping benefit: For being almoſt bankrupt with the long Peace, they deſired nothing more than War, in hopes of Spoil and Riches. Then they all made ready their Harneſs with great exactneſs, new furbiſhed their Spears, Swords, Daggers, and Axes, Helmets, Habergeons, Shields, and all manner of Weapons and Armour: For they expected to uſe them very ſhortly. But the Chief Captains eſpecially drew together in Council, being thereto called by the Lord John Chandos, to whoſe Conduct all the reſt ſubmitted themſelves, not only on the account of his Quality, but alſo of his known Wiſdom and Experience in the Wars; beſides which he had a ſecret Commiſſion from the King of England to be the Chief Captain in this action. With him was the Lord John Nereford an Engliſh Baron, William Lord Latimer, the Lord John Bourchier, Sr. Robert Knolles, Sr. Hugh Calverley, Sr. Richard Burley, Sr. Matthew Gournay, Sr. Richard Taunton, the Lord Oliver Cliſſon, and the Valiant Sr. Euſtace Dambreticourt, all who were of the Opinion, that the Earl of Monford ſhould riſe from the Siege, and take the Field early next Morning, and ſo expect his Adverſary, and if he came forward give him Battle. This being reſolved on in Council, all the Captains of the Army were acquainted therewith, who told it to their reſpective Officers; by whom the whole Army was informed, that the next Morning they were to be all ready to take the Field, to fight the Enemy. Before ſix the next Morning, being a Saturday, and the Eve of St. Michael, the Engliſhmen and Bretons, left their Trenches, and marched forth in Battle-Array, the Lord John Chandos leading them to a convenient plat of ground behind the Caſtle of Auray. And ſoon there came toward the ſame place the Lord Charles of Blois, who had left Vannes the Evening before, with all his Army, which was diſpoſed in the beſt manner imaginable: For 'tis ſaid, they rode in ſuch good Cloſe Order; that if any thing had been caſt among them, it muſt have reſted on their Spears points; ſo that the [f] Engliſhmen were extreamly delighted to behold them. The Frenchmen being come in ſight of their Enemies made an halt, as they were in Battle-Array before them, chooſing their Field among the Buſhes; and the Marſhals gave Command, that no man ſhould ſtir forward without Order. Wherefore both Armies ſtood ſtill, confronting each other, being ready ranged for Fight; which they all eagerly deſired. [f] Froiſ. c. 225. fol. 121.

IV. The Lord Charles of Blois, with the advice of Sr. Bertram of Clequin, who was an experienc'd Captain, and well belov'd by the Barons of Bretagne, made Three Battails and a Rereguard: The firſt was led by Sr. Bertram himſelf, who had with him more than a 1000 Choice Men of Arms, Knights and Eſquires of Bretagne. The Second was headed by the Earls of Auxerre and Joigny, and the Lord of Prye, with the French Auxiliaries, conſiſting of 1500 Spears and upwards: The Third was brought up by the Lord Charles of Blois himſelf; with whom were the Chief Barons of Bretagne, that held of his ſide; as the Vicount of Rohan, the Lord of Leon, the Lord of Avaugeur, the Lord of Rieux, the Lord of Maleſtroit, and divers others, as aforenamed. In the Rereguard, or Fourth Battail ſtood John the Baſtard of Blois, a moſt Valiant Young Gentleman with Eight or Ten ſtout Barons of Normandy, and many other Knights and Eſquires, and in every [g] Battail there were at leaſt a 1000 Men of Arms, beſides others. And the Lord Charles of Blois rode about to every Battail, earneſtly deſiring them all to do their utmoſt that day, and for their better aſſurance, he took it on his Soul, and on his part in Paradiſe, that they were to Fight in a Righteous Quarrel; and moreover he promiſed to reward every Man liberally, according to his Performances. [g] Froiſ. c. 225. fol. 121. b.

V. Now on the other part the Lord Chandos, who becauſe of his Abilities in the War was the Principal Captain, thô the Earl of Monford was head of the Cauſe, began wiſely to conſider, how he might with a leſſer Number overthrow a greater in plain Field, where no advantage of ground might be had. Eſpecially his concern was now encreaſed, becauſe the King of England, his Maſter, had given him ſuch a Charge

to

An. Dom. 1364. An. Regni Angliæ XXXVIII.

to look moſt carefully to the Buſineſs of his Son in Law; for the Earl of Monford had [h] Married the Lady Mary, his Daughter. Wherefore like a Loyal Gentleman, he fully determin'd with his utmoſt diligence to advance the Affairs of the Earl of Monford, and to ſtick cloſe to him that day. He had perfectly noted the exact order and diſcipline of the Frenchmen upon their approach, and hugely applauded to himſelf the great Conduct and Diſcretion, that appeared among them, and therewithall ſaid aloud to his Friends, the Lords and Captains about him, "Gentlemen, it is high time "for Us to order our Battails: For our Enemies are giving Us an example. Thoſe, who heard him, anſwer'd, "Sir, You are in the Right; But this is your Province: "You are our Chief Maſter, and beſt Counſellour; therefore order Us at Your plea- "ſure; for no Soul here ſhall contradict You, ſince we know, the King has committed "this Charge to You, and ſurely You have the moſt experience in theſe Affairs of any "among Us.

[h] *Speed p.*590. *Sandford's Geneal. hiſt. p.*179. *Aſhmole's Garter p.*669.

Thereupon the Lord Chandos began alſo to form Three Battails, and a Rereguard, The Firſt he committed to the Care of Sr. Robert Knolles, Sr. Walter Hewet, and Sr. Richard Burley, with whom was the Lord John Nereford; the Second was led by the Lord Oliver Cliſſon, who [i] bare Gules, a Lion Rampant Argent, Crown'd Or; with him were the Lord John Bourchier, Sr. Euſtace Dambreticourt, and Sr. Matthew Gournay, whoſe Arms were [k] Or, Three Pales Azure. The Third was govern'd by the Earl of Monford, who himſelf was governed by the Lord Chandos, and here was William Lord Latimer; and in each of theſe Battails were 500 Men of Arms, and 400 Archers. But when Sr. John came to the ordering the Rereguard, he called unto him Sr. Hugh Calverley, and ſaid, "Sr. Hugh, You muſt be Governour of the Rereguard, "with 500 Men of Arms in your Company: But you are to ſtand on a Wing, and by "no means to quit your Station for any thing, that may happen, unleſs you ſee an ab- "ſolute neceſſity. As when any of our Battails are diſorder'd or broke by the force of our "Enemies, if you think there is Danger, then come you on with your Battail, and en- "tertain the Enemy, till our Men are rallied again: And when you have done thus "much, draw off, and keep your former Poſt, till ſuch another occaſion calls to a like "aſſiſtance: For ſurely this will be the beſt piece of Service You can do Us this day. When Sr. Hugh Calverley had fully heard the Lord Chandos his Words, he was aſham'd and diſpleaſed in his Mind, and ſaid, "My Lord, pray commend this Rereguard "to ſome other Man beſides me: For I have no deſire to meddle with it. And Sir, "I admire in my heart, what You have ſeen in me, that You ſhould not give me leave "to be one of the foremoſt of thoſe, that are to Fight our Enemies this day. The Lord Chandos, who well knew his own Reaſons, reply'd, "Sr. Hugh, I do not appoint "You to command this Rereguard, becauſe You are not as good a Knight, as any other; "No certainly, that was never in my mind: But I chooſe You for this purpoſe; be- "cauſe I know You to be a prudent and well-adviſed Gentleman. And Sir, believe "me, it is abſolutely neceſſary, that either You or I take this Office, if We intend "to ſurvive this day. Wherefore once again I heartily require You to do it, and I "dare engage, that if You undertake it, You will not only do a very notable piece of "Service; but alſo obtain to your ſelf much Honour thereby: And yet over and a- "bove, I here faithfully promiſe to grant You the firſt reaſonable requeſt, You ſhall "ever deſire of me. But all theſe Words could not Work upon Sr. Hugh; for he did not as then imagine any ſuch neceſſity of a Reſerve, and he thought it reflecting upon his Honour to ſtand in a manner idle, when others ſhould be adventuring their Lives in the heat of Action. Wherefore again he deſired him for Gods ſake, holding up his hands, "That he would pleaſe to give this Charge to ſome other; ſince he "for his part deſired nothing more, than to fight among the foremoſt. The Lord Chandos was ready to weep at theſe Words, but he added ſeriouſly, "Sr. Hugh, con- "ſider well what I ſay: For to be ſhort, this matter is of ſuch concern to Us all; "that either You or I muſt undertake it, and then think with your ſelf who of Us "can beſt be ſpared. But don't trouble your ſelf about a falſe Notion of Honour: "For he fights beſt, who is moſt ſerviceable to his Friends; althô he ſtands ſtill all "the while. At this Sr. Hugh began to reflect upon the Matter; for with theſe laſt words all his former thoughts were daſhed and confounded, and then he ſaid, "Cer- "tainly, my Lord, I know well, You are too much my Friend, to put me upon any "thing, which may redound to my diſhonour: Since therefore it can be no otherwiſe, "I accept of your Commands with all my heart, and to my Power ſhall obey your Or- "ders. And with that he took upon him the Charge, and drew out his Men aſide on a Wing, where he ſet them in very good Order to give or receive an Onſet: His Banner waving waving aloft in the Front, which [1] was Argent, a Fess Gules, between Three Calves Sable. AN. DOM. 1364. An. Regni Angliæ XXXVIII.

[i] True Uſe of Armory in Chandos his Life p. 62.

[k] Id. p. 67.

[1] True Use of Armory p. 66. G F Dom. Lit.

Thus on a Saturday, which was the 28 of October, in the Year of our Lord MCCCLXIV, were both these Rival Dukes embattail'd each against other in a Fair Plain near to Auray in Bretagne; which no doubt was a delectable sight to behold. For there were many embroider'd Banners and Penons waving in the Wind, and Rich Surcoats of Sattin, diapred with Gold and Silver, and bright Armour shining against the Sun: But especially the Frenchmen were so well armed at all Points, and so Richly beseen, that it was a great pleasure to view them. And in this manner they fronted one another; neither Party, as yet making offer to begin.

VI. Now there was at this time with the Lord Charles of Blois a Great and Potent Baron of Bretagne, called the Lord of Beaumanoir, who was at that time a sworn Prisoner to England, and so was not to bear Arms; but being otherwise at liberty might go too and fro between the two Armies, or elsewhere, as he pleased: Of which Power he made this Advantage, to endeavour to accommodate Matters between the two Powerfull Competitors. All Saturday Morning he went in and out frequently, till Noon; so that at last he obtain'd a Respite between both Parties for the remainder of that day, and for the Night following, untill the Sun-rise next Morning. Whereupon on both sides they drew to their respective Lodgings, and took their ease, and refreshed themselves with what they had by them, That Evening the Captain of Auray issued out of his Garrison peaceably, because the Truce also extended unto him, and went to the Lord Charles his Camp, who received him joyfully. His Name was Henry of Tintineac, an Esquire, and a good Man at Arms, who brought 40 Spears well Horsed and Armed, of those who had holpen him to defend the Fortress. When the Lord Charles saw him, he asked him all smiling, of the Condition of his Castle, and the Esquire answer'd him, "Sir, blessed be God, We have Provision enough to "hold Us two or three Months longer, if need were. Well, Henry, said the Lord "Charles, to morrow You shall be wholly rid of the trouble of a Siege, either by "Peaceable Agreement, or the Decision of open Battle. "God give Grace Sir, said "the Esquire. By my Faith, continued the Lord Charles, I have here in my Com- "pany 4500 Men of Arms, besides others, all as well provided, and as likely to ac- "quit themselves Nobly, as ever yet did any Company, that came out of France And "my Lord, said the Esquire, that is a great Advantage; for which You are to thank "God, and Sr. Bertram of Clequin, and those other Barons, Knights, and Esquires of "France and Bretagne, that are come with so much Zeal to your Service. Thus the Lord Charles passed his time in discoursing with One or Other about the present State of Affairs: But on the other hand, the Lord John Chandos was that same Night earnestly desired by the Officers of the English Companions, then in his Service, by no means to admit of any Accord or Agreement to be had between the Earl of Monford and the Lord of Blois. For they said, they had already spent all that they had, and were almost reduced to Poverty, wherefore they resolved now to win something by fighting, or to lose all together: Upon which account it is said, that Sr. John promised them that whatever Treaty he might hold, not to yield however to any Agreement, otherwise, than what the Sword shall appoint. From whence there arose a Proverb, [m] Chandos his Treaty; spoken, when Men make or receive many Overtures in order to an Agreement; thô at the same time they are determin'd to decide all by Battle.

[m] John Hardinge c. 184. fol. 185. True Use of Armory fol.

VII. On the Sunday Morning early both Armies drew again into their former Field in their appointed Order, having first heard Mass and shrived themselves; but about Sun-rise the Lord of Beaumanoir came again toward the English Army with a design to renew the Treaty, and compose Matters if possible, to avoid the Effusion of Christian Bloud, which was his earnest Desire. He took his way directly to the Lord Chandos, where he saw his Banner next to that of the Earl of Monford: At his approach my Lord Chandos stept aside to speak with him, because he would not have the Earl of Monford hear what was said. At the first meeting the Lord of Beaumanoir gave a reverent Salute to the English General, and said, "Sir John Chandos, I de- "sire you for Gods Sake, that you would seriously endeavour to bring these two Par- "ties to an Agreement. For 'tis a great Pity, that so many Gallant Men, as are here "in the Field on both Sides, should engage together in Mortal Battle upon their Ac- "counts. The Lord Chandos replied, "Monsieur de Beaumanoir, it will not be: "Wherefore I advise you as a Friend to ride no further about these Matters; for our "Men are resolved, if they can get you in among them to destroy you: Your best "way

An. Dom. 1364. An. Regni Angliæ XXXVIII.

"way is to turn back and tell the Lord Charles of Blois from me, that whatever be "the Event, Earl Monford is resolved to come to Battle, and renounces all Treaty of "Peace: For he says, he will either be Duke of Bretagne this Day, or else die upon the Spot. When the Lord of Beaumanoir heard Sr. John say these Words, he was extreamly offended in his Mind, and shaking his Head said, "Ah! Chandos, Chandos, "my Lord hath as great a Courage to fight as your Lord hath, and so have all his "Men; but yet he is ready like a good Christian Knight to offer Terms of Peace, if "you had not thus rejected them. And so without any more Words he parted, and rode back to the Lord Charles of Blois, and the other Lords of Bretagne who tarried for him; and said aloud to the Lord Charles, "Sir, Sir, by my Lord St. Yves, I have "heard just now the proudest Word from Sr. John Chandos, that ever I heard in all my "life. For he said, that the Earl of Monford should be this Day Duke of Bretagne, "and declares plainly that you have no Right unto the same. At which Words Sr. Charles changed Colour and said, "As for the Right God above knows it is mine, and the same said all the Barons of Bretagne: And therewithall he commanded his Banners to be advanced in the Name of God.

The mean while the Lord Chandos also returned to the Earl of Monford, who enquired of him how Affairs went, and what his Adversary said; the Lord Chandos to encourage him the more, pretended the Matter otherwise than it was, and answer'd, "Sir, he sent you Word by the Lord of Beaumanoir, from whom I parted but now; "that whatever comes of it, he is resolved to give you Battle, and either be this Day "Duke of Bretagne, or else to leave his Body in the Field. This the Lord Chandos fained, thereby to divert the Earl from all Hopes of Peace, and so to enflame his Courage the higher, and then he continued; "Now therefore consider Sir, quickly what you "intend to do, and whether you will put all to the hazard of a Battle or no? "Sir, "said the Earl, in the Name of God and St. George, let us then go to it with a good "Courage, and God help the Right! Cause our Banners to advance. So the Banner of Bretagne which was Ermins, went forward, and the Guidon[n] of the Lord Chandos, being Or a Pile Gules, was bore next unto it.

[n] True Use of Armory in the life of the Lord Chandos p. 67.

VIII. Thus a little before the hour of Prime the Armies approached near together, all so well order'd, that it was a delightfull Terrour to behold them: For some that were there present, declared unto my [o] Author, that the Frenchmen were in manner of a Phalanx, so close knit together, that a man could not cast a Glove among them, but it should have fallen on the Point of a Spear or Helmet: For every Man bore his Spear of five foot length upright before him, and they had all short Axes hanging by their sides; and thus they came against the English fair and softly, all in good Array after their Banners breathing War and Slaughter, and all well instructed how to behave themselves. Nor was the Order of the English less to be commended, who marched forth to meet them, being led by as bold and expert Commanders as any living. First Sr. Bertram of Clequin and his Troops of Bretagne encountred with the Battail of Sr. Robert Knolles, Sr. Walter Hewet, Sr. Richard Burley and the Lord Nereford; at which time the Lords of Bretagne on both Sides set up the Banners of their Lords, who both claim'd the Dukedom, directly one against the other, both being Ermins, which are the Arms of Bretagne. At the first Encounter there began a cruel and terrible Battle, especially when they joyn'd hand to hand: For thô the English Archers at the beginning shot most fiercely, yet as then they did but little Execution, the Frenchmen were all so well arm'd, and defended with broad Shields and Targets. Which [p] when the Archers saw, who were big and lusty Men, thrô great Disdain, that they should do nothing now, who at other times had a chief stroke in all Victories, they flang away their Bows and Empty Quivers, and ran up to the Frenchmen that bare the Axes, and at the first Meeting they began to wrestle and trip with them, and laid hold on their Weapons, so that they wrested several Axes out of their Enemies Hands, with which they slew several of their Owners, and fought couragiously the remainder of that Day. But now the Men of Arms meet on both sides, and begin a Fight full of Horrour, wherein many a notable Feat of Arms was done, and many a Man taken and rescued again; but he that was once down was never like to rise again without some suddain and extraordinary Succour. The Lord Charles of Blois his Battail was engaged with that of the Earl of Monford, where the Fight was very cruel beyond Imagination; and first the Earl began to have the Worst of it: But at that Instant Sr. Hugh Calverley, who stood on a Wing with 500 Chosen Men of Arms, heedfully observing every Circumstance, when he saw his Friends begin to disorder, rode up immediately to the Place, and with his fresh Men held the Enemy at Play, till the Lord Chandos had repaired repaired the Breaches, and ſet his Men in Order again; and then Sr. Hugh retreated to his former Poſt, and the Lord Chandos returned to the Battail. Surely this Device of that Noble Captains proved of no ſmall Advantage to him that Day: For no leſs than four times were his Men broken, and yet as often reſtored again by Sr. Hugh and his Troops. AN. DOM. 1364. An. Regni Angliæ, XXXVIII.

[o] Froiss. c 225. f. 122. b.

[p] Froiss. c. 225. f. 122. b.

While thus the two Rivals were contending with each other, the Lord Oliver Cliſſon, the Lord John Bourchier, Sr. Euſtace Dambreticourt, and Sr. Matthew Gournay and their Men were matched with the Earls of Auxerre and Joigny, who had a great Battail, and well furniſhed with Choſen Men: And long and couragiouſly this Fight was menaged with Spears, Swords and Axes, that no more could be expected from Men of Valour. However this tough Reſiſtance was no way pleaſing to the Lord Oliver Cliſſon, who raged in the Head of his Men like a Wild Boar, and did Wonders with a great, ſharp and heavy Ax in his hands, wherewith he brake and opened the Preaſs, ſo that none durſt abide his ſtroaks. More than once he adventur'd ſo far among his Enemies, that he was in great danger of being loſt; but he was alſo ſeconded by Men like himſelf, who yet had all enough to do to ſave themſelves. The Lord Cliſſon not only gave, but received alſo many great ſtroaks, but his Armour was ſo good it preſerved him; and yet one time he received a Blow with an Axe on the Viſor of his Helmet, ſo that the Corner Point of the Ax graſed croſs his Right eye, whereby for ever after he loſt the ſight of that Eye: But yet for all this Wound, he ſtill behaved himſelf like a Noble Champion, and like Sampſon, ſought to revenge the loſs of his Sight with the Death of his Enemies.

It is in vain to ſeek to particularize every Mans Actions; Sr. Matthew Gournay, Sr. John Bourchier, Sr. Euſtace Dambreticourt, and the reſt were nothing inferiour to the Lord Cliſſon, but ſignalized their Valour abundantly: And ſurely every Man muſt do his Devoir, or elſe he could not have eſcaped: For the Enemy was both Numerous, and fought with as much Bravery as was poſſible.

The Lord Charles of Blois more eſpecially approved himſelf a moſt Accompliſhed Knight, and well Worthy of the Dukedom he fought for: And yet Sr. John Monford was not a whit behind him; but bare himſelf with ſuch incredible Courage and Proweſs, that he ever after obtain'd the Sirname of Valiant. The Lord John Chandos did that Day many Wonders in Arms, and fought valiantly with a maſſy Ax of Steel that he had in his Hands, wherewith he gave ſuch Blows, that no Armour could reſiſt; ſo that the boldeſt of his Enemies durſt not abide him. For he was a great and mighty Man, well formed of all his Limbs, and together with his notable Strength and Courage, had much Diſcretion, Skill and Experience. All the time of the Battle he menaged the Earl of Monford, being very carefull to comfort Him and his Men, and ſaid, as he ſaw Occaſion, "Sir, do thus and thus, and draw to this or that ſide; and the Earl conſtantly follow'd his Directions.

In another part Sr. Bertram of Clequin and his Bretons fought couragiouſly with Sr. Robert Knolles, Sr. Walter Hewet, and their Men, that none could tell to which ſide the Victory would encline: For both Engliſh and Bretons were Men of approved Courage, and neither Part knew how to turn their Backs. All the Lords, Captains, Knights and Eſquires on all hands fought with extream Animoſity and Reſolution, and every Battail had its hands full, and were hard at it together, except only that of the Engliſh, whereof Sr. Hugh Calverley had the Conduct; he all along kept on a Wing ſomething aloof, and minded nothing elſe, but to repair what Breaches he ſaw to be made among his Friends, in any part as they were fighting. At laſt the Lord John Chandos having by this means, and by the exalted Courage of his Men, very much prevail'd againſt the Lord Charles of Blois, brake quite thrô him, making a mighty ſlaughter among his Men, and came and fought with the Earls of Auxerre and Joigny, who were hard enough put to it before; and whatever brave Reſiſtance he found here, it laſted not long, for being animated with Succeſs, he ſoon brake that Battail alſo to pieces, ſo that it was utterly diſcomfited; all their Banners and Penons taken or overthrown to the Earth, and the Lords and Captains put to Flight, ſlain or taken: For they had no refreſhment from any other of their Battails, every one had their Hands full already. And indeed it ought to be remembred, that the Baſtard of Blois was afterwards by new Counſels remanded to joyn the Lord Charles, becauſe all the ſtreſs of the Matter lay upon him, and the Earl of Monford; and the Lord Chandos began to prevail; but ſtill by the Aſſiſtance of Sr. Hugh Calverley and his Men, this Great Battail was at laſt broken and overthrown, as we have ſhewn. After which now the Earls of Auxerre and Joigny ſuffer'd the ſame Fate, for they had no Succour to aid them againſt theſe New-

An. Dom. 1364. An. Regni Angliæ XXXVIII.

Comers. And to say Truth, when a Discomfiture begins, a small Matter decides the Controversie; for if one flies, there follow three more, and ten after them, and after the ten thirty, and then an Hundred.

Thus it was in this famous Battle of Auray, the Lords of the French Party cried their Cries, so that those, who heard them, took Heart and rallied again; but many could not hear them at all, or not return unto them for the Preass, noise and confusion of the Field. The Earl of Auxerre being very much wounded, was by Force of Arms taken Prisoner under the Standard of the Lord John Chandos, together with the Lord of Joigny, and the Lord of Prier a Great Baron of Normandy.

Yet all this while the other Battail kept entire and fought couragiously, and indeed all the Bretons and Frenchmen on Sr. Charles of Blois his Part held a long while together with Bravery enough, like Good Men of War: But to say the Truth, [q] they kept not their Order so well, as the Englishmen and the Bretons, with the Earl of Monford, did. For when they saw their Enemies would not in the least flinch from them, but resolv'd to win all or to die; their Martial Ardour languish'd by Degrees, and they became more remiss in their Discip'ine, as despairing of doing any Good. But surely the Wing which Sr. Hugh Calverley lead, stood the English in great stead that Day, as we have particularly instanced before: So that at last beginning to have an Advantage against their Enemies, when they saw their Ranks broken, they redoubled their Courage, and flew in among them with such Fury, that nothing was able now to resist them. When some Frenchmen, who had their Horses near at hand in the field, perceived how Matters were like to go, they went away to their Beasts, mounted and rode off upon the Spur. Then the Lord Chandos with a select Company (leaving the rest to glean the remainders of the Field) began to move against the Battail of Sr. Bertam of Clequin, which as yet stood firm, having done many notable Deeds; so that hitherto Sr. Robert Knolles, Sr. Walter Hewet, and the rest of that Body with all their Endeavours had gain'd but small Advantage upon them. But now upon the Lord Chandos his Coming, this Battail was open'd also, and Ruine rush'd in at the Breaches to the Destruction of many a Valiant Gentleman: For now the English gave many terrible stroaks with their heavy Axes, and many an Helmet was cloven in sunder, and many a Man wounded to Death: So that neither Sr. Bertram nor his Men were any longer able to hold out against their Enemies.

[q] Froiss. c.226. f.123.

IX. There Sr. Bertram of Clequin himself was taken by an Esquire of England, under the Standard of the Lord John Chandos, who at the same time took a Great Lord of Bretagne Prisoner with his own hands, called the Lord of Raix, a Knight of approved Valour. And by that time this Battail was thus open'd, all the rest were quite discomfited and lost their Array, and every Man began to flee away as fast as he might to save himself: Except certain Valiant and Loyal Gentlemen, Knights and Esquires of Bretagne, who would not by any means forsake the Lord Charles of Blois, but chose rather to die with him than to leave the Field with Dishonour: Wherefore they all drew together about him in a Ring, and disputed the Point to the last Man. Thus the Lord Charles, accompanied with these Gallant Souls, play'd his last Stake as bravely as was possible; but 'twas not likely those few should hold out against an Army newly flush'd with Victory; especially since the rest of the Field being cleared, the greater Part of the English came thither against them. So that at last they also were by fine Force broken, discomfited and slain. There the Banner of the Lord Charles was beaten down to the ground, and he that bare it was slain; and with him fell the Lord Charles of Blois himself, with his Face towards his Enemies, and by his side was slain a valiant Bastard Son of his, called Sr. John of Blois, and many other Knights and Esquires of Bretagne. It is said, that the Captains of England had agreed beforehand, that if they had the better in Fight, and Sr. Charles of Blois were found upon the Place, he should not be taken to Ransom by any Man, but slain outright. And the same Design had the Frenchmen and Bretons upon the Earl of Monford, if they should obtain the Victory: For both Sides were resolved, how that Day should make an end of the Controversie. So when it came to the Rout, there was a great Slaughter, and many a Good Knight slain or taken, which was the lot of the very Flower of all that Side; but a few Men of Honour that escaped, especially of the Bannerets of Bretagne. There was slain first of all the Noble and Valiant Lord Charles of Blois, who called himself Duke of Bretagne, and his Son Sr. John the Bastard, Sr. Charles of Dinant, the Lord of Leon, the Lord of Ancenis, the Lord of Avaugeur, the Lord of Lodeac, the Lord of Malestroit, the Lord of Ponto, the Lord of Gargol and many others, whose Names cannot be recovered, [r] to the number of about a Thousand. Besides whom whom there were taken Prisoners the Earls of Auxerre and Joigny, Sr. Bertram of Clequin, the Vicount of Rohan, Sr. Guy du Leon, the Lord of Rochefort, the Lord of Raix, the Lord of Rieux, the Lord of Lomine, the Lord of Quintin, the Lord of Franville, the Lord of Ravenal, the Lord de la Feville'e, Sr. Henry of Malestroit, Sr. Oliver Manny and divers Others, Lords, Knights and Esquires of Bretagne, France and Normandy; in all, one Vicount, [f] two Earls, Twenty seven Lords, and fifteen Hundred Knights and Esquires. On the English Part I can find but one Man of Honour that fell this Day, [t] namely the Lord John de Nereford; and the highest Account that appears any where is, [u] that there fell one Knight and five Esquires, at the most there died but [x] Seven in all: But many were grievously wounded. To conclude, this Discomfiture was great and wonderfull, and many Gallant Men were put to the Sword, as well in the Field as in the Chace, which lasted eight long Leagues, even to the Gates of Rennes. There happen'd many notable Adventures as well during the Fight as the pursuit, which cannot all be recounted, and then Gentlemen were either taken alive or slain outright, as they fell in the hands of those that were Courteous or Cruel. This Battle was thus fought on the [y] Twenty ninth of September, being a Sunday and St. Michaels Day, near to Auray in Bretagne, in the Year of our Lord MCCCLXIV.

[r] Walsingh. hist. p.128.

AN. DOM. 1364. An. Regni Angliæ XXXVIII.

[f] Dugd. 2 *Vol. p.*32. *& Walsin. hist. p.*128. *& Ashmole p.*703.
[t] Dugd. 2 *Vol. p.*9.
[u] Knighton p. 2628. *n.*30.
[x] Walsing. ibid. & M.S. vet. Angl. in Bibl. C.C.C. Cantab. *c.*232.
[y] *Mezeray p.*71. Lit. Dom. G F.

X. After the Discomfiture, the Lords and Knights of England and Bretagne having sent out certain Troops to make good the Chace, returned themselves and came to the Earl of Monford, who had a rich Tent with the Arms of Bretagne thereon, pitch'd up for him in the Field. Thither came to him to his Tent Door the Lord John Chandos, the Lord John Bourchier, the Lord William Latimer, Sr. Walter Hewet, Sr. Hugh Calverley, Sr. Robert Knolles, Sr. Richard Burley, Sr. Eustace Dambreticourt, Sr. Matthew Gournay, Sr. Richard Taunton and Others, who first had retired to the side of an Hedge and unarmed themselves, when they saw the Day was unquestionably their own, and the Chief of them set up their Banners and Standards on the Hedge, and the Banner of Bretagne aloft on a Bush, to direct their Men thither. Then the Lord Chandos being attended with the other Knights aforesaid, went to the Earl of Monford, and with a Smile said unto him, "Sir, Praise God and be merry, for this Day you have conquer'd your In-"heritance of Bretagne. Then the Earl enclined his Body very respectfully, and said aloud, "Oh! Sr. John Chandos, this Prosperous Adventure, that hath now befallen me, "was brought about thrô your great Conduct and Prowess, as I know very well, and "so do all that hear me at this time. Sir, I pray drink with me. And with that he reach'd him a Flagon of Wine, of which himself had drank just before, and when Sr. John had drank and deliver'd the Drink to another, the Earl added, "Sr. John, next "to God Almighty and his Grace, I ought to be most thankfull to you, and do here-"by own my self obliged to you above any other Mortal Man. And at that instant came up to them the Lord Oliver Clisson, very much chafed and enflamed with his continual Action in the Fight, and the long pursuit of his Enemies; so that he had much ado to return again with his Men in any time, he was so extream weary; but he brought back with him many rich Prisoners. And now he alighted and came to the Earl of Monford, and refreshed himself and began to unarm, and had a Chirurgeon called to dress his Eye; when there came up to the Earl two Knights and two Heralds, who had been to view the Field, and to search among the Dead Bodies, if so they might find the Body of Sr. Charles of Blois, whether he was Dead or no. These Heralds spake aloud to the Duke, "Sir, God give you Joy of your Dukedom of Bretagne; for we have seen your Adversary Sr. Charles of Blois lying dead upon the Earth. At that the Earl of Monford rose up from his Chair and said, he would go and view him, for he had as lief see him Dead as Alive; and so he went thither with the Knights who were about him. Being come to the place, where he lay cover'd with a Shield, he caused his Shield to be taken off, and then beheld him with much Compassion, and having look'd stedfastly on him a while, he burst out in these Words, "Ah! Sr. Charles, my Fair Cousin, by your indiscreet Obstinacy how many E-"vils have fell out in Bretagne? And yet so God help me, as I am sorry at my Heart "to find you in this Condition! But now it is past Remedy. And with that he began to weep over him; not that he was not well satisfied with the Victory, he had so hardly obtained, but that this cruel and costly Decision of his Quarrel did much affect his Generous Mind, considering his own Case might have been the same. But Sr. John Chandos quickly drew him out of this melancholy and unseasonable Humour, saying, "Sir, pray come away, and thank God for this fair Adventure thus happily fallen to "You: For without the Death of this Man, you could never have enjoyed your Inhe-

An. Dom. 1364. An. Regni Angliæ XXXVIII.

"ritance of Bretagne; and perhaps he would have been content to have found You "here in his ſtead. Then the Earl gave order that the Corps of his Couſin Sr. Charles of Blois ſhould the next Day be conveyed in Great State to Guerande a City of Bretagne, where he was honourably interred, as he was well worthy: For he was a moſt Noble, Courteous and Valiant Knight; ſo that a while after he obtain'd the Reputation of a Saint, being reported to have done many Miracles after his Death, whatever Bloodſhed he occaſion'd in his Life-time. But 'tis a Miſtake of Froiſard's, [z] where he ſays how he was Canonized for a Saint by Pope Urban V. When as the Truth is, that thô indeed he had ſome ſuch Matter in his Mind, and there are [a] extant Letters of his to John Duke of Bretagne to that Purpoſe; yet when he underſtood, that by the manner of his Death he was not to be look'd on as a Martyr; he was very angry with thoſe, who preſum'd without the Approbation of the Apoſtolick See to give ſuch Honours unto his Memory, and by his Letters to the Biſhops of Bretagne, enjoyned them in their ſeveral Diœceſes to prohibit, that any ſuch thing be done for the future. Dat. apud Montem Flaſconem XVII Kalen. Octobris Anno Pontificat. VI. Which agrees with the Year of our Lord 1368, being the Fourth Year after his Death.

[z] Froiſ. c. 226. ad fin.

[a] Tom. 6. Ep. ſecr. p. 160. Vid. Odor. Rainal. ad an. 1368. §. 11.

XI. Now when all the Dead were ſpoiled, and the Engliſhmen were all returned from the Chace, the whole Army drew off to their former Camp, and unarmed themſelves, and took their eaſe, having firſt ſet a good Watch, and ſecured their Priſoners, and cauſed the Wounded to be well dreſſed. On the Monday in the Morning the Earl of Monford cauſed Proclamation to be made to the Citizens of Rennes, and all the Towns and Villages thereabout, that he would moſt inviolably grant them a Truce for Three Days following; whereby they might be emboldened to come forth, and gather up the Dead Bodies, and bury them in Holy Ground; which Chriſtianlike Proclamation was both well accepted, and alſo generally prepar'd the Hearts of the People in his behalf. Then the Earl return'd to his Siege before Auray, ſaying, that he would not ſtir thence, till he was Maſter of the Place: And ſoon after it yielded unto him.

The mean while Fame was very buſie in carrying tidings abroad into Divers Countries; that the Earl of Monford by the Aſſiſtance and Conduct of the Engliſhmen had won the Day againſt Sr. Charles of Blois, and diſcomfited, ſlain, or taken all the Cavalry of Bretagne; ſuch as were againſt him. The Lord John Chandos eſpecially had great Renown every where; for all manner of People, Lords, Knights, and Eſquires, as well Foes as Friends, that had been preſent in the Field, agreed together in acknowledging, that chiefly by his Conduct and Great Valour his ſide had got the better.

But at this News all the Friends and Aſſiſtants of Charles of Blois were extreamly caſt down; and eſpecially the French King; for this Loſs concerned him very nearly, as well becauſe of the Death of his Kinſman, Sr. Charles, as alſo becauſe many of the beſt Knights of his Realm were either there ſlain, or taken; as Sr. Bertram of Clequin, whom he highly favoured, and the Earls of Auxerre and Joigny, and all the Barons of Bretagne, none excepted. Wherefore preſently he ſent his Brother Lewis Duke of Anjou, to the Marches of Bretagne, to animate the Country, which was utterly dejected and caſt down with this great blow; and alſo to comfort the Dutcheſs of Bretagne (as ſhe was called) Relict of the Lord Charles, who took on ſo extreamly for the Death of her Husband, that it was a great Pity to behold her comfortleſs Condition. The Duke of Anjou had newly Married a Daughter of hers, and therefore thought himſelf the more ſtrongly engag'd to this Office: And indeed he promis'd faithfully to afford unto all the Good Cities and Caſtles in Bretagne, his beſt Counſel, Comfort, and Aſſiſtance in all Caſes; whereby the Poor Afflicted Lady, whom he called Mother, and all the Country, that held for her, had for ſome while a little Confidence yet to ſee better times: Till the French King to avoid worſe Inconveniences, took other Meaſures, as we ſhall ſee hereafter. The Earl of Monford wrote the News of this Victory to his Father-in-Law, King Edward of England, five days after the Battle was ended. His Letters bearing Date from before Auray, the Fourth of October, were ſhortly after brought unto the King, then at Dover, by a Purſuivant at Arms; who had been in the Battle: And the King was ſo well pleas'd with the News, that immediately in reward thereof he [b] made him an Herald at Arms by the Name of Windeſor. But it will not be amiſs briefly to declare the Occaſion, why King Edward was then at Dover.

[b] Froiſ. ibid. Aſhmole p. 703.

XII. About Three Years before, there began a Treaty concerning a Marriage between Prince Edmund of Langley Earl of Cambridge, King Edward's Fifth Son, and the the Lady Margaret, Daughter of Earl Lewis of Flanders. To which Match the said Earl had lately given his Consent, on Condition there might be a Dispensation obtain'd from Pope [c] Urban V, because of their Proximity of Blood: And so a Contract was made between the Parties. And on this account the Duke of Lancaster and Earl Edmund, his Brother, had lately passed over the Sea into Flanders, with many Knights and Esquires in their Company, to visit Earl Lewis, of whom they were received very Honourably, and with special Tokens of Peace and Love. Insomuch that upon their Return, the Earl of Flanders accompanied them to Calais, where they took the Sea all together, and Landed at Dover; where at that time the King was with certain of his Council ready to receive them, and to Treat further with the Earl of Flanders about the Consummation of the foresaid Affair. This was the occasion of the Kings being there at that time, when the foremention'd Pursuivant came and brought him the News of the Victory near Auray. Whereat the King was wonderfully pleased, and all the Court; the Earl of Flanders being no less glad, than any of them, because of the Advancement of his Cousin German, the Earl of Monford, which must needs happen thereby. Thus King Edward tarried with the Earl of Flanders at Dover, for the space of Three Days; which were spent in Royal Feastings and Princely Recreations. And then Matters, concerning which they met being adjusted, He took his solemn leave of the King, and sailed back for Flanders, being attended to Bruges by the Duke of Lancaster, and Earl Edmund, his Brother. But yet this Intended Match was soon after [d] broke off by the French Kings envious Policy, he craftily hindring the Pope from granting a Dispensation, and then he never left Courting the Earl of Flanders, till he had given his Daughter in Marriage to that Kings Brother, Philip Duke of Burgundy. Notwithstanding which it appears, [e] that the Year following, Sr. Nicolas Tamworth Knight, and John Wyn Esquire, were sent by King Edward to all the Nobles, and other his Friends beyond the Seas; to sollicit their Help for expelling those Strangers, who had invaded the Lands of Burgundy, Nivers, and Reth, of Right belonging to the Countess of Flanders and her Son; which were to return unto Edmund Earl of Cambridge, and to the Dutchess of Burgundy, Daughter to the same Earl of Flanders, in regard of that Matrimonial Contract made betwixt them; as the Record doth manifest.

AN. DOM. 1364. An. Regni Angliæ XXXVIII.

[c] Rot. Franc. 38. Ed. 3. m. 8. Walsing. hist. p. 128. n. 40. Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 154. Froiss. c. 227.

[d] Walsing. hist. p. 128. n. 40.

[e] Rot. Franc. 39. Ed. 3. m 9. Vid. Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 154.

XIII. This Year on the Feast of All-Saints [f] there was fought a great Battle on the Plains of Turkey, between the Christians and Pagans, where the Christians after a long and doubtfull Fight obtain'd a Bloody and Cadmean Victory. For on their side there fell the Great Master of the Hospital of Rhodes, and one or two Kings, and of the meaner sort to the Number of 5210: But of the Infidels there were slain more than 40000 of their Men of Arms, besides an incredible Number of the Common Souldiers. The Chief Captains of the Heathens, were the Soldan of Babylon, and the King of Turkey, Kinstut, or Keystut, the King of Lithuania, Janibech King of Tartary, King Baldoc, and King Belmarine; three whereof were slain in the Field, and the King of Lithuania's Son [g] was taken Prisoner by Thomas Beauchamp, Earl of Warwick, who afterwards brought him into England, and made him a Christian, calling him Thomas, after his own Name, as being at that time his Godfather. But whereas Walsingham says, that among other Christian Princes, I----- King of Hungary was slain at this Fight; there is a double mistake; for it should be written L in stead of I, that King's Name being Lewis; and it is most certain, that he lived many Years after, [h] as will appear to any that shall enquire.

[f] Walsingh. hist. p. 174. n. 20.

[g] Dugd. 1 Vol. Bar. p. 233. & id. in Warwickshire p. 317. a.

[h] Vid. Odor. Rainal. Contin. Baron. Tom. XVI & Tom. XVII.

CHAPTER the TVVELFTH.

The CONTENTS.

I. John of Monford, having taken Auray, goes before Jugon, which yields; thence to Dinant, which at last yields also; then he invests Quimpercorentin. II. The Prisoners taken in the Battle of Auray, secur'd for fear of new stirs, while Earl Monford takes in all Bretagne. III. The French King perswaded to admit John of Monford for true true Duke of Bretagne, ſends unto him to try him; He has King Edwards leave to hold the Dukedom of France, and ſo Bretagne is ſettled in Peace, and John Monford, ſirnamed the Valiant, own'd Duke thereof. IV. Peace made between the French King, and the King of Navarre, by Vertue whereof the Captal of Buſche is acquitted his Priſon; the French King endeavours to win him, but in vain. V. The Death of the Lord Lewis of Navarre. VI. A Parliament at Weſtminſter. VII. King Edwards Buildings; and the Foundation of Kings-Hall in Cambridge, now called Trinity College. VIII. The Pope Demands the Annual Fee, which King John of England engag'd to pay to the Apoſtolick Chamber, and orders King Edward upon his refuſal, to be cited to anſwer the Contempt at the Court of Rome. Which Matter, the King refers to his Parliament. IX. The Lady Iſabella, Daughter to King Edward, given in Marriage to the Lord Ingleram de Coucy. X. The King puniſhes the Lord Chief Juſtice and others, his Juſtices, for Male-Adminiſtration of the Laws. XI. The King of Cyprus takes Alexandria in Egypt; but is forced to leave it again. XII. Dr. Thoroton twice corrected. XIII. The Earl of Warwick returns into England with the King of Lithuania's Son, his Priſoner, whom he makes a Chriſtian, and ſtands his Godfather, naming him Thomas, after his own Name.

An. Dom. 1365. An. Regni Angliæ XXXIX.

I. BEing now enter'd upon the Thirty Ninth Year of King Edwards Reign, it will be neceſſary for the underſtanding of what follows, to ſet down an account of Matters, which happen'd in the cloſe of the foregoing Year, namely after the Battle of Auray. And we ſhall find, that the Earl of Monford upon that notable and entire Victory, return'd [a] unto the Siege of that Fortreſs, which he follow'd with greater application than ever before, and made a Vow not to Riſe thence, till he had the Beſieged at his Devotion. And ſurely thoſe within were much diminiſhed in Courage, thô not in Proviſion; for they had loſt in the late Battle their Captain, Eſquire Henry of Tintineac, together with Fourty Men of Arms, the very Flower of all their Garriſon: Wherefore ſince now they could not expect any further Succour, they at laſt reſolved to yield, while they might hope to obtain tolerable Conditions; and ſo they began to enter a Parly with the Earl to that purpoſe. The Earl was not willing to loſe much more time here, and beſides he knew not, how other Places ſtood affected to him, and he had a mind to try the Country, while the Terrour of his Arms was freſh; on which Conſiderations he received them to Mercy, and gave them leave to depart with their Goods; for they would not yet own his Authority; or ſubmit to his Government. Having now placed in Auray a good Garriſon of his own, he rode on with his Army, which encreaſed daily; Men of Arms and Archers continually flocking to him. Nay the very Bretons, who before rejected his Yoke, being now won by the Reputation of his Sword, came in to him apace, eſpecially the Bretons Bretonant, or thoſe of Lower Bretagne.

[a] Froiſ. c. 228. fol. 128.

First he marched toward the Higher Bretagne however, and lay down before the Town of Jugon, which had been in the Hands of Sr. Charles of Blois almoſt 22 Years; for it was taken by him [b] in the latter end of the Year 1342, as we have ſhew'd in due place. Here he tarried Three Days, in which time he gave two terrible Aſſaults, wherein many were hurt on both ſides: But when the Beſieged ſaw with what Vigour they were attacked, and that there was no proſpect of any Succour, they thought not to drive Matters to the extreamity; but on the Third Day accepted the Earl of Monford for their Right and Lawfull Lord, and ſo without any further Tryal open'd their Gates unto him, and ſware to continue his true Liegemen for ever. Then the Earl removed all the Officers in the Town, and ſet new Ones in their Places; and ſo proceeded, and went and ſat down before Dinant, where he lay'd a Siege, which laſted far in the Winter, to his great Inconvenience. For Dinant was of it ſelf a ſtrong Town, well fortifi'd, and ſufficiently furniſhed with Proviſion and Men of War: Beſides the Duke of Anjou by his Letters exhorted the Inhabitants and Garriſon to hold out a while boldly, promiſing to ſend them ſpeedy Relief. Theſe Words of the Duke animated them to endure ſo long, and to undergo ſo many hard Aſſaults; but when they ſaw their Proviſions almoſt ſpent, and not the leaſt appearance of any Duke of Anjou to relieve them, they requeſted to be admitted to the Earl's Peace: And he for his part freely granted their Requeſt; for he demanded nothing elſe of them, but that they ſhould acknowledge him for their Lord, and ſo they did; and he entred the Place with great Solemnity, and there received all their Oaths and Homages. Soon after he marched to Quimpercorentin, which he preſently began to Inveſt, ſaying, He would not ſtir, ſtir, till he was Maſter of that City; to which intent he had brought thither ſeveral great Engines from Vannes and Dinant. AN. DOM. 1365.

[b] Vid. Lib. 1. c. 20. §. 17. p. 266.

II. Now all this while the Lord John Chandos, and other Engliſhmen and Bretons on Monford's ſide, who had taken any Priſoners at the Battle of Auray, had all firmly agreed on good deliberation to keep them ſtill in their Hands, and by no means to put them to any Ranſom, till the Earl had ſubdued all his Enemies; leſt they ſhould raiſe New Forces, and put him to any more trouble. Wherefore they ſent all their Priſoners into the parts of Poicton and Sainctogne, to Rochelle and Bourdeaux, there to be ſecur'd; the mean while the Bretons of Monford's ſide on one hand, and the Engliſh on the other, rode about and reduced all Bretagne. For [c] during the Siege before Quimpercorentin, which was ſufficiently alarum'd with Aſſaults and Batteries, ſeveral Detachments being daily ſent from the Army, went ravaging all over the Country, and left nothing, which they took not away with them, except it were too hot, or too cold, or too Heavy for them, to uſe Froiſard's expreſſion. But the Spoil was only done among thoſe, who refus'd to yield to Monford; thoſe, who acknowledg'd him, were taken into his Protection. An. Regni Angliæ XXXIX.

[c] Froiſ. c. 229. fol. 124. b.

III. Of all this the French King was well informed, and frequently adviſed how he ſhould bear himſelf, as to this Matter: For it was plain, that at this time the Country of Bretagne, and the Lord Charles of Blois his Widow were in hard Circumſtances; and yet he ſaw, he could not well apply a Remedy, without raiſing a Royal Army, and thereupon engaging in a War with England, for the ſake of Bretagne. But this he was adviſ'd by no means to do; and after many great and weighty Conſiderations and Reaſons canvas'd on both ſides, this was the opinion of his Council, "Sir, You have "a long while ſuſtain'd the Quarrel of your late Couſin, the Lord Charles of Blois, "as did alſo the King, your Father, and King Philip, your Grandfather, who gave "him in Marriage the Dutcheſs of Bretagne: Whereby innumerable Miſchiefs, and "much Deſolation and Bloodſhed have ſince befell in Bretagne, and the Countries "adjacent. But Sir, now it is ſo; that your Couſin, the Lord Charles, in keeping "and maintaining his Right to Bretagne, hath loſt his Life, and many a Gallant Soul "with him: And on this ſide the Sea there is none, either to proſecute his Claim, "or to make a juſt War upon Monford for this Dukedom: For his two Sons, the "next Heirs, John and Guy, are both Priſoners in England. And Sir, You hear "daily, how he Conquers and takes in Towns and Caſtles, and reckons them his "own true Inheritance. So that at this rate You may at laſt loſe your Right of Ho"mage, that You ought to have of Bretagne; which is a Matter both of Honour and "Advantage to your Realm; wherefore it would become your Majeſties Wiſdom, to "be very jealous of loſing that. For if this Earl of Monford once become Liege"man to King Edward, and hold the Dutchy of Bretagne of the King of England, "as his Father once did, You cannot recover it again without great War and Conten"tion between You and the ſaid King; whereas at this time (God be thanked) there is "perfect Peace and Amity; which we would not adviſe Your Majeſty to break by any "means. But Sir, We think, all things conſider'd and well weigh'd, that it were good "for Your Majeſty to ſend certain Meſſengers in order to a Treaty between You and "the Earl of Monford, and to try, how far he is inclinable to agree with the Lord "Charles his Relict, and whether he will be content to hold that Dutchy of your "Majeſty or no: And Sir, as your Meſſengers feel him diſpos'd in theſe things, you "may take your Meaſures accordingly. For if the worſt come, 'tis better for him "to remain Duke of Bretagne, provided, he will hold of Your Majeſty, and do un"to you all thoſe ſervices, that a ſubject ought to do unto his Sovereign Lord, than "that you ſhould endanger loſing all, by exaſperating his Mind too far, before you "have made Tryal of Milder ways. This ſafe Advice agreed beſt with the Diſpoſition of that Prince, and ſo he appointed the Lord John de Craon Archbiſhop of Rennes, and the Lord of Craon, his Couſin, with the Lord Boucicquault Marſhal of France, to go to Quimpercorentin to Treat and Diſcourſe with the Earl of Monford and his Council on the Premiſes. So theſe Three Lords, being furniſh'd with full Inſtructions, how to behave themſelves, rode from Paris, till they came to the Siege, where the Engliſh and Bretons lay, before Quimpercorentin; and preſently they gave notice to the Earl, that they came unto him, as Meſſengers from the King of France. The Earl of Monford, with the Lord John Chandos and his Council, received them joyfully, and gave them audience preſently: At which time the French Commiſſioners declared the ſubſtance of their Buſineſs. When the Earl of Monford had fully underſtood what they had to ſay, he told them he would take Advice in the matter, and return them

An. Dom. 1365. An. Regni Angliæ XXXIX.

them his anſwer on ſuch a day: Till which time the Three Deputies went and lay at Rennes. Then ſtreight the Earl ſent William Lord Latimer into England, to certifie the King of the French Kings Propoſals, and to crave his opinion and direction in the Matter. King Edward, being rightly informed of the whole Affair, ſaid, "How he "would adviſe the Earl of Monford to accept of a Peace, on Condition he might ever "after remain Duke of Bretagne, and alſo thought good, that he ſhould ſhew him- "ſelf inclinable to yield ſome Honourable Allowance to the Lady, who called her ſelf "Dutcheſs, Widow of the Lord Charles of Blois, and that he ſhould aſſign her ſome "handſom Penſion, or yearly Revenue to be payable out of ſome certain place, where "it ſhould beſt pleaſe her. And he granted alſo, that he might do to the King of "France for that Dutchy, as other Dukes his Predeceſſors have done heretofore. This anſwer the Lord Latimer brought back again to the Earl, who having read the King, his Father-in-Law's Letters, and underſtood his pleaſure, as to the Premiſes, by advice of his whole Council, ſent preſently for the French Commiſſioners to come before him; at which time he gave them a very agreeable Anſwer. But it was ſaid to them expreſly, "that the Earl of Monford would by no means lay down his Claim to "the Dutchy of Bretagne, but that he would remain Duke thereof, and ſo be called "while he lived. Notwithſtanding, whereas the French King would have him peace- "ably to open his Cities, Towns, and Caſtles, and to yield Faith and Homage unto "Him, and to do all other Rights and Services, which the Dukes of Bretagne have "done in times paſt, all this the Earl is well content to do, nay he ſhall gladly ac- "knowledge the French King for his Natural Lord, and render unto him his Homage "and Service in preſence of the Peers of France: And further he makes Offer to give "Friendly Aid, Help, and Comfort to his Couſin, Relict of the Lord Charles deceaſed, "and moreover, to uſe his Intereſt to deliver his Couſins, her Sons, out of Priſon in "England. This Anſwer extreamly ſatisfied the French Lords, and they took a cer- tain day, whereon theſe Matters were to be fully Ratified and Concluded at Guerande; and with that the City of Quimpercorentin, and all Bretagne was to be entirely his. Accordingly the French Deputies ſent away to the Duke of Anjou, who was then at Angiers, having from the King of France full Commiſſion and Authority, to conclude this Treaty, or to lay it aſide at his pleaſure. When the Duke of Anjou ſaw the Conditions, he had a long Deliberation, for thô he found the Earls Propoſals extreamly reaſonable, conſidering the juncture of Affairs, yet he remembred he had promis'd other things to the Dutcheſs his Mother-in-Law; which notwithſtanding he now ſaw to be exceeding difficult for him to perform. But at laſt he was wholly overrul'd to accept and Ratifie the Treaty, and the two Knights, that were ſent to him returned back to Rennes with his Anſwer engroſſed and ſealed. Then the Meſſengers of the French King, and the Deputies of Earl Monford went and met [d] at Guerande, where ſoon after the Peace was fully made and compleated on both Hands, and Quimpercorentin was forthwith yielded up, and all other Places, that had hitherto held out againſt the Earl of Monford, and He remain'd thenceforth True Duke of Bretagne on this Condition; "that if he ſhould leave no Children of his Body lawfully begotten, then the Duke- "dom ſhould return to the Children of the Lord Charles of Blois; and alſo that the "Lady Jane, late Wife to the ſaid Lord Charles deceaſed, ſhould be Counteſs of Pen- "tebria, or Ponthieure; which Lands were of the Yearly Value of 20000 Franks: "And alſo that Duke John ſhould come into France, whenever it ſhould pleaſe the "King to ſend for him, and render unto him his Homage for the Dutchy of Bretagne. For the ſurer Confirmation of all which, there were ſundry Charters and Inſtruments interchangeably Engroſſed and Sealed on both Parts. Thus did John Earl of Monford at length obtain the Dukedom, he had ſo long contended for, and henceforth remain'd Duke thereof without any contradiction; till other Wars broke out again, as We ſhall ſhew in due place.

[d] Mezeray, &c.

When this Concord and Agreement was made between King Charles of France, and the Duke of Bretagne, the ſaid King, who was very Politick, and deſired greatly to win to his ſide as many brave Souldiers, as he could, reſtored unto the Gallant Young Lord Oliver Cliſſon, what his Grandfather, King Philip had taken from him, when he ſo cruelly and unjuſtly put his Father to Death, as we have [e] ſhew'd in the XVIII Year of King Edward's Reign. After which time this brave Lord Cliſſon, did by his Vertuous behaviour ſo win upon King Charles by degrees, that at laſt nothing of moment could be done in France without him, and he might e'n do, whatever he pleaſed: Which liberty however he uſed to no Mans hurt; but only he utterly forgot his old Friends the Engliſh, and ever after prov'd a true Frenchman.

[e] Vid. Lib. 1. c. 22. §. 8. p. 299

And

And thus at last was the Fertile Country of Bretagne allowed a most pleasing Respit after those long and Cruel Wars, which had almost emptied her Veins of the best Blood in France. All the Natives were extream glad at this happy Change, and received their New Lord with an universal Respect and unfeigned Joy; he taking Faith and Homage of all the Cities, Towns, and Castles, and of all the Prelates, Barons, Knights and Gentlemen of the whole Country. Shortly after his Dear Lady, Mary of England, Fourth Daughter of King Edward, was honourably convey'd over the Seas into Bretagne; and there again the Marriage Rites were solemnly renewed with Feastings and Publick Rejoycing in the City of Nantes; and in process of Time he had Issue by this Lady, John Duke of Bretagne, called the Sage (Father of Peter and Francis, both Dukes of Bretagne, who died without issue) Richard Earl of Estampes, and Arthur Duke of Bretagne also, the Third of that Name. And thus We shall leave this Valiant Duke in the full Enjoyment of his Good Fortune, till the Wars between France and England being renewed, shall give us an Occasion to bring him upon the Stage again. AN. DOM. 1365. An. Regni Angliæ XXXIX. [f] Sandford's Geneal. Hist. P. 179.

IV. Nor was there only a full Peace established thus in Bretagne, but about the same time also Queen Jane, Aunt to the King of Navarre, and Queen Blanch his Sister, endeavoured so earnestly, that there was at last a Peace struck up between the French King and the King of Navarre, chiefly by the prudent and dextrous Menagement of that renowned Lord the Captal of Busche, who shew'd himself so diligent in Composing of Differences between these two Princes, that in Consideration thereof King Charles wholly discharged him of all Obligations, which lay upon him as to his Ransom; for till now, thô at Liberty, he was but a Prisoner upon Parole. And indeed the French King began to shew himself wonderfull Gracious and Favourable to the Captal, and gave him freely the fair Castle of Damemarie in Brie with all its Appurtenances, which Gift was more than 3000 Franks per annum. And by this seeming Generosity of that subtle Prince, the Candid Gentleman was easily won to do Homage to the French King, and to become his Liegeman, thô only for that Castle; wherewith King Charles was wonderfully pleased, for he had an extream Value for all Men of Worth, but especially he prized the Service of so Famous a Knight, as the Captal was. But that Service lasted not over long; For when the Captal was returned into the Principality of Aquitaine, and came before the Prince of Wales, who had been fully informed of all that was done, the Prince took him aside, and chid him very smartly, asking him, "how he could acquit himself Loyally and truly to two several Lords of different In-"terests, and whether it was agreeable for a Man of Honour to taint his Mind with "Covetousness, and to sell his service for Bribes, and indeed but to accept of Lands, "lying in France, where he knew himself to be neither sincerely loved, nor duly re-"spected? When the Captal heard these words, and saw, how he had unawares incurred an evil Opinion from his Natural Lord, the Prince, he was very much ashamed, and began to excuse himself, saying, "Sir, I am not so strictly bound to the French King, "but that I may easily undo again all that I have done or promised; since I acted on-"ly conditionally, if it might so please you, my Lord, and the King your Father; to "whom the French King knows me bound by Ties far more strong and more early. Then the Prince gave him his Hand, and banished all evil thoughts of him; and the Captal presently sent into France to the King, an Esquire of his, by whom he flung up all that had been given him, and renounced to hold any thing of him, whereby he might be tempted to divide the Service, which he ow'd entirely to the Prince of Aquitaine. He himself tarried still with the Prince at Bourdeaux, for he was wholly acquitted of his Imprisonment by Vertue of the Articles of the Peace made between the Kings of France and Navarre: By which Articles also the Cities of Mante and Meulan were to remain for ever with the King of France, in Consideration whereof the King of Navarre had other Castles in Normandy restored unto him as an Equivalent.

V. About this time the Young Lord Lewis of Navarre took his leave of France, and went into Lombardy, having taken of the French King at his Departure 60000 Franks in lieu of certain Castles in Normandy, which he deliver'd up: What his business was in Lombardy I do not find; for 'tis certain, [g] Froisard is in a mistake, who says, he went thither to Marry the Queen of Naples, and that accordingly he did Marry the said Queen; when as we are [h] infallibly assured, that Joan, Queen of Sicily and Naples was at this time, and 3 Years before, and many Years after, the Wife of James, the Young King of Majorica. However Prince Lewis of Navarre died soon after, without any Issue of his Body; thô he left behind him the Reputation of having been all along a moſt Valiant, Courteous, and Noble Knight, which is a Character, that Worthy Souls eſteem beyond Life or Children.

[g] Froiss. c. 229.

[h] Vid. Odor. ad an. 1362. §. 10. & 11.

An. Dom. 1365. An. Regni Angliæ XXXIX.

VI. On the [i] Fourth of December in the Cloſe of the foregoing Year, King Edward ſent forth his Summons for the Parliament to meet him at Weſtminſter on the Octaves of St. Hilary following. On which day being aſſembled accordingly, Proclamation was made in Weſtminſter-Hall, that for that Day they might depart, but they were to return the next Morning into the Painted Chamber, there to hear the Kings Pleaſure. At which time Dr. Simon Langham Biſhop of Ely, and Lord Chancellor of England began in a long and ſolemn Harangue to open the Parliament, taking for his Theme that of the Royal Prophet, Vera juſtitia, &c. Faithfull Judgement doth adorn the King's ſeat: "From whence he took occaſion to diſcourſe of the King, his Maſter, "and of the great Proweſs and manifold Victories, which by Gods Aſſiſtance he had "Atchieved in his Youth; not forgetting the conſtant and dutifull Goodwill, and "ready concurrence of the King's Loyal Subjects, towards the Furtherance of thoſe his "Important Undertakings: For which, as now the King did by him return them his "hearty thanks; ſo he let them know, that on his part he was reſolved to ſeek the "Common Peace and Tranquillity of all his People; eſpecially by enforcing a due Ob-"ſervation of all the good and ſound Laws, and by amending ſuch of them, "as were faulty; as alſo by Eſtabliſhing New ones, where Neceſſity ſhould ſo "require.

[i] M.S.Record. Parl.p.95. Sr. Rob.Cotton's Abridgement p.99

Then they proceeded to appoint Receivers and Tryers of Petitions for England, Ireland, Wales, and Scotland; as alſo for Aquitaine, and other foreign Countries and Iſles. That ſame day the King declared with his own Mouth to the Three Eſtates, "how Citations and falſe Suggeſtions were daily made to the Pope, for Matters deter-"minable in his own Court within the Realm, and for procuring Proviſions for Eccle-"ſiaſtical Dignities, to the great Scandal of the Ancient Laws, to the Derogation of "his Crown, to the daily conveying away of the Treaſure of the Land, to the Dimi-"nution of Eccleſiaſtical Livings, to the Withdrawing of Divine Service, Alms, Ho-"ſpitality, and other Good and Acceptable Works, and to the daily encreaſe of all "Miſchiefs; wherefore no Perſon, &c. And the King by his own Mouth requireth "them, according to the old Statute heretofore, to provide a ſufficient Remedy. Where-upon (beſides two former Acts made againſt the Popes Proviſions, the One [k] 25 Ed. 3. and the other 27 Ed. 3. as may be ſeen in the Statute-Book) another Act to the ſame purpoſe was made now; which agreeth in all things with the Print, c. 1, 2, 3, 4. Only in the Record are more biting Words, a Myſtery (ſays Sr. Robert Cotton) not known of All Men.

[k] Vid. Statute-Book ad an. 25. Ed. 3. ad an. 27. Ed. 3. & ad an. 38. Ed. 3.

On the Saturday after, being the Converſion of St. Paul, or the 25 of January, the Biſhops, Lords, and Commons, brought into the Parliament the foreſaid Act, and another touching the Preſervation of the Liberties of the Bodies of Prelates, and other Lords of the Parliament.

Then follow the Petitions of the Commons with their Anſwers.

That no Victuals, or Corn be carried from the North-Marches into Scotland, and that no Protection or Paſs-port be granted to any Scot to paſs thrô the Realm. The King will provide therefore. That the Fines of the Chancery may be, as they were at the Kings Coronation. The King would have them to be reaſonable for the eaſe of his People. That 3 s. 4 d. laid upon every Sack of Wooll at Calais, and all other unreaſonable Impoſitions may ceaſe. The King willeth, that all unreaſonable Impoſitions ſhould ceaſe.

It is agreed, that One Staple be at [l] Melcomb, and another at Ipſewich, and that all Merchants, and others, for their Eaſe may ſhip Woolls at Lewes, where the Cuſtomers of Chicheſter ſhall take the Cuſtoms, and the Cuſtomers of Yarmouth ſhall take in like manner at Lynn.

[l] Melcomb Regis in Dorcetſh.

As for the Statutes made in this Parliament, I ſhall refer thoſe, who deſire to Inſpect them, to the Statute-Books in Print, eſpecially becauſe thoſe of this Year do more exactly agree with the Record. Only for my ſelf I muſt put in this Caution, that whereas in the Record and Statute-Books, this Parliament is rightly fixed to the 38 of Edward the Third; conſidering, that he began not to Reign till the 25 of January, before which time the Parliament ſat; yet I have placed it here, as well becauſe I begin the Year conſtantly with January; as becauſe it was indeed the Thirty Ninth of this Kings Inchoate, before the Parliament was adjourn'd: For on the [m] Seventh of February, after the King in Preſence of the Lords and Commons, had given his Royal Aſſent to all the Premiſes, He gave his Thanks to the Three Eſtates, and ſo gave them leave to depart.

[m] Ità M.S. Record. Parl, ſed St. Rob. Colton's Abridgement Seventeenth legit.

VII. Now

VII. Now is King Edward said to have finiſhed all his Wars; for he had full Peace with France and Scotland, and all the Quarrels about the Dukedom of Bretagne were ended, and Aquitaine gladly embraced the Government of his Son, Prince Edward; and his other Son, the Duke of Clarence had brought Ireland to a very good Settlement. Wherefore thô in the Midſt of his Wars he always would find leiſure to exerciſe Actions of Devotion, Piety, and Charity; yet now he more ſeriouſly apply'd himſelf, and in a manner wholly Dedicated his time, to ſuch Matters, as in his Buildings at Windſor Caſtle, Queenborough Caſtle and Town, St. Stephen's Chappel at Weſtminſter, Aberconney in Wales, Henley, and Eaſt-Hamſtead, and his Royal Foundation of Kings-Hall in Cambridge; which being afterwards augmented with the Addition of Two or Three other adjoyning Foundations, was by King Henry VIII, named Trinity-College; and laſtly, by the Beautiſull Acceſſion of a Magnificent Building, called the Library, is rendred now the moſt Auguſt and Famous Structure, that ever the Chriſtian World hath ſeen Dedicated to the Studies of good Letters. Which College is no leſs adorned with thoſe Illuſtrious Lights of Learning, that have continually ſhined there: Nor have their Beams been confined to any Limits, but have ſpread themſelves like the Rays of the Sun, over Earth and Heaven, and enlightned the Church and State, and the whole Univerſe. 'Tis now happily Govern'd by the Reverend Doctor John Montagu, Brother to the Earl of Sandwich, a Perſon nō leſs conſpicuous for his Eminent Parts and Vertues, than for his Birth and Quality. AN. DOM. 1365. An. Regni Angliæ XXXIX.

VIII. This Flouriſhing Condition of our King Edward, put the Pope, it ſeems in mind of ſome Old Debts, which he pretended to be due from England to the Apoſtolick See, for the Kingdom of England, and Lordſhip of Ireland; which King John promiſed to hold of the Church as a Fee Farm for ever. His [n] Letters bear Date at Avignon Idibus Junii, An°. Pontif. III; in which Letters it appears, that the Sum demanded was but 1000 Marks ſterling per annum, and that the laſt payment was made by this King on the Seventh of July, An°. Dom. 1333, but had ever ſince by reaſon of the Wars been diſcontinued: So that at this time there was due no leſs than 32000 Marks to the Apoſtolick Chamber. Thô in good truth, ſaving the Authority of theſe Letters, I could never find, [o] that ever this Annual Penſion was paid to Rome, ſince the Days of King John. But in the next Year we ſhall ſee, how King Edward now reſented this Matter: For the Pope had beſides his foreſaid Letters, empower'd his Nuntio, John Abbot of the Monaſtery St[i] Bavonis Gaudenſis of the Order of St. Benedict in the Diœceſe of Tournay, by proceſs to cite the King unto his Court to anſwer for his Default, on Condition he ſhould refuſe to pay the Arrears. But the effect of this daring Summons we ſhall ſee in the Parliament of the next Year.

[n] Extant apud Odor. Rainald. ad hunc an. §. 13

[o] Vid. John Speed in the Reign of King John p. 500. §. 48. & 49.

IX. At this time King Edward [p] gave his Daughter the Lady Iſabella in Marriage to the Young Lord Ingelram de Guiſnes; the Rites being performed with Great Pomp and Splendor at the Famous Caſtle of Windſor. The ſaid Lord was by Birth a Baron both of England and of France; and his Titles were Lord and Baron of Coucy, of Oiſey and Mount-Mirabel, of Doüilly, of Beauraine, and of Barques, Earl of Soiſſons and of Nide, and ſome Years after Arch-Duke of Auſtria. Beſides which the King at this time created him Earl of Albemarle, to have and to hold the ſaid Earldom for him, and the Heirs Male of his and her Body for ever. He alſo confirmed unto him the Mannor of Moreholme, the Moieties of the Mannors of Wyerſdale and Aſhton, with the Third Part of the Lordſhip of Whittington in the County of Lancaſter, to him, and to the ſaid Iſabell, and to the Heirs of their Bodies lawfully begotten. I ſay, he confirmed them unto him: For the [q] Author of the Catalogue of Honour miſtakes in ſaying, they were now given him in the name of a Dowry, ſince we find the ſaid Places, or the greateſt part of them did belong unto his Grandfather [r] William de Guiſnes, Lord Coucy. What further Honours he obtain'd, we ſhall ſee next Year; wherefore at this time we ſhall only add this; that the King gave him [s] leave to go over with his Lady into France, declaring, that whatever Children, Male, or Female, they might have between them, thô born beyond Sea, they ſhould enjoy and inherit all Lands deſcendible to them in this Realm, as Freely, as if they were born in England. He bare for his Arms, [t] the Firſt and Fourth Barry of Viverry and Gules, the Second and Third, Gules, A Feſs Argent; and in proceſs of time he was elected into the Moſt Honourable Order of the Garter; of which Grace he was well Worthy.

[p] Pat. 39. Ed. 3. p. 2. m. 8. & Aſhmole p. 669. & Sandford p. 178 & Dugd. p. 761. & Mills Catal. Hon. p. 440. & Knighton p. 2628. n. 40. &c.

[q] Robert Glover Somerſet Herald: ſet forth by Tho. Mills.

[r] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 761.

[s] Dugd. ibid. ex Pat. 39. Ed. 3. p. 2. m. 8.

[t] Mill's Catal. Hon. p. 440. ubi hæc Arma Periſcelidi involuta cernantur.

X. In theſe days King Edward cauſed the Lord Chief Juſtice Sr. Henry Green, and Sr. William Skipworth, another of his Juſtices, to be arreſted and impriſon'd on the account of many notorious Enormities, which he underſtood they had committed a-gainſt Law and Juſtice. Nor could they redeem themſelves from Priſon without refunding to the King many large Sums of Money, which by Injuſtice they had got from others: But for ever after they were ſecluded both their Places and his Favour.

An. Dom. 1365. An. Regni Angliæ XXXIX.

XI. We have frequently heretofore mention'd the great Diligence, which Peter King of Cyprus us'd in travelling to moſt Courts in Europe, in Order to raiſe a Power ſufficient to ſtem the furious Tide of Pagan Inſolence, which threatned a Bloody Inundation to all Chriſtendom. Now therefore being pretty well furniſh'd with Valiant Souldiers of ſeveral Nations, after that by the Pope's means he had made a Peace with Genoa, which had ſome reſentments againſt him, [a] he went from Venice to Rhodes, where he was Magnificently received by the Maſter of the Hoſpital, and whither he had ſent before many Ships laden with Armed Men, and about 500 good Horſes for the War. He had ſome Months before wrote to his own Brother the Prince of Antioch, his Lieutenant in the Kingdom of Cyprus, that having left a ſufficient ſtrength at home, he would by ſuch a time ſend an Army of his Realm of Cyprus to meet him at Rhodes; which was done. For the King had been but a little while in that Iſland; when an Army of Cyprus came thither, namely ſixty ſail, one with another laden with Men of Arms, Arrows, Croſsbows, and other Weapons in good quantity; to which the Maſter of the Hoſpital added an hundred choſen Knights of his Order, and commanded his Gallies to be fitted up. And all the while St. Peter Thomas, Patriarch of Conſtantinople, the Pope's Legate, who had an extraordinary Zeal for the Work, encouraged the King and his Souldiers, and bleſſed them, and pray'd, and preach'd, and ſigned them with the Croſs, and heard Confeſſions, and abſolved and reconciled Sinners; one while labouring in the Kings Council, another while among the Mariners and poor People; now among the Lords and Knights, and the Maſter of Rhodes, and now again with the Common Souldiers in great humility: Now he viſited the ſick, and preſently he fell to pacifying of Rumors; ſometimes he converſed with the Engliſh, ſometimes with the Cypriotes, Venetians, French, Spaniards, and Germans; but always he exhorted to Unity and Charity, to Faith and Courage, and to the War of God: And every Chriſtian Soul in this ſmall Army was by this Holy Legate, a few days before they left Rhodes, admitted to the Sacrament of Gods Body, and ſtrengthned with Divine Power by feeding on their Redeemer, whoſe Croſs they were going to advance.

[a] Philippus è Mazeriis c. 15. &c. in Vitâ Beati Petri Thomæ apud Bolland. Tom. 2. XXIX Januar.

At the time of their Departure from Rhodes, the King in ſecret Council propoſed to invade the Soldan of Babylon, who uſurped the Holy City of Jeruſalem and his Inheritance, not in the Tail, but in the Head, and to Steer his Courſe towards Alexandria; and ſo taking leave of the Grand Maſter, he went on board his Galley, with a Fleet conſiſting of more than an 100 Veſſels of all ſorts, above 10000 good Souldiers, and about 1400 Nobles and Men of Arms, with their Horſes, beſides Mariners. Being come to the Haven of Alexandria, after about an hours reſiſtance made by the Saracens, they gain'd Land, and ſoon after put all their Enemies to flight, and made them retire into the City in great Confuſion; and ſhut their Gates. But their Hearts were ſo loſt, that upon the Chriſtians approach to the Walls, and ſetting fire to their Gates, they fled away towards Grand Cairo, or New-Babylon. Wherefore the City of Alexandria was taken by the Chriſtians on the Fourth of October, 1365, about Nine of the Clock in the Morning; and all the Pagans found therein put to the Sword. But many of theſe Chriſtians, being now ſatiated with ſpoil, began forthwith to cool in their Devotion, and ſo were for leaving the City, now it was rifled, nor could the King of Cyprus, nor the Zealous Legate with all their Endeavours prevail with them to the Contrary; wherefore upon News of the Soldan's Arrival with the Prince of Aſſyria, and a Mighty Army, who were coming to relieve the City, on the Fourth or Fifth day, after he had won it, he was forced to leave it to his great Grief. The occaſion of which diſhonourable Departure is by the Legate in his [x] Letters attributed to the Engliſh, and to their Leader, and by [y] Petrarch to the Tranſalpine Auxiliaries in General; "who he ſays, being always better at Enterpriſing, than "at Compleating, forſook the King in the midſt of a moſt Glorious Work, and be- "cauſe they follow'd him not for Devotion, but for Gain; when they had laden them- "ſelves with ſpoils, went away, and being rendred Maſters of their Greedy deſire, made him fail of his Godly Deſign. The Proſecution of this Matter may be ſeen at large in the foremention'd Philip è Mazeriis, who was himſelf preſent in this Expedition, and alſo in [z] Odoricus Rainaldus: We ſhall only add, that the Engliſhmen and Gaſcogners, who had been at the taking of Alexandria, upon [a] their return into England and

[x] Extant apud Odor. Raynal. ad hunc an. § 20
[y] Petrarch. l. 8. Senil. Ep. 8. & l. 13. Ep. 2.
[z] Odor. Rainal. ad hunc § 18. ad § 22. Vid. Pantaleon. p. 103.
[a] Walſing. hiſt. p. 174. n. 30. & Speed p. 584. § 129.

and Aquitaine, brought many rich pieces of Cloth of Gold, Velvets, and Precious Stones, as witneſſes of their Succeſs in thoſe parts. AN. DOM. 1365. An. Regni Angliæ XXXIX.

XII. It is ſaid by ſome, [b] that John Lord Roos after this Expedition died at Paphos in the Iſland of Cyprus, leaving no Iſſue behind him by his Wife, the Lady Mary de Orrebe: So that his Brother William ſucceeded in his Honours. Thô to ſay the Truth this Lord John was not Born till this Year: For Sr. William Dugdale ſhews, [c] that his Death happen'd about 28 Years after this, viz. in the Seventeenth of Richard the Second; at which time he was but [d] 28 Years of Age.

Notwithſtanding, I grant, that about this time, as [e] Thoroton ſays, there died the Lord Thomas Furnival, Sirnamed the Haſty, leaving no Iſſue behind him; whereupon he was ſucceeded by his Brother William Lord Furnival: Who about 17 Years after died alſo, leaving behind only One Daughter Joan. Her, Sr. Thomas Nevile, Brother to Ralph Earl of Weſtmorland, and Treaſurer of England, taking to Wife, became in her Right, Lord Furnival. But here again I am fain to correct Thoroton's many miſtakes by comparing him [f] with a more accurate and judicious Writer.

XIII. Toward the End of the Year, the Noble and Valiant Hero, Thomas Earl of Warwick, who had been in the Parts of Pruſſia, [g] return'd into England with his Retinue, and the Voluntiers, who accompanied him, beſides the King of Lithuania's Son, whom as we ſhew'd before, he cauſed to be baptized, and called after his own Name, Thomas; he himſelf at that time ſtanding for his Godfather. Soon after that [h] the ſaid Earl of Warwick was ſent by the King upon ſpecial Service into Flanders, having an allowance of 7 Marks and an half per diem; at which time alſo he had his Commiſſion for Earl Marſhal of England renewed.

[b] Thoroton's Nottinghamſhire p. 116.
[c] Dugd. 1 Vol. Baron. p. 551.
[d] For, 18 years old An°. 7. Rich. 2. id. Dugd. ibid. p. 550. ex Eſc. 7. R. 2. n. 68.
[e] Thoroton Nottingh. p. 455.
[f] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 727.
[g] Hiſt. M.S. Johan. Rous p. 253. &c.
[h] Dugd. Bar. 1 Vol. p. 233. & Warwick p. 317. a. ex Clauſ. 40. E. 3. m. 4.

CHAPTER the THIRTEENTH.

The CONTENTS.

I. A Parliament at Weſtminſter; wherein notice is taken of the Pope's forementiond Citation to the King: Peter-Pence forbid to be paid thenceforward to the Pope: The Quarrel taken up between the Fryars Mendicants and the two Univerſities: The Kings Son-in-Law, the Lord of Coucy, made Earl of Bedford. II. A Treaty of Marriage begun between Prince Lionel, King Edward's ſecond Son, living, and the Lady Violantis, Daughter to Galeas, Lord of Milain. III. Dr. Simon Iſlip Archbiſhop of Canterbury dies; his Foundation of Canterbury-College in Oxford, now called Chriſt-Church. Dr. Simon Langham Biſhop of Ely tranſlated to Canterbury. IV. On the French Kings Complaint of the Inſolencies of the Companions, King Edward raiſes an Army to repreſs them; but finding the French King jealous of his Deſigns, deſiſts in great anger: The King of France and the Pope endeavour to have thoſe Licentious Souldiers drawn off into Hungary; but they would not ſtir, till a buſineſs from Spain invited them that way; the Relation of which Matter is refer'd to the beginning of the Fourth Book. AN. DOM. 1366. An. Regni Angliæ XL.

I. IN the beginning of this Year, viz. [a] on the 30th of March, being the Monday next after the Feaſt of the Annunciation of our Lady, King Edward held his high Court of Parliament at Weſtminſter: At the opening whereof Simon Langham Biſhop of Ely, and Lord Chancellor of England declared, in the Painted Chamber, in preſence of the Lords and Commons, the Reaſons, why that Parliament was called; which in effect were theſe: "That ſince the King had ſent his "Eldeſt Son, the Prince of Wales, to govern the Country of Aquitaine; as alſo the "Duke of Clarence, his next Son, then living, into Ireland, to be his Lieutenant there, "his chief Care now was, how he might beſt govern his Realm of England here at "home. And ſo having appointed Receivers and Tryers of Petitions, for England, Ireland, Wales, and Scotland, as alſo for Aquitaine, and other Foreign Iſles, and Places; they adjourn'd, till the next day. And then the Chancellour in preſence of the King, Lords, and Commons, declar'd, that he had the day before informed them in general of the occaſion of their Aſſembling, "and that now they ſhould know it more particularly;

[a] MS. Rot. Par. p. 98. & Sr. Rob. Cotton's Abridgment p. 102. ſed ibi, tempus allegatur eſſe, The Monday next after the Invention of the Croſs; which is the 4 of May this Year; quod mirè diſcrepat à M.S.

An. Dom. 1366. An. Regni Angliæ XL.

"larly; there being a freſh Matter, which the King was reſolved to communicate unto "them, viz. "The King had lately received Notice, that the Pope, in conſidera- "tion of the Homage, which King John of England acknowledged to the See of Rome, "for his Realm of England, and Dominion of Ireland, and becauſe of the Tribute then "by him granted unto the ſaid See, intended by Proceſs to cite the King to the Court "of Rome [Then at Avignon] to anſwer for his Default in not performing what the ſaid "King John, his Predeceſſor, had ſo undertaken for him and his Heirs, Kings of Eng- "land: Whereupon the King required the Advice of his Parliament, what Courſe he "had beſt to take; in caſe any ſuch Matter ſhould be attempted. The Biſhops by "themſelves, and the Lords and Commons by themſelves, deſire Reſpite to give in "their Anſwer, till the next day; which was granted: And then the Three Eſtates being met together with one Conſent, Enacted in effect following, viz. "That for- "aſmuch as neither King John, nor any other King could bring his Realm and Peo- "ple into ſuch thraldom and ſubjection, but by general Conſent in Parliament, which "was not done; and therefore what he did was againſt his Coronation Oath; and "moreover, that he was notoriouſly compell'd by the neceſſity of his Affairs, and the "iniquity of the times; beſides many other Reaſons; if therefore the Pope ſhould at- "tempt any thing againſt the King by Proceſs, or any other way, that then "the King and all his Subjects ſhould with all their Force and Power, oppoſe and "reſiſt the ſame.

Thus was this buſineſs quaſh'd for ever, and it ſeems the King was ſo moved at the Inſolence of the thing, that over and above, he cauſed it now to be [b] ordain'd, that from that time forward St. Peter's Pence ſhould not be paid; which the Noble King Ina, ſometime King of England of the Weſt-Saxons, who began his Reign about the Year of our Lord DCLXXV, had firſt granted to the See of Rome, in conſideration of an Engliſh School there to be continued for ever.

[b] M.S. vet. Angl. in Bibl. C.C.C. Cantab. c.232.

That ſame day [c] the Univerſities of Oxford and Cambridge, and the Fryars of the Four Orders, Mendicants, within the ſaid Univerſities, made long and grievous Complaints by their Proxies, each againſt the other, to the King in Parliament: But in the end they all ſubmitted themſelves to the Kings Order. Whereupon the Lords having well deliberated on the whole Matter, by full Aſſent in Parliament took Order; "that as well the Chancellour and Scholars, as the Fryars of thoſe Orders within the ſaid "Univerſities, ſhould in all Graces and School-Exerciſes uſe each other in Friendly man- "ner, without any noiſe and diſturbance, as before. And that none of thoſe Orders ſhould "receive any Scholar into their Orders, being under the Age of 18 Years: And that the "Fryars ſhould take no advantage, nor procure any Bull, or other Proceſs from [the Court "of] Rome againſt the ſaid Univerſities, or proceed therein. But that the King alone "have Power to redreſs and determine all Controverſies between them from thenceforth, "and the Offenders ſhould be puniſhed at the pleaſure of the King and his Council.

[c] M.S. Rot. Par. ibid. & Sr. Rob. Cotton's Abridgment. ibid.

The Parliament continued till [d] Monday the XI of May; at which time the Lord Chancellor declared, how the King had given in Marriage the Lady Iſabell, his Daughter, to the Lord of Coucy, who had a Fair Eſtate, as well in England, as elſewhere; and that it would concern the King's Honour to create him an Earl by ſome Engliſh Title, which all the Lords yielded to be very convenient. Whereupon the King, by his Letters Patents, bearing [e] Date the ſame XI of May, advanced him to the Title of Earl of Bedford, and for the better ſupport of himſelf and his Lady Iſabell, gave him a Grant of a 1000 Marks per annum, to be paid him out of the Exchequer, as alſo Thirty Marks more out of the Iſſues of the County of Bedford, to be Yearly paid by the Sheriff of that Shire.

[d] Lit. Dom. D. Vid M.S. Rot. Parl. p.99. §.13. & Sr. Rob. Cotton's Abridgment p.103. §. 13.

[e] Dugd. 1 Vol. Baron. p.761. b.

At that time [f] Sr. Thomas Ludlow, Chief Baron of the Exchequer, declared before the whole Parliament, how William, the Son and Heir of William Stephens, who held diverſly of the King in Capite, as of the Crown, had by Writ of Ætate probanda ſued out Livery out of the Kings hands; whereas the ſaid William, the Son, for a long time ſhould be within Age, as by a prolix Schedule doth appear. Whereupon the whole Parliament upon ſight of the ſaid William, the Son, judged him ſtill to be within Age, and therefore took Order, that all his Hereditaments, ſo ſued out of the Kings hands, ſhould be forthwith reſeiſed into the Kings hands, till his full Age, and that all Obligations, Charters, Statutes, Recogniſances, and all other Writings made by the ſaid William, the Son, ſhould be null and void. This done the King gave thanks to the Three Eſtates, and licenſed every One to depart, and ſo this Seſſion ended.

[f] M.S. Rot. Par. &c. ut ſupra.

II. Galeacius, or Galeas, the Second Duke of Milain, and Elder Brother to Duke Bernabo, [g] being a Perſon of a truly Royal Spirit, had already Married his Son, John Galeas, to the Lady Iſabella, Siſter to the King of France, and now for the more ſure Eſtabliſhing of his his Affairs, design'd to match his Beautifull Daughter Violantis with King Edward of England's Son, Prince Lionel Duke of Clarence. To that purpose he began to make some Overtures about this time; insomuch that King Edward sent over to him an Embassy, whereof the Lord [h] Humphry Bohun Earl of Northampton, Hereford, and Essex, was the Principal Person, to adjust Matters fully and equally on both sides: The Effect of which Embassy we shall take notice of hereafter.

[g] Paul. Jovius in Vitis Princip. Mediolanenſ. p.151.

AN. DOM. 1366. An. Regni Angliæ XL.

[h] Dugd. 1 Vol. Baron. *p.*186.

III. Dr. Simon Islip Archbishop of Canterbury, [i] riding to Magfield this Year, his Horse chanced to fling him into a Miry Pool: So being very wet, however, he continued his journey, till he came to the said place. Being there, and having changed his Apparel, he fell asleep; but at his waking found himself in a Palsie, and so within a few days died, viz. on the 26 of April, 1366. This Man [k] founded a College in Oxford, then called Canterbury College; but since that it hath been mightily augmented and enlarged, and bears the name of Christ-Church; being at this time One of the most Magnificent Colleges in the whole World. This College the said Archbishop endow'd with good Possessions, appropriating to the same the Parsonages of Pagham and Magfield; but some Ages after the Famous and Munificent Cardinal Woolsey took it in as a part of his College; and lastly, that and this was accounted the Foundation of King Henry VIII; so that now it is wonderfully encreased, and is still acquiring New Magnificence and Beauty every day. Archbishop Islip being thus dead, the [l] Monks of Canterbury chose Dr. William Edington, then Bishop of Winchester for Archbishop, but he declin'd the Dignity, saying, as it is reported, "That Canterbury was the Higher Rack; but Winchester the "better Manger. Whereupon Simon Langham, then Bishop of Ely, was translated to that See; and John Barnet Bishop of Bath and Welles, went to Ely; and Bath and Welles was given to a Chaplain of the Black-Prince, named Dr. John Harewell. 'Tis observable, that Dr. Simon Langham, [m] on the day of his Consecration, demanded and had Homage of the Earl of Stafford, of Sr. Thomas Ross, Sr. John Tyrrell, Sr. Robert Brockhill, and Sr. Ralph St. Leger, for their Lands, which they held of the See of Canterbury: But of this Great Prelate we shall speak more largely hereafter.

[i] Godw. Catal. Bps p. 142.

[k] Vid. Anton. Wood Antiqu. Oxon. *l.*2. p. 246. & *p.*338.

[l] Godw. ibid. p. 143.

[m] Philipot's Catal. Chancell. & Treas. p. 37.

IV. In these [n] days there was still in France a Mighty Number of Warlike Companions, who, after the Wars of Bretagne were ended, knew not what to do; but however were so wickedly frugal; that they had rather do Mischief than be idle. The scene of all their Extravagances was the unhappy Realm of France; which they called their Chamber; for they durst not do any harm in Aquitaine; the Land would not suffer them. And to say the truth, the greater part of their Captains were Gascogners or Englishmen, Subjects of King Edward, or the Prince, his Son; there were but a few Bretons and Runagate Frenchmen. Wherefore many French Lords began to murmur against King Edward and the Prince, and said among themselves, how they did not acquit themselves fairly to the French King: Since they did not do their utmost to destroy these kind of People; who now began to be unsufferable. For the Duke of Anjou had lately gone against them with an [o] Army of 15000 Men; all whom Sr. Nicolas Dagworth, their General, vanquished, and put to flight, and took many Prisoners, among whom were the Duke of Orleans and the Duke of Anjou himself. It is reported of this same Sr. Nicolas, who was a Baron of England, and Son to the Famous Sr. Thomas Dagworth, of whom we have spoken heretofore in this History; [p] that with Thirteen English Horse he fought sixty French, near to Flavigny in Burgundy, and by means of certain Chariots, which he made use of for his Defence (they being placed in a Circle, whereinto he could enter at pleasure) utterly vanquished them. But that he Headed the Companions at this time against the Frenchmen, proceeded from the great desire he had to Revenge the Blood of his Father, who about 17 [q] Years before had been basely murder'd by the French in time of Truce. However King Charles of France and his Nobles, being terrified with this great Success of the Companions, [r] sent to King Edward of England, desiring him to interpose his Authority against the Fury of these Men, who were for the most part English, or at least under his Dominion. For it was so provided in the Articles of the Peace at Bretigny; that if the Souldiers should refuse to acquiesce, both the Kings should joyn together to compell them. First therefore, King Edward sent his Letters of Proclamation, commanding them on their Allegiance to go out of France, and no longer to infest that Kingdom. Some few obey'd; but others made answer, "that as they held nothing there of the King of England, so neither for him would they leave their Garrisons, and that Livelihood they had got with "so much labour. The King was so enraged at this piece of Insolence, that immediately he prepared to Chastise them in Person with a Royal Army: But when the French King heard of his vast Preparations, he began to fear, lest after he had destroy'd the Companions, [n] Froiss. c. 229. fol. 125.

[o] Knighton p. 2628. *n.*60. & Dugd. 2 Vol. Baron. *p.*148.

[p] Dugd. 2 *Vol. p.*148. ex Leland. Collect. Vol. 1. *p.*826. MS. in Bibl. Bodleian.

[q] Vid. Lib. 2. *c.*9. §.6. *p.*445.

[r] *Walsingh. hist. p.*175. *n.*10, &c.

An. Dom. 1366. An. Regni Angliæ XL.

nions, he himſelf might be prey'd upon by him to the hazard of his Crown, under colour, that he ought to pay the Wages of the Army, or by whatever other pretence a Conquerour ſhould pleaſe to make. Wherefore he now again ſent to him, deſiring him to deſiſt, and keep at home: At which affront the King was ſo diſpleas'd, that he ſware by the Virgin Mary, "Never to ſtir again about aiding the King of France, no--- thô "the ſaid Companions ſhould endeavour to thruſt him out of his Kingdom. But yet ſoon after theſe outlaw'd Captains, having at the King of England's Command deliver'd up their Fortreſſes and Caſtles, were content to go along with Sr. Bertram of Clequin into Spain, upon an occaſion of which we ſhall diſcourſe more fully by and by. As yet the Wiſe Men of France, could find no way to purge the Land of them; but they ſaw evidently, that unleſs they could think of a Remedy, and a ſpeedy One too, either by beating them, or buying them out of the Realm, they would ſhortly prey upon the very Vitals of France, and perhaps of a good part of Chriſtendom; for they were reckon'd to be about 60000 Fighting Men: And by Succeſs they were like to be augmented with new acceſſions of Men of their own ungracious Principles. At that time [f] Lewis, the Valiant King of Hungary, having at Buda made an Alliance with John Palæologus, the Greek Emperour, who requeſted his help againſt the Turks, made great Preparations for the War, and among others deſired much to have theſe bold Fellows in his Service: And thereupon [t] wrote to Pope Urban V, then at Avignon, and to the French King, and alſo to the Prince of Wales, ſhewing, how deſirous he was to employ theſe Warriers in a more Righteous Cauſe againſt the Enemies of Chriſt, and to give them good pay. So theſe Three Grand Perſonages agreed together, and offer'd the Companions Gold and Silver, and free Paſſage, and the Pope's Pardon; but nothing would do; they were not ſo devout to change their Quarters, when they were well, and they ſaid, they would not go ſo far to fight, when they might do it nearer at home. For they were well informed by ſome of their own Company, who had already been in Hungary, that in thoſe Parts there were ſuch ſtraits, that if among any of them they ſhould meet with an Enemy, they could never eſcape; but muſt inevitably die a ſhamefull Death; with which words, whether true or falſe, they were ſo terrified; that they abſolutely refuſed to go thither. When the Pope and the French King ſaw, they could not be rid of them this way, they knew not what courſe to take; till at laſt another occaſion offer'd it ſelf, as we ſhall ſhew in the following Book more largely.

[f] Vid. Odor-Rainal. ad hunc ann. §. 3, &c.

[t] Froiſ. t. 229. fol. 125. b.

The End of the Third Book.

THE

673
An. Dom.
1366.
An. Regni
Angliæ
XL.

THE HISTORY OF King Edward IIId.

BOOK THE FOURTH.

CHAPTER the First.

The CONTENTS.

I. The Character and Manners of Don Pedro, Sirnamed the Cruel, King of Castille and Leon; He is Excommunicated by the Pope, and his Bastard Brother made Legitimate: The Companions and others joyn to go and Depose him; Sr. Bertram of Clequin being their General. II. Don Pedro provides to oppose this Army; but being forsaken of all, flies to Seville, thence to Portugal, and thence escapes into Galizia, where he absconds a while. III. Don Henry, the Bastard, Conde of Trastamare, is by General Consent accepted and Crowned King; his Acts, Liberality, and Designs. IV. Don Pedro, advis'd to implore the Protection of the Black-Prince, sends his Letters Supplicatory unto him for that purpose. V. While the said Prince is fitting out a Fleet to fetch Don Pedro from Galizia to Aquitain in safety; Don Pedro himself arrives at Bayonne. VI. Prince Edward receives him with much Humanity. VII. The Prince's Council give their Reasons, why they would not have him to meddle with Don Pedro, with the Prince's Reasons, why notwithstanding he thought himself obliged thereto. VIII. Don Pedro's great Promises to the Prince's Souldiers and Captains; the Prince calls a Parliament of his Barons of Aquitain: Which Parliament advises him first to learn his Fathers pleasure therein. IX. King Edward directs his Letters to the Prince and his Council, wherein he Wills him to take in hand the Defence of the Exil'd King, and Commands all his Subjects of those Parts to be aiding unto him in that his Undertaking. X. The King of Navarre, his Friendship being found necessary to this Affair, is on certain considerations brought over: Don Pedro engages by Oath, Bond, and Pledges to make suitable Returns to the Prince. XI. A Copy of a Famous Grant of King Don Pedro's to King Edward and the Prince, and to the Kings of England and their Eldest Sons for ever, whereby the Memory of this Favour of the Prince's might be Honourably Recorded in Spain to all Generations. XII. Prince Edward sends to his Captains then in the Bastards service, commanding them home; the Bastards surprize at the News of the Prince's Design: Sr. Bertram of Clequin gives him Counsel, and hasts back into France, to raise him Friends. XIII. Divers Opinions concerning this Undertaking of the Prince's. XIV. The Bastard renews his Alliance with the King of Aragon; which occasions great difficulties to the Companions, that came out of Spain, with Design to serve the Prince. XV. Prince Edward sends the Lord Chandos to retain the Companions in his service, and to get the Earl of Foix his leave, that they might pass thrô his Country. XVI. The Prince's zeal for the War, and his Methods for raising Money: The Lord of Albret promises to bring a 1000 Spears to the ſervice. XVII. The Companions being Beſieged in Montauban beat the French Lords with a great overthrow. XVIII. They get at laſt into the Principality; where yet they cannot forbear doing much Miſchief. XIX. James, King of Majorica, comes to Bourdeaux to beg the Prince's aid againſt the King of Aragon, who withheld Majorica from him. XX. The Prince, by advice of his Council, having Men enow otherwiſe, countermands 800 of the Lord Albret's 1000 Spears; which prov'd the firſt occaſion of Diſcontent to that Gaſcogne Lord.

An. Dom. 1366. An. Regni Angliæ XL.

[a] Froiſ. c. 229. fol. 126. a.

I. AT this time [a] there Reigned in Caſtille, a Kingdom of Spain, Don Pedro, the Son of Alphonſo the Eleventh; who becauſe of his many Barbarous, Inhumane, and Unprincely Actions, was Sirnamed The Cruel. He had indeed [b] many notable good Qualities and Perfections both of Body and Mind; for he was Tall of Stature, and of a ſtrong and well-compacted Body; of a Gracefull and Majeſtick Countenance, and of a ſharp and ſound Wit; He was Sweet and Perſuaſive of Language; Affable and Judicious; Able and Expert in Arms; a ſevere Enemy to the Proud and Obſtinate, and eſpecially to Thieves and Robbers on the High-way. In ſhort he had ſuch Courage and other Endowments of Mind, as ſet forth and adorn the Owner, but cannot make him Happy without the Addition of Vertue. For as to his Religion, He either had none, or ſeem'd to take no no ice of it; but lived in continued Adulteries, and rejected all Admonitions of his Clergy, and united himſelf, as was reported, to the Moors and the Kings of Belmarine, Tremiſen, and Granada. He was always an inveterate Enemy to Pedro King of Aragon, and had lately taken from him a part of his Kingdom, intending at laſt to deprive him of the whole; as indeed he had a deſire to oppreſs all his Chriſtian Neighbours. Nay, when [c] Ruffus Maurus, King of Granada, came to him under ſafe Conduct for Protection to his City of Sevil, partly to obtain his Treaſures, which were reported to amount to 800000 pieces of Gold, and alſo to gratifie his natural thirſt of Blood, he cauſed him to be carried into the Field on an Aſs, together with One and Fourty Moors, his Servants, and there he transfixed him thrô the Body with his own Lance, and cauſed the reſt of the Moors to be trod to Death by his Horſemen. Moreover he had divorced, and as ſome ſay, cauſed to be diſpatched, his own Queen, the Lady Blanche, Daughter to [d] Peter Duke of Bourbon, and German Siſter to the French Queen, and to the Counteſs of Savoy; whoſe Death was much bewailed by all that knew her; eſpecially thoſe of her Family; which was then one of the moſt Illuſtrious in the World. The occaſion, why he was ſo Cruel to a Lady of her Worth, Youth, and Beauty (for ſhe was but [e] five and twenty when ſhe died, and once He himſelf lov'd her entirely) is [f] attributed to the Enchantments of a certain Jew, who at the Inſtigation of Don Pedro's Concubine, Maria de Padilla, by Magick ſo charmed a Rich embroidered Girdle, which his Queen Blanche had given him; that when he had it on, it appeared both to himſelf and all others, nothing elſe, but a great and terrible Serpent. From that time He could never endure his Queen; who ſoon after either died for grief, or, as it is ſaid, was poiſoned by him: And thus being again at his own Diſpoſe, he took the ſaid Maria de Padilla to Wife, and made her his Queen. Now this Don Pedro, King of Caſtille and Leon, had Three Baſtard Brethren, whom his Father Alphonſo had gotten on the body of the Lady Leonora Guſman, called the Ricco Drue; the Eldeſt was named Henry, Earl of Traſtamare; a Man, who ſupply'd the Defect of his Birth, by Vertue and an Honourable Inclination; the Second was Tellius, alias Don Tello, afterwards Earl of Sancelloni, and the Third Sancho. When theſe Three Brethren ſaw the many Murthers of the Prime Nobility perpetrated by the King, their Brother, and that he daily grew worſe, and how he had put to Death Three or Four of their Brethren, gotten by King Alphonſo on another Lady, they began to doubt their own Lives, and reſolving to get out of his Reach, fled for Protection to Pedro King of Aragon; whom our Don Pedro ſo purſued with Bloody Wars; that finding no further ſecurity there, they were e'n fain to fly to the French King. Hereupon Don Pedro confiſcated all their Eſtates, and proſcribed them as Traytors, which prov'd an Occaſion of his Ruine. For now that all hope of Pardon was taken away, they began to conſider, how by depriving him of his Life they might ſecure their own: To which Reſolution they were the more enflam'd, becauſe they heard, he had lately put to Death the Lady Leonora Guſman, their Mother, having [b] Roderic. Sant. Par. IV. c. XIV. §. 40, &c. Vid. Marian. de Reb. Hiſpan. l. 17. c. 7.

[c] Odor. Rainal. ad an. 1362. §. 18.

[d] Philippus dicitur apud Odor. Rainal. ad an. 1353. §. 16.

[e] Maria. de Reb. Hiſpan. l. 17. c. 4.

[f] Id. l. 16. c. 18. & Innocent. PP. VI, Vitæ Author apud Boſq. Vid. Odor. Rainal. ad an. 1353. § 16.

having first caused to be burnt in her Presence a Jacobin, of the Order of St. Domingo della Calcade, [g] who had foretold, that he himself should be slain by the hands of Henry of Castille, Conde of Trastamare, his Bastard Brother, in Revenge of his other Brethren, whom he had murdered. About this time also the Prelates of Castille sent grievous Complaints to Avignon to the Pope, importing, that their King intended to overthrow Holy Church, and had already taken away many Church Lands and Revenues, and held several of the Clergy in Prison, and oppressed the whole Land by Tyranny; against all which they beg'd of his Holiness some Remedy: And moreover, having lately violated the Truce taken between him and the King of Aragon, he refus'd to hearken to the Admonitions of the Pope, who by his Letter, (bearing [h] Dat. Aven. Non. Februar. An°. Pontif. IV. and sent unto him by William de Lynne aliàs Lulimere Bishop of Chichester) exhorted him earnestly to be at peace with the said King. Upon all these accounts Pope Urban, being netled to the quick, sent Messengers forthwith into Spain to the King, citing him to appear by his Proxies in his Court, there to answer what should be alledged against him, and to excuse and purge himself of those horrible Matters laid to his Charge. But Don Pedro, in stead of bending a little for a while, being full of Pride and Security, not only flatly refus'd to obey this citation, but also abus'd the Popes Messengers; whereby he greatly incurred the Indignation of the Church, and especially of the Chief Bishop thereof, the Pope. And in this manner he persever'd; till at last [i] in the open Consistory at Avignon, in the Chamber of Excommunication he was solemnly ejected from the Bosom of the Church, and pronounced to be but as an Infidel. And then after these Censures, it was advised, that he should be deposed by the Arms of the Companions; who were at that time in France. Hereupon the King of Aragon, who was an Apparent Enemy to Don Pedro, and Henry the Bastard, who had little cause to be his Friend, were sent for to come and confer with the Pope at Avignon. Now this Henry the Bastard was a most Valiant and Couragious young Gentleman, and had been many Years in France pursuing the Wars on the French Kings part with much Honour: But when he saw the Pope's Letters, he went immediately to Avignon, where he met the King of Aragon. And then and there Pope Urban made the Bastard Henry Legitimate and capable to Inherit the Realms of Castille and Leon, as if he had been the true and only Son and Heir of King Alphonso, last deceased; and then again he solemnly Deposed, Cursed, and Condemned Don Pedro by his Sentence Definitive. There the King of Aragon and Don Henry, the Bastard, enter'd a mutual Alliance on certain Conditions; namely, that Henry should restore unto the King of Aragon, all that his Brother Don Pedro had at any time taken from him; and the King of Aragon promised to open the Passages thrô his Country, and to prepare Victuals and Provision for all manner of Souldiers, and others, that should go along with him in this his Expedition into Castille, to overthrow and confound Don Pedro, and to put him out of his Kingdom.

AN. DOM. 1366. An. Regni Angliæ XL.

[g] Favine le Parisien Theatre d' Honneur l.6. c.9, &c.

[h] Odor. Rainal. ad hunc ann. §. 30, &c.

[i] Froiss. c. 229. fol. 126.

When the French King heard of this Design, he was extraordinarily well pleas'd, as he that desired at any rate to be rid of the Companions, and also to be revenged of Don Pedro for the Death of his Cousin, the Lady Blanche of Bourbon: But that this might be done more effectually, he presently cast in his Mind, how he might get that Noble Captain, Sr. Bertram of Clequin (who was still Prisoner with the Lord John Chandos) at liberty again; because his Skill, Conduct, and Courage seem'd highly necessary to this Grand Enterprize. In short He and the Pope, and Henry the Bastard club'd together to pay his Ransom, which came to an Hundred Thousand Franks; at so high a Rate was he valued. Sr. Bertram being thus delivered, the Bastard and He fell in Communication with the Captains of the Companions, and promised them large Pay and great Rewards, if they would go along with them into the Realm of Castille. They agreed on condition to receive such and such Sums in hand, [k] whereof the Pope paid 200000 Livers (besides Pardons and Indulgences) to be rid of them, and the rest at such and such times afterwards; namely, a present Gratuity, and good Wages for the future. And this their Design was communicated to the Prince of Wales, and to the Knights and Esquires of his Court, especially to the Lord John Chandos, who was earnestly desired to be one of their Chief Captains, together with Sr. Bertram of Clequin: But he excus'd himself by shewing the necessity of his Service about the Prince; but the Expedition went on however, and many of the Princes Knights joyned with them (for abroad the Matter was pretended to be against the Moors only) as Sr. Eustace Dambreticourt, Sr. Hugh Calverley, Sr. Walter Hewet, Sr. John Devereux, Sr. Matthew Gournay, Sr. John Nevile, and several others. But the Chief Captain of the whole Enterprize was the young Lord of Bourbon, [k] Mezeray ad hunc ann.

An. Dom. 1366. An. Regni Angliæ XL.

bon, Earl of Marche, who went againſt the Tyrant to revenge upon him the Death of his Couſin, late Queen of Spain: Thô in all Matters of Moment he was directed and adviſed by Sr. Bertram of Clequin. Together with theſe were Aſſociated the Lord Anthony de Beaujeu, the Lord Arnold D' Endreghan Marſhal of France, the Begue of Villaine, the Lord Dantoing in Hainalt, the Lord of Bruſnell, Sr. Guy Bailleul, Sr. John of Bergues, the Almaine of St. Venant, and many more; beſides the Captains of the Companions; as Sr. Robert Briquet, Sr. John Charnells, Sr. Robert Cheney, Sr. Ralph Camois, Sr. Perdiccas of Albret, Nandon of Bergerac, Lanny the little Mechlin, the Bourg de L' Eſparre, Batiller Eſpiot, Edmund Ortingo, Captain Humphry Perot of Savoy, the Bourg of Bartuel, Sr. Garſes du Chaſtel, and others. All theſe Lords and Captains with their Retinues held their Rendezvous in Languedoc, and about Avignon and Mompellier, whence they marched Weſtward to Narbonne, and ſo to Perpignan; on which ſide they were to enter the Realm of Aragon. They amounted to more than 60000 Fighting Men, all who were of one Mind, to thruſt out Don Pedro from his Realm of Caſtille, and to make his Baſtard-Brother, Henry Earl of Traſtamare King in his ſtead. Upon their entrance into Aragon, the more to blind Don Pedro, they ſent unto him, "deſiring him to open the Straits of his "Country, and to allow free Paſſage to the Pilgrims of God, who in great Devotion "had undertaken to go into the Kingdom of Granada, to Revenge the Death and Paſ"ſion of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, to extirpate the Infidels, and to Eſtabliſh the Chri"ſtian Faith in thoſe Parts. But King Pedro knew already the Bottom of their Deſign, and that they came indeed againſt him; yet he valued them not, but intended to raiſe an Army, and give them Battle at their Entrance into his Realm. So when he heard their diſſembling Meſſage, he laughed them to ſcorn, and ſaid, "he would "do nothing at their deſire, nor in any point be ſerviceable to ſuch a Company of Raſ"cals and Thieves, as they were. When this anſwer was return'd, Sr. Bertram and his Captains look'd on him as a Diſdainfull, Proud Tyrant, and ſo, with all Expedition imaginable, marched forward to work his Ruine. Thus they went thrô the Realm of Aragon, where they found the Paſſages ready open for them, and Victuals, and all other Neceſſaries to be had at convenient Rates and Prizes. For the King of Aragon was very glad of their coming, becauſe now he expected by their means to recover all his Lands, which before Don Pedro had taken from him. And Sr. Bertram and his Company did nothing deceive his Expectation, for when they had reconquer'd thoſe Towns, Cities, Caſtles, Straights, Ports, and Paſſages, which Don Pedro had violently wreſted from him, they faithfully reſtored them all unto him again; conditionally, that for ever after he ſhould aſſiſt the Baſtard againſt Don Pedro. After this they paſſed the Great River of Ebro, or Iberus, which divides Aragon into two Parts, and ſo they began to March towards Caſtiglia la Vieja, or old Caſtille.

II. When Don Pedro heard for certain, "how an Army of Engliſhmen, Frenchmen, "Bretons, Normans, Picards, and Burgundians, were coming to invade his Realm, "and had already paſſed the River Ebro, having won again the City of Calatayud in "Aragon, and all on that ſide the River, which ſtood him in ſo much expence and pains to conquer; he was vext at the News to the heart, but ſaid no more than this, "Well, well, all ſhall not go, as they deſign: This Country yields Men, that are able to "defend it. And there no doubt he ſaid truth; for the Right Spaniard is Hardy and Patient in the Field, Valiant in War, and Couragious to the Death. But he forgot to reflect, how he had by his unnatural Cruelties exaſperated all his Subjects; and that nothing renders a Prince more weak, than Vice and Tyranny: For they deprive him of the Hearts of his Subjects, which is a Monarchs beſt ſecurity. However like a Couragious King, he immediately ſet up his Standard, and iſſued forth his Summons, giving ſpecial Command thrô all his Dominions, by his Letters Royal, and by his Meſſengers, which went Poſt into all Parts; that without any delay, they ſhould come to him, and help to reſiſt the Publick Enemy, who had invaded his Kingdom. But when he thought to have had a Royal Army, he found himſelf deceived; for few or none came in to him: Almoſt all the Lords and Knights of Spain forſook him, and went over to his Baſtard-Brother, who was now generally adored as the Riſing-Sun. Upon this Don Pedro was forced immediately to fly, or elſe he had been taken; he was ſo much hated by his Enemies, and even his own Friends were aſham'd of him: Yet at this very time, [1] meeting with Don Juan of Torres, Brother to him, who had yielded up the City of Calahorra to his Enemies, he cauſed him to be put to Death. There was no Perſon of Quality, that would ſtick to a Prince of this Character in ſo ebbing a Fortune, [1] Odor. Rainald. ad hunc ann. §. 31.

Fortune, but only one Loyal Grandee, Don Hernando del Caſtro, he would by no means forſake his Lord and Maſter, whatever came of it. Thus Don Pedro being attended with this Lord, and a ſmall Troop of Loyal Gentlemen, went with his Family and a good part of his Treaſures to Seville on the River Guadalquivir, which was the beſt City then in Spain, and from thence he went to his Kinſman Don Pedro, Sirnamed the Juſticeer, King of Portugal; with whom he might have been ſafe; but that Don Henry [m] the Baſtard made intereſt with Don Hernando the Infant of Portugal; whereof the unhappy King of Caſtille being aware, privately truſſed up all his Treaſure, and put it into Coffers, and took ſhipping at Lisbon with his Wife and Children, and Don Hernando del Caſtro, and a few others with him, and left Portugal, and ſet Sail for Galizia, the Fartheſt Part of all Spain Weſtward; where there is by the Sea-ſide a ſtrong Caſtle, called Corunna; and here he and his Queen Maria de Padilla, and his three Daughters, the Ladies Beatrice, Conſtance, and Iſabella arrived and took Harbour; but of all the Great Lords of his Court and Council, he had not One there, except that never-enough-commended ſervant Don Hernando del Caſtro. And yet during his ſtay in thoſe parts he is ſaid to have put to Death [n] in the City of Compoſtella, Suero, the Archbiſhop, and Pedro, Dean of Toledo. And thus we ſhall for a while leave this unhappy Prince, and ſee what became of his Baſtard Brother, the Earl of Traſtamare, from whoſe face he now fled.

AN. DOM. 1366. An. Regni Angliæ XL.

[m] Odor. Rainal. ibid. §. 32, &c.

[n] Odor. Rainal. ibid. &c.

III. As ſoon [o] as the Caſtillians knew, that Don Henry was enter'd the Land with ſo great an Army, they all flock'd to him and acknowledged him for their Lord, and ſo rode forth with him; and all along as he went, he cauſed the Cities, Towns, and Caſtles to be open'd to him, and every man to do him Homage, the Spaniards ſtill crying out with one voice, "Live, Don Henry, and die Pedro, the Cruel! The Grandees of Spain led him thus thrô all the Realm of Caſtille; as the Grand Maſter of Calatrava, and the Maſter of St. Iago, and all men every where obey'd him as their King. And ſo at laſt he was Crown'd in the City of [p] Aſtorga, the Metropolis of the Kingdom of Leon; all Prelates, Earls, Barons, and Knights, doing unto him, as unto their Sovereign, Reverence and Homage, and ſwearing to uphold him, as their King, or elſe to die in the Quarrel. Thus he rode a Progreſs thrô the Realms of Caſtille and Leon, having Received a Kingdom without a ſtroke, and being almoſt lifted up to Heaven by the Acclamations of the ſenſeleſs Multitude: Who, as they are always the moſt inſtrumental in ſuch ſudden Revolutions, do alſo commonly pay the deareſt for their Rebellion; when the juſt owner comes with Sword in hand to demand his Right againſt the Uſurper. Don Henry, being thus Crowned, diſtributed largely unto the Knights ſtrangers, ſuch as came with him, great Gifts and rich Jewels, beſides the Souldiers pay; ſo that every Man confeſſed him to be a Prince of much Honour and Liberality. And the Engliſh, Normans, Frenchmen, and Bretons, ſaid among themſelves frequently, that he was the Fountain of Generoſity, and well Worthy to live and Reign over a great Realm; as he did for a while in high Power and Proſperity: Till the Prince of Wales and of Aquitain beat him out of his ill-gotten Poſſeſſion, and replaced Don Pedro in his Throne again; as we ſhall ſee hereafter.

[o] Froiſ. c. 230. fol. 127.

[p] Alii dicunt Toleto, alii Olgis coronam accepiſſe.

When now Don Henry ſaw himſelf well ſettled in this Eſtate Royal, and that all the Land without Controverſie obey'd him, and acknowledged him for their only Sovereign, he firſt [q] gain'd the Kings of Portugal and Granada of his ſide, and then held a Parliament, wherein he cauſed to be Enacted, that if any thing ſhould happen to him after the manner of Men, his Eldeſt Son John ſhould be look'd on, and taken as the Right Heir of his Kingdom: And at this time he advanced his two Brethren Tello and Sancho to the Dignity of Earls, the Former being made Earl of Sancelloni, upon whom, together with their Titles, he heaped large Revenues and Poſſeſſions. Then he began to imagine and caſt in his mind, how he might Act moſt Worthy of the Supream Dignity, which he had attained, and render his Name and Memory, as Dear, as his Brother, Don Pedro, had made his Abominable. He principally deſired to exalt his Honour by good Actions, and to maintain that Kingdom by Juſtice, which the Injuſtice of another had occaſion'd to fall to him. But as for thoſe Numbers of Companions, which he had now with him, he deſign'd ſhortly to employ them in an Expedition againſt Mahomet, King of Granada, notwithſtanding the formal Alliance he had lately ſtruck up with him. And of this Deſign he ſpake frequently to ſeveral Lords and Knights, who highly applauded (as they reckon'd) his Pious and Honourable Reſolution: And ſtill he kept about him the Prince of Wales his Knights, as Sr. Hugh Calverley, Sr. Walter Hewet, Sr. Matthew Gournay, and Sr. Euſtace Dambreticourt, to whom he ſhew'd particular Favours and ſpecial Tokens of his Love and Reſpect, in hopes to tie them the faſter [q] Odor. Rainal. ibid. §. 32.

An. Dom. 1366. An. Regni Angliæ XL.

to his ſervice in his intended Expedition to Granada. But moſt of the Knights of France took their leave of him preſently after his Coronation, having firſt received many ample Rewards from his Hands; as namely, the Lord John of Bourbon Earl of Marche, the Lord Arnold D' Endreghan, the Lord of Beaujeu, and others: But Sr. Bertram of Clequin, and Sr. Oliver Manny, with all the Bretons, and all the Companions, tarried ſtill with the King, having convenient Quarters aſſign'd them; and Sr. Bertram in conſideration of his good Services, was by King Henry, with the Conſent of his Council, made High Conſtable of all the Realm of Caſtille.

[r] Froiſ. c. 231.

IV. All this while was [r] poor Don Pedro in the ſtrong Caſtle of Corunna on the Sea, and with him his Wife, his three Daughters, and the Loyal Don Hernando del Caſtro, and his Retinue only. But when he heard, how his Baſtard-Brother had made himſelf King, and that all the Land freely own'd him for their Lord, he began to be in fear of his Life: For he knew, that if Don Henry once heard where he was, he would beſiege him ſo cloſe by Land and by Sea, that it would be impoſſible for him to eſcape. Wherefore one Night he took his Wife and his Daughters, and Don Hernando and his Lady [s] Joan of Caſtille, natural Daughter of King Alphonſo XI, and all the Gold and Silver that he had, with him, and ſet Sail, deſigning for ſome other place: But the Wind was ſo contrary to him, that he could by no means get off from that Coaſt; and ſo he was fain to re-enter the Caſtle of Corunna. Then in a great Agony he demanded of Don Hernando, his only Counſellor, what Courſe now he had beſt take to preſerve himſelf, and thoſe poor Reliques of his Family, complaining bitterly, how adverſe Fortune was againſt him. After ſome ſtudy, the Knight ſpake thus; "May it pleaſe Your "Majeſty, before You leave this place of Safeguard, it would be well to ſend to your "Couſin, the Heroick Prince of Wales and of Aquitaine, to know, whether he will be "willing to entertain You or no; and to requeſt him in meer pity, to conſider a little "Your ſad and neceſſitous Condition: For ſurely, beſides, that he is noted for a Per"ſon of extraordinary Courteſie, he will think himſelf ſomething obliged to take notice "of You, upon the account of thoſe ſtrict Alliances made between Your Father and "His. And, althô indeed the Lady died before Conſummation, yet he cannot but "remember, that his Siſter the Lady Joan, [t] was given in Marriage to You about 17 "Years ago. And certainly the Prince of Wales is ſo Noble, ſo Courteous, and withall "of ſuch exalted Courage; that when he ſhall be fully informed of your Affliction, he "will take ſome Compaſſion on You. And if but once He undertakes to ſet You a"gain in Your Throne; there is no Man in all the World can do it better: He is ſo "Valiant and Succeſsfull in War, and ſo feared, reſpected, and beloved by all Men, e"ſpecially the Souldiery: And Sir, for the preſent You are here in a good ſtrong For"treſs, able either to conceal You or defend You; till You may hear News from Aqui"taine. This Counſel Don Pedro readily embraced, and fell immediately to write Letters, which he did all with his own hand, ſo pathetical, and full of pity, as none, but one in his Condition, or as bad, could eaſily endite. Theſe Letters Don Hernando gave to a Knight and two Eſquires of his, with Inſtructions concerning the whole Affair; and ſo they went on board, and ſailed happily, till they came to Bayonne, a City of Gaſcogne, on the River Adour, belonging to the King of England. Here they asked tidings of the Prince, and were informed, that he was then at Bourdeaux: Wherefore they took Horſe, and rode thither, and choſe out an Inn to lodge in, and changed their Apparel, and ſo went to the Abbey of St. Andrew, where the Prince kept his Court. There they gave out, that they were Spaniards, and came from Caſtille, on a Meſſage from King Don Pedro. When the Prince heard thus much, he ſaid, he would ſee them, and learn their buſineſs: So they were introduced before him, and kneeled, and ſaluted him according to the Cuſtom of their Country, and humbly recommended the King their Maſter unto him, and ſo deliver'd the Letters into his Hands. The Prince preſently raiſed the Meſſengers from the ground, and received their Letters, and then ſtepping aſide a little, read them over leiſurely; wherein he found, how pathetically King Don Pedro wrote unto him, "declaring his great Misfortune, Danger, and Poverty; "and how his Baſtard-Brother, by the Alliances he had made with the Pope, the French "King, and the King of Aragon, with the Aſſiſtance of the Companions, had violently "expelled him from his Inheritance of the Realm of Caſtille. Wherefore he humbly "and heartily deſired the Prince for Gods ſake, and out of his great Generoſity, to "help him in this his deplorable Condition, and to provide him ſome Counſel and Re"medy; whereby he would atchieve Grace of God, and Honour of all the World. For, "ſaid he, it is a thing not to be allow'd in Chriſtendom, that a Pope, or a King ſhould "diſinherit a true and lawfull Heir, and by force of Tyranny inveſt a Baſtard with the "Right.

[s] Favine le Pariſien's Theatre l' Honneur l. 6. c. 7. p. 148.

[t] Vid. Lib. 2. c. 8. §. 9. p. 438.

"Right. The Prince, whoſe Wiſdom was no way ſhort of his Courage, having read thus much, cloſed the Letters again in his Hands, and ſpake thus to the Meſſengers; "Gentlemen, You are heartily Welcome to Us from our Couſin, the King of Ca- "ſtille: Tarry here a while with Us; and before You go, You ſhall have our anſwer. With that the Prince's Attendants, who knew well their Buſineſs, conducted the Spaniſh Knight and the two Eſquires to an appartment ready for them, and the Prince tarried ſtill in his Chamber ſeriouſly muſing on theſe freſh Tidings. Preſently he ſent for the Lord John Chandos, and the Lord Thomas Felton, two of the Chief of his Council; for the Firſt was High-Conſtable of Aquitaine, and the latter Seneſchal thereof. At their entrance into the Preſence, the Prince ſaid ſmiling, "My Lords, You ſhall hear freſh "News out of Spain: The King, Don Pedro, our Couſin, makes Grievous Complaint "of the Baſtard Henry, who hath taken from him his Inheritance, and hath thruſt him "out of his Kingdom; as, no doubt, You have heard reported by ſundry that came "from thoſe Parts: And now he inſtantly requireth Us to lend him our Aid and "Aſſiſtance, as it appeareth here by his letters. And with that the Prince read over the Letters to them word for word, two ſeveral times; and theſe two Lords heard all very diſtinctly. Having done with the Letters, he proceeded, "Sr. John and Sr. Tho- "mas, You two are the Chief of my Council, and thoſe, on whoſe Fidelity and Wiſ- "dom I more eſpecially rely: Wherefore now I demand Your Advice, what You "think is beſt for me to do in this Caſe. Shall I, after the manner of the World, "neglect a Man in Adverſity? Or ſhall I, as Vertue requires, lend an helping Hand "unto him? Here is Quiet attended with Silence, or Infamy; and there is Labour "Crown'd with Honour and Immortality. As they ſtood ſilent, looking upon one another, the Prince continued, "My Lords, tell me Your minds freely and plainly, "what is fit to be done in this Matter. Then they both agreed, "that it would be "convenient for his Highneſs to ſend ſome Ships of War to King Don Pedro to Co- "runna in Galizia, where according to the Date of his Letters, and the Confeſſion "of his Deputies He then was; and that this Fleet ſhould take in him and all he had, "and bring them ſafe to the City of Bourdeaux: Where the Prince might more at "leiſure underſtand the Particulars of his Requeſt, and by Perſonal Conference re- "move all Scruples, and ſo accordingly take ſuch Meaſures, as ſhould ſeem moſt "agreeable.

V. The Prince approved very well of this Counſel, and forthwith order'd, that it ſhould be put in Execution, as ſoon as poſſible. The Fleet was to conſiſt of Twelve Men of War, well furniſhed with Archers and Spears, the Admiral whereof was the Lord Thomas Felton, and the Vice-Admiral, the Lord William Latimer; with whom were joyn'd Sr. Richard Pontchardon, Sr. Nevale Loringe, Sr. Simon Burley, Sr. Richard Burley, and Sr. John Burley, all Brethren, and other Men of Worth and Valour; who made all the haſte they could to have this Fleet fitted up for their Voyage to Galizia. All things being ready they went to Bayonne with Don Pedro's Meſſengers in their Company, and here they tarried four days for Wind and Weather. On the Fifth Day, juſt as they were hoiſing Sail, King Pedro himſelf arrived in the Port of Bayonne, with his Three Daughters, (for his Wife was lately Dead) a few of his Men with him, and ſuch Treaſures, as he had. The occaſion of his ſo unexpected Coming, was becauſe he durſt not ſtay at Corunna any longer, for fear Don Henry ſhould underſtand that he was there; and alſo becauſe he knew, that by this time the Prince muſt have ſeen his Letters: wherefore he thus adventur'd to fling himſelf into the Hands of One, whoſe Honour, he doubted not, would oblige him to defend a ſuppliant.

VI. When the Engliſh Lords and Knights heard of his Coming, they preſented themſelves unto him, and bad him Welcome, and ſhew'd him much Reverence and reſpect; and the Lord Thomas Felton told him, "that they were juſt then ready by Command "of the Prince, their Lord, to have made a Voyage unto Him to Corunna, or where- "ever elſe he ſhould have been, to have convey'd him in ſafety to the Prince. Don Pedro was much refreſhed at this report, and ſaid, "He moſt heartily thanked the "Prince, as he did likewiſe all thoſe Noble Knights and Gentlemen there preſent. Sr. Thomas immediately diſpatched away word to the Prince, of Don Pedro's Arrival at Bayonne; whereat he was well pleas'd, and the next day the King of Caſtille was conducted by the Engliſh Knights towards Bourdeaux. Upon News of his approach, the Prince, who mightily deſired to ſee his Couſin of Caſtille, rode forth from his Chief City with a goodly Company of Knights and Gentlemen of his Court, and went, and met the King at the Good Town of Belin, ſtanding on the [u] Leyre; where he ſhew'd him extraordinary Reſpect and Reverence, ſuch as is due to Crowned Heads: For [x] there was [u] Or L' Erre.

[x] Froiſ. c. 231. fol. 128.

An. Dom. 1366. An. Regni Angliæ XL.

An. Dom. 1366. An. Regni Angliæ XL.

was no Prince in his Days, that underſtood, or practis'd Civility and Honour better than Him. After a Royal Feaſt, which was provided ready at the deſign'd place of Enterview, the Prince took Horſe, and the King with him, and ſo they rode toward Bourdeaux, the Prince all along giving the King the Right Hand; he would by no means ſuffer it to be otherwiſe. This was the true way of Judgement to look upon Perſons, not as they were thrô the Circumſtances of Fortune, a Priſoner of War, as the King of France had been; or a poor Depoſed, Exiled Prince, as this Don Pedro was now; but, as they were indeed, as Gods Vicegerents, and bore the Diſtinguiſhing Character of Sacred Majeſty. As they rode thus together, King Don Pedro declared very pithily, "how his Baſtard-Brother had driven him out of his Realm of Caſtille, "and he mightily exclaim'd on the great Defection of his People, and the Diſloyalty "of his Grandees, ſhewing, how they had all forſaken Him; except that Loyal Knight, which was there with him, named Don Hernando del Caſtro. The Prince with much Diſcretion began to comfort him; "deſiring him not to be too much dejected, or caſt "down; for thô as then he had loſt all, yet he truſted God Almighty was able to re-"ſtore him to all again, and to give him beſides, an opportunity of taking Vengeance "of his Enemies. Thus they diſcourſed all the way, till they came to Bourdeaux, to the Stately Abbey of St. Andrew, where the Prince and Princeſs kept their Court. And immediately the King was conducted to a Fair Chamber, ready prepared for his Apartment. When Don Pedro had here changed his Apparel, he went to pay his Reſpects to the Princeſs, and the Great Ladies with her; of whom he was received with extraordinary Courteſie. I purpoſely omit all the Masks and Balls, Feaſts, Sports, and other Entertainments, and Diverſions, wherewith the Generous Prince of Wales and his Beautifull Princeſs ſought to mitigate the troubled thoughts of the Unfortunate Don Pedro; and ſhall make haſte to declare, how this Exiled King ſucceeded with the Prince, his Couſin; whom he found very full of Concern for him, and ready to embrace his Intereſt heartily; althô ſome of his Council adviſed him to the Contrary; as we ſhall now ſee.

VII. Before Don Pedro himſelf was come to Bourdeaux, ſeveral Diſcreet Perſons of the Princes Council, as well Gaſcogners, as Engliſhmen, who ſincerely ſought both his Welfare and Honour, and reſolv'd, while they liv'd to do ſo, ſpake to him ſuch words, as theſe, to divert him from abetting that unhappy Prince's Quarrel. "Sir (ſaid they) "Your Royal Highneſs hath often heard, That He, who embraceth much, hath the "weaker hold: Now it is moſt certain, that You are a Prince the moſt Praiſed, Ho-"noured, and admired of any in the World; and that on this ſide the Sea You poſſeſs "large Territories and Dominions (Bleſſed be God!) in full Peace and Tranquillity. "There is no King either far or near, that dares at this preſent diſpleaſe You; Your "Name is ſo renowned for Noble Chevalry, Succeſs, and good Fortune. It would there-"fore well become Your Princely Wiſdom to reſt Content with what You have; and not "to attempt any thing, that may leſſen You either in the Eſteem, or the Affections of "the World. Sir, this We ſay not without a good Deſign: For We are very well in-"formed, how Don Pedro, King of Caſtille, is a very haughty Perſon, exceeding Wicked "and Cruel, and abounding with many evil Qualities, and he hath cauſed many Noble-"men to loſe their Heads, and to come to an untimely end, without the leaſt Law or "Reaſon; and hath put to Death (as it is reported thrô all Spain) his own Queen, your "Couſin, Daughter to the Duke of Bourbon. And beſides all this, he is look'd upon, "as an Enemy to Holy Church, and hath incurred the Cenſures thereof before now, and "at this time alſo ſtands again Excommunicate by the Pope of Rome; and hath all a-"long reign'd as a Tyrant, and without the leaſt pretence of Reaſon, hath made War up-"on the King of Aragon, and alſo upon the King of Navarre, *and would have thruſt "them from their Inheritance by force of Arms; and indeed his unreaſonable Cruelty "to his Baſtard Brethren, have forced them in their own defence to take Arms againſt "him; till now at laſt by his own Demerits he is thruſt out of his Kingdom. Where-"fore Sir, You are to conſider, that what he now ſuffers are but as ſo many Rods and "ſtrokes of Divine Vengeance, to chaſtiſe him, and to ſet him as an Example for all "*Chriſtian Kings, that they may be afraid to do, as he hath done. With theſe Words, or the like, was the Prince adviſed, before Don Pedro arrived at Bayonne, and the Prince was well enough ſatisfied of the truth of what was laid to his Charge; but this was the thing that he was chiefly moved at, to ſee a Baſtard uſurp a Crown from the Right Heir, and ſo the Fundamental Law of Succeſſion to be broken; which he look'd upon as a Matter of high Concern to all Kings and Princes; and that ſo ill a Precedent was not to be ſuffer'd. "My Lords, ſaid he, I verily believe, that this

Advice

"Advice of Yours is Cordial, and proceeds from a good purpose; and I question not, but that
"You all intend my Honour and Interest, as much as in You lies: Nor will I deny,
"but that I am well informed of the Life and Manners of this King, Don Pedro; and
"also I know and believe, that He has committed horrible Crimes without Number,
"whereby he has reduced himself to this forlorn Condition. But that which stirreth Us "up, and gives Us Courage to take his Part, is this; It is no way convenient,
"that a Bastard should hold a Kingdom, as by Inheritance, and thrust out his Legiti- "mate Brother, true Heir to the Land. For this violent and unlawfull Interruption
"of Rightfull Succession, is a Matter, which no Kings or Kings Sons, ought by any "means to permit, or so much as connive at; Because it is of unspeakable Prejudice
"to the State and Dignity Royal, and of evil Example. Not to say, that the King,
"my Father, and this King, Don Pedro, have for several Years been ally'd together
"by frequent and manifold Confederations: So that by all means We are bound to as- "sist him, in case, that he require Us so to do. Thus was the Prince disposed in his Mind, and thus he answer'd his Council, and they could by no means remove him from his purpose; for he was more and more resolved upon the Matter.

VIII. But when King Don Pedro was now come to the Prince himself, and was with him in his City of Bourdeaux, he raised much Compassion also in the Prince, and confirmed him much more in his Resolution: For he humbled himself before him greatly, and offer'd him many Royal Gifts, promising to make him Lord of Biscay, and of the Castle of Urdiales, and also to make his Son Edward, King of Galizia, and that he would present unto him, and his Captains and Souldiers, all his Goods and Riches, which he had left behind him in the Realm of Castille; because he durst not trust them under so small a Guard, as his whole Retinue made: But that they were in so sure Keeping, that none knew where they were, but himself. And these Golden Promises especially pleased the Knights and Captains thereabout; for most Men are moved by the consideration of Advantage; but chiefly the Common sort of Souldiers, who fight more for Booty, than Honour. Particularly Don Pedro declared publickly and solemnly, before the Prince and his whole Council, how Gratefull he would be, and how he would not only be just, but bountifull, in satisfying every Man; if the Prince would but undertake to bring him again into his Kingdom. Then the Prince was advised to call together all his Barons throughout the Principality of Aquitaine, and so Letters were written, and Messengers sent forth, and the Lords and Knights of the Country Summon'd in from all Parts; as the Earl of Armagnac, the Earl of Cominges, the Lord of Albret, the Vicount of Carmaine, the Captal of Busche, the Lord of Cande, the Vicount of Chastillon, the Lord del' Esparre, the Lord de Lescar, the Lord of Rozen, the Lord of Chaumont, the Lord of Mucidan, the Lord of Courton, the Lord of Pincornet; and all the other Barons and Knights of Gascogne. The Earl of Foix also was Summon'd in; but he desired to be excused, because of a disease in his leg, which hindred him from riding; however he sent thither certain of his Council, to act and do, as should seem requisite in his Name. To this Parliament thus holden in the City of Bourdeaux, came all the Earls, Vicounts, Barons, and Wisemen of Aquitaine, as from Saintogne, Poictou, Quercy, Limosin, Gascogne, and Guienne, who being all met, held a Council for three days, about the business of King Don Pedro of Spain, who was all the while present among them, with the Prince, his Cousin, arguing and reasoning to confirm them on his side. At last they advis'd the Prince to send into England to the King, his Father, to know his pleasure, what was best to be done in that case. So there were Four of the Prince's Knights pitch'd upon to do this Message to King Edward, as the Lord Roger de la Warre, Sr. Neale, Loringe, Sr. John Pamiers, and Sr. Elias Pamiers; and so for the present the Parliament brake up, every Man returning home to his own place: But King Don Pedro tarried still at Bourdeaux with the Prince and Princess; who Honoured him, and Feasted him Magnificently.

IX. The mean while the Four Knights above named went on board, and arrived safely at Southampton; from thence they rode to London, where they heard the King was at Windsor. Being come thither, they were extream Welcom to the King and Queen, both for their Son the Prince's Sake, and also their own, for they were Persons of noted Worth and Honour: Then they deliver'd their Letters to the King, who open'd, and read them, and after a little pause upon the Matter, said unto them, "Gentlemen, go You for the present to your Lodgings, and when I have confer'd with "my Council, I'll return You an answer. With these words the Knights were well satisfied, and return'd the next day for London; shortly after which the King also return'd to Westminster, and with him the most and Chiefest of his Council; as his Sons, John of Gaunt Duke of Lancaster, Edmund of Langley Earl of Cambridge, Richard Fitz-Alan Earl of Arundel, William Montagu Earl of Salisbury, the Lord Walter Manny, the Lord Reginald Cobham, the Lord Henry Piercy, the Lord Ralph Nevil, and several others; besides these Three Prelates, Simon Sudbury Bishop of London, William Edington Bishop of Winchester, and John Bokingham Bishop of Lincoln. By all these, after a long and serious debate upon the Subject of the Prince's Letters, and the Request which he had made unto the King, his Father, it was at last concluded, to be a thing both just and reasonable, for the Prince to take upon him the Protection of the King of Spain; and thereupon Credential Letters were framed, directed from the King of England and his Council, to the Prince of Aquitaine and his Council; and the Duke of Lancaster had leave to go over to visit, and confer with the Prince, his Brother, whom he desired to serve in this Expedition. So the Messengers returned with these Letters, and the Duke in their Company, and came to Bourdeaux, where they found the Prince and Don Pedro; to the former of whom, they deliver'd their Letters from the King, his Father. Upon this a new day was forthwith assign'd for the Parliament to sit again; at which time there assembled at Bourdeaux all the forenamed Lords of Aquitaine, and Others, that were Summon'd thereto: And then the King of England's Letters were openly read in full Parliament. The Purport was this, "That the King and his Council were well pleased, that the Prince, his "Son, should in the Name of God and St. George, seriously undertake to restore "King Don Pedro to his Throne and Heritage; which his Bastard-Brother had wrong-"fully taken from him, without either Law or Reason; and as it appeareth, traite-"rously deposed him. That the King thought himself obliged to wish his Son to do "thus much for his Cousin, the King of Castille, not only for the sake of Justice and "Honour, but also for the Common Interest and Right of Kings; and especially be-"cause of certain Alliances, Treaties, and Confederations, heretofore made between "them, which imported a mutual Assistance in case of Necessity, if either Party were "thereto required: Wherefore he desired all his good Friends and Subjects in those "Parts to be Aiding and Assisting to his Son the Prince in that Matter, as well as if "he himself were there, and undertook the Expedition in his own Person. When the Nobles and Captains of Aquitaine heard these Letters read distinctly, and perceived the pleasure of the King, and of his Son, the Prince, their Lord; then they all readily gave in their answer with one consent; "Sir, We shall gladly obey the Command "of our Sovereign Lord the King of England, and of Your Royal Highness, it being "our Duty so to do; and therefore We now declare, that in this Expeditiom We "shall readily serve both Your Highness, and also King Don Pedro. But Sir, We "desire to know, from whom We are to expect our Wages; for it will be difficult "to oblige Men of War to go abroad into a strange Country, without such kind of "Considerations. Then the Prince turned his Face to Don Pedro, and said, "My "Lord, O King, You hear, what our Subjects say: Pray, please to answer them Your "self, as to this point: For it is your Concern so to do. To this Don Pedro answer'd, "Most Dear Cousin, as far as the Gold, Silver, and other Treasure, which I "have brought hither with me (and I'll assure You, 'tis not the Thirtieth Part of "what I've left behind) as far as that will go, I shall now immediately resign that "entirely to your Disposé, to be bestowed among our Friends, your Subjects. And "for what shall remain, if God Almighty send Us Success, I shall make full amends in "all things; of this, Be this Honourable Assembly my Witness. "Sir, said the Prince, "You say well, and as Circumstances stand, We can expect no more of You. As for "the Remainder therefore, I my self will be indebted to these Gentlemen, and pay "them as occasion shall require; all which, my Lord, O King, I shall lend unto You, "expecting to be repaid upon our good Success in Castille. Hereupon Don Pedro renew'd his Promise, to be more than Just in all manner of liberal Retributions, acknowledging with many fair expressions of Gratitude, the extraordinary Favour, Grace, and Courtesie, which the Prince had been pleased to shew unto him.

An. Dom. 1366. An. Regni Angliæ XL.

X. Now in this Council there were many Noble Personages of great Experience in Affairs of that Nature, and who especially understood the difficulties usually attending an Expedition into Spain: Such as the Lord John Chandos, the Lord John Greilly, Captal of Busche, the Earl of Armagnac, the Lord of Pamiers, and others, who had been more than once in Spain to help the Good King Alphonso against the Moors. These all concluded, that it was absolutely necessary, if they resolved to go into Spain, to bring over the King of Navarre to their ſide: For they could not paſs, but thrô his Country, over the Pyrenean Mountains, by the ſtreights of Roncevaux. Which Paſſage it was doubted, whether they might obtain; becauſe Charles the Preſent King of Navarre, and Don Henry, the Baſtard, had lately made a ſtrict Alliance together. After much altercation upon this point alſo, the Parliament was prorogued to another day, when they were to meet in the City of Bayonne, about ſix Leagues from the Confines of Navarre, and the Prince was by his Ambaſſadors to requeſt the King of Navarre's Preſence at that Aſſembly. So the Prince ſent unto him the Lord John Chandos, and the Lord Thomas Felton, who behav'd themſelves with ſuch Diſcretion, and gave him ſuch Reaſons, that he faithfully engaged both by word of Mouth, and alſo under his Hand and Seal, not to fail on the appointed day of being preſent at the Parliament at Bayonne: And with this News the two Knights returned to the Prince. AN. DOM. 1366. An. Regni Angliæ XL.

to

The day appointed being come, there came to Bayonne King Don Pedro, Edward Prince of Aquitaine and of Wales, the Captal of Buſche, the Earl of Armagnac, the Lord of Albret; and all the Barons of Gaſcogne, Guienne, Poictou, Quercy, Rovergue, Saintogne and Limoſin; and thither alſo came Charles, the King of Navarre in Perſon, to whom the Prince and King Don Pedro ſhew'd extraordinary reſpect, the rather, becauſe they deſign'd to prepare him for their opinion. This Parliament ſat thus at Bayonne five days together: For the Prince and his Friends had much adoe to perſwade the King of Navarre, he being a Perſon of that temper, as to be ſtiff, and almoſt inexorable, when he ſaw any One ſtand in need of him. But at laſt, when he conſider'd the great Power of the Prince, and that He, who now deſired him, if too much provoked, might compell him, on certain conſiderations, he was content to renounce the League he had made with Henry the Baſtard, and ſware, and promiſed under his Hand and Seal, Peace, Love, and firm Alliance and Confederation to King Don Pedro; as likewiſe Don Pedro did unto Him, by the Prince of Wales his menagement and contrivance. The Latter, as true King of Caſtille, engaging by Covenant, then Engroſſed and Sealed, to give and reſtore unto the King of Navarre, and to his Heirs for ever, all the Land of [y] Groigne, as it lies on both ſides the River, and alſo all the Lands of Salvatierra, with the Town, Caſtle, and all the Appurtenances: Alſo the Town of St. John Pie du Port, and the Marches thereabout; which Lands, Towns, Caſtles, and Seigniories, he had before violently taken from the ſaid King of Navarre: And moreover, that there ſhould be paid unto the ſaid King of Navarre 20000 Franks to open the Paſſages of his Country, and to permit all manner of Men of War to paſs peaceably, and to help them with Victuals, and other Proviſion for their Money: Which Summ of 20000 Franks, King Don Pedro obliged himſelf to pay to the ſaid King of Navarre; and then the Black-Prince engaged himſelf to the Barons of Aquitain, for the Wages of them and of their ſeveral Retinues; and King Don Pedro engaged himſelf for the ſame to the Prince, and particularly [z] enter'd a Bond to diſburſe unto the Prince 550000 Florens of Florence, of good Gold, and of lawfull weight, for paying his Army. For the Performance of all which Covenants, he moreover left in Aquitain, as Pledges and Hoſtages, the [a] Three Princeſſes, his Daughters, viz. the Lady Beatrice, the Lady Conſtance, and the Lady Iſabella; the Firſt whereof died ſoon after without Iſſue, the Second became in time Second Wife to John of Gaunt Duke of Lancaſter, and the Third was Married to Edmund Earl of Cambridge, another of King Edward's Sons. We find alſo, [b] that among other, either Pledges, or Gifts, which were left with the Prince, there was a Rich Table of King Don Pedro's, wonderfull Sumptuous, and all Decked with Gold and Precious Stones; which ſome Years after, in conſideration of 300 Marks only, paſſed from the Prince to Dr. Thomas Arundel Biſhop of Ely. And the ſaid Biſhop left it by Will as an Implement for his Succeſſors, in his Houſe at Ely for ever. But time, or Avarice, or Sacrilege, or ſome other accident, have long ſince devoured the very Table it ſelf. And beſides all this, Don Pedro being extreamly pleaſed with the Prince's Alacrity to do him ſo conſiderable a piece of Service, for a perpetual teſtimony of his Gratitude to all Generations, gave yet a further expreſſion of his kind Reſentment of theſe Favours: And therefore about this time, reſolving what in him lay, to Eternize the Memory of the King of England, and of the Merits of the Prince, his Son, toward him; as well for a laſting Monument of his own acknowledgements, for ſuch ſingular Grace and Goodneſs extended to him, as for the greateſt Encreaſe of Honour, that he was poſſibly out of his beſt hopes able to Fancy for the Prince of Aquitain and Wales, and for the Crown of England, He granted unto King Edward and his [y] An Orogne?

[z] Selden's Titles of Honour 1. Part. c. 8. §. 38.

[a] Holinſh. Engl. Chron. p. 973.

[b] Godw. Catal. Bps p. 273.

An. Dom. 1366. An. Regni Angliæ XL.

Son, the Prince, and to their Heirs and Succeſſors, Kings and Princes of England for ever; that whenſoever it ſhould pleaſe any of them to be in Perſon in the Wars with any King of Caſtille, againſt any King of Granada, or againſt any other Enemy of the Chriſtian Faith, they ſhould have the Chief Place in the Vanguard above all other Princes of Chriſtendom; and that altho at ſuch a time neither of them ſhould be there in Perſon, yet there ſhould always be provided by the Kings of Caſtille and their Succeſſors, a Standard of the Arms of England, to be born in the ſame place for the Honour of England. A Copy of which Grant, becauſe it was never publiſhed, but by the Learned Mr. Selden, nor ſo much as mention'd in the Stories of either Nation, I ſhall ſet down in Engliſh, referring the Curious Reader for the Original Latine to the [c] fore-mention'd Excellent Author.

[c] Selden's Titles of Honour 1 Par. c. 8. §. V. §§. 38. p. 266. ex Theſaurario Regio apud Weſtmonaſt. & ex Bibl. Cotton.

XI. "DON PEDRO, by the Grace of God, King of Caſtille and Leon, to all "as well Preſent as to come, who ſhall ſee, read, or hear theſe Preſent Letters (wiſh-"eth) Greeting, and that they yield full Credit to the ſame. Whereas in Largeſs, "Donation, and Conceſſion of Privileges, Liberties, Franchiſes, and in the Prerogative "of Honours, We ought to approve our ſelves Liberal and Gracious to thoſe, from "whom We acknowledge to have received manifold Benefits and Honours; and where-"as the moſt Illuſtrious King of England, and Edward his Eldeſt Son, Prince of A-"quitain and of Wales, our Couſins, have in times paſt favourably befriended Us and "our Predeceſſors, Kings of Caſtille, and eſpecially when lately Henry, late Earl of "Traſtamare, who being united with certain of his Complices, invaded our Realms, u-"ſurped, and alſo forceably poſſeſſed them in Thieviſh and Hoſtile manner, and un-"duly thus poſſeſſed, detaineth them, did perſecute Us from Kingdom to Kingdom, "from Dominion to Dominion, and from Place to Place, even unto Death; from "which Perſecution by the kind Reception of the ſaid Lord, the Prince, given unto "Us in his Country, We have been delivered, and by him and his People comforted, "and Honourably received and entertain'd; Now We, being mindfull of the ſaid Be-"nefit received, and in part of Recompence of the Premiſes, and otherwiſe, of our cer-"tain knowledge, ſpecial Gift and Royal Donation and Power, do Give and Grant, "for Us, our Heirs, and Succeſſors, Kings of Caſtille, by theſe preſents, unto the ſaid "moſt Illuſtrious King of England, and unto Edward, his Eldeſt Son, Prince of Aqui-"tain and of Wales, that whenſoever the ſaid King and his Eldeſt Son, now being, "or their Heirs and Succeſſors, Kings of England, and their Eldeſt Sons, for the time "being, will come in their own Perſons to the War, which We, or our Heirs, the "Kings of Caſtille, ſhall have againſt the King of Granada, or other Enemies of the "Faith, that the ſaid Kings and their Eldeſt Sons ſhall have the Firſt Battail, or the "[d] la Delantera, before all the Chriſtians of the World, and at all times; but yet ſo, "that We and our Heirs, Kings of Caſtille, may ſet our Standards in the ſaid Battail, "together with the Standards of the King of England, or of his Eldeſt Son. Alſo, "that if it ſhall happen, that the ſaid Kings, or their Eldeſt Sons, ſhall not come to "the War, which We and our Heirs ſhall have againſt the King of Granada, or will "not, or cannot come, We Will and Grant, that One Standard of the Arms of the "King of England, ſhall always in the ſaid War be in the Firſt Battail, or en la De-"lantera, Honourably, as is fit, at the proper Coſts and Charges of Us and of our "Succeſſors, Kings of Caſtille. Alſo, becauſe the Country of our ſaid Kinſman did ſu-"ſtain many Loſſes, and innumerable Charges at the time, when he for our Succour "raiſed his Armies, as We ſaw with our own eyes, altho We bore it heavily; in re-"compence of the Premiſes, We Privilege, Will, and Grant, that all Men, Inhabitants, "Nobles, Travellers, of whatſoever State, Sex, or Condition they be, of the King-"dom, Country, and Dominion of England, and of the Principality of Aquitain, ſhall "be free from all [e] Pedage, * Fee, Cuſtom, Maletolt, or any other Impoſitions or Ex-"actions, impoſed, or hereafter to be impoſed in our Kingdoms; ſo that the ſaid Men "of the ſaid Kingdom, Country, and Dominion of England, and of the Principality "of Wales, in going, ſtaying, or returning thro our Kingdoms by Sea or by Land, ſhall "not be obliged to pay any Cuſtom, Pedage, Fee, Maletolt, or any other Impoſition "or Exaction; unleſs the ſaid Men ſhould buy any thing for the ſake of Merchandiſe, "or for Merchandiſing. In which caſe, whether they be bought for the ſake of Mer-"chandiſe, or no, by our Officers and Receivers of the ſaid Pedages, We will ſtand to "the Oath of the ſaid Men; of which things ſo bought for the cauſe of Merchandiſe, "they ſhall not be compelled to pay, nor ſhall any thing be exacted of them above what "other Merchants uſe to pay. And We ſwear on the Holy Goſpels of God, corpo-"rally by Us touched with our Hand, and promiſe in the Word of a King, to hold, [d] Ibi Delanterre, i.e. the forpart of the Horſe.

[e] Pedagium, tributum Domino loci ſolutum ab iis, qui per terram ejus pedibus iter conficiunt.

* Latinè, Leuda, quod lego, Feuda; Vid. Gloſſaria, Somneri, Skinneri, &c.

"fulfill,

"fulfill, and inviolably to observe the foresaid Concessions, Donations, and Privileges, AN. DOM. "and all and singular the things contained in these present Letters. In testimony where- 1366. "of, and of singular the Premises, and for their greater Confirmation, We have in Pre- An. Regni "sence of these (undernamed) subscribed with our own Hand, and caused our Seal to Angliæ "be affixed thereto in pendant: Willing and Granting, and also requiring You Master XL. "John de London, by Apostolick Authority Publick Notary, that to the perpetual Me- "mory of all and singular the Premises, You with the Present Witnesses would subscribe "and sign the present Letters with your usual Seal. Dated at Libourne of the Dioe- "cese of Bourdeaux, on the Twenty third of September, in the Year of our Lord One "Thousand Three Hundred Sixty Six; in Presence of our most Dear Cousin, the Lord "John Duke of Lancaster, Son of the King of England, and Brother of the said "Prince, and the Reverend Fathers in Christ, the Lord Elias Archbishop of Bour- "deaux, the Lord Bernard Bishop of Sainctogne, John Elect Bishop of Bath and "Welles, Chancellour of Aquitain, John Chandos Constable, and Thomas Felton "Seneschal of Aquitaine, Neal Loring Chamberlain of the said Prince, Baldwin Fre- "ville Seneschal of Sainctogne, and other Witnesses to the Premises.

[f] TO EL REY.

[f] i.e. I the King.

"And I John de London Clerk of the Dioecese of Winchester, by Apostolick Au- "thority Publick Notary, on the Eleventh day of the Month of February in the Year "of our Lord [g] aforesaid, in the Fifth Indiction, and in the Fifth Year of our most [g] i.e. 1365. "Holy Father in Christ, and our Lord, the Lord Urban the Fifth, by Divine Provi- "dence, the Pope, within the Castle of the City of Bayonne, in the Chappel of the "said Castle, was present, together with the Witnesses undernamed, when the said "Lord, King Pedro renewed and confirmed, and by his Oath, Established all and sin- "gular the Premises, touching with his own Hands the Holy Gospels of God, and "when the said King subscribed himself, with his own Hand, and Required, and en- "joyn'd me to subscribe my self to the Present Letters, and to set to my usual Seal. "The Witnesses, who were present at these things, together with me, are the Lord "Fryar [h] Martinez de Leyva, Master of the House of the Knighthood of Alcantara, [h] Frater Martinus Lupi, &c. "of the Order of Cisteaux, Roger Lord de la Warre, Gomez, [i] Tutor of the said Lord [i] Magister dicti "the King, Paulo Gabriel Citizen of Sevil, John Guttern Dean of the Church of Domini Regis, &c. "Segovia, and Master Robert Fregand Notary, Chancellour of the Lord, the fore- "said Prince of Aquitaine and of Wales.

And at this time it was also agreed, [k] that the Prince of Wales should have the Ca- [k] Selden ibid. stle of Vermejo, Lequitio, Bilbao, and Biscay, as also the Castle of Urdiales, to hold p. 270. to himself, and his Heirs and Successors for ever, and to dispose of them, as he should please, being wholly discharged of all Sovereignty and Resort, and as free, as the King had held it heretofore. And accordingly We find the Prince to use besides his for- mer Titles, that of Lord of Biscaye, and of the Castle of Ordiales; as in an Instrument, In Camerâ Ducatûs Lancastriæ. Vid. Sandford Geneal. hist. [l] bearing date the 8 day of October, in the Year 1370. An°. 44. Ed. 3. (Whereby he grants unto his Brother, John Duke of Lancaster, the Castle, Town, and Cha- stellanie of la Roche Sur Yon) he styles himself---Edward, Eldest Son of the King of p. 185.

France

An. Dom. 1366. An. Regni Angliæ XL.

France and of England, Prince of Aquitaine and of Wales, Duke of Cornwall, Earl of Cheſtre, Lord of Biſcaye, and of the Caſtle of Ordiales. And all theſe things were confirmed by King Don Pedro under the Great Seal of Caſtille; both the Originals and Duplicates thereof remaining [m] with Us in England to this day; which ſhew alſo, that to the King's Seal, his Oath was afterwards added, being ſolemnly taken before the High-Altar in the Church of [n] Bourdeaux.

[m] In Theſaur. Regis apud Weſtmonaſt. & in Bibl. Cotton. ut ante.

[n] Selden Burgos; ſed hæc Urbs in Hiſpaniâ; & tum fieri intelligatur poſt Victoriam à Principe partam. Potiùs verò Bourdeaux legendum duxi.

XII. When all theſe things were fully Ratified, Eſtabliſhed, and Confirmed, and all the great Men knew what they were to do; the Prince of Aquitain ſent his Heralds into Spain, to certain Knights of England and Gaſcogne, Subjects to him and his Father, ſignifying unto them privately, how it was his Pleaſure, that they ſhould preſently upon ſight of his Letters take their leaves of King Henry, the Baſtard, and come away with all ſpeed to him; for he ſaid, he had need of their Service, and ſhould ſpeedily have an occaſion to employ them. When the Heralds had deliver'd their Letters to the Chief Captains in Caſtille, and had ſecretly confer'd with them, ſo that they perfectly underſtood the Prince's Deſign, they embraced the firſt Opportunity of taking their leaves of King Henry in the moſt obliging manner they could deviſe, without making the leaſt Diſcovery of the Prince's Intention. So that King Henry, who indeed was of a Liberal, Courteous, and Honourable Diſpoſition, after many thanks for their good Service, and many ample Gifts and Largeſſes, diſmiſs'd them, and gave them his Letters for their free Paſſage thrô his Country. Whereupon Sr. Euſtace Dambreticourt, Sr. Hugh Calverley, Sr. Walter Hewet, Sr. John Devereux, Sr. Matthew Gournay, Sr. John Neville, and all the other Lords, Knights, and Eſquires of the Prince's Court, with their Troops and Retinues, having the Baſtards Paſsport, began their March out of Spain with all Expedition for fear of a Countermand, if the Matter ſhould take Air. When this was known to the Captains of the Companions, who were ſpread abroad in the Country, and underſtood nothing of the Prince's Letters, they gather'd together, as ſpeedily, as they might, intending to march after them into France: For they thought by the other Captains departure, that the War was again open between the two Crowns. The Chief Leaders of theſe Companions were Sr. Robert Briquet, Sr. John Charnells, Sr. Robert Cheney, Sr. Ralph Camois, Sr. Perdiccas of Albret, Nandon of Bergerac, Lanny the Little Mechlin, the Bourg de l' Eſparre, Batiller Eſpiot, Edmund Ortingo, Captain Humphry Perot of Savoy, the Bourg of Bartuel, Sr. Garſes du Chaſtel, and others, who all rode after the Engliſh Captains without any ſtop, or impediment from King Henry; for as yet he knew not, that the Prince of Wales had deſigned to bring back his Brother Don Pedro into Caſtille. For if he had known it, he would not ſo eaſily have given them leave to depart, ſince it was in his Power, either by fair or foul means to have ſtopped them, now the greater part of the Army was gone away before. But as ſoon as he was thoroughly acquainted with the Prince of Wales his Reſolution, at firſt he took no great notice of it; but only complain'd to Sr. Bertram of Clequin, who tarried ſtill with him; "Sr. Bertram, "ſays he, pray do but obſerve the Pragmatical Humour of this boiſtrous Prince of Wales! "I never wrong'd him either in Word or Deed in all my Life, and yet I am inform'd, "that he intends to make War upon Us, and bring back again that Jew, who calls "himſelf King of Spain, into this our Realm by force of Arms: But perhaps he may "repent his Bargain; for if I beat him, I'll make him pay dearly for it. Now, Sr. "Bertram, let Us hear, what is your opinion, as to theſe Matters. Then Sr. Bertram anſwer'd, "May it pleaſe Your Majeſty, this Prince of Wales, whom You ſpeak of, is "ſo Valiant a Knight; that if once he ſets about an Enterpriſe, he will proſecute it "with all the Courage and Vigour imaginable, thereby to obtain his end, if it be poſ-"ſible. Therefore, Sir, this is that which I have to ſay, You ſhould cauſe all the "Paſſages and Straights of your Kingdom to be well kept, and defended on all ſides, "ſo that none may paſs or repaſs without your Licence. And Sir, by Princely Cle-"mency, Affability, and Bounty, preſerve your ſelf in the eſteem of your People; "leſt any of them ſhould flinch from you in your neceſſity: For nothing is more un-"ſtable, or leſs to be rely'd on, than the fickle Favour of the Common People. I "am ſure, as for France, You may command many Gallant Knights from thence; and "I doubt not of finding many Friends and Favourers of your Cauſe, both there, "and in Bretagne; and Sir, I ſhall go thither my ſelf for that purpoſe, and will bring "You as many as I can. Only remember to preſerve your ſelf in the Eſteem of your "People, and to keep Unity and Peace at home. By my Faith, ſaid King Henry, You "ſay well; and while You are providing Us Friends abroad, I'll take Care at home to "menage the Reſidue, according to your Counſel.

Soon

Soon after this Sr. Bertram went for France, taking his way thrô Aragon, where the King received him very kindly; and having tarried at Saragoza fifteen days, he took his leave and went to Mompellier in Languedoc, where he found the Duke of Anjou, who alſo made him very welcome; for he loved him entirely. And having tarried ſome time there, he went the next way for Paris; where he was likewiſe very welcom to the King. AN. DOM. 1366. An. Regni Angliæ XL.

XIII. Now when the News was ſpread abroad thrô Spain, Aragon, France, and other parts of the World, that the Prince of Wales had engag'd himſelf to reſtore Don Pedro to his Kingdom; many men wonder'd at it extreamly, and divers, and different Opinions were given thereupon. Some ſaid, "how the Prince was ſo enflamed with "the Love of Arms, that he cared not for whom he undertook a War, whether for a "Man of Vertue or no, nor whether his Cauſe were good or bad, ſo there was but "Fighting in the caſe. Others ſaid, "it proceeded from great Preſumption, occaſion'd "from his former Succeſſes; and that it was rather an effect of Vanity, than Judgment. But the Frenchmen commonly talk'd, "that it was meer Envy; for that the Prince "was in a manner angry, and repin'd at the Honour, which Sr. Bertram of Clequin had "obtain'd in Conquering the Realm of Caſtille, in the Name of King Henry, who was "by him made King of that Country. But ſurely, thô [a] Mezeray himſelf is of this Mind, who ever diſcreetly and impartially weighs the Matter, will eaſily confeſs, that Sr. Bertram of Clequin was no adequate Object for that Great Prince's Envy; eſpecially at this time, when his Condition was ſo vaſtly beneath, and his Renown no way to be compared to that of our Engliſh Prince; nor could any juſt Eſtimator of things much magnifie that Action of Sr. Bertram's, who being aſſiſted by the Pope, the King of France, and the King of Aragon, had made ſhift to put them to flight, who had no Power to reſiſt; to put him out of his Throne, whom none of his Subjects would uphold in it; and to Conquer, where there was no oppoſition in the World. Sr. Bertram's high Worth and Valour I readily acknowledge; which yet afterwards became far more notable, than it was at this time: But I muſt needs tax the Vanity of thoſe Frenchmen, who make the Prince of Wales, a Man whoſe Honour the Greateſt Monarchs of the Earth might Envy, to be jealous of the Glory of ſo mean a Perſon, as Sr. Bertram at that time was, and one, who both before and after this, was made a Priſoner by his Arms. But thoſe, who had leaſt prejudice, ſaid, as well Frenchmen, as others, 'that it was a Generous Pity, and a Princely Love to Equity and Juſtice, that moved Prince Edward to abett the quarrel of an Exiled King, and to reſtore him again to his "Inheritance; for it was neither Lawfull nor Reaſonable, for a Baſtard to wear a Crown, "and uſurp the Name of a King from the Right Heir.

[a] Mezeray p. 76. ad hunc annum.

XIV. Such different thoughts in ſeveral places were entertain'd by the Knights and Gentlemen, who were curious to enquire after Martial Affairs: But King Henry for his part, being quicken'd by Sr. Bertram of Clequin, made all the Intereſt he could to fruſtrate the endeavours and deſigns of his Enemies: And firſt he wrote very earneſtly to Pedro King of Aragon, his Confederate and Ally, and ſent his Letters by Diſcreet and Honourable Perſons, deſiring him, that he would by no means agree or make any Compoſition with the Prince of Aquitain, nor with any of his Allies; for he promiſed on his part to remain his good Neighbour and faithfull Friend. Upon which Meſſage the King of Aragon, who dearly loved Don Henry, and had oftentimes experienced King Pedro's Cruelty, returned him Letters, with full aſſurance, that thô he ſhould loſe half his Realm therefore, he would make no Agreement with the Prince, which ſhould be to his Prejudice; but that he would never come to any manner of accord with Don Pedro: And further he promiſed to keep his Country open for all Men of War, that would come to his Aſſiſtance; but to cloſe all the Paſſages againſt thoſe, who came to trouble or moleſt him. All which promiſes he kept very punctually: For when he knew, that Don Pedro was abetted by the Prince, and that the Companions were marching toward Bourdeaux to joyn them, he preſently ſtopped all the Paſſages of his Kingdom, and kept them ſtrictly, and ſet Men of War on the Mountains to defend the Paſſages and Streights of Catalunna; ſo that none could paſs without expoſing themſelves to imminent Danger. But for all this the Companions found another way, thô they ſuffer'd many Hazards and Difficulties; before they could get rid of thoſe traps ſet for them in Aragon. Yet at laſt they came to the Marches of the Earldom of Foix, where they found that Countrey alſo cloſed againſt them: For the Earl would not by any means permit ſuch a ſort of Pillagers to paſs thrô his Land.

XV. The mean while Prince Edward employ'd all his thoughts Night and Day, how he might to his Honour perform this Expedition; and now he was concerned, how theſe

An. Dom. 1366. An. Regni Angliæ XL.

theſe Companions, who had already proffer'd him their Service, might be ſafely brought into Aquitaine; for he heard, how the Paſſages of Aragon, were cloſed up, and that now they were upon the Marches of the Earldom of Foix in much trouble and more danger. Wherefore he began to doubt, leſt the Baſtard Henry and the King of Aragon together, ſhould, by thus ſtreightly dealing with theſe Companions, who were in all to the Number of 12000 Men, prevail ſo, as either thrô fear of Danger, or Hope of advantage, to oblige them to act on the other ſide; which he reſolv'd, if poſſible, to prevent, becauſe they were all Expert and Valiant Men. Then he determin'd to ſend the Lord John Chandos to retain them for his Service, and alſo to treat with the Earl of Foix, deſiring him in the Prince's Name to do no harm to them; on which account he promis'd him, that whatever Damage they ſhould do in his Country he would make him double Amends therefore. This Buſineſs Sr. John Chandos undertook to do for his Lord; and ſo he firſt rode to the City of Dax in Gaſcogne, whence he continued his journeys, till he came to Foix, and here he ſo well menaged the Earl, that he conſented to all that he requeſted of him. Then the Lord Chandos rode onward, till he came to Belcayne, where he found the Companions, and fully agreed with their Captains, and retain'd them to ſerve the Prince in his Spaniſh Expedition; for ſuch and ſuch Conſiderations, which the Lord Chandos engaged by Oath ſhould be performed. This done, he return'd to the Earl of Foix again, and deſired him, that theſe People, being now retained in the Prince's Service, might find no lett or hindrance from him; but that he would freely permit them to paſs by one of the ſides of his Country. The Earl of Foix, who had a great Reſpect for the Prince, beſides, that he held his Lands of him, to do him a pleaſure, conſented; on condition they ſhould do no harm by Spoil, or otherwiſe to him, his Lands, or People: Sr. John engaged they ſhould forbear all Violence and Rapine, and then he ſent an Eſquire and an Herald to the Companions, with the Articles of the Treaty, made by him on their behalf with the Earl of Foix; after which he return'd to the Prince, and gave him an account of his Succeſs, wherewith the Prince was well ſatisfied: For he was very earneſtly bent on this Expedition.

XVI. The Black-Prince was now in the Flower of luſty Manhood, being in the Thirty ſixth Year of his Age, of full Strength of Body, and in perfect Health, of undaunted Courage and Reſolution, all well temper'd with Experience and Diſcretion; and he was never weary nor cloy'd with War, from the firſt time he bore Arms; but was always greedy of hazardous Enterpriſes and honourable Dangers. But to ſay the Truth, as for this Expedition into Spain, wherein he intended to advance and reſettle King Pedro in his Throne, from which he had been depoſed by Violence, he was moved thereto from Principles of Honour and Equity, and out of a compaſſionate Regard to Don Pedro's miſerable Change of Fortune. For however he might perhaps ſeem to deſerve as bad or worſe meaſure; yet he rightly concluded, that no Subjects, much leſs a Baſtard-Brother, had either Law or Reaſon to call their Sovereign Lord to an account, much leſs to puniſh him in ſuch a manner. He often ſpake to his Lords and Knights, eſpecially to the Lord John Chandos, and the Lord Thomas Felton, concerning this his intended Journey; and particularly once he demanded of them, what they thought of the matter. And thoſe two Lords anſwer'd him, how indeed they thought nothing but well, for the Cauſe was juſt, and his Counſels proportionable to the end; but they continued, "Sir, without doubt this is a greater "Enterpriſe beyond Compare, than it was to thruſt King Pedro out of his Kingdom: "For he was generally hated, and when he thought to have made his Part good, all "Men forſook him. But now at this preſent the Baſtard King is actually poſſeſt of "all that Realm and is confirmed the more ſtrongly in the ſaid Poſſeſſion, by being "Maſter of the Hearts and Affections of all the Nobles, Prelates, and the whole Bo-"dy of the Kingdom: For they have unanimouſly received him for their King, and "his Children after him (having for ever excluded Don Pedro and his Heirs) and "they have promiſed to uphold him in that Eſtate to the utmoſt extent of their "Lives and Fortunes. Wherefore Sir, it concerns You to take along with you a Roy-"al Army; for beſides the Alliances which the Baſtard hath made, or may make, You "ſhall find the whole Power of Spain and Aragon againſt You. Theſe things ſaid the "Prince, we have fully conſider'd, but what think you as to the Nerves of this "War, which ought not to be the laſt Conſideration? Sir (replied the Lord Chan-"dos) I would adviſe your Royal Highneſs to break the beſt part of your Plate "and Treaſure, of which you have great Abundance, and convert it all ro Money, to "beſtow largely among the Companions and other your Souldiers; becauſe 'tis only

"for

"for your Sake that they are willing to go; but as for Don Pedro they would not ſtirr "a foot, either for the Love they bear to his Perſon, or the Faith they have in his "Promiſes: Beſides all which, You would do well, Sir, to ſend into England to the "King your Father, deſiring him to furniſh you towards this expenſive Enterpriſe with "an 100000 Franks, which Summ the French King is obliged ſhortly to pay to your "Father, as being a part of the Remainder of King John's Ranſome. And Sir, at this "time collect by your Intereſt among your Friends all the Money you can poſſibly "(for you will find need enough) without Taxing or Aſſeſſing your Subjects; for "while you keep their Hearts, you cannot be poor. This, and ſeveral other prudent Directions were readily followed by the Prince, who ſoon after cauſed Two parts in Three of all his Plate to be melted down and coined into Money, to be beſtowed liberally among his Men of War; and he ſent alſo into England to the King his Father for the foreſaid 100000 Franks. King Edward, who well knew what an important matter his Son was going about, and how Expenſive his Deſign muſt needs be, granted him the ſaid Summ at the firſt word, and preſently directed his Letters to the French King, willing him to pay the Money to the Princes Uſe. And accordingly the 100000 Franks were paid upon ſight of King Edwards Letters, and ſo brought to the Prince, who diſtributed all among his Souldiers.

One day as Prince Edward was in his Chamber in the City of Angouleſme, together with certain Lords and Knights of England, Poictou and Gaſcogne, after many pleaſant Diſcourſes and Raileries, and other Diverſions, they fell again to touch upon the Expedition then in hand, and this was in that while, that the Lord Chandos was gone to treat with the Earl of Foix and the Companions, of which we ſpake but now. At laſt the Prince turned his head toward the Lord of Albret, and ſaid, "My Lord "of Albret, with what number of Men of Arms can you furniſh Us in this Expediti- "on. Why Sir (replied he) if I deſire my Friends, I ſhall eaſily find you a Thouſand "Spears, and yet leave enough at home to defend my Land. Well (ſaid the Prince) "that's nobly ſpoken, and ſo turning himſelf towards the Lord Thomas Felton and other Knights of England, he continued in Engliſh, "By my Faith, a Man ought to ſet "a Value upon that Land, where there are ſuch Barons, as can ſerve their Lord with "a 1000 Spears apiece, and ſo turning again to the Lord of Albret, he ſaid in Gaſcogne, "Sir, I retain them all to do me ſervice in this Expedition. "Sir, ſaid Albret, in "the Name of God I am well content, and ſhall not fail. It was neceſſary not to have omitted this ſeeming ſmall Matter, becauſe even hence there afterward aroſe an occaſion of great Miſchief; as we ſhall ſee anon.

XVII. It may not here ſeem amiſs to ſay ſomething about thoſe Companions, who were either Friends to the Prince of Wales, or retained for his Service. Theſe Men met with many Difficulties, before they came into the Principality; and at laſt were fain to part into three Companies: The greateſt of the Three went coaſting Foix and Bearn, the Second from Catalunna thrô Navarre, and ſo toward Armagnac; all with the Conſent, and by the Favour of the King of Navarre, the Earl of Albret, the Earl of Foix, and the Earl of Armagnac. In the third Company, which conſiſted chiefly of Gaſcogners, were about 3000; who for convenience of Forage, were fain to divide themſelves in leſſer Numbers, 300 or 400 in a Body; and ſo having with much adoe paſſed thrô Aragon into Languedoc, they continued their March toward the Biſhoprick of Thouloufe, till at laſt a part of them came to Montauban. At that time the Seneſchal of Tholouſe was a French Knight, named Sr. Guy Dazay, who hearing, that the Companions were making that way, that they rode divided into ſmall Companies, and that in all they were not above 3000; and yet were very weary with Travel, but ill armed, indifferently horſed, and worſe ordered; then he ſaid, how he would never ſuffer any ſuch Fellows to come into the Parts of Tholouſe, nor into the Realm of France; but rather, God willing, he would meet them by the way and fight them. So he ſent word of his Reſolution to the Lord Amorry, Earl of Narbonne, to the Seneſchals of Carcaſſone and of Beaucair, and to all Knights, Eſquires and Officers thereabouts, requiring their Aid to defend the Frontiers againſt theſe Villanous Companions. Thoſe to whom he ſent, made haſte to ſhew their Compliance by coming, as ſoon as might be to Tholouſe; ſo that in all they made up 500 Spears, Knights and Eſquires, beſides 4000 Others; all who took the Field about Montauban, which was ſeven Leagues from Tholouſe, and when they were all met under the Conduct of the Earl of Narbonne, they encamped near the ſaid City of Montauban, which at that time was under the Prince of Aquitain, and he had ſet there a Valiant Engliſh Captain, named Sr. John Combes. The French Lords preſently upon their coming, ſent their Van-Currors to ride before Montauban, hoping ſo to entice out the Companions, a Party whereof he knew to be then within the Fortreſs; but they had particular notice of the Numbers of the French, and ſo this Plot was in vain. Sr John Combes for his part wonder'd greatly, when he ſaw the Frenchmen come thus with an Army into the Princes Lands, and ſo demanded by an Herald, if he might be permitted to ſpeak freely with the Frenchmen, who allowing thereof, he asked them who ſent them thither, and for what reaſon they took upon them to invade the Lands of the Prince, who was a good Friend and Neighbour to them and to the Realm of France. "Sir (ſaid they) we have no Commiſſion to return you any Anſwer: But "to ſatisfie you of our Reaſons, if you will either go, or ſend to our chief Leaders, "they no doubt, will know what to ſay to your Demand. Well, Gentlemen (ſaid "the Captain) then I deſire you to procure me a ſafe Conduct, whereby I may have aſ-"ſurance of going unto them and returning again without Impeachment; or elſe let "them ſend me word plainly by what Title they will make War againſt me; for if I "knew the Certainty, I would ſend word thereof to my Lord the Prince, who, I que-"ſtion not, will quickly apply a due Remedy. The Marſhals of the French Hoſt promiſed to do thus much for the Engliſh Captain, and ſo they returned and told all his Words to their General, who preſently granted a ſafe Conduct for Sr. John Combes, and Six, Eight or Ten to come along with him, and ſent it to Montauban. Having got the Safe Conduct, Sr. John left the City, with Five more in his Company, and went to the French Camp, where he found the French Lords who expected him, and had well conſider'd what to ſay unto him. After Salutation paſt on both ſides, "Sr. John de-"manded of them for what Cauſe they had ſent their Van-Currours up to his Fortreſs, "and came with ſuch an Army before Montauban, which they knew belonged to "Prince Edward. They told him, "how they intended not to invade any Perſon, or to "begin a War; but that they were reſolved to purſue their Enemies to deſtruction, "wherever they heard they ſhould be. "Sirs (ſaid the Knight) who are theſe whom "you call your Enemies, and where are they? "In the Name of God (ſaid the Earl "of Narbonne) they are thoſe Villanous Companions, Robbers and Deſtroyers of the "Country, ſuch as have ravaged about, and waſted the Fair Realm of France without "Law or Reaſon, and they are now with you in Montauban. And as for your part Sr. "John, if you were Courteous to your Friends and Neighbours, you would not inte-"reſt your ſelf for ſuch a ſort of Raſcals, who ſpoil poor People without a Cauſe: For "ſuch things oftentimes cauſe great and laſting Quarrels between many High Lords "and Princes. Therefore, I pray thruſt them out of your Fortreſs, or elſe we cannot "look upon you as a True Friend to the King of France, or to his People. My Lords "(anſwer'd the Engliſh Captain) it is true, there are ſome New-comers, Men of War, "now in my Garriſon; but they were order'd to come thither by my Lord the Prince, "and are at this time by him retained for his Service: Wherefore I ſhall not be ſo "haſty to thruſt them out of my Garriſon. And ſuppoſe heretofore theſe very Men "have done you any diſpleaſure, yet I ſee not with what Juſtice you can come upon them "now. For they are Men of War and muſt live; only as formerly they lived on the "Realm of France, now they are to be maintained by the Prince. Then the Earl of "Narbonne and Sr. Guy Duzay ſaid haſtily, Yes, yes, we know they are Men of War, "and ſuch as cannot live any where without Pillage and Robbery; and ſuch as have "heretofore moſt barbarouſly ravaged our Country: All which they ſhall dearly pay "for, if we can once meet with them in the Field; for they have now lately (ſince "they have been retained by the Prince) plunder'd, rob'd, burnt, and done many bad "Actions in the Marches of Tholouſe, whereof the grievous Complaints are come to "our Ears: So that if we ſhould now wink at them, we ſhould be no better than falſe "Traitors to the King our Sovereign Lord, who hath placed us in theſe Parts, to keep "and defend this his Country from ſuch Prollers as theſe are. And pray tell them from "Us, that ſince we know where to find them, we expect ſhortly to ſee them; for if "ever they ſtir out of your Garriſon we will meet with them, and then we ſhall ob-"lige them to make us ſome amends, or it ſhall coſt us a little more. This was all the Anſwer the Captain of Montauban could obtain; wherefore he went back again to his Fortreſs extreamly diſpleaſed in his Mind, and reſolving for all their Threats, not to alter his reſolution of defending theſe Men, as long as they would tarry with him: And at his return he told unto them all the Words of their Enemies, the Frenchmen. When the Companions heard this News, they began ſomewhat to doubt their Safety; for being ſo few as they were, they could not make Head againſt theſe Frenchmen, however they were always ready, and kept good Watch continually. Now it chanced, that five days after Sr. Perdiccas of Albret, being to paſs the way of Montauban with another conſiderable Body of the Companions (for that was the beſt way to enter into the Principality) ſent word thereof to the Captain of the Town, with whom he was well acquainted. But when Sr. Robert Cheney, and the Companions under him, who were thus beſieged by the Frenchmen, heard theſe ſeaſonable Tidings they were very glad, and ſent word privately to Sr. Perdiccas and his Men, how the Frenchmen beſieged them, and had threatned them grievouſly; and they alſo informed him, who were their Captains, and what Number they were. When Perdiccas had received this particular account of his Enemies and Friends Condition, he was not at all abaſhed, but gather'd all his Men together, and came and entred Montauban in the Night, and was received with much joy by his Fellows and Sr. John Combes. Then they all together took Counſel how to behave themſelves, and ſo 'twas agreed, that the next morning all the Companions only (for the Captain of the City would by no means break the Peace) ſhould march out of the Town armed, and go up to the Frenchmen and deſire their leave to paſs quietly; but if they were denied, then to put their Lives in their hands and endeavour to force their way. This Reſolution they put in practice; for the next Morning they armed themſelves, ſounded their Trumpets, mounted their Horſes, and ſo began to march forth of Montauban. The Frenchmen fell to Ranging themſelves in the Field, when firſt they heard the ſounding of the Trumpets, and the great noiſe made about Montauban, ſo that theſe Companions had no way to paſs forward but thrô the midſt of them. Therefore Sr. Perdiccas of Albret, and Sr. Robert Cheney rode on before their Men, and having obtained an Aſſurance, went and ſpake with the Chief of their Leaders, deſiring, "That they would permit them being the Prince's Souldiers, to paſs by "quietly as Friends. But the French Lords anſwer'd, "How they deſired not to hold "any friendly Commerce or Communication with ſuch Men as were Enemies to all Man- "kind, proteſting that they ſhould never paſs that way, but with the Points of their "Spears or Swords. At this the two Captains retired unto their Men, and the Frenchmen preſently began their Cries, and the Lords ſaid aloud, "Advance Banners, toward "yonder Robbers and Pillagers, who plunder all the World, and live on the Sweat and "Blood of other Men without all Law or Reaſon. When the Companions ſaw, that now it behoved them either to fight valiantly or to die with ſhame; they alighted boldly from their Horſes, and ranged themſelves on Foot before the Town of Montauban, ready to receive their Enemies, who alſo being ranged on Foot came now upon them. Then the Archers began their Play, and after that they all cloſed together, and a ſtrong and cruel Battle began, and many a Feat of Arms was there performed, and many a Knight laid along on the earth, and the Fight was well maintain'd on both ſides; but the Frenchmen were at leaſt Two to One. So that within a while they drove the Companions back into the Barriers, which were held open for their Refuge by the Captains ſpecial Command. And ſurely the Companions had been in no very good Caſe, had it not been for the Captain of the Town; for when he ſaw the Frenchmen preſume to follow the Companions into his Town, then he commanded all that could bear Arms to come forth, and every Man to his Power to aſſiſt the Companions, who were retained in the Service of their Lord the Prince. Then the Townſmen and thoſe of the Garriſon armed, and put themſelves in Array, and began to enter the Battle; while the Women went into their Houſes, and ran up to the Battlements and Windows, from whence they flang down upon the Frenchmen ſtones, and pots of quick Lime ſo thick, that they had enough to do to defend themſelves with their Targets from Braining; and ſome were ſlain outright, and others being ſore hurt were fain to withdraw out of the Town. Then the Companions, who were ſo lately in danger of loſing all, took freſh Courage, and made up briskly againſt their Purſuers, at which time there were ſo many notable Feats of Arms done, ſo many Priſoners taken and retaken, that the like was ſeldome ſeen. The Companions indeed were but a few in reſpect of the Frenchmen, but by this Aſſiſtance they ſo redoubled their Courage, that by pure Force of Arms they drove their Enemies back again out of the Town, and followed out after them amain, thô they had no more Succour; for Sr. John would not lend them a Man of his beyond the Barriers, for fear of occaſioning a Breach of the Peace. However it happen'd well for theſe Companions, for at that Inſtant, while the French were thus quitting the Place in no little Confuſion, and thoſe who lately fled before them, were now vigorouſly preſſing upon them. There enter'd into Montauban on the other ſide, an other Brigade of the Companions to the number of 400 freſh Horſe, being lead by the Bourg of Bartuel, and Nandon of Bergerac, who hearing that their Friends were beſieged by the Frenchmen in Montauban, had rode all night in great haſt to come to their Aid.

An. Dom. 1366. An. Regni Angliæ XL.

days

AN. DOM. 1366. An. Regni Angliæ XL.

An. Dom. 1366. An. Regni Angliæ XL.

At their first coming they set their wearied Horses aside, and rushed into the Battle with all the fury imaginable; so that now the Frenchmen were wholly discomfited with this fresh and sudden Impression. The Battle held in all from about Nine in the Morning till One in the Afternoon; at which time the Frenchmen were utterly routed and broken, and happy was he among them that could get a Horse first. There was taken the Earl of Narbonne himself, and with him Sr. Guy of Dazay, the Earl of Buzet, the Lord of Montlimar, the Seneschal of Carcassone, the Seneschal of Beaucaire, the Seneschal of Provens and of the Marches thereabout, and more than an hundred Knights of France, besides many an Esquire and Substantial Citizen & Inhabitant of Tholouse and Mompellier: And surely many more had been taken and slain, if they had been hotly pursued: But the Companions, who were but few and very weary, and not well horsed neither, thought not good to go too far from the Field; but were satisfied with what they had already done. This Battle was thus fought at Montauban on the Vigil of the Assumption of the Blessed Virgin, being the 14 of August, Anno Dom. MCCCLXVI.

XVIII. After this Discomfiture, Sr. Perdiccas of Albret, Sr. Robert Cheney, the Bourg of Bartuel, and Nandon of Bergerac, took all the spoil and booty of the field, and divided it proportionably among their Men, their Dividends being considerable at this time. And they would needs force the Captain of the Town, Sr. John Combes, to take an equal share with them Four, because he was so faithfull to their Interest, and so very serviceable; for thô he would not strike a stroak, nor go forth with them into the Field, yet when the Frenchmen would come into his Town against his Will, he caused them to be treated so hotly, that they were glad to leave it soon. All, who had Prisoners, had liberty to keep them, or to acquit them, as they thought best, and indeed they put their Prisoners to courteous and reasonable Ransom enough, each Man according to his Degree, and the rather, because this Adventure happen'd so successfully unto them beyond all Expectation; and those, who were set free on their Faith and Promise, had a day limited, whereon they were to bring or send their Ransoms to Bourdeaux, or to some other place agreed on. And so the Companions came at last all in safety to the Prince of Wales, who appointed them Quarters, and gave their Officers a Charge not to be grievous to his People. The mean while the French Prisoners returned home into their several Countries, as the Earl of Narbonne, the Seneschal of Tholouse, and others; who had all promised on their Faiths, and on their Honour to pay their appointed Ransoms in time and place limited. But Pope Urban V, who hated these sort of Companions from his soul, and had cursed them more than once, because of their Villanous deeds, when he heard of this their Victory, wherein the Earl of Narbonne, and others, were overthrown, was exceedingly disturbed and vexed in his Mind. However he held his tongue, till he saw the Prisoners deliver'd upon their Parole, and safe out of their hands; and then he sent his Inhibition to the Earl, and every of them, expresly forbidding them in any wise to pay their Ransom, or to keep Faith with such Miscreants, and by his Power Apostolical he released them of their Oath and Promise. Thus were these Lords and Knights saved the Charges of their Ransom, for they durst not break the Pope's Command; and perhaps they had small inclination so to do, when it was for their Interest. However the Companions expected their Money, therewith to apparel and furnish themselves like Men; which many of them had already done, in hopes of quitting their Cost by these Sums, which yet they never saw. Wherefore when the time was lapsed, they complain'd to the Lord John Chandos, who was High Constable of Aquitaine, and was to look to such Matters especially, as belonged to Arms; but he dissembled the Matter, and put them off, as well as he might: For he knew well they were accursed of the Pope, and that indeed they had done many bloody, villanous and unlawfull Deeds.

XIX. However now the Prince of Wales had gotten all the Companions of his side, who were to the Number of 12000 Fighting Men; all whom to his great Charge he kept and maintain'd, till with him they left the Principality; which was from about the Middle of August to the Middle of February; and besides these at first he entertain'd and received into pay all Choice and Valiant Men, from whatsoever Parts they came. And King Henry the Bastard also did the like, taking into his service, and enrolling all Frenchmen, Aragonians, and others, that came to his aid upon the account of his Friends in France, or otherwise; besides those Companions Bretons, who tarried with him for Sr. Bertram of Clequin's sake, the Captains whereof were Sr. Bertram Budes, Sr. Alan of St. Pol du Leon, Sr. William de Dreux, and Sr. Alan of Carnon. Nor might the Prince have been less furnished with strangers of all Countries, if he had so pleased: For there came to him many Flemings, Almaines, and Brabanders; but he sent most of of them home again; for he had rather have of his Subjects of the Principality, or at leaſt out of England, than Strangers, whoſe Courages he knew not. And beſides ſeveral hundreds of Engliſh Voluntiers, who came and offer'd him their ſervice, he had another conſiderable Aſſiſtance from England; for when the King, his Father, knew that this Expedition was ſo forward, then he gave leave to his Son John Duke of Lancaſter, to go to his Brother, the Prince of Wales, with 400 Choſen Men of Arms, and 400 Archers, at the News of whoſe Coming the Prince was very glad. AN. DOM. 1366. An. Regni Angliæ XL.

While things were thus preparing in the Principality, there came unto the Prince to Bourdeaux, James the Younger, King of Majorica, as he was called, but at that time he had not one foot of his Kingdom in his own Poſſeſſion. For his Uncle Pedro, King of Aragon, who had before murther'd his Father (as was ſaid) in Priſon at Barcelona, had hitherto by force excluded him from his Inheritance. So that he had nothing in the World to live on, ſaving that the Lady Joan, Queen of Jeruſalem, Sicily, and Naples, had in conſideration of his Youth, Shape, and Nobility [p] taken him for her Third Husband about Four Years before this. Wherefore he now applies himſelf to Prince Edward, that by means of his Powerfull Arms he might be able to Revenge the Death and Injuries of his Father, and to recover his Right, as well in the Kingdom of Majorica, as alſo in the Earldoms of Rouſſillon and Cerdanna. The Prince made him very Welcom, and gave him good hopes and comfort againſt the Preſent Difficulty of his Affairs, and told him, when he had heard his whole buſineſs, "Sir, ô King, be- "ing already embarqued in another Affair of like Conſequence, as yet I cannot poſ- "ſibly attend to your Cauſe; but I promiſe you faithfully, that after my ſafe Re- "turn out of Spain, I ſhall forthwith take Care to reſtore you unto your full Right, "either by Treaty or by Force. This Free and Generous Promiſe ſettled the Young Kings mind for the Preſent, and ſo he tarried ſtill with the Prince in Bourdeaux, expecting, when he would begin to march, as others did; for he intended to accompany him in this Expedition. And the Prince conſidering his Quality, allow'd him all that was neceſſary, becauſe he was a ſtranger, and in Diſtreſs. But daily there were brought to the Prince's Ears great Complaints of the Companions, how they were exceeding troubleſome to Men and Women of thoſe Parts, where they quarter'd; wherefore they deſired the Prince to begin his March, as ſoon as he could; which was his own Deſire too. But he was advis'd to ſtay and ſee Chriſtmas over firſt, that ſo he might have Winter at his Back; and he agreed the rather to this reaſonable motion, becauſe the Princeſs, his Wife, was big with Child again, and very near her time, and ſhe was mightily concerned, leſt he ſhould leave her before her Delivery. Wherefore fearing, that either ſhe or the child might come to any harm, he was content to ſtay, till that Danger was over, and ſhe was extreamly pleas'd, when ſhe heard him promiſe ſo to do.

[p] Vid. Odor. Rainal. ad an. 1362. §. 10. &c.

XX. All this while there was great Proviſion of Wine and Victuals, and other Neceſſaries made over all the Country, becauſe they were to enter into a Kingdom, where what for the ſeaſon of the Year, the Nature of the Soil, and the Care of their Enemies, they were likely to find but ſmall purveyance. Among other things, while thus they tarried at Bourdeaux, and all the Country was full of Souldiers, the Prince of Wales, by advice of his Council, countermanded 800 of the Lord of Albret's 1000 Spears, which before he had thought to have retained, by his Letters, ſealed with his Seal, the Tenor whereof followeth. EDWARD, by the Grace of God, Prince of "Aquitaine and Wales, Duke of Cornwall, and Earl of Cheſter, to his Right-Tru- "ſty, and Right-well-beloved Bernard Lord of Albret, Greeting. My Lord of Al- "bret, whereas of our meer Will and Pleaſure We have taken upon Us this Expedition, "in which We ſhortly intend to proceed, conſidering the vaſt buſineſs, charge, and en- "combrance, which We now have, as well by reaſon of ſtrangers, who have offer'd them- "ſelves to our ſervice, as of the great Numbers of the Companions, who are ſo nume- "rous, that we muſt not leave them behind Us, for fear of the Miſchief, which they may "create among our Subjects: That yet We may take ſufficient Care of our Land in this "our intended abſence; for as all may not ſtay behind, ſo neither are all the Men of War "to go, leſt the Country be left without Defence: Upon theſe Conſiderations, after good "Advice had, it is ordained by Us and our Council, that for this time You only ſerve "Us with 200 Spears; and You may diſcharge your ſelf of the Reſidue, and let them "do, as it ſhall pleaſe them: And ſo God Almighty have you in his keeping. Dated "at Bourdeaux the 8th of December, An°. Dom. 1366. Theſe Letters, being ſealed with the Prince's Great Seal, were ſent to the Lord of Albret, who at that time was very buſie in his Country about the Preparations for the Campaigne; for it was now con-constantly affirmed, that the Prince would begin his March very ſuddenly. But when he ſaw the Prince's Letters, he read them over twice, the better to underſtand their meaning, and then he was both amaz'd and diſpleas'd at what he found in them. "What "( ſaith he to himſelf*) how comes this to paſs, that my Lord, the Prince, makes a ſcorn* "and deriſion of me after this manner? For now he would have me disband 800 Spears, "Knights, and Eſquires, all whom by his own Command I have already retain'd, and ſo "diverted from other ways, as well of Profit, as of Honour. Being in this heat he preſently called for his Secretary, and cauſed him to write an Anſwer to the Prince in theſe Words, "Moſt Illuſtrious and Dear Lord, I am mightily ſurpriſed at the Let- "ters, You were pleaſed to ſend me, and Sir, I am in a great ſtreight, how I ought, or "may anſwer You in that point: For it proves much to the prejudice and damage of me, "and all my Friends, whom by your own Ordinance and Command, I have already enter'd "into ſervice; whereby I have hindred them of many fair Advantages, which they might "have reaped in other places. For ſome of them were determin'd to have gone over Sea "into Pruſſia, to Conſtantinople, to Jeruſalem, as moſt Knights and Eſquires do in times "of Peace at home, to advance their Honour abroad. Sir, they are all very much ſurpri- "ſed and diſpleaſed at me, thus to be left out at this time; and I alſo extreamly admire, "for what fault of mine I have deſerved this ſevere Uſage. Right Dear Sir, May it "pleaſe You to know, that I cannot be ſure of 200, unleſs I may be permitted to bring "them all; becauſe I fear, none will be willing to go, when thus unhappily divided from "their Friends: I am the meaneſt and worſt of them all; and yet, if any are left be- "hind, I doubt, none will go. God Almighty preſerve your Royal Highneſs. Dated, &c. When the Prince received this anſwer he look'd upon it, as inſolent and preſumptuous, and ſo did many Engliſh Lords and Knights of his Council; whereupon the Prince ſhook his head and ſaid in Engliſh Ah! this Lord of Albret is too great a Maſter in my Domi- "nions, when he will thus dare to contradict the Ordinance, that was ſo deliberately devi- "ſed by my Council. By God, it ſhall not go, as he imagines; let him ſtay at home, if "he will; for without his 1000 Spears I truſt in God to accompliſh my Deſign with Ho- "nour. Then, as it uſually happens, when Princes are angry, their ſervants, rather than mitigate the Paſſion, are apt to enflame it higher, ſome Engliſh there preſent ſaid, "Sir, Don't You yet know the Minds of theſe Gaſcogners, nor how proud and inſolent "they are; and that they bear Us but ſmall love, and never did otherwiſe? Don't You "remember, how loftily they bare themſelves towards You, here in your City of Bour-"deaux, when King John of France was firſt brought hither. For they ſaid then, and "ſpake it plainly, that by their aid alone You obtain'd that Glory in taking the French "King; and this they ſtuck too ſo ſtiffly, that You was fain to treat with them for ſome while, "before they would conſent, that you ſhould convey him into England: But at that time, "you thought it convenient to comply with them, thereby to keep them in Obedience. At theſe Words the Prince held his Peace, but he thought nevertheleſs of what he himſelf knew to be true. This was the firſt occaſion of Difference between the Prince of Wales and the Lord of Albret; ſo that the ſaid Lord was at that time in great Danger: For the Prince was High and of a great Spirit, and terrible in his Anger; for he diſdain'd, not to have all Men at his Command, that were his Subjects, and held of him. But when the Earl of Armagnac, Uncle to the Lord of Albret, heard of the Prince's Diſpleaſure, he made haſte to Bourdeaux, and together with the Lord John Chandos, and the Lord Thomas Felton, ſo wrought with the Prince, that he reconcil'd him to his Nephew, on condition, that he ſhould bring but 200 Spears and no more. With which notwithſtanding, the ſaid Lord of Albret was not fully pleaſed in his Mind, nor the Men, which he was obliged to leave behind; and indeed he never after loved the Prince ſo heartily, as he had done before. But now he ſaw, ſince there was no other Remedy, that it was requiſite for him to diſſemble and conceal his trouble, as well as he might: But theſe hidden Sparks ſome time after brake out into ſuch a flame, as raiſed a Mighty Fire over all the Principality of Aquitaine; which occaſionally embroiled the two Realms of England and France, as we ſhall ſee in due place.

An. Dom. 1366. An. Regni Angliæ XL.

CHAP.

AN. DOM. 1367. An. Regni Angliæ XLI.

CHAPTER the SECOND.

The CONTENTS.

I. A Second Son born to the Black-Prince, who was in time King of England, by the Name of Richard the Second. II. Prince Edward begins his March, is joyn'd by the Duke of Lancaster: Matters adjusted between the Prince and the King of Navarre. III. The Prince passes the Pirenean Mountains; the Order of his Army, and the Names of his Chief Captains. IV. Don Henry the Bastard prepares to oppose him, and sends his Expostulation and Defiance unto him. V. The Lord Thomas Felton rides before the English Army and takes Navaret. The King of Navarre suffers himself to be taken Prisoner, so to avoid passing with the Prince into Spain: Salvatierra yields to the Prince. VI. The Lord Thomas Felton beats up the Bastard's Quarters, and sends Intelligence to the Prince. Don Henry goes forward to meet the Prince, but makes an Halt at St. Miguel: The Prince expects him at Victoria. VII. The Earl of Sancelloni, Don Henry's Brother, beats up the Prince's Quarters, and discomfits and takes Sr. Thomas Felton and all his Company. VIII. The Discourse thereupon had in the Spanish Camp. IX. The Prince passes the River Ebro, and sends an Answer to Don Henry's Letters. X. Don Henry's Resolution. XI. The two Armies move forward; the Order and Number of the Spaniards. XII. The Lord Chandos made a Banneret; the Princes Prayer before the Fight: The famous Battle of Najara (commonly called Nazars) in Spain, where the Black-Prince gives the Bastard a Mighty Overthrow. XIII. The City of Najara taken: The Time and Place of the Battle. XIV. The Number of the slain on both sides. XV. The Prince causes Don Pedro to give a General Pardon to all his Subjects. XVI. Don Pedro rides to Burgos, and is follow'd by the Prince; where all Spain comes in and submits to her King. XVII. The Prince demands his Souldiers Pay of Don Pedro, who goes to Seville to raise Money, but sends none. XVIII. The great Renown of the Black-Prince after this Victory. XIX. England rejoyces and France repines at the News. XX. The Bastard having escaped from the Battle, gets some Forces together and invades the Principality, but is beat off by the Lord James Audley. XXI. The Black-Prince by reason of a sickness in his Army, is forced to return home without his Money. XXII. The Bastard retires into Aragon: The first Change of King Edward's Fortune. XXIII. The Danish Fleet beaten by the English. XXIV. The Death of Don Pedro, the Justiceer, King of Portugal.

I. WHile thus the Prince of Wales was busied at Bourdeaux in his Preparations for the Spanish War, and daily expected the Arrival of his Brother the Duke of [a] Lancaster, the Beautifull Princess, his Dear Consort fell in Travail on the Day of the Three Kings of Colen, commonly called the Epiphany, [b] being the Sixth of January, and as that Year went, a Wednesday.

On which Day, about the hour of [c] Ten of the Clock in the Morning, the said Princess was, by the Grace of God, deliver'd of a Fair Son, to the great joy of the Prince and all his Court. On the Friday after at Noon he was Christen'd in the Church of St. Andrew in the City of Bourdeaux, by the most Reverend Father in God Elias, Archbishop of the same Place, Richard Bishop [d] of Agen in Agenois, and James King of Majorica being his Godfathers; thô [e] some thrô mistake instead of the Bishop say, it was Richard King of Navarre, when 'tis evident to any strict Enquirer, that Charles was the King of Navarre's Name at that time and long after. King Don Pedro was then at Bayonne, expecting the coming of the Prince, so that he could not be concerned at this Solemnity. Thô [f] Others say, that this Young Prince had no less than Three Kings for his Godfathers, as Pedro King of Spain, Charles King of Navarre, and James King of Majorica; and that they gave Rich Gifts unto the Babe. But this is only a far-fetch'd Allusion to the History commemorated by the Day, and so I shall leave it. However the Name of Richard was given to the Princely Infant, and He was [a] *Froiss. c.*233. f. 133. sed confer cum eodem Froi. p. penult.

[b] Lit. Dom. C. Anno 1367.
[c] Froiss. totius Historiæ capite ultimo.
[d] *Froiss. c.*233. *f.*133.
[e] *Sandford Geneal. Hist. p.*191 *ex Walsing. cum tamen is uno in loco, viz. Hypod. p.*129. Richardus Rex Majoricarum *& alio in loco, viz. Hist. p.*175. Ricardus Rex Navarriorum. Sed Navarrus erat Carolus & Majoricæ Rex Jacobus dictus; ut quivis facilè intelligat.
[f] *Chronica W. Thorne p.*2142. *n.*16. sed ibi pro Majoricæ legitur Portugalliæ. vid. Ashmole p. 676.

An. Dom. 1367. An. Regni Angliæ XLI.

was called after the manner of that Age, Richard of Bourdeaux, his Sirname being taken from the Place of his Birth; and after the Death of his Father and Grandfather, he became King of England, the Second of that Name.

On the very Day of this Princes Birth, as Froiſard the Hiſtorian ſat at Dinner in Bourdeaux, [g] he ſays, how Sr. Richard Pontchardon a Valiant Knight of England, and one who was very well skill'd in Aſtrological Science, came to him within two Hours after the Child was born and ſaid, "Froiſard, write down and put in Memory, that this "Morning my Lady the Princeſs is brought to Bed of a Fair Son on this Twelfth-"Day, which is the Day of the Three Kings; and thô he is but Second Son to a "Kings Son, yet he ſhall be King. Which Saying of his fell out exactly; for the Lord Edward his Elder Brother dying at the Age of Seven Years, and his Father the Black-Prince, following before the King his Father, this Richard ſucceeded his Grandfather King Edward to the Crown, and wore it about two and twenty Years.

[g] Froiſ. l. ult. c. ult. f. 391.

II. On the Sunday [h] following, being the Tenth of January, after the Hour of Prime, Prince Edward left the City of Bourdeaux, with a Royal Equipage, thô the greater part of his Army was paſſed onward before, and lay about the City of Dax in Gaſcogne, to which place the Prince alſo came in the cloſe of that Sunday. Here he tarried three days, becauſe he had ſure Intelligence, how his Brother the Duke of Lancaſter was haſting after him, having paſſed the Sea five days before. The ſaid Duke took land with all his Troops at a Port in Bretagne, from whence he rode to Nantes, where his Brother-in-law the Duke of Bretagne received him with great demonſtrations of Joy, Love and Reſpect, as alſo did his Siſter the Dutcheſs. From Nantes having paſſed the Loire, he marched thrô Poictou and Sainctogne, till he came to Blaye, where he alſo paſſed the Garonne and ſo went to Bourdeaux. He gave order for his Men to march forward after his Brother, the Prince; but he himſelf rode ſtraight to the Abby of St. Andrew, where the Princeſs at that time lay in, and having given her a ſhort and kind Viſit, he took leave of his Siſter the Princeſs, and ſo rode on with his Servants, and preſently overtook his Men, and rode along with them till he came to Dax, where he found the Prince his Brother. The two Royal Brethren were extreamly ſatisfied at this their happy Meeting, for they loved together entirely; and then the Meeting of Friends is moſt agreeable, when they are both ready to partake of Honourable Dangers; in like manner their Captains and Officers careſſed and made much of one another, as alſo their Men, as many as could meet together. Soon after the Duke of Lancaſter's Coming, there came alſo Gaſton Phœbus the Earl of Foix to pay his Reſpects, and to offer his Service to the Prince his Lord, and to his Brother the Duke; and the Prince, who was no Novice in returning Salutations, ſhew'd him much Honour, and gave him many Thanks for his Readineſs to ſerve him. However becauſe of his known Valour and Conduct, as alſo becauſe he was generally belov'd over all the Country, the Prince gave him in charge to ſtay at Home, and upon occaſion help to defend the Land in his Abſence, deſiring him to reſide in Aquitain till his Return, together with his High Seneſchal the Lord James Audley. This Charge the Earl very readily undertook, and ſo after Thanks for the honour of that Truſt, took his Leave and rode to Bourdeaux, where the Princeſs and the Lord Audley were. But the Prince and the Duke of Lancaſter his Brother, tarried ſtill in the City of Dax, diverting themſelves a while, and all their Men ſpread abroad in the Country about the Entry of the Paſſages that lead into Navarre; for as yet it was not known, whether they could be permitted to paſs that way or no: Althô the King of Navarre had ſolemnly engaged to have the Avenues ready open for them. For there ran a Report thrô the Army, how ſince that he was reconciled to the Baſtard Henry; whereat the Prince and his Council wondred greatly, and King Don Pedro was extreamly diſpleaſed. And thô there was no ſuch Matter, yet this Rumor gain'd ſo much Credit, that Sr. Hugh Calverley with his Troops went up to the Marches of Navarre, and took the Town of la Puente de Reyna, or Queens-Bridge, and the City of Miranda in that Kings Dominions, which terrified all the Country, and the News thereof flew preſently to the King of Navarre. When he perceived hereby, that the Companions would enter his Land by Force, he was infinitely diſpleaſed, and complain'd thereof by his Letters to the Prince; but the Prince ſeem'd to take no notice of the Matter, becauſe as he thought, the King of Navarre kept not punctually the Promiſe made to Him and King Don Pedro. Whereupon inſtead of anſwering to his Complaints, he wrote to him, that he muſt firſt clear himſelf of what was laid to his Charge; for it was generally diſcourſed, that he had revolted to King Henry; and it but too plainly appear'd, that he had not left his Country open as he had promiſed. At this Charge of Treaſon the [h] Froiſ. c. 233. fol. 133. Vid. M.S. vet. Angl. in Bibl. C.C.C. Cantab. c. 232. & 233. &c.

King

King of Navarre was more vexed than before; whereupon he sent a Lord named Sr. Martin Carre unto the Prince, who being come to Dax, behaved himself so discreetly in excusing the King his Master, that the Prince forgat all his Displeasure; on Condition, that he the said Knight should return to the King of Navarre, and oblige him to come to St. Jean Piè de Port, whither the Prince should send some of his Council to confer with Him, or else to send Messengers with sufficient Powers to the Prince at Dax. So Sr. Martin Carre took leave of the Prince, and returned to the King of Navarre, to whom he recounted all that had passed between the Prince and him, and so perswaded him for the further Vindication of Himself, to go to St. Jean Piè de Port, which having brought to pass, he himself rode forward to Dax to inform the Prince thereof. When the Prince knew, that the King of Navarre was at St. Jean Piè de Port, he sent his Brother the Duke of Lancaster, and the Lord John Chandos with a small Company of Knights, who all rode together with Sr. Martin Carre to discourse the King at the said Town. The King of Navarre made them very welcome, and there after some Consultation it was agreed, that he should go along with them as far as Peyrehourade, a Town standing on the Gave, which was nearer to the Prince, and that thither the Prince and King Don Pedro should come to meet him, and confer with him; and so renew the former Covenants, and clear what was left Doubtfull, and determine how far either Party was to act or to expect. And all this was thus contrived by that subtle King of Navarre, that he might be the more certain of what was granted him before; because he thought the Covenants were not as yet particular enough: Wherefore, thô indeed all was meant toward him bonâ fide, yet he, who himself was so great at overreaching others, was now carefull to provide against a Trepan, before he exposed his Country to the Mercy of another. A thought not at all unreasonable, if it had not been rendred unnecessary by former Precautions, which were indeed binding enough; but that Persons who have but little Integrity to boast of themselves, are usually apt to misconster the most candid Intentions of those they deal with.

AN. DOM. 1367. An. Regni Angliæ XLI.

However upon this new Agreement, the Duke of Lancaster and the Lord John Chandos, having brought the King of Navarre as far as Peyrehourade, left him there, and rode on to the Prince and King Don Pedro then at Dax, and shew'd them how they had succeeded. The Prince and the King were well pleased with what they had done, and soon after rode to Peyrehourade, where they found the King of Navarre with the chief of his Council. Here they all fell to a serious and close Debate, and then it was certainly and particularly made out, what every Man was to do or to look for; the last Treaty was both renew'd and explain'd, and it was positively and punctually set down, what and how much the King of Navarre should possess in Castille, and Don Pedro paid unto him the promised Summ of 20000 Franks, and sware perpetual Love and Amity with him. This done they parted all Friends, and then the Army might pass when it should please the Prince; for all the Avenues were left open and unguarded, and Victuals was provided thrô all the Realm of Navarre to be had for ready Money. The King of Navarre went after this to his City of Pampelona, and the Prince of Wales, with his Brother the Duke of Lancaster, and King Don Pedro returned to Dax, where they tarried a few days longer. For at that time there were many Knights and Lords of Bretagne, Poictou and Gascogne, not yet come up to the Prince's Host; but they tarried behind hitherto, because it was not fully known that the Prince would be able to pass that way, till the Conclusion of this last Treaty. Nay, in France it was confidently reported (Men usually giving themselves liberty of foretelling what they desire should fall out) that the Prince would not be able to pass that way at all, but that the King of Navarre would in that place break the Neck of his Expedition; which yet happen'd directly otherwise. When therefore the Princes Knights, who were still behind, knew for certain that the Passages were now open, then they quicken'd their March forward with all possible Hast; for they were sure the Prince would not tarry long now, nor return home again without Battle. Thither came to the City of Dax the Lord Oliver Clisson of Bretagne with a gallant Company of Men of Arms; thither also came the Noble and Valiant Lord John de Greilly Captal of Busche, with a goodly Band of Spears, and last of all with an evil will came the haughty Lord of Albret, leading 200 Men of Arms; and all the time of this Expedition he kept company with the Captal of Busche, to whom notwithstanding he shew'd no manner of Discontent.

Now all the Substance of the Alliances and Confederations made last at Peyrehourade was presently known in France, for there were Messengers and Spies perpetually going and coming, who always reported what they saw or heard. But when Sr. Bertram of Clequin, who was then with the Duke of Anjou, was assured how the Streights of Navarre were open'd, and that the Prince was passed, he quicken'd his Summons, and raised all the Friends he could in Bretagne and in France; for he knew the Business would not be decided now without Battle. Then presently he took his way toward Aragon, desiring to come to King Henry as fast as he could, and all his Men followed by great Marches after him, such as he had listed and enrolled; besides many others out of France and other Places, who went to advance their Honour or their Fortunes.

An. Dom. 1367. An. Regni Angliæ XLI.

[k] Froiss. c. 234. fol. 134.

III. Now [k] between St. Jean Pié de Port and the City of Pampelona, there are streight and dangerous Passages under the Pirenæan Mountains; so that there may be found there more than an hundred Places, in each whereof an Hundred Men might be thought able to defend the entrance against all the World. And yet besides these Difficulties, there was another, which proceeded from the Cold and Distemper of the Season; for those Mountainous and unequal Passages, being constantly bleaky and expos'd to Wind, and every way less fit for travel, were now rendred more difficult and uneasie upon the account of the Weather and unkind season: It being but about the end of February, when Prince Edward began to pass the Pirenean Hills. However knowing, that the whole Army could not pass at once, he order'd, that the Three main Divisions should take three several Days for their Passage. On the Monday went the Vaward of the whole Army led by John of Gaunt Duke of Lancaster, and Brother to the Prince of Wales, and the Lord John Chandos High-Constable of Aquitain, who had twelve hundred Penons of his Arms, namely in a Field [1] Or a sharp Pile Gules: In the Front of this Battail marched the two Marshals of Aquitain, Sr. Guischard D' Angoulesme, commonly called Sr. Guischard Dangle, and Sr. Stephen Cossington: With whom was the Great Banner of St. George, being the Red Cross of England. In the Duke of Lancaster's Battail were Sr. William Beauchamp Lord of Bergavenny, and Fourth Son to the Earl of Warwick, the Lord Ralph Nevile, who had in that Expedition 30 Spears at his own Charges, because of his great Winnings at the Battle before Auray; with him went his Eldest Son, Sr. John Nevile, Sr. William Clayton, Sr. John Tyrrel, Sr. Hugh Hastings, Sr. Robert Cheney, Sr. Richard Canston, Sr. Robert Briquet, Sr. William Boteler, or Butler of Oversley in Warwickshire, Sr. John Willoughby, Sr. Garses of the Castle, Sr. Emery de la Rochechoüart, and Gerard de la Motte, All these Lords and Captains with their Penons, were under the Rule of the Lord John Chandos; except those, whom the Duke of Lancaster brought along with him out of England; over whom he was Sovereign Captain, and these amounted in all to the Number of 10000 Horse, and they passed the straights on the Monday with much adoe, because the Ways were as yet unbeaten. On the Tuesday Morning early the Prince of Wales began his March after them with King Don Pedro, and Charles King of Navarre in his Company, which latter was then newly come to the Prince, the better to Countenance the Matter, by so frank an Assurance of his Faith; and he had also design'd to invite him to his City of Pampelona. In this Battail was the Lord Thomas Felton, Grand Seneschal of Aquitain, with the Lord William Felton, his Brother; the Lord Baldwin Frevile, Seneschal of Sainctogne, together with the Seneschal of Rochelle, the Seneschal of Limousin, the Seneschal of Agenois, and the Seneschal of Bigorre; the Lord Lewis of Harcourt, the Vicount of Chastellerault, the Lord of Pinant, the Lord of Taniboton, and all the Poictevins; the Lord Eustace Dambreticourt, Sr. Nele Loring, the Prince's High-Chamberlain, Sr. Richard Pontchardon, Sr. Thomas Banister, Sr. Dangouses, Sr. Lewis and Sr. Edmund of Marville, and the Lord of Pierre Buffierre, in all to the Number of 4000 Men of Arms; and this Battail also consisted of 10000 Horse; but they had a very ill Passage, by reason of the High Winds, and of the Snow, which fell that day to their great trouble and vexation; However thorough they got, and moved forward, and pitch'd their Tents in the Country about Pampelona: But the King of Navarre led the Prince and King Don Pedro into his City of Pampelona, where he entertain'd them at a Royal Supper. On the Wednesday there passed James King of Majorica, the Earl of Armagnac and his Nephew, the Lord Bernard de la Brett Earl of Albret, the Lord John Greilly Captal of Busche, the Lord Oliver Clisson, the Earl of Perigort, the Vicount of Carmaine, the Lord of Comminges, the Lord of Mucidan, the Lord De l' Esparre, the Lord of Coudon, the Lord of Rozan, Sr. Petiton of Coutras, Sr. Emery de Carse, the Lord de la Bard, Sr. Bertram of Cande, the Lord of Pincornet, Sr. Thomas Winstanley, Sr. Perdiccas de la Brett, the Burgrave of Bretuel, Nandon of Bergerac, Bernard de la Salle, Lortingo de la Salle, Edmund Ortigo, and the rest of the Com-

[1] Ashmole's Garter p. 708. Plate 21. sed Froisard. a field Argent &c. Cui assentit Author Vitæ Domini Joh. Chandos in Bibl. Cotton. p. 79.

Companions, to the Number of 10000 Horſe; and theſe had a pretty eaſie Paſſage in Compariſon to thoſe, who went the Day before. And when thus the whole Army had paſſed the Pirenean Mountains, they ſpread abroad in the Country about Pampelona, with the King of Navarre's leave and good liking, to refreſh themſelves and their Horſes. AN. DOM. 1367. An. Regni Angliæ XLI.

Here they lay three days; becauſe they found the Land plentifull in Fleſh, Fiſh, Bread, Wine, and other Proviſion, both for their Beaſts and Themſelves. But the Companions paid not always the full Price of things, nor could they refrain from Robbing and Filching what they could get: So that about Pampelona, and in the way thither, they greatly damnify'd thoſe of the Country; whereat the King of Navarre was very much diſpleaſed. But it was too late then to think of Rectifying matters; thô it often repented him, that he had ſo freely open'd his Country to the Prince and his Men. For he plainly found, that the Damage which he ſuffer'd thereby, overway'd the Advantages granted to him by Don Pedro. But it was now no time to complain, for he ſaw then he was not Maſter of his own Land. Complaints were daily brought in to him, of the abuſes and inſolencies of the Companions, at which he took a deep Reſentment; thô he forcedly repreſſed it for the preſent. However he cauſed ſome of his Council, ſuch as were acquainted with the Captains of theſe Companions, and had ſometimes been with them in France, Normandy, or other places, to deſire them to abſtain from robbing and abuſing his Subjects after that manner, and they promiſed to forbear for the future.

IV. The mean while, King Henry the Baſtard, was fully enformed of the Prince's Paſſage; for he had his Meſſengers and Spies going to and fro every where: Wherefore he addreſſed himſelf to raiſe a mighty Force of Men of Arms and other Souldiers, thereby to reſiſt the Prince and Don Pedro, his Brother: And every day he expected the return of Sr. Bertram of Clequin with a conſiderable reinforcement out of Bretagne and France. He had already ſent forth his Special Summons thrô all his Realm, commanding all Men on peril of Life, Lands, and Goods to come to him, every One according to his Eſtate, either on Foot, or on Horſeback, to help to defend his Country. Don Henry was well-beloved in General, and the Caſtillians had ventur'd hard, and taken much pains to bring him to the Poſſeſſion of the Crown; So that being all involved in his Guilt, their Hands were ſtrengthen'd to ſuſtain his Quarrel. Wherefore they obey'd him more readily, and flock'd daily unto his Banners to St. Domingo de la Calzada, a City of Caſtilla Vieja, or old Caſtille, to the Number of 60000 Horſe and Foot, all ready to live and die with him. Wherefore when King Henry ſaw himſelf thus ſtrong, and heard, how the Prince with his Army was now in the Realm of Navarre, having paſſed the ſtreights of Roncevaux, and ſaw thereby that of neceſſity he muſt now fight the Prince, being encouraged with the Numbers and Alacrity of his Men, he ſeem'd to deſire nothing more, than to ſhew by his Valour, how Worthy he was of that Condition, to which he had been ſo lately Advanced. He ſaid aloud to his Lords about him, "Ha! Sirs, this Prince of Wales is a Valiant Knight, and becauſe he ſhall know that this Realm is now mine, and that I am ready and willing to fight with him for the Right which I have thereto, I will let him know ſome part of my intent. Then he cauſed his Secretary to write his Letters; the Tenor whereof followeth, viz." [m]

"HENRY, by the Grace of God, King of Caſtille and Leon, of Galizia, of Murcia, of Jaën, of Algarbe, of Algezira, of Gibralter, and Lord of Biſcay and of Molina, to the Right-Puiſſant, and Thrice-Honourable Lord, EDWARD, Prince of Wales and of Aquitain, Duke of Cornwall, and Earl of Cheſter, Greeting. It is given Us to underſtand, that You and your Men have paſſed the Pirenean Mountains, and are marching hitherward, and that You have entred Covenant and Alliance with our Enemy, and alſo thereupon Deſign to make War againſt Us. At all this We greatly wonder; ſince to our knowledge We never treſpaſſed againſt You, nor ever had the leaſt Intent ſo to do. Wherefore then are You come thus againſt Us with ſo great an Army, to take from Us that ſmall Inheritance, which God hath given Us? You have, We confeſs, the Grace to be Fortunate in Arms above any Prince now living, and We think, You magnifie Your Self in your Puiſſance. But ſince We know for certain, that You intend to give Us Battle, We alſo hereby give You to know as certainly, that wherever You enter into Caſtille, You ſhall ſurely find Us before You, ready to keep and defend this our Seigniory. Dated at Saint Domingo de la Calzada, &c. Having ſealed this Letter he called unto him an Herald, and ſaid, "Go your way as faſt as may be to the Prince of WALES, and bear him this

[m] Don Henrique por la Gracia de Dios, Rey de Caſtilla, y Leon, de Galizia, de Cordova, de Murcia, de Jaën, del Algarve, del Algezira, de Gibraltar, e Senor de Viſcaya, e Molina, &c.

An. Dom. 1367. An. Regni Angliæ XLI.

"Letter from me. The Herald obey'd and rode toward Navarre, and came to Pampelona, where he found the Prince, before whom He kneeled down, and deliver'd the Letters of Don Henry, his Maſter. The Prince read the Letters twice over deliberately, and having diſmiſſed the Herald to another time, preſently ſent for certain of his Council and demanded their Advice, adding theſe Words, Ha! ſaid He, I well perceive this Baſtard is a Valiant Knight, and ſheweth a good Courage thus to write unto us. After a ſhort debate, it was reſolved in Council, Not to write again as yet; but that the Herald ſhould be detained, till it ſhould appear ſeaſonable to return an anſwer: For the Prince intended at his own pleaſure to return his mind by no other, but this Herald; wherefore he was commanded to tarry ſtill and expect an anſwer.

V. That ſame day, on which the Herald brought theſe Letters, the Lord Thomas Felton ſtept forth before the Prince, and required of him one Favour; the Prince demanding what it was that he deſired, "Sir (ſaid He) I deſire, You would pleaſe to "grant me your licence to leave the Army, and to ride on before: For there are ſeveral "Knights and Eſquires of my Retinue, who are ambitious by ſome adventurous Exploit "to advance their Honours. And Sir, I'll engage to ride ſo forward, as to make ſome "diſcovery of our Enemies Behaviour, and which way they move, and where they are "encamped. The Prince readily granted his Requeſt, for which having return'd his thanks, he began to ride forth before the Army, as Chief Captain of that Enterpriſe, with Sr. William Felton, his Brother, Sr. Hugh Stafford, Sr. Thomas Hufford, Sr. Simon Burly, Sr. Richard Cauſton, Sr. Robert Knolles, Sr. Hugh Haſtings, Sr. Dangouſes, and ſeveral other Knights and Eſquires in his Company; the whole Number conſiſting of an 140 Men of Arms, and 300 Select Archers, all well Mounted. Theſe rode thrô Navarre by the help of Guides, till they came to the River Ebro, which is rapid and deep; but they found a place to paſs, and ſo went and lodged in a Village called Navaret, which they found void of Inhabitants for fear of the War; and here they held themſelves cloſe, the better to learn and hear, where King Henry was. While this Detachment lay thus at Navaret, and the Prince remain'd in the Marches of Pampelona, the King of Navarre, as he was one day riding about from Town to Town with a few Attendants, was ſeiſed on in his own Country by a Breton on the French ſide, and the Baſtards, named Sr. Oliver Manny, and made a Priſoner, to the great Aſtoniſhment of all Men, eſpecially of the Prince of Wales and his Council; and many Engliſhmen thought it was but a trick of his, and that it could not have been done without his own Conſent; that ſo he might be excuſed from Conveying the Prince any further, as not knowing, how things might go between Don Henry and Don Pedro. And yet his Queen ſeem'd extreamly afflicted at the News of his being taken, and came her ſelf to the Prince, and fell down on her knees before him, and ſaid, "Ah! Dear Sir, for Gods "ſake have pity on my Condition, and take ſome Care about the Deliverance of the "King, my Husband, who is ſurpriſed fraudulently, and taken away from Us, and as "yet the Manner cannot be known, nor where he is; But We deſire of you, for the love of God, that he may be reſtored again unto Us. The Prince anſwer'd, Certain"ly, Fair Lady and Couſin, the taking of the King, your Husband, is not a little diſ"pleaſing unto Us; but We hope ſhortly to provide a Remedy for him and you; where"fore We deſire you to comfort your ſelf: For this our Expedition once ended, We ſhall "mind no other thing, but how to work his Deliverance. With this the Queen of Navarre took her leave and went home; but ſhe ſent to the Prince a Noble Knight, called Sr. Martin Carre; who undertook to Guide him thorough that Country, and to furniſh him with Guides for all his Troops; otherwiſe they could never have kept the Right way thrô the ſtraights and dangerous Paſſages. Then the Prince marched from his former Quarters, and paſſed by Eſcharriaranas, which was another new trouble; for the way thereabout was very narrow and mighty bad: And here for ſome while many were kept ſhort of Victuals; for they found little or no ſubſiſtance, till they came to Salvatierra. This is a good Town and ſcituate in a fair and plentifull Country, near the bounds of Navarre, at the very entrance into Spain, and at that time it held for the Baſtard Henry. Wherefore while the Prince's Army ſpread about in the Country to refreſh themſelves, the Companions advanced with deſign to ſtorm the Town of Salvatierra, expecting if they took it by force, to have the ſpoil thereof; which they long'd for extreamly, and they knew, there was much wealth in the Town, which had been brought thither from all Parts adjoyning, out of Confidence of the Places ſtrength. But the Inhabitants thought not good to hazard all by Reſiſtance; for they conſider'd, that they could not poſſibly hold out long againſt ſo great an Army. Wherefore they came forth and ſubmitted themſelves to Don Pedro, preſenting him with the Keys of the Town, and begging his Grace and Pardon. King Pedro at the Prince's Perſwaſion received them to Mercy; thô otherwiſe he was minded to have put them all to the Sword for a terror to the reſt: But the Prince qualify'd this his Bloody Reſolution, by telling him, "that to refuſe pardon to thoſe, who ſubmitted, was to arm all his Subjects with Deſpair againſt him." Hereupon the Prince, King Don Pedro, the King of Majorica, and the Duke of Lancaſter enter'd, and took Poſſeſſion of the Town, and the Earl of Armagnac, and other Lords quarter'd in other Villages about the Town. AN. DOM. 1367. An. Regni Angliæ XLI.

Keys

VI. All this while Sr. Thomas Felton and his Company lay at Navaret, about five days Journey from the place where they left the Main Body of the Engliſh Army at firſt, being mightily deſirous to advance their Bodies, and to purchaſe Honour by ſome well-menag'd Boldneſs. They frequently ſallied forth of Navaret, and rode up to the very Skirts of the Enemies Camp to make what diſcovery they could of their Number and Behaviour. As for King Henry, he was lodged in the open Field, much ſurpriſed, that he heard no News of his Herald, by whom he thought to have ſome account of the Prince before this. Yet ſundry times ſome Troops of his would ride as far as Najara, with deſign to gain ſome knowledge of the Engliſhmen: So that at laſt the Earl of Sancelloni, Brother to Don Henry was certainly informed, that there lay an Engliſh Garriſon at Navaret. But before this was known, Sr. Thomas Felton one evening rode ſo far toward the Enemy, that they came up almoſt to King Henries Lodgings, and there ſuddenly began a great Skirmiſh, and wonderfully terrified the whole Army, and ſlew and took many Priſoners, particularly that Knight who kept the Watch was taken, and carried clear off without Recovery, and the Engliſh returned without any Loſs to Navaret. The next day they ſent an Herald unto the Prince, who was then at Salvatierra to ſhew him what they had done and ſeen, and where his Enemies lay, and how ſtrong they were; for they had been fully informed of all by the Priſoners they had taken. Prince Edward was glad of this News, and that his Knights had ſucceeded ſo well, reſolving thereupon to quicken his March; and Don Henrique on the other ſide was extreamly diſpleaſed, that the Engliſhmen who lay at Navaret had made ſo great Diſcovery of his Affairs, and ſo reſolved to advance and march nearer toward his Enemies. When Sr. Thomas Felton and his Company at Navaret heard, that King Henry had left St. Domingo, and was come as far as St. Miguel towards him, then they determin'd to leave Navaret and take the Field, as well to avoid being beſieged by ſo great an Army, as to make a further diſcovery of their Enemies; and of all this they ſent Word to the Prince, who had then newly left Salvatierra, and how Don Henry came on apace, and ſeem'd very deſirous to come to a Battle. When the Prince underſtood all this, he was very glad, and ſaid aloud to thoſe that were about him, "By my Faith this Baſtard Henry is a Valiant and Couragious "Knight; for 'tis a ſign he fears us not, ſince he is coming forward to find us; and ſince "he doth thus, and We alſo ſeek for him, 'tis highly probable we ſhall ſoon meet and "look one another in the Face. I judge it therefore fit to leave this Place and to march for- "ward, and get to Victoria if poſſible before our Enemies." So the next Morning the Army began to march, the Prince with his Battail riding foremoſt at ſuch a Rate that he reached Victoria that Day, where he found Sr. Thomas Felton and all his Men, as yet he had not loſt one of them. The Prince was glad to find them all well, and enquired of them about many Matters; but as they were talking together the next Day the Princes Van-Currours came ſuddenly and declared, how they had met the Enemies Currours, whereby they concluded for certain, that King Henry and his Hoſt was not far off, and thus they gather'd from the Spaniards Demeanour; becauſe they dared to ſtand them, thô not to perſue them. Then the Prince commanded an Alarm to be ſounded, and at the ſound of Trumpet all Men went immediately to their Arms, and ſo drew to their Colours in good Order and Array of Battle ready to fight, for they were all fully inſtructed before they left Salvatierra what to do, and how to range themſelves at ſound of Trumpet: And this was done as it were in a moment, they were all ſo practiſed and expert in War. Surely it was a gallant Sight to behold the Brightneſs of their Arms, to obſerve the ſtatelineſs of their Barbed Horſes, to view the Rich Banners and Streamers embroidered and beaten with Arms both in Colours and Metal, and waveing with a delightfull Terror in the Wind.

The Van was order'd with Wonderfull Diſcretion, and there ſtood John of Gaunt Duke of Lancaſter King Edwards Fourth Son, in the Flower of his Youth, being at that time in the 27 Year of his Age, of great Strength, Conduct and Courage, and honourably Emulous of his Brother Prince Edwards Glory: With him was the Lord

John

An. Dom. 1367. An. Regni Angliæ XLI.

John Chandos, High-Conſtable of Aquitain, with a vaſt Retinue of moſt ſelect Warriers; but we have already ſet down the Order and Names of this Engliſh Army; wherefore here it only remains, that we add how at this time the Duke of Lancaſter made 12 New Knights, among whom were Sr. Ralph Camois, Sr. Walter Loring, Sr. Thomas Damuore, and Sr. John Grandeſſon. The Lord Chandos alſo Knighted ſeveral Engliſh Eſquires, as Mr. Cotton, Mr. Clifton, Mr. Prior, William Firmeton, Emery de la Rochechoüart a Frenchman, Gerard de la Motte and Robert Briquet. Prince Edward alſo Knighted in the Field firſt of all King Don Pedro, then the Lord Thomas Holland, Son to his Lady the Princeſs by her former Husband, he being then about 17 Years of Age, alſo Sr. Hugh Courtney, Sr. Philip Courtney and Sr. Dennis Courtney, [n] Sr. William Molineux, Sr. John Covet, Sr Nicolas Bond, and ſeveral other Valiant and Hopefull young Gentlemen; and here and in the other Battails by the Prince and other Great Lords, as by the Duke of Lancaſter, Don Pedro, the Lord Chandos, the King of Majorica and Others, were made no leſs than three hundred New Knights. And all the while the whole Army ſtood in Battle Array, ready to receive their Enemies, who yet came not forward all that Day, but remain'd ſtill in the place, where firſt the Princes Van-Currours had found them. For King Henry expected ſome more Forces to come to him out of Aragon, and eſpecially Sr. Bertram of Clequin, who was now haſting to him with 4000 Men of Arms, and without his Company King Henry deſign'd not to accept of Battle, unleſs he ſhould be compelled. Which Reſolution of his was not as then much diſpleaſing to Prince Edward, becauſe his Rereward, which conſiſted of 6000 Fighting Men was ſtill behind him above ſeven Spaniſh Leagues, whereat he was extreamly vexed in his Mind, thô that Day his Reſolution was to have fought without them, if the Spaniards had come forward.

[n] Stow p. 269.

VII. That ſame Evening the Prince's two Marſhals, Sr. Guiſchard Dangle and Sr. Stephen Coſſington, commanded all Men to repair to their Lodgings, and at the Sound of Trumpet next Morning to return to their places, in the ſame Order which they had held the Day before. But Sr. Thomas Felton with part of his former Company, went forth that Evening by the Prince's Leave, and rode two Leagues nearer toward the Enemy to learn their preſent Behaviour. That very Evening the Earl of Sancelloni Brother to the Baſtard Henry was with him in his Pavilion, where after ſome Diſcourſe about War and Warlike Adventures, he ſaid at laſt to the King his Brother, "Sir, you "know how our Enemies are encamped not far off, and yet all this while none of your "Servants have view'd them. Sir, I humbly requeſt of You, that you would grant me "your Leave to ride forth to morrow morning with a certain Number of Men, to "learn more exactly the Order, Number and Behaviour of the Engliſh: And Sir, "I promiſe you to go ſo near, that I ſhall be enabled to give you ſome certain Infor-"mation. King Henry freely granted his Brothers Requeſt, and juſt at that inſtant Sr. Bertram of Clequin came to the Camp with 4000 Men of Arms of Bretagne, France and Aragon, whereat the King and all his Friends were extreamly refreſhed, and they were received with a mighty Shout. The [o] next Morning the young Earl of Sancelloni forgat not his Deſign, but took along with him his Brother Sancho and 6000 choſen Horſe, all well-Arm'd, and ſuch as he thought fitteſt for his purpoſe. He would willingly have had with him Sr. Bertram of Clequin, Sr. Arnold of D' Endreghan, the Beague of Vilain, and the Vicount of Rochebreton of Aragon; but the King charged him by no means to make any ſuch Motion to them, becauſe they were but newly come, wherefore he let them alone. So with the Troops aforeſaid he mounted early, and began to ride in good Order from the Kings Hoſt toward the Engliſh Camp. About Sun-riſe he met with a part of Sr. Hugh Calverley's Company with his Armour; for he had lodged that Night near a League from the Engliſh Army. Againſt theſe Men the Spaniards immediately addreſſed themſelves, and preſently ſlew and diſcomfited them, moſt of them being ſlain; but Sr. Hugh himſelf was not there, he was behind the Spainiards riding after his Men; but when he underſtood of this Matter, he took another way, and rode upon the Spur towards his Friends; yet he was perceived and chaſed narrowly, however he gat up with the reſt of his Company to the Skirts of the Duke of Lancaſters Battail, where he took Refuge. At the ſame inſtant the Spaniards fell in after him on the skirts of the Duke's Camp, crying out Caſtilla, Don Henrique, and beating down Tents, and hurting, ſlaying and overthrowing much People: So that the whole Hoſt being alarum'd with the noiſe began to arm, and to repair to their Colours, and the Chief Lords of that Battail brought up their Men apace to the Duke's Lodgings, who ſtood ready arm'd with his Banner before him; and there the Engliſhmen and Gaſcogners ranged themſelves haſtily in their [o] Froiſ. c. 236. &c.

their appointed Order. Then the Duke being conſiderably ſupplied, rode up a little Mountain, and thither came to him the Lord John Chandos, and the two Marſhals with divers Knights and Eſquires, ſetting themſelves in Array about the Duke, and preſently after came into the Field the Prince of Wales and King Don Pedro, and ranged their Men in Order of Battle: For they thought King Henry was coming on with all his Army. The Earl of Sancelloni had thought to have firſt taken the foreſaid Mountain for his better Advantage, but when he ſaw himſelf prevented, and that the whole Army would by and by be upon him, he made haſte to get off, and ſo rallied his Men and began to retire, in hopes to meet with ſome more eaſie Adventure elſewhere. But before this was done, many Feats of Arms were try'd: For certain Engliſh Knights and Gaſcogners with the Marſhals leave left their Army, and ſtruck in furiouſly among the Spainiards, and overthrew ſeveral of them to the Earth; but all the while the Main Body of the Hoſt ſtood ſtill, expecting preſently to be fought withall by Don Henry.

AN. DOM. 1367. AN. REGNI Angliæ XLI.

As the Spaniards were returning toward their Camp, they met with Sr. Thomas Felton and his Brother Sr. William, Sr. Richard Cauſton, Sr. Hugh Haſtings, Sr. Dangouſes, and Others to the number of 200 Knights and Eſquires, Engliſh and Gaſcogners, and about 300 Archers whom they met in a Valley, and at the firſt ſight of them, cry'd --Don Henrique de Caſtille. The Engliſh ſeeing how far they were overſet by Numbers, and that they had no means to eſcape them, took the advantage of a little Hill, and ſet themſelves cloſe together, comforting one another as well as they might. The Spaniards came and ſat down before them, deviſing by what means they might ſooneſt bring them into their power: At which time the Lord William Felton undertook a daring and deſperate Enterpriſe; for he deſcended boldly down the Hill with his Spear in his Reſt to prove his Courſer, and ruſhed in among the Spaniards, and at the firſt Encounter ſtruck a Spaniſh Knight ſo violently with his Spear, that it paſſed clean thrô his Body, and the Knight fell down dead. Then was Sr. William encloſed round about among his Enemies, dealing of Blows, and fighting valiantly with a good ſteel Ax, wherewith he did as much as it was poſſible for any one Man to do, his Brother Sr. Thomas and the other Knights with him, beholding from the Mountain how glorioufly he fought, and what Wonders in Arms he performed, and into what a deſperate Condition he had plunged himſelf; but they could not aſſiſt him without flinging themſelves away together with him: So they ſtood ſtill in their former Order on the Mountain. All this while Sr. William fought with great skill and fury, and did his Enemies great Dammage, receiving little or none himſelf, he moved his Great Horſe about ſo ſwiftly, and turned and changed ground with ſo much Art and Dexterity; but at laſt his Horſe being firſt ſlain under him, he was alſo beaten down, and there died in the Bed of Honour as he deſired. Thus was this Valiant Gentleman, being a Baron of England, ſlain [p] on the 19 day of March, leaving behind him his Son and Heir Sr. John Felton, at that time 28 Years of Age.

[p] Dugd. Bar. 2 Vol. p. 65.

He being thus diſpatched, the Spaniards began to conſider how to win the reſt, who ſtill kept upon the Mountain in wonderfull good Order: And ſurely that Morning many gallant Feats of Arms were performed by the Engliſh; for ſometimes a Troop would deſcend from the Mountain and fight with their Enemies, while the Archers ſecured them on the Flank with their thick flights of Arrows, and then they would diſcreetly retreat again, and a freſh Troop take their place. In this condition they continued till paſt High-noon, the Prince of Wales knowing nothing of their Danger; for if he had he could eaſily have deliver'd them: But now they were obliged to take what ſhould fall. When they had thus fought by turns for ſeveral Hours, without ſuffering any great Loſs, the Earl of Sancelloni, who fretted horribly, that ſuch a ſmall Number ſhould hold out ſo long, and alſo he feared, that ſome of the Princes Captains might hear of it, or come up accidentally to their Reſcue, I ſay, then the Earl of Sancelloni cried out aloud, "My Lords, for ſhame! What do we here thus all the Day? We ought "before this to have devoured them every Mothers Son. Advance forward in the Name "of God and St. Jago, and let us fight them ſtiffly. There is nothing conſiderable to "be obtain'd, unleſs it be dearly paid for. With theſe Words the Spaniards began more boldly to mount the Hill in ſuch cloſe Order, that they could not be broken: Then the Engliſhmen and Gaſcogners defended themſelves with a Courage, which their Deſpair had heightned, and the Archers beſtow'd their Arrows liberally upon the Spaniard till their Quivers were exhauſted. All that was poſſible to be done they performed, but long they could not now endure, their Archers being rendred uſeleſs, and the Men of Arms being preſſed upon on all Hands; ſo that at laſt their Ranks being broken, broken, they were all taken and conquer'd by Force of Arms, not one escaping either Death or Imprisonment, except a few Pages and Valets that saved themselves by the Goodness of their Masters Horses; and at Night came to the Prince, who stood all that Day on the Hill ready to fight, for He thought the Bastard was marching towards Him.

An. Dom. 1367. An. Regni Angliæ XLI.

VIII. About the same time also the Earl of Sancelloni return'd home joyfully to the Camp, and came to his Brother, Don Henry, to whom he made a Present of such Prisoners, as he had taken, and gave a Relation to him, to Sr. Bertram of Clequin, Sr. Arnold D' Endreghan, and other Lords of France and of Spain, "how they had over-"thrown part of Sr. Hugh Calverley's Retinue, and chaced him into the Duke of Lan-"caster's Battail, where they had done considerable Harm, before the Host was mo-"ved; that in their return they met with these Knights, whom there He presented "unto him; and how they happen'd on the Adventure, and how they performed the "Action. King Henry, who heard these Words with wonderfull Delight, reply'd, "Fair Brother, You have succeeded very well, for which We hope sometime to consider "You: And I doubt not, but all the Army of the English will pass the same way. Sir "(said the Lord Arnold D' Endreghan) saving Your Majesties favour, thô I wish your Words "may take full effect, yet there may be some reason to doubt it. For thus much Sir, "I must be bold to say, when You meet with the Prince of Aquitain in Battle, You shall "there find Men of War, furnished with all things requisite to perfect and accomplish'd "Souldiers. This Prince leads along with him the Flower of the Chevalry of all the "World; whom You shall find to be right Hardy and Couragious fighting Men, and who "will sooner cover the ground with their Bodies, than flinch one foot: Wherefore Sir, "'tis necessary to be well advis'd, and to take heed in this Matter. But Sir, if You will "follow my Counsel, You may discomfit them without striking a stroak, for if You will "keep the Passages of the Ebro, and the other streights of your Country; so that no Pro-"vision may come at them, You will famish them, and compell them to return toward "their own Country; which they must do without any good Order or Array; and so You "may discomfit them at your ease and pleasure. The King answer'd, "Marshal, Mar-"shall, by the soul of my Dear Father, I desire so much to see the Prince, and to try his "strength and mine together, that I will never stir hence without Battle, if he'll have "the Courage to come and give it me; and if not, I'll go and present him with Battle "in what place soever I shall find him. For, I thank God, We have Men enough: First, "We have * 10000 Men of Arms, well armed and mounted on barbed Horses; so that "they need not fear any shot of the Archers; then We have 20000 others mounted on "Genets and armed Capapé; besides 10000 Crossbows, and above 60000 other Com-"mon Souldiers, arm'd with Pikes, Halberds, Slings, and other Weapons: And all "these have sworn not to fail me, thô they die for it. Wherefore, Sr. Arnold, I see "no cause to be afraid; but rather to repose a well-grounded Confidence in the Power of "God and our Men. And as they were thus talking, certain Knights brought Wine and sweet Meats to the King, of which he took and gave to the Lords about him, and that done, they retired to their several Quarters: And the English and Gascogners, who had been taken that day, after they had sworn themselves true Prisoners, were secured separately.

* Hoc apparet ex duobus Froisardi locis simul collatis, c. 236.

IX. Now the Prince of Wales had stood all that day on the Mountain, expecting to no purpose the approach of Don Henry; at Night being informed of his loss, and how his Men were taken and slain, he was extreamly displeas'd; but the Matter was then past remedy; so for that Night the Army withdrew to their Lodgings; but the next Morning the Prince took Counsel, and determin'd to rise from thence, as he did, and went, and encamped a pretty way off before Victoria, and there again he stood a while in Battle Array; for he was enformed, that King Henry was not far off; but since he had got to Najara, he came not a step forward. Now the Prince and his Men were in no small scarcity of Victuals and Provision both for themselves and their Horses: For they were but in an indifferent and hard Country; so that in the Host a Loaf of Bread was sold for a Floren, and yet happy was he, that could get it; and besides the season was foul and troublesome, by reason of Wind, Rain, and Snow: And in this Condition was the English Army for six days; but Don Henry lay in a Fruitfull Country about St. Miguel, on the other side the Ebro. Wherefore when the Prince saw, that the Spaniards came not forward to fight him, and that his Men began to be in Distress, he determin'd to pass the Ebro, and go and fight the Bastard, or chace him out of the Realm: Whereupon he dislodged, and took the way to Navaret, passing thrô the Country of Alava, till he came to a Town called Viana, standing ſtanding near the River Ebro, on the very confines of Navarre. There the Prince and the Duke of Lancaſter, and all the other Lords refreſhed themſelves and the Army for two days, and then they paſſed the River Ebro, which on that ſide divides the Realms of Navarre, and old Caſtille, at the Bridge of Logronno (by the Engliſh called Groing) among the Gardens of Olives: And here they found a better Country, than before, thô ſtill Victuals was ſcarce and dear. AN. DOM. 1367. An. Regni Angliæ XLI.

When King Henry heard, how the Prince had paſſed the River at Groing, then he diſlodged from St. Miguel, where he had layn more than a week, and went and encamped before Najara: Prince Edward, hearing that King Henry drew near him, was very glad, and ſaid aloud, "By St. George this Baſtard ſeems to be a Valiant Knight, and ſince he deſires ſo much to find us, I truſt we ſhall meet together ſhortly. Then he ſent for his Brother, the Duke of Lancaſter, and others of his Council, by whoſe Advice he now at laſt wrote an anſwer to King Henry of the Letters, which he had ſent many days before, the Tenor whereof followeth, viz.

"EDWARD, by the Grace of God, Prince of Wales and of Aquitain, Duke of Corn-"wall, and Earl of Cheſter, to the Right-Honourable and Renowned Lord, Henry, "Earl of Traſtamara, who at this preſent calls himſelf King of Caſtille. Whereas You "have ſent unto Us your Letters by your Herald, wherein are contained divers Paſſa-"ges; intimating, that You would gladly know, why We take to our Friend and Lover, "your Enemy, our Couſin, the King Don Pedro, and by what Title We make War up-"on You, being enter'd with an Army Royal into Caſtille: To this We now anſwer; "Know You for a truth; that it is to ſuſtain Right and Juſtice, and to uphold Reaſon "and Equity, as it appertaineth to all Kings and Princes to do: And alſo to cultivate "and cheriſh the ſtrict Alliances, which the King of England, our Deareſt Father, "and King Don Pedro have of long time held together. However becauſe You are a "Renowned and Right Worthy and Valiant Knight, We are willing, if We may, to re-"concile him and You together, and We ſhall ſo perſwade our Couſin, Don Pedro, that "he ſhall yield unto You a conſiderable part of his Realm of Caſtille; but as for the "Crown and Inheritance Royal, that You muſt Renounce for ever: In which caſe, Sir, "You may take Counſel and be adviſed. And as for our entring into Caſtille, We will "enter and proceed, as We think beſt at our own pleaſure. Dated at Groing the 30 of "March, in the Year of Grace MCCCLXVII.

X. This Letter being folded up and ſealed with the Prince's Seal was deliver'd to the ſame Herald, that brought Don Henry's Letters, and had tarried for an anſwer now about three Weeks. So the Herald was diſmiſſed and rode on, till he came to Najara, where he found King Henry was encamped among the Buſhes: He went directly to the Kings Tent, whither the greater part of the Chiefs of the Army went to hear what News the Herald had brought: He for his part kneeled down and deliver'd the Prince's Letters to the King; who took them and open'd them, and cauſed them to be read before Sr. Bertram of Clequin, and others of his Council. Then Sr. Bertram ſpake to the King, "Sir (ſaid he) be aſſured of this, that now You ſhall have "Battle ſpeedily; I know the Prince of Wales ſo well. Conſider therefore, Sir, advi-"ſedly on the Matter; for 'tis neceſſary, that You take great Care of your Affairs, and "order your Battails in ſuch manner, as may appear beſt. Sr. Bertram (ſaid the King) "be it ſo in the Name of God; I value not the Power of the Prince: For I have (be-"ſides our Auxiliaries from Bretagne, France, and Aragon) 10000 Barbed Horſes, "which ſhall make two Wings to our Army, and 20000 Men of Arms on luſty Genets, "the moſt Choſen, that can be found in all Caſtille, Galizia, Portugal, Corduba, and "Sevile, and 10000 good Croſsbows, and 60000 others on foot with Pikes, Halberds, "Launces, and other Habiliments for the War: And all theſe have ſworn not to fail "me, thô they die for't. Wherefore, Sir, I truſt to have the Victory by the Grace of "God, in whom is my Confidence, and in the Right, which I have in the Quarrel. And "ſo my Lords, I deſire You all to be of good Courage. Thus King Henry and Sr. Ber-"tram of Clequin talk'd together, and no more was ſaid about the Prince's Letters: For King Henry, who knew no Compoſition would be able to ſecure his Life, reſolv'd to be content with no leſs than a Kingdom, and ſo prepared for Battle, and took care that his Men ſhould be well-order'd. And all the while the Earl of Sancelloni and his Brother Sancho, were mightily extolled thrô the Spaniſh Hoſt, for the Succeſs they had againſt the Engliſh, which added much to the Courage of all the Army.

On Fryday, [q] the ſecond day of April the Black-Prince began his March from Logronno, or Groing, upon the River Ebro, and went forward in Battle Array to find his [q] Lit. Dom. C. Paſch. 18. April.

An. Dom. 1367. An. Regni Angliæ XLI.

Enemies. That day he advanced little more than two Leagues; for about Three of the Clock in the Afternoon he came before Navaret, where he encamped, and then sent forth his Currours to aview his Enemies, and to know exactly where they lay. These rode so far, that they saw all the behaviour of their Enemies, and how they were lodged before the City of Najara, whereof they brought Word to the Prince; and He thereupon gave Order to be convey'd secretly thrô the whole Camp, that at the First sound of the Trumpet they should all rise, at the Second be armed, and at the Third Mount their Horses, and follow the Marshals Banners with the Ensign of St. George; and that on pain of Death none presume to go before the Marshals, unless they were commanded so to do.

XI. As the Prince on the Fryday had sent out his Currours, so did King Henry the same day on his part, to learn where the Prince was encamped, and when they had brought him the Certainty as to the Matter, he called unto him Sr. Bertram of Clequin, the Lord Arnold D' Endreghan, and others, and fell to advise with them what was next to be done. 'Twas here concluded, that first the Army should be well supp'd, and so order'd to take their repose, to be the more fresh and lusty the next day; at the hour of Midnight to be ready apparel'd, and to draw into the Field; to be ranged by their Captains in the Order, as had been devised: For none doubted, but to fight the next day. So that Night, however hard the English fared, and therefore the rather desired to come to a quick Decision, yet the Spaniards, who had plenty of Victuals, and all other necessaries, took their repast and repose, as they themselves desired. About Midnight the Trumpets sounded in King Henry's Host, and then every man made him ready, at the Second Blast they came out of their Lodgings, and order'd themselves in Three Battalia's. The first was led by Sr. Bertram of Clequin, who[r] bare for his Arms, in a Field Argent the [f] Imperial Eagle, over all a Dexter Battoon Gules: With him was joyn'd the Lord Arnold D' Endreghan, Marshal of France, whose shield of Gules was charged with a Fez Checquee, Argent and Gules, between six spur Rowels Argent. And in this Battail was the Lord Robert of Rochebreton, the Earl of Denia in Valencia, and all the Strangers, as well of France and Bretagne, as of Hainalt, Aragon, and of other Countries, as the Lord of Dantoing, and Sr. Alan Lord of Bruſnel, Sr. Guy Bailleul, the Beague of Vilaine, the Beague of Villiers, Sr. John of Bergues, the Almain of St. Venant (who was then made Banneret) with many Persons more of Note and Valour, to the Number of 4000 Knights and Esquires, all arm'd after the manner of France, and 20000 Footmen. The Second Battalia was led by the Earl of Sancelloni and his Brother Sancho, with 5000 Genettours, and 10000 Foot, and these stood a little back on the Left-hand of the First Battail; the Third and the greatest of all was govern'd by the King himself, and he had with him 7000 Men of Arms, and 60000 Foot with the Crosbows; besides that other 15000 Gennettours were disposed about as Wings in the First and Last Battails: So that in all Don Henry had this day on his side, no less than an 121000 Men one with another. When all was rightly order'd, He leap'd on a Strong Mule, after the usage of that Country, and rode about from Battail to Battail, and from Squadron to Squadron; with gracious and sweet Words, praying and desiring every Man that day to do his utmost to defend and maintain his and their Right and Honour; that they should remember, how they were better Men and more numerous than their Enemies, and that their Cause also was more just; and as he spake, he appeared so wonderfull Cheerfull and Magnanimous, that every Man was glad to see him look so well, and gather'd Matter of Courage to himself from so good a sign. When Don Henry had thus encouraged his Men, he return'd to his own Battail; at which time the Sun began to rise, and then he order'd his Banners to advance forward; for he thought it more for his Honour to meet his Enemies, than to expect them.

[r] True Use of Armory in the life of the Lord John Chandos p. 79.

[f] i.e. Spread Eagle Sable.

Now the Prince of Wales also on his part was ready Armed in the Field by break of Day, and presently after began to march forward in Battle Array; for he resolved no longer to put off the Matter. None rode before the Marshals Battails but the Currours, who were thereto appointed: So that both Hosts by the report of their Currours knew they should meet presently. The English went forward an Hosting pace to meet their Enemies, and so did the Spaniards towards them; and the Sun being now risen, it was a ravishing sight to behold the Armies, and the Sun reflecting from their bright steel and shining Armour. For in those days the Cavalry were generally armed in Mail or polished Steel at all points; and besides that, the Nobility wore over their Armour rich Surcoats of Silk and Sattin Embroidery, whereon was curiously stitcht or beaten the Arms of their House, whether in Colour or Metal. As

Thô born unto, and Meriting, a Crown,
Unequal Fate allotted me a Grave:
Yet by my Armes Don Pedro gain'd his Throne:
To make a King, than to bee One's more Brave.

particularly at this time the Black-Prince was habited according to the Repreſentation we have here made of him, which is Copied from an old and authentick Original. AN. DOM. 1367. An. Regni Angliæ XLI.

XII. As thus the two Armies approached near together, the Prince went over a little Hill, in the deſcending whereof he ſaw plainly his Enemies marching toward him: Wherefore when the whole Army was come over this Mountain, he commanded that there they ſhould make an Halt, and ſo fit themſelves for Fight. At that inſtant the Lord [t] John Chandos brought his Enſign folded up, and offer'd it to the Prince ſaying, "Sir, here is my Guidon, I requeſt your Highneſs to diſplay it abroad, and to give me "leave to raiſe it this day as my Banner: For I thank God and your Highneſs, I have "Lands and Poſſeſſions ſufficient to maintain it withall. Then the Prince took the Penon, and having cut off the Tail made it a Square Banner, and this done, both He and King Don Pedro for the greater Honour, holding it between their Hands diſplay'd it abroad, it being [u] Or a Sharpe Pile Gules, as we have ſhew'd before, and then the Prince deliver'd it unto the Lord Chandos again, ſaying, "Sr. John, behold here is your "Banner! God ſend you much Joy and Honour with it. And thus being made a Knight Banneret the Lord Chandos return'd to the Head of his Men and ſaid, "Here Gen- "tlemen, behold my Banner and yours, take it, and keep to your Honour and Mine. And ſo they took it with a Shout and ſaid, that by the Grace of God and St. George they would defend it to the beſt of their Powers; but the Banner remain'd in the hands of a gallant Engliſh Eſquire named William Alleſtry, who bore it all that Day, and acquitted himſelf in the ſervice right Honourably. And now all the Engliſh and Gaſcogners quitted their Horſes, and ranged themſelves on Foot in their former Order, and ſo both Armies began a little to advance, at which time the Prince of Wales having his Viſor up, [x] lifted up his Eyes to Heaven, and joyned his Hands together and ſaid, "O Very God, Jeſu Chriſt, who haſt formed and created me, grant by your Benign "Grace, that I may obtain this Day Victory of mine Enemies, as what I do is in a Righte- "ous Quarrel to ſuſtain and aid this King, whom they have Excluded from his Inheri- "tance: Which gives me the Courage to advance my Self againſt them, thereby to re- "eſtabliſh Him in his Realm. And therewithall being full of Faith and Courage, he laid his Right Hand upon King Don Pedro, who was next by him and ſaid, "Sir "King, You ſhall know this Day, whether ever you ſhall have any thing of the King- "dom of Caſtille or not. Therefore advance Banners, in the Name of God and St. "George. And juſt then the Duke of Lancaſter, and the Lord John Chandos approached their Enemies, at which time the Duke ſaid to Sr. William Beauchamp Lord of Bergavenny, and Fourth Son to the Earl of Warwick, "Sr. William, behold yon- "der our Enemies; This Day you ſhall ſee me a good Knight, or elſe to die in the Quar- "rel. And with that Word he began to joyn Battle with Sr. Bertram of Clequin, and the other Frenchmen and Aragonians, and Strangers of divers Countries. At the firſt Encounter there was a terrible Medley with Spear and Sh eld, and for a certain while neither could open the oth rs Ranks, or prevail in the leaſt; ſo that many a noble Feat of Arms was performed, and many a Man of Arms reverſed and caſt to the Earth, who never after could be relieved. Now while theſe two Battails of Engliſh and French were thus contending for the better, the other were reſolved not to ſtand long aloof, but came on apace and joyned together with great Fury. And firſt the Prince of Wales Himſelf, with whom were Don Pedro King of Caſtille, and the Lord Martin Carre, who repreſented the King of Navarre's Perſon, brought up his Main Battail, and came againſt the Earl of Sancelloni and his Brother Don Sancho, the Baſtards Brethren. But it ſeems he brought ſuch Terror along with him, that at the very firſt Shock, the Earl and his Brother were ſo ſtrangely ſurpriſed with Fear, [y] that they fled away ſuddenly they knew not why, without either Order or Array, with no leſs than 3000 Spears in their Company: So that immediately that Battail was open'd and diſcomfited; for the King of Majorica, the Captal of Buſche, the Lord Oliver Cliſſon and their Battail follow'd on after the Prince, and ſlew and hurt them at a prodigious Rate; while the Prince, who aim'd at a greater Matter, marched directly forward, and joyned freſhly with the Third and Laſt Battail of the Spaniards, where King Henry himſelf was with above 60000 Men, Horſe and Foot.

Here the Fight began to be fierce and cruel indeed, for the Spaniards and Caſtillians had Slings, wherewith they whirled ſtones at ſuch a rate, that they clove and brake many an Helmet therewith, and hurt and overthrew many a Man to the Ground. The mean while the Archers of England ſhot fiercely from their Long Bows, and ſlew many, and did much Miſchief both to Horſe and Man. The one Party cried Caſtille,

[t] Froiſ. c. 237. fol. 133. Vid. Favine l. 7. c. 12. p. 270. & Aſhmole p. 42. Selden's Tit. Hon. p. 790. & 791. &c.

[u] Vid. l. 4. c. 2. §. 3. p. 698.

[x] Froiſ. ibid.

[y] Froiſ. ibid.

An. Dom. 1367. An. Regni Angliæ XLI.

for King Henry, and the other St. George, Guienne, for the Prince of Aquitaine. All this while the firſt Battail of England fought ſtifly, being well match'd by the Frenchmen; and here the Duke of Lancaſter, the Lord John Chandos, the two Marſhals, Sr. Guiſchard Dangle and Sr. Stephen Coſſington, with Sr. William Beauchamp and Others, were trying out the matter with Sr. Bertram of Clequin, Sr. Arnold D' Endreghan, and the reſt of the Frenchmen and Aragonians, who made a gallant and a long Reſiſtance. So that the Knights of England endured much pain before they could open them; each Party with Spear in Hand foining and preſſing againſt each other, and when their Spears were broke, they fought with ſhort Battle-Axes, or Swords and Daggers. That Day the Lord John Chandos proved himſelf a Noble and Hardy Knight, doing under his Banner many a notable Feat of Arms, and he ſtill preſſed on ſo far, that at laſt he was encompaſſed among his Enemies, where he was ſo hardly handled, that he was fell'd to the Ground; but at the ſame time drew after him a great and big-bon'd Knight of Caſtille, named Sr. Martin Farcant, who was much renowned for Hardineſs among the Spaniards. This Man did his endeavour to have ſlain Sr. John Chandos, who now lay under him in extream danger. But at that inſtant Sr. John remembred himſelf of a Knife or ſhort Dagger, which he had in his Boſom under his Mail, and preſently drew it out, and ſtretching forth his right Hand, ſtrack this Sr. Martin Farcant ſo in the Back and Sides, that he ſlew him as thus he lay upon him. And then the Lord Chandos heaving him over on one ſide, aroſe quickly on his feet, and by that time his Men were broke in unto him, having long labour'd to come up to him, where they ſaw him fell'd. And now the Lord Chandos being follow'd by his Men, and they being headed by their General began to prevail againſt their Enemies, and to get apparent Advantage over them, thô they had fought long and doubtfully before they obtain'd this Point. Under the Enſign of St. George, and the Banner of the Lord Chandos were all the Companions, to the Number of 1200 Penons, and their Captains were all hardy and valiant Knights, as Sr. Robert Cheney, Sr. Perdiccas de la Brett, Sr. Robert Briquet, Sr. Garſes du Chaſtel, Sr. Galiard Vignior, Sr. John Charnels, Nandon of Bergerac, Edmund Ortingo, Humphry Perot of Savoy, the Bourg of Bartuel, the Bourg de l' Eſparre, Lanny, the Little Mechlin, and divers Others; beſides the Knights and Eſquires of England lead by the Duke of Lancaſter, as the Lord William Beauchamp, Sr. Ralph Camois, Sr. Walter Urſewick, Sr. Robert Someri, Sr. John Grandeſſon, Sr. John Draper, and above 200 Knights more. On the French Part there fought valiantly Sr. Bertram of Clequin, with the Lord Arnold D' Endreghan, the Lord William Garils a Spaniard, the Beague of Villaine, the Lord Dantoign or D' Intoigne in Hainalt, the Lord of Bruſnel, the Lord Guy Bailleul, Sr. John of Bergues, the Beague of Villiers, the Almain of St. Venant, and many other Good Knights of France, Hainalt, Bretagne, Spain, Aragon, Provence and the Marches thereabout, who behav'd themſelves all like Men, however they got no Advantage; for they were match'd with Knights hardy and ſtrong, and ſuch as were expert and well-practiſed in Arms.

Yet they held out a while with exceeding Courage, ſo that if the Spaniards had done their part as well as the Frenchmen, in all likelihood the Engliſh and Gaſcogners would have been much more hardly put to it, and have paid at leaſt dearer for their Victory. Neither was it any fault of the Baſtard Henry's that they did no better, for he had well and often admoniſhed, and deſired them before they came to it to do their utmoſt, and ſo they had promiſed him to do; and now he ſet them an Example himſelf, and gave infinite demonſtrations of his exceeding Valour, and did Wonders in Arms, and with a preſent Courage comforted his Men; and when he ſaw any ready to fly or quit their ſtation, and ſo open the Ranks, then he rode in among them and ſaid, "My Lords, I am your King: You your ſelves have made me ſo, and have ſworn and "promiſed not to fail me, thô you die for't. For Godſake, be mindfull now of your Oath "and Promiſe, and acquit your ſelves loyally unto Me: For certainly I will not flinch "one Foot, as long as I can ſee you do your Devoir. And another time he would ſay, "Where are the Courages of thoſe Noble Spaniards, who under my Father King Al- "phonſo have given ſuch wonderfull Overthrows to the Moors? Do not now diſgrace "your former Glories by turning your backs at this Time. A little Perſeverance will "ſet the Garland on your Heads. By theſe and the like Words, being full of Comfort, King Henry rallied his Men together three ſeveral times that Day, and with his own Hands he fought valiantly: So that by all means as to that Point he ought to have an honourable Report. Indeed this Fight proved marvellouſly Dangerous, and therein many Men were ſlain and grievouſly wounded, and at the beginning the Commons of Spain with their Slings caſt ſtones ſo violently, that it was a mighty trouble to the Engliſh at firſt, but when they alſo felt the ſharp Arrows of England light among them, they could no longer keep their Array ſo exactly. There were however with King Henry many Noble Men of Arms, as well of Spain as of Portugal and Aragon, who behaved themſelves with much Honour, and would not give up the Day ſo lightly: For they fought obſtinately with Spears, Axes, Javelins and Swords. And on a Wing of that Battail there were certain Troops of Cuiraſſiers, well mounted on Gennets, who always kept them in good Order: For when they broke or open'd their Array in any part, thither immediately flew theſe Troops, always ready to help and bring them again into Order. Which Device Sr. Bertram had taught King Henry, having to his Coſt learn'd it of the Lord Chandos in the Battle of Auray in Bretagne. Upon all which accounts it muſt be acknowledged, how the Engliſh and Gaſcogners before they had any great Advantage, bought it dearly, and were fain to win it by noble Chevalry and true Proweſs of Arms. And to ſay the Truth, the [z] Black-Prince himſelf was the chief Flower of Chevalry in all the World, and he had with him many right Valiant Knights and Eſquires, as well of England as of Aquitain, as the Lord Edward Spencer [a] a mighty Man of Valour, the young Lord Thomas Holland, Eldeſt Son to the Princeſs of Wales, the Lord Baldwin Frevil Seneſchal of Saintogne, Sr. Thomas Wake of Blyſeworth in Northamptonſhire Seneſchal of Rovergue, together with the Seneſchals of Bourdeaux, of Rochelle, of Poictou, of Limoſin and of Perigort, Sr. Nele Loring Knight of the Garter, Sr. Richard Pontchardon a moſt valiant Knight of Devonſhire, Sr. William Molineux, Sr. Nicolas Bond, Sr. Hugh Courtney and Sr. Philip Courtney Brethren, Sr. Euſtace Dambreticourt, Sr. John Combes and Sr. Thomas Combes Brethren; beſides the Gaſcogners, as Sr. Lewis of Marville, Sr. Raimund Danduel and Others. And in the other Battails there were as Choice Men as the World could afford, namely John of Gaunt Duke of Lancaſter, the Lord John Chandos, Sr. Gniſchard Dangle, Sr. Stephen Coſſington, the Lord John Greilly Captal of Buſche, the Lord Oliver Cliſſon, the Lord William Beauchamp, the Lord of Raix, Sr. Hugh Calverley, Sr. Matthew Gournay, Sr. John Tyrrel, Sr. William Clayton; alſo the Lord Lewis of Harcourt, the Earl of Armagnac, the Lord of Pons, the Lord of Partenay, the Lord of Albret, the Lord of Pamiers and his two Brethren, the Lord of Mucidan, the Lord of Rozan, the Earl of Perigort, the Earl of Cominges, the Earl of Carmain, the Lord of Coudon, the Lord de L' Eſparre, the Lord of Chaumont, Sr. Bartholomew du Cande, the Lord of Pincornet, Sr. Bertram de la Brett, the Soldiche de l' Eſtarrac, Sr. Petiton of Coutras, and Others aforenamed, who all deſerve Immortal Memory.

of

AN. DOM. 1367. An. Regni Angliæ XLI.

[z] Froiſ. ibid.

[a] Froiſ. f. 197. a.

A little beſide the Prince was James the young King of Majorica and his Company, nothing inferior to the Reſt, he fought with as much Animoſity here, as if the ſucceſs of the Battle had been to reſtore his own Kingdom unto him; but the Lord Martin Carre, who repreſented the King of Navarre's Perſon, was with the Prince, doing Actions nothing unworthy of his Character. There was none that time of all the Princes Army that did not his Beſt, as indeed they had all need enough ſo to do, for there were of Spaniards and Caſtillians, and Others, more than an 100000 in Harneſs, and yet the Battle was fought in Plain Field, without the benefit of any ſtratagem on either Side. So that by reaſon of the vaſt Numbers of the Enemy, and the Courage of their Captains, which often obliged them to renew the Fight, it was long before the Victory could be won. King Don Pedro eſpecially rag'd about like a wild Boar, being much chafed by the ſtiff Oppoſition he met withall, and extreamly deſirous to meet his Brother the Baſtard, ſaying, "Where is this Son of a Whore, that calls himſelf King "of Caſtille? Let me ſee his Face now if he dare. And yet at the ſame time Don Henry fought nothing worſe in the parts where he was (thô his Lords would not let him cope with Don Pedro) and yet beſides he had much ado that Day to hold his Men together ſo long as he did, "Ah! Ye good People (would he often ſay) You have "Crowned me your King; therefore help me now to keep what your ſelves have given "me, and ſwore to preſerve unto me. And by theſe and other ſuch Words as he ſpake, he inſpired many with an unuſual Courage, and made them ſtay and die in the Field, becauſe they could not for ſhame leave the place in his Sight.

Sr. Bertram [b] of Clequins Battail fought the beſt, and held the longeſt together entire; for there were many noble and expert Knights and Gentlemen, who behaved themſelves with all the Courage imaginable. And on the Engliſh ſide eſpecially, the Lord John Chandos gave pregnant Inſtances of his Perſonal Valour and Conduct; for that Day he guided and menag'd the young Duke of Lancaſter, as he had done the Prince at the Battle of Poictiers, and the Duke of Bretagne lately at the Fight before Auray; ray; in all which Cases he ought to be highly renowned. And all that Day he had no care of taking any Prisoners with his own hands, but he still fought and pressed forward toward the main Point: And yet by his Men, and under his Banner were taken many good Lords, Knights and Esquires both of Aragon and France; especially Sr. Bertram of Clequin himself, with whom fell the Hope of that Battail, and the Lord Arnold D' Endreghan Marshal of France, the Beague of Villaine, and above Threescore more Prisoners of note. Among others the Earl of Denia in Valencia [c] was taken by the hands of Robert Hawley and John Shakel, two Esquires of the Lord Chandos his Retinue, the Story whereof with the ill Consequences ensuing thereupon, and the Murther of Esquire Hawley, and the Earl of Denia's Son's wonderfull Fidelity to his Master Esquire Shakel, with whom he was then left a Pledge for his Fathers Ransome: All this is well worth the Relating, but because those Tragical Matters happen'd not till after King Edwards Death, and also is something over-long to tell, it cannot by the Rules of History be properly inserted in this Place; wherefore now We return again to the Matter in hand.

[b] Froiſ. c. 238. f. 139. b.

An. Dom. 1367. An. Regni Angliæ XLI.

[c] Vid. Walsh hist. in Ricard. 2. p. 216. Weevers Fun. Monum. p. 438. M.S. Ret. Parl. 160. & Sr. Rob. Cotton's Abridgm. p. 157.

So then at last this strong Battail of Sr. Bertram of Clequin was by fine Force open'd and discomfited, and all that were therein taken and slain, as well the Frenchmen as Aragonians and Others. There was slain the Beague of Villiers, and many Hundreds with him, and taken beside those aforemention'd, the Lord Dantoign of Hainalt, the Lord of Brusnel, Sr. Guy Bailleul, Sr. John of Bergues, Sr. Almain of St. Venant and divers Others of Prime Note.

And this Battail being thus utterly overthrown, the Duke of Lancaster, the Lord John Chandos, and the two Marshals rally'd their Men together under the Banner of St. George, and then went freshly to succour the Prince of Wales, and fell in on one side upon the Battail of Henry, crying out all together with an High and terrible Voice, St. George, Guienne! Then the Spaniards and their Associates, who even before contended but faintly, could no longer endure, but began to give ground, and open apace. But We must say something of what was done in this Battail, before the coming of the Duke of Lancaster and the Marshals. The Captal of Busche and the Lord Clysson fought on their part with excessive Fury; the same did the Lord Eustace Dambreticourt, Sr. John Devereux, the Soldiche of Estarrac, and others. But the Prince of Wales, especially behav'd himself Worthy of his Name and Character, encouraging and directing his Men, and performing the Office both of a good Souldier, and of an Accomplisht Captain. He was always in the heat of Action, and whereever the greatest stress of the Matter lay thither he constantly moved, carrying along with him Assurance to his Friends, and Terror to his Enemies. King Henry for his part acquitted himself with much Honour, and rallied, and brought back his Men (as we observ'd) three times that day. For upon the first flight of the Earl of Sancelloni with 3000 Horse, who followed him, the other Spaniards were so disheartned, that it required all the Care in the World to keep them firm together; wherefore King Henry was always ready, now here, and now there, saying, "My Lords, what is it You intend to do? Why will You "thus forsake and betray me, whom You have made your King, and set the Crown on my "Head, and put the Inheritance of Castille into the Hands of me and my Heirs? Re- "turn back with Courage, and help vigorously to defend me but a while, and do but stand "still by me; and by the Grace of God and St. Jago before Night all will be ours. These Words held the Chief Lords of Spain in the Field a long while, for they durst not flee for shame, when they saw their Lord the King fight so Valiantly, and speak so effectually; so that there died some thousands, that might have escaped early enough, if a sense of Honour, and the Loyalty they bare to their King, had not staid them in the Field to their destruction. But now when the Marshals Battail, and the Duke of Lancaster with the Lord Chandos, had thus reinforced the Prince of Wales, the Spaniards began apparently to be discomfited, and to fly away in great Disorder towards Najara, and would no longer hear, whatever King Henry could say unto them. Wherefore he also, beholding all his hopes ruin'd, call'd for his Gennet, mounted immediately, and put himself among them that fled; thô he took not the direct way to Najara, for fear of being besieged therein; but towards Forizillo, and so to Calahorra, from whence he made his Escape into Aragon: For he knew, if he were taken, he should die without Mercy.

XIII. Then the Englishmen and Gascogners leap'd on their Horses, and began to chace the Spaniards, who were flying away in an horrible fright and confusion toward the Great River; but at the Passage of the Bridge of Najara there was a terrible Effusion of Blood, and many a Man slain with the Sword, and more drown'd; for divers of them leap'd leap'd into the Water, which was deep and rapid, rather committing themſelves to that ſevere Element, than to the Diſcretion of the Conquerour. Among others that fled, there were two Valiant Knights of Spain, bearing on them the Sign of the Croſs, as a Badge of their Religious Deſign againſt the Infidels; however now they came to miſtake and engage in a Traytrous War againſt their Lawfull Sovereign Don Pedro. Theſe two were the Grand Prior of St. Jago, and the Grand Maſter of Calatrava; who together with moſt of their Retinue had got into Najara, but they were ſo cloſely follow'd at the Heels by the Engliſh and Gaſcogners, that the Bridge was won againſt them, and a great ſlaughter enſued. The Engliſh enter'd the City with them pell-mell, and preſently fell to Aſſault a ſtrong houſe, into which the two foreſaid Knights were entred: But the Place was carried by force, the two Grandees taken Priſoners, and moſt of their Men ſlain; and then was all the City overrun and plunder'd, to the great Advantage of the Conquerour. Here King Henry's Lodgings were taken, wherein they found ineſtimable Riches of Jewels, and Veſſels of Gold and Silver: For he came thither in great Pomp and Majeſty; but upon the Diſcomfiture had no leiſure to return thither again, to ſave what he had left there. So this was a grievous and lamentable Diſcomfiture indeed, eſpecially toward the River, where many Thouſands were ſlain and drown'd; inſomuch that (as [d] it was reported afterward by ſome, who were then preſent) One might have ſeen the Water of the River, which ran by Najara, to be red [e] for the ſpace of a Mile together, with the Blood of Men and Horſes there ſlain. This Battle was thus fought between Najara and Navaret, in the Province of Rioxa in Old Caſtille, on the Third day of April, being a Saturday in the Year of our Lord MCCCLXVII.

AN. DOM. 1367. An. Regni Angliæ XLI.

[d] Froiſ. ibid.

[e] Walſing. hiſt. p. 176. n. 30.

XIV. When the Fight was ended, namely about Noon, the Prince of Wales cauſed his Banner to be raiſed High on a Buſh, ſtanding on a little Hill, thereby to direct his Men thither in their return from the Chace. And thither by and by came John of Gaunt Duke of Lancaſter, the Lord John Chandos, the Lord John Greilly, Captal of Buſche, the Lord Oliver Cliſſon, the Earl of Armagnac, the Lord of Albret, and many other Barons, who reared up their Banners orderly about the Prince's, to draw their ſeveral Troops to their Reſpective places; and ſtill, as they came back, they ranged themſelves orderly in the Field. Thither came James King of Majorica, who pitch'd up his Banner before him, to which his Troops reſorted, and hard by him was Sr. Martin Carre, with the Banner of his Lord the King of Navarre, and many other Earls and Barons in like manner, who made a goodly ſhew with their Rich and Embroidered Streamers in the Field. Thither alſo came at laſt King Don Pedro, very much chafed with his labour in the Fight and the Chace, riding on a great Black Courſer, and his Banner beaten with the Arms of Caſtille and Leon before him, which are Quarterly Gules, a Caſtle Or, and Argent, a Lion Rampant Purpure, Crowned Or. As ſoon as he beheld the Prince's Banner, he alighted from his Horſe, and went thitherward; but when the Prince ſaw him coming, he haſted forward, and met him, ſhewing great Reſpect and Honour unto him. There King Don Pedro would have kneeled down in Gratitude to have thanked the Prince, but the Prince ran haſtily to prevent it, and catch'd him by the hand, not permitting him by any means to kneel. Then the King ſaid in the humbleſt Manner he could expreſs, "Dear and Fair Couſin, I ought to give "You both many Thanks and Praiſes for this proſperous adventure, which I have obtained "by your means. "Sir (ſaid the Prince) Pay your Thanks to God Almighty, and give "him all the Praiſe: For by him alone, and not by me, have You obtain'd this Victory. Then the Prince aſſembled the Lords of his Council, with whom he held ſome debate concerning the Preſent Emergencies; during which time all his Men were return'd from the Chace. At the ſame time the Prince ſent Four Knights and Four Heralds to go and view the Field, and to enquire out the Number of the ſlain, and to ſee whether King Henry, whom they called the Baſtard, was among the Dead or no. And then the Prince and his Lords went to the Lodgings of King Henry, and his Men to the Camp of the Spaniards, where they found good and eaſie repoſe, and ſufficient of all manner of Proviſion. That Saturday they went to ſupper early, and took their repaſt with great joy and delight, and after ſupper the Knights and Heralds, that had been to viſit the Field, returned to the Prince, and made their report of the ſlain, namely, "that of their Enemies there were found Dead in the Field above [f] 5600 Nobles and Men of Name, "and in the Chace 3000 more, not reckoning the Common Souldiers, beſides thoſe "that were taken Priſoners, and thoſe who were drown'd and loſt in the River, whoſe "Number could not be known. But that of their own Company there were Dead "but Four Knights, whereof two were Gaſcogners, one a German, and the Fourth an "Engliſh-

[f] Knighton p. 2629. n. 20. collat. cum Froiſs. &c.

An. Dom. 1367. An. Regni Angliæ XLI.

"Engliſhman, and of other Common Souldiers of the Prince's Army not above Fourty: "But that they could not find the Body of the Baſtard Henry, whereat King Don Pe- "dro was exceeding ſorry. And it is to be remembred, that beſides thoſe that fell that day on the Baſtards ſide, [g] there were taken Priſoners of Lords and Knights to the Number of 2090; whereof about 200 were of France, and not a few were Scotch-men. So that Saturday Night the Engliſh took their Repoſe, and refreſhed themſelves at their Enemies Coſt; for there was enough of all ſorts of Proviſion ready for them, and they kept the Field in the ſame Manner all the next day, [h] which was the Sunday before Palm-Sunday.

[g] M.S. vet. Ang. in Bibl. C.C.C. Cantab. c. 233.

[h] Paſch. 18. April Lit. Dom. C.

XV. On the Sunday Morning, when the Prince of Wales was up and ready, he iſſued out of his Pavilion, and then there came to ſalute him his Brother the Duke of Lancaſter, the Earl of Armagnac, the Lord of Albret, the Lord John Chandos, the Captal of Buſche, the Lord of Pamiers, Sr. Guiſchard Dangle, the King of Majorica, and all the Chief Lords of the Army, and preſently after came thither King Don Pedro to viſit the Prince, by whom he was received with much Honour and Reſpect. After Salutations given and taken, King Don Pedro ſpake thus to the Prince, "Dear and "Fair Couſin, I heartily pray and requeſt You, that You will pleaſe to deliver into my "Hands the falſe Traytors of my Country, as my Baſtard Brother the Earl of Sancel- "loni, and ſuch others, Your Priſoners, whom I ſhall cauſe to loſe their Heads, according "to their Demerits. The Prince of Wales, who had well conſidered this point, anſwer'd and ſaid, "Sir King, I alſo requeſt of You one thing upon the Account of our "Friendſhip and Alliance, which I hope You will not deny me. The King, who could not for ſhame refuſe any thing to him, by whom he had recover'd all he had, ſaid, "Dear Couſin, all that I have is yours; wherefore I freely and abſolutely grant, whatſoe- "ver it ſhall pleaſe You to deſire. Sir (continued the Prince) then I requeſt you to give "a general Amneſty and Pardon to all your Subjects of what condition ſoever, who have "at any time rebelled againſt You untill this day: By which gracious Dealing You will "remain hereafter in better reſt and Peace among Your People, and be more heartily lo- "ved, and more faithfully ſerved by them, in caſe of any Neceſſity. But We our ſelves "except from this favour that Arch-Rebel William Garilz: For of that Ungratefull and "Diſloyal Wretch, I am content You make an Example. King Don Pedro granted the Prince's deſire, thô much againſt his Inclination; for he durſt not for ſhame ſhew any difficulty in complying with the Deſires of One, to whom he was ſo much obliged; and ſo he ſaid, "Fair Couſin, I yield to Your pleaſure with all my heart. Then all the Priſoners were ſent for, and the Prince reconciled them to the King, their Lord, and cauſed him to forgive all his Ill-will to his Brother, the Earl of Sancelloni, and to all the Reſt: On condition they ſhould enter Covenant and ſwear unto him Fealty, Homage, and all Loyal ſervice, to hold truly of him for ever, and to become his Liegemen, and to acknowledge him for their only Rightfull Lord and King for the Future.

XVI. This Courteſie, with many others, did this Gallant Prince unto King Don Pedro, all which were but ſlightly remembred, as we ſhall ſee ſhortly; and ſurely it was not a ſmall kindneſs, that Prince Edward at the ſame time ſhew'd to thoſe Barons of Spain, his Priſoners; for without his Interceſſion on their behalf, King Don Pedro had put them every Mothers Son to Death without Mercy. As he ſerved Sr. William Garilz, whom he ſo bitterly hated, that he would accept of no Ranſom for his Life; but cauſed his Head to be ſtricken off before his Tent Door. This done King Pedro Mounted his Horſe, together with his Brother, the Earl of Sancelloni, and all his New-pardon'd Subjects, having the Engliſh Marſhals, Sr. Guiſchard Dangle, and Sr. Stephen Coſſington, with 500 Men of Arms in his Company, and ſo left the Prince, and rode to Burgos, the Chief City of Old Caſtille. On the Monday Morning Don Pedro came thither, and the Citizens, who had been well informed how Matters went at Najara, and that King Henry was utterly routed, durſt not pretend to hold out againſt him; but ſeveral of the Wealthieſt, and the moſt Honourable in the City came forth humbly to meet him, and preſented unto him the Keys of the Town, as unto their Rightfull Lord and Sovereign; and ſo convey'd him and all his Men with great Solemnity and Triumph into the City. The mean while Prince Edward kept his Field all that Sunday, and on the Monday after Evenſong he decamped thence, and went and Lodged at Belorado, where he tarried that Night, and the next day, and on the Wedneſday marched with all his Army to the City of Burgos. The Prince enter'd the Town in great Triumph, being attended with the King of Majorica, the Duke of Lancaſter, and all the Great Lords of his Hoſt; but the Chief part of their Men ſet up their Tents without out the Town, for 'twas not possible to Lodge them all with any Convenience within; and it was thought too great a Temptation for Men of War, especially since the Companions were there, to admit them into so Rich and Wealthy a Place, as that was. AN. DOM. 1367. An. Regni Angliæ XLI.

When the Black-Prince was settled in his Lodgings appointed for him, he gave forth his Summons, and Determin'd Judgements concerning Arms, and all things thereto belonging, and there he kept Field and Wage of Battle: So that it might well be said, how all Spain was then reduced into his Hands, and under his Obedience. In this City of Burgos Prince Edward and King Don Pedro held their Easter with great Solemnity, and tarried there more than three Weeks, the rather to give time to all Don Pedro's Subjects to come in of their own accord, and to make their Submissions, before they were compelled thereto. Accordingly on Easter-day, there came thither, the Representatives of Astorga, of Toledo, of Leon, of Corduba, and of all the Realms of Castille and Leon, of Galizia, Asturie, Algarria, Biscaye, and whatever else had been subject to King Don Pedro aforetime, even unto the utmost Marches and Limitations of the Realm of Castille; all these sent in their humble Addresses, and made Homage to King Don Pedro, promising him true Faith and Loyalty for ever. These Commissioners were all glad to Behold the Prince of Wales and Don Hernando del Casteres; the One so Renowned for his Valour, and the other for his unexampled Loyalty to his Master. So at Burgos there was nothing but Joy and Triumph, and many Royal and Magnificent Feasts and Entertainments passed among them, and all the Land came in voluntarily, and renewed their Allegiance to their Lord and King.

XVII. Now therefore, when the Prince had, as we said, tarried here something more than three Weeks, and saw that Don Pedro was generally own'd by all his Subjects, being peaceably and unanimously accepted as their True and Lawfull King, and that there were none who rebell'd or held out against him; then he spake these Words unto "him, "Sir, Blessed be God, You are now again peaceably established King over this your "Realm without any Rebellion or Opposition: And Sir, I and my Men tarry here at our great "Charge and Expence: Wherefore I request you to provide Money to satisfie those, who "have holpen me to Reinstate you in your Throne, as well as to compleat your Promise, "to which you have sworn, and set your Hand and Seal. And Sir, the sooner this is done, the "more acceptable will it be to Us, and the more also to your Advantage. For you can- "not be ignorant that Men of War, if they are not paid, will make bold to pay them- "selves. Sir, We call not your Justice in question, but only put you in Mind, that at "this time there are many Souldiers of Fortune among us; and as it will be your Dis- "cretion to satisfie them, so will it be just and equitable to be punctual in your Word to "all, who have been assistant to you in this Enterprise. To this the King answer'd, "Fair Cousin, We are firmly resolv'd to hold, keep and perform to our power, what We "have sworn and sealed to: But truly Sir, as for the present We have no sufficient "Quantity of Money ready at hand: However now we intend to take our Progress toward "the Marches of Sevil, where we will make such provision of Gold and Silver, as to be "able to satisfie all Men. Onely Sir, We desire you to tarry here in Valladolid "where You will find a Plentifull Country, and surely We shall return unto You as "soon as We may conveniently, but at the furthest by Whitsuntide. This Answer was nothing disagreeable to the Prince and his Council, who consider'd the hard Circumstances of that King; and so within a few Days after Don Pedro took his leave of Prince Edward, and rode toward Sevil the chief City of Andaluzia, with a Design to raise Money to pay off the Men of War as he had covenanted; and the Prince went and quarter'd in Valladolid, his Lords and Captains being spread abroad in the Country at large, the better to provide Victuals and other Necessaries for Themselves and their Horses. Thus they tarried in Castilla Vieja, not much to the advantage of the Country: For whatever strict Discipline the rest of the Army kept, the Companions could not for their Hearts forbear stealing, plundering and defrauding the People.

XVIII. The News presently spread abroad thrô England, France, Germany and other Countries far and near, how the Prince of Wales had discomfited in Battle King Henry and all his Power, having routed, taken, slain and drowned a well-Order'd and Royal Army, consisting of more than an 100000 Men; whereby the Prince was greatly renowned, and his Valour and Conduct highly extolled in all Places whither the fame flew, especially in the Empire and in England; for France had no cause to boast thereof. But the Germans, Flemings and Englishmen said, that the Prince of Wales was the very Fairest Flower of Knighthood, and that such a Prince was well worthy to govern all the World, ſince by his exalted Proweſs he had atchieved Three ſuch extraordinary Enterpriſes as he had done; Firſt, at the Battle of Creſſey in Ponthieu, where by Him the whole Power of France was broken, Two Kings ſlain, and a Third put to Flight: Secondly, at the Battle of Poictiers ten Years after, where again he overcame the whole Power of France, and took the King of the ſaid Realm Priſoner: And Thirdly now in Spain near Najara, where at one Blow he decided the Fate of a Kingdom.

An. Dom. 1367. An. Regni Angliæ XLI.

XIX. But in England eſpecially were great Triumphs made, particularly in the Kings-Chamber, the City of London: Where the Lord Mayor and Aldermen celebrated the Memory of this Victory with great Solemnity and Triumphal Arches, in like manner, as they were formerly accuſtomed to do for their Kings, when they had obtain'd any notable Succeſs againſt their Enemies. But in the Realm of France there was a quite different Scene, repreſenting nothing but deep Diſpleaſure and unfeigned Sorrow; becauſe ſo many Gallant Knights of that Country were loſt in that Battle. And the taking of Sr. Bertram of Clequin, and of the Lord Arnold D' Endreghan and other Frenchmen Priſoners at that time, prov'd a great Corroſive to the minds of thoſe, who lov'd the Honour and Intereſt of France; for they were all Perſons of undoubted Worth, and therefore now their Condition was lamented, becauſe they were little better than Dead to their Friends, while thus buried in Captivity. Thô ſurely they were all kept with much Courteſie and Reſpect, and all of them ſhortly after put to eaſie Ranſoms, except only Sr. Bertram of Clequin, who ſtaid longer before he could be acquitted, becauſe the Lord John Chandos, who had him in Keeping, would not as yet deliver him for any Ranſome; and alſo Sr. Bertram did not much urge him to let him go.

XX. Now after the Battle of Najara, Don Henry the Baſtard eſcaped out of the Field, as We intimated before, from the reach of his Enemies, and having with much difficulty got his Wife and Children about him, went to the City of Valencia, where he found King Pedro of Aragon, his Godfather, Friend and Ally, and recounted unto him all his Evil Adventure with the Prince of Wales. Within a while after the Aragonian adviſed him to go to Mompellier to Lewis Duke of Anjou, and there to open his Caſe unto him, and this Advice the Baſtard was well pleaſed with, becauſe he knew the Duke of Anjou ſecretly maligned the Prince and all Engliſhmen in General. Having therefore committed his Wife and Children to the Protection of the King of Aragon, he took his leave and rode beyond Narbonne, the Firſt City of France on that ſide, from thence he rode to Beſiers, and ſo to Mompellier in Languedoc, where he found the Duke of Anjou, who made him heartily welcome: For he now lov'd him the more in deſpight of the Engliſh whom he naturally hated, thô as yet he had no manner of Pretence to make any War againſt them. When this Duke had fully heard all King Henry's loſſes, and the preſent ſtate of his Affairs, he comforted him to his Power, and while he tarried, entertain'd him very obligingly indeed. Shortly after Don Henry went to Avignon to viſit Pope Urban V, and to have ſome ſecret Conference with him; which done he return'd back again to Mompellier to the Duke of Anjou, between whom there was a long and cloſe Treaty held. And as it was then reported, and afterwards appeared to be manifeſt, at that time King Henry obtain'd of the Duke of Anjou a Fortreſs, bordering on the Principality of Aquitain called Caſtle-Moron, where he aſſembled together Companions and other Men of War, Bretons and Others, who had not gone into Spain with the Prince; ſo that preſently he got about 300 Men of Arms. However all this was not carried on ſo privately, but that News thereof came to the Princeſs, who was then at Bourdeaux with her two Sons; how the Baſtard of Spain was making himſelf ſtrong on all Hands with Deſign to invade the Principality and the Dutchy of Guienne, wherewith in the Abſence of the Prince her Husband, ſhe was much afrighted. But becauſe this New Enemy was then in the Dominions of France, and for ought ſhe knew with the French Kings Allowance, ſhe forthwith directed her Letters unto Him, demanding of him whether he would ſtand to any ſuch Matter, and requeſting him to be mindfull of the Peace, and by no means to allow the Baſtard of Spain to make War upon her Lands; for ſhe certified him, that ſince his Reſort was at that time unto the Court of France, and all his Support came from thence, if upon his Countenance the Baſtard ſhould begin a War, much Miſchief and many Inconveniences might enſue thereby. The King being alarum'd at this Complaint of the Princeſs, ſent immediatly to the Baſtard Henry, who was then in the Fortreſs of Caſtle-moron on the Frontiers of Montauban, and had begun to make War upon the Prince's Lands, commanding him forthwith to depart out of his Realm, and not preſume to make any War from thence in the Dominions of his Dear Nephew the Prince of Wales and Aquitaine. And moreover the better to aw the reſt of his Subjects, that they ſhould not dare to take Part with the Baſtard Henry, he cauſed the Young Earl of Auxerre to be clapt up in Priſon in the Caſtle of the Louvre at Paris: Becauſe he was ſo great and familiar with the Baſtard, and had as was reported, engag'd to aſſiſt him with a conſiderable Number of Men of Arms: But for the preſent the French King ſpoil'd that Deſign. King Henry upon this peremptory Command from the King of France durſt not but obey, althô he could not lay down the Reſentments he had entertain'd againſt Prince Edward: Wherefore he forthwith left his Fortreſs of Caſtlemoron with 400 Bretons in his Company, the Chief Captains whereof were Sr. Arnold de Limouſin, Sr. Geoffry de Ricons, Sr. Pontius Laquenette, Silveſter Budes, Eliot du Carbais, Alan du St. Pol; and ſo marched over the Mountains, and entred into Bigorre a part of the Principality, where ſhortly after he took the Town of Bagneres by Scalado. At the News hereof the Princeſs was greatly ſtartled, and ſent forthwith againſt him the Valiant Lord James Audley, whom the Prince had left behind him as Chief Governour and Captain of Aquitain. But before his Coming the Baſtard of Spain with his Bretons had done much Miſchief in thoſe Parts, and his ſtrength encreaſed dayly; howbeit upon the Lord Audley's Approach he left all his little Conqueſts, not being able to do ſo much Miſchief as he deſired, but was forced to ſacrifice his Revengefull Humour to his own Preſervation.

AN. DOM. 1367. An. Regni Angliæ XLI.

XXI. The mean while the Prince of Wales, who had layn with his Army in and about Valladolid, till the Feaſt of St. John Baptiſt in June, expecting the Return of King Don Pedro, or at leaſt an Anſwer from him, could notwithſtanding hear no News all this while, whereat he was extreamly diſpleaſed, and being worn out of all Patience, adviſed with his Council what Courſe to take. It was agreed, that he ſhould ſend two or three Knights unto him, to demand why he kept not the appointed Day; and ſo there were ſent Sr. Nele Loring, Sr. Richard Pontchardon and Sr. Thomas Baniſter, who rode forth till they came to Sevil, where they found King Don Pedro, and by him to all appearance were received very gratiouſly. But when they had declared their Meſſage, and the Buſineſs about which they were ſent by their Lord the Prince, he began to excuſe himſelf and ſaid, "Surely Gentlemen, We are infinitely "diſpleaſed, that We cannot exactly keep the Promiſe, which we have made to our Coſen "the Prince, the Particulars whereof we have frequently declared to our Subjects in theſe "Parts, but they excuſe themſelves, and proteſt they are not able to raiſe ſuch conſide- "rable Sums of Money, while the Companions are abroad in this Land: By whom our Of- "ficers, whom we ſent to the Prince with Money, have been twice or thrice robbed of all "they had. Wherefore we deſire you to tell our Coſen from Us, that it is our Requeſt, "he would withdraw and convey out of our Realm his Men of War, and eſpecially thoſe "rude Souldiers called Companions, and leave behind him certain of his Knights, to "whom in his Name, we will moſt undoubtedly pay and deliver ſuch Sums of Money, as he "hath demanded of Us, according as We ſtand engaged unto him. And ſo he again obliged himſelf unto the Prince, that within Four Months from that Time, he would moſt certainly [i] pay unto thoſe, whom he ſhould leave behind him for that Purpoſe, the one Moiety of the Wages due to the Souldiers for this Expedition, and the Remainder within one Year following. This being all that the Prince's Deputies could then obtain of him, they return'd to the Prince their Lord, and declared to Him and his Council what they had heard, ſeen and done. But now the Prince was more diſpleaſed than before, for he ſaw well, that Don Pedro was as Unjuſt, as by Report he had been Cruel, and failed in his Word moſt diſhonourably. Being thus but ill ſatisfied with theſe Unprincely Excuſes, [k] He demanded of his Council how to proceed, for he thought not now of forcing Don Pedro to be Juſt, becauſe his Men could hardly endure the Infectious Air of Spain; and He alſo Himſelf was not at that time very well. Wherefore his Lords adviſed Him to return home, as ſpeedily as he could, ſaying, "That "indeed King Don Pedro had baſely diſappointed him to his utter Shame and Diſhonour; "but that ſince it was in vain to expect any longer any performance of his Promiſe, and that "his Men began daily to ſicken and to die, he had beſt leave the Tyrant to his own Con- "ſcience, and return home before Matters grew worſe, to prevent by his Preſence thoſe "Miſchiefs, which might ariſe from the Attempts of the Baſtard in his Principality. This being reſolved, they then put to Ranſom the Lord Arnold D' Endreghan Marſhal of France, the Beague of Villain, and divers other Knights and Eſquires of France, ſome whereof were exchanged for the Lord Thomas Felton, Sr. Richard Cauſton, Sr. Hugh Haſtings, and other Engliſhmen taken before the Battle by the Earl of Sancel-

[i] Holinſh. Engl. Chron. p. 974.

[k] Froiſ. c. 239. f. 142.

An. Dom. 1367. An. Regni Angliæ XLI.

loni, who being ſworn Priſoners, thô moſt of their Maſters were either kill'd, taken or routed, could not lawfully depart without Exchange or Ranſome. But as for the Earl of Denia, he could not for the preſent make up ſuch a Summ as was demanded; and Sr. Bertram of Clequin alſo abode ſtill a Priſoner, for the Princes Council told him, that if he ſhould be ſet free, he would ſtirr up againſt the King of Spain ſharper War than ever before; or however would preſently joyn the Baſtard, whom as then they heard to be in the County of Bigorre, and to have won the Town of Bagneres, whereby he had done much Miſchief in thoſe Parts. And the Lord Chandos told the Prince, that Sr. Bertram was ſo belov'd by all manner of Men of War, that it was not ſafe to let him go, till Don Pedro had paid what he ow'd the Prince, leſt he ſhould again embroil his Affairs as he had done before: On all which accounts Sr. Bertram could not obtain to be deliver'd at this time whatſoever Ranſom he offer'd; and ſo he was obliged to be content with his Condition.

Now while the Prince of Wales lay at Valladolid, which he did in all for about three Months, even the beſt part of that Summer, among many Hundreds others, James the young King of Majorica fell dangerouſly ill, and kept his Bed, ſo that when the Prince was ready to depart, he ſent the Lord John Chandos and Sr. Hugh Calverley unto him, to let him know, that he was juſt then upon taking his leave of Spain, and would be glad of his Company, as one whoſe Intereſt he had promiſed to embrace: Wherefore he ſhould be loth to leave him behind. The King of Majorica replied, that he thanked the Prince moſt heartily; but that as then he could not ride, nor endure to be carried, till it ſhould pleaſe God to reſtore him to a better Degree of Health and Strength. Then they demanded if he was willing, that their Lord the Prince ſhould leave with him any Troops to wait on him, and to conduct him into Aquitain, when he ſhould be able to ride. "Nay ſurely (ſaid the King) I ſhall never "put the Noble Prince to any ſuch unneceſſary trouble; for God alone knows, whether "ever I ſhall be able to ride or no. So the Engliſh Knights took their leave, and returned and declared all this to the Prince, who ſaid, "Well then be it as it ſhall "pleaſe God and him: For Neceſſity calls us away from this unfortunate Country. And then he took the firſt Opportunity to march with all his Army, and went to the City called Agreda, and thereabout he reſted in the Vale of Soria, between Aragon and Spain, where he was fain to tarry a Month, becauſe he found certain Paſſages cloſed againſt him on the Borders of Aragon. And it was reported thrô the Army, that the King of Navarre, who was newly releaſed from his Impriſonment, had agreed with the Baſtard of Spain and the King of Aragon, to hinder the Prince's Return, thô there was no ſuch Matter, as it afterwards appeared. However as then the Prince was the more enclin'd to believe this Report, becauſe the King of Navarre came not unto him, thô he was at Liberty. Whereupon he began to treat with the King of Aragon, certain Commiſſioners on both ſides meeting on the Marches for that Purpoſe: Between whom it was at laſt concluded, that the King of Aragon ſhould open his Country, and permit the Prince and his Army to paſs thrô freely, they paying courteouſly for what they ſhould take up among his People. After this Agreement was eſtabliſhed, the King of Navarre and Sr. Martin Carre came unto the Prince, and then the King of Navarre ſeeing how Matters ſtood between the Prince and the King of Aragon, ſhew'd all the Reſpect and Honour imaginable to the Prince, and readily offer'd free Paſſage to him, and his Dear Brother the Duke of Lancaſter, and all the Knights and Lords of England and of Gaſcogne, but by no means would he permit the Companions to take their way thrô Navarre; He ſaid he had had enough of them already. Then the Prince order'd the Companions to accept of his Agreement, which he had made with the King of Aragon, and to paſs thrô his Country; but as for Himſelf, becauſe he ſaw the Way thrô Navarre more commodious than the other, he choſe to go that Way, and was convey'd with the reſt of the Army quite thrô that Realm, even beyond the Paſſages of Roncevaux. From thence the Prince marched at his eaſe till he came to Baionne, where he was received with great joy, and tarried there four Days to refreſh Himſelf and his Men. Then he proceeded toward Bourdeaux, where he was received in Triumph, being alſo met and welcom'd Home by his Beautifull Princeſs, with her Eldeſt Son Edward, who was then about Three Years of Age. Here the Prince disbanded his Army, and ſent the Lords and Captains of Gaſcogne and others to their ſeveral Homes, having firſt declared his Obligations unto them, and promiſed to pay them every Man punctually, when he could raiſe Money enough, even thô King Don Pedro ſhould not keep Touch with Him: For He ſaid, "they ſhould ſuffer "no Loſs however, ſince they had ſerved him ſo well; and for his own Part Honour "ſhould be his Reward.

At the ſame time the Companions that went thrô Aragon, came into the Principality, where they had Quarters aſſigned them, till they ſhould be paid their Wages. AN. DOM. 1367.

XXII. King Henry the Baſtard this mean while, hearing of the Prince's Return, thought it no time for him to expect any Advantage in thoſe Parts, wherefore immediately he removed with all his Men into Aragon, and had his Recourſe to the King of that Realm, who loved him entirely, and made him extream welcome. There he tarried all that Winter, and renewed his former Alliance with that King, who promiſed to aid him in his War againſt the King, his Brother; and forthwith the Bretons, that were with Don Henry, as Sr. Arnold de Limouſin, Sr. Geoffry de Ricons, Sr. Pontius Laquenet, Sylveſter Budes, Eliot du Carhais, Alan du St. Pol, and the reſt of the Baſtards friends, had order to go to the Frontiers of Spain, and begin to make War on King Henry's behalf. An. Regni Angliæ XLI.

And thus have We ended this Great and laſt Expedition of the Prince of Wales, I ſay, his laſt: For whether God Almighty was diſpleaſed with him for aſſiſting ſo Wicked a Tyrant (thô We ſhew'd before what good Grounds he went upon) or whether the Sins of England, being now alſo ripe, began to call for Vengeance; from this time We may be bold to period the Happineſs of King Edward's Wonderfull Reign; For We ſhall find, that

[1] Ex illo Fluere & retrò ſublapſa referri
Spes Anglûm: Fractæ Vires; Averſa Deûm Mens

[1] Virgil. Æn. l. 2. v. 169, &c.

From thence the Engliſh Hopes did Ebb and fail;
Nor could their Fortune, or their Arms prevail.

From this time the ſwelling Tide of Proſperity was found to Ebb apace; the Prince of Wales begins to be ſick of an Incurable Diſeaſe; Prince Lionel is taken away in the Flower of his Age; Queen Philippa ſoon after dies; and King Edward, who hitherto was both Glorious and Fortunate, ſhall from this time be leſs Fortunate; thô not one jot the leſs Glorious. For We ſhall find, that never any Prince contended more bravely with Froward Fortune; nor ever was more Worthy to have ſucceeded ſtill.

XXIII. This Year [m] in the Month of June, there appeared in the Northern Sea a great Navy of Danes, who purpoſed to come into England, and overrun, rob, and ſlay, as their Anceſtors had done in the time of the Saxon Kings. But they were encountred and met with at Sea by a good Fleet of Engliſh Mariners, and other Valiant Men, who overthrew, and ſcatter'd them, and made them return inglorious into their own Country. But among others there was a Mighty and Strong Ship, called the Denmark, which being overſailed by the Engliſhmen, was taken and ſunk, and in her was found the High-Steward, and other Great Officers and Lords of Denmark, who being brought into England, were by Order from the King and Council caſt into Priſon. Shortly after there came certain Daniſh Deputies to negotiate for the Delivery of the foreſaid Lords of their Country, with their Goods; but receiving an anſwer no way pleaſing unto them, they return'd home again, having left behind them in their Inns, written on Scrolls and Walls, this threatning Verſe,

[m] M.S. vet. Angl. in Bibl. C.C.C. Cantab. c. 232.

Yet ſhall Danes
Bring you [n] Wanes.

[n] Deſpair, or Loſs ab AS. Wanian to Diminiſh.

Which Rhymes being ſeen by an Engliſh Poet, he immediately wrote underneath them.

Here ſhall Danes
[o] Fett their * Wanes.

[o] i.e. Fetch, or find.
* Deſtruction.

XXIV. And now We ſhall cloſe cloſe up this Active Year, when We have firſt made mention of the Death of a Perſon, whoſe Memory ought not to be forgotten. This was Don Pedro Son of Alphonſo the Brave, King of Portugal, who for his love to Equity, obtain'd the Honourable Sirname of The Juſticeer. This Man, that [p] he might remove the Fuel of Contention, compell'd the Lawyers, Pleaders, and Proctors of his Kingdom to till the Land; thô he himſelf was a moſt ſtrict Obſerver and Maintainer of the Laws. He puniſhed two Forſworn Traytors, by cauſing the Heart of One to be thruſt out at his Breaſt, and of the other out at his Back; both which at his Command were torn in pieces. It is attributed unto him, as his Familiar ſaying, [q] "that a Prince "did ſeem unworthy of the Name of a King, on what day he had done no Grace or Kind-neſs

[p] Joſeph Teixera de Origin. Regum Portugalliæ.

[q] Vid. Marian. l. 17. c. 9. & Odor. Rainald. ad hunc ann. §. 19.

An. Dom. 1368. An. Regni Angliæ XLII.

nesse to any Body. He died this Year, having Reign'd Nine Years, as many Months, and Eight and Twenty Days, and left behind him his Son Hernando, or Ferdinando, who [r] soon after sent his Complement to the Pope, after the Custom of Christian Kings newly come to the Crown, and received an answer full of Good Counsel and Ghostly Admonitions.

[r] Odor. Rainald. ibid.

CHAPTER the THIRD.

The CONTENTS.

I. Prince Lionel is married to the Lady Violantis, Daughter of Galeacius, Duke of Milain; with the Magnificence and Splendor of the Nuptials. II. He falls sick, his Testament, Death, and Burial. III. A Parliament at Westminster. IV. The Archbishop of Canterbury made Cardinal. V. A strange Relation of a Sea-Woman, taken in the Zuyderzee. VI. Sr. Bertram of Clequin by a pretty Conveyance obtains to be admitted to Ransom. VII. The Companions waiting for their pay, prove troublesome to the Principality. But at the Prince's Command, they depart and go into France, where they do much Mischief. VIII. The Prince to recruit his exhausted Stores, ordains a Tax throughout Aquitain; which occasions a Revolt of some Malecontents.

I. IN the Fourtieth Year of King Edward, it may be remembred, how We spake of an Overture, made by Galeacius the second Duke of Milain, unto the said King, about a Match to be struck up between the Daughter of the said Duke and Prince Lionel, second Son living to the said King Edward. The Negotiation concerning this Affair had been carried on till this time, when all Conditions were fully adjusted on both sides; among which, these were not the least considerable: [a] That together with the Lady Violantis, Prince Lionel should receive 2000000 Florens of Gold, together with the Cities of Mons Regalis, or Mondovi, and Alba Pompeia, by the Name of a Dowry. I shall not here be particular in relating, how the two Brethren, Dukes of Milain, Galeacius, and Bernabo, recover'd from those troubles, whereunto John Marquess of Monferrato, had some Years before cast them. Nor shall I insist on the Eminent Worth and Military services, which Sr. John Hawkwood, an English Knight, performed for them in those their Wars, with such considerable Advantage, that Duke [b] Bernabo gave unto him the Lady Donninia, one of his Natural Daughters, in Marriage with a Portion of 1000000 Florens Let it suffice for this place, that the two Brethren Dukes, being assisted by this Valiant Knight Sr. John Hawkwood, began again to flourish in great Prosperity; which that they might the better preserve to their House and Family, it was thought fit to enter Affinity with King Edward of England, at that time by many Degrees the most Powerfull and Renowned of all the Princes in the World. And so when all things were fully adjusted, the Marriage [c] was concluded at Windsor on the 25 of April, at which time the King acquitted the Duke of Milain of 10000 Florens by him paid, in consideration of the said Treaty; and then with all speed the Prince made his Preparations to go over the Sea, and to consummate his Nuptials.

[a] Paul. Jovius in Galeacio II. p. 151.

[b] Paul. Jovius in Barnabâ p. 159.

[c] Sandford's Geneal. Hist. p. 220.

It is said, [d] that the two Dukes of Milain, the Marquess of Monferrato, the Dukes of Venice, Mantua, and Florence, the Lords of Genua, Pisa, and other chief Princes of Italy, had with the unanimous Consent of the whole Senate of Rome, sent their Ambassadors to King Edward before this, to assure him, that upon this Marriage of his Son, Prince Lionel, with the Duke of Milain's Daughter, all the Princes and States of Italy, should own him for their Lord, and by their joynt Interest at last raise him to the Title and Dignity of Emperour. For besides the Reputation of the King, his Father's Glory, he himself was generally fam'd and extoll'd for one of the most Accomplish'd Personages in the World. Of Stature he was beyond the Ordinary Proportion of Men; Tall and streight as a Palm-Tree, exceeding Well-set, Shap'd and Featur'd; in his Chamber Modest and Gentle, as a Virgin; Affable, Sweet, and Pleasant in Conversa-

[d] Joh. Harding c. 186. fol. 186.

verſation; but Bold and Fierce, as a Lion, in the Field. So that for all Accompliſhments of Mind and Body, he had not his Fellow in all England, except only his Elder Brother, the Prince of Wales, than whom he was yet eight Years younger, being now in the very Flower of Manhood, in the Thirtieth Year of his Age. AN. DOM. 1368. An. Regni Angliæ XLII.

Thus about the latter end of April, the Lord Lionel Duke of Clarence, and Earl of Ulſter, Third Son (born, but the Second living) of King Edward the Third, [e] departed out of England with a Princely Equipage, and ſet ſail for France, being received at Boulogne by ſeveral Perſons of the Higheſt Quality, and by them conducted to Paris. At ſome diſtance from the City, he was met by the Dukes of Berry and Burgundy, and the Lord Ingleram of Coucy, Earl of Bedford, his Brother-in-Law, who convey'd him to the Louvre, to the Preſence of the King of France, his Lodgings being provided in the Kings own Palace. The firſt day he din'd and ſupp'd with the King at his own Table, the next day he dined with the Queen at another of the Kings Houſes near St. Paul; and having danced after dinner with the Ladies, and paſſed his time in ſuch Amorous Gallantries and Recreations, as young Princes uſually divert themſelves with, in preſence of that agreeable Sex, he was again by the two foreſaid Dukes of Berry and Burgundy conducted back to the Louvre, where he ſupped with the King that Night alſo. On the day following, the two Dukes entertain'd him in like Manner, at One of their Houſes, named Artois in Paris; and the Day after he dined and ſupp'd again with the Queen; and on the next Day, being a Thurſday, he took his leave of the King and Queen, who gave unto him, and to the Chief of the Engliſh Lords in his Company, ſundry Gifts, to the Value of 20000 Florens. And ſo he was convey'd as far as Sens in Champaigne, by the Earl of Tancarville, and other Noblemen; and from thence, to the utmoſt Bounds of France, by Knights and Gentlemen of that Kingdom; to whom at parting he gave ſeveral Rich Gifts with many thanks. Having thus paſſed thrô France, he came into Savoy, where he was very kindly received at the City of Chambery, by the Generous Earl of Savoy, whoſe Siſter the Lady Blanch was Wife to Galeas, Duke of Milain, and Mother to the Lady Violantis, Prince Lionel's Eſpouſed Lady. Having tarried there three Days, which were all ſpent in Magnificent Entertainments, Balls, and Dancing with the Ladies and Gentlewomen, he took his leave and began to ſet forward, the Earl himſelf bearing him Company to Milain: Where he ſaw his Niece, Daughter to Duke Galeas, given in Marriage unto Prince Lionel in the Famous Cathedral of Milain, on the 29 Day of May, [f] being a Monday, and the next day after the Feſtival of the Holy Trinity, in the Year of our Lord, MCCCLXVIII. Duke Galeas in Honour of this his Son-in-Law [g] is ſaid to have ſpent ſuch abundance of Treaſure, as ſeem'd to ſurpaſs the Magnificence of the moſt Wealthy Monarchs. For not to mention all the Sumptuous Feaſts, Balls, Juſts, and Tourneaments, and other ſtately and divertive Spectacles, ſet forth on this occaſion; nor to ſumm up the great and large Gifts, which were given to the Lord Edward Spencer, and more than 200 other Engliſh Gentlemen, who came out of England to wait on the Prince; the Marriage Feaſt alone was ſo extraordinary, that We may by that Conjecture the Largeneſs of Duke Galeas his Soul, the full ſatisfaction he had in this Match, and the Abundance of his Coffers. For in that One Feaſt, where Francis Petrarch, the Laureate Poet of Italy, was preſent, being for Honour of his Learning ſeated among the Gueſts of the Higheſt Quality, there were above 30 Courſes of ſervice upon the Table, and between every Courſe, as many Preſents of unuſual Magnificence, intermixed; all which John Galeas, the Duke's Son, and Prince of the Choſen Youth, that waited that day, preſented unto Prince Lionel, as they were brought up to the Table. In one Courſe were preſented Seventy Good Horſes, richly Adorned and Caparizon'd with Silk and Embroider'd Furniture; and in the other Courſes, came up Veſſels of Silver, Ger-Falcons, Hounds, Armour for Horſes, Coſtly Coats of Mail, ſhining Breaſtplates of Maſſy Steel, Corſlets, Helmets, and Burganets adorned with High and Rich Creſts and Plumes; Surcoats embroider'd with coſtly Jewels, Knights Girdles, and laſtly, Pictures of Gold, beſet with Gems, and Purple and Cloth of Gold for Mens Apparel in Great Abundance. And ſuch vaſt Proviſion was there at this Feaſt, that the Meats, which were brought from the Table, would have plentifully ſufficed 10000 Men.

[e] Froiſ. c. 239. fol. 143. Fabian p. 250. M.S. vet. Ang. in Bibl. C.C.C. Cantab. c. 233.

[f] Lit. Dom. B. A. Paſch. 9. April.

[g] Paul. Jovius in Galeatio 2do p. 152. & ex eo Stow p. 267. & Sandford p. 220.

II. But while the Accompliſhed Young Prince lived with his New Lady, after the Manner of his own Country, in continual Sports and Revellings, beſides the more boiſtrous Exerciſe of Tourneaments, as forgetting or not regarding his Change of Air, and what Diet was moſt proper for the Italian Clime, within Five Months after his Marriage, he fell into a grievous Sickneſs in the City of Alba Pompeia, now called Longeville in Italy, in the Marquiſate of Monferrato in Piedmont, in the Houſe of his Father in in Law the Duke of Milain. Whereupon perceiving his Diſeaſe to be Mortal, by [h] his Teſtament, bearing Date there, upon the Third of October 1368, he bequeathed his Body to be buried in England, in the Convent Church of the Auguſtine-Fryars, at Clare in Suffolk, before the High-Altar; and gave thereto a Black-ſuit with all the Appurtenances, as alſo his Black Cloth Embroider'd. To his Lady Violantis, He bequeathed his Veſtment with Gold Coronets, and all that belonged thereto; Item, to Sr. John Bromwick Knight, his Courſer, called Ger-Falcon; to Dr. John Capell, his Chaplain, a Girdle of ſolid Gold, therewith to make a Chalice in Memory of his Soul; to Thomas Waleis the Circle of Gold, wherewith his Brother, the Black-Prince, was created Prince; and to Edmund More the Circle, wherewith he himſelf had been created Duke; that we may paſs over the many other Great Legacies, which he gave to the Lord Edward Spencer, Thomas Newborne Eſquire, and others, then attending him in Italy. And ſo, being at that time [i] One of the Companions of the moſt Noble Order of the Garter, he finally departed this Life [k] on the Vigil of St. Luke the Evangeliſt, being a Tueſday, and the 17 day of October, the ſame Year, not without ſuſpicion of being * poiſoned, by ſome ſubtle Italian trick, to prevent that Glory, which perhaps ſome Envy'd, that he ſhould attain. He left behind him only One Daughter, his Heir, by Elizabeth, his Firſt Wife, called Philippa, then but [l] 13 Years of Age, and ſoon after given in Marriage to Edmund Mortimer, the Third Earl of March, of that Great Family; from whom by the Mothers ſide came Edward the IV. Thô for the preſent he was depoſited in the Chief Church of Pavia, a City of Milain, yet ſoon after, according to his Teſtament, his Body was brought over into England by Thomas Newborne Eſquire, and others of his Domeſticks, and interred in the ſaid Church of the Auguſtine-Fryars, at Clare aforeſaid, near unto the Body of his Firſt Wife, Elizabeth de Burgh. But the Lord Edward Spencer, who doubted ſome foul play had been uſed towards him, tarried ſtill in Italy, and together with Sr. John Hawkwood, and his Engliſhmen, called the White-Company, * made fierce War upon the Dukes of Milain, in Revenge of his Maſters Death; till at laſt he was fully ſatisfied of their Innocence as to that point, and their great and unfeigned ſorrow for the untimely loſs of ſo Noble a Kinſman.

An. Dom. 1368. An. Regni Angliæ XLII.

[h] Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 167. & Sandford p. 221.

[i] Vid. Aſhmole's Garter, &c.
[k] Sandford & Dugd. ex Eſcaet. 43. Ed. 3. p. 1. n. 23, &c.
* Knighton p. 2629. n. 50.
[l] Sandford p. 222.

* Walſingh. Hypod. p. 131. n. 23 & Froiſ. c. 242. fol. 146.

This was the firſt unkind Stroke of Fortune that ever King Edward felt, and that no ſmall one neither: But he bore it with ſuch Courage as might have obliged her (if that Fickle Goddeſs was to be won by Gallantry) to be more Reſpectfull unto Him for the future. Though generally ſhe is obſerved, when once ſhe grows Adverſe, to be much more extream in her Hate, than before ſhe had been in her Love.

The Young Lady Violantis tried indeed to taſt of Happineſs after this Loſs of her Firſt Husband, and was again [m] Married to Otho Palæologus Marqueſs of Monferrato: But ſhe did not long enjoy him neither, for he was ſtabb'd by the hands of a baſe Hoſtler on the Mountains of Parma.

[m] Elias Reuſnerus ΒΑΣΙΛΙΚΩΝ Genealogici Auctarium p. 196.
[n] M.S. Rot. Par. p. 100, &c. Sr. Rob. Cotton p. 105.

III. Before theſe things fell out, namely on the [n] 24 of February, King Edward had iſſued forth his Summons for his Parliament to ſit at Weſtminſter, on the Firſt Day of May then next enſuing. On which Day being a Monday, Dr. Simon Langham Archbiſhop of Canterbury, declared to the Lords and Commons then aſſembled in the Painted-Chamber, that it was His Majeſties Pleaſure to adjourn them to the Thurſday following. At which time the ſaid Arch-biſhop in Preſence of the King, Lords and Commons then all aſſembled in the ſaid Painted-Chamber declared, how the King yielded unto God Almighty his moſt hearty Thanks for having given him Victory over all his Enemies, alſo for the peaceable and flouriſhing Condition of his Realm, and for the great Loyalty of his Subjects, and their conſtant Readineſs to ſerve Him both in Body and Goods; all which Bleſſings as he deſired what in him lay to continue, or rather to encreaſe, ſo that he might the better ſucceed in that Reſolution, he had at this time called his Parliament to confer with them in Matters relating to the Premiſes. So the remainder of that Day was ſpent in appointing Receivers and Tryers of Petitions for England, Ireland, Wales, Scotland and Gaſcogne, with other Foreign Places and Iſles.

The next Day the ſaid Arch-biſhop declared, how after a long Treaty between the Kings Commiſſioners, and David Bruce (King) of Scotland, King David at laſt made this Offer, "To preſerve a perpetual Peace with England, ſo that he might freely enjoy to "Him and his Heirs for ever, the whole Realm of Scotland in Fee, without any Subjection "or Vaſſalage, which might be accounted a perpetual Reproach to that Kingdom. Of which Terms of Peace, the Lords and Commons being demanded their Advice, gave in their Anſwers ſeverally, that they could not aſſent to any ſuch Peace without Diſ-herison of the King and his Crown, and to the great Danger of their own Souls, as who were sworn to uphold and maintain the same to their Power. AN. DOM. 1368.

After which the said Arch-bishop in the Kings Name gave thanks to the Three Estates for their ready Compliance in assisting the Kings Wants by their Aids and Subsidies, and shew'd them farther, how at that time the King stood in as great need of a Considerable Supply as ever. Whereupon the Lords and Commons granted unto the King for two Years of every Wooll-Pack 36 s. 8 d. for every Twelve Score of Fells as much, and of every Last of Skins 4 l. over and above the usual Custom of 6 s. 8 d. for every Wooll-Pack, and the same for every Twelve Score of Fells, and of 13 s. and 4 d. for every Last of Skins. An. Regni Angliæ XLII.

Then certain New Statutes were prepared, and made Law by the King, and certain Old ones explained and confirmed, as may be seen in the Printed Books referring to those Days, which for the most part agree exactly with the Records.

The Londoners by their Representatives desired, that no Foreigner should retail any Merchandise, as Wine, or any other Provision; but this was not granted. On the 21 of May the King gave Thanks to the Lords and Commons for their Coming and Aid granted, and that Day all the Lords and sundry of the Commons dined with the King. After which Dinner Sr. John Leigh was brought before the King, Lords and Commons, such as dined there, to answer certain Objections made against him; and first to the Complaint of William Latimer as followeth, The King had granted the Wardship of "Robert Latimer, the Son and Heir of Sr. Robert Latimer, with certain Mannors du- "ring his Minority, to Dr. Robert Wyvill Bishop of Sarum, which Estate descending to "the said William Latimer, the King afterward granted to Sr. John Leigh, during the "said William's Minority. The said William surmised, that the said Sr. John being "then Steward of the Kings House, and of Power, sent for him to London, where by "dures of Imprisonment he compelled the said William to surrender his Estate up into his Hands. But the same Sr. John by Recognisance excuseth himself, for that the Grant was made unto him; which was not allowed, for that the said William was not put out by due Process of Law. Another Matter was objected against the said Sr. John; forasmuch as during the time he was Steward of the Kings House, he should cause sundry Men to be attached, and to come before him, as before the Kings Council, in such Places as he pleased, where being out of Council he caused Men to answer as in Council. And that he as Steward, having Authority only within the Verge, did notwithstanding cause sundry to be attached out of the Verge, as John Goddard and Others, making them to answer in the Marshalsea for things done out of the Verge; and other some he had committed to the Tower of his own Authority, as John Sibill, Edmund [o] Urdsalls and others. That he had also of his own Head, against the Justices Command, discharged out of Newgate Hugh Lavenham Purveyor, who had appealed sundry Men of Felony. That he had bargain'd formerly with Sr. Nicolas Lovaine for the Keeping of the Mannor of Raynham in Kent, the which the said Sr. Nicolas claimed to hold, during the Minority of the Son and Heir of John Staunton; whereas the said Sr. John Leigh knew, that the said Mannor was holden of the King in Capite, as of the Castle of Dover.

[o] Urdsales, Sr. Rob. Cotton.

Of all which Points, because the said Sr. John could not purge himself he was commanded to the Tower of London, there to remain as Prisoner, untill he had paid Fine at the Kings Pleasure: And thereupon Command was given to Sr. Alan Boxhull Constable of the Tower, to keep him accordingly. And so the Lords and Commons departed. But after that the said Sr John being brought to Westminster before the Kings Council, and there examin'd concerning the Business of the said William Latimer, made Answer, that as freely as the King had granted to him the Wardship aforesaid, so freely did he surrender the same into the Kings Hands; whereupon it was order'd in Council, that the said Wardship should be reseised into the Kings Hands, and deliver'd unto the said William Latimer, according to the Grant made to the said Bishop of Sarum, and that all Recognisances and Conveyances made by the said William to the said Sr. John should be void, saving the Kings Right.

IV. Thus ended this Parliament, but it is to be observed, that Dr. Simon Langham [p] Archbishop of Canterbury, who had been both Lord Treasurer and Chancellor of England, and performed the part of King Edwards Spokesman in this Parliament, was on the 21 of September following by Pope Urban V. made Cardinal titulo Sti. Sixti; whereupon he resign'd his Archbishoprick of Canterbury and went to Avignon, where not long after he was made Bishop Cardinal of Præneste by Pope Gregory the Eleventh, and held divers Livings in Commendum, as the Archdeaconry and Treasurership of [p] Godw. Catal. Bish. p. 143. & Philpots Catal. Chancel. & Treasurers, &c.

An. Dom. 1368. An. Regni Angliæ XLII.

Welles and others. There he lived in high Eſtimation for about Eight Years, at which time he died of a Palſie, wherewith he was ſuddenly taken as he ſat at Dinner. Of his Bounty, Magnificent Buildings and other Deeds of Liberality Biſhop Godwin makes mention; but what we have further to ſay of him, we ſhall defer till we come to relate his Death. In his Seat of Canterbury he was ſucceeded by Dr. William Wittleſey, a Man of great Parts and Learning for that Age.

[q] Treaſury of Time, or Times Store-houſe p. 721.

V. It is credibly reported, [q] that about this time, during a great Storm and an extraordinary high Tide, there was ſeen a Mermaid or Sea-woman ſwimming in the Zuyderzee between Campen and Edam: Who being taken and brought to Edam, after ſhe was well cleanſed from the Sea-moſs, which by her long Continuance in that Element had grown about her, was not only exactly like another Woman, but endured to be Apparell'd, and would feed on Meats as others did, tho' indeed ſhe ſought all Means to eſcape, and return again to her Watry Habitation, but ſhe was always prevented by thoſe who had the Care of her, and watch'd her very narrowly. She learn'd to ſpin and exerciſe ſeveral other Feminine Duties, being dayly ſeen by vaſt Numbers of People, many of whom gave undoubted Teſtimony of the Truth of the Matter, both deſcribing her Features, and atteſting, that ſhe lived 15 Years after ſhe was firſt taken, and was laſtly buried there in the Church-yard of Edam. If the Reader wants Faith to credit ſuch Matters, I entreat him to conſider, that an Hiſtorian is not obliged to gain an Infallible Aſſurance of all that he ſays; but however [r] that ſince ſo great and ſo wiſe Men have confirmed ſuch things unto Us, he who will not allow ſuch authentick and probable Teſtimonies, not only wants Faith, but perhaps Modeſty and Diſcretion alſo.

[r] Vid. in Peireskii Vitâ à Gaſſend. conſcriptâ, &c.

[ſ] Froiſſ. c. 239. fol. a.

VI. But to return to the Affairs of our Hiſtory --- Now it is to be remembred, that [ſ] when the Prince of Wales was come from Spain into Gaſcogne, and his Brother the Duke of Lancaſter was gone home into England; many of the French and Spaniſh Nobility were by the Engliſh and Gaſcogners put to their Ranſome. But Sr. Bertram of Clequin remain'd ſtill a Priſoner with the Prince; and the Lord John Chandos, being not admitted to pay any Ranſome, which prov'd a great Trouble to Henry the Baſtard, becauſe he durſt not attempt any New thing againſt Don Pedro, till he ſhould have this his moſt conſiderable Friend at Liberty. But by chance there was offer'd an Occaſion of obtaining that, which Counſel and Money were not able to procure; for one Day among the reſt, the Prince, who us'd much Grace and Reſpect to all his Priſoners, ſent for Sr. Bertram of Clequin to diſcourſe with him. "Sr. Bertram, How doth "your ſpirit Brook this Confinement? Sr. I thank God, very well: I was never at bet-"ter eaſe in all my Life. And it is reaſonable for me to think ſo, ſince I am in the "Hands of the moſt Generous Prince living, and made a Priſoner by the moſt Renow-"ned Knight in the World. Who is that, ſaid the Prince? Sir (ſaid he) that is Sr. "John Chandos: That is right (replied the Prince) therefore you may comfort your "ſelf for being taken, ſince it is no diſhonour to be conquer'd by a Gallant Man; but "what comfort have you now for being detain'd a Priſoner, when moſt of your Fellows "are put to Ranſom? O Sir (quoth Sr. Bertram) as to that matter I have this Com-"fort, namely, that it is reported in France and Spain, how you ſtand in ſuch fear of "me, that you dare not let me go, which muſt needs be a conſiderable Honour for ſo mean a "Knight as I am. The Prince underſtood well to what end theſe ſubtle Words of Sr. Bertram tended, and he alſo remembred, that his whole Council had agreed by no means to let him have his Liberty, untill King Don Pedro had fully paid all thoſe Sums of Money, wherein he was bound; leſt Sr. Bertram ſhould again embroil the Matters of Spain, and put that King out of a capacity of Paying. But however he could not endure to be thought to ſtand in Fear of any one Living, and beſides he thought to ask ſuch a Ranſom as Sr. Bertram ſhould not eaſily be able to pay; wherefore he anſwer'd him thus--"Then Sir, it ſeems you imagin, that We detain you here for doubt of your "Proweſs and Chevalry. But I would not have you think ſo, for I ſwear by St. George, "it is no ſuch matter. Do but pay Us for your Ranſom an 100000 Franks, and you "ſhall be deliver'd immediatly. Sr. Bertram, who, whatever he pretended, deſired much in his mind to be at Liberty, hearing now on what Conditions he might go, took the Prince preſently at his Word, and ſaid, "Sir, be it ſo in the Name of God; I'll pay no leſs a "Ranſome, and thank you for the honour of Rating me ſo high. Then the Prince would willingly have retracted his Words, for he ſaw himſelf caught now, and that by his means Don Pedro might be either depoſed again, or put to Death before he had ſatisfied him; and beſides ſome of his Council came to him and told him, that he had not done well, ſo eaſily to put him to his Ranſom, and would fain have perſwa-

ded

ded him to revoke his Promiſe. But the Prince, who was a Perſon of much Honour and Equity, ſaid poſitively, "Gentlemen, ſince We have agreed thereto, We will by no "means break our Word: And truly it would be a great Shame and Reproach to Us, "if We ſhould any longer refuſe to deliver him, ſince he is content to pay ſo conſide- "rable a Ranſom. So after this Sr. Bertram had nothing to do, but to contrive how to raiſe the Money; and he minded his Buſineſs ſo well, that by the Aſſiſtance of the French King, of the Baſtard of Spain, of the Duke of Anjou, who loved him entirely, and of ſome other Friends, he made a Purſe of an 100000 Franks, or 10000 l. Sterling, all which he paid in leſs than a Months time, and ſo was quit of his Impriſonment, and went ſtraight with 2000 Fighting Men of Provence to ſerve the Duke of Anjou, who then held Siege before the City of Taraſcon, which at that time held of the King of Majorica and Naples, in Right of his Wife Queen Joan.

AN. DOM. 1368. An. Regni Angliæ XLII.

VII. We have before declared at large the whole Manner of the Prince of Wales his Expedition into Spain, [t] and how at laſt he left that Country, not well contented with King Don Pedro, and returned home again into his Principality of Aquitaine. After him returned all manner of Men of War, who had attended him; for they ſaw it in vain to tarry any longer in Caſtille; becauſe Don Pedro did but ſhuffle with them, and on the other hand they had a firm Confidence in the Prince's Word. But when they were come back, the Prince had not wherewithall to pay them ſo readily, as he expected: For the Buſineſs of Spain had wonderfully exhauſted his Treaſures, even to a Miracle. However all the reſt went home, relying on the Prince's Promiſe; but the Companions tarried ſtill, being quarter'd in Aquitaine, where for their Lives they could not forbear robbing and plundering, being to the Number of 6000 Fighting Men; For the Prince had left the other 6000 in Spain under Sr. Hugh Calverley. When therefore the Prince heard the Complaints of his People, concerning theſe Companions, he ſent unto them, deſiring and commanding them to avoid his Dominions; for the Country was not able to bear them. Now their Captains and Leaders were all either Engliſhmen, or Gaſcogners, as Sr. Robert Briquet, Sr. John Frevile, Sr. Robert Cheney, Sr. Galiard of Viguier, the Bourg of Bartuel, the Bourg of L'Eſparre, Nandon of Bergerac, Bernard de la Salle, and many others, who neither durſt, nor would diſpleaſe the Prince; for they did not a little fear to provoke him; but they much more lov'd to oblige him: And therefore they took the firſt opportunity to leave Aquitaine, and paſſed forth into the Realm of France, which they had us'd to call Their Chamber, going over the River of Loire into Champaigne, and to the Biſhoprick of Rheims, and ſtill their Numbers encreaſed. And theſe Men ſought Adventures every where, as they went in France, and gat great ſtore of Plunder, and did much miſchief; complaints whereof came in daily to the French King and his Council, who were as yet unable to apply a Remedy; but the Commons of France wonder'd extreamly, that the Prince of Wales ſhould ſend Men to make War among them. However King Charles of France ſent preſently for the Lord Oliver Cliſſon, whom he made Chief Captain againſt theſe Companions; becauſe he was a Valiant Knight, and of good Conduct; wherefore alſo that Wiſe Prince held him in High Eſteem and Favour. About this time there was a Marriage ſtruck up between the Young Earl of Albret, and the Lady Iſabell of Bourbon; whereat the Prince of Wales was nothing pleaſed; for he had rather, that he had taken a Wife out of England. Wherefore he ſpake many High Words againſt him, till ſome of his Council began to appeaſe his Diſpleaſure, by ſaying, "that it was Natu- "ral for every Man to ſeek to raiſe his Fortune as well as he might, and that a Loy- "al Knight ought not to be blamed for exalting his own Honour and Profit by Marri- "age, or otherwiſe; if at the ſame time he did not forſake to ſerve his Prince, or Maſter, as "far as in Duty bound. Theſe and the like Words ſomewhat allay'd the Prince's Paſſion: But whatever appearance he made, he was not fully ſatisfy'd; for he verily believed that his Marriage would occaſion ſome Revolting from him, as indeed it fell out ſhortly after.

[t] Froiſ. c. 240.

VIII. While theſe Companions were thus troubling the Realm of France, [u] the Prince of Wales was adviſed by ſome of his Council, eſpecially the Biſhop of Rodez, who was at that time Chancellor of Aquitaine, to raiſe a Foüage or Tax upon Chimneys throughout all his Principality, thereby to enable himſelf to pay the Debts he had contracted by his late Expedition; and beſide the State, which the Prince and Princeſs kept, was ſo great, that in all Chriſtendom there was not the like again. So there was held a Parliament for raiſing this Foüage at Niort, to which were ſummon'd all the Barons of Gaſcogne, of Poictou, of Saintogne, and of divers other parts, even from all the Cities and Good Towns of Aquitaine. Before all whom the Biſhop of Rodez declared in Preſence of the Prince, how this Foüage was to be raiſed, and that [u] Froiſ. c. 251.

An. Dom. 1368. An. Regni Angliæ XLII.

the Design of Raising it, was chiefly to enable the Prince, their Lord, to pay such summs of Money, as he ow'd upon the account of his Spanish Expedition; and that however it was the Prince's Mind, not to continue the said Foüage any longer, than for the space of Five Years to come: All which time, supposing * One Frank for every Chimney, the Prince would have a supply of 1200000 Franks per annum, if the Matter had been effectually put in Execution. But althô to this Ordinance the Poictevins readily agreed, as also did the Representatives of Saintogne, Limosin, Rouvergue, and Rochelle; yet divers others of the Marches of Gascogne, refused to concurr with them, as the Earl of Armagnac, the Lord of Albret, his Nephew, the Lord of Conde, the Lord of Pincornet, the Lord of Cominges, the Vicount of Carmaine, the Lord de la Barde, and divers other Barons; "who said, how heretofore, when they "served the French King, they were not then grieved nor oppressed with any Subsi- "dies or Innovations, and no more would they now, if they could help it; for they "said, their Lands and Seignories were free and exempt from all such Duties; and so "the Prince had sworn to keep and maintain them. But however the better to make fair Weather for the time, and to get off with more ease from this Parliament, they then only answer'd, how they would take further Advice, and so return again by such a day, as well Prelates, Bishops, and Abbots, as Barons, Knights, and others. This was all the Answer, that the Prince and his Council could have at that time, and so they brake up and left Niort, having received a Command from the Prince to return again thither by a Day Assigned.

* Du Chesne p. 699.

Thus the Barons and the Lords of Gascogne went home to their several Places, having first firmly agreed together, by no means to return to the Parliament appointed by the Prince, nor to suffer the Foüage to be raised in their Lands; but rather to rebell against Him. And shortly after the Earl of Armagnac, the Lord of Albret, the Lord of Cominges, the Vicount of Carmaine, and the rest of the Barons, Knights, and Esquires of those parts, went into France, and there put forth their Complaints, in the French Kings Chamber, in presence of the King and his Peers, of the Grievances, which the Prince of Wales would do unto them; adding, that in such Cases, their whole Resort and Appeal ought to be unto the King of France, as unto their only Sovereign Lord. Then the French King, who made some scruple to break the Peace, which had been so solemnly established between the two Realms, answer'd them with dissimulation enough, "Surely, Gentlemen, the Jurisdiction of our Inheritance, and of the Crown "of France, we will always preserve and augment to our Power: But we have sworn "to keep sundry Articles, contained in the Peace of Bretigny, all which I cannot per- "fectly remember: Wherefore We shall Inspect, and consider the Tenor of the Let- "ters, and as much as in us lies, We will do you Right, and shall be glad to recon- "cile You with the Prince, our Dear Nephew: For perhaps he is not well advised, "thus to deprive either You or your Vassals of their Customs and Franchises.

With this answer for the present they contented themselves, but tarried still with the King at Paris, resolving not to return to their own places, nor to the Prince's Parliament, wherewith the Prince was extreamly displeased; but for all that he proceeded in raising the Tax aforesaid.

The Lord John Chandos, who was the very Chief of his Council, always gave his Opinion against this Foüage, and now especially, foreseeing the Ill Consequences thereof, he would willingly have perswaded the Prince to remit it; but when he saw the Prince resolv'd upon it, to the intent, he might not incurr any reproach or blame in that business, he took his leave of the Prince, shewing for his Excuse, that he was desirous to go into Normandy to visit his Lands of St. Saviour le Vicount, whereof he was Lord, and had not been there of Three Years. The Prince granted his request, and so the Lord Chandos rode from Poicton into Coutantine, and tarried in the Fortress of St Saviour more than half a year, till the Prince's service call'd him forth to Action. And all the while the Prince proceeded with an high Hand in raising this Foüage, which if he had brought about, would have amounted (as we said before) to more than 1200000 Franks per annum, every Fire to pay a Frank, and the Rich to have born out the Poor.

CHAP-

CHAPTER the FOURTH.

The CONTENTS.

I. Don Henry the Baſtard, underſtanding how the Prince's Affairs began to be embroiled, takes Heart and returns into Spain with an Army againſt his Brother Don Pedro. He finds the King of Majorica ſick at Valladolid, takes him Priſoner, and having received many Cities and Towns, goes and lies down before Toledo. II. Don Pedro goes haſtily againſt him with a great Army, but being met unawares is beaten, flies into the Caſtle of Montiel and is there cloſely beſieged. III. For want of Proviſion he is forced to ſeek an Eſcape, but being taken is ſoon after murder'd by the Baſtard's own Hands: the Baſtard reigns in his ſtead. IV. The Diſcontented Gaſcogners urge the French King to ſummon the Prince of Wales to anſwer unto their ſeveral Complaints in the Chamber of Peers. V. At laſt King Charles by the perſwaſions of his Council, under much Caution, venters to ſummon the Prince; and ſo the firſt ſeeds of War are caſt again. William of Wickham made Biſhop of Wincheſter, with ſome Obſervations concerning him. VI. The Black-Prince in the midſt of his Warlike Preparations, is taken with an unknown and incurable Diſtemper. VII. The Gaſcogne Lords begin the War againſt the Prince, who ſends the Lord Chandos to oppoſe them. VIII. The French King lulls King Edward into ſecurity by his ſubtle Negotiations, till being ready he might ſurpriſe Ponthieu before-hand: Whereto when things are ripe, he alſo ſends his Defiance to King Edward. IX. Hereupon King Edward ſends forthwith to ſecure Ponthieu, but all too late; the King of France had been there before him. X. King Edward having taken all the Care he could for Scotland and Ireland, calls a Parliament, wherein he reſumes the Title of France, changes his Seals, and obtains a Mighty Aid for his Wars. XI. Edward the Black-Prince creates the Valiant Lord John de Greilly Captal of Buſche, Earl of Bigorre, which Creation is afterwards confirmed by the King his Father.

I. NOW [a] of the Affairs of Prince Edward and of Aquitain, were all the Kings his Neighbours well informed, eſpecially Don Pedro King of Aragon, and Don Henrique the Baſtard, who took particular care to underſtand, how Matters went with the Prince. And when they heard that the Barons of Gaſcogne had applied themſelves to the Court of France, and began already in a manner to rebel againſt him, they were not a little pleaſed therewith. But chiefly the Baſtard was comforted at this News, for now he ſaw the Prince of Wales entangled with Domeſtick Troubles, he hop'd the more eaſily to reconquer the Realm of Caſtille, which before he had loſt by the Prince's means. Whereupon he took his leave of the King of Aragon, and departed from Valencia with the Vicount of Rochebreton, and the Vicount of Rodez, and 3000 Horſe and 6000 Foot in his Company, beſides certain Genoueſe, whom he retained for Wages. Thus he rode into Spain, and came before the good City of Burgos, which open'd her Gates and yielded unto him, acknowledging him for her Rightfull Lord and Sovereign. Thence he went to Valladolid, for he underſtood, how the King of Majorica was ſtill there, being not yet fully recover'd of his ſickneſs, which rendred him unable to go along with Prince Edward when he left Spain. The Inhabitants of Valladolid, who heard how the great City of Burgos had yielded up, thought not to offer to reſiſt him; wherefore they alſo received him, and paid Homage unto him. Being enter'd the City, enquiring for the King of Majorica, he was ſhew'd his Lodgings, and went up himſelf into the Chamber, where he lay not yet quite well, and accoſted him in this manner, "Sir King of Majorica, You have been our Enemy, and to-"gether with the Prince of Aquitain and a great Army have invaded this our Realm of "Caſtille; wherefore We have Reaſon to ſeize upon You, and You muſt yield your ſelf "our Priſoner, or You are but Dead. When the King of Majorica ſaw himſelf in ſuch a Caſe, and that it would be to no purpoſe to offer Reſiſtance, he anſwer'd, "Sir King, "truly I am but Dead, if it ſo pleaſe You; and therefore I am ready to yield my ſelf "unto You, but to no other Man living. And Sir, if you are minded to deliver me to "any

[a] Froiſ. c. 251. f. 144.

An. Dom. 1369. An. Regni Angliæ XLIII.

"any other Man, let me know it now: For I had rather die here, than once come into "the Hands of the King of Aragon, my most Mortal Enemy. Sir (replied Don Hen- "ry) don't you fear any such Matter: I will be no otherwise than Just unto You; and "if I should not do so I were to blame. You shall become my Prisoner, either to acquit "you freely, or for a Ransom at my pleasure. Thus was the King of Majorica surprised and taken by Don Henry, who caused him to be kept there still, thô under a sure Guard, because of his Infirmity, and then he marched to the City of Leon, which immediately open'd unto him; and while he was here, all the Country and the Marches of Galizia submitted unto him, and many great Lords and Barons, who had lately done Homage to Don Pedro, came now in to Don Henry: For whatever Loyalty they had pretended to the other, in presence of the Prince of Wales, they loved him not in their hearts, because of his former Cruelties, to which they doubted he would quickly return again. But King Henry on the other side was popular, obliging and gracious to all Men, and moreover made large Promises to those who would own his Cause; so that in a manner all the Country acknowledged him for their Lord, only the great City of Toledo in New Castille would not obey his Summons, nor own him for her King. Wherefore Don Henry went thither with all his Forces, and began to lay Siege thereto, it being the only Considerable Place that had refused to admit him. All this while Sr. Bertram of Clequin was not with him; but now seeing the Duke of Anjou had lately ended his War in Provence, and quitted the Siege of Tarascon upon Composition, Sr. Bertram took his leave of him, and with divers Knights and Esquires of France, and 2000 fighting Men in his Company, made hast after King Henry, whom he found at the Siege before Toledo.

II. News was presently brought to Don Pedro, who was then in Andaluzia about Seville, and toward the Marches of Portugal, where he was not over-much beloved, how the Country fell away to the Bastard his Brother, whereat he was horribly incensed both against the Bastard, and all his Subjects of Castille, because they forsook him so disloyally. And he sware a great Oath, that he would take so cruel a Revenge on all those false People, as to leave a terrible Example to all false Traytors for the future. Then he sent forth his Summons to those whom he had most Confidence in, but many of them came not at all; they had more mind to follow King Henry, to whom they sent their Homages, and proffer'd their Service. When Don Pedro saw, that most of his expected Friends began to fail him, he had less assurance, and asked Counsel of Don Hernando del Castro, who never fail'd him to the last. Don Hernando advised him to muster as many as he could get for Love or Money, both Moors and Others, and so immediately to march against the Bastard before he conquer'd further in the Country. Accordingly King Don Pedro sent presently to Ferdinando King of Portugal, who was his Cosen German, and also to the Kings of Granada, and of Belmarine and Tremissen, with which Three, thô Heathen Princes, he made a strict and perpetual Alliance, and they sent him about 30000 Moors and Saracens to his Assistance: So that at last Don Pedro had gather'd together in the Marches of Seville, an Army of above 40000 Men, Moors, Jews and Christians together. And being furnished with these Forces, he became so well assured, that without tarrying for Sr. Hugh Calverley, who was coming to his Aid with 6000 Companions, all Chosen Men, he began to march against the Bastard his Brother, toward the City of Toledo, which was distant about seven Days journey from him.

Don Henry had News, how his Brother was coming against him with a great Army, and thereupon presently called a Council of War, wherein were all the Captains of France and of Aragon, especially Sr. Bertram of Clequin, by whom he was chiefly swayed. And at this time his Advice was, that he should march forth immediately to fight his Brother, and in what Condition soever he found him, presently to set upon him: "For (says he) Sir, I hear He comes against us with a great Power: And if "We tarry here waiting for him, it may turn much to our Disadvantage; not only by "reason of his Multitudes, but also because of this City which will be then at our backs, "and may by one brisk Sally ruine your Affairs utterly. Wherefore Sir, let us suddenly "come upon him; 'tis great odds, but we find him out of Order, and if once we have "that Advantage of him, he is certainly ours for ever. This Counsel of Sr. Bertrams was received, and so King Henry went one Evening from the Camp with a Chosen number of the Best Knights and Captains, and about 6000 Select Men; the rest of the Army being left to carry on the Siege, under the Command of his Brother the Earl of Sancelloni. Thus he rode forth against King Don Pedro, sending before him seven Spies well mounted, who were always successively coming and going, and bringing him word word from Don Pedro where he was, how far Advanced, and in what Posture He and his Army were. But of all this was Don Pedro unawares, for he imagined his Brother to be before Toledo still, and so he came forward in a more careless manner, without any good Order. AN. DOM. 1369. An. Regni Angliæ XLIII.

On the [b] 14 of March early in the Morning, King Henry and his Forces came up with Don Pedro, who had lain that Night in the Castle of Montiel, about 30 Leagues from Toledo, where he found good Acceptance, and was well entertain'd. But now having newly left the Place he continued his March towards Toledo, little imagining to be met withall by any Enemy that Day. When suddenly there came upon him Don Henry, with his Brother Sancho and Sr. Bertram of Clequin, whose Conduct he chiefly rely'd on, and also the Beague of Vilain, the Vicount of Rochebreton, the Vicount of Rodez and their Retinues: All who riding wisely together in close Order came suddenly upon their Enemies, crying aloud—"Castille for King Henry and our Lady of Clequin, and so they presently discomfited and put back the Vaward of Don Pedro's Army; of which many were overthrown and slain without pity, for Sr. Bertram of Clequin had before advised, that none should be taken to Ransom, because of the great Numbers of Moors that were there.

[b] Vid. Odor. Rainal. ad hunc ann. §. 11. Mezeray p. 78. Mariana l. 17. c. 13. & Froiss. ibid.

When Don Pedro, who was in the Main Battail among his Men, heard how his Van was assayled and beat back by his Bastard-Brother and the Frenchmen, he was strangely surprised, and saw too late, that he was betrayed and deceived by his Scouts, and in great Danger to lose all: For his Men were very much scatter'd abroad, and out of Order, against all Rules of Military Discipline. Notwithstanding like a Good Hardy Knight he kept the Field undauntedly, and caused his Banner to be unrolled to draw his People together, and sounded a Charge, and sent Post to hasten forward those who were behind, because he was fighting with his Enemies: So that his Men advanced with all the speed they could. The mean while there was a terrible Slaughter among the Foremost of Don Pedro's Men; for King Henry and Sr. Bertram of Clequin fought with so much Vigour and Resolution, that none were able to endure them. But yet the Victory was not presently obtain'd: For Don Pedro fought like a Lion, and encouraged and rallied his Men with great Bravery; and indeed he was above Six to one against the Bastard, but he was so suddenly taken, that all his Numbers availed little, they rather added to the Confusion.

So for a while there was a desperate Battle fought, the Spaniards, Frenchmen, and Aragonians contending against other Spaniards, Moors, Saracens, Jews and Portugese. Don Henry fought most valiantly indeed, and so did Sr. Bertram of Clequin, Sr. Geoffry de Ricons, Sr. Arnold of Limosin, Sr. Guy Bailleul, the Beague of Vilain, Sr. Alan of St. Paul, Sr. Eliot of Carhais, the Vicount of Rochebreton, the Vicount of Rodez and Others, who all performed their Parts with much Gallantry, as indeed it was necessary for them to do, for they found a fierce and strong People to oppose them. As for the Jews of King Pedro's Army they turned their Backs presently, and fled without striking one Stroke, but the Moors of Granada, of Belmarine and Tremisen, with the Portugese fought obstinately with their Bows and Swords, and did that Day much Mischief, and in the thickest of the Battle you might ever observe King Don Pedro, who like a Valiant Knight bestir'd himself all the while so stoutly, with a sharp Axe of Massie Steel in his Hands, that no Man durst abide his Strokes. But when the Banner of Don Henry his Brother met and encountred his, each Party crying their appointed Cries, then Don Pedro's firmest Battail began to open and give Ground, at which time Don Hernando del Castro, who was Chief Counsellour to King Don Pedro, seeing all things grow Desperate, said to the King his Master, "Sir, save Your Self in time, and "return to your Castle of Montiel, for there You will be in safeguard: But if You are ta-"ken here, You are a dead Man without Mercy. King Don Pedro took this Counsel, and left the Field as soon as he could, and rode back towards Montiel, whither he came in such good time, that he found the Gates open, and so entred with only twelve Persons more in his Company. But all this while his Men fought in the Field scatter'd, and out of Order as they were, for to submit was in vain, none were taken to Mercy. The Moors especially did what they could in their own Defence, for they were unacquainted with the Country, and therefore thought it vain to fly. But now Word was brought to King Henry and Sr. Bertram of Clequin, that Don Pedro was fled, and had got into the strong Castle of Montiel, and that the Beague of Vilain had follow'd in Chace after him even to the very Castle, to the which there was but one Passage, and before that the said Beague had already pitched his Standard. Of this News King Henry and Sr. Bertram was very glad, and so fought their way toward the said Castle, beating down and slaying their Enemies by heaps, till they were even weary of Killing. The Chace endured for three Hours, so that above 14000 Men were slain, besides those who were wounded, and toward the end of the Fight taken to Mercy; but few escaped, except such as knew the Passages of the Country. This Battle was thus fought in a place called Campo di Montiel, not far from Montiel, which divides the Realm of Valentia from that of New Castille, on the 14 Day of March, in the Year of our Lord MCCCLXIX.

and

An. Dom. 1369. An. Regni Angliæ XLIII.

The Victory being thus obtain'd, Don Henry went and laid Siege round about the Castle of Montiel, wherein King Don Pedro was, sending at the same time to the Siege before Toledo, for his Brother the Earl of Sancelloni, commanding him to break up there, and to come with all his Power unto him, where the Head of all the Business lay. These Orders were obey'd, and the Earl of Sancelloni, with his Brother Sancho (who had been sent to fetch him) quitted the Siege before Toledo, and went to the King, their Brother, who lay before Montiel. This Castle was exceeding strong and able to have held out against them all a long while; if it had been well provided with Victuals and other things necessary. But it was so bare of Provision, that there was scarce enough in the Castle to serve a fortnight: Whereat King Don Pedro and his small Company were extreamly surprised; for they were so narrowly watched Day and Night, that a Bird could not come out of the Castle without notice. Upon which account King Don Pedro, seeing himself thus beset round by his Implacable Enemies, and that it was impossible to come to any accommodation, was very much cast down: Till at last all things duly consider'd, and their small stock of Victuals being ready to fail, he was advis'd to go away privily at the Hour of Midnight, only with 12 Persons, and Don Hernando del Castro in his Company; and so to commit himself to God, and the direction of such Guides, as were appointed to bring him into some better place of security.

[c] Lit. Dom. G. vid. Odor. Rainal. &c. ut ante.

III. Accordingly on the 23 of March, [c] being a Friday, about the time of Midnight, King Don Pedro and Twelve other Persons departed in great silence from the Castle of Montiel, in hopes to escape away unseen of their Enemies. The Night indeed was very Dark; but the Beague of Vilaine kept watch without, before the Entrance of the Castle with 300 Men; and as the unhappy King, being come out of the Castle with his Company, was going down an High-way, as closely as could be, this Beague of Vilaine who was always jealous, lest he should escape, and therefore kept the stricter Watch, thought he heard some Noise, and said to his Men, that were about him, "Sirs, hold you all still: For methinks I hear the treading of Horses down the "High-way; We will go and learn, who they are, and what they intend hereabouts at "this time of Night: It may be, they are some, who are come to Victual the Castle. And therewithall he stept forth with his Dagger in his Hand, and came to One, next before Don Pedro, and said, "Who are You? But he rushed forward with his Horse from him, and passed by. Then he stepped to Don Pedro, and took him by the Bridle; for he was resolved not to lose him, as he had the other, and said, "Who are "You? Tell me your Name, or You are but a Dead Man. When Don Pedro saw such a Company of Armed Men before him, and that it was impossible he should escape; he said, "Sir, I am Don Pedro, King of Castille; I yield my self your Prisoner, and "commit me and my Company which consists but of Twelve Persons into your Hands. "Only, Sir, I require You, as a Man of Honour, not to deliver me into the Hands of "the Bastard, my Brother; but to secure my Life unto me, and I will pay You what "Ransome You will ask; for I thank God, I have enough. Then the Beague answer'd, as it was said, "Sir, I shall bring You and your Men into a place of safety; and your "Brother shall know nothing of You for me. And therewithall he conveyed him into his own Pavilion, where also Sr. Lewis of Carlonet was lodged with him. Thô others say, [d] that Sr. Bertram of Clequin was the Man, that took the King, and that Don Pedro offer'd him 200000 Crowns of Gold to secure his Life; the Matter is all one, be it one, or t'other. But however Don Pedro had not been in the Tent a full hour, when King Henry and the Earl of Rochebreton, and some others came into the Tent, King Henry calling aloud, "Where is that son of a Whore, the Jew, who calls himself King "of Castille? Don Pedro, who was a Couragious and Hardy Prince, could not contain himself at this; but stept forth boldly, and said, "Nay, thou art a son of an Whore, "and I the Son of King Alphonso. And therewithall he grappled with his Brother Henry, and took him in his Arms and overthrew him on a Bench, and began to lay his Hand on his Dagger, and had most certainly slain him upon the spot, had it not been for the Vicount of Rochebreton; who at that instant took Don Pedro by the Leg,

[d] Odor. Rainal. ut ante.

and

and turned him upside Down; so that King Henry was now uppermost: Who immediately drew out a long knife, wherewith he strack King Don Pedro into the Body, and so slew him, at which time many of Don Henry's Men came in to his Assistance. There was slain together with him an English Knight, called Sr. Ralph Helmes, who formerly had been termed the Green Esquire, and another Esquire, named James Rowland; because they made Resistance. Bnt as for Don Hernando del Castro, he had this Reward of his Constant Loyalty, as only to remain a Prisoner of War with the Beague of Vilaine, till King Henry took him into his Favour; and the same Succes had the Rest, who attended Don Pedro in this his last Action. AN. DOM. 1369. An. Regni Angliæ XLIII.

Thus ended King Don Pedro of Castille, sirnamed the Cruel, after he had lived 34 Years and 7 Months, whereof he Reigned 19 Years within three Days; being now slain by his Bastard Brother, as it had been foretold unto him. His Body was left unburied for three Days; which was no less a Crime in the Bastard, than his very Murther: Except that it might seem in Policy necessary, thereby to convince all Men the better, that he was really Dead. The next Day the Governour of Montiel yielded up the Town and Castle to King Henry, who took him to Mercy, as he did all others that turned unto him. The News of Don Pedro's Death ran all abroad, whereat, as his Friends were sad, his Enemies rejoyced: But especially the French King, the King of Aragon, the Pope, and the Duke of Anjou, were glad at this Succes of Don Henry. He for his part, being now fully Established in his Throne, liberally Rewarded all his Friends and Assistants; as Sr. Bertram of Clequin, whom he made High-Constable of Spain, and gave him Lands in and about the City of Soria, to the yearly Value of 20000 Franks, and to his Nephew Sr. Oliver Manny, other Lands worth half as much, and to others proportionably. And so he began his Reign over Castille, which his Posterity enjoy to this Day; a [c] greater Right being afterward brought unto his Grandson, Henry, Prince of Astorga, Son and Heir of John, King of Castille, Son and Heir of this Henry, the Bastard, by his taking the Lady Catherine, sole Daughter and Heiress of John of Gaunt Duke of Lancaster, by his Second Wife, the Lady Constance, Eldest Daughter to the said Don Pedro, the True and Lawfull King of Castille and Leon.

[c] Vid. Sandford's Genealog. Hist. l.4. c.1. p. 253. & Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 118.

IV. But it is now high time to look nearer home, and take notice what Ill Effects followed that Foüage, which the Prince of Wales intended to levy in Aquitaine; the Frenchmen cunningly working upon the Discontents of a Few, till they had again kindled as great a Combustion, as ever was before between the Two Nations. Now [f] those of the lower Marches, as of Bourdelois, Saincttogne, Poictou, and Rochellois, readily agreed to the Matter, because they were nearer to the Prince's Court, and were generally accounted more firm and Loyal to him, than those of farther Parts: But as for others, especially those of Gascogne, they thought it too heavy a Burthen, and made many Remonstrances against it. So that the Prince held several Parliaments at Niort, at Angoulesme, Poictiers, Bourdeaux, and Bergerac; but still the Rebel Gascogners by their Letters and Messengers maintained, and said, how they could not suffer this Foüage to run in their Country; declaring, that their Resort, and Appeal, had ever been in the Chamber of France. At this mention of Resort, the Prince was extreamly offended, and argued against it, telling them, how they ought not to make any Resort there for the future: For he affirmed, "that the French King had quitted for himself "and his Heirs for ever, all Resorts and Jurisdictions whatsoever, when he resigned "those Lands entirely, and absolutely unto the King of England; as is plainly appa- "rent from the Tenor of the Charter of the Peace; Wherein those Matters are so "clearly explain'd, that there is not the least Clause of any One Article, where there "is any Reserve for the French King in time of Peace. These Words of the Prince were sent to those Lords of Gascogne, that refus'd to come to his Parliament; for from those, who were present, he had little or no opposition. But they answer'd again by their Letters, "that it was not in the Power of the French King to acquit them of "their Resort to his Court; for the Prelates and Barons of the Cities and Good Towns "of Gascogne, would never have suffer'd it, nor ever will they, if it were to do again; "thô the Realm of France should remain in perpetual War thereby. Thus the Prince and the Lords of Gascogne maintain'd each their own several Opinions; but the latter abode still at Paris with the French King; such as the Earl of Armagnac, the Lord of Albret, the Earl of Perigort, the Earl of Cominges, the Vicount of Carmaine, the Lords of Cande, De la Barde, and Pincornet; all who made heavy Complaints to the King, "how "the Prince of meer Pride and Presumption would tread them under his Feet, and "raise new and unheard of Taxes upon their Lands, which they said, they would [f] Froiss. c.242. f.146. sed Gallicè f.199.

An. Dom. 1369. An. Regni Angliæ XLIII.

"never ſuffer, conſidering their Reſort was to the Chamber of France: Wherefore "they humbly deſired, that the Prince might be ſummon'd to make his Appearance in "the Parliament-Chamber before the Peers of France, there to Anſwer concerning "thoſe Grievances and Innovations, which he had began to exerciſe againſt them. The French King was not unwilling to entertain theſe Gaſcogners, who thus required Juſtice of him, as of their Sovereign Lord, leſt otherwiſe they ſhould ſeek for Redreſs in ſome other place, and ſo he ſhould for ever loſe the Sovereignty over them. And on this account he at laſt condeſcended to their Requeſt, thô half againſt his Will; for he could not but ſee, that an open War would enſue thereby, which he was very loath to move firſt, at leaſt without ſome plauſible Pretence. Beſides at that time he ſaw his Realm not a little moleſted with the Companions, and other Enemies; and alſo he conſider'd, that his Brother, the Duke of Berry, with many others, were ſtill Hoſtages in England: Wherefore he thought to deal wiſely, and get firſt his Hoſtages home, and be fully provided of all things, and to try the Hearts of the People thoroughly, before he could abſolutely reſolve to ſummon the Prince of Wales. And accordingly there were ſuch ſubtle devices uſed, that before any open Breach was made, moſt of the Hoſtages got out of King Edward's Power, as we ſhall ſee hereafter. Particularly, Prince John [g] Duke of Berry, having received a private hint of theſe Matters, obtain'd of King Edward to return into France, and there to recreate himſelf among his Friends and Relations for the ſpace of One Year; but he order'd his Affairs ſo cunningly by his frequent excuſes and the like, that he drove off the time, till the War was open; and then he thought himſelf freed from all obligations of Returning. And the Lord Guy of Luxemburgh, Earl of St. Pol made ſhift by much ſubtlety to get into France without taking his leave of King Edward. This Man was an Implacable Enemy to the Engliſh Nation, ſo that he could neither endure to hear, nor ſpeak a good Word of them; and now he urged on King Charles, as much as he could, to take the Gaſcogne Lords into his Protection; for he verily believed, that if once the Prince of Wales ſhould be ſummon'd, a War would moſt certainly enſue. And to this Opinion of the Earl of St. Pol agreed ſeveral of the Chief Prelates, Earls, Barons, and Knights of France, who added, how the King of England had not truly kept the Peace, to which he had ſworn and ſealed, according to the Tenor of the Treaty made at Bretigny, near Chartres, and afterwards confirmed at Calais. For they ſaid, it was manifeſt, how the Engliſh had hated and moleſted the Realm of France more, ſince the Peace was made, than ever they had done before. "And Sir (ſaid they) what We now "averr, You ſhall find to be true, if it will pleaſe You to cauſe the Charters of the Peace "to be inſpected and read before You; even ſuch, as the King of England and the Prince "his Son, are by Faith and Oath obliged to perform. Hereupon King Charles, to be the better enformed of all the Truth, and that he might not ſuffer any Encroachment upon the Rights of his Realm, cauſed all the Charters of the Peace to be brought into the Council-Chamber, and heard them read over more than once, the better to conſider and weigh the Point and Articles therein compriſed. Among others there was found One Letter, on which the King and Council ſtood moſt, becauſe it ſeem'd to ſpeak more clearly and plainly of what they now look'd for, the Tenor whereof ran thus, viz.

[g] Froiſ. c. 244.

"EDWARD, by the Grace of God, King of England, Lord of Ireland, and Duke "of Aquitaine, to all, who ſhall ſee theſe preſent Letters, Greeting. Know, that in "the final and laſt Accord and Peace made between Us and our Right Dear Brother, the "French King, are contained two Articles, compriſed in the form following.

"The Firſt, Where it is ſaid, how the foreſaid Kings are bound to cauſe to be con-"firmed all the ſaid Articles, compriſed in the Peace by the Biſhop of Rome, they "to be deliver'd from the Court of Rome, confirmed by Sentence, touching the "full Perfection and Accompliſhment of this preſent Treaty unto each of the ſaid "Parties, at leaſt within three Weeks, after the French King ſhall be arrived at Ca-"lais: and alſo, how to the intent, that theſe Articles and Treaties paſſed, may be "more firm and ſtable, there ſhall be made certain Bonds, and deliver'd, as followeth; "that is to ſay, Letters ſealed with the Seals of both the Kings and their Eldeſt Sons, "ſuch as ſhould be deviſed by the Councils of both the Kings. And alſo the ſaid "Kings and their Children, and others of the Prime Nobility, to the Number of Thirty "on either Part, ſhould ſwear, that they would ſtrictly obſerve, and cauſe to be ob-"ſerved to their Power, all the ſaid Articles, accorded and agreed on, and perform the "ſame without fraud or deceit. And alſo, that both the Kings and all their Friends "and Allies ſhould do their utmoſt, to bring all Rebels to Obedience, according to

"the

"the form and true Intent of the Peace: And alſo that both the Kings ſhould ſub- AN. DOM.
"mit themſelves and their Realms to the Correction of the Biſhop of Rome, to the end, 1369.
"that he ſhould oblige by Eccleſiaſtical Cenſures thoſe, who ſhould otherwiſe refuſe to An. Regni "comply with this Peace and Accord. And further both the Kings and their Heirs by Oath Angliæ
"and Promiſe ſhould renounce all Graces and Abſolutions of any thing herein agreed XLIII.
"to by them. And thô by Diſobedience, Rebellion, or Force of any of the Subjects "of the French King, the ſaid King ſhould be hindred from performing all the ſaid "Articles, yet neither ſhall the King of England, nor his Heirs for all that make any "War upon the Realm of France; but both Kings ſhall joyn together to bring thoſe "Rebels to Obedience, and to acquieſce in the ſaid Peace and Concord. And thô the "Subjects of the King of England ſhould refuſe to yield up any Towns, Caſtles, or "Fortreſſes, which they held in the Realm of France, and which by reaſon of the Peace
"ought to be deliver'd, or what any other Cauſe ſhould hinder, that the King of Eng- "land could not perform what he ought, by reaſon of this Treaty, to perform, yet the "King of France ſhall not make War therefore upon the Dominions of the King of "England; but both the Kings ſhall joyn together to reduce thoſe Rebels to Obedi"ence, and by force to recover ſuch Towns, Caſtles and Fortreſſes, and to deliver them "to whom they ought to be deliver'd. And of this there ſhould be made Obliga"tions and Bonds as ſure and perfect, as can be deviſed, as well by the Biſhop of Rome and "the College of Cardinals, as by others.

There was alſo another Article in the ſame Treaty, which ran thus, "Item, In to"ken and perfect Aſſurance, that We deſire and intend to have, and to nouriſh per"petual Peace and Love between Us and our Brother of France, We ſhall renounce, "and by theſe Preſents do renounce, all Graces, and other Proceſs of Deed againſt our
"ſaid Brother, his Heirs and Succeſſors of the Realm of France, and Subjects thereof,
"and do promiſe, ſwear, and have ſworn on the Body of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, for "Us and for our Heirs and Succeſſors, not to do, nor ſuffer to be done, either by Word "or Deed any thing againſt this Renuntiation, or againſt any thing contained in the "foreſaid Articles: And if We do, or ſuffer to be done the Contrary any manner of "way, (which God forbid) then We will, that We be reputed for falſe and forſworn,
"and incurr ſuch blame and infamy, as a King Sacred ought to incurr in ſuch a Caſe.
"And We poſitively Renounce all Diſpenſations and Abſolutions of the Pope, and if "any be obtained, We will, that they ſtand for nought, be of no force, nor avail Us in "any manner of caſe. And the more firmly to uphold the ſaid Articles, We herein
"ſubmit our ſelves, our Heirs and Succeſſors, to the Juriſdiction and Correction of the "Church of Rome, and Will and Conſent, that the Biſhop of Rome confirm all the ſaid "Treaty, and ordain Monitions and General Commands againſt Us, our Heirs and Suc-
"ceſſors, and againſt our Subjects, Commons, Univerſities, Colleges, or any other Bo"dies Politick, or ſingle Perſons, whatſoever they be, in giving Sentence General of "Excommunication, Suſpenſion, or Interdiction, to run upon Us, or any of them, as "ſoon as We, or They, ſhall do, or attempt any thing againſt the ſaid Treaty, in occu"pying, or withholding any Towns, Caſtles or Fortreſſes, or any other thing doing, Ra"tifying, or giving Counſel, Comfort, Favour, or Aid, privily or apertly, againſt any "of the ſaid Articles. And further, We have cauſed our Moſt Dear Eldeſt Son Ed- "ward Prince of Wales, to ſwear unto the ſame; and alſo our Younger Sons, Lionel
"Earl of Ulſter, John Earl of Richmond, and Edmund of Langley; together with "our Right Dear Couſin, Philip of Navarre, and the Dukes of Lancaſter and of Bre-
"tagne, the Earls of Stafford and Saliſbury, the Captal of Buſche, the Lord of Mon-
"ferrant, Walter Manny, James Audley, Roger Beauchamp, John Chandos, Ralph Fer-
"rers, Edward Spencer, Thomas Felton, William Felton, Euſtace Dambreticourt, Frank
"van Hall, John Mowbray, Bartholomew Burwaſh, Henry Piercy, and divers others; and
"alſo, as ſoon as We can conveniently, We ſhall cauſe to ſwear, all our other Children, "and the Major part of the great Prelates, Earls, Barons, and other Nobles of our "Realm of England. In Witneſs whereof We have put our Seal to theſe Preſents;
"Given at our Town of Calais, the 24 day of October, in the Year of Grace MCCCLX.

Among many other Writings that had been made, as well at Bretigny near Chartres, as at Calais, when King John was there, this ſaid Chapter being one, was chiefly now inſiſted on, and was well read and examin'd by King Charles in preſence of his Council; and after they had ſpent their Thoughts thereon, then the Prelates and Barons of France ſaid unto him, "Sir, it is moſt evident, that the King of England and his Son
"the Prince, have not duly kept the ſaid Peace, but have taken Towns and Caſtles, and "do ſtill hold them to the infinite Dammage of this your Realm; and they Ranſom and

An. Dom. 1369. An. Regni Angliæ XLIII.

"Pillage your People, becauſe the Money for the King your Fathers Redemption is yet "in part unpaid. Wherefore Sir, You and your Subjects have good Right and juſt "Cauſe to break the Peace, and to make War againſt England, and to endeavour to "take out of their hands all that they hold on this ſide the Water. Alſo certain of his Council adviſed him ſecretly upon mature Deliberation, "Sir, boldly undertake this "War, for there is good Reaſon You ſhould ſo do: For as ſoon as ever You have once o- "pen'd the War, you ſhall ſee and find, that all the Dutchy of Aquitain will turn to "your ſide, as well Prelates, Barons, Earls, Knights and Eſquires, as the Burgeſſes of "the Good Towns. You may ſee Sir, how the Prince would have proceeded in raiſing of his "Foüage, but he cannot bring his purpoſe about, and yet thereby he hath loſt the Hearts of "all Men, for thoſe of Poictou, Rochellois, Sainctogne, Quercy, Limoſin and Rou- "vergue are of ſuch a Nature, that they can by no means love the Engliſhmen, nor the "Engliſhmen them (they are ſo proud and preſumptuous) nor never did. And beſides "all this the Princes Officers commit ſuch Extortion among the People of Sainctogne, Poi- "ctou and Rochellois (for they take all at Random) and raiſe ſo much in the Prince's "Name, that no Man is ſure of any thing that is his own. And further the Gentry "and Chief Men of the Country are diſguſted, becauſe they can attain to no Office of "Dignity or Profit: For the Engliſhmen and the Prince's Servants run away with all. By ſuch Words as theſe was the French King encouraged to begin the War, and eſpecially he was inſtigated and moved thereto by his Brother the Duke of Anjou, who lay at Tholouſe, wiſhing nothing more than to ſee the War open. For he could never endure the Engliſhmen, becauſe of ſuch Diſpleaſures as they had done Him and His formerly. And frequently the Gaſcogne Lords would ſay to the King, "Moſt Dear Sir, "We are obliged to have our Reſort in your Court, wherefore we all humbly require, that "you would pleaſe to do us Right and Law, and as you are the moſt Juſt Prince in the "World, let us have Juſtice againſt the great Extortions, Grievances and Oppreſſi- "ons, that the Prince of Wales and his Men have and would put upon us. For Sir, "if you refuſe to do thus much for us, we muſt then ſeek ſome other Remedy elſewhere, "and ſhall be obliged to yield and ſubmit our ſelves to the Juriſdiction of ſuch a Lord, "as ſhall ſee We have Reaſon done us: Whereby you will loſe your Sovereignty over us "for ever. The French King, who was extream loath to let them part (as alſo he was doubtfull of embracing their Intereſt) knowing that by them his Realm would receive much Strength and Advantage, anſwer'd theſe Complainants very courteouſly; "Surely Gentlemen (ſays he) for want of Love and good Counſel you ſhall not "need to make your Reſort to any other Court, but only to Ours: But yet in a matter "of this Conſequence we ought to move with much Caution and Deliberation. And thus the King drove them off for the ſpace of well-nigh a Year, but kept them ſtill with him at Paris, and paid for all their Expences, and gave them many Rich Gifts and Jewels. And ſtill he ſet men ſecretly to enquire among them, as it were of their own Heads, what they would really do, if the Peace were once broken between England and France, whether they would ſtand firm to the latter or no. And they always re- "ply'd, "That if the War were once open, the French King ſhould not need to trouble him- "ſelf about any ſuch thing: For they ſaid, they themſelves were ſtrong enough to ma- "nage the War againſt the Prince and all his Power; and that when once they were own'd "by the King of France, they would like good Subjects live and die in his Quarrel. Beſides all theſe Conferences, which that Wiſe Prince held, before he would venture upon a Breach of the Peace, he tamper'd alſo ſecretly with many others of other Parts, that were then under the Engliſh Dominion; as particularly with the Burgeſſes of Abbeville, a ſtrong and fair City of Ponthieu in Picardy, to ſift out whether or no on ſuch an Occaſion they would admit of the French Government; and they anſwer'd, how they deſired nothing ſo much in all the World, if they durſt, they hated the Engliſh ſo mortally. Thus the French King cunningly gat him Friends on all hands, or elſe he durſt never have done what he did: For he knew it was no ſmall matter to hold War againſt King Edward, and his Son the Prince of Wales, who had put his Father and Grandfather to ſo much Trouble. And for theſe his Fine Dealings he obtain'd of the French Nation the Title of Charles le Sage, or the Wiſe, thô ſurely the Title of his Father was more worthy of a Chriſtian Monarch, for that was le Bon, the Good. A little before this, namely [h] on the 3d of December in the preceding Year, being the firſt Sunday in Advent, was born unto King Charles of France his Eldeſt Son Charles, who was baptiſed by that Name on the Wedneſday following, being the 6 of December, and the Feaſt of St. Nicolas the Biſhop and Confeſſor, in the Church of St. Paul, near Paris. And within a few Days after was born unto the Lord of Albret his Eldeſt Son [h] Labbe Chron. Techn. ad ann. 1368.

Son alſo: At the Birth of which Two, who were Coſen Germans, all the Realm of France rejoyced, but eſpecially the King himſelf. AN. DOM. 1369.

V. Thus the French [1] King being on all hands urged and perſwaded, did at laſt ſuffer Letters of Citation to be framed, therewith to ſummon the Prince of Aquitain forthwith to make his Perſonal Appearance before Him in his Chamber of Peers, to anſwer to the Complaints there to be made againſt him. And this Letter was principally deviſed by the Earl of Armagnac, the Lord of Albret, the Earl of Perigort, the Earl of Cominges, the Vicount of Carmain, the Lord de la Barde, the Lord of Pincornet, and the reſt of the Malecontents of Gaſcogne, who had been the principal Occaſion of all this. And when the Letter of Summons was drawn up, and duly corrected by all the Greateſt Heads in France, then it was concluded by the King and his Council, that it ſhould be ſent unto the Prince without any more ado. And two Perſons were pitch'd upon to execute this Office, the one named Bernard Pelot, who was Judge Criminal of Tholouſe, and the other a Knight of Beauſſe, called Sr. John Chapponeau. Which two with their Servants departed accordingly from Paris, and took their way toward Poictou, and ſo paſſed thrô Tourain, Poictou and Saincſtogne, till they came to Blaye, where they croſſed the Garonne, and ſo proceeded to Bourdeaux, where at that time the Prince and Princeſs held their Court. And ſtill in all Places where they came, they declared, how they were Meſſengers from the French King, upon which account they gain'd the better Welcome every where. Being come to Bourdeaux they took up their Lodgings for that Night, and the next Morning at a convenient Hour went to the Abby of St. Andrews, where the Prince kept his Court, and were received handſomly. When the Prince heard, that Meſſengers from the French King were arrived at his Court, he cauſed them to be brought before him: And they being come into his Preſence kneeled down to pay their Reverence, and ſo deliver'd unto him firſt their Credentials. The Prince having read theſe Letters ſaid, "Gentlemen, You are welcome! "Let us now know the buſineſs, you are charged with unto Us. Then the Doctor began, "Right Dear Sir, here is another Letter, which being deliver'd unto us at Paris "by our Lord the French King, we promiſed on our Allegiance to publiſh openly in your "preſence; For Sir, they concern your Perſon nearly. At this the Prince began to change Colour, as wondring what the Matter might be (as alſo did all the other Lords and Knights that were about him) nevertheleſs He refrained Himſelf and ſaid, "Speak "on Sirs, what you have to ſay! Good Tidings We would be glad to hear. Hereupon the Doctor took the Writing forth, and began to read it aloud, and diſtinctly word for word, this being the [k] Tenor thereof, viz.

"CHARLES, by the Grace of God King of France, to our Nephew the Prince of Wales "and of Aquitain, Greeting. Whereas divers Prelates, Barons, Knights, Univerſities, "and Colleges of the Marches and Limitations of the Country of Gaſcogne, dwelling and in- "habiting on the Borders of our Realm, with ſeveral others of the Country and Dutchy "of Aquitain, have withdrawn themſelves unto Us in our Court, to have Right of cer- "tain Grievances and undue Moleſtations, which You by weak Counſel and ſlight Infor- "mation have purpoſed to do unto them; and at which thing we are ſurpriſed with won- "der: To obviate therefore and remedy the ſaid Matters, We [l] are ſo ſtrictly engaged "unto them, that by our Majeſty Royal and Sovereignty, We command You to come to "our City of Paris in proper Perſon, and there to ſhew and preſent Your Self before "Us in our Chamber of Peers, to hear Right concerning the ſaid Complaints and Griefs "moved by You, to do upon your People, who claim to have and to hear Reſort in our "Court; And that herein there be no fail, but that it be done as ſpeedily as you can, "after ſight of theſe Letters. In witneſs whereof We have ſet our Seal to theſe Pre- "ſents. Given at Paris the Twenty fifth Day of the Month of January. When the Prince had heard and ſeen theſe Letters, he was horribly incenſed, and ſhook his Head for Anger, and beheld the Frenchmen with Eyes flaming with Fury, and having paused a little to correct his Paſſion ſomewhat, he returned this Anſwer, "Gentlemen, "We will gladly go to Paris to our Uncle, ſince he hath thus handſomly invited Us, but "I'll aſſure you, that ſhall be with Helmet on our Head, and ſixty thouſand Men in our "Company. At this the two Frenchmen kneeling down in great Fear ſaid, "Ah! "Thrice Dear Sir, for Godſake refrain your Anger, and take not this Summons in ſuch "evil part, neither be diſpleaſed at us: Sir, we are but Servants ſent by our Lord the "French King, whom we are bound to obey, as your Subjects in like manner ought to "obey You. And as it was our Duty to obey his Commands, ſo Sir, whatſoever you ſhall "pleaſe to give us in Charge to ſay, we will fully declare it unto the King our Lord and "Maſter. Nay (ſaid the Prince) Sirs, I am not diſpleaſed with you, but with them "that

[1] Froiſ. c. 243.

[k] Froiſ. c. 243. f. 147. b. & Du Cheſne l. 15. p. 699. D.

[l] Nous nous ſommes ahers & aher dons avec eux.

An. Dom. 1369. An. Regni Angliæ XLIII.

"that have ſent you hither. And the King your Maſter is lead by weak Counſel and "ſimple Information, thus to offer to combine himſelf with our Subjects, or to make him- "ſelf a Judge, where he hath nothing to do by any manner of Right or Title. For it ſhall "be evidently ſhew'd, that in the Rendring up, and putting the King my Father into "Poſſeſſion of the Dutchy of Aquitain, both his Father and He, for Them and their Heirs "for ever, utterly diſclaimed and quitted all manner of Reſort or Juriſdiction, So that "thoſe who have occaſion'd this Summons to be made againſt me, have no other Reſort "of Right, but in the Court of England before the King my Dear Father, and before it "ſhall be otherwiſe, I aſſure you it ſhall coſt the Lives of an 100000 Men. And with that the Prince flung away into another Room, and left the Frenchmen ſtill there, to whom certain of the Prince's Servants, who underſtood his Pleaſure, came and ſaid, "Gentlemen, you may e'n go about your buſineſs when you pleaſe: You have duly performed "your Errand: But you are to look for no other Anſwer than what you have heard. With that the Knight and the Doctor went to their Inn, and having there dined, made ready their Carriages in all haſt, and took Horſe with all their Servants, and went from Bourdeaux the way to Tholouſe-ward, for they deſign'd to ſhew the Duke of Anjou what they had ſeen and done. The Prince was extreamly diſpleaſed at the Inſolence of theſe Summons, and ſo were all the Lords and Knights of his Council, moſt of whom had adviſed Him to hang the two Meſſengers for their Pains, thô the Prince charged them to the contrary; and yet he had many a ſhrew'd Imagination againſt them. But when it was told him, how that they were gone without any other Licence then what was given by word of Mouth, and how they took their way toward Tholouſe, he called unto him Sr. Thomas Felton Seneſchal of Aquitain, and Sr. Thomas Wake Seneſchal of Rouvergue, his Chancellor the Biſhop of Rodez, Sr. Richard Pontchardon, and Sr. Thomas Percy, of whom he demanded, whether the French Meſſengers had any ſafe Conduct or no; and they anſwer'd, how they knew of none they had. "No more have they (ſaid the Prince ſhaking his Head) but ſure it is not con- "venient, that they ſhould thus eaſily get off, and go and make their jangling to the "Duke of Anjou, who is but a ſmall Friend of ours, and will laugh heartily, that they "have thus ſummon'd Us in our own Houſe. I believe, all things conſider'd, they are rather "Meſſengers from my own Subjects, as the Earl of Armagnac, the Lord of Albret, the Earl "of Perigort, Cominges and Carmain, than from the French King. Wherefore becauſe of "the ſignal Affront that hath been put upon Us, We wiſh they were overtaken and clapt up "in priſon. At this Motion all the Prince's Council were well pleaſed, only they ſaid, "Sir, we fear You have been too ſlow as to this Reſolve. Immediately the Seneſchal of Agenois was commanded to take along with him Sr. William Molineux a Worthy Engliſh Knight, and ſo ride Poſt after the French Meſſengers, and ſtop them till further Order. Theſe two and certain of their Men took Horſe accordingly, and purſued ſo diligently, that at laſt they overtook them in the Land of Agenois, and ſo arreſted them, pretending another Occaſion; for when they ſeized them, they ſpake not a word of the Prince's Command, but ſaid, how their Hoſt, where they lay laſt, complained of them for an Horſe, which he ſaid they had changed. The Knight and the Doctor wonder'd much at this Accuſation, and began ſeriouſly to excuſe themſelves, but all in vain, for they were preſently brought back to the City of Agen, and there clapt up in Priſon. But ſeveral of their Servants were ſuffer'd to go their way, who paſſing thrô the City of Tholouſe, told the Duke of Anjou of all that was done. At which he was not a whit ſorry: For he knew, that from hence another Occaſion of Hatred and Diſſenſion being given, things would at laſt be brought to Extremity; and accordingly he prepared for War, thô with all the Caution and Diſſimulation imaginable.

Certain of theſe Pages ſoon after went to Paris and told the French King of all the Premiſes, whereat he took great Indignation, eſpecially when he heard the Words, wherewith the Prince had threatned him, ſaying, "how he would come and make his Per- "ſonal appearance before his Uncle; but that ſhould be with his Helmet on his Head, and "60000 Men at his Heels. To withſtand all which, the French King made covertly vaſt preparation; for he well knew, it was no light Matter to wage War againſt the King of England and his Power: Seeing in times paſt he had put his Predeceſſors to ſo much pain and difficulty. Upon which account he was at firſt ſo backward to begin the War; but he was ſo importun'd by the Lords of Gaſcogne, and alſo hardly preſt by many of his own Council, who ſhew'd unto him the Extortions and other frequent Oppreſſions of the Engliſh, and that they were dayly like to grow more inſupportable, as likewiſe, that King Edward was in his Declining Age, and his Son, the Prince, ſick of an Incurable Diſeaſe; that at laſt he yielded to the War, thô much againſt his Will, conſidering the Deſtruction of many thouſand poor ſouls, which he ſaw, would neceſſarily enſue thereby. AN. DOM. 1369. An. Regni Angliæ XLIII.

rable

Upon this he ventur'd firſt to ſend his Summons, which every Man knew would never be obey'd, but would occaſion a Breach of the Peace between the two Realms: And now becauſe of this fierce Anſwer of the Prince, King Charles and his Council made vaſt preparation, but as ſecretly as was poſſible: Thô for all his fine Conveyance, the Prince of Wales, who ever had his Eyes open toward that Quarter, ſince the Lords of Gaſcogne had been entertain'd in the Court of France; ſaw all along the cloſe train of theſe ſubtle Devices, and [m] ſent in good time his Letters to his Father into England, warning him "not to give too much Credit to any ſmooth Words or fair Overtures of "the French King, for he ſaw evidently, that he intended nothing but a Breach of the "Peace, and only had not yet begun the War for want of a fit opportunity. But King Edward could not think, that Charles, [n] who was no Man of his Hands, durſt ever preſume to defie him, who had obtain'd ſo many Victories againſt him and his Anceſtors, and he alſo believed, that the late Peace had been ſo ſolemnly confirmed, as to be inviolable with all thoſe, who had not quite abandon'd all ſenſe both of Honour and Religion. But eſpecially he was perſwaded by many of his Council, that the Prince only ſpake theſe things of Prejudice, as Young, Bold and greedy of Arms, and impatient of Peace, and therefore had too freely taxed the French Kings Honour, becauſe he deſired nothing more than War, and an opportunity of entring into Action. Upon theſe accounts King Edward gave but ſmall Credit to his Sons Letters; eſpecially becauſe King Charles all the while with deſign nouriſhed Security in him; by making frequent Remonſtrances and Overtures, how to continue for ever their preſent good Correſpondence, and to cut off all occaſions of Complaints, Jealouſies, and Miſconſtructions for the future. For it was his Deſign to uſe theſe Cautious Methods, till by his Verbal Negotiations, his Enemies being rock'd aſleep, and his own Affairs grown ripe, he might by Degrees get the reſt of the Priſoners and Hoſtages at liberty, and then of a ſudden be ready to Bite, as ſoon as he ſhould threaten. And firſt, [o] John Duke of Berry, one of the Principal Hoſtages, made ſhift, as we intimated before, to depart as lightly, as his Brother, the Duke of Anjou, had done before him. For having the laſt Year obtained leave of King Edward to viſit his Friends in France for one whole Year, when once he ſaw the War open, he look'd upon himſelf as excus'd, notwithſtanding his Oath, from ever returning again. An Opinion directly contrary to that of the Generous Roman, Attilius Regulus, who voluntarily return'd himſelf into his Captivity, even when he knew Death and Torments were prepared for him, and thô in a time of War; becauſe his Ranſome was not paid. Earl John of Harcourt alſo found means to get out of England about the ſame time; King Edward granting him leave for certain Months, at the inſtant Requeſt of his Uncle, the Lord Lewis of Harcourt, who was then at liberty in Ponthieu, and was a Friend to the Prince. And this Earl Harcourt intended to keep Word with the King of England; but upon his Return he fell ſick and fortunately continued Ill, till the War was begun; ſo that He never rendred himſelf back again. The Lord Guy of Blois, who was then but a young Eſquire, and Brother to John Earl of Blois, had a more Honourable, free, and eaſie way, whereby he gat off. For when he ſaw the French King, for whom he was an Hoſtage, not at all to mind his Deliverance, he fell in Treaty with the Lord Ingleram de Coucy, Earl of Bedford, who having Married the Lady Iſabella, King Edward's Daughter, had upon that account an Annual Allowance out of England. And this Treaty was ſo menag'd between King Edward and his ſaid Son-in-Law on the One part, and the Lord John of Blois and his Brother Guy on the Other part, with the Conſent alſo of the French King; that the Earldom of Soiſſons was deliver'd up into the King of England's Hands, for him to give the ſaid Earldom to his Son-in-Law, the Lord of Coucy, in conſideration of which Gift, the Lord of Coucy ſhould acquit King Edward of 4000 l. Annual Penſion; which hitherto he had allow'd him. And when all theſe Covenants were made, engroſſed, and interchangeably deliver'd, the Young Lord Guy of Blois was wholly acquitted for ever. And as for the Earl of Alenſon, he alſo obtain'd Licence of King Edward to return into France for a certain time: But he made ſo many excuſes, that at laſt the War was begun, and ſo he never return'd into England; thô ſome are of Opinion, that at laſt he paid 30000 Franks to be wholly acquitted. Some two Years before, Lewis Duke of Bourbon, who was alſo one of the Hoſtages, gain'd ſuch Favour in the Eyes of King Edward, that he obtain'd his good leave to go and ſee his Friends in France for a while. Now it happen'd, that during his ſtay at Paris with [m] Walſing. hiſt. p. 177. n. 43.

[n] Mezeray p. 80.

[o] Froiſ. c. 244.

the

An. Dom. 1369. An. Regni Angliæ XLIII.

the French King, William Edington Biſhop of Wincheſter deceaſed; whereupon King Edward, deſigning to advance William of Wickham, who was then his Chaplain, as alſo his Principal Secretary and Keeper of the Privy Seal, unto that Dignity, wrote into France to this Duke of Bourbon, "deſiring him for his ſake to intercede with Pope Urban, to allow, that this his Chaplain, who had been already elected by the Prior and Convent, might be admitted Biſhop of Wincheſter, promiſing withall unto the Duke, to uſe him favourably as to the Buſineſs of his Ranſome, if he would ſtir effectually in this Matter. The Duke of Bourbon was overjoyed at the ſight of theſe Letters, and ſhew'd them to the French King, who advis'd him to apply himſelf immediately to the Pope about that Affair. Accordingly he went to Avignon, and obtain'd a Bull with a Grant of the Biſhoprick of Wincheſter for the ſaid Candidate; with which he return'd into France, and ſoon after into England, where he firſt treated with the King and his Council about his own Deliverance, before he would produce the Pope's Bull unto them. In ſhort, for the ſake of this Prieſt the Duke of Bourbon was wholly ſet free, paying only 20000 Franks, and William of Wickham was made Biſhop of Wincheſter, and ſoon after Lord Chancellor of England. This Great [p] Prelate new built the Body of Wincheſter Church, Founded New-College in Oxford, and that Glorious Seminary of Wincheſter-College. He alſo built a Chappel at Tichfield, and left many other Monuments of Piety behind him, being by his own Vertue and the King's Favour not meanly advanced; for beſides his being Lord Chancellor and Biſhop of Wincheſter, he is ſaid to have held in Commendum the Archdeaconry of Lincoln, the Provoſtſhip of Wells, the Parſonage of Manyhant in Devonſhire, and no leſs than 12 Prebends. Having ſued the Executors of his Predeceſſor for Dilapidations, he recover'd of them 1662 l. 10 s. beſides a 1556 Head of Great Cattle, 3876 Weathers, 4717 Ewes, 2521 Lambs, and 127 Swine; all which ſtock, it ſeems, belong'd to the Biſhoprick of Wincheſter at that time. But of his Family and Name, of his Riſe and Offices, of his Eminence and Buildings, and other Great Marks of his Munificence and Liberality, I am forbid in this place to ſpeak more largely by the Laws of Hiſtory; and therefore ſhall refer the Curious Reader to the ſeveral Authors above quoted, and to our Common Engliſh Chronicles. Where they will find in this Man a moſt Notable Inſtance of Providence, and a ſtrong Incentive to Induſtry, by beholding in him an Example to what Height of Eminence, Preferment, and Dignity, Laborious Vertue can aſcend, thô little advantaged by Birth or external Splendour: And alſo what an Excellent way thoſe Men take, as well of Inſtructing Poſterity, as of preſerving and embalming their own Names to future Generations, who by Charitably diſpoſing of the Goods of Fortune toward the Advancement of Piety, Learning, and Good Manners, treaſure up unto themſelves a Rich Reward both of Worldly Fame, and of Eternal Glory. But to return to our Purpoſe.

[p] De eo Vid. in Vitâ Gulielmi Wickhami à Tho. Marten Edit. Lond. 1597. & Chandler de Vitâ ejuſd. & Truſſel's Continuat. ad Daniel's hiſt. in Henr. IV. p. 77. ad An. 1404. & Anton. Wood Antiqu. Oxon. l. 2. p. 126. & Weevers Fun. Mon. & Godwin's Catal. Biſh. in Wincheſter, &c.

[q] Froiſſ. 245.

VI. While [q] thus Matters began apace to ripen towards a War, the Prince of Wales, who was fully reſolv'd to come Perſonally to Paris in the Head of a Great Army the next Summer, ſent word to all the Engliſh Captains and Gaſcogners, whom he knew his Friends, to be ready by ſuch a time to come to his Service; and alſo to thoſe Captains of the Companions, who came out of Spain, and were now about the River Loire, he ſent word, that they ſhould not leave thoſe Parts; becauſe he expected very ſhortly to find Work for them; of which News they were all very glad. But ſo it was, that this Great Soul, which us'd ſo well to inform theſe Warlike Bodies, began now to bend beneath his own Weight, and bore about him a Mortal War of his own; a certain Fatal Diſtemper, which ſome [r] ſay, was brought upon him by Charms and Incantations; others, that he contracted it firſt in Spain, either by reaſon of the Infection of that Air, or from ſome lingring Poiſon; which 'tis thought, that Perfidious and Ungrateſull Tyrant Don Pedro gave him for a Requital of that Crown, to which he had reſtored him. I know, there are ſome, who have not ſtuck to ſay, that this Poiſon was given him by his Brother John of Gaunt, ſo to make way for himſelf to come to the Crown: But ſurely at that time, when the Prince was laſt with John of Gaunt, Prince Lionel, an Elder Brother to John, was alive; and beſides, that the Prince had two Sons now living, the ſaid Lionel had a Daughter alſo; all who were before him, as to the Succeſſion. I cannot, nor dare, ſo readily admit Popular ſlanders againſt the Perſons of ſuch Noble Princes: But however it was, Prince Edward was by this time ſo reduced; that he could hardly endure to ride on Horſeback; whereat his Men were extreamly caſt down, and his Enemies took the greater Courage. For the French King was fully informed of his Diſtemper (however it came) and the Phyſicians and the Chirurgeons of France began already to pronounce boldly; that the Prince was ſick of an Incurable Dropſie.

[r] Du Cheſne ex Walſingh. ſed nil tale apud Walſ.

VII. Now

VII. Now when Sr. John Chapponeau and the Doctor were taken and arreſted by the Seneſchal of Agenois, and Sr. William Molineaux, and clap'd up in Priſon, as we ſhew'd before; the Gaſcogne Lords, upon whoſe account they ſuffer'd, as the Earl of Armagnac, the Lord of Albret, the Earl of Cominges, the Earl of Perigort, the Vicount of Carmain, the Lord Bertram of Cande, the Lord de la Barde, and the Lord of Pincornet, being now in their own Country, and hearing of this Arreſt of the Meſſengers, took it in horrible Diſdain; for in their Name, and for their cauſe were they ſent: Wherefore they all concluded to revenge it, as ſoon as they might, and to begin the War; for they ſaid, ſo great an Affront was not to be ſuffer'd. Within a while they underſtood, how Sr. Thomas Wake, the Seneſchal of Rouvergue, was to ride to Rodez, the Chief City of that Province, to ſtrengthen his Fortreſs there, and for that purpoſe on ſuch a Day to come with 60 Spears from Agenois: Upon this Information at the time appointed, they laid an Ambuſh of 300 Spears to make ſure of Sr. Thomas and his Company. But of all this the Seneſchal knew nothing; ſo that at the expected time he came riding on with 60 Spears and 200 Archers, till a little beyond Molieres, he fell into the Ambuſh, which ſuddenly brake out upon him and preſently diſcomfited his Men, moſt whereof were ſlain, or taken; but [f] Du Cheſne ſpeaks too largely, when he ſays, that he and all his Men were cut in pieces: For many of his People, after the Civil Cuſtom of thoſe days, were taken to Ranſome, and he [t] himſelf by the Goodneſs of his Horſe eſcaped away alive, and got to the Caſtle of Montauban; and ſo the Gaſcogne Lords return'd home again for that time with their Priſoners. The Prince of Wales was then at Angouleſme, whither the News preſently flew, that his Seneſchal of Rouvergue was diſcomfited by the Earl of Perigort, and others, who had occaſion'd him ſo diſgracefully to be ſummon'd into the Court of France. He was highly diſpleaſed at the Report, and ſware, that it ſhould be dearly Revenged on thoſe, who had done him this ſignal Affront, and on their Lands and People. Then he wrote preſently to the moſt Valiant Lord John Chandos, who at that time reſided in Coutantine at St. Saviour le Vicount, commanding him immediately upon ſight of his Letters, to come unto him. Sr. John Chandos, who was always ready to obey, where it was his Duty, made all the Expedition imaginable, and came to Angouleſme to the Prince, who was very glad of his Arrival. Soon after the Prince ſent him with certain Troops of Men of Arms, and Archers to reinforce the Garriſon of Montauban, and thence to make War upon the Gaſcogners and Frenchmen, who dayly encreaſed, and overran his Lands. At his coming Sr. Thomas Wake left Montauban, and went, as before he had intended, to Rodez, and Victuall'd, and New-fortified the City and Caſtle, as alſo he did to the ſtrong City and Caſtle of Millaud on the Tarne, in the Marches of Mompellier in Languedoc; and in all places, where he ſaw moſt need, he ſet good ſtore of Archers and Men of Arms.

AN. DOM. 1369. AN. REGNI Angliæ XLIII.

[f] Du Cheſne P. 700.

[t] Froiſ. c. 246.

The mean while the Lord John Chandos lay at Montauban to keep the Marches and Frontiers there againſt the French, and with him were ſeveral other Great Lords and Captains, ſuch as the Prince had ſent thither along with him; namely, the moſt Noble and Warlike Lord John de Greilly, Captal of Buſche, the two Brethren of Pamiers, Sr. John and Sr. Henry, the Soldiche de L' Eſtarrac, the Lord of Partenay, the Lord of Pons, Lewis Earl of Harcourt, the Lord of Pinant, the Lord of Taniboton, Sr. Richard of Pontchardon. All which Lords and Knights made frequent Inroads into the Lands of the Earl of Armagnac, and of the Lord of Albret, who by Aid of other Lords of their Gang made ſhift to keep the Frontiers againſt them. So that ſometimes this ſide had the Advantage, and ſometimes the other, as evermore the adventures of War are various.

VIII. But all this while the ſubtle Duke of Anjou lay ſtill at Tholouſe, and made not the leaſt offer to ſtirr for any News that he heard, for ſo the King his Brother had ſtrictly charged him, by no means to make any War againſt the Prince, till he ſhould receive expreſs Order ſo to do. And all the while this Politick King was getting together good Captains and Souldiers in the moſt ſecret manner that it was poſſible; and particularly he wan to his ſide certain of the Companions, whom he ſent into the Marches of Berry and Auvergne, permitting them to live there upon the Country ſomething looſely, that they might not be ſuſpected for Friends, but withall he commanded them to make no War upon the Prince, till they had his expreſs Word for it. For he took all the Care in the world not to create the leaſt Suſpition, that he intended a War, till all his Deſigns againſt the Earldom of Ponthieu ſhould be ripe. Nor without cauſe: For if the King of England could but have gueſſed, that the French King would have broke the Peace, he could have very eaſily prevented the Loſſes, which he received afterwards in Ponthieu; and especially he would have made such good Provision for the City of Abbeville, and all the other Garrisons in that Country, that he should still have kept the Soveraignty thereof, maugre all the Power of France. And yet at that time the Seneschal of that County for King Edward was a Valiant English Gentleman, named Sr. Nicolas Louvain, who was in great Favour with the King his Master, as he well deserved: For he was so True, Loyal and Couragious, that he would rather have been drawn in pieces by wild Horses, than consent to any thing that might reflect upon his Faith and Honour. Yet not only he, but King Edward and all others were deceived at this time by the overreaching Devices of the French King, who the more to amuse King Edward, had a little before sent over the Earl of Salebruche, and Sr. William Dorman, to adjust Matters fully with him and his Council; and these Men the better to conceal the Malice they intended, complained of Wrongs done, as they said, unto them; for they declar'd unto the King and his Council, how on their Part the Peace was but slightly kept at the best, not only by reason of the War which the Companions, who were generally Subjects of England, had kept in France for about six whole Years, but also upon divers other Accounts, whereat the King their Master had no small cause to be disgusted. These Embassadors King Edward detain'd in England for about two Months, during which time (thô he expected to settle a right Understanding between the two Realms) they only made many frivolous Complaints to delay time, which almost tired the Kings Patience, but they were not much concerned at that, because they knew they did but follow the Commission they had from their Master. However they [w] made unto the King a Present of certain Vessels of Choice Wines and other Gifts from the French King, as a Token of his Brotherly Love and Good will. The mean while King Charles having understood for certain, that the Inhabitants of Abbeville were willing to own his Interest, and that the Wars were already open in Gascogne, and all his Friends stood ready to strike, as soon as ever they had the Word for it, resolved now to put things to the issue. Yet however, either being secure of the Advantage he had by taking this Start of King Edward, or desirous as far as he might, to avoid all Reproach, lest Posterity might cry shame of him, if he should invade any of the King of England's Lands, or the Prince's, without Defiance, he resolv'd by Advice of his Council, to send and defie the King of England and all his Adherents; and so he did by his Letters Sealed, which to his great reproach he gave to a mean Valet to carry. And yet before this, even while King Edward was giving his Audience of Leave to the French Ambassadors, he heard a Rumour, that the French King had sent Men of War into Ponthieu, and that he had notoriously broken the Peace by certain overt Acts of Hostility; whereupon in great Indignation he bad the Ambassadors get them Home with their Deceitfull Presents to their Deceitfull Master; and commanded them to tell him, how he detested from his Heart and Soul the dishonourable and unprincely Falseness which he had shewn: For which he doubted not, by the Grace of God, but to make him repent before long. Away went the Ambassadors with all speed, and at Dover they met with the Valet, who was come with the Defiance from France; the Substance whereof he secretly told them, as he was enjoyned to do, that they might make hast Home. But for all that they [x] were met with upon the Sea by some Men of War belonging to Calais, who knowing the War was already begun on that side by the Frenchmen, set upon them, and took away their Wines and other Presents, which King Edward had refused to accept, and brought them to Calais, the Earl of Salebruche and Sr. William Dorman escaping away to Boulogne.

An. Dom. 1369. An. Regni Angliæ XLIII.

[w] Walsing. hist. p. 177. & 178.

[x] Walsing. hist. p. 178. n. 10.

IX. A little before this the [y] Prince of Wales had sent Sr. Guischard Dangle to Rome, whither Pope Urban [z] was then gone for some while, to confer with his Holiness about certain Matters relating to Aquitain, and having found the Pope very complying in all his Concerns, about this time he returned homeward; when being upon the way he heard for certain, how the Gascogners and Frenchmen made War upon the Prince, and had already invaded the Principality. He was extreamly surprised at the News, and began to doubt how he should get home without being entrapped by his Enemies; however first he went to the Valiant and Noble Earl of Savoy, whom he found in the City of Pignerol in Piedmont, making War against the Marquess of Saluzzo. The Earl entertain'd Him and all his Company very honourably, and gave the Chief of them many rich Gifts, especially to Sr. Guischard Dangle, whom he respected more particularly for the sake of his Abilities in War, of which he had heard ample Commendations. Having here taken his leave, as he drew near to France, he heard more and more of the Difference between the Prince of Wales and the French King:

[y] Froiss. c. 246. fol. 149.

[z] Vid. Odor. Rainald. ad hunc ann. 1367. §. 2. &c.

King: So that he saw it impossible for him to return openly into Guienne, he was so generally known. Wherefore he gave the Charge of his Company to his Son-in-Law Sr. John of Issoire, and he himself, being disguised like a poor Priest in evil Habit, and on an old Hackney, took another way, and so at last with much adoe came safe to Angoulesme to the Prince, who received him with much joy. AN. DOM. 1369. An. Regni Angliæ XLIII.

But 'tis now time to return to this French Valet, who after the departure of the Earl of Salebruche and Dr. William Dorman out of England, rode strait for London: Where understanding, that the King was then holding his Parliament at Westminster, he obtained to be admitted into the Painted-Chamber, where then the King sat with the Chief Lords of his Council. Before whom, having declared, that he was an Esquire sent from the French King with Letters to the King of England, he kneeled down to the King and deliver'd him the Letters. The Valet being then dismist, the King, who was very desirous to hear News from France, especially to know the Purport of these Letters, caused them immediately to be open'd and read. All that were present wondred extreamly, when they heard the Defiance, and saw the Seal and other sufficient Marks of its Authority: But King Edward was mightily astonished, that a Prince who was no [a] Man of his Hands, should ever dare to defie Him, and admired whence this strange Confidence should arise; little thinking what crafty Measures had been taken, while he was lull'd asleep by their subtle Overtures. However for the present he gave order to tell the Valet, how he had perform'd his Duty very punctually, and might now e'n go about his Business, for he should have no hindrance at all. But both the King and his Council took it in great Indignation, that so mean a Fellow should be sent with this Defiance, and they all agreed, "That it was neither Reason nor Deco-"rum, that a War between two such Princes, as the King of England and the French "King, should be published by a contemptible Valet: It was more fitting to have been done by the hands of some Eminent Prelate, or some Valiant Man, either a Baron or a Knight at least. And indeed this Indignity put upon so Great a Monarch, was not well resented by many, that were Friends to France; but the French Ambassadors [b] excused it to the Pope and to the Emperour, that therefore their King chose to make his Defiance unto the King of England by Letters, because he was but a Vassal unto France for the Lands of Aquitain and Poictou. However King Edward, who own'd no such Matter, as knowing himself Absolute Lord of those Countries by the Tenor of the Peace, took this Affront in great Despite: But now it was past, and no Remedy could be had. Wherefore the Lords advised the King to send forthwith a Considerable Army into Ponthieu to keep the Frontiers there, and especially to take Care of the good City of Abbeville, which they knew to be in great Danger of loosing. This Motion the King approved of, and presently appointed the Lord Henry Percy, the Lord Ralph Nevil, the Lord William Windsor, and one Lord more to go thither with 300 Men of Arms, and a 1000 Archers in their Company. But as these Lords made themselves ready with all the Expedition imaginable, and were even now at Dover ready to cross the Seas, there came other News into England. For the French King had play'd his Cards too sure to be baffled now, so that as soon as by all likelihood it might be conjectur'd, that King Edward had received the Defiance, Guy Earl of St. Paul, and Sr. Hugh de Chastillon Master of the Crossbows of France, drew toward the Parts of Ponthieu, having secretly sent Command to all the Lords, Knights and Esquires of Artois, Hainalt, Cambresis, Picardy and Vermandois, such as were their Friends, to come to them immediately. Wherefore being of a suddain reinforced with above sixscore Spears, they came to Abbeville early in the Morning, as they had determin'd before by private Agreement with the chief Burgesses, and finding the Gates ready open for them, went in directly without the least Opposition, not doing any harm or violence in the World. But Sr. Hugh de Chastillon one of the chief Leaders, marched straight forward without any noise, and surprised Sr. Nicolas Louvain the Seneschal of Ponthieu, and together with him the Treasurer of Ponthieu, a Valiant Gentleman, thô of the Clergy. Thus the Frenchmen took many a Rich Prisoner with ease, and the Englishmen lost all that ever they had in the City of Abbeville. That same Day another Party of Frenchmen ran up to St. Valery and Crotoy, and enter'd both Places, and took them, together with another Town on the Sea side called Noyelle sur Mer. A little after the Earl of St. Paul with another Party went to Pont de Remy on the Soame, whither certain English had withdrawn themselves. The Earl assaulted them briskly, and was well received by the Defendants, so that a fierce and notable Skirmish arose, at which time the Earl Knighted his Eldest Son Valeran, who shewed that Day by his Exploits how worthy he was of that Honour. In short, the English being both too inconsiderable in Number, and alſo ſurpriſed were put to the Worſe, being all either routed, ſlain or taken, together with the Town and Fortreſs. And thus in a manner all the Country and Earldom of Ponthieu was of a ſudden cleared of the Engliſh, ſo that they were now no more Formidable in thoſe Parts.

[a] Mezeray p. 80.

[b] Dinothi Adversf. p. 278.

An. Dom. 1369. An. Regni Angliæ XLIII.

Now there were ſtill in England ſundry of the French Hoſtages, as the Earl Dauphin of Auvergne, the Earl of Porcien, the Lord of Roye, the Lord of Mauliverer and divers Others, beſides moſt of thoſe of the Good Towns of France, who were all much troubled when they heard of the Defiance; but now when News was brought, how all Ponthieu was revolted, overrun and conquer'd, they were in a wofull Taking, not knowing what King Edward would do with them in ſuch a Caſe. And ſurely when He heard the News from Ponthieu he was horribly incenſed, that the Country had ſo treacherouſly revolted from him, and had many an Hard Thought againſt the French Hoſtages, who remained ſtill with him at London. But yet he conſider'd with Himſelf, how it would be but fruitleſs Cruelty, and a ſign of Irrational Revenge to wreak his Diſpleaſure upon them: Wherefore he only reſolved to keep them ſhorter of their Liberty, and not permit them to take their pleaſure as formerly; and ſo he ſent the Burgeſſes of the Cities and Towns of France into divers ſtrong Fortreſſes about in ſeveral parts of England. Nevertheleſs the Earl Dauphin of Auvergne he releaſed for a Ranſom of 30000 Franks, and the Earl of Porcien for 10000. But the Lord of Roye could not be admitted to any Ranſom: For he was not at all beloved either by the King or any of his Court; wherefore he was ſtill detain'd a Priſoner in great fear and ſorrow, till by good Fortune he alſo happen'd to be delivered, as we ſhall ſhew hereafter.

[c] Froiſs. 248.

X. When the King of England [c] ſaw, that he was not only Defied by the French King, but had alſo actually loſt the greater Part of Ponthieu, for the ſafety whereof it had coſt him more than an 100000 Franks, beſides the Revenues which the Country yielded to his Exchequer, in repairing of Towns and Caſtles: He ſaw plainly, that it was high time to have an Eye on all Parts; for he found his Adverſary of France wanted no Cunning nor Induſtry whereby to oppoſe him. And he heard particularly, how the Scots alſo had engaged againſt him in a new Alliance with the French King, and deſign'd to give him a Diverſion at the Back-door; Whereat he was grievouſly diſpleaſed, for he doubted the Scots more than the Frenchmen, not only becauſe they were a more implacable and obſtinate People, and kept their former Loſſes in mind; but alſo becauſe they were his near Neighbours, and could do him an Injury more eaſily, and eſcape Revenge more ſecurely. Wherefore firſt he ſent a conſiderable Number of Men of Arms, Archers and Others to the Frontiers of Scotland, as to Newcaſtle, to Cuerlile, to Barwick, to Roxborough and other Places. Beſides which he rigged forth a good Fleet, which was to ply about Southhampton, Jernſey and the Iſle of Wight. For he heard, how the French King was ſetting forth a great Navy to Sea, which was to come and invade England, or as others ſaid Ireland; wherefore thither alſo he was obliged to ſend no ſmall Reinforcement under the Command of the Lord William Windſor, [d] who being at the ſame time conſtituted Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, had in conſideration thereof for his better Support in the Kings Service, a Grant of a 1000 Marks per annum, to be paid him out of the Kings Exchequer, untill ſuch a time as the King ſhould ſettle upon him Lands and Rents of that Value for Him and his Heirs for ever, and immediatly thereupon he had a Grant of the Mannor and Caſtle of Dungarvan, as alſo the Caſtle called the Black-Caſtle, to Him and the Heirs of his Body. With him went in this Iriſh Expedition, [e] the Lord Thomas Fauconberg, and other Perſons of Rank and Conduct; for King Edward not knowing on which ſide the ſtorm would fall, was obliged to take Care on all Sides: Though indeed he himſelf was not without ſome anxious Thoughts, by reaſon of the unexpectedneſs of this Alarum.

[d] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 509. ex Pat. 43. Ed. 3. p. 1. m. 27.

[e] Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 4. ex Pat. 43. Ed. 3. p. 1. m. 32

But having thus for the preſent provided for all as well as he could, he calls together his High Court of Parliament, [f] which according to the Summons met at Weſtminſter in the Octaves of the Holy Trinity. At which time William of Wickham, Biſhop of Wincheſter and Lord Chancellor of England, declared in the Painted Chamber, in Preſence of the King, Lords and Commons, the Reaſons of their preſent Aſſembly, ſaying, "How the King had always in his greateſt Affairs uſed their Advice and "Counſel, and eſpecially in making the laſt Peace with the French, which was yet "made on Condition, that by ſuch a Day the French King ſhould ſurrender up unto him "certain Countries beyond the Seas, that within ſuch a time he ſhould pay unto the "King certain Sums of Money; and that he ſhould never pretend for the future to a[f] M.S. Rot. Par. p. 103. Sr. Rob. Cottons Abridg. p. 108.

ny

"ny Juriſdiction or Soveraignty over Gaſcogne or the Parts thereabouts; in Conſide- AN. DOM.
"ration whereof the King of England ſhould from thenceforth lay by the Stile of 1369.
"France, which he had accordingly done. That whereas he for his Part had not ſlack- An. Regni
"ed his Duty, the French King had done the quite Contrary: for neither had he made Angliæ
"a full and due Payment of the ſaid Monies; and alſo he had ſummon'd the Earl of XLIII.
"Armagnac, the Lord of Albret and Others, who were of the Kings Allegiance, to Franciæ
"anſwer to certain Appeals at Paris; nay further, he had ſummon'd the Prince of A- XXX.
"quitain himſelf (who was alſo of the Kings Allegiance) to appear among the Reſt.
"Beſides all which he had ſent certain Troops into Ponthieu, where he had ſurpriſed
"ſeveral of the Kings Garriſons and Forts: Whereupon the Prince of Wales and of "Aquitain, by Advice of his Council had ſent to the King his Father, wiſhing him to "Reſume the Title and Stile of France. And therefore the Chancellor deſired the "Lords and Commons to take Counſel in the Matter, and to adviſe the King to the "beſt of their Power about the Premiſes. Then there were appointed Receivers of Petitions for England, Ireland, Wales and Scotland, and alſo for Guſcogne, and other Foreign Places and Iſles, and after that Triers of the ſaid Petitions for all the ſaid Places. On the Wedneſday after, the Biſhops, Lords and Commons anſwered the King with one Conſent, "That conſidering the Premiſes, He might with a Good Conſci-
"ence take up again the Stile and Name of King of France, and uſe his Arms as "before.

Accordingly the King at that inſtant took upon him the Name, Stile and Dignity of France, and on the Eleventh Day of June, being a Monday and St. Barnabas Day, his Seal of England being ſafely laid up, another Seal engraven with the Stile and Arms of France was taken and uſed, and ſeveral Patents, Charters and Writs therewith ſealed, and the ſame Day all the Kings other Seals were Changed, one [g] being circumſcribed with the Word Franciæ in the firſt Place, and the other with Angliæ, as at the Beginning. From which Time even to this Day, the Kings of England his Succeſſors, continue their Arms Quarter'd with France, in token of that Right, to which King Edward ſo juſtly now renew'd his Claim.

[g] Aſhmole p. 665.

After this, upon a full Account given of the Kings great Neceſſities, the Lords and Commons granted unto him for Three Years following, of Denizens for every Sack of Wooll Fourty Three Shillings Four Pence, of every Twenty Dozen of Fells Fourty Three Shillings Four Pence, and of every Laſt of Skins Four Pounds. But of Aliens for every Sack of Wooll Fifty Three Shillings Four Pence, of every Twelveſcore Fells as much, and of every Laſt of Skins Five Pounds Six Shillings Eight Pence, over and above the Old Cuſtoms.

Then it was Enacted, That all the Kings Forts and Fortreſſes ſhould be ſurveyed, repaired and edified: And it was caution'd by another Statute, that no Religious Aliens ſhould be left in a Capacity to diſcover the Secrets of the Realm; and now again were all the Lands of Religious Aliens ſeized into the Kings Hands, and lett to Farm to the Sovereigns of the ſame. That Remedy may be had againſt the exceſſive Selling of Armour, and the unreaſonable Demands of Horſe-Courſers. The King will appoint the Officers of every Town to provide therefore. That the Time of Preſcription may be from the Coronation of King Edward the Firſt. The Old Law ſhall ſtand. That Sylva Cædua may eſpecially be declared. The Statute ſhall be obſerved. That Sheriffs be no further charged than they ſhall receive. The Party grieved upon Complaint ſhall have Remedy. That the Indicted upon any Treſpaſs or Felony, may upon Iſſue joyned have a Niſi Prius againſt the King. So the ſame concerneth Treaſon, the Chancellor or Keeper of the Privy Seal ſhall therein do Right. That ſuch as dwell upon the Sea-Coaſts, may ſet up Poles or other Inſtruments, whereby Men may know the Encreaſe or Decreaſe of the Sea. In time of War the ſame may be to leſs harm, and after taken away. That the Acquittance of the Co-Executors refuſing Adminiſtration may be void. The Law ſhall be uſed as heretofore. It is agreed, that no Man be puniſhed contrary to the Statute. Such Commiſſions, as were to enquire of Scotch Labourers within the Realm, were repealed. The Print touching the Pardon of Foreſt Matters Chap. 4. agreeth with the Record. The Print touching the Staple to be removed from Calais, becauſe of the Wars, and to be held in England Chap. 1. differs much in Form from the Record, quod nota. The next Day being the Twelfth of June, the King gave his Thanks to the Lords and Commons for their great Pains, and for the Aid they had given him: And in ſome ſort of Recompence, promiſed to all ſuch as ſhould paſs over Sea with him againſt the French, that they ſhould enjoy and poſſeſs all ſuch Towns, Caſtles, Poſſeſſions, Perſons, Names, Arms and Honours as they ſhould obtain, win, conquer or take

of

An. Dom. 1369. An. Regni Angliæ XLIII. Franciæ XXX.

of the French, to them and their Heirs in Fee, saving unto the King all Regalities, and the Lands of the Church, and that every Person should have Charters of his own Prowess and Conquest. And further the King commanded, that all the Bishops should not only muster their own Servants and Tenants, but also all Parsons, Vicars, and other Religious Persons of the Clergy, all who were to be in a readiness upon Occasion to resist the Common Enemy. And then the Parliament brake up.

XI. One thing here We must not omit, namely, a Matter concerning the Bounty of the Generous Black-Prince extended to the truly Loyal and Valiant Gentleman, the Lord John Greilly, that Famous Captal of Busche: To whom he granted about this time the whole County of Bigorre in tail, reserving yearly at Christmas a Faulcon and a Tercel Gentle to be paid at his Castle of Bourdeaux, besides the known Services due out of that County; whereof he gave him his Charter, [h] "EDWARD, Eldest "Son of the King of England, Prince of Aquitaine, and of Wales, Duke of Corn-"wall, and Earl of Chester, Lord of Biscay, and of the Castle of Ordiales, to all, "who shall see, or hear, these Letters, We give to know: That for the good and "agreeable Services, which our Right Dear and Loyal Cousin, John de Greilly, Cap-"tal of Busche, hath rendred unto Us heretofore, and which He and his may ren-"der unto Us and Ours in time to come, We have given and granted, and by these "Presents do give and grant to Him and his Heirs Male Lawfully begotten, the Coun-"ty of Bigorre, with the Cities, Towns, Castles, Lands, Seignories, Homages, Juris-"dictions, High, Mean, and Low, Meer and Mixt Empire, Rights, Cens and Rents, "Revenues, and other Profits, Emoluments, and Appurtenances of the said County: He "rendring unto Us and our Heirs every Year for ever, at our Castle of Bourdeaux, "at the Feast of Christmas, a Faulcon and a Tercellet Gentle, and doing unto Us "and our Heirs Liege Homage, and Oath of Fealty, Resorts, and other Duties, which "ought to be done to Us for the said County. In Witness of which We have cau-"sed to be put to these our Letters Patents our Great Seal, Given at our City of An-"goulesme the 27 day of June, in the Year of Grace MCCCLXIX. This Grant of the Prince's to that Noble Lord, was in [i] April following confirmed by the King, his Father, under the Great Seal of England; only reserving to the King and his Heirs, Kings of England, the Liege Homage of the said John, and of his Heirs for the said County; and also the Sovereignty and Resort of the said Earldom, and all other Duties, to Him, as Superior Lord, due therefrom. And so Command was sent from the King to all States, and Officers in that County, to be obedient and answerable to the said John Greilly, as to the Earl of the said Earldom of Bigorre, in all things pertaining to the said Earldom.

[h] Extant Gallico idiomate apud Selden's Titles of Honour. *Part.*2. *c.*3.§.13.*p.*518.

[i] Rot. Vasc. 44. *Ed.*3.*m.*8.*n.*4.

CHAPTER the FIFTH.

The CONTENTS.

I. The Dukes of Anjou and Berry begin to War upon the Principality; several English and French Captains alter their Copies. II. The Earls of Cambridge and Pembroke are sent over by King Edward to the Prince's Assistance; and Sr. Hugh Calverley returns out of Spain with 6000 Companions. The Latter is sent by the Prince to make War upon the Discontented Gascogners, and the two Former against the Lands of the Earl of Perigort, where they lay Siege to Bourdeilles. III. Sr. Simon Burley taken Prisoner by the French, and his Men all routed, slain, or taken. IV. The Lord John Chandos takes the strong Town of Terrieres; Realville besieged by the French. V. The Dukes of Anjou and Berry make use of the Clergy to debauch the hearts of the English Subjects in France from their Duty; King Charles makes solemn Processions, and is very devout, in order to raise up the Courages of his People. The Bishop of London sets forth King Edward's Right to the People from his Pulpit: Both the Kings seek foreign Alliances. VI. The Two Kings set forth an Account of their several Causes to the World; with certain Copies of both their Cases, as they were then menaged by the best Lawyers of Italy, France, and England. VII. The Reasons, whereby the French pretend to cut off from King Edward and his Posterity, not only ly all Right to the Crown of France, but alſo from his Right to Aquitaine; which yet had belonged to England in Right of the Lady Eleanor, Daughter and Heireſs to William laſt Duke of Aquitaine, and Wife to King Henry the Second of England. VIII. The Pedigree of the Kings of France, from King Philip Son of St. Lewis to King Charles the Fair, Brother of Queen Iſabell, Mother of King Edward the Third. IX. Reaſons alledged by the King of England for his Right and Title to the Crown of France.

AN. DOM. 1369. An. Regni Angliæ XLIII. Franciæ XXX.

I. THE mean while, [a] as ſoon as ever the Dukes of Anjou and Berry knew for certain, that the Defiance was made, and the War between the two Crowns open; they thought not to ſleep any longer, but made their Special Summons, the One in Auvergne, and the other about Tholouſe, with deſign to raiſe Forces, and go and make War upon the Principality. The Duke of Berry for his part had ready at his Command all the Barons of Auvergne, of the Biſhopricks of Lyon and of Maſcon, together with the Lord of Beaujeu, the Lord of Villiers, the Lord of Tournon, Sr. Godfrey of Boulogne, Sr. John of Armagnac, Sr. John de Villemur, the Lord of Montagu, the Lord of Taraſcon, Sr. Hugh Dauphin, the Lord of Roſhefort, and divers others; with all whom he drew toward Berry, and the Marches of Touraine, where being mightily reinforced, he began to make terrible War upon the good Country of Poictou; but he found it ſo well furniſhed with Men of War, both Knights and Eſquires, that no conſiderable Advantage was likely to be gained here. Yet beſides all this Power of the Duke of Berry's, there were at the ſame time in the Marches of Touraine Three conſiderable Captains of the Companions, who held Garriſon there for France, as Sr. Lewis of St. Julian, Carlonet the Breton, and Sr. William de Bourde; who all made War upon the Engliſh. There was alſo at that time an Engliſh Eſquire, named Percival Damorie, whom the Duke of Lancaſter had left Captain in a Caſtle of his, called Beaufort, between Troyes and Châlons: This Man, ſeeing the War now open, renounced his Allegiance to his Natural Lord the King of England, and turn'd to the French ſide, and ſware Allegiance to King Charles, who received him gladly, Rewarded him well, and left him ſtill Captain of the ſaid Caſtle, adding unto him another Eſquire of Champaigne, named Owen: ſo theſe two did much miſchief to the Engliſh thereabouts; being Perſons of great Valour and Experience in the Wars.

[a] Froiſ. c. 248. & 249.

But to recompence the Loſs of this Engliſh Eſquire, the Noble Lord Canon of Robſart, who had hitherto been all along on the French part, came over voluntarily to the King of England, and ſware unto him Faith and Obedience for ever againſt all Men living: Whereat King Edward was well pleaſed, not only upon the account of the Man's Valour and Nobility, but alſo of his known Judgement and Integrity; which were ſufficient to add Reputation to a Cauſe, he was pleaſed to own. The Duke of Anjou wan over to his ſide certain Gaſcogners, Captains of the Companions, as Sr. Perdiccas of Albret, the Little Mechlin, the Bourg of Bartuel, Edmund Ortingo, Perot of Savoy, Ralph Braye, and Nandon of Pons, who all with their Troops turn'd to the French, to the great Diſpleaſure of the Engliſh on the other part, who were much weakned thereby. But Nandon of Bergerac, the Bourg de l' Eſparre, Sr Robert Briquet, Sr. Robert Thinne, Sr. John Freville, Sr. Guliard du la Motte, and Emery of Rochechoüart, remain'd ſtill for the Engliſh Intereſt. Thus Knights and Eſquires chang'd their Copies on both ſides, as Hope, or Affection perſwaded them; eſpecially the Captains of the Companions; for they all took part either with the Engliſh or the French, none of them remain'd Neuters. The Companions of the Engliſh ſide lay for the moſt part about the Biſhoprick of Mans, and alſo in baſe Normandy, where they had taken the City of Vire, and deſtroy'd all the Country about.

II. But theſe Forces were too ſmall to uphold the Engliſh Intereſt on that ſide the Sea; wherefore King Edward ſent his Son Edmund of Langley, Earl of Cambridge, and his Son-in-Law, John Haſtings, Earl of Pembroke, to go into the Dutchy of Aquitaine to the Prince, his Son, and there joyn him with a certain Number of Men of War, the Chief Captains whereof were the Lord Guy Brian, the Lord Miles Stapleton, Sr. John Trivet, Sr. Thomas Baniſter, and divers others, beſide the two Princes. The Lord Guy [b] Brian was Admiral of the Fleet, toward the ſetting forth whereof King Edward had commanded his Son, the Prince of Wales, to impreſt all ſuch Ships, as were in the Port of Kaermerdin, of one hundred Tunns and upwards, and to ſend them well-mann'd and victuall'd to Portſmouth by ſuch a time, to be employ'd by the ſaid Sr. Guy in the Kings Service. All things being ready, they took the Sea, as early as they might, being being in all [c] 500 Men of Arms, and 4000 Archers, who ſailing toward Bretagne had Wind at Will, and arrived ſafely at the Port of St. Malo in the Iſle. When John of Monford Duke of Bretagne, heard of the Arrival of his Brethren of Cambridge and of Pembroke, he was very well pleaſed, and immediately ſent certain of his Knights to bid them Welcome, the Chief whereof were Sr. John de Lantriguer, and Sr. John St. Auguſtin. This Kindneſs of the Duke's highly ſatisfied the two Earls; for till then they were not aſſured, that the Lords, Knights, and Good Towns of Bretagne, would give them leave to paſs thrô their Country. But now they boldly deſired that Favour of the Duke, who, whatever new obligations he had to France, could not in Honour deny this Requeſt to thoſe, by whoſe Aid he had obtain'd his Dukedom, wherefore he gave them leave, only conjuring them to pay civilly for what they ſhould take. Then the two Earls ſent for all thoſe Engliſh Companions, who now lay part in the Fortreſs, called Chaſteau Gontier in Anjou, and part in the City of Vire in low Normandy, all whom they took along with them, and ſo paſſed by the River of Loire at the Bridge of Nantes, without doing any harm to the Country. Now from the time that Prince Edward had finiſh'd his Spaniſh Expedition, Sr. Hugh Calverley was order'd to lie about the Marches of Aragon, with 6000 able Men of War of the Companions in his Company, in order to receive the Moneys, for which Don Pedro ſtood engag'd unto the Prince: Thô all that expectation proved fruitleſs by reaſon of the Death of the ſaid King, who was ſlain, as we have ſhew'd by his Baſtard Brother. When this Sr. Hugh Calverley heard, how the French King made War upon the Prince, his Lord, he marched haſtily thrô Aragon and Foix, and came into Bigorre, and ſoon after went and preſented his Service to the Prince at Angouleſme, who received him joyfully, and kept him ſtill with him, till his Brother, the Earl of Cambridge ſhould come to him with the reſt of the Companions out of Normandy and Anjou, they having already ſold their Fortreſſes with Deſign to come to his Service. And when the Earl was come, he made Sr. Hugh Calverley Chief Leader of all the Troops of Companions, and ſent him into the Lands of the Earl of Armagnac and the Lord of Albret, there to make War, and burn, waſte, and pillage the Country. Now it is to be remembred, that the Earls of Cambridge and Pembroke tarried ſtill at St. Malo, till all their Company had paſſed the Loire, as the Duke of Bretagne had agreed; and when they had tarried there to refreſh themſelves Four Days, they went after their Men to the City of Nantes, where the Duke received them with great Demonſtrations of Kindneſs, and entertain'd them and their Servants Three days. On the Fourth they took their leave of the Duke, and paſſed over the great River of Loire, at the Bridge of Nantes, and ſo began to enter into Poictou; continuing their journey till they came to Angouleſme, where they found the Prince and Princeſs.

[b] Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 151.

An. Dom. 1369. An. Regni Angliæ XLIII. Franciæ XXX.

[c] Mezeray p. 81.

Prince Edward was extream glad to ſee his Brother, and Brother-in-Law, and enquired of them, how the King, his Father, and the Queen, his Mother did, and having enjoy'd them for Three Days, he then ſent them upon an Expedition into the Earldom of Perigort. So they took leave of the Prince, and with 3000 Choſen Men, among whom were divers Knights and Eſquires of Poictou, Sainctogne, Limoſin, Quercy, and Rouvergue, rode forth in very good Array, and preſently enter'd the Lands of Perigort with Fire and Sword. Having taken ſome few Places, they began to lay Siege to a ſtrong Fortreſs, called Bourdeilles, wherein were two Brethren, Eſquires, Arnold and Bernard of Batefoile, and ſeveral other Valiant Men, lately ſent thither by the Earl of Perigort, beſides thoſe whom he appointed to Defend his other Garriſons and Fortreſſes in thoſe parts; all which were ſingular-well provided with Artillery, Victuals and other neceſſaries to maintain thoſe Places a good while, as generally the Souldiers reſolved to do. So that during this Siege before Bourdeilles, there were many Aſſaults made, and many Gallant Feats of Arms performed on both ſides. For the two Eſquires within were right Hardy and approved Captains, and ſuch as hated the Engliſh Name mortally: And came frequently to the Barriers, and skirmiſhed Valiantly, ſometimes winning, and ſometimes loſing, as the Adventures of War do uſually vary.

III. On the other ſide in the Marches of Anjou and Touraine, there were no leſs than a 1000 French Spears, as Bretons, Burgundians, Picards, Normans, and Anjouvins, who did no little harm upon the Prince's Land, being led by Sr. John Bull, Sr. William of Bourde, Sr. Lewis of St. Julian, and Carlonet the Breton; againſt whom the Prince had laid Men of War in the Frontiers of Poictou and Sainctogne, under the Command of Sr. Simon Burly, Sr. Dangouſes, and ſeveral other Knights of England and Gaſcogne, who yet were hardly one Fourth part of the Frenchmens Number; for the French were at leaſt a 1000 Spears, and the Engliſh not above two or three Hundred at moſt. For the the Prince had ſent the Lord Chandos with 500 Spears into Montauban, and a far greater Number with Sr. Hugh Calverley into the Lands of the Earl of Armagnac, and of the Lord of Albret; but the Greateſt Number of all lay now with his Brother the Earl of Cambridge, before Bourdeilles in the Earldom of Perigort: So that there were but few Forces in Poictou. And yet even they acquitted themſelves manfully upon all occaſions, and did their Devoir in keeping the Frontier Garriſons, and never refus'd to meet and skirmiſh with the Frenchmen, thô they were nothing equal unto them in Number. One day however among others it happen'd, that the Frenchmen were certainly informed, how ſome Engliſh Troops were abroad; at which News they were glad, and laid a great Ambuſh of 500 Men to receive them, as they ſhould come back from an Enterpriſe, which they had accompliſhed between Mirebeau and Luſignan. And ſo as they were returning by a broken way, the Frenchmen roſe up out of their Ambuſh, and came upon them with great Fury, being headed by Sr. John Bull, Sr. William of Bourde, Sr. Lewis of St. Julien, and Carlonet the Breton. Then there began a fierce and hot Rencountre; for the Engliſh fought with much Courage and Skill, as long as they were able to endure, and their Captains Sr. Simon Burly, and Sr. Dangouſe approved themſelves like Noble Knights that day: But being little more than an handfull of Men in compariſon with the French, and they ſurpriſed too, they were at laſt utterly diſcomfited, and forced to flight. Sr. Dangouſe ſaved himſelf, as well as he could, and eſcaped into the Caſtle of Luſignan; but Sr. Simon Burly was ſo narrowly purſued, that he was taken Priſoner, and almoſt all his Men either taken or ſlain: But a very few eſcaped clear off. AN. DOM. 1369. AN. REGNI Angliæ XLIII. Franciæ XXX.

With this Victory the French return'd joyfull to their Garriſon, having ſent the glad News of their Succeſs to the King, who received it well: But the Prince of Wales was much diſpleaſed at the Loſs, eſpecially becauſe Sr. Simon Burly was taken; for he loved him entirely, and had been educated with him from a Child, and alſo Sr. Simon was Maſter of many Noble and Worthy Qualities, and had all along bore himſelf with much Honour in the Service of England; and beſides, they were all extraordinary Men both for Courage and Loyalty, that were either ſlain or taken at that time. Wherefore the Prince took this Loſs as a very conſiderable Blow given unto him; and no wonder, ſince ſometimes One Man is worth an Hundred; and ſome One Man by his Wit and Conduct will do more good for his Prince and Country, than a Thouſand others. But the Prince ſaw, that ſuch Events were the natural Products of War, and that it was the uſual Faſhion of the World to bring forth freſh Loſſes and Croſſes; wherefore he choſe Patience for his Remedy. However this was gain'd by that Miſchance, that ever after the Engliſhmen and their Friends rode with more care abroad, and in greater Numbers.

IV. This while the Lord John Chandos, and Sr. Guiſchard of Angouleſme, alias Dangle, were at and about Montauban with their Troops, a matter of ſeven Leagues from Tholouſe, where they undertook many great Enterpriſes, but brought but few of them to any good Effect; having as yet done little more, than that they kept the Frontiers. Wherefore now they reſolv'd to go and lay Siege to Terrieres in Tholouſaine, and having made all things ready, they went from Montauban and inveſted it quite round. Here they found it was not feaſable to carry the Place by Aſſault or any other way, than by Mining: So they ſet their Pioneers at Work; who did their buſineſs ſo well, that the Town was enter'd, taken, and plunder'd, and all within put to the Sword. During that ſame Expedition they had intended to have taken another good Town, named La Vaur on the River l' Agout, about ſix Leagues from Tholouſe, on the very Confines of Albigeois. With this deſign they laid a ſtrong Ambuſh in a Wood hard by, and ſent away Fourty of their Company, ſecretly armed, but in the Habit of Countrymen to go and ſeiſe on the Gates. But they were betray'd by a Boy of the Country, who was on foot not far from them, when they came from the Ambuſh in the Wood, and ſo ran before them, and diſcover'd their Enterpriſe; and thus that project being daſh'd they return'd to Montauban.

About that very time the Duke of Anjou, being at Tholouſe, ſent forth the Earl of Perigort, the Earl of Cominges, the Earl of Liſle, the Vicount of Carmaine, the Lord de la Barde, Sr. Bertram de Taride, the Lord of Pincornet, Sr. Perdiccas of Albret, the Bourg of L' Eſparre, the Bourg of Bartuel, Edmund Ortingo, Ralph Braye, Perot of Savoy, and Nandon of Pons, and others with their Troops, to the Number of 10000 Men. Theſe Men preſently made an Impreſſion into the Land of Quercy, where they began to do much Miſchief in burning and ravaging the Country, and ſo came before Realville, and there laid a ſtrong Siege to the Town. But the Seneſchal of Quercy had so well furnished the Place with all things necessary, that it was not likely to be won easily; especially since the Garrison resolv'd to die every Man, rather than to yield up the Place, thô the Townsmen would gladly have received the French, if they durst. Wherefore the Captains of France sent to Tholouse for Four great Engines, which they made ready and reared up against the Walls, casting therewith both Night and Day massie Stones, and huge pieces of Timber against the Fortress; besides which, they set their Pioneers a Mining: But the Englishmen with great Courage comforted each other, and slighted all their Art and Fury; thô at last for want of Succour We shall find them to be taken only by reason of the Mines: But for the present We shall leave them.

An. Dom. 1369. An. Regni Angliæ XLIII. Franciæ XXX.

[d] Froiss. c. 252. f. 152.

V. While these French Captains [d] were thus busie in Quercy, the Duke of Berry was in Auvergne with a great Power of Men of War, the chief Leaders whereof were the Lord John of Armagnac, his Uncle the Lord John de Villemur, the Lord Roger Beaufort, the Lord of Beaujeu, the Lord Villiers, the Lord of Semur, the Lord of Tarascon, Sr. Hugh Dauphin and many more, who ravaged about the Marches of Rovergue, Quercy and Limosin, where they did much Harm, and at first found no great Opposition. And besides this application of Force, there were not wanting other Arts, not then so frequent in the World, but since those Days very common, which made use of the help of the Church to blow up a Fire of Combustion in the State. For the subtle Dukes of Anjou and Berry prevailed with the Archbishop of Tholouse, who was a Politick and Learned Prelate to go to the City of Cahors, of which place his Brother was then Bishop; and here together these two Brothers so elegantly preached, and set forth the Right of King Charles against King Edward's Pretensions, that the whole City turned French, and sware unto the French King Faith and Homage from that time. And with these Arts the Archbishop rode about thrô the Country, and every where took care to set forth the Equity of his Masters Quarrel with such advantage of popular Arguments, and the Reputation which he added thereto from Religion and Scripture Proofs; that together with the Terror of the Duke of Berry's Arms, and those of the Duke of Anjou, who hover'd thereabout, he obliged no less than sixty Towns, Cities, Castles and Fortresses, to submit to the Obedience of the French King, who had indeed the cheif place in their Hearts before. And as this Archbishop went abroad abetting and maintaining the King his Masters Cause, in and about the Marches and Limitations of Languedoc: So also in Picardy divers other Prelates and Clergymen brought the Right of the Two Kings into their Pulpits, where they discussed the Matter so plausibly, that King Edward was ever concluded in the wrong. And the Common People, who in those Days readily swallowed more Course Morsels than these, were fully satisfied with all that was said; thô in my Opinion, it is not only below the Dignity of Princes to make use of such abject Devices, but also no way corresponding to the fame of Learning and Religion, to appeal so fawningly to the Vulgar, whom as they please they may easily cheat with false Colours. But in France Dr. William Dorman was especially remarkable for these Tongue Victories, for he rode about from Town to Town, and from City to City, and spake with such power and force of Rhetorical Insinuations, and handled his Points so cleverly, that all who heard him, believed in a manner every Word he said; and the Controversie between the two Kings was so artificially represented by him, that the French King had apparently the Advantage on his side. Besides all this King Charles himself was so moved with Devotion, [e] that he not only caused Fastings and Processions to be used throughout his Realm by the Clergy, but Himself also and his Queen would often attend them going barefoot; and in all Churches there were put up continual Prayers to God, devoutly requiring and imploring of his Majesty, to assist and maintain the Right of the Realm of France, which had suffer'd so great Tribulation for so many Years. Nor was King Edward less Pious, or less (honourably) Politick: For he also used the same Method thrô his Kingdom, the rather that his Subjects might be the more ready to venture their Lives and Fortunes in a Cause, which they first understood to be Just and Right. There was at that time one Dr. Simon Tibald, alias Sudbury Bishop of London, a Man very well seen in the Canon Law and the Scriptures, and of great Eloquence, who made many Sermons in the most publick places of the City, declaring and proving unto the People, that the French King had renew'd the War, not only against his Oath, but also against all Right and Reason, with manifest Injustice, Fraud and Perjury; all which together with King Edward's Title to France, he demonstrated with great force of Argument and Rhetorick, to the ample satisfaction of all his Auditors. And I must confess, that it might not seem unnecessary for both the Kings to provide, that their Subjects should be generally nerally informed of the particulars of their Quarrel; that so they might more readily, and with a good Conscience assist their several Masters in this War, at which both the Nations were sufficiently alarum'd already. And King Edward himself, who was as well furnish'd with Wisdom as Valour, nothing doubted, but that this War would prove as great and as momentous, as ever any he had been engaged in, because of the Advantage which the French King had gain'd by surprising him thus, as chiefly because of the new Method of this his politick Enemy, and also of the Mutability of his French Friends. Wherefore he thought it fit for his behoof to stirr up all his Assistants and Allies, that might any ways lie opportunely to divert the impending Mischief: And so he sent into Brabant and Hainalt, to learn whether they would own his Quarrel or no; and especially he desired Duke Albert of Bavaria, who at that time govern'd the Country of Hainalt, instead of his Elder Brother Duke William (who had been for some time before Distracted, and continued so to the day of his Death) to open his Country upon Occasion, and to let him go and come into France, or tarry there if need should be with an Army. Duke Albert, at the Request of the King of England his Uncle, especially because Queen Philippa his Dear Aunt, urged him also thereto, readily granted to have his Country open for the use of King Edward, being not a little perswaded to this Matter by Edward Duke of Gueldres, who was Son to King Edward's Sister Eleanor, and had lately married Duke Alberts Daughter; and with him concurred the Duke of Juliers, who was Cosen German to the said Albert of Bavaria. These two Lords were strictly bound to King Edward, the one being (as we said before) his Nephew, and the other the Cosen German to King Edward's Children, and to the said Duke of Hainalt; and yet by many other Ties were they obliged to the English Interest, and each of them was by Covenant retain'd to serve King Edward with a 1000 Spears apiece at their own Charges. And therefore they not only advised the King now to bring over Duke Albert, but they also Themselves joyn'd their Perswasions; so that what by their Means and the English Gold, he was at first won to declare himself for England. But when the Lord of Cominges, who was then in the Court of France, heard thereof, he hasted into Hainalt, where he menaged Matters so cunningly with the Lord John Verchin Seneschal of Hainalt, by whose Advice all the Dukes Matters were chiefly order'd; and who in his Heart lov'd the Interest of France beyond that of England; that by the Concurrence of the Earl of Blois, and the Lord John of Blois his Brother, together with the Lord of Ligny, and the Lord of Brabanson, who were all well belov'd with the Duke and Dutchess of Hainalt, King Edward's Design was wholly quash'd, and the labour of his Ambassadors overthrown: Thô even they could obtain no more of the Duke than this, that both He and his Country would stand Neuter in the Affair; and the same Answer was also return'd by the Lady Jane Dutchess of Brabant: For at that time her Husband was absent, being in France, where he contracted secretly a League with that King.

[e] Froiss. ibid. Mezeray, &c.

AN. DOM. 1369. An. Regni Angliæ XLIII. Franciæ XXX.

VI. And surely King Charles of France, who was a notable Politician, had secretly prepared himself many Friends both in Hainalt and Brabant almost two years before, and had brought over to his Interest the greater part of the Chief Counsellors, and Friends of all the Great Lords of both Dukedoms. And now to put the better Gloss upon his renewing the War, and to make his Cause more plausible in the Eyes of the World, he copied out divers Extracts of the Letters relating to the Peace made at Bretigny, and ratified at Calais, and therein he set forth the Substance of what he according to his Obligation had done, and of what the King of England and his Children had not done, thô by Oath and Honour bound thereto: All along producing such Articles and Points as made for Himself, and against King Edward, but cunningly concealing, smothering or colouring what made to a contrary purpose: So that his Cause seem'd only just, and the English bare all the Blame. And also he privately caused certain Learned in the Laws to be Feed to set forth their Opinions at large, concerning the Right of the French King against the King of England, both as to the Matter of the Crown, and also to the Superiority and Resort of Aquitain; and there are yet [f] Extant two Discourses on that Point, written by two Famous Doctors of those Days, belonging to the University of Bononia in Italy, whose Names were John de Lyana and Richard de Salicete. Many of which Papers, and others of the like Nature, together with his own Letters, the French King procured to be published in the Courts of all the Princes, and Great Lords, his Neighbours, the better to prepare them to allow of his Quarrel. So that King Edward to save his Credit, was obliged also to use his Pen against this New sort of Enemy, and to justifie and defend his Claim, and to prove the Breach of the Peace to lie wholly at the French Kings Doors; which he performed [f] M.S. Reverendi Dr. Joh. Spencer S.T.P. C.C.C. apud Cantab. Magistri & Decani Ecclesiæ Cathed. Elienfis.

An. Dom. 1369. An. Regni Angliæ XLIII. Franciæ XXX.

notably by his Letters ſent into Germany, and other Places where he valued his Reputation, or thought to have any Friends. From which Humour of both the Kings [g] Paulus Æmylius, rather ambitious to ſhew his Rhetorick than Hiſtorical Fidelity, has invented two notable Declamations, which he ingeniouſly enough fancies to have been ſaid before Charles the Emperour and his Son Wenceſlaus, the one by an Engliſh Orator in Behalf of his Maſters Cauſe, and the other by a Frenchman who holds the contrary opinion: Whereas if that Author had conſulted Decorum, he would have remembred, that King Edward often proteſted to acknowledge no Mortal, whether Pope or Emperour, as Judge of his Controverſie; and that he had but little Reaſon to expect to find the Emperour any thing favourable to him, ſince he ſlew his Father at the Battle of Creſſy; and could not be ignorant, how mightily he was addicted, as well as more nearly allied to King Charles and the Houſe of France. Wherefore we, who religiouſly endeavour to avoid theſe Gaudy Vanities, thô we have Matter enough of Authentick Arguments to fill up a Speech or two, yet preferring the venerable ſimplicity of Truth to all the Fucoes of Vain-Glory, ſhall here ſet down the Arguments on both Hands, as they were then really ſtated by the Beſt Lawyers of both Kingdoms; in which doing, leſt where our Authorities cannot be ſeen, our Faith be called in queſtion, We declare not only, that our ſelves are wholly ignorant in this, as well as many other Sorts of Learning, but that the Ancient Copies are to be ſeen in Latine in a M.S. of the Reverend Dr. Stillingfleet Dean of St. Pauls, and in Engliſh in another M.S. of the Reverend Dr. Spencer Dean of Ely, and Maſter of Corpus Chriſti College in Cambridge, which Engliſh Copy appears to have been with much Care tranſlated from the other by ſome Perſon of Quality for the Uſe of that Moſt Noble Prince of Wales, Henry, Eldeſt Son to King James the Firſt.

[g] Paul. Æmyl. f. 294. &c.

And to omit the ſeveral Preambles touching Succeſſion of Women, and Succeſſion by Repreſentation, as alſo touching Diſtance of Degrees, and Collateral Succeſſion, I ſhall the readieſt way come to the Matter; but firſt (thô in ſome meaſure we have more than once ſtated the Caſe before) it is neceſſary for Evidence ſake here again to ſet down the Matter of Fact, as it happen'd in the Realm of France. Videlicet, That King Philip, Son of St Lewis King of France, had two Sons lawfully begotten, Philip the Fair, and Charles of Valois; And that the ſaid Philip being Eldeſt, after the Death of his Father, obtain'd the Kingdom, and that Charles deceaſed, leaving behind him Philip of Valois his Son lawfully begotten. That afterwards Philip the Fair begat Three Lawfull Sons, Lewis, Philip and Charles, and alſo One Daughter named Iſabel, who was married to the King of England, and brought forth Edward the Third, whilſt the foreſaid Philip, Grandfather to the ſaid Edward, remain'd alive. That at laſt Lewis and Philip, Brothers to Iſabell being Dead without Iſſue Male, King [h] Philip their Father alſo died. That after him reigned the foreſaid Charles, his only Son ſurviving, who likewiſe died without Iſſue. Now according to the State of the Fact, the Queſtion doth riſe in Law to be this. The Lady Iſabell, next Collateral to her Brother King Charles, being diſabled to Succeed by a continued Cuſtom of that Realm, or by a Statute lawfully publiſhed, which excludeth Women from Succeſſion in the Kingdom, whether Edward her Son, or Philip Son of the Firſt Charles, who was Uncle to this Laſt King Charles, ſhould carry the Crown and Kingdom of France, according to the Lawfull Rules of Succeſſion.

[h] This to be favourably taken; for Philip died firſt, and then his Three Sons in order ſucceeded.

In which doubtful Caſe, I ſhall firſt lay down certain Reaſons on the Behalf of Philip: But before other Matters, becauſe the whole Knot of the Buſineſs is rooted upon the Cuſtom and Statute whereof I have ſpoken, leſt the Foundation ſhould fail, I will ſtrengthen that Statute with certain Reaſons, and Firſt thus.

Arguments for the French Kings Right.

This Statute (as it is preſuppoſed in the State of the Queſtion) was lawfully made and publiſhed, the Nobility of the Realm being thereto called, and all thoſe, who had any Right or Intereſt in this Caſe to be called. So that it proceeded from the whole Council of the Realm lawfully aſſembled. Therefore whether Authority to make Statutes be a Matter of meer or mixt Empire, or elſe of ſimple Juriſdiction, the Statute is of Force, and Good [i] in Law.

[i] Arg. l. Illicitus. §. Qui univerſis. ff. de Offic. Præſid. l. Humanum C. de Legibus. l. Omnes populi. ff. de juſt. & jure junctis. ibi notatis Barth. in primâ quæſtione principali ſuæ repetitionis, unà cum notatis ejuſdem in l. Imperium in quæſt. ſuâ, quæ incipit Quer. quibus Judicibus ff. de Juriſdict. Omnium Judic.

Again this Statute is greatly confirmed by the Apparent Profit, which by the good Proviſion thereof is much procured to the Realm of France. Leſt if a Woman ſhould ſucceed, the Weakneſs of her Sex might become Fatal to the [k] State: Whereto ſtrongly maketh the Law Fœminæ ff. de Reg. Juris, with other Laws which affirm, [l] that Women muſt not exerciſe ſuch Offices as appertain to Men.

[k] Arg. ad hæc Inſt. quibus alie. licet non vel in Fl. primi re.

[l] ff. de poſtuland. l. 1. §. ſexum junct. ib. gl. fac. & l. in multis. ff. de ſtatu Hominum.

This is alſo made good, in that Law, which was in Force in the Middle Time of the Empire of Rome, bearing more Favour unto Men in Succeſſion of Collaterals (of which which Quality is this now in Question) did sometimes dispose, [m] that Inheritances should pass from one to another among the Male Kindred, althô they were in a very distant Degree. But the Women Kindred should then only succeed in case they were Sisters; If they were more remote, whether descended of Sisters or any other, they were held incapable. For if that Law could exclude Women Kindred from Lawfull Succession, as it did, because otherwise the Correction thereof comprised in these cited Laws had not been necessary (for that which is not, [n] cannot be abolished, broken or corrected) Then this [o] Statute may do the same in the Kingdom of France.

Again, that the Right of a Kingdom is carried by Hereditary Succession, or by Prerogative of Custom, it is brought in only by Positive and Civil Law, [p] to wit Custom. Therefore it followeth, that it may be taken away by the same Law, and consequently by the Law of this Statute [q] or Custom. By which it seemeth to be as clear as the Light, that the Lady Isabell could not come to the Crown of the Realm of France, as being altogether disabled and excluded by Statute.

So then upon this Foundation thus laid beforehand, many Reasons may be raised against King Edward. For lawfull Successions proceed by Degrees; that is from one Degree to another: So that as a Man is nearer in Order of Degree, so [r] is he stronger in Right of Succession. But in Case of our Question, the nearer and stronger Degree of Isabell is plainly disabled from Succession by Statute. Therefore this Lawfull Succession, as interrupted or stopped by Her, cannot proceed to a further Degree, viz. to King Edward: Because Succession goeth on by Steps, and not per saltum, [s] as Baldus noteth. And this Sequel is proved, for [t] that the Overthrow of Order is also the Overthrow of that which is to be Ordered: And upon [u] Destruction of the Antecedent, the Destruction of the Consequent doth ensue.

Again, if King Edward should make Claim of any such Succession, this must be by reason of the Royal Blood, derived unto him from King Philip, his Grandfather by the Mothers Side, by the Mean of his Mother. But the Mother had no such Blood in her self, capable of Succession, as it appeareth by that which hath been said; Ergo, [x] She could not convey the same unto her Son.

Again, every [y] Right by Derivation thereof is made more feeble: Therefore if this Blood was not of Ability to succeed in the Mother, as it appeareth before, much less shall it be of that Ability being conveyed and deriv'd into King Edward. The Form of Proof is taken à Majori ad Minus. To the same Purpose an Argument may be drawn from [z] another Law, where a Son, being in the Power of his Father, cannot appoint his Son, and the Grandchild of his Father (who holdeth Authority over both) to take upon him to be the Heir of his Mother deceased; upon Consideration of this Reason, that the Father, who giveth Authority is in that Case, that by Himself in Person he cannot enter into such an Inheritance. Therefore by parity of Reason in the Case of this Question, the Mother Isabell cannot give Right of Succession to King Edward, because by her Self in Person she is not able to succeed. To the same purpose serveth the Law, Filium habeo. ff. ad Senatusconsultum Macedonianum.

Again, where a Nephew or Grandchild hath a Grandfather, and a Father of divers Conditions, the Nephew shall bear the Condition not of his Grandfather, but of his Father, from whom immediately he descendeth, and to whom only he shall succeed; [a] althô the Father shall be of worse Condition than is the Grandfather. Therefore this King Edward shall succeed only the Disabled Condition of his Mother, which is his immediate Parent, and not the Condition of his Grandfather, who is mediately his Ancestor: Because a Disposition to this Effect cannot descend to Him, but by a Mean, by which Mean he cannot succeed, no more than she her Self could.

Again, the State of the Mother chargeth the Sons with no Condition [i] from which she her Self is free: Therefore the State of the Mother is the Cause, that her Son hath no Right of Succession, from which she her Self is excluded. The Consequent is proved, because an Argument is good in Law [c] from a Charge to a Benefit, and likewise to the Contrary.

Again, in Succession of Collaterals (of which quality is this in Question) the Sons of the Brother, or Sister deceased, are raised in the Rank and Place of their Father or Mother, and do represent their Person only, and not their own, as by many Examples it doth appear. For when Brothers both by Father and Mother do concurr with Brothers by the Father only, or only by the Mother, to the Succession of a Brother deceased, They, who are joyned by both Parents do [d] exclude those, who are joyned only by One. Put case then, that a Man hath Brothers joyned to him by One side only, and Sons of a Brother deceased, who was joyned by both sides, which of these shall succeed him, if he die Intestate? Surely if we consider the Sons of the Deceased Brother in their own Persons, because they are not Brothers both by Father and Mother to their Uncle (of whose Succession the

Doubt

An. Dom. 1369. An. Regni Angliæ XLIII. Franciæ XXX.

[m] Inst. de Leg. Agnat. succ. §. Cæterum ubi benè facit ratio ejusdem. §. posita ibi. Quod ideò C. de Leg. her. l. Lege XII Tab.

[n] ff. de injust. rupt. & irrit. test. l. nam etsi.

[o] Arg. præmiss. & ff. de Legibus l. non est novum & l. de quibus cum similibus

[p] Le. & no. 8. q. 1. c. Moses. ibi glo. & Archid.

[q] Ar. ff. de Reg. jur. l. Nil tam naturale. Inst. de jur. natur. Gent. & Civ. §. Sed Naturalia & inst. de legit. Agnat. tutela. §. Fi.

[r] Inst. de legit. Agnat. Success. §. Placebat. & ibi not.

[s] In tit. qui feud. da. poss. §. & quia. & facit l. ut Gradatim. ff. de munere & oner. injunct. l. qui indignus. ff. de Senatoribus.

[t] L. tria prædia. ff. de servit. rust. præd.

[u] ff. de Offic. ejus, cui mand. est Jurisdictio. l. 1. §. hujus rei argumentum.

[x] Arg. l. Nemo. ff. de Reg. Jur. & l. traditio. ff. de acquirendo rerum Dominio.

[y] ff. l. Plenum. ff. si usus ministerii. ff. de usu & hab.

[z] Filius familiâs. ff. de acquir. Hæred.

[a] C. de Decurionib. l. Privilegio lib. 10.

[b] L. Nullus solius C. de Decurionibus l. 10.

[c] Arg. l. secund. Naturam. ff. de Reg. jur. adidem etiam & eo. mod. facit. l. si Pater ff. quæ in fraud. Credit. in Prin.

[d] Auth. post fratres C. de Her. & dict. est. S. presuppositione tert.

An. Dom. 1369. An. Regni Angliæ XLIII. Franciæ XXX.

Doubt is made) they ſhould not exclude the Brothers by Father only, or by Mother only; ſeeing they are more diſtant in Degree: But becauſe in all Reſpects they repreſent the Perſon of their Father, and poſſeſs his Right, they [c] exclude the Brother of the Deceaſed, by the Father or by the Mother only. Now therefore in the caſe in Queſtion, concerning the Succeſſion of a Brother deceaſed, ſeeing Edward the Son of the Siſter Iſabell ſhall repreſent in ſuch Succeſſion the perſon only of his Mother, and ſeeing ſhe is diſabled (by that which is before alledged) and could not ſucceed, neither can He.

[c] Auth. de Her. qui ab inteſt. §. ſiquis Conſanguineus Coll. IX.

To the ſame purpoſe ſerveth the Law, [f] which ſaith, that if a Patron uſeth violence to his Libertine, or Freedman, and thereby diſableth himſelf, that he cannot ſucceed him, this Diſability doth not only affect his own Perſon, but alſo extendeth to his Poſterity: That as well they, who are Deſcended of him, as himſelf, do thereby loſe the Right of Succeſſion. In like manner, here the Diſability of the Mother extendeth unto her Poſterity, and conſequently unto King Edward.

[f] L. qui contra. ff. de jure Patron.

Again, the Diſabled Meane corrupteth, or maketh void, [g] as in the Law, which ordaineth, that a blemiſh or diſability in a Former Degree infecteth thoſe that follow: So that they cannot claim the Right of Succeſſion, or Privileges of their Anceſtors. Ergo, &c.

[g] L. à Divo Marco C. de queſt. & §. hoc autem notandum. tit. qui feud. da. poſſ.

Again, in Succeſſion of Collaterals, a [h] Right never poſſeſſed by that Perſon, who hath former place in Degree, is not tranſmitted to thoſe that follow. But this Iſabell, who was before King Edward in Degree, was never in Poſſeſſion of that Right, becauſe ſhe could not by reaſon of the Statute, and therefore ſhe did not tranſmit it to her Son.

[h] C. de his qui ante apert. tab. l. vinc. arg. à contrario ſenſu. junct. ib. no. at. Cy. in VII. queſt. ſua arg. & l. ſi ita legat. §. ſi volet. ff. de leg. I

To the ſame purpoſe an Argument may be drawn from the Law [i] which ſaith, that if a Father hath a Natural Son, who cannot ſucceed him, althô his Son begetteth a Natural and Lawfull Son, yet that Nephew or Grandchild in reſpect of the Grandfather, ſhall be only Natural, and is not Legitimate in regard of [k] his Goods, althô he be for his Fathers Goods. And the reaſon is there added, becauſe ſuch Right of Legitimation cannot be tranſmitted unto him by any Lawfull Conſequence, but by interpoſition of the Natural Iſſue it is interrupted. Therefore in the Caſe in queſtion, ſeeing the Precedent Perſon hath no ability to ſucceed (as had not the Iſſue, who was only Natural) it cannot be ſaid by any Conſequence in Law, that Legitimation (that is to ſay, Right to ſucceed) is transferred from her unto her Son (as was not to the Natural and Lawfull Iſſue) becauſe the Antecedent being overthrown, &c.

[i] L. ſi. C. de Naturalibus liberis.

[k] i.e. Grandfathers.

To the ſame purpoſe an Argument may be brought from the Law [l] wherein is compriſed, that the Son loſeth his Right of Patronage in Freed-men, becauſe he is ſet at large from his Fathers Authority, and therefore may Lawfully be ſued by them without leave of Court. But what if afterward he ſhall have a Son Lawfull not ſet at Liberty, but in the Power of his Father, whether may he challenge right of Patronage from the Perſon of his Grandfather. And it is ſaid, becauſe the Father, being between him and the Grandfather, is emancipated and freed from his Fathers Power, he cannot. Therefore in like caſe King Edward, althô Legitimate, cannot make claim, becauſe his Mother placed in the Middle, is excluded by Statute, and ſo, as it were, emancipated and ſet free.

[l] L. ſed ſi hâc lege ff. de in jus vocand. §. ſed ſi filius meus emancipatus.

To the ſame purpoſe ſerveth that, which Joh. [m] hath noted, whoſe Words I will ſet down, becauſe of the Authority of the Writer, which is a matter of great Regard. He [n] maketh this queſtion, What if the Son of a ſervant, whoſe Father is Free, will contract Marriage, whoſe conſent ſhall be required? Whether the Fathers or the Grandfathers? For one of their conſents he [o] muſt have; althô if it be done without their conſent, the Marriage doth hold. The Text of Law [p] plainly ſaith, not the Fathers, becauſe he is in ſervitude, but the Grandfathers. But the Gloſs there ſaith, that if this Son were conceived, during the ſervitude of his Father, [q] he ſhall not be in the Power of his Grandfather, becauſe the Grandfather receiveth Power over the Nephew by the Father. Here then he was free, when he begat him, of whom the queſtion is made; but afterwards he became [r] a ſlave. And this maketh againſt the King of England: For admitting that he might have Right in the Kingdom of France, yet it is by no other way, but by his Mother, as the ſame King acknowledgeth. But the Mother is diſabled to ſucceed in the Kingdom, Ergo, &c. Alſo the Mother, when living, claimed nothing, as in Right ſhe could not, therefore 'tis impoſſible, that King Edward ſhould have any Right: For it is hard and repugnant to reaſon, that a Man ſhould come to the extreams, but by the Meane, as it is expreſſed [s] in the Extravagant of Pope Boniface. And hereof I have ſpoken in [*] another place. For if ye exclude him from whom

[m] In Collect. in c. 2. propoſuit de conjug. ſerv.

[n] Arg. ff. ſi cert. pet. l. 1.

[o] XXX. q. 1. c. III, IV. & V.

[p] XXXII. q. 3. c. patrem.

[q] Inſt. de pa. po. §. ſi. d. c. patrem.

[r] Vid. the Words of Joh. in his Collect. becauſe the Book, which I have ſeen is very falſe.

[s] Incip. Unam Sanctam.

[*] C. Cum Marthæ de Celebr. Miſſ.

whom I have, or may have, Title, you [t] do thereby alſo exclude me. And if the Grandchild ſhould ſucceed by the Perſon of his Mother, ſhe being excluded, he cannot come in; as in the Caſe propounded [u] Speculator hath alſo noted. Thus far againſt England.

AN. DOM. 1369. An. Regni Angliæ XLIII. Franciæ XXX.

Here follow Arguments for King Edward's Right to the Crown of France.

To the Contrary, for King Edward theſe Proofs do ſtand: And Firſt, We may be induced to be of Opinion, that the Statute beforemention'd ſhould not be of force: For that the Daughter ſhould ſucceed in the Inheritance of her Parents it is a Precept of the Law of God, as it is expreſſed, Numbers XXVII. v. 6, 7, 8. upon Petition of the Daughters of Zelophehad; whereto ſerved that of Tobit VI. v. 11. & 12. It is alſo a Precept of the Law of Nature; which [x] is alſo confirmed by the Canon Law, and by the laſt Civil Law; whereby all difference of Sex and of Kindred, whether by Father or Mother, is taken [y] away. Therefore ſeeing it is againſt the Law of God, the Law of Nature, the Law Canon and Civil, to exclude a Woman from Succeſſion to a Kingdom, which is carried in Courſe of Succeſſion by Right of Blood, as the [z] Law expreſſeth, and as Baldus after Inno: [a] firmly holdeth, it followeth, that this Statute is not of any ſtrength in [b] Law.

But admitting, that this Statute ſhould be of ſtrength, yet ſhall it not hurt King Edward, that his Mother, althô diſabled thereby, ſhould the leſs tranſmit the Right of Royalty unto him. This is plain: For where there is Ability in regard of the Common Law, althô there be a Diſability by a ſpecial Law; yet this Impediment of Diſability ſhall not be any hindrance, that a Right ſhould not be conveyed by ſuch a diſabled Perſon to another; as appeareth by the Law, where [c] a Stranger being of Ability by the Common Law, althô diſabled by ſpecial Law, to receive a Benefit by Title there expreſſed, yet he tranſmitteth that Benefit to another. Therefore ſeeing Iſabell is of Ability by Common Law, as it is manifeſt by the Premiſes, althô I ſhould confeſs, that ſhe is diſabled by ſpecial Law of the ſaid Statute, yet this Right of the Kingdom may be carried from her unto King Edward.

Again, by a Diſabled Meane (ſo it be not altogether of no Ability) a Right may [d] be tranſmitted to another, which the Interpreters of the Law do note, in handling the Queſtion of a Procurator not enabled, having a Warrant to make a [e] Subſtitution. But here the Meane, which is Iſabell, is not altogether of no Ability, as appeareth by that which hath been ſaid: Therefore, &c. And that Iſabell, being the Meane, is not altogether diſabled, by the Statute, whereof we ſpake, it is plain: For the Right of a Kingdom is carried by way of Inheritance, in reſpect of the Royal Blood, as it appeareth by that which hath been alledged, and ſaid in the Firſt Reaſon of this part. But the Right of Blood cannot by any Covenant of Man by any Civil Law be altogether broken, or determin'd againſt. Therefore the Right of Royal Blood, which is in Iſabell, remaineth ſtill enabled, at leaſt in Habit and Power to this Kind [f] of Succeſſion. It ſeemeth alſo, that this Royal Blood in Iſabell, is conſiderable two ways, One, as Royal Blood; another, as Royal Blood qualified. Therefore althô ſuch Blood may be ſaid to be diſabled from Succeſſion to the Kingdom, in regard it is in a Woman; yet can it not be ſo ſaid, in regard that it is ſimply [g] Royal: In which regard it ſhall be eſteem'd of Ability to tranſmit and carry a Right to another.

But althô I ſhould confeſs, which yet I do not, that by ſuch Statute the Mother is altogether diſabled from Succeſſion, yet it ſeemeth, We may hold, that King Edward is to be admitted to the ſame Right. And that by a notable Law, [h] where it is ſaid, that althô the Mother be incapable of the Succeſſion there mentioned, yet others, who are deſcended of her muſt be admitted, as if the Mother were not. For that muſt not hurt or prejudice, which cannot help or benefit a Man, Ergò, &c.

Yea, althô We ſhould grant, that the Mother is ſo diſabled, that ſhe can tranſmit no Right unto King Edward; yet may he make claim from his Grandfather by the Mother, to wit from King Philip. This is proved by that [i] Law, where the Father being baniſhed, the Sons do not loſe thoſe Rights, which proceed from their Anceſtors, or elſe from Nature. And therefore they ſhall be Lawfull Heirs to their Brethren and Tutors [or Guardians] to their Kindred, notwithſtanding the Miſadventure of their Father. In like ſort the Royal Succeſſion ſhall be due unto King Edward, becauſe it cometh to him by his Lineage and Blood, notwithſtanding the Calamity of his Mother.

To the ſame purpoſe ſerveth another Law, [k] where a Son begotten after that his Father hath loſt thrô his own fault the Dignity of a Senator, ſhall be the Off-ſpring of a Senator from the Perſon of his Grandfather who retaineth that Dignity. Where the

[t] C. quamvis de ſen. & re judicat.
[u] Guliel. Durandi in ſpeculo Juris. tit. de Succeſſ. ab Inteſt. Verſic Quid ſi.
[x] Auth. de Her. & falc. §. ſemper & ibid. Glo. not. in ver. filiis ff. de Bon. Damnatorum. l. cum ratio & ibi ſimiliter bona. Gloſſ. in verb. Parentes.
[y] D. Auth. poſt Liberos.
[z] In C. Grandi de ſup. negl. præl. lib. VI.
[a] In Repertorio ſuo ſuper Inno. in verb. Rex, quæſtione 2.
[b] Arg. Inſt. de Jur. Nat. Gent. & Civili §. ſed Naturalia. ff. de ſepulchro violato l. 3. §. Divus funct. notat. Bartholi in l. omnes populi in 3. quæſt. Principali ſuæ Repetitionis ubi videte & notat. Cy. C. de precibus imp. offerend. l. reſcriptum. q. 3. unà cum notat. Joh. Fabri in d. §. ſed Naturalia.
[c] ff. de Legatis præſtand. l. 3. §. ſed ſi proponas.
[d] ff. Quod cujuſque Univerſ. nomine. l. item eorum §. ſi Decuriones.
[e] Joh. And. in de Religioſis in fi. de Procur. ubi etiam Geſſal. in in verb. ſubſtituere & Paulus in verb. Commiſſum & Card. ext. de uſur. c. 2. & junct. in c. fi. de Procur.
[f] Ar. l. Jus Agnationis. ff. de pactis l. Jura ſanguinis. ff. de Reg. Jur. & l. Abdicatio. C. de patriâ poteſtate.
[g] Arg. l. Celſus ff. de Arbitris.
[h] ff. ad Tertull. l. 2. §. fi.
[i] ff. de Interdict. & Relegat. l. 3.
[k] L. Emancipatum in fi. ff. de Senator.

An. Dom. 1369. An. Regni Angliæ XLIII. Franciæ XXX.

the [l] Father is Patron of a Libertine, or Freed-Man, and by whom Right of Patronage ſhould be tranſported to the Son; if he loſeth his Right thrô his own Default, becauſe he compelleth his Freed-Man to take an Oath, yet doth not the Son alſo loſe his Right. And ſo the Father may without Offence be ſued by the Libertine, but the Son cannot. Divers other [m] Laws to the ſame purpoſe may very aptly be alledged.

So then, King Edward may make his Claim from the Perſon of his Anceſtors, althô he cannot from the Perſon of his Mother. The Diſability of his Mother is no hurt or hindrance unto him, as it appeareth by the Law, where [n] the Preſcription of the Second Poſſeſſor is not interrupted, or any ways infeſted, althô ſuit was brought againſt the Firſt Poſſeſſor. Becauſe the Succeſſor taketh no ſtrength or encreaſe of Title from him, that went before. Ergò, &c.

To the ſame purpoſe other [o] Laws may be alledged; but moſt ſpecially the Law Filius ff. de ſuis & legitimis Hered. which ſerveth fitly to this purpoſe, by an Argument taken from the contrary ſenſe. For there it is ſaid, that if a Son be debarred from ſucceeding his Father, and a Stranger appointed Heir upon Condition, during the Dependency whereof, the Son ſo debarred hath a Son Lawfully begotten, who is Grandchild in reſpect of the Grandfather then deceaſed. Althô the Condition ſhould fail, yet the Lawfull Inheritance ſhall not come to the Grandchild born after his Grandfathers Death; the Reaſon is, becauſe he was conceived after the Death of his Grandfather. Therefore from the Contrary ſenſe, if he had been conceived during the Life of his Grandfather, his Lawfull Inheritance ſhould have come unto him, althô his Father being in the Middle, ſhould have been diſabled before his Conception, as there he was. So conſequently in the caſe here in Queſtion, ſeeing King Edward is ſaid to have been conceived, and alſo born, during the Life of his Grandfather, King Philip, as it is preſuppoſed in the State of the Queſtion, the Lawfull Inheritance of his Grandfather Philip (which is the Kingdom) ſhould come unto him, notwithſtanding the Diſability of his Mother.

Again, that this Statute, which diſableth the Mother, ſhould in no caſe be hurtfull to King Edward, it may thus be proved. The Words of a Statute muſt not be extended to a caſe, not expreſly compriſed [p] within the ſame. Eſpecially, for that Statutes are taken in Law to be of ſtrict Interpretation, as [q] Bartholus noteth. But by the Words of the Statute a Man is not excluded, and the Feminine Gender doth never comprehend the Maſculine, eſpecially in Matters, that are [r] Odious. Ergò, &c.

Again, the Diſpoſition of a Teſtator, and of the Law are eſteemed equal: For the laſt Will of the Dead is a [s] Law. But the Teſtator by excluding the next in Blood, excludeth [t] not thereby his Grandchildren; and therefore a Law or Statute doth not ſo exclude.

Again, whereſoever the Reaſon of a Law, or of a Statute ceaſeth, the Law or Statute [u] doth ceaſe. But in the caſe in Queſtion, the Reaſon of the Statute ceaſeth in regard of King Edward, becauſe it ſeemed to reſpect only the weakneſs of the Sex of Women, of which Sex King Edward is not.

Again, Statutes, Laws, and Cuſtoms, which are brought in againſt common Reaſon, are [x] moſt ſtrictly to be taken in their proper Terms and Caſes, and in no wiſe to be extended by Conſequence to other Caſes. But this Statute is againſt common Reaſon, as it is deduced in the firſt ground for this part. Therefore ſeeing it ſpeaketh only of a Woman, it muſt not be extended to her Son. As in reaſon of Divine Juſtice, Original Sin is propagated to Children from their Parents, who are altogether freed from Sin by Baptiſm: By the ſame Reaſon it ſeemeth, that the Royal Succeſſion may paſs to the Son from his Mother, who was altogether deprived of the ſame.

Again, that in the Caſe now in Queſtion, King Edward is more ſtrong in Right, than King Philip, his Great Uncles Son, it is thus proved. Althô the Son repreſenteth the Perſon of his Father or Mother deceaſed, when he joyneth with his Uncles ſurviving, or their Sons, in ſucceeding to an Uncle or Aunt deceaſed, yet when he cometh to ſucceed with Kindred more remote, to wit, with his Great Uncle or his Sons (as it is in the Caſe now queſtion'd) he ſhall exclude that remote Kindred, and ſucceed alone by his own Perſon, and ſhall not repreſent the Perſon of his Father or Mother, and from thence receive either Benefit or [y] Diſadvantage. Therefore althô in our Caſe the Mother of King Edward be diſabled, yet ſhall he in his own Perſon ſucceed and exclude the ſaid Philip, becauſe he is further off in Degree, to wit, in the Fourth Degree from King Charles (of whoſe Succeſſion this Debate doth ariſe) whereas King Edward is in the Third Degree.

Again,

[l] ff. de jus voc. l. adoptivum in fi.
[m] ff. de jure Patron. l. Divi fratres. §. fi. & ib. glo. not. & facit glo. in d. l. Adoptivum in fi. & l. Emancipatum in fi. ſup. allegat. & Eb. Bart. Will. de Cun. viz. in l. Emancipatum. & facit ſimiliter. ff. de bon. l. b. l. in ſervitutem. §. ſi Patroni.
[n] L. 1. C. de Præſcript. long. temp.
[o] L. fi. C. Unde Liberi. & l. 1. C. de Edicto ſucceſſorio, cum ſimilibus junct. glo. in d. l. finali.
[p] Ar. ff. ſol. Matr. l. ſi verò. §. de viro.
[q] In l. omnes populi. ff. de juſt. & jure in 6. queſt. principali circa med.
[r] ff. de leg. 2. l. ſi ità ſit ſcript. & nota Cyn. c. de ſervis fugit l. quicunque.
[s] Ut in Aut. C 7 §. diſponat. Coll. IV.
[t] ff. de lib. & poſth. l. ſignis Poſthumus.
[u] L. Adigere §. quamvis. ff. de jure Patron.
[x] L. quod non ratione junct. l. quod contra ff. de Legibus.
[y] Not. Cyn. in d. Auth. poſt Liberos.

AN. DOM. 1369. An. Regni Angliæ XLIII. Franciæ XXX.

Again, it being granted, that they are equal in Degree, as they are not, yet it seemeth, that King Edward is to be preferred. For Right of Inheritance in proper Nature is principally due unto Deſcendants; whereupon the Law [z] ſaith, that in Succeſſion to thoſe, who die inteſtate, the Firſt Place is given to Children, becauſe they are [a] Deſcendants. But it is certain, that in reſpect of King Charles (of whoſe Succeſſion we now do treat) King Edward is in the Third Degree of the Collateral deſcending Line: But Philip is in the Fourth Degree in the equal Collateral Line. Therefore ſeeing that King Edward not only hath Prerogative of Degree, but alſo is favoured by reaſon of Deſcent, it followeth, that He is to be preferred before Philip, &c.

[z] L. Nam eiſi parentibus. ff. de inoff. teſtam.
[a] Inſt. de Her. qui ab inteſt. in princip.

Nonnulla deſiderantur.

VII. The Reaſons, which the French alledge for excluding Edward the Third, King of England, and his Poſterity both from the Kingdom, and the reſt of his Inheritance in France, for Brevity ſake I ſhall reduce to theſe few Heads; That either a Woman had Right to ſucceed or not; if a Woman had, then the Three Daughters of Lewis Hutin, Philip the Long, and Charles the Fair, ſhould have had the Right before the Mother of King Edward, who was but Siſter to thoſe three Brethren Kings, becauſe the Daughters ought to be preferred before the Siſter in the Succeſſion of their Fathers, as every Man doth know. [But here lies the Fallacy, that whereas 'tis acknowledged on King Edward's Part, that the Daughters Perſons are excluded, and the Siſters alſo, but not their Male Iſſue, thoſe Daughters at the time of the Vacancy of the Kingdom by the Death of King Charles the Fair, had neither of them any Iſſue Male, but King Edward the Son of the Siſter was then a Male, and actually King of England.] Then is urged the Force of the Salique Law, which is ſaid to have been approved and confirmed by Charles the Great, by which means, ſay they, King Edward could not be admitted to the Crown of France, ſince he could lay no Claim but by his Mother, who could not give that to Him which ſhe her Self never had, nor in Right could or ought to have. And to this purpoſe or effect, the Uſe and Cuſtom hath been at all times notoriouſly obſerved within the Realm of France, that when a Woman is expelled from any Succeſſion, or from Succeeding in a Fee, the Sons which are deſcended of her, are always precluded and excluded from the ſame. Neither ſhall it ever be found, that a Woman hath ſucceeded to the Crown of France, or [b] given Right of Succeſſion to a Man or to a Woman. And ſo it appeareth evidently, that the Law, whereby a Woman is utterly debarred from the Succeſſion to the Realm of France, was not made in the Time of King Edward, nor of his Mother, nor in Prejudice of them. For in Caſe a Woman might or ſhould ſucceed to the Crown of France, that Law ſhould have been prejudicial to the Daughters of the Three Brothers Kings, who Reigned ſucceſſively in France, and not to the mother of Edward, who was but Siſter of the ſaid Three Brothers.

[b] The Falſity of this appears l. 1. c. 22. §. 1. p. 289.

Then it is urged, that King Edward before he began the War, had done Liege Homage unto King Philip de Valois; and it could not ſtand, that King Edward ſhould be Supream Lord, and alſo Vaſſal of one and the ſame Thing. And that this Liege Homage remain'd in the Treaſury of the Kings Charters at Paris, in the Letters Patents of King Edward, with a ſilk Label and green Wax, the Tranſcript whereof is extant [c] in the former Part of our Hiſtory.

[c] Vid. Lib. 1. c. 3. §. 1. p. 37.

That yet notwithſtanding King Edward unjuſtly, and without good Tittle, made mortal War by notorious Attempts upon the King of France his Leige Lord, he laid Hand alſo upon the Perſon of his ſaid Lord, incurring the Crime of Felony and Treaſon; wherein the ſaid King Edward grievouſly offended, and ſo loſt by way of Confiſcation all that which he had within this Realm, whether in Aquitain, or any other Place. Inſomuch as yet further, neither he nor his Succeſſors were afterwards capable, or ought in Terms of Juſtice to have the ſame Lands and Dominions. So much is the Crime of Treaſon by all Laws, by all Rights, by all Men of juſt Judgment diſallowed and condemned.

That afterwads King John being taken Priſoner by Miſadventure of War, a certain Treaty was made at Calais in the Year 1360, whereby the Engliſh had the Dutchy of Aquitain, and the County of Ponthieu and Monſtreul, and ſhould have had alſo a certain Summ of Money, whereof they received Fourteen Thouſand Pieces of Gold, which was no otherwiſe conſented unto, but that they ſhould avoid all the Villages and Fortreſſes, which their Followers or other Adherents then held in the Realm of France. And further, King Edward ſhould have ſent his Meſſengers or Procurators unto Bruges, within a Year after that Treaty to accompliſh certain Matters, which both He and his Sons, and other Great Lords of England had taken Oath upon the Holy Evangeliſts, and upon the Holy Sacrament to perform: And yet they neither came, nor ſent to the said place of Bruges. And so the Messengers of the King of France expected them a long time, for performance and accomplishment of that which had been agreed and promised on his Part. And as for the Avoidance out of the said Towns and Castles, many Knights and Esquires, and Others yet alive do know and can testifie; as they, who oftentimes armed themselves, and travelled for Recovery of them by Sieges, Assaults and other Means, to the great Charge of the King of France. Whereupon it followeth, that the English are bound to the Restitution of all that which was deliver'd unto them by the said Treaty of Calais, upon Condition and Limitation before expressed, together with the Charges and the Interest since that time, and the same Treaty is to be held void in Law.

An. Dom. 1369. An. Regni Angliæ XLIII. Franciæ XXX.

Then 'tis declared, how King Philip who was Earl of Valois, succeeded to the Crown of France, as next Heir Male of the said Crown, drawing his Descent from Male to Male, by the Right Line of Holy King Lewis: Whereas it is but 214 Years or thereabouts, since the English had first any thing in Aquitain. It is further alledged, how the English by acting many Outrages and Mischiefs disabled themselves from holding the Dutchy of Aquitain, and the County of Ponthieu and Monstreul, unless they would acknowledge the King of France for their Sovereign Lord. And therefore that the said King of France hath resolved by strong Hand, and by way of Affecting the Execution of Justice, to cause the said Lands and Dominions to be reduced into his own Possession, and to be annexed to the Right of the Crown of France. For that a Soveraign Lord hath no clearer Means of Purchase or Encrease, than by way of Confiscation; especially of that which riseth upon the Crime of Treason, as it is in this present Case.

It was also set forth at large by the Letters and Rescripts of King Edward, how the King of France never renounced either the Reversion or Soveraignty of those Lands, which were deliver'd to the King of England by the Treaty of Calais: And it was said by way of Corollary, that neither the Dutchy of Aquitain, nor any other Lands whatsoever ought ever to be deliver'd to the English upon any Respect, because (among other Reasons) the English never yet had, altho' it were but one Foot of Land in France, whether it were by Marriage or otherwise, but in the end they always raised Wars and Troubles against the King and State of France.

And further there were noted and set down many Expeditions made into Aquitain, both before and since the time of Charles the Great, occasion'd by Justice of the Kings of France, for Condemning and Depriving many Dukes of Aquitain, because of their Rebellions and other bad Behaviour, declaring manifestly, that the said Dutchy of Aquitain was sometime the Proper Right and Inheritance of the Kings of France; and that did evidently appear, in that Charles the Great made and ordained Lewis the Gentle, his Eldest Son, King of the said Country of Aquitain; as King Dagobert long before made Hubert his Brother by the Fathers side only. Many other things are there contained, which pretend to answer all that the English could say or alledge: But We shall now hear what the King of England could say in his own Behalf, when We have first set down a short Genealogical Table of the Descent from St. Lewis to King Edward and Philip of Valois.

THE

VIII. THE PEDIGREE OF THE Kings of FRANCE
From Philip the Son of St. Lewis untill Charles the Fair.

IX. Reasons alledged by the KING of ENGLAND for his Right and Title to the Kingdom of FRANCE.

UPON Suppoſal, as it is evident and notorious in Fact, that Philip of Famous Memory, ſometime King of France, the Father of Charles of Honourable Remembrance King of France, laſt deceaſed, and of the moſt Gracious Lady, Iſabell Queen of England our Mother, was our Grandfather by the Mothers Side: Then was no Male ſurviving, nearer than We to the ſame King Charles, at the time of his Death, of all thoſe, who were deſcended with him from our Grandfather Philip Uncle to our Adversary. Now the Person of a Woman is not capable of that Kingdom by a Law therein anciently observed, which Law by way of final Cause respecting the Favour of that Realm, lest the State thereof should decline under the Weak Government of a Woman, by Excluding the Person of a Woman doth not therefore exclude the Person of a Man descended of a Woman so excluded: Lest Matters Odious should be extended (which is Odious in Law) from Person to Person, from Sex to Sex, from Cause to Cause, from Hatred to Favour: And lest the Feminine Gender (which is contrary to all Rules of Law) should comprise the Masculine, especially in a case of an Odious Nature. For to this end the Law before mention'd excludeth the Weakness of Women from bearing Rule, that more Profitable Provision might be made for the State, and that the next Male, no otherwise debarred, might be Assumed into her Place, especially to that Right, which did not first spring from the Mother so excluded, but is originally derived and propagated from the Grandfather to the Grandchild. Otherwise by this odious Enlarging another Absurdity in Justice would ensue, that the Nearer Collateral should be excluded, and the more distant and remote brought in: Seeing that by the Law of Nature and of Nations, Brothers and Sisters and their Sons are preferred in mutual Succession before other Collaterals in another Line. So that upon this Statute, which is made in Favour of the Kingdom, and in Hatred of a Woman being debarred from the Kingdom, Occasion should arise both of Violation to Law, and of Injury to such Males as are descended from a Woman.

1 Reaſon, Proximity in the Deſcending Line.

An. Dom. 1369. An. Regni Angliæ XLIII Franciæ XXX.

2 Reason, Restraint of things odious.
3 Reason, the Femin. Gender compriseth not the Masculine.
4 Reason, Derivation of Right from the Grandfather by the Mother.
5 Reason, Absurdity in Law.
6 Reason, The Descending preferred before the Collateral.

Neither can We conceive, that the Intent of the Law here mention'd is so unjust, as that the Mother and the Son upon Dislike Reason should be condemned and punished alike. Yea, by the Contrary Judgment of the same Law, whereby the Mother is expelled from Succession, the Son entring into the same Degree of his Mother, succeedeth in her Place; like unto that Son, who riseth into the Degree of his Father or Mother deceased, that he may be received in equal Terms with his Uncles to the Succession of his Grandfather: That so the Sorrowfull Mother being stripped of her Royal Inheritance by Rigour of this Statute should in Right receive some Solace by Substitution of her Son, and not one Heaviness to be heaped upon another, which the Upright Consideration of Law doth abhorr; as we see even where a Charge of Calamity cometh, not by the Law, but by Misadventure; as in that Law, whereby the Custom is condemned, which permitteth another Man to take the Goods of them that suffer shipwreck. By which Reason that which is corrected in expres Disposition of Law, for avoiding an Encrease of Grief, is more strongly prohibited in the secret Disposition.

7 Reason, the cause or reason of the Law ceasing.
8 Reason, the Son entreth into the Degree of his Mother to succeed his Grandfather.
9 Reason, One vexation not to be added to another.

Let it therefore more than fully suffice, that by the Law of the Realm of France, the Mother is cut from the Royal Stem, not by any Default in her Self, but by the Fact of Nature which framed her a Woman: And that by Expres Law she suffereth a certain Shipwreck in her own Disinheriting; althô she be not by any secret Consequence of the same Law, contrary to the Course of Justice, wrecked again with her Disinherited Son: And so against all Rules and Reasons of Law, one should be burthen'd with anothers Hate. Whereas the Right, from which the Mother is excluded, is in such sort given unto the Son, that the Mother receiveth nothing by this Office and Charge of the Son. So likewise we shall find Punishment enlarged without Offence, whereas it should be mollified and restrained, even where there is Offence. Otherwise, if we should understand, that because the Mother is not to be admitted to the Kingdom, the Son must be in Right expelled from the same; the Kingdom of the Jews (contrary to the Foundation of our Faith) should not lawfully have come to JESUS CHRIST, who not by Society of Man, but by the Working of God, was born of the Virgin Mary, a Woman descended from the Royal Stock of David, neither admitted, nor [perhaps] to be admitted to that Kingdom; yet we do assuredly believe, that he was then True and Lawfull King of the Jews. And far be it from our thoughts, that JESUS the Son of David by Royal Succession, should either break or unty the Knot of Observing the Law, seeing he came to accomplish the Law, and not to break it. And this Excellent Example of Lawfull Succession may reasonably stop their Mouthes, who babble against our Right to the Realm of France, viz. That they be not separated, either by Constitution or Construction of the Law, in Regard of Lawfull Degree and Order of Succeeding, whom in that Regard the same Reason joyneth as Equal.

10 Reason, One not to be burthen'd with anothers Hate.
11 Reason, Punishments to be restrained.
12 Reason, from an Instance of great Authority.

Neither were we duly called in this Business, which did so greatly concern our Prejudice; And moreover our Procurators, who were then in France, that for Us and in our Name, they might propose and oppose what should be Expedient, were not only not admit-13 Reason, because not called.

admitted in Judgment, but repelled with terrible Commination of Death. And ſo that which was paſſed by the Twelve Peers of France, doth nothing relieve or juſtifie our Adverſary. And if the Examination of our Caſe had pertained to the ſaid Peers, which it did not, becauſe they are not our Competent Judges: Yet they ſetting apart the Office of Judges, did unjuſtly (in regard of Us, to whoſe Minority, to whoſe Tender Age at that time Favour ſhould have been afforded) perform the office of open Spoilers, whoſe Proceſs in Prejudice of Us, althô it had been made by Competent Judges, our Minority ſhould have rendred of no Effect. And yet the ſame could not ſtand in Force againſt a Man of Age, being debarred from ſuch Defence as proceedeth from the Law of Nature, which cannot be taken away by any Prince or Poſitive Law of State.

An. Dom. 1369. An. Regni Angliæ XLIII. Franciæ XXX.

14 Reaſon, becauſe in Minority.

Let us ſee now, what flattereth the Conſcience of him, that poſſeſſeth the Kingdom of France, due and devolved unto Us by Right; upon what Favour of Law he feedeth, with what Colour of Juſtice he is cloaked, when he wanteth Ground of Law to ſuſtain the Juſtice of his Cauſe againſt Us. Among other things he is ſaid to pretend Objections taken from Us; the Homage which We acknowledged unto his Grandfather for the Dutchy of Aquitain, and the Oath, which We made unto him for the ſame. That He, who could ſay nothing in his proper Right, might find ſomewhat to ſay by fetching Objections to oppoſe, from Us: Suppoſing it ſufficient to ſupplant a Child, as We were then, that he had againſt Us Full and Free Rule in the Realm of France.

Two Objections, Homage and Oath.

But the Firſt of theſe is taken away by Authority of ſpecial and expreſs Law, whereby a Minor is relieved in his Harms, inſomuch as an Act tending to his Grievance is altogether void. Therefore the Acknowledgment of Homage done by a Minor, overcarried by Weakneſs of Age to his Exceeding Loſs, and alſo (as it appeareth by the great Prejudices upon the ſame Homage intended againſt Him) circumvented, doth not endammage that Minor, whom the ſpecial and good Proviſion of Law preſerveth from Harm. For who will not ſay, that a Minor is both harmed and deceived, if by acknowledgment of Homage He ſhall unduly both ſubject his Dutchy, and alſo loſe the Kingdom of France, when (as it is ſaid) it is Notorious in Law, that this Minor is King of France, to whom alone and to none other, as King that Dutchy is ſubject. For when the Duke of Aquitain becometh alſo King of France, the Dignity of a Duke ſettleth in the Kingdom, and is incorporated and confounded with the Royal Dignity, and the Name thereof is extinguiſhed, as being a leſs thing adjoyned to the Greater: Even as when a ſmall River runneth into a greater, both the Waters and the Name are therein drowned. For who will ſay, that ever it was thought, that a Minor in expreſs Terms acknowledging Homage for a Dutchy, ſhall ſecretly loſe his Right to a moſt Excellent Kingdom? And ſo in the Speech utter'd by a Minor, exceedingly both damnified and deceived, not only that ſhall be comprehended, which is expreſſed, being reſpectfully not great, but that alſo which is very Great, being neither expreſſed nor imagined. Whereas if ſmall Matters be expreſſed, and a General Clauſe followeth, the Clauſe compriſeth no Matter of higher Nature, than was before expreſſed. Neither doth the Law intend that Thing to be ſpoken, which appeareth not to have been meant.

The Firſt Objection anſwered.

The Second Objection of the Oath made by the Minor in acknowledging his Homage, is altogether untrue, as it may appear by ſight of the Homage, which was acknowledged. And that Argument which is ſaid to be inforced againſt the ſame Minor, viz. that Homage ſimply made is taken by Cuſtom to preſuppoſe and imply an Oath, cannot work any harm to the Minor: For ſuch Cuſtom is deny'd, and althô it ſhould without prejudice be granted; yet is it not of force (as before is touched) to hurt a Minor, that by doing Homage he ſhall be ſaid ſo to be engaged by his Oath; that the Extremity of the Novell Conſtitution, Sacramenta Impuberum, ſhould take place againſt him. For ſeeing that Authentick Conſtitution doth rigorouſly and newly diſpoſe againſt Wretched Minors, who are endamaged, in that an Oath ſhall prejudice them, in Contracts concerning Affairs of their Eſtates; this muſt be underſtood of a true Corporal Oath, Generally for reſtraint of things, that are Odious, and eſpecially, that thoſe Acts, which take away Religious Relief of Minors, be not drawn into Conſequence. For a Civil or Imaginary Act is not of equal Force with a Natural Act, which is required in an Oath, to the Prejudice of a Minor; where the Law doth not ſpecially ordain, what ſhall be held of like eſtimation.

The ſecond Colour removed.

Anſwer to the Novel Conſtitution Sacramenta Impuberum.

Alſo the Words of the ſaid Authentick do exclude the Reaſon of an imaginary Oath; for that it ſaith not ſimply----The Oaths of them under Age, but----The Oaths

of

An. Dom. 1369. An. Regni Angliæ XLIII. Franciæ XXX.

of them under Age voluntarily made. For an Oath voluntarily made by a Minor is of ſuch a Nature, that it can by no reaſon be equall'd by an Oath, which a Minor ſhall be imagin'd, or ſuppoſed, to have made, except ſpecial Conſtitution of Law ſhall ſo provide. Thoſe Oaths likewiſe, which are called Voluntary, or are ſuppoſed by General Cuſtom, receive no derogation by ſpecial privilege, granted unto Minors. Alſo by Authority of Great Doctors the ſaid Authentick requireth an Actual Oath to exclude a Man from impugning an Act by reaſon of his Minority in years. Of whom ſome, moved perhaps by too free favour to prevent and provide againſt the Grievances of Minors, do then only admit of this Authenticall, when full Puberty, to wit, the Age of XVIII Years, is accompliſhed: That the Written Rigour to the cruel undoing of Minors, may ſo proceed, that it ſhall rather fall than riſe. But here it was not ſworn in that manner, or by ſuch a Perſon, the Minor being within the Compaſs and Courſe of that time. Yea, the Truth is; That no Oath was made at all.

Thus were the ſeveral Cauſes of the two Kings ſet forth and maintain'd by Law and Argument, but 'tis ſeldom heard, that ever a Crown was won by pleading; the ſword being too Powerfull for the Law, and Prejudice more prevalent than Juſtice or Reaſon. Wherefore now we haſten to the ſecond Argument, which was to be diſcuſſed in the Field, but as yet the two Main Diſputants were not matched together. However [a] firſt of all the Duke of Guelders and the Duke of Juliers, who were perfectly Engliſh in Heart, as well as in Blood, took it in extream Indignation, that the French King had ſent a Defiance to ſo Mighty a Prince, as King Edward, by the Hands of a mean Valet; horribly in their minds blaming both him and his Council, for putting ſo unworthy an Affront on ſo Honourable a Monarch. "For, ſaid they, the War between two ſuch "Potent Kings ought ſurely to have been publiſhed and denounced by Perſons of the "beſt Rank and Quality, as Prelates, either Biſhops or Abbots, or ſome Noble Baron "or Valiant Knight at leaſt; and not by a ſimple Valet, as the French King had moſt "inſolently and preſumptuouſly done. Wherefore they vow'd forthwith to ſend and defie the French King, reſolving ſhortly after to invade France with Fire and Sword, and there to leave ſuch Marks of their Reſentment, as ſhould be legible for more than 20 Years following. Althô this their Reſolution was diſappointed by the Celerity of the French King: For hereupon the Earl of St. Paul, being order'd to joyn with the Duke of Brabant, went againſt theſe two Dukes of Juliers and Guelders. Toward the Declining of this Year [b] the two Parties met together in a place, called Baeſwilder, between the Rhine and the Meuſe; where after a Bloody Fight, on the one ſide, the Duke of Juliers was ſlain, and on the other the Duke of Brabant taken Priſoner; but ſoon after by the Emperours means he was deliver'd and ſo this Matter was ended.

[a] Froiſ. c. 252. f. 153.

[b] Mezeray p. 83.

CHAPTER the SIXTH.

The CONTENTS.

I. The Duke of Burgundy Marries the Earl of Flanders his Daughter. II. King Edward renews Friendſhip with the King of Navarre. III. Sr. Euſtace Dambreticourt ſent by the Prince of Wales to Montauban. IV. The French lay Siege to Ardres, but riſe in Deſpair. V. Realville taken by the French: The Engliſh make fierce War in the Lands of the Rebel Lords of Gaſcogne. VI. Sr. Thomas Wake maintains his Poſt: La Roche de Pozay taken by the French; the Lord of Chauvigney falls off to the French, and the Lord of Rochechoûart impriſon'd upon ſuſpicion. VII. The Lord James Audley makes havock in the Lord of Chauvigney's Lands. VIII. Sr. Robert Knolles ſent forth by the Prince upon an Expedition, brings over Sr. Perdiccas of Albret, and 300 Companions to his ſide, and lays Siege to Durmel; where he is joyn'd by the Lord Chandos and others from Montauban; by whom Moiſſac was taken in their way. IX. The Engliſh riſe from before Durmel, and ſit down before Domme; but get nothing there; however they take Gavaches, Foines, Roquemadour; and Villefranche. X. The Earl of Cambridge takes Bourdeilles after a long Siege by ſtratagem. XI. The Lord Chandos returns to the Prince having ſettled Affairs.

fairs. XII. The Engliſh Companions take Bellepeche, and therein the Duke of Bourbon's Mother. XIII. King Charles preparing to invade England, King Edward ſets himſelf in a poſture to receive him. XIV. And ſends over the Duke of Lancaſter with an Army to Calais. XV. The Engliſh take the Caſtle of La Roche Sur Yon. XVI. The Lord James Audley Seneſchal of Aquitaine, returning into England, is ſucceeded by the Lord John Chandos. XVII. The Vicount of Rochechoüart, being releaſed from Priſon, revolts from the Prince and defies him. XVIII. John Duke of Lancaſter makes great havock in Ponthieu; at which News King Charles leaves off his Deſign of invading England, and ſends the Duke of Burgundy againſt him with a Mighty Army. XIX. The Duke of Lancaſter goes forth to meet him, and encamps at Tournehan: The two Armies confront one another for many days. XX. The Lord Chandos intending an Expedition, deſires the Earl of Pembroke's Company; but is deny'd; however he goes forth, and does what he pleaſes in Anjou, Touraine, and the Lands of the Vicount of Rochechoüart; and on Proſpect of a great Advantage over the French, ſends again to the Earl of Pembroke to come and joyn him; but is again deny'd: Whereupon the Lord Chandos deſiſted for that time. XXI. The Earl of Pembroke deals ſeverely in Anjou and Touraine, and the Lands of the Vicount of Rochechoüart, but being ſurpris'd by the French at Puirenon, loſes many Men, and is beſieged in a Church-yard; whence he ſends to the Lord Chandos for Succour; and being hotly aſſaulted the next day, ſends again. XXII. The Lord Chandos hardly at laſt reſolves to help him; but upon News of his approach, the Frenchmen retire. XXIII. The Death of Philippa, Queen of England, her Tomb, Epitaph, and Praiſe. XXIV. The Lord Robert of Namur's Quarters beaten up by the French; but he beats them back. XXV. A ſtory of the Earl of Warwick exploded. XXVI. The French-men break up, and march off in the Night; whereupon the Duke of Lancaſter returns to Calais to refreſh his Men. XXVII. The Earl of Pembroke makes another Expedition into Anjou, and takes Pont de Cé, St. Maure, and other places. XXVIII. The Duke of Lancaſter's March thrô Picardy into Normandy, with Deſign to burn the French Fleet. But the Earl of St. Paul being got into Harfleur with 200 Spears, ſaves the Town, and prevents their Deſign. XXIX. Sr. Nicolas Lovaine takes the Lord Hugh de Chaſtillon, Maſter of the Croſsbows of France. XXX. The Duke of Lancaſter returns to Calais; The Earl of Warwick dies. XXXI. The Duke of Lancaſter returns into England, and finds himſelf a Widdower. The Death of the Earl of Suffolk and of the Biſhop of Exceſter. XXXII. The French King raiſes a Tax.

AN. DOM. 1369. An. Regni Angliæ XLIII. Franciæ XXX.

I. WE ſpake before, how King Edward labour'd earneſtly about Five Years ago, to make up a Match between the Daughter of the Earl of Flanders, who was Dowager to the laſt Young Duke of Burgundy [a] and the moſt Wealthy Heireſs in all Chriſtendom, and a Son of his, named Edmund, Earl of Cambridge; all the particular Negotiations of which intended Match are both too long, and alſo unworthy to be related. The Earl of Flanders [b] himſelf was not unwilling, and had alſo enter'd Solemn Engagements by Covenant to promote and effect the Nuptials: But the Lady Margaret her Grandmother, a Frenchwoman, both in Blood and Affection, oppoſed her ſelf againſt this Alliance with all her Power, being rather minded to fortifie the Houſe of France. Wherefore ſhe preſt her Son with all the Vehemence imaginable, even ſo far as to threaten [c] to cut off thoſe Breaſts of hers, wherewith ſhe had given him ſuck, becauſe they had nouriſhed up ſuch an ungrateful and unnatural Son. Theſe Words of hers touch'd him to the Quick; ſo that he reſolved in his Mind to beſtow his Daughter elſewhere: As he had opportunity enough to do, for many great Princes Courted the Young Lady with aſſiduous application; but eſpecially he was call'd upon by the French King, to beſtow his Daughter upon his Brother, Philip the Hardy, Duke of Burgundy. And this Politick King had ſecretly ſo tamper'd with Pope Urban, that he could by no means be prevail'd with to allow a Diſpenſation for the King of England's Son to Marry her; for they were within the Degrees forbidden. The Earl of Flanders therefore [d] being thus preſs'd upon by his Mother, as well as by the French King, and finding, by the Pope's obſtinacy, that the Marriage would not preſently take with England, eſpecially conſidering, that it was high time for his Daughter to be Married, becauſe he had no more Children, and alſo believing, that the Young Duke of Burgundy would be no improper Match for his Daughter, who before had been Married to that Title; upon theſe and the like accounts he ſent certain Meſſengers into England, deſiring the King to acquit him from his Obligations, ſince a Diſpenſation for a Marriage with his Son could not be obtain'd by any means.

[a] Mezeray p. 78.
[b] Froiſ. c. 253. fol. 153.
[c] Mezeray ibid.
[d] Froiſ. ibid.

An. Dom. 1369. An. Regni Angliæ XLIII. Franciæ XXX.

means. King Edward, who was not apt to ſuſpect any fraud in Princes, and Men of Honour, conſidering withall, that the Young Lady was not to loſe her time, ſince he could not hope for any timely Diſpenſation, freely releas'd him of all Covenants to that purpoſe, of which he gave his Letters; wherewith the ſaid Meſſengers return'd to Bruges, and ſhew'd their Lord the Earl, how they had ſucceeded, which pleas'd him wondrous well. And ſoon after the Marriage was fully agreed on, between Philip Duke of Burgundy, and the Earl's Daughter, theſe being the Conditions, "That the Earl of "Flanders in conſideration of this Match, ſhould have 50000 Franks; that the Towns "of Liſle and Doway, ſhould be deliver'd up unto him in gage for certain Sums of Mo-"ney, which the French King hereupon undertook to pay to the Earl of Flanders: Who accordingly had preſent Poſſeſſion thereof, and placed his own Subjects therein. This Compoſition being made and Ratified, they proceeded to the Marriage, which was held and conſummated in the City of Gaunt with great Pomp and Solemnity; many High Lords, Barons, and Knights, being preſent, eſpecially the accompliſh'd Young Lord Ingleram de Coucy, Earl of Bedford, who was ſent thither by the French King to add Grace to their Dancing, Juſts, and Triumphs.

But when King Edward of England ſaw, that the Earl of Flanders was by means of his Daughter allied thus to the Houſe of France, he knew not what to think, whether or no the Earl would take Part againſt him for the ſake of the Duke of Burgundy his Son-in-Law, and Preſumptive Heir: For he doubted much, what kind of Covenants might have paſſed on that Occaſion between the French King and the Earl, to his Prejudice. Wherefore he became now more ſevere with the Flemings, and vexed them more than heretofore both by Land and by Sea, as they were about their Merchandiſe. And at this the French King was not at all diſpleaſed, but rather laughed in his ſleeve; for he hoped, that thereupon a War would enſue between the Engliſh and the Flemings. But however the Wiſe Men of Flanders, and the moſt Wealthy Burgeſſes of the Good Towns had no mind to break with England, not only becauſe of their loſs of Trade conſequent thereupon; but becauſe in a manner all the Commons of Flanders were abſolutely enclin'd to King Edward's Side, and generally believed his Title to the Crown of France to be much fairer, than that of the French Kings.

II. The mean while King Edward, who was as buſie to procure himſelf Friends, as the French King was on the other hand; to ballance this Loſs of the Earl of Flanders, ſent to his Coſen Charles King of Navarre, whom he knew to be at no good Terms with the French King: Becauſe he claimed a Right of Inheritance to certain Lands which he held, concerning which both their Councils had often treated. But ſtill the King of France denied, that he ought to inherit them, and ſo Matters reſted at this time, both the Kings being not yet come to Daggers drawing, but exceeding Jealous of each other. Particularly the King of Navarre, who was then in Baſe Normandy, began ſeriouſly to fortifie his Towns and Caſtles in Coutantine, and the Earldom of Eureux, and other Parts of Normandy, which came unto Him by his Mother the Counteſs of Eureux, or otherwiſe; He himſelf making his chief Reſidence at Cherburgh, with Men of War ready in that as well as all other his Garriſons. Among others at this time in his Service, there was that Eminent Warrier Sr. Euſtace Dambreticourt, who as then govern'd Carentan, a City beyond the Paſſage of St. Clement in the Limits of Coutantine, which belonged to the King of Navarre's Inheritance. This Sr. Euſtace was one of the King of Navarre's Principal Councellors, but a Subject and Liegeman to the King of England; wherefore King Edward ſent now to him to ſift the King of Navarre throughly; and he ſo far prevail'd with him, that at laſt the King of Navarre with a private Company, went on Board an Engliſh Veſſel called the Lynne, and ſet ſail for England, where he was heartily welcome to King Edward. And here at laſt it was agreed, that the King of Navarre immediatly upon his return to Cherburgh, ſhould admit Engliſh Troops into all his Garriſons, and alſo ſend and defie the French King. After which he returned with a ſtrong Convoy of Engliſh Knights and Archers into Normandy, where he diſpos'd of moſt of the Men in Garriſons; but thoſe few who returned home with the Ships, had but ill Fortune: For they met with certain Pirats, Normans and others, who being far ſtronger ſet upon them fiercely, and within a while took and ſlew them every Man, they would not receive one to Mercy. Which was a great Trouble, as well as Loſs to King Edward; but the matter was paſt all Recovery.

III. Soon after the King of Navarre was return'd ſafe to Cherbourgh, Sr. Euſtace Dambreticourt being ſent for by the Prince of Wales, took leave of him to go and ſerve

ſerve the Prince according to his Duty; thô the King was at firſt very loth to part with him; but Sr. Euſtace ſhew'd him ſo many Reaſons, that he was forced to give him his leave. So Sr. Euſtace went on Board with all his own Troops, and arrived ſafely at St. Malo, whence he rode to Nantes, there to paſs the River of Loire; all which was done not without the Conſent of the Duke of Bretagne, who yet otherwiſe ſtood neuter in the Caſe. Thence he rode into Poictou, and thence to Angouleſme to the Prince, who received him gladly, for he was one of the Beſt Captains of the Age. He had not been long there, but the Prince ſent him away to reinforce the Lord Chandos and the Captal of Buſche, who lay then at Montauban, keeping the Frontiers againſt the French: And to them Sr. Euſtace was heartily welcome.

AN. DOM. 1369. An. Regni Angliæ XLIII. Franciæ XXX.

IV. The mean while the Knights of Picardy held their Rendezvous, with deſign to go and aſſault the ſtrong Town of Ardres, which was about three French leagues from Calais, about five from Graveling, and from St. Omers four leagues Northward. The Captains of theſe Forces, by the French Kings Command, was the Lord Moreau de Fiennes Conſtable of France, and Sr. John Werchin Conſtable of Hainalt, who made up no leſs than a 1000 Spears, all Knights and Eſquires, beſides Common Souldiers. Being thus ſtrong, they went and lay down before the Fortreſs of Ardres, which at that time was ſufficiently provided with Engliſhmen and all things neceſſary; wherefore the Garriſon valued not the Siege a ſtraw, but were ready at their Defences as Occaſion required, and were at all Points well aſſured; althô the Frenchmen had promiſed not to leave them, till they ſhould be Maſters of the Place. After two or three Days the Frenchmen, Picards and Hainalders drew out into the Field ready armed for the Aſſault in freſh and terrible Array, and ſo they ſet upon the Town in ſeveral places together with great Fury, but nothing at all to their Advantage: For many of them were ſlain, and more wounded, but no Man could tell of any Winnings, they either then had, or were like to have. Wherefore on the fifth Day after their firſt coming thither, they left Ardres little weaker in its Garriſon, but much ſtronger in the Reſolution, which the Enemies Deſpair of Prevailing had left behind. And ſo that Expedition fell to nothing; for all the Souldiers had leave to depart for that time to their ſeveral Homes.

V. A fairer Succeſs crown'd the Arms of thoſe Frenchmen, who lay before Realville in Quercy, for together with the Companions of their ſide, they amounted to no leſs than 12000 Fighting Men, beſides 3000 of the Duke of Berry's Men, lead by Sr. John of Armagnac, Sr. John de Villemur, the Lord of Beaujeu, and other Knights of Auvergne and Burgundy, who lay at leaſt within two Days journey of them, being ready to reinforce the Siege if need ſhould be. Now the Lord John Chandos, and the Captal of Buſche, Sr Guiſchard Dangle, Sr. Euſtace Dambreticourt, and other Engliſh Captains, that kept the Frontiers at Montauban, were well informed of all the Particulars of this Siege of Realville, and of the great Number of Enemies, with whom of themſelves they were no ways able to cope, and at the ſame time not hazard the loſs of their own Garriſon: And yet they could not by any means perſwade the two young Earls of Cambridge and Pembroke, to break up for the preſent their fruitleſs Siege, which they held ſtill before Bourdeilles, and to come and joyn them to ſave their Friends. Which certainly had been more for their Honour and Advantage too; for then having a pious and an honourable Work they might have returned to the Siege, laden with Glory, and a Civic, as well as Triumphal, Crown.

So the Frenchmen before Realville not only caſt with their Engines night and day, but ſet their Pioneers at work alſo; who at laſt cauſing an huge Pane of the Wall to fall down, the Town was enter'd, and all the Engliſh within put to the Sword, which was a great Pitty; for among them were many Valiant Eſquires: But as for the Townſmen, who were French-born, they were taken to Mercy, on Condition to be thenceforth True and Faithfull Subjects to the Crown of France. And ſo the French Lords and Captains, having ſet there New Officers with a good Garriſon to defend the Place, went away and took up their Quarters about in the Country of Quercy and Rouvergue, to refreſh themſelves more at eaſe: But the Companions of that part went to Cahors and thereabouts; from whence they overran and infeſted all the Country, as much as own'd the Engliſh; the Names of their Captains were Edmund of Ortingo, Perot of Savoy, Ralph Braye, the little Mechlin, Arnold of Pons, and others aforemention'd.

But the Earl of Perigort, the Earl of Liſle, the Vicount of Carmain, the Earl of Cominges, and other Gaſcogne Lords, were fain to return into their ſeveral Countries; For in Perigort lay the two Earls of Cambridge and Pembroke, and on the other ſide

An. Dom. 1369. An. Regni Angliæ XLIII. Franciæ XXX.

Sr. Hugh Calverley, Sr. Robert Briquet, Sr. John Freville, Nandon of Bergerac, Sr. Ralph Camois, the Bourg of Bartuel, the Bourg de l' Esparre, and all the Companions on the Engliſh ſide made ſharp War, and ravaged with Fire and Sword in and about the Lands of the Earl of Armagnac, and of the Lord of Albret.

VI. All this while Sr. Thomas Wake, that Valiant Seneſchal of Rouvergue, gallantly maintain'd for his Maſter, the Black-Prince, the City and Caſtle of Milland, which is about a Days journey from Mompellier; and thô all the Country about him was ſoon after turn'd French, yet ſtill he held the Place, maugre all his Enemies, for about a Year and an Half afterward; beſides another good Fortreſs hard by: In all which time he made many Excurſions upon his Enemies to his Honour, till Sr. Bertram of Clequin put him out of all, as we ſhall ſee hereafter.

Becauſe by reaſon of the Prince's ſickneſs, and the ſeveral ſmall Armies of the Enemy, the War was thus carried on by Parcels in many Places at once, we hope the Judicious will pardon us for thus handling Matters, as indeed they were acted, by Piecemeal, which yet we ſhall endeavour to do, as exactly as the Nature of the thing will allow.

[e] Froiſ. c. 255. *f.*154.

While the [e] Earls of Cambridge and Pembroke lay thus before Bourdeilles, there were in the Marches of Poictou, Sr. John Bull, Sr. William Bourde, Sr. Lewis of St. Julian, and Carlonet the Breton, with more than 1200 Fighting Men, who imagin'd and ſtudied day and night, how to get Towns and Fortreſſes in Poictou, by Surpriſe, Aſſault or Scalado. One time above others they gat by ſurpriſe and Scalado the Caſtle and Fortreſs of la Roche de Pozay, on the River of Creuſe, at the Entrance of Poictou, about 2 leagues from la Haye en Touraine, and near Chaſtelleraut on the Vienne. At this loſs all the Country of Poictou was in a Conſternation, for here the Frenchmen put a good Garriſon, having repaired and fortified the Caſtle, and well furniſh'd the Place with Artillery and Victuals. The Prince of Wales was extreamly concerned at the News of this ſucceſs of the Frenchmen, and thereupon, thô 'twas too late to remedy what was paſt, he ſent for Sr. Guiſchard Dangle, Sr. Lewis of Harcourt, the Lord of Partenay, the Lord of Pinant and ſeveral Others, then with the Lord Chandos in Garriſon at Montauban, to come unto Him: For he intended to diſpoſe of them ſome other way. At the Prince's Command they left Montauban, and went to Angouleſme to the Prince, who forthwith ſent them all to Poictiers to defend that City, and thence to make Frontier War on the French.

About that very time a Potent Baron of Poictou, the Lord of Chauvigny, who was alſo Vicount of Breſſe, abandon'd the Engliſh Intereſt, and fell off to the French, and ſo having furniſhed his Town of Breſſe in Maine near Lavardin with Bretons and other ſtout Souldiers, he went himſelf to Paris to the French King: As for his Town of Chauvigny, that was ſtill in the Hands of the Engliſh. The Prince of Wales, and all the Loyal Barons of Poictou were extreamly diſpleaſed at this News, but the Vicount of Rochehoüart was mightily ſuſpected of having an hand in the Matter; for the Prince was credibly informed, how he was an Occaſion of that Revolt, and that he deſign'd himſelf to go over to the French King, only he waited a fit Opportunity. Thus much being depoſed againſt him the Prince ſent for him, and charged him with the Matter, producing his Evidences to the no ſmall confuſion of the Vicount: And though he made the beſt Excuſe he could, yet he was forthwith committed to Priſon, and there kept a conſiderable time in great Danger; for there were ſhrewd ſuſpicions (thô no full Proof) of his Guilt: But the Prince was ſlow to go to extremity of Blood without a plain and evident Conviction.

VII. But however in part to revenge this Treaſon of the Lord of Chavigny, the Prince immediatly ſent forth his Grand Seneſchal of Poictou, the Renowned and Valiant Lord James Audley, a Man of High Courage and Conduct, the ſame who gain'd ſo ſignal Reputation at the Battle of Poictiers. This Gallant Heroe having the Prince's Commiſſion, gather'd together a Conſiderable Army, conſiſting of the ſeveral Retinues of all the Great Barons and Knights of Poictou, who ſtill ſtood Loyal, the Chief whereof were the Lord Guiſchard Dangle, the Lord Lewis Harcourt, the Lord Moubron of Linieres, the Lord of Pons, the Lord of Partenay, the Lord of Dinant, the Lord of Taniboton, the Lord of Montendre, Sr. Richard Taunton, Sr. Geoffry Argentine a Noble Engliſh Knight, Sr. Baldwin Freville, a Valiant Baron of England Seneſchal of Saintogne, and divers other Knights and Eſquires of England and Poictou, to the Number of 1200 Men of Arms, beſides Archers and Footmen. This gallant ſmall Army departed from Poictiers in good Array, and rode on till they came into Berry, where they began to ravage, burn and plunder at a prodigious rate: The whole Country trembled bled before them. Thus they proceeded without the leaſt Oppoſition, till they came into Tourain, ſcattering all the way Ruine about them, ſending Terrour before them, and leaving Deſolation behind them: For all the Country fled away into ſtrong Holds, there was none able to look them in the Face. At laſt they came into the Lord of Chauvigney's Country, who had ſo lately turn'd to the French ſide, and there they put all to Fire and Sword, finding nothing to reſiſt them but ſome few of the ſtrongeſt Fortreſſes. In ſhort they came before the Town of Breſſe in Maine, and gave thereto an Aſſault, which laſted an whole Day without any great advantage to the Aſſailants: However they pitch'd up their Tents, reſolving not to ſtir till they were Maſters of the Place; for they believ'd it not impregnable. Early the next Morning, which was a Saturday, they renewed the Aſſault, approaching the Town in good Order, every Lord under his Banner: And here was a difficult Pull indeed, for thoſe of the Garriſon defended themſelves to the very utmoſt, becauſe they knew their Lives were at ſtake. But the Archers of England ſhot ſo thick, that none durſt look thrô a Loop-hole for fear of an Arrow, and ſo at laſt the Town was carried by fine Force, the Gates being caſt down into the Ditch, and a free Entrance left for all Men. All that were found in Arms were ſlain without Mercy, ſixteen of their Chief Captains being taken and hanged up in their Armour, maugre the Vicount their Maſter, who had ſo traiterouſly turn'd to the French ſide and left them to anſwer for his ſins; the Town alſo it ſelf was plunder'd and burnt, and the Inhabitants rifled of all that ever they had, many Hundreds of them being ſlain and drowned. After which Execution the Lord James Audley returned Victorious to Poictiers, there to refreſh himſelf and his Men after this hot Service, and alſo to wait the Prince's further Pleaſure.

AN. DOM. 1369. AN. REGNI Angliæ XLIII. Franciæ XXX.

VIII. There was [f] about this time Sr. Robert Knolles, a Valiant Engliſh Leader, in the Dutchy of Bretagne, where he had a fair Eſtate, upon the account of his late ſignal Services to Duke John: But his Heart was always firm to his Country, and he had before this manifeſted his Valour and Loyalty in many eminent Difficulties, as well under King Edward, as his Son the Black-Prince, by whom this Year he was retained. When he underſtood, how the Frenchmen made ſuch ſharp War againſt the Prince his Maſter, and deſigned to put him out of his Inheritance of Aquitain, at the Conqueſt whereof he himſelf had been before, he was horribly incenſed againſt them, and preſently reſolved to go with all his Power, and ſerve the Prince at his own Charges. Accordingly he equipped four handſom Veſſels in the Mouth of the Vilaine, and when all was ready, he left his Caſtle of Derual, and drew to the Port with ſixty Men of Arms, and as many Archers in his Company, with all whom he arrived ſafely at the Key of Rochelle. Here the Citizens made him very, but not heartily, welcome, for at that time they neither wiſh'd him, nor any other Engliſh Man, half ſo much Good as they pretended: Their Hearts were French all over. However now they durſt do no otherwiſe, but make them good Cheer, for they were over-aw'd by the Garriſon, and their Captain Sr. John Devereux, who was there under the Prince: But their chief Seneſchal was then with the Lord John Chandos, and Sr. Thomas Percy. Sr. John Devereux entertain'd nobly Sr. Robert and his Men for two Days together, and then Sr. Robert took his leave, and rode forth till he came to Angouleſme, of whoſe coming the Prince and Princeſs were very glad, eſpecially the Prince, to whom all Men of Worth and Valour were very Dear, he received him gratiouſly; inſomuch that for the ſake of his Courage and Experience in the Wars, he made him General of all thoſe Knights and Captains, who were then upon an Expedition, commanding them all to obey Sr. Robert Knolles as Himſelf, and they all anſwer'd, they would do it moſt punctually. But althô in this Matter the Black-Prince ſhew'd himſelf an Impartial Friend to Vertue by preferring true Merit, yet there fell an Inconvenience thereby, which he ſhould have foreſeen; for becauſe he was not of ſuch Noble Birth as ſome, who were under him, they envy'd him the Honour of the Place, and cauſed afterward a Diſſention in the Army, as We ſhall ſee too ſoon. Nobility of Birth, though it be not eſſential to Vertue, is certainly very Ornamental, and always reconciles Worth to the Opinion of the Vulgar, or however advances it above the reach of Envy.

[f] Froiſ. c. 256. f. 154. b.

Sr. Robert Knolles having tarried at Angouleſme but five days, till all his Troops were ready, took then his leave of the Prince, and began his March with theſe Knights of the Prince's in his Company, Sr. Neale Loring, Knight of the Garter, the Lord Baldwin Freville, Seneſchal of Sainctogne, Sr. William Molineux Seneſchal of Agenois, Hugh Lord Haſtings, Thomas Lord Spencer, Sr. Richard Pontchardon, Sr. Stephen Coſſington, Sr. Dangouſes, Sr. John Trivet, Sr. Thomas Baniſter, Sr. John Taunton, Sr Nicolas Bond, and more than 60 Knights; ſo that in all they were above ſixſcore Men of

An. Dom. 1369. An. Regni Angliæ XLIII. Franciæ XXX.

Arms, beſides thoſe, whom Sr. Robert Knolles brought with him, 500 Archers, and as many Footmen, arm'd with [g] Brigandines; all very deſirous to fight the French-men. Thus Sr. Robert Knolles marched forth toward Agen, intending for Quercy, where he heard the Companions were: But however he tarried a day or two at the City of Agen to refreſh his Men, and to learn ſome certainty of his Enemies. There Sr. Robert heard, how his old Friend and Companion in Arms, Sr. Perdiccas of Albret, being then a Captain of no leſs than 300 Companions, was in thoſe parts; but that he had been lately corrupted by the Duke of Anjou to change the Intereſt of England for France. Wherefore Sr. Robert now ſent Meſſengers to ſpeak with him, and Heralds to allow him a ſafe-Conduct, deſiring him to meet him in the open fields at ſuch a time and place, as he then limited. At the enterview Sr. Robert careſſed him extreamly; and ſo by little and little they fell on to other diſcourſe, till at laſt Sr. Robert, having drank to him, and made him ſit down in his Pavilion, came to the Point, and ſaid, "he both wonder'd and griev'd, that a Man of his Honour ſhould not only leave his "Friends, but his Reputation too, by forſaking the Service of a Prince, ſo Noble, ſo "Valiant and Juſt, as the Prince of Wales was, and from whom he himſelf had re-"ceived no ſmall Benefits. That it could hardly be believed, and he wiſh'd, it might "never be proved, that ſo gallant a Gentleman, as Sr. Perdiccas of Albret was, ſhould "ever be debauched from his Loyalty to his Prince, by the ſubtle Arts of Faith-"Breakers, and Traiterous Enemies. That the Prince could eaſily forget a ſlip, ſoon "repented of; for it was his way, to overcome himſelf, as well as others, and to for-"get Injuries, that were acknowledged, preſently; but to remember Services for ever. By theſe and the like Arguments Sr. Perdiccas was wholly recover'd, and embraced Sr. Robert, and ſware unto him Faith and Loyalty to the Prince and the King of England, his Father, for ever: And ſo immediately he came over with his own 300 Men, and alſo others of the Companions, who choſe to follow his Fortune, to the Number of 200 more, moſt of them Gaſcogners. The Duke of Anjou was very much diſpleas'd at this News, and reflected ſeverely upon Sr. Perdiccas his Faith, which he ſaid, he had broken unto him; not at all conſidering, that he, whoſe Faith himſelf had once corrupted, might as readily be debauched by another, to take part againſt him. News hereof flew preſently to the other Troops of Companions, who lay in and about the City of Cahors; as Edmund Ortingo, the little Mechlin, Ralph Braye, Perot of Savoye, Arnold of Pons, and others, who kept Garriſon there; but hearing of this Defection of Sr. Perdiccas of Albret, they were much caſt down, and ſeeing plainly, that they were now too weak to maintain the place againſt the Power of the Engliſh, they deliver'd up the Town to the Care of the Biſhop and Burgeſſes of the ſame, and departed, and went to a ſtrong wall'd Priory not far off, called [h] Durmel, which they had hugely fortify'd before, and this Place they determin'd to defend againſt their Enemies.

[g] A kind of plyable Armor for Footmen, like Mail.

[h] Credo eſſet Douvelle.

When Sr. Robert heard thus much, he went thither and beſieged them, and made many vigorous Aſſaults; but the place was ſo well defended, that little hurt was done; however the Siege continued. When News was brought to Montauban, to the Lord John Chandos, the Lord Thomas Felton, the Captal of Buſche, Sr. John Combe, Sr. Thomas Piercy, Sr. Euſtace Dambreticourt, and the other Engliſh Knights there, how Sr. Robert Knolles lay before Durmel, then they all determin'd to go unto him, for there they thought to find ſome employment for their Swords. So they marched forth of Montauban with 300 Spears, leaving 200 more behind them to maintain the Place upon occaſion, whoſe Captains were Sr. Emery of Chartres, the Soldiche of Eſtarrac, Sr. Bernard de la Bret, and the Lord of Garonne. As thus theſe Engliſh Lords rode towards Durmel, they paſſed by a ſtrong Town, which held for the Enemy, called Moiſſac, which yet was only defended at that time by the Townſmen; but that the Engliſh knew not of, not being able to imagine, that ſo conſiderable a place ſhould be left without a ſufficient Garriſon. However they ſent forth their Currours to go and take a view of the Fortreſs more nearly; and they brought back word, that the Place was conſiderably ſtrong, and could not be won either by Siege or Aſſault without much time and difficulty. Wherefore having debated upon the Matter, they concluded to let it alone, and proceed forward to Durmel, as at firſt they had deſigned. Accordingly the next Morning early they paſſed by Moiſſac; but before they had gone a little League of their way, they met with certain Country Men with Four Sumpters laden with Victuals, all whom they preſently ſeiſed, roughly demanding of them, whence they came, and whither they deſign'd. They reply'd, they came from Tholouſe, taking a way about, for fear of the Garriſon at Montauban, and that they intended to have gone for Moiſſac to sell their Provision. Then they were more strictly examin'd about the state of the Town, and what Souldiers were therein; and these People, who were afraid to be found in a lie for fear of their Lives, told them, how there was never a Gentleman of Name, nor a Man of War within the Town; but only the Inhabitants of the Place, and that they were so short of Victuals, that they had not enough to serve them Four Days, if they should be besieged. Then they fell to Council again, and resolved not to go forward, till they had attempted Moissac: So they took the Provision for themselves; but deliver'd the Horses with the Panniers again to the Victuallers, bidding them go and seek for more. And thereupon they marched back to Moissac, and lay down before it, and began to set up their Tents, and made a shew, as if they were not minded to stir thence of a Month, and set up their Engines against the Walls, and seem'd to design a General Assault the next day.

ſell

AN. DOM. 1369. An. Regni Angliæ XLIII. Frrnciæ XXX.

The Townsmen were hugely terrify'd with all this; for they saw plainly, there was no holding out long, if it were only for want of Victuals. Then they began to enter a Treaty with the English Lords, and so acknowledged the Prince of Wales for their Sovereign, and sware to keep the Town at his Devotion for ever after without fraud or collusion, so that they might be permitted to be quiet, and to have a full Enjoyment of their Rights and Properties. Hereupon the Lord Chandos received them in the Prince's Name, and at their request set over them for their Captain a Valiant Knight of his, named Sr. Robert Mutton, who [i] bare in a Field Argent a Cinquefoile Azure, and with him were 20 Men of Arms and 40 Archers, all to be maintained at the Cost of the Town.

[i] True Use of Armory in the Life of the Lord John Chandos p. 88.

After this Success the Lord Chandos went on in his journey, till he came before Durmel, where Sr. Robert Knolles held his Siege: By him he was received with much joy, and all the Lords and Captains made their mutual Salutations, and so they sat down together before the Fortress in good Order. During [k] this Siege there were many notable Exploits performed on both sides. For without were many Gallant and Hardy Knights and Esquires, such as thirsted to adventure their Lives in Courting of Honour; and within also were many Valiant and Chosen Men, Expert and enured to the Wars; or else thô the Place was exceeding strong, they could never have held out half so long: For they were continually alarum'd with Assaults in several places together. But indeed the English had here no great Advantage; being in a far worse Condition, than the Besieged; for it rain'd continually almost Day and Night, to the exceeding Vexation of Men and Horses; and besides, they were in much want of Victuals, and could hardly tell where to get any thing to eat; so that a Penny Loaf was sold in the Camp for Three Old Groats, and which was yet worse, sometimes they could get nothing for their Money. Thô indeed they had often good Plenty of Wines, which prov'd no small Refreshment unto them.

[k] Froiss. c. 257. &c.

IX. In this case they lay well-nigh Five Weeks, at which time seeing they could not prevail, and that they rather endanger'd themselves than their Enemies, by general Consent they brake up the Siege, and went and sat down before the Castle and Town of Domme, which stood on the Dordonne, in a more plentifull Country. There was present in the place at that time the Lord and Governour thereof, Sr. Robert of Domme, with a Valiant Cousin of his Sr. Peter de Sanglette, and these had already fetch'd in all the Victuals, that could be found in those parts. When the English, who were in all to the Number of 1500 Men of Arms, besides 2000 Archers on Horse-back, and Footmen arm'd with Brigandines to the Number of 6000 more, had begun their Siege, they gave a brisk Assault to the Place, and reared up divers small Engines, such as they had with them: So that every day the Enemy was alarum'd, and several Assaults and Skirmishes happen'd, and many Brave Exploits were done on both sides. By that time they had layn thus about 15 days without any great Advantage, but in much want and difficulty, they agreed to send word to the Prince at Angoulesme of the State of the Siege, and to know his pleasure, how they should proceed. So the Herald Chandos was dispatched away on this Errand, and shortly after he came to the Prince, who as then had but a small Company of Men of War about him; for most of his Valiant Captains were abroad either in some Army, or in some Garrison; this War was carried on in so many different places at a time. When the Herald came before the Prince, he kneeled down, and humbly recommended unto him all the Knights and Esquires, whom he had left at the Siege before Domme, and there wisely and succinctly declared unto him the State and Condition of the Besiegers, and deliver'd to the Prince Letters of Credence from his Master, the Lord Chandos, and the other Lords and Captains. When the Prince had understood the whole, he said he would consider sider on the Matter, and caused the Herald to tarry there in Town Five days: But on the Sixth he gave him his Letters sealed with his own Seal, and said, "Chandos, "recommend us heartily to all our Friends there, and deliver them this from me. So the Herald took his leave and rode back again thrô Perigort, and part of Quercy; but he found not his Masters there, where he had left them. For soon after he had been dispatch'd away, the English Lords being in Council, agreed to break up their Siege immediately (for they saw nothing was to be done there) and so to pierce further into the Country, and to attempt other Towns and Castles, such as had lately revolted by perswasion of the Duke of Berry.

An. Dom. 1369. An. Regni Angliæ XLIII. Franciæ XXX.

[1] Froiss. c. 253. fol. 156.

Accordingly [1] they decamped, and went from Domme, and soon after appear'd before Gavaches, which immediately yielded up, and became English. Here they tarried three days to refresh themselves, and to advise what further course to take, and so they came before a Fortress, which the French Companions had newly taken, called Foïnes: But these Men upon first sight yielded up, and sware Faith to the Prince for ever; thô they were quickly forsworn, as we shall see hereafter. From thence the English Lords went to Roquemadour, a Town of Quercy, near the River of Dordonne: The Garrison was not at that time very strong, and yet they resolv'd to try it out however. So for one day they endured a terrible Assault, which held them tack for that whole day; the next Morning, as the English were preparing to renew the Assault, they perceived certain from the Wall, who made motion for a Parley. For the Chief of the Garrison had consulted among themselves the Night before, and found, how they were not likely to endure such another Assault, and that if they should be taken by Force, they were all but Dead Men, and that their Town would be utterly rased: Wherefore they had agreed to propound a Treaty, and so at last they yielded to become English; which they gladly sware to in most Solemn Manner, and moreover, undertook to send fifty Sumpters, well laden with Victuals, at their own Costs and Charges, to follow the Army for fifteen days together for their supply: They to buy the Victuals at a certain Rate agreed upon: And on these Conditions Roquemadour obtain'd to be left at Liberty.

Thence the Army turn'd off towards Ville-Franche de Perigort, about Eight Leagues from Cahors, wasting and ravaging the Country all along as they Marched, putting the poor People to great loss and trouble, and winning of Towns and Castles, which had lately turn'd French, some by Force, and some by Composition. At last they came before Ville-Franche, which was well provided with all manner of Victuals and Necessaries for Defence: For all the plain Country was drawn thither with their Goods, as to a Sanctuary. After Four Days spent in Assaulting, the Besieged, who saw no likelihood to hold out much longer, and that no other Succours were to be expected, agreed to admit of the English Yoke, on Condition they might be free. Here the Lord Chandos left a Valiant Commander, named Sr. John Roos, and so proceeded together with the other Lords and Knights of England and Gascogne in Hostile Manner, the whole Country trembling before him. The Loss of Ville-Franche was very much resented by the Duke of Anjou, who seeing he could not Remedy it, studied daily to Revenge it.

X. While this Army raged thus in and about Quercy, and on the Borders of Perigort, Agenois, Auvergne, and Rovergue, the Siege [m] was still carried on before Bourdeilles, by the Earls of Cambridge and Pembroke, even for the space of Eleven Weeks in all. During which time there were many notable Exploits performed, and Assaults, Skirmishes, and other Feats of Arms done almost every day. For most commonly the Besieged would adventure with the Flower of their Garrison to the very Barriers of their Town without the Gate, and there skirmish with all that came against them; and indeed they bare themselves with such Bravery and Resolution, that they justly obtain'd Praise of their very Enemies. And in this Manner for Eleven Weeks they behav'd themselves well, and might have done much longer, had not Presumption, which is usually begotten by Success, but most commonly it self begets Loss and Misfortune, betray'd them to their own Ruine. They made up Hands enough to Defend the Place, and they were all Valiant Gentlemen, and of approved Courage, and sufficiently provided with Victuals and Artillery: Wherefore the Besiegers began now to grow weary, seeing they had layn there so long without any considerable Success. Hereupon they held a Council of War, wherein there was a long Debate, whether they should rise or no; and how they should proceed, if they staid. The Result of all was this, "To go away; but however to make one Tryal, before they went, which should be "after this Manner. Early the next Morning they should be all ready armed; but "how-

[m] Froiss. c. 259.

"however keep close a while in the Camp, and only send certain Select Men to skirmish "at the Barriers, as before: For they nothing doubted, but their Enemies would come "thither after their Custom. These Skirmishers, when they should have fought a while, "were order'd to retire in some seeming Confusion, as if they were beaten, and so to "pretend a flight, thereby to tempt the Enemy to a Pursuit. Which if they should "offer to do, there were appointed in a secret place on one side, a certain Choice Num- "ber of Horsemen to fall in between them and the Town, so to cut off their Retreat. This was their Device, and they all concluded, that if they succeeded not this way, they could not expect to do it any other.

AN. DOM. 1369. An. Regni Angliæ XLIII. Franciæ XXX.

The next Morning the whole Host was armed, and 200 Men sent to skirmish at the Barriers, and all the rest of the Plot laid, as it had been resolved in Council. When the Captains of Bourdeilles, Arnold, and Bernard of Batefoile saw them coming, they were exceeding glad thereat, and armed themselves and all their Men; even sevenscore Young and Lusty Men, and so set open their Gate, and came freshly to the Barriers, and there began fiercely to encounter the English Men. At last the English retired disorderly for the nonce, and began to scatter, and to fly not altogether, but faintly and confusedly, like Men that were really in fear: Which when these Young Warriers saw, they Issued forth at the Barriers with their Standards before them, saying, "Let Us advance after them; For surely they are Ours every Man of them. So they follow'd furiously; while the English fled so faintly, that they were presently overtaken, and some fell off their Horses, and so came into the Hands of their Enemies, others yielded voluntarily, to nourish more Presumption in them. And now had they gone back, all had been well, but because they would have all, they lost what they had, and themselves too: So true is that Proverb, All Covet, Nothing have. Thus these Companions in hopes of getting more Prisoners, pursued so far, that when they would, they could not return again: For now Sr John Montagne, who, being [n] Nephew to the Earl of Salisbury, and afterwards his Heir and Successor, govern'd the Ambush with 500 Fighting Men, and was that very day Knighted by the Earl of Cambridge, came in suddenly at their Backs between the Town and them, and so utterly intercepted them, and began to fall upon them in the Reer. When the Men of Bourdeilles saw, how the Game was plaid, they perceived too late, to what their Folly had betray'd them: But however, like Valiant Men, they drew together in a close square Battail, and so held themselves undiscomfited for the space of near two Hours, still Fighting with their Enemies, and performing such Gallant Exploits, as extorted much Commendation from the English, who took delight to behold their Bravery and Resolution. On the English side Sr. John Montague proved that Day a most hopefull Young Warrier, being always in the Hottest Medley, and doing Wonders in Arms, as did all his Company: So that at last all the Men of Bourdeilles were entirely discomfited, every Man of them being slain, or taken, and the English Prisoners released again. The two Captains Arnold and Bernard of Batefoile were taken alive, and carried away toward the Camp; the mean while, the Earls of Cambridge and Pembroke were advanced to the Barriers, which they easily wan, the former Defendants being absent, and the Gate also open; the Earl of Cambridge first entring the Town with his Banner before him. Thus the strong Town of Bourdeilles was at last won, rather by the Rashness of its Friends, than the Force of its Enemies: And so all the Townsmen sware to keep the Place ever after at the Prince's Devotion; the Lord of Mucidan, a Loyal Gascogner, being made their Captain with his own Troops, and Fourty English Archers, to make good the Garrison. After this the two Earls brake up, and return'd to Angoulesme to the Prince, to know his further pleasure.

[n] Mills Catal. Hon. p. 1042. & p. 1045.

XI. The mean [o] while the Herald Chandos, when he found not the English Lords where he had left them before Domme, rode after them so long, till at last he lighted on them as they lay before a certain Fortress in Quercy. When these Lords saw the Herald, they received him with Honour because of his Office, and demanded of him what News from Angoulesme. He said, how the Prince saluted them all heartily, and desired much to see them, and therewithall produced the Princes Letters, which the Lord Chandos took and read in full Council, and there 'twas found, "How the Prince "would have the Lord Chandos, the Lord Thomas Felton, and the Captal of Busche to "come speedily unto him to the City of Angoulesme. But that Sr. Robert Knolles and "his Men with all the Companions might tarry still where they were, and make War "as they had done. When these Lords who were the Principal of all, understood thus much, they began to look one on another, and demanded what Course they had best to take. Then they said with one Voice to Sr. Robert Knolles, "Sir, you see and un- "derstand, [o] Froiss. c. 260.

An. Dom. 1369. An. Regni Angliæ XLIII. Franciæ XXX.

"derſtand, how our Lord the Prince hath ſent for us, and hath order'd you to tarry "here in this Country, as Chief General of all the Army. "Sirs (anſwer'd he) my Lord "the Prince puts me to more Honour than I would deſire: But Gentlemen, be ſure of this, "that without your Company I will not ſtay: For if You go, I'll go along with You. So in ſhort they all agreed to return to the Prince together, to know his further Pleaſure; and then they brake up for that time, to the abundant ſatisfaction of the People of thoſe Parts, who had felt much, but dreaded far more from them. Only upon their Departure they ſent Sr. Perdiccas of Albret to the Town of Roquemadour, to defend the Frontiers there againſt the Enemy: And as for the other Captains of the Companions they ſpake unto them ſuch Words as theſe; "Gentlemen, You have heard how "the Prince hath ſent for Us, with what Deſign we know not: But however we ſhall "direct you what to do the mean time. You ſhall all keep cloſe together with your "Companies, and enter the Marches of Limoſin and Auvergne, and there make War; "for without War you cannot live. And Sirs, this we promiſe you upon our Faith, "that if you win Caſtle, Town or Fortreſs whatſoever it be, and it chance, that you or "any of you be therein beſieged, We will by no means deſert You; but will aſſuredly take "Care to bring you ſuch Aſſiſtance, as ſhall raiſe the Siege and ſet you free. When "the Captains of the Companions heard this Promiſe, they ſaid, "Well then Gen-"tlemen, we will do to the beſt of our Power, in Confidence of this your Promiſe: For "perhaps we ſhall ſome time or other ſtand in need of ſuch an Aſſiſtance. Thus they parted, and the Lords that were ſent for, went to Angouleſme to the Prince, who received them with great joy: A little before which time the Earls of Cambridge and Pembroke, and the Lord John Montague were alſo return'd from the Siege of Bourdeilles, which they wan by ſtratagem, as we have ſhewn.

XII. Of thoſe Companions, whom the Lord Chandos had ſent toward the Marches of Limoſin, there were three Notable Captains above the reſt, who were Valiant Eſquires, Hardy and of vaſt Experience in the Wars; eſpecially for Aſſaulting and Scaling Towns and Fortreſſes, namely Edmund Ortingo, Bernard Wiske, and Bernard de la Salle. Theſe Three reſolved not to lie ſtill all the Winter, but to do ſomething, whereby to get Advantage and Honour too if they might: With this Reſolution they went toward Limoſin, the Seneſchal and Governour whereof under the Black-Prince was Sr. John Devereux; and there they ſtudied day and night to get ſome Caſtle belonging to their Enemies. At laſt they heard of a ſtrong Caſtle in Bourbonnois called Bellepeche, wherein the Lady Iſabella, Mother to the Duke of Bourbon, and to the French Queen, was in a manner all alone, without any good Watch or Guard; for the Conſtable of the Caſtle, as they heard, would often ride abroad at his Pleaſure, taking little or no heed to the Safeguard of the Place. Whereupon theſe Captains, having ſelected a competent Number of their Aſſiſtants, ſlept not long after they had been informed of theſe Matters; but rode hard for a Day and a Night, till in the Morning early coming to the Caſtle of Bellepeche, they ſuddenly took it by Scalado, and the Good Lady Iſabella de Valois therein. And then finding the Fortreſs to be both fair and ſtrong, and to ſtand in a fertil Country, they fixed themſelves there, ſaying, they truſted to keep it againſt all the World. The Night of that ſame Day they took another Caſtle, called St. Sever upon the Marches of Limoſin, which they committed to the Care of Sr. John Devereux. When it was noiſed about in France, that Bellepeche was taken, and the Queen's Mother therein, by the Engliſh, the King of France was extreamly vexed, and ſo alſo was the Queen her Daughter, and the Duke of Bourbon her Son; but as yet they knew not how to mend the matter.

In theſe Days the Lord Lewis of Sancerre, a Knight of notable Courage and Conduct, was made one of the Mareſchals of France, inſtead of the Lord Arnold D' Endreghan, who was yet alive: But ſo old, and batter'd by the frequent Uſe of Arms for many Years paſt, that he could not well perform his Office, thô upon occaſion he would after that bear Arms and go into the Field.

XIII. All that Summer had King Charles of France ſpent in equipping a Royal Fleet in the Port of Harfleur; for he deſign'd to ſend a mighty Army into England, being encreaſed with a ſufficient Number of Choice Men of Arms, Knights and Eſquires, under the Conduct of his Brother Philip the Hardy, Duke of Burgundy. And this great Deſign took him up ſo wholly, that he lay all along in the City of Roüen, thereby to be nearer at hand to inſpect and haſten the Work; and every Week he would go two or three times to view his Navy, he had ſuch an Affection for the Buſineſs. And his Command was ſo general thrô all the Realm, that there came in Men of War in ſuch Numbers that 'twas admirable; and dayly huge Quantities of Proviſion was brought brought in for the Fleet, as if they were going to Caſtille or Portugal, or ſome other Far Country. And yet the Lord Oliver Cliſſon, who was now one of the Chief of the French King's Council, was always againſt this Expedition, and dehorted the King and all the Nobles of the Realm againſt Enterpriſing any Voyage for England, telling them how the Frenchmen were not accuſtomed to make War abroad, as the Engliſh had been; and alledged the eto divers Reaſons, as one who was better acquainted with the Nature and Conditions of that Nation, and with the State of England at that time. Notwithſtanding he could by no means diſſuade the King from this Undertaking, but ſtill He and the Chief of his Council were of Scipio's Opinion, to carry away the War from their own Doors into their Enemies Country. King Edward, and his Son John Duke of Lancaſter, and all his Council, were fully informed of this Deſign of the French Kings, to come and fight with them in their own Land, whereat they were all extream glad, and 'twas fully determin'd, that they ſhould have Battle as ſoon as ever they came. And King Edward in order to receive them, had well furniſh'd all the Ports and Havens of the Sea, reſpecting Ponthieu and Normandy, to welcome them at their Landing. And he had in readineſs an Army of an 100000 Choſen Men, which he himſelf deſign'd to lead againſt the French, which though it was now diſpoſed about in ſeveral Places, could at a Days warning be brought together.

AN. DOM. 1369. An. Regni Angliæ XLIII. Franciæ XXX.

XIV. And beſides all this he ſent over his Son John Duke of Lancaſter to Calais, to keep the French in play on that Side, there being appointed to go with him Thomas Beauchamp Earl of Warwick, Humphry Bohun Earl of Hereford and Eſſex, William Montague Earl of Salisbury, the Lord Walter Manny, Thomas Lord Roos, the Lord Henry Percy, Ralph Lord Baſſet of Drayton, the Lord Michael de la Pole, the Lord John Willoughby of Eresby, the Lord Roger de la Warre, Sr. Thomas Grandiſon, Sr. Alan Boxhull, Sr. Richard Sterry, and divers others to the Number of 500 Men of Arms, and 500 Archers on Horſeback, beſides Footmen. Theſe Lords and Captains when all things were ready, went on board at Dover, and croſſing the Seas arrived ſafely at the ſtrong Town of Calais, where they landed, and took up their Lodging within the Town. A little before King Edward had ſent his Special Letters to the Lord Robert of Namur, who [p] entred into his Service and Pay at the Siege of Calais, and had ever ſince continued Faithfull to the Intereſt of England, deſiring him to come now and ſerve him in his Wars with a certain Number of Men of Arms. Sr. Robert then anſwer'd, that he would be ready in whatever it ſhould pleaſe his Majeſty to command, as ſoon as he ſhould underſtand, that either the King Himſelf, or any of his Sons ſhould either arrive at Calais, or appear in the Field to War againſt France. And accordingly now, that he heard of the Duke of Lancaſters Arrival at Calais, he made his Summons among his Friends and Dependants, and others whoſe Service he expected, and ſhortly after came and joyned the Duke with 300 Men of Arms, as we ſhall ſee by and by.

[p] Vid. l. 2. c. 6. §. 10 p. §. 399.

XV. It may be remembred, [q] how after that the Herald Chandos had declared the Prince's Pleaſure to the Lord Chandos, and the other Lords of England and Gaſcogne, they all returned to Angouleſme to the Prince, and that a little before their Coming the Earls of Cambridge and Pembroke were returned thither alſo, after they had won the Fortreſs of Bourdeilles. The Prince highly careſſed and feaſted them, but this was not the Deſign he had called them back for. He remembred that in the lower Poictou toward the Parts of Anjou, beyond Luſſon and Marevil, there was a fair and ſtrong Caſtle, belonging at that time to the Duke of Anjou, called la Roche ſur Yon, and ſo he ſent theſe Lords and Captains forth to take in that. They were all ready immediately, and being rendezvous'd in the Field, amounted to more than 3000 Spears; among whom were the Principal Lords and Knights of England and Poictou, as the Earls of Cambridge and Pembroke, the Lord John Chandos, the Lord James Audley Seneſchal of Poictou, the Lord Thomas Percy Seneſchal of Rochelle, the Lord John Greilly Captal of Buſche, the Lord John Montagu, the Lord of Pons, the Lord of Partenay, the Lord Lewis of Harcourt, Sr. Guiſchard Dangle, Sr. Maubrion of Linieres, the Lord of Taniboton, the Lord of Pinant and divers Others; all who rode forth, and came ſuddenly and ſat down before the Caſtle of Roche ſur Yon, which was not only naturally very ſtrong, but alſo well provided at that time with all things neceſſary for a long Defence; as Valiant Men, Victuals and Artillery. The Captain of the Place was one Sr. John Blondeau, ſet there by the Duke of Anjou, who allowed him a ſufficient Number of Men of War at his own Coſts and Charges. The Engliſh Forces planted themſelves in very good Order round about the Caſtle, and cauſed to be brought from the City of Thoüars and Poictiers ſeveral great Engines of Battery, and other Guns and [q] Froiſ. c. 262. f. 158.

An. Dom. 1369. An. Regni Angliæ XLIII Franciæ XXX.

Springals, wherewith they began to play againſt the Caſtle. And as for Proviſion, their Camp was abundantly ſupplied from Poictou and the Marches adjoyning. When Sr. John Blondeau ſaw how cloſely he was beſieged by an Army of expert Men of War, and that there was no Succour like to come to him from any Part, he began to be afraid: For he knew the Lords of England intended not to riſe, till either by Force or otherwiſe they ſhould be Maſters of the Place. And beſides there were in the Retinue of the Earl of Cambridge, and of the Lord John Chandos ſeveral Knights of the Captains Acquaintance, who had been heretofore in ſome Exploits with him; ſome of theſe by Order of Council went to the Barriers, and upon mutual Security obtained to ſpeak with him: At which time they handled him ſo cunningly (for he was not Subtle, thô Valiant and True enough) that he agreed "to render up the Caſtle, if he ſhould not be "relieved within the ſpace of one Month, he to have 6000 Franks paid him in con-"ſideration of the Proviſions and Amunition within the Caſtle; the Beſiegers not to offer them any Violence during the ſaid Term. After this Treaty the Captain ſent to the Duke of Anjou to inform him of the Matter, and to require his ſpeedy Aid; alſo he ſent to the French King and the Duke of Berry, and to all others from whom he expected any Succour, that either ſo he might ſave the Caſtle, or at leaſt be able to excuſe himſelf, if he ſhould perchance incur any Blame afterward. But for all this warning that he gave, and that the Caſtle was fair and ſtrong, and well worth contending for, it ſtanding very conveniently (if in the Frenchmens hands) for the Defence of the Marches of Anjou and Tourain; yet there was not the leaſt appearance of any Succour; ſo that at laſt, the Month being elapſed, the Engliſh Lords put the Captain in mind of his Promiſe; for the performance whereof he had alſo delivered ſufficient Hoſtages. Then the Captain told his Men, that ſince the French King and the Duke of Anjou would thus willingly loſe their Fortreſs, it could not be expected that they ſhould keep it alone any longer. And ſo by the Conſent of the Garriſon he yielded up the Place to the Earl of Cambridge, who preſently took Poſſeſſion for the Prince his Brother, and very gladly paid to the Captain the 6000 Franks for ſuch Proviſion and Goods as were left in the Caſtle. So Sr. John Blondeau marched away with his Men to Angiers, where as ſoon as he came thither, he was arreſted by the Governor of the City, and clapt up cloſe Priſoner in the Caſtle; And 'tis ſaid, that ſoon after he was one Night ſow'd up in a Sack, and flung into the River by the ſtrict Command of the Duke of Anjou, becauſe he took Gold and Silver for his Caſtle, "which (ſaid he) was able of it ſelf to have held out an "whole Year, if need had been.

XVI. However when the Engliſh Lords had thus received the ſtrong Caſtle of Roche ſur Yon toward the Limits of Anjou, they ſet there a good Garriſon, and repaired what was out of Order, and then went back to Angouleſme to the Prince, and ſome took their leave of him for a while and retired to their own Houſes. Among others 'tis ſaid, [r] that the moſt Valiant Lord James Audley Seneſchal of Poictou, going into freſh Quarters at Fontenay le Comte fell there ſick, and ſhortly after died, to the great Regret of the Prince and Princeſs, and all the Loyal Barons of Poictou: And that his Obſequies were performed in the City of Poictiers, the Prince Himſelf being preſent. But this was a Miſtake of Froiſard's, which yet he might eaſily fall into, becauſe indeed his Son Sr. James Audley died in Gaſcogne at this time; upon which the Lord James Audley the Father, with the Prince's leave retired into England, where he lived many Years after, and departed this Life not till the 73 Year of his Age, namely on the firſt Day of April, Anno Dom. 1386. which was the Ninth of Richard the Second, having a little before made his Will at Heligh Caſtle, wherein he appointed his Body to buried, in the Choir of his Abbey at Hilton before the High Altar, in caſe he ſhould die in the Marches, but if in Devonſhire or Somerſetſhire, then in the Choir of the Fryers-Preachers at Exceſter, before the High Altar.

[r] Froiſ. c. 260. &c.

[s] Aſhmole p. 706. & Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 750. ex Lib. in Offic. Principal. Cantuar. vocat Courtney f. 121. b.

However Poictou, being thus by his Abſence, thô not by his Death, deprived of her Grand Seneſchal, at the Requeſt of all the Barons and Knights of that Country, the no leſs Valiant Lord John Chandos, at that time Conſtable of Aquitaine, [t] was now by the Black-Prince made Seneſchal of Poictou, and ſo he went forthwith and reſided in the City of Poictiers, and made many journeys againſt the Frenchmen, and held them ſo ſhort, that they durſt not ride near thoſe parts, but in great Bodies together.

[t] Froiſ. c. 262. f. 169. b.

XVII. About this time the Vicount of Rochechoüart, whom the Prince had for ſome Weeks held in Priſon, at the Requeſt of his Friends in Poictou, and others of the Prince's Council, was ſet at liberty again, and reſtored to all his Lands. But whether he was all along falſe at bottom, or whether the Prince's ſuſpecting of him had exaſperated rated him to that; which elſe he had not thought on, ſo it was, that immediately upon his Delivery, he went ſecretly to Paris to the French King, and became his Liegeman, and ſo returned into his own Country, without the leaſt notice taken, that he had been at Paris. But now having ſet all things in Order, and placed Sr. Tibald du Pont, a Valiant Breton, in his Fortreſs, he preſently ſent and defy'd the Prince of Wales, and began to make War upon him.

AN. DOM. 1369. An. Regni Angliæ XLIII. Franciæ XXX.

XVIII. This while, John Duke of Lancaſter, the Prince's Brother, having [u] well refreſhed himſelf and his Men at Calais, thought not to lie idle there any longer; but rather to ride abroad and ſeek for ſome adventures in France. So one day he left Calais, with 300 Spears, and as many Archers in his Company, and paſſed by the Caſtle of Guiſnes, and rode beyond Ardres, till he came to the Abbey of Liques, where he found much prey, and brought it away to Calais. Another day he took the way towards Boulogne, and deſtroy'd all the Plain Country; thô at the ſame time Guy Earl of St. Paul, and his Son the Lord Valeran, lay within 8 Leagues of Boulogne, in the City of Teroüenne, with a competent Number of Men of War: But he ſtirred not althô he heard the Engliſh were abroad; for he thought himſelf unable to deal with them at that time.

[u] Froiſ. 263, &c.

The News ſoon flew to the French King, who was then at Rouën, taking Care of the Armada, which he was in all haſte fitting forth to ſend againſt England (as We ſaid before) how the Duke of Lancaſter was come to Calais with a Mighty Power, and how he made incurſions daily into the French Pale. At this ſudden Alarum all his former Meaſures were broken; and thô it had been Decreed by him and his Council, that the Duke of Burgundy ſhould as that very Week ſet ſail for England, now after ſome debate upon the Matter, it was concluded, how that Expedition ſhould be laid aſide for the Preſent, and all the Men of War, deſign'd for the Fleet, ſhould be led by the Duke of Burgundy toward Calais, to reſiſt the Duke of Lancaſter, who was then on that ſide the Sea. Wherefore ſoon after the Duke of Burgundy marched thence with all his Army, taking his way toward the River Somme, which he paſſed at Abbeville, and ſo by ſeveral journeys he went to Montrevil, and there, and about Heſdin and St. Paul, he ſtaid for thoſe that were behind.

XIX. The Duke of Lancaſter, when he heard, how the Duke of Burgundy was coming towards him, was exceeding glad, and began to march out of Calais with all his own Forces, with deſign to meet him, and encamped on the Mountain of Tournehan, between Ardres and St. Omers: Where he had been not paſſing a day; but thither came [x] to him the Noble and Valiant Knight, Sr. Robert of Namur, to joyn him with 300 Spears. The Duke of Lancaſter was very glad to ſee him, and ſaid unto him among other things, "My Dear Uncle, You are heartily Welcome; and Sir, rejoyce with us; "for I hear for certain, that the Duke of Burgundy comes on apace to fight us; ſo that "We ſhall not miſs of Deeds of Arms. Sr. Robert reply'd, "Be it ſo, Sir, in the "Name of God, We would gladly look him in the Face. Thus the Engliſh Army lay encamped on the Mountain, and about the Vale of Tournehan, having entrenched themſelves ſtrongly, and fortify'd their Camp with Hedges and Ditches; ſo that their Poſt was very advantageous, and their Currours overran the County of Guiſnes, and the Sovereignty of Ardres for forage, and what elſe they could get, but they found little; for all the plain Country had been deſtroy'd before, and all things profitable convey'd into Places of ſtrength: Wherefore daily there came unto them Victuals and other Proviſion from Calais. Soon after the Duke of Burgundy came thither with his great Army, and ſat down over againſt the Engliſh, between St. Omers and Tournehan, in very good Order: But he took up a large extent of ground; for it was ſaid, how he had in his Army more than [y] 4000 Knights, whereby the Number of the reſt may be conjectur'd. And in this manner the two Armies lay facing each other without any offer to come to a deciſive Battle. For thô the Duke of Burgundy did ſo far outnumber the Engliſh, that he was [z] Seven to their One; yet he durſt not come to a pitch'd Battle, becauſe the King, his Brother, had commanded expreſly to the contrary. And no doubt, that Circumſpect Prince, conſidering, that in ſpite of ſuch diſadvantages, the Engliſh had oftentimes conquer'd in the Days of his Predeceſſors, particularly, when they took his Father Priſoner in the Battle of Poictiers, thought it beſt now, like Fabius the Cunctator, to oppoſe delay to their Fury; which indeed, as Matters then went, prov'd the beſt Council. As for the Engliſh, thô being ſo inferior in Number, they thought not good to attaque the Enemy in his Trenches, [a] yet they would not have refus'd him, had he come forward; for every day they ranged themſelves in good Order of Battle to receive him; all Men being appointed what to do in [z] Froiſ. ibid. fol. 169.

[x] Froiſ. ibid.

[y] Froiſ. ibid.

[a] Froiſ. ibid.

An. Dom. 1369. An. Regni Angliæ XLIII. Franciæ XXX.

their ſeveral Offices and Stations. However moſt of the time was entertain'd with Skirmiſhes between the two Armies; now this ſide gaining the better, and now that, as the chance of War is. And Lewis Earl of Flanders, who very much ſtudied the Welfare of his Son-in-Law, the Duke of Burgundy, and now lay at a fair Palace of his, which he had newly built near Gaunt, hearing an account of the State of both Armies, by Meſſengers going too and fro between the Duke and Him, would always adviſe him by his Letters, that he ſhould not by any means break the Command of his Brother, the French King, to preſent the Engliſh with Battle.

[b] Froiſ. c. 264. fol. 169.

XX. While [b] theſe two Armies of France and England lay thus idly confronting one another, there fell many memorable adventures in Poictou; of which we ſhall now ſay ſomewhat: For it is not agreeable, that any of the Exploits of that Gallant Hero, Sr. John Chandos, ſhould be forgotten. We remembred before, how upon the Lord James Audley's, not Death, but only Retirement into England, he was by the Prince of Wales made Grand Seneſchal of Poictou; and as he yielded in Conduct or Courage to no man living, ſo now eſpecially he deſired to adorn his Province, and to do ſome memorable Act upon the Frenchmen. Wherefore he ſoon aſſembled a conſiderable Body of Men of Arms in the City of Poictiers, ſaying, he deſign'd to make an Inroad into Anjou, and to come back again by Touraine, and look upon the Frenchmen in the Marches and Frontiers there. Notice of this his Deſign, he ſent forthwith to the Earl of Pembroke, who lay then in Garriſon at Mortagne (a Fortreſs of Poictou, lying on the River la Sevre, and confining on the Borders of Anjou) and had at leaſt two Hundred Spears in his Company. The Young Earl was huge glad of this News, and very much deſired to go along with the Lord Chandos; but ſome Green Heads among his Followers diverted him, by ſaying, "Sir, You are but as yet in the Flower of your "Youth: Your Honour is yet to come, whereof from thoſe early Seeds of Vertue "within You, We may expect a plentifull harveſt. But if You put your ſelf in Com-"pany of the Lord Chandos, his Ripe and High-grown Reputation will choak yours "in its very growth: So that whatſoever Noble Exploit You ſhall now perform, the "Glory thereof will be only his, becauſe He is the Sovereign and moſt noted Captain "in theſe parts. Wherefore ſince You are ſo great a Lord, and nothing Inferior to him "either in Birth, Alliance, or Courage, 'tis fitter, that what You do, You build on "your own Foundation. And e'en let the Lord Chandos do what he pleaſes, upon his "own account; [c] ſince in compariſon to You he is but a Knight Batchelour. A Lecture of Ambition is eaſily received by moſt Men, but eſpecially by Young Perſons, who apparently hazard their Lives for Honour. So that the Earls Eagerneſs to accompany the Lord Chandos was upon this occaſion very much abated; whereupon he made his Excuſe for that time, and declin'd to joyn Iſſue in the Enterpriſe. Envy is ſurely the Stepmother of all Brave Undertakings; and the Laudable Courſe of Vertue is never ſtopt, but by the Rubs ſhe flings in her way: However the Juſt God has made her a Plague to her ſelf, and in the End all the Miſchief, ſhe deſign'd, falls redoubled upon her own Head. The Earl of Pembroke will find a time to repent this folly of his, and we ſhall ſhortly ſee him to owe his Life to the Aſſiſtance of this General, under whom He now deſpis'd to learn the Rudiments of War.

[c] Froiſ. ibid.

Notwithſtanding, the Lord Chandos would not break his Purpoſe; but made his Rendezvous at Poictiers, and then began his March with 300 Men of Arms, Knights, and Eſquires, and 1100 Archers in his Company. The Chief Noblemen and Captains under him were the Lord Thomas Piercy, the Lord Thomas Spencer, Sr. Neal Loring, Sr. Dangouſes, Sr. Thomas Baniſter, Sr. John Trivet, Sr. Geoffry Argentine, Sr. William Montendre, Sr. Moubron Linieres, Sr. Richard Taunton, and many more, all who rode forth with their ſeveral Retinues, and the Archers in good Array, and paſſed thrô Poictou, into the parts of Anjou, their Van-Currours, who rode before them, ravaging all the Country, as they went. At this rate they proceeded, and did what they pleas'd in the fruitfull Land of Anjou, none offering to oppoſe them; thô they tarried in thoſe parts for 15 days, eſpecially in Loudunois. After which they return'd again with much Booty, taking the way between Anjou and Touraine, along by the River Creuſe; whence they deſcended into the Lands of the Vicount of Rochechoüart, and put all to fire and ſword, leaving nothing untouch'd, except perhaps what was ſecur'd in ſtrong Fortreſſes. So at laſt they paſſed the Vienne at St. Junien, and ſhew'd themſelves before the ſtrong Town of Rochechoüart, which they attempted, but in vain: For the Vicount had beforehand well fortify'd the Place, and ſet therein two good Captains, Sr. Tibault du Pont, and Sr. Helion de Talay; whereupon the Lord Chandos would ſpend no more time there. Juſt then he had notice, how the Lord Lewis of Sancerre, Marſhal shal of France, was at la Haye en Touraine with a considerable Body of Men; where- AN. DOM. 1369. AN. Regni Angliæ XLIII. Franciæ XXX.

fore being desirous to go thither, and yet thinking himself not strong enough, he sent once more to the Earl of Pembroke, kindly entreating him, now that an Advantage was offer'd against the Enemy, to come and joyn him with all his Power at Chastelleraut, in order to march together toward la Haye en Touraine. Chandos the Herald went on this Message, and found the Young Earl at Mortaigne, who had indeed already made his Musters, but with intent to undertake, as he was before advised, an Expedition by himself, so to win the more Honour. Wherefore again he excus'd himself to the Herald, saying, how as then he could not by any means wait upon the Lord Chandos, because he had engag'd himself another way. The Herald return'd with this Answer to Chastelleraut, where he found his Lord Sr. John Chandos, and related to him the Earls excuse from point to point. Sr. John was exceedingly displeased in his Mind, when he heard, what News his Herald had brought him: For he concluded, that it was an effect of ill Consequence to the Affairs of the Prince, his Master, and that it proceeded from Envy or Presumption, both which are Enemies to the Publique Good in Matters relating to the Concern of a Common-Weal. So he only said, "Well then "in Gods Name be it so! If a Man of Honour can be byass'd from his Countries Good "by private Designs. And therewithall he dismist the Greater part of his Troops, and went with the rest to the City of Poictiers. The Effects of this trespass upon Discipline We shall see immediately.

XXI. Now [d] when the Lord John Hastings Earl of Pembroke, heard, how the Lord Chandos had discharged the Major part of his Forces, and was returned to the City of Poictiers, then he thought it high time for him to go abroad in quest of Honour; and so he marched forth of Mortagne with 300 Spears, English and Poictevins, and some other Knights of England, Poictou, and Saintogne, who had lately been with the Lord Chandos. With these Troops he passed thrô Poictou, taking the same way, which the Lord Chandos had done before, and burnt, and ravaged about in the Country of Anjou, taking for Prize all that was left, and so he also tarried a while in the Land of Loudunois; and from thence he went into the Lands of the Vicount of Rochechoüart, where he did many severe Acts of Hostility. Now the French Captains, who lay in Garrison on the Marches of Touraine, Anjou, and Poictou, were well informed both of the Lord Chandos his Expedition, and also of this of the Earl of Pembroke; and moreover they understood, how the Earl, who was but a very Young Man, not exceeding one and twenty Years of Age, had thrô meer Presumption and Folly disdain'd to go forth in the Company of the Lord John Chandos. Wherefore they endeavour'd to snap him, if they might, and determin'd, whatever should happen to encounter with him; for at best they reckon'd him much more easie to deal with, than the Lord Chandos. Accordingly having privately made their Musters, consisting of a certain Quota from every Garrison, they went secretly one Night from La Roche Pozay in Touraine, just on the limits of Poictou, under the Command of Lewis of Sancerre, Marshal of France, with whom were Sr. Robert of Sancerre, his Brother, Sr. John de Vienne, Sr. John Bull, Sr. William Bourde, Sr. Lewis of St. Julian, and Carlonet the Breton; to the Number of 700 Fighting Men. The Earl of Pembroke had by this time ended his Expedition, and was returning home again, having already entred Poictou, after he had ravaged without Controll in the Lands of the Vicount of Rochechoüart. He had in his Company the Lord Baldwin Frevile, Seneschal of Saintogne, Sr. Neale Loring, Sr. Thomas Spencer, Sr. Thomas Piercy, Sr. Dangouses, Sr. John Harpedon, Sr. James of Surgieres, Sr. John Cousins, Sr. Thomas of St. Alban, Sr. Robert Twiford, Sr. John Montagu, Sr. Simon Ausagne, Sr. John Touchet, and many more Gentlemen of England and Poictou. The Earl and his Men rode homeward without any suspicion, having not had the least Intelligence of any Men of War stirring abroad at that time; and in this Security, with great Prey and Booty they enter'd the Bounds of Poictou. On a [e] day the Earl and his Men rode into a certain Village, called Puirenon, about High-Noon, where they intended to Dine, and began to mark out their Quarters, and their Valets set up their Horses; and others were busie in providing their Dinner, when suddenly the Frenchmen, who knew well enough what to do, came galloping into the Town with their Spears in their Rests and crying out, "Our Lady of Sancerre for the Marshal of France. And therewith they beat down the Englishmen on all hands in the streets, and in the Houses; wherefore there arose a great noise, whereat the Earl of Pembroke and his Men were all amazed, for they were suddenly taken. When the Earl, Sr. Baldwin Frevile, and Sr. Thomas Piercy, with the other Knights heard, how the French were come and assailed their Men, they drew forth of their Lodgings, blew their Trumpets, and unfolded their Banners, hoping hoping to bring their Troops together into Order: But it was too late; the French had intercepted many, and ſlain more, and diſturbed all the reſt; ſo that at the firſt brunt there were taken and ſlain more than ſixſcore. Wherefore the Earl's laſt ſhift was to withdraw, as ſoon as he might with thoſe Men he had left, which were not above 200 beſide all the Chief Officers, into a place belonging to the Temple, encloſed with High Stone Walls. Hither they convey'd themſelves and their Horſes, as many as they could recover, and immediately prepared to defend the place with all their Power; and barr'd up the Gates, and gather'd together huge Stones, and ſo ſet themſelves in the beſt poſture they might deviſe. The mean while all thoſe, who were found in the Town, were either taken or ſlain, and moſt part of their Horſes and Armour, and all the Earl of Pembroke's Jewels, Riches, and Baggage were won. Word was brought to the Frenchmen, that the Earl himſelf and the reſidue of his Men were got together in a kind of a Church-yard, at which News they were well pleas'd; for they knew the place was not impregnable. Some of them ſaid in jeſt, "Let Us give "them a little time to chooſe out their own Graves, and after Dinner we'll come "and ſee, how they fit them. But the Chief Captains ſaid, "Let Us go to 'um pre-"ſently, they are all our own, they can no ways eſcape our Hands: Now they ſhall "pay dearly for all the Damages they have done Us in Touraine and Anjou. And ſo they came in good Array to the Place, and began to Aſſault it with great Vigour every where round about; being all Men, that wanted neither Skill nor Courage. The Earl of Pembroke and his Men did their utmoſt to defend themſelves; ſo that no Men living could do better. The Frenchmen had certain ſcaling Ladders by Chance with them, upon which ſome of them adventur'd to mount the Wall with their Shields over their Heads for fear of ſhot, and caſting of ſtones: But when they were up they were ſo hotly received by good Knights and Eſquires with Swords, Spears, and Axes in their hands, who ſtood ready to fight them hand to hand, and menaged them ſo fiercely, that they deſcended much faſter, than they had come up; and others were ſo roughly handled by the Archers, and ſo bruiſed with ſtones, that flew about their Ears, that happy was he, who could make haſte back again. In this Manner the Aſſault endured, till it began to be dark; at which time the Frenchmen ſounded a Retreat, being very weary with that days ſervice; but reſolving the next Morning betimes to give them another Viſit. But all things duly conſider'd, they nothing doubted of Succeſs; but ſaid, "Surely they are all ours every Man of them: They cannot long hold "out againſt Us; or if they do, We ſhall famiſh them. Theſe Walls are not ſtrong e-"nough to keep out Hunger. You may eaſily Gueſs, that the Young Earl of Pembroke and his Company were in no good Condition; they all now ſaw their Danger, and no doubt, repented of their Folly in Diſdaining to ride along with the Lord Chandos: For they knew thoſe thin Walls were not able to defend them long, and beſides they wanted Victuals, and their Artillery was far ſpent. Yet they made not the leaſt ſhow of Fear, but reſolv'd upon occaſion to faſt a Day and a Night, or ſo. The Earl of Pembroke had little or no ſleep all that Night; for He and his Men employ'd themſelves in fortifying their Poſt, by gathering together Stones and ſharp Flints to offend the Enemy; for they knew well they ſhould have an early Serenade the next Morning. But when it was Dark Night, the Earl ſpake to an Eſquire of his, on whoſe Fidelity he greatly relyed, deſiring him to go out at a back Poſtern, and ſo ride to Poictiers, and tell the Lord John Chandos, into what an imminent Danger he and his Men were plunged, ſhewing alſo, that if he pleas'd, he might come ſoon enough to their Aid: For he hop'd to defend the Place, till the next day paſt Noon. The Eſquire, who dearly lov'd the Earl of Pembroke (for he was a moſt Gallant and Couragious young Gentleman, however a too-eager Deſire of Glory had deceived him at this time) and ſaw his Dangerous Condition, promiſed to do his Meſſage punctually and ſpeedily, adding, that He knew the way, no Man better. So about Midnight he mounted a Good Horſe, and iſſued out at the Poſtern, and took (as he thought) the next way to Poictiers: But for all his Skill he rode all Night out of the way; ſo that it was fair Day, before he could recover it again. At the ſame time the Frenchmen arm'd themſelves, and ſounded to the Aſſault, ſaying, "how the Cool of the Morning was fitter for that "Work, than the Heat of the Day. So they drew to the Place in good Order, and began the Aſſault afreſh; and ſome ventur'd again to mount the Walls, with their Shields over their Heads; for they thought it an Honour worth contending for, to mount up firſt. But the Engliſhmen were not idle; they ſtood ready in all Places to defend themſelves; the leaſt miſtake or remiſsneſs at that time, had been no leſs than Fatal. Wherefore they defended themſelves to a Miracle, and caſt Stones of ſix, eight, eight, ten or twelve pound Weight, which batter'd Shields and Helmets, and slew, and hurt and tumbled down many of their Enemies. You never perhaps did hear of so weak a Place so well defended by so few Hands, against so many Valiant Knights and Esquires as the Frenchmen were. This second Assault endured thus without any Advantage to the French, till it was Noon: But before that [f] about Nine of the Clock in the Morning, when the Assault was at the highest, the Enemy being vext at the Heart to see the English hold out so long, sent about the neighbouring Villages for Pickaxes and Mattocks to break down and undermine the Wall, of which Matter the English were all along most afraid. At that instant the Earl of Pembroke called unto him an Esquire of his, and said, "Here Friend, take my best Courser and ride forth at the "Postern-Gate (we shall make you a Free passage) and hie straight to Poictiers, and "shew my Good Lord John Chandos the dangerous Condition we are in, and recom-"mend me unto him by this Token. And therewithall he drew off a Rich Ring from his Finger, and deliver'd it unto him saying, "Give Sr. John Chandos this Ring: He "knows it well. The Esquire gladly undertook the Errand, for he thought it would be much to his Honour, if he could obtain to escape the Enemy, and to come to the speech of the Lord Chandos. So he took the Ring, mounted the Earls Courser, and got off by a Back way, while the Assault was hot on another Part, and rode upon the Spur directly for Poictiers. And still the Assault was carried on with extream Obstinacy; and the Englishmen defended themselves to Admiration; it was their Wisdom to do their utmost now, or else they had been slain every Man.

[d] Froiss. c. 265. fol. 159.

[e] Froiss. c. 265. Du Chesne p. 702.

An. Dom. 1369. An. Regni Angliæ XLIII. Franciæ XXX.

AN. DOM. 1369. An. Regni Angliæ XLIII. Franciæ XXX.

[f] Froiss. c. 266. f. 160.

XXII. But now 'tis time to see what became of the First Esquire, who as we shew'd, rode all night out of the Way, and when it was fair Morning, then at last he found his Errour, and got into the Right Road which leads to Poictiers, at which time his Horse began to tire. However he came thither by Nine of the Clock, and alighted before the Lord John Chandos his Lodgings, and entred and found him at Mass; but for all that he went directly to him, and kneeled down and did his Message, as he was commanded. Now Sr. John Chandos was not well pleased in mind with the Earl of Pembroke, because a few Days before he had Twice refused to ride forth with him against the Enemy, as we have related. Wherefore being not enclin'd to make any great haste, he only said, "It will be hard for us to come thither time enough, and hear out this Mass too. Soon after Mass the Tables were spread for Dinner, and the Servants asked him if he would please to eat. Yes, said he, if you are ready, and so he went into the Hall, and Knights and Esquires served him with Water. While he was yet washing, there came into the Hall the Second Esquire from the Earl of Pembroke, who kneeling down took the Ring out of his Purse and said, "Right Dear Sir, the Earl of Pem-"broke recommends himself to you by this Token, desiring you of all Love to come to "his Aid, and to deliver him from the Danger in which he and all his Men are now in "at Puirenon. Then Sr. John Chandos, who was still but cold in the Matter, took the Ring which he knew well enough, having given it formerly to the Earl as a Pledge of his Good-will; but at this time he seem'd to take little notice of that, and only said, "To come thither time enough is almost impossible, if you left him in that "Condition as you tell me. Let us go to Dinner, the Meat will be cold else. So he sat down with his Chief Captains about him, and had done with the First Course; but as the Second was served up and he had hardly tasted thereof, having all this while deeply weighed the Matter with himself, he suddenly lifted up his Head, and said to the Knights and Esquires about him, "Hark ye Gentlemen, the Earl of Pembroke is a No-"ble Person, and of High Lineage, he is Son also to my Natural Lord the King of "England, for he hath married a Daughter of his, and in all things he is a Companion "with the Earl of Cambridge. He has requested me to come and succour him, and I "ought not to see such a Man lost if I may help it: Wherefore I'll go to his Assistance "by the Grace of God. And with that Word he thrust away the Table from him, saying, "Gentlemen, make ready for Puirenon. His Men were all overjoy'd when they heard these Words, and immediatly flew to their Arms, and the Trumpets sounded, and every Man made haste to mount his Horse, as soon as it was known, that the Lord Chandos would ride to Puirenon, to help the Earl of Pembroke and his Men that were besieged there. So they drew out into the Field more than 200 Spears, and presently the Lord Chandos was in the Head of them compleatly armed, and so they set forward, their Numbers still encreasing as they went. The Frenchmen that held the Earl of Pembroke so close, had their Spies abroad, who brought them Word at High noon (to which time they had continued the Assault) that Sr. John Chandos had left Poictiers with more than 200 Men of Arms, and was coming thitherward in great haste, having having as it seem'd, an huge desire to find them there. When Sr. Lewis of Sancerre, Sr. John de Vienne, and the other Captains heard this News, the Wisest of them said, "Gentlemen, our Men are now extream weary, and spent with Assaulting these English- "men both yesterday and to day; surely therefore it would be better for us to return "now fair and softly while we are well, with such Prisoners and Booty as we have, than "to expect the arrival of the Lord Chandos and his Men, who are fresh and lusty, and "what Number they make we know not: For otherwise we may not only lose what "we have with so much Labour won, but fling away our selves too in the Bargain. This Advice was presently taken, for they had but a short time to advise in: So they sounded a Retreat, and put themselves in Order, and trussed up all their Baggage, and presently took the way to la Roche Pozay. The Earl of Pembroke, and the Lords with him knew by this their hasty Retreat, that the Frenchmen were inform'd of the Lord Chandos his Coming; then he said, "Come on now Gentlemen, let us leave this "unhappy Place, where we have been thus long Prisoners against our Wills, "and ride forth toward Poictiers to meet my Dear Friend Sr. John Chandos. Then those that had Horses still leapt upon them, and some went two and two on an Horse, the rest going on foot, and so they all went out of their Hold with great joy, taking the way toward Poictiers. They had scarce gone thus the space of a League, but they met with the Lord Chandos and his Men, to the great satisfaction of both Parties, who shook each other by the Hands, the one side congratulating the others Safety, and they returning thanks for so seasonable Deliverance. But Sr. John Chandos said, how he was extreamly dissatisfied with himself, that he came too late to find the Frenchmen. Thus they rode all together the space of three Leagues, and then took leave of each other, Sr. John returning to Poictiers, and the Earl of Pembroke to Mortagne from whence he went at first. But the Marshal of France with his Troops went without the least impeachment to la Roche Pozay, where the Booty was divided; and then every Man return'd to his own Garrison, leading along with him his Prisoners, whom shortly after they ransom'd with much Courtesie and at easie Rates, as was the Custom in those Days between the English and French Men.

An. Dom. 1369. An. Regni Angliæ XLIII. Franciæ XXX.

[g] Froiss. c. 267. f. 161.

XXIII. All this [g] while the Duke of Lancaster and the Duke of Burgundy faced each other at Tournehan, at which time another great Loss happen'd to King Edward of England, which indeed fell not out but by the usual Course of the World, and yet was heavy to the King, his Children, and all the Realm. For now the Incomparable Queen Philippa, who had done so many Acts of Piety and Charity in her Days, and had protected so many oppressed Persons, and had brought forth such Renowned Sons, and was always a [h] constant Lover of the English Nation; this Excellent Lady fell mortally sick in the Castle of Windsor, and was brought so low, that she was given over in the Opinion of the Wisest. But when the Good Lady [i] perceived her Dissolution approaching, she desired to speak with the King her Husband, who coming into her Chamber, she put forth her Right Hand out of the Bed, and took the King by his Right Hand, whose great Heart was now almost conquer'd with Grief, and then she said, "Sir, blessed be God, We have lived in good Love together this two and fourty "Years, crown'd all the while with Peace, Joy and great Prosperity: But now Sir, since "it pleaseth Almighty God to call me from You, I pray that You will grant unto me "three Requests at this our Parting. Then the King not able to refrain from Tears said, "Dearest Madam, ask what You will, I grant it." "Sir (said she) First of all I "desire You, that as for all manner of People, whom I have had occasion to deal with all "in Merchandise, either on this side or beyond the Sea, You would please to pay them what- "ever it shall appear I owe unto them, or to any other Person. Secondly, whatsoever "Donations or Promises I have made to any Churches, Religious Houses or Colleges, "either in this or other Countries, as my Devotion perswaded me, that You would please "to confirm and fulfill the same. And Lastly Sir, I heartily desire You, that whensoe- "ver it shall please God to call You out of this transitory Life, it would please You to "choose no other Sepulchre but near unto me in Westminster. The King not without many Tears answer'd, "Sweet Madam, all this I firmly promise and grant You with all "my Heart. Then the Good Queen signed her self with the sign of the Cross, in token of her Faith in Jesus Christ, and so recommended the King her Husband, and her Youngest Son Thomas of Woodstock, who being about 14 Years old stood crying at her Bedside, and all her other Children to God Almighty, she quietly yielded up the Ghost on the [k] 15 of August, being the Festival of the Assumption of the Blessed Virgin Mary, to the great Grief of the King, and of all that knew her Rare Vertues and Endowments. She was buried according to her dying Request, in the Abbey of St.

[h] Walsing. hist. p. 179. n. 10.

[i] Froiss. ibid.

[k] M.S. vet. Angl. in Bibl. C.C.C. Cantab. c. 233. Walsing. hist. p. 179. &c.

Peter

Peter at Weſtminſter, in the Chappel of the Kings, where ſoon after the King her Husband began a Sumptuous and Noble Monument, which ſtands entire to this Day, [l] being a Fair Tomb of Black Touchſtone with the Garniſhing, and her Pourtraiture thereon of Alabaſter, about which Monument were placed the Figures, and now the Shields of Arms remain, carved and painted, of theſe Perſons following: At the Head, Edward Prince of Wales her Eldeſt Son, Lewis the Emperour her Brother-in-Law, King Edward the III her Husband, John King of France her Couſin, and William Earl of Hainalt her Father. On the South-ſide, Joan Counteſs of Hainalt her Mother, William Earl of Hainalt her Brother, Margaret Empreſs of Germany her Siſter, [m] Reginald Duke of Gueldre, Eleanor Dutcheſs of Gueldre, John of Hainalt the Queens Uncle, Mary Dutcheſs of Bretagne her Daughter, Lewis Duke of Bavaria her Nephew, Margaret Counteſs of Pembroke her Daughter, Charles of Valois Son to King John of France, and John Duke of Brabant. On the North-ſide, Joan Queen of Scots, John of Eltham Earl of Cornwall, Joan Princeſs of Wales, Lionel Duke of Clarence, Iſabel Counteſs of Bedford, John Duke of Lancaſter, Elizabeth Dutcheſs of Clarence, Edmund Earl of Cambridge, and Thomas of Woodſtock. And laſtly at the Foot of this Glorious Monument ſtood the Images of the King of Navarre, of the King of Bohemia, of the King of Scotland, of the King of Sicily, and of the King of Spain. We ſhall only take leave to record her [n] Epitaph, which was then made upon Her, and is ſtill to be ſeen both in Engliſh and Latine; the Latine running round the Verge of her Monument, and the Engliſh on a Tablet hanging by her Tomb.

AN. DOM. 1369. An. Regni Angliæ XLIII. Franciæ XXX.

[l] Vid. Keep's Monumenta Weſtmonaſt. Sandford's Geneal. Hiſt. p. 172. & Lib. Latinè conſcriptum de Mon. Weſtm. [m] Lat. Marcus.

[n] Extat etiam apud Du Cheſne p. 703. Weevers Fun. Mon. p. 469 Sandford p. 172 Stows Survey of London p. 505. Libel. Latin. de Mon. Weſtmon. & Keep's Mon. Weſtmon.

Gulielmi Hannonis Soboles poſtrema Philippa,
Hic roſeo quondam Pulchra decore jacet.
Tertius Edvardus Rex iſtâ Conjuge lætus
Materno ſuaſu Nobiliúmque fuit.
Frater Johannes [o] Comitis Mavortius Heros
Huic illam voluit conſociare Viro:
Hæc junxit Flandros Conjunctio Sanguinis Anglis,
In Francos venit hinc Gallica dira lues.
Dotibus hæc raris viguit Regina Philippa,
Formâ præſtanti, Relligione, Fide.
Fœcundæ nata eſt Proles numeroſa Parenti;
Inſignes peperit Magnanimóſque Duces.
Oxonii poſuit ſtudioſis Optima Nutrix
Regineas [p] Ædes, Palladiámque Scholam.

Conjux Edvardi jacet hìc Regina Philippa

[o] Ità reſtitui contrà ipſius tumuli & omnium Authorum fidem; non ob quantitatem ſolam, ſed etiam ſenſu ità poſtulante. Nam Johannes hic Comes nunquam erat, ſed Frater Comitis, &c.

[p] In Regineas quantitas deſideratur.

DISCE VIVERE.

The News of the Queen of England's Death was brought into the Engliſh Camp at Turnehan, whereat the Duke of Lancaſter, and all others were extreamly troubled; for indeed ſhe had the Reputation of being the moſt Sweet-Natur'd, Liberal and Courteous Queen that ever reigned. But for all this the Engliſhmen brake not their Order; but ſtill continued to face the Frenchmen as before.

XXIV. Now it happen'd, that certain Knights and Eſquires of France who were in the Army, and ſaw daily their Enemies before them, without any likelihood of a Battle, were much diſpleaſed in themſelves, and ſo concluded together to go as on ſuch a Morning to the Engliſh Camp, and beat up their Quarters. Of this mind there were above 300 Knights and Eſquires of Vermandois, Artois and Corbois in Picardy, who made their Appointment private, without ſo much as giving any knowledge of their Deſign to either of their Marſhals. On the appointed Morning at Peep of Day they were ready altogether armed and mounted, and ſo they rode forth without making the leaſt Noiſe, coaſting about the Hill of Turnehan to ſeek their Advantage, and if poſſible to come in at one of the Corners of the Engliſh Camp. At that Corner to which they came was quarter'd the Lord Robert of Namur and his Troops, and that Night he had kept the Watch, and was but juſt now in the Morning retired to his Tent, having almoſt at that inſtant ſeated himſelf at Table to take ſome Refreſhment after his long Service. He was armed at all Points except his Helmet, and ſo was the Lord of Ponthieu, who had been that Night his Companion, and now ſat down with him. At which time the Frenchmen daſhed in at that Part where they were, but as good hap was, thoſe who had aſſiſted in keeping the Watch, were not yet unarmed nor unprovided, which proved well for them; for otherwiſe they had all been ſlain or taken. But now being ready to repell their Enemies, they began boldly to encounter with them, and at the firſt Brunt brake their Array a little. Preſently News came to Sr. Robert of Namur, how his Men were engaged with the French; whereupon he thruſt away the Table from him and ſaid, "Let us go and help our Men." And ſo he clapt on his Helmet, and commanded one to take his Banner and diſplay it, which was [q] Or a Lion Rampant Sable, Crown'd Gules. Then one ſaid unto him, "Sir, methinks it were beſt to ſend "to the Duke of Lancaſter, and not fight without him. To which he reply'd briefly, "Send who will ſend, for I'll go the neareſt way I can to help my Men. And with that he went forth with his Naked Sword in his Hands toward his Enemies, the Lord of Ponthieu, Sr. Henry of Flanders, and ſeveral other Valiant Knights attending him. There he found his Men hotly engaged with the French, who were a great Number, and in all likelihood had done no ſmall Miſchief, had not this ſeaſonable Succour came as it did. But when they ſaw the Banner of the Lord Robert of Namur, they began to retire as well as they could; for they feared that the whole Hoſt had received the Alarm, and ſo for the moſt part it had. There the Frenchmen loſt under Sr. Robert's Banner a Gallant Knight of Vermandois, named Sr. Robert of Colen, which was a Conſiderable Loſs; for he was very Diſcreet, Courteous and Valiant. And with that the French retreated without any further Attempt, for they doubted to loſe more than lately they had hoped to win: And Sr. Robert was not in the mind to chace them indiſcreetly; but rallied his Men together, and when he ſaw they were quite gone off, return'd to his Pavilion, having not loſt one Man. There were few or no Adventures after this worthy the Relation.

An. Dom. 1369. An. Regni Angliæ XLIII. Franciæ XXX.

[q] Vid. Aſhmoles Garter, Plate 85

XXV. It diſpleaſed [r] many of either Party, that they lay thus long confronting one another to no purpoſe; thô on both Sides they were alarum'd every Day by Reports, that they ſhould fight without fail on the Morrow, which Morrow notwithſtanding never came. For as we ſhew'd before, the Duke of Burgundy durſt not diſobey the Command of the King his Brother, who had moſt ſtrictly charged him by no means in the World to fight the Engliſhmen without an expreſs Order from Him. It is reported, [s] that Thomas Beauchamp Earl of Warwick, hearing how unworthily the Engliſh at this time declin'd Battle, haſted out of England with ſome Choice Troops, and ſailed toward Calais. Whereof the Frenchmen having notice, left their Tents with all their Victuals behind them in great Amazement and fled. That as ſoon as the Earl of Warwick came to the Engliſh Camp, he highly blamed thoſe, who occaſion'd that ſhamefull Delay, and ſaid, "I will go on and fight the Enemy, before the Engliſh Bread "which my Men have eaten be digeſted, and thereupon that he immediately entred the Iſle of Caux in Normandy, which he waſted. However this Account I cannot admit for ſeveral Reaſons: For thô Authorities are produced to ſhew, that he came not over together with the Army, becauſe his Will is ſaid to [t] bear Date at Chelchench, vulgarly Chelſea near Weſtminſter, on a Tueſday, being the Sixth of September this Year, whereby he muſt be granted to have been in England at that time: Yet the Truth of this Matter may be juſtly queſtion'd; for the Dominical Letter this Year being G, it is plain, that the Sixth of September was not then a Tueſday but a Thurſday. Wherefore I rather concurr with Froiſard, who ſays expreſly, how he came along with the Duke of Lancaſter at his firſt ſetting forth, and gives another Occaſion of the French Armies breaking up, which now as the more Authentick we ſhall relate: When we have alſo enforced this Argument by remembring, that without ſuch Reaſons as we have ſhewn, it was not at all probable, that the Lord Walter Manny (of whoſe undaunted Courage this Hiſtory affords many notable Teſtimonies) and Humphry Bohun Earl of Hereford and Eſſex, and many other Great and Gallant Men, who were in this Expedition, being accounted little Inferior to this Earl of Warwick himſelf for Audacity and Preſence of Spirit, I ſay, it is no ways probable, that theſe Men and the like (even thô the Duke of Lancaſter ſhould have been of another Opinion) would ever have conſented to lie thus, like Daſtards, had there not been apparent Raſhneſs in offering Battle.

[r] Froiſ. c. 268.

[s] Walſing. hiſt. p. 178. n. 30. & 40. & M.S. vet. Ang. in Bibl. C.C.C. Cantab. c. 233. &c.

[t] Dugd. Warwickſhire p. 317. ex Libro Wittleſey dicto f. 110.

XXVI. To proceed therefore with Froiſard, The Duke of Burgundy, as that Author, who flouriſhed at that time, was credibly informed, conſider'd with himſelf, how he had layn thus idle a long while at great Expence, and that he could no longer continue ſo without a foul blemiſh upon his Honour: Becauſe he ſo far outnumbred his Enemies, that they ſeem'd but an Handfull in Compariſon to him: And yet he neither had offer'd them Battle, nor durſt do it, becauſe of the King, his Brothers Charge to the contrary. Wherefore he ſent certain Knights to the King, his Brother, to declare unto him, that either he deſired leave to put all things to the Iſſue of a Battle, or that he might have Licence to depart. The King knew well his Brothers demand was but reaſonable, and therefore commanded him now at laſt on ſight of his Letters, forthwith to break up his Camp, and to diſlodge with all poſſible Circumſpection; and ſo having diſcharged his Men of War, to come unto him to Paris, adding, that He himſelf would go in Perſon againſt the Engliſh. When the Duke of Burgundy had read theſe Letters, he gave private Notice thereof to the Chief Officers of the Army; telling them how the King had commanded him to riſe and march off. And at Midnight accordingly they truſſed up all their Carriage without making any noiſe, and mounted their Horſes, and ſo ſetting fire to their Tents, began to march away in ſilence. Sr. Henry of Flanders kept the Watch that Night with the Lord Robert of Namur's Men; and he firſt chanced to eſpy the Fire, and then two or three more, and after that others. Sr. Henry ſaid, when he ſaw the light, "Ah! I doubt theſe French-men intend to awake Us this Night; as it ſhould ſeem by their Dealing: Let Us "go and awake the Lord Robert of Namur; that if they do come, they may not find "Us ſleeping. And with that, he rode himſelf to the Lodgings of the Lord Robert, and called to his Chamberlains, telling them how it was fit, they ſhould awaken their Lord, for he believed the Enemy was coming upon them. They went preſently to his Bedſide and awoke him, telling him what Sr. Henry had ſaid. "Well, ſaid He, "I perceive ſhortly We ſhall have ſome News; call up our Men and bid them all make "haſte to Arms. This was done, and he himſelf was dreſſed and arm'd, as ſoon as might be, and when he had ſeen his Men in good Order, his Banner being raiſed, he went to the Duke of Lancaſter's Pavilion, who by that time was almoſt armed too; for he had notice of the Matter before. So in ſhort the whole Army was ready, and drew together about the Duke in good Order of Battle, ſtill taking their Places, as they were brought up by their Leaders, fair and ſoftly; without any Noiſe or Light: And all the Archers were ranged before them in ſuch a Place, where it was concluded, the French would attaque them. When they had ſtood thus without hearing any News for nigh the ſpace of two Hours, the Duke demanded of the Lords about him, what they thought beſt for him to do? Some ſaid one thing and ſome another. Then the Duke ſpake to the Lord Walter Manny, who ſtood next him, what ſay You Sir? Why truly Sir (ſaid he) I can hardly tell what to ſay: But if You were to follow my Opinion, You ſhould ordain your Men of Arms and Archers in manner of Battle, and advance forward by Degrees: For Sir, it will be day anon, and then You will ſee perfectly before You. The Duke approv'd of his Advice; but others contradicted it, ſaying, how they would not by any means have the Duke as yet leave that place of Advantage. After ſome Altercation about this Matter, it was concluded to ſend forth certain of Sr. Robert of Namur's, and of Sr. Valeran van Bormio's Company, on Horſeback; becauſe they were the fitteſt for ſuch an Enterpriſe; and ſo Thirty of the beſt light Horſe were ſent forth to view the French Hoſt. Immediately upon their Departure, Sr. Walter Manny ſaid to the Duke, "Sir, never believe me, if the Frenchmen are "not fairly fled. Therefore mount your Horſe, and follow with all your Forces preſently, and no doubt, You'll obtain an Honourable Day. Sir (ſaid the Duke) hitherto I "have always follow'd the Advice of my Council, and ever will do: But I can never "believe, that ſo many Valiant Knights and Men of Arms, as are here on the French "party, would offer to fly away thus ſhamefully. Perhaps rather they have made theſe "Fires to entice Us toward them; and ſo to deceive Us: But however our Scouts will "be here preſently, and they'll bring Us a true account, how Matters ſtand. While they were debating thus, their Scouts came in, and ſaid in effect as Sr. Walter Manny had conjectur'd, and ſhew'd all what they had ſeen and found, ſaying, how there was no Body in the Camp; but certain poor Victuallers, who us'd to follow the Hoſt, and they all affirmed, that the Duke of Burgundy was fled: Then Sr. Walter was highly applauded for his true Judgement. Upon this the Duke of Lancaſter return'd to his Lodgings and unarm'd himſelf, intending to go and Dine that Day in the French Camp, which he had done, but for the Fire and Smoak; however at Night he went and Supp'd, and lodged there, and his Men refreſhed themſelves with what they had. The next Morning he diſlodged, and went back to Calais, for two or three Days, ſo to eaſe his Men; the mean while the Duke of Burgundy marched to St. Omers; where he diſmiſs'd the greater part of his Army for that time: But he could not gather together ſuch an Army again, without great trouble.

to

AN. DOM. 1369. An. Regni Angliæ XLIII. Franciæ XXX.

XXVII. That ſame Week the Earl of Pembroke, who was in Poicton, very deſirous to Revenge that Loſs, which he had received at Puirenon from Sr. Lewis of Sancerre, went from Mortagne with 200 Spears in his Company, and came to Angouleſme to the Prince of Wales, who received them with large Demonſtrations of Princely Kindneſs. The Earl deſired him to ſupply him with a certain Number of Men, and to give him leave to undertake another Expedition, ſaying, that he had a great Deſire to repay ſome of the Injuries lately done unto him by the French; and the Prince, who loved him entirely, condeſcended to his Requeſt. Now it ſeems Sr. Hugh Calverley was lately return'd with more than 500 Men of War of the Companions, out of the Lands of the Earl of Armagnac; where he had left many Bloody Characters of his Reſentment. Him the Prince commanded to accompany the Earl of Pembroke in that his Expedition; and beſides, the Earl himſelf deſired the Lord Lewis of Harcourt, Sr. Guiſchard Dangle, Sr. Percival Collins, Sr. Richard of Pontchardon. Sr. Thomas Piercy, the Lord of Pons, the Lord of Pinant, the Lord of Partenay, and ſeveral other Knights of the Prince's, who were content to go along with him: And ſo in all, his Forces amounted to 500 Men of Arms, 300 Archers on Horſeback, and 1500 ſtout Brigandines with Launces, and Shields on foot. With this Small, but Choſen Army, the Earl of Pembroke rode forth, till he came into Anjou, where he began to ravage about, and to put all to Fire and Sword, and in that Manner he paſſed thrô on one ſide the Loire, burning and winning of Towns and ſmall Fortreſſes, and Ranſoming Priſoners all over the plain Country, as far as Saumur on the Loire, where he lodged in the Suburbs, and attempted the Town; but could not take it, becauſe it was ſo well defended by Sr. Robert of Sancerre, who was there in Perſon; however he deſtroy'd all the Country about. While the Earl was here, Sr. Hugh Calverley and his Troops went to a Town on the Loire, called Pont de Cé, about a League from Angiers; the Defendants were ſoon diſcomfited, and the Town and Bridge won, and ſtraight fortified to the uſe of the Engliſh ſo well, that they held Garriſon there a great while after. In this Expedition they alſo wan an Abbey called St. Maure, which they fortified for their own uſe ſo ſtrongly, that it prov'd a conſiderable Garriſon, and did much harm to the Country adjoyning all that Winter, and the Summer following.

An. Dom. 1369. An. Regni Angliæ XLIII. Franciæ XXX.

XXVIII. The Armies of England and France being broke up at Tournehan in that Manner, as We have related, " after that the Duke of Lancaſter had refreſhed himſelf and his Men for three days at Calais, then the ſaid Duke thought to take another Progreſs into France, and ſo his two Marſhals Thomas Beauchamp Earl of Warwick, and the Lord Roger Beauchamp of Bletſho, gave Command for all Men to be ready to take the Field, whereat the whole Army was glad, deſiring nothing more than to make an Inroad into the Enemies Country. So they began their March from Calais in good Order, all Men being well acquainted with what they were to do. The firſt day they went five Leagues, and the next Morning early came to St. Omers, where they had a Skirmiſh at the Gates; but here they made no ſtay, but paſſed on, and went and lodged on the Moraſs of Helfaut, and on the Third Day they came before Teroüenne, wherein was Guy, Earl of St. Paul with a ſtrong Garriſon of Men of War. This place they paſſed by too, taking the way toward Heſdin; but for the remainder of that Day, and the Night following, they encamped by the little River of Lys. Now when the Earl of St. Paul ſaw the Engliſh make toward his Lands, he eaſily believed, they went not thither for his Good; for he knew, they hated him extreamly, and that he had given them no ſmall occaſion ſo to do. Wherefore having left Teroüenne to the Cuſtody of the Lord of le Puy, and Sr. John Roye, he rode thence in the Dark Night, taking with him ſome Choſen Men of Arms, till he came to the Town of St. Pol in Artois. The next Morning the Engliſh came thither, and Aſſaulted the Place, and had certainly been Maſters of it, had it not been for this opportune Prevention of the Earls, in coming to the Towns Relief. However the Duke did what he pleas'd in the Earldom of St. Pol, burning and ravaging all the plain Country: He ſhew'd himſelf before Pas, where the Lady of Dourlens was at that time, and offer'd, as if he intended to beſiege the Place; for he gaged the Depth of the Ditch with his Spear, but he paſſed on without medling, and ſo came to a Fair Town and Caſtle, called Luchen, the Town they burnt, but the Caſtle they could not force. Thence they Marched to St. Riquier, for ordinarily they rode not above three or four Leagues a Day; but they always burnt up the Country, as they went; and ſo they paſſed the River of Soame at Blanchetteaque beneath Abbeville; for that City was now turned French; and entred the Country of Vimeux, with intent to go to Harfleur on the Seyne, there to burn the French Kings Navy. But the Earl of St. Paul, and the Lord Moreau de Fiennes, Conſtable of France, followed them at

" Froiſ. c. 269.

ſome

ſome diſtance, with a conſiderable Body of Men of Arms, coaſting them all along, to obſerve their Motions, and to wait for ſome Advantage. But the Engliſh, who were not ignorant thereof, took care of all their Traps, neither venturing to ride looſely, nor to leave the High-ways; for fear of Ambuſhes; they conſtantly Marched in Battle Array, as ready for Fight. And in this Manner they rode thrô Vimeux and the Earldom of Eu, and entred into the Archbiſhoprick of Roüen, and paſſed by Dieppe; till they came in ſight of Harfleur; where they began to pitch their camp; but the Earl of St. Paul had gotten into the Town beforehand with 200 Spears. Three Days the Engliſh lay before the Place, but gave no Aſſault, for they ſaw this Succour rendred their Deſign fruitleſs; ſo on the Fourth Day they began to Decamp, and returned thrô the Lands of the Lord Stouteville, where they burnt and deſtroy'd moſt part of his Country, and waſted the Region called le Pais de Caulx, whence they took their way thrô le Vexin Normand, and having left ſevere Marks of their Diſpleaſure, whereever they came, at laſt they approached toward Oiſemont to repaſs the River of Soame at Blanchetteaque.

XXIX. At this time the Captain of Abbeville for the French King was Sr. Hugh de Chaſtillon, Maſter of the Croſsbows of France; who perceiving, that the Duke of Lancaſter Deſigned to paſs the Soame, Armed himſelf, and only Ten or Twelve more of his Men; with whom he took Horſe, ſaying, How he would go and viſit Rouvray, and ſee, how the Gate there was Defended; becauſe if the Engliſh paſſed that way, they ſhould not ſay; but that it was carefully provided for. This was done early in a Morning, and it was a great Miſt; for it was now the bleaky Month of November. At the ſame time there was in the Army with the Duke of Lancaſter, a Valiant Engliſh Gentleman, named Sr. Nicolas Lovaine, who had been Seneſchal of Ponthieu for the King of England, but was taken Priſoner, as We ſhew'd, the Year before by Sr. Hugh de Chaſtillon, who Ranſomed him at 10000 Franks: This Ranſom ſtuck grievouſly in his ſtomach, and he ſought all Opportunities to make a Repriſal. It chanced ſo well for him; that this very Morning, whereon Sr. Hugh de Chaſtillon went abroad ſo ſlightly attended, this St. Nicolas Lovaine had left the Army with Twenty Men of Arms in his Company, as One, that knew all the Paſſages, Streights, and Avenues of the Country; for he had been acquainted thereabout for the ſpace of three or four Years, even during all the time of his Government. For once therefore he reſolv'd to venture himſelf between Abbeville and the Caſtle of Rouvray. And ſo he rode by a little ſtreight Paſſage thrô a Mariſh, and planted himſelf and his Men among certain old, waſte, and broken Houſes; but they ſtood ſo near to Abbeville, that a Man would never have ſuſpected, that any Engliſh Men durſt have laid an Ambuſh in that Place. However here Sr. Nicolas and his Men lay cloſe, obſerving as well as they could with their Eyes and Ears, who ever ſhould paſs that way backward or forward. At laſt came Sr. Hugh of Chaſtillon, thrô the ſame narrow way with Ten or Twelve Men in his Company; himſelf all Armed, except his Helmet, which his Page bare after him, riding on his Maſters great Courſer; and ſo he paſſed over a little River that was there, thinking to go and ſpeak with the Croſsbow Men, that kept the Gate, to know what they heard of the Engliſh. By that time the Miſt was pretty well clear'd up, and Sr. Nicolas Lovaine ſaw and knew him perfectly, and could not have been better pleas'd, if One had given him 20000 Franks. Then he came out of his Ambuſh, and ſaid to his Men, "Come on now Sirs, luſtily; yonder's the Man, I look for: 'Tis the Ma-
"ſter of the Croſsbows, whom I deſire to have above all Men living. And with that he couched his Spear in his Reſt, ſet ſpurs to his Horſe, and came upon Sr. Hugh de Chaſtillon all of a ſudden, and ſaid aloud, Yield your ſelf, Chaſtillon; or You are but a Dead Man. Sr. Hugh much wonder'd, whence theſe Men of Arms ſhould come ſo ſuddenly upon him; for he had not time to clap on his Helmet, nor to mount his Courſer, which his Page rode on, while he us'd a light Gelding. So that being ſenſible of his Diſadvantage, he asked, who he ſhould yield to? Sr. Nicolas anſwer'd, to your old Acquaintance Lovaine. There Sr. Hugh was fain to yield himſelf; but in taking of him and his Men, there was ſlain a Valiant Citizen of Abbeville, called Laurence Denſon, which was a trouble to Sr. Hugh; but 'twas his own fault; for he made Reſiſtance. When Sr. Nicolas had taken Sr. Hugh de Chaſtillon, he ſaid unto him, "Come on Sr. Hugh! See, yonder there Marches the Duke of Lancaſter and his Men; who intend to paſs the Soame hard by.

And

An. Dom. 1369. An. Regni Angliæ XLIII. Franciæ

And thus Sr. Nicolas Lovaine by good Fortune took Sr. Hugh de Chastillon, Master of the Crossbows of France, and Captain of Abbeville; for whose Loss the said City was much troubled; but the Duke of Lancaster and the English were well pleased: And afterward Sr. Nicolas made him pay a Ransom of Twenty Thousand Franks, which was Double the Sum Sr. Hugh had before extorted from him.

XXX. That Day the Duke of Lancaster passed the River of Soame at Blanchetteaque, after which he Marched toward the strong Town of Rue on the Maye, and so to Montrevil; till at last by several Journeys he return'd again in safety to Calais. But the Renowned [x] Thomas Beauchamp Earl of Warwick, died in the way of the Plague, as some say; thô I am not enclin'd to Credit that any more, than what the same Author says of his frighting away the French Army, and of his going up as far as Normandy, and wasting the Land of Caulx; whereas we find the Duke of Lancaster the Head of this Expedition, and the Earl, one of his Marshals. But Walsingham flourish'd in a time, when the House of John of Gaunt was commonly hated and slander'd, as it was in the Days of Richard the Second; so that no doubt, common Report did more readily attribute all Successfull Matters to any other, than to the said Duke of Lancaster. However that part of this Great Earls Character deserves our Credit, where tis said, that he hardly left his Equal behind him for Courage and Loyalty. His Death happen'd [y] on the 13 of November in the 62[d] Year of his Age, and his Body was afterwards brought over into England, and Solemnly interred in the Midst of the Choire of the Collegiate Church of Warwick, according to the Direction of his last Will and Testament: Where his Tomb is still to be seen, with the Statues of him and his Countess in White Marble, excellently Cut; the Sculp of which Monument is to be seen in Sr. William Dugdale's [z] Antiquities of Warwickshire. He left many Children behind him; but the Eldest was of his own Name, and the Heir as well of his Vertues, as Titles.

[x] Walsing. hist. p.178. n.40. & M.S. vet. Angl. in Bibl. C.C.C. Cantab. c.233.

[y] Dugd. 1 Vol. p.234.

[z] P. 318.

XXXI. When now the Duke of Lancaster had been a few Days at Calais, he gave leave to Sr. Robert of Namur, Sr. Henry of Flanders, Sr. Valeran van Bormio, and all the Germans and other Strangers to go home, having first promised them, by the Grace of God to return the next Year more strong, than he was as then; and by them, desiring the Duke of Gueldre and the Duke of Juliers to joyn him also at that time, and to March with him into France. And soon after he himself return'd for England, thinking it unseasonable to attempt any thing more, till next Summer: For it was now the 19 of November, and a Monday, when he went on Board for England, and thus ended this Expedition, and all Warlike Attempts for this Year. The Duke of Lancaster upon his Return into England found himself a Widdower; for the Lady [a] Blanch, his Wife, was newly Deceased, having left behind her One Son, Henry, sirnamed of Bolingbroke, afterwards King of England, by the Name of Henry IV, and two Daughters, Philippa and Elisabeth. The said Lady Blanch was buried in the Famous Cathedral of St. Paul's Church in London. There died also this Year [b] on the 4 of November, being the Sunday after All-Saints, the Good Old Warrier, Robert Hufford Earl of Suffolk, leaving behind him William, his Second Son and Heir (for Robert le Fitz, his Eldest, was Dead) at that time 30 Years of Age. Dr. John Grandesson Bishop of Excester, Departed this Life on the 15 of July, after he had held that Seat almost 42 Years; and was succeeded by Dr. Thomas Brentingham; of both whom, the Curious Reader may inform himself by Bishop Godwin's Catalogue.

G. Lit. Dom.

[a] Vid. Sandford p.244. &c. & Catal. Hon. p.327 & Walsing. Hypod. p. 131.

[b] Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 48.

XXXII. King Charles of France [c] on the 7 of December, held an Assembly of the Estates, where there was granted unto the King an Imposition of one Sol per Liver upon Salt, of Four Livers upon every Chimney in the City, and of 30 Sols in the Country. As likewise upon the Sale of Wine in the Country, the 13th in Gross, and the 14th upon Retail; and upon entry at Paris 15 Sols for every Pipe of French Wine, and 24 per Pipe for Burgundy Wine. To which the Cities joyfully consented, as knowing these Levies would be well menaged, and cease again with the War.

[c] Mezeray ad hunc ann.

CHAP.

CHAPTER the SEVENTH.

The CONTENTS.

I. The unfortunate Death of the Lord John Chandos. II. His Legacy to the Prince of Wales, the Lord Thomas Percy succeeds him. The Frenchmen taken at Luſſac redeem'd: Some French Lords ſtand Neuters, ſome firm to England, and ſome Change. III. King Edwards Letters of Indemnity to the Gaſcogne Lords. IV. Chaſtelleraut taken by the French V. The Duke of Bourbon beſieges the Companions in Bellepeche; the Earls of Cambridge and Pembroke go to their Succour. VI. The Engliſh Earls deſire to have Battle of the Duke of Bourbon, who refuſing, the Companions leave the Caſtle, and carry away the Dukes Mother Priſoner before his Face. VII. King Edward ſends for Sr. Robert Knolles, and makes him his General, and ſtrengthens Himſelf by Allies. VIII. The French King prepares for the next Campaine, and invites Sr. Bertram of Clequin to his Service: The Dukes of Anjou and Berry reſolve to invade the Principality. IX. King Edwards Preparations againſt France. The Lady Iſabella of Valois deliver'd out of Priſon. X. A Leagne between France and Navarre. XI. The Duke of Anjou invades the Principality on one ſide, and the Duke of Berry on the other. XII. The Prince prepares to oppoſe them. XIII. La Linde being on the point of being betray'd to the French, is ſuddenly reſcued by the Engliſh. XIV. The Death of David Bruce King of Scotland: He is ſucceeded by his Nephew Robert Stuart; the Genealogy of that Glorious Family, and an old Error of the Scotch Hiſtorians concerning King Roberts Children exploded. XV. The Copy of an Authentick Scotch Record with other ſtrong Arguments for that purpoſe. XVI. King Robert enters a Truce with England; Sr. Robert Knolles ſent over with an Army to Calais; with his Exploits. He dares the French King before the Walls of Paris. The Dukes of Anjou and Berry not daring to meet the Black-Prince break up their Armies: Limoges betray'd to the Duke of Berry. XVIII. The Black-Prince goes and lays Siege to Limoges. XIX. Sr. Robert Knolles riſes from before Paris. XX. Limoges taken and ſack'd by the Black-Prince. XXI. A Grant of the Prince's to his Brother the Duke of Lancaſter, with his Stile and Seal deſcribed. XXII. Upon the Vacancy of the Conſtableſhip of France, King Charles creates Sr. Bertram of Clequin his Conſtable. XXIII. Sr. Bertram goes againſt Sr. Robert Knolles, and cuts off a Party of his Army. XXIV. Sr. Robert Knolles clears his Innocence, and Sr. John Menſtreworth proclaim'd Traytor. XXV. Pope Urban X dying is ſucceeded by Gregory XI. Maximus Planudes the Collector of the Greek Epigrams, called Anthologia, flouriſhes.

I. TOward the Declining of the laſt Year there was given an Occaſion of a very unhappy Accident which befell England this Year, whereof thô unwilling We ſhall now diſcourſe. The Town [a] of St. Salvin on the River Gartempe in Poictou, about ſeven leagues from the City of Poictiers was before this an Engliſh Garriſon; and all the Inhabitants and the Monks belonging to the Abbey there, had ſworn Allegiance to the King of England. But there was in this Abby a certain Monk, who ſo extreamly hated his Superior the Abbot, that thrô very Rancour of heart, and out of pure ſpight to him, he at laſt found an opportunity to betray the Abbot and all his Covent, and Abbey and Town alſo into the Hands of Sr. Lewis of St. Julian, and Carlonet the Breton, who took Poſſeſſion of the Place in the French King's Name, and repaired and fortified it, and put a good Garriſon therein. Of this loſs of St. Salvin when the Lord John Chandos heard, he was vext beyond meaſure, becauſe he was Seneſchal of Poictou, and that Place among others pertained to his Province: And he thought with himſelf, that if he liv'd a little longer, he would endeavour to recover it at any Rate, and make thoſe pay dearly for their Boldneſs, who had preſum'd to take it without his leave.

[a] Froiſ. c. 268. & 270. & Du Cheſne p. 704.

He thought [b] on nothing in the World, but how to recover this Place, either by Force or Surpriſe, he cared not much whether; but to have it he was reſolv'd, or to loſe

[b] Froiſ. c. 270. &c.

An. Dom. 1370. An. Regni Angliæ XLIV. Franciæ XXXI.

loſe Himſelf in the Attempt. For this purpoſe he laid ſeveral Nights here an Ambuſh and there an Ambuſh, and now one Stratagem was deviſed and then another; but all his Care and Policy ſignified nothing; Sr. Lewis of St. Julian who kept it, had ever ſuch a ſtrict eye over it, that he fruſtrated all his Deſigns intended againſt it. For he knew that the Loſs of that Place vext the Lord Chandos at the Heart, and he deſired by keeping it carefully to vex him, if poſſible, yet more. It happen'd at laſt, that Sr. John Chandos ſent ſecretly his Summons to ſeveral Barons, Knights and Eſquires of England and Poictou, to come as cloſely as they might to the City of Poictiers unto him, as on the laſt Day of December, or the Night before the Firſt of January; enjoyning them by no means to fail, but to come ready provided at the time appointed, with all the ſecreſie imaginable, for he deſigned to ride out ſome whither. None of thoſe to whom he ſent fail'd him in the leaſt; for beſides the Service they ow'd unto him as Seneſchal, they all lov'd him entirely, and ſo came in ſecret manner to the City of Poictiers, that they were there all ready at the limited time. The Chief of theſe Lords were Sr. Guiſchard Dangle, Sr. Lewis of Harcourt, the Lord of Pons, the Lord of Partenay, the Lord of Pinant, the Lord of Taniboton, Sr. Moubron de Linieres, Sr. Baldwin Frevile, Sr. Thomas Percy, Sr. Richard Pontchardon and others, who made up in all 300 Spears. With theſe the Lord Chandos began, when it was dark to march from Poictiers, whither no Man living knew, except certain of his Council, who had provided ſcaling Ladders. Being come to St. Salvin about Midnight, they alighted, gave their Horſes to their Valets, and ſo entred the Dike which was then hard frozen: But at that inſtant they heard the Watch-Horn blow, the Occaſion whereof was, that Carlonet the Breton being come from his Garriſon at la Roche Pozay, with 40 Spears in his Company, called juſt then at St. Salvin to ſpeak with the Captain Sr. Lewis of St. Julian, with Deſign to get him to ride out along with him into Poictou to ſeek ſome Adventure: And therefore he now raiſed the Watchman, which made him ſound the Horn. But the Engliſhmen, who were on the other ſide of the Fortreſs ready to ſcale the Walls, hearing the Watch blow, and a great Noiſe in the Place, preſently concluded they were diſcover'd: For not knowing the true Reaſon, they believed the Horn blew upon their Account. Thus by a ſmall Miſtake the Lord Chandos loſt the fitteſt Opportunity in the World of accompliſhing his Deſign, and ſhortly after Himſelf too, as we ſhall ſee by and by. Hereupon the Engliſh drew back again out of the Dike, ſaying, "Let us go hence for this Night, for our Deſign is diſcover'd; and therewithall they remounted their Horſes, and returned altogether to Chauvigny on the River Vienne, about three leagues from St. Salvin. Here the Poictevins demanded of the Lord John Chandos, whether he had any further Service to command them or no? He anſwer'd, "Gentlemen, ſince the Deſign I came about is daſh'd, You may e'n go home "again in the Name of God, when you pleaſe: But as for the Remainder of this Day, "here I think to tarry in this Town. Upon this there left him what with Knights of Poictou and of England about 200 Men of Arms; but the Lord Chandos went into an Houſe, and called for a Good fire, having Sr. Thomas Percy in his Company. When Sr. Thomas ſaw my Lords Humour, he ſaid unto him, "Sir, are you reſolv'd to tarry "here all this Day? Yes truly (ſaid he) why do you ask? Becauſe Sir (ſaid he) my de- "ſire is, if you think not to ſtir abroad your Self, that you would give me leave, and I "will ride ſome way or other with my Company, to ſee if I can find any Adventure. "Go your way Sir, in the Name of God (ſaid the Lord Chandos) here I intend to tarry. So Sr. Thomas went away with 30 Spears more in his Company, and refuſing to paſs the Bridge at Chauvigny, took the great Road that lead to Luſſac, in order to leave a larger ſcope for Adventures. But the Lord John Chandos tarried ſtill behind full of Diſpleaſure, that he had fail'd of his Deſign, and all the while he ſtood in a Kitchen with his Hands behind him, warming himſelf at the Fire; his Servants jeſting and rallying upon one another in his Preſence, thereby to bring him out of that fit of Melancholy. Preſently ſome of his Servants, who had made ready a Pallat for him to lie upon, came unto him asking, if he would pleaſe to lie down a little. He demanded of them if it was Day yet? At which inſtant there came in One who told him, he had brought News. What is that, ſaid Sr. John, let us know. Sir (ſaid he) for certain the Frenchmen are now abroad. How know you that? Sir, I came from St. Salvin with them. Which way are they ridden? Sir, they took the way down toward Luſſac. What Frenchmen are they, can you tell me? Sir, their Captains are Sr. Lewis of St. Julian, and Carlonet the Breton. Well (ſaid Sr. John) I care not: I am not minded to ſtir this Morning, they may perhaps be encountred; althô I am not there. Hitherto he ſeem'd to contend with, and to have the upper hand too of his Deſtiny, which was now

now hasting on apace, and laid all these Temptations in his way to draw him out against the Fatal Hour. Thus for a while he tarried still in the Kitchen, deeply musing with himself; at last his Evil Genius prevailing, when he thought he had well advised, he pitched upon the most pernicious Resolution, and said, "Gentlemen, whatever I told "you before, I now think it best to ride abroad: For I must return to Poictiers, and a- "non it will be day. The Knights about him said, that was true, and then he commanded them all to make ready; for he was now resolved to ride abroad. So they mounted their Horses, and left Chauvigny coasting the River, so to return to Poictiers by the Bridge of Lussac. At that same time the Frenchmen were not past a league before them in the same way, designing to pass the River of Vienne at the same Bridge, and so to march further into Poictou. The Lord Chandos knew he was in the Track of the Frenchmen, for the French Horses neighed because of the English Horses, which went before them with Sr. Thomas Percy: And in the open Fields so early in a Morning by help of the Wind the Noise of Horses may well be heard a League. It was presently fair Day light, for in the beginning of January the Mornings soon break; wherefore the Frenchmen, who knew nothing of the Lord Chandos his being in their Reer, when they were now within less than a league of the Bridge, espied Sr. Thomas Percy and his Men on the other side the Bridge, and he also perceived how they came after him apace. With that he rode back again as fast as he could to get the advantage of the Bridge, because he saw the Frenchmen outnumbred him. When Sr. Lewis of St. Julian, and Carlonet the Breton, saw the English make such haste to recover the Bridge, they did so too; but the English came thither first, and alighted and ranged themselves in good Order to defend the Bridge. The Frenchmen also left their Horses and deliver'd them to their Pages, commanding them to draw back out of harms way. And so they ranged themselves in good Order to go and assault the English, who kept close together, not at all afraid, thô they were but an Handfull in regard of the Enemy. While thus the English stood ready to defend, and the French consider'd which way best to attack them; there came upon the latter at their Backs the Lord John Chandos with his Banner displayed, being [c] Or a Sharp Pile Gules, which William Alleyn a Valiant Man of Arms did bear, and he had about Fourty or Fifty Spears in his Company. He approached the Frenchmen fiercely, but when he was within three Furlongs of the Bridge, the French Pages, who saw him coming, were so affrighted, that they ran away with the Horses, and left their Masters there on Foot. When the Lord Chandos was come near the Bridge, he lifted up the Visor of his Helmet to speak unto the Frenchmen, for he was full of Anger, and said, "Hark ye you French- "men, You are uncivil Men of War: You ride about at your ease and pleasure Day and "Night all armed; you take and win Towns and Castles in Poictou, whereof I am Se- "neschal; and you ransom poor Folks without my leave; It should seem the Country is "all yours: But I assure you it is not so. You Sr. Lewis, and you Carlonet, You take "too much upon you. It is more than a Year and an half, since I have made it my chief "Business to find you, and encounter with You; and now I thank God I see you and speak "to You: Now shall it be seen who are the better Men, You or I. It hath been fre- "quently told me, that you have much desired to meet with me: Now you may see me "here: I am John Chandos; look well on me: Your great Feats of Arms, wherewith "you are so renowned, by Gods leave we shall now make a Tryal of. Thus much the Lord Chandos said without any Interruption; for the Frenchmen were all on Foot, and so stood still in the best Order they might, pretending themselves desirous of Battle; but indeed they were afraid of Sr. Thomas Percy and his Men, lest they should come over the Bridge and fall upon their Backs. But of all this Matter he knew nothing, for the Bridge was high in the Middle; so that none who were near it could see over it.

AN. DOM. 1370. An. Regni Angliæ XLIV. Franciæ XXXI.

[c] Vid. L. 3. c. 11. §. 7. p. 656. & Esquire Ashmole Plate 21. Licet aliis Campus sit ex Argento.

While the Lord Chandos was arguing thus with the French, a certain Breton could no longer forbear, but took his Sword, and came to an English Esquire called Simkin Dodenhale, whom with a Blow on the Breast he reversed to the Earth. Sr. John hearing a noise hard by him, turn'd that way and saw his Esquire on the Ground, and the Frenchman laying on like Mad. Then he grew more chafed than before, and said to his Men, "Sirs, how is it that you suffer this Esquire thus to be slain? A Foot, A "Foot! And so He and all his Company leap'd on Foot, and Simkin was rescued, and the Battle begun. The Lord John Chandos, like a Valiant and Couragious Knight as he was, with his Banner before him, and his Men in good Order about him, stept forth against his Enemies, with a massie Battle-Ax in his hand, and a rich Surcoat of Arms over his Harness, fair and large, being a Field Or, charged with two sharp Piles Gules,

An. Dom. 1370. An. Regni Angliæ XLIV. Franciæ XXXI.

One before and the other behind, all richly embroider'd on white Sarcenet, and on [d] his Helmet was for the Creſt a large Head of an Armed Man, envelop'd with a White Wreath, all in proper Colours. So that he ſeem'd ſufficiently provided to do notably that Day, being thus among the Foremoſt. But all humane Force, Wit and Precaution are contemptible, when our Stars fight againſt us; and the moſt unſuſpected Occaſion can undermine our ſtrongeſt Supports.

That Morning there was a great Hoar Froſt, which had made the Graſs ſo moiſt, that as the Lord Chandos went forward, he ſlid and fell down in the very joyning with his Enemies. And as he was riſing again, there ran to him an Eſquire named Jaques de St. Martin, who gave him a thruſt with his Rapier, which entred into the Fleſh under his left Eye, between the Noſe and the Forehead. For Sr. John was blind on that ſide, having loſt the ſight of his Eye five Years before, as he was hunting an Hart in the Country of Bourdelois; wherefore he ſaw not the ſtroke to avoid it; and (which wholly perfected the Misfortune) by reaſon of his Anger againſt the Frenchmen, he had forgot to pull down his Viſor again. The thruſt was rude, and entred 'tis thought into his very Brain; for it grieved him ſo ſore, that he fell again upon the Earth, and twice floundred upſide down for Pain, as one that was mortally wounded: And indeed, thô he died not then, he never ſpake one Word after. His Men at the ſight of this Misfortune were extreamly afflicted, but his Uncle Sr. Edward Clifford ſtept over him, and beſtrode him and defended his Body ſo valiantly (for the Frenchmen would fain have had him) and gave ſuch ſtroaks round about, that none durſt come near him. Sr. John Chambo, and Sr. Bertram Caſe fought like Men diſtraught of their Wits, when they beheld their Maſter lay groveling on the Earth in the Pangs of Death. But the Bretons and Frenchmen were ſo encouraged, when they ſaw the Captain of their Enemies in ſuch a Condition, verily believing he had his Deaths Wound, that they advanced themſelves, as if they had already got the Victory, ſaying, "You Engliſhmen, yield your ſelves, for you are all ours. There the Engliſh did Marvels in Arms, as well to defend themſelves, as to revenge their Maſter, whom they ſaw in ſo Deſperate a condition, and particularly an Eſquire of the Lord Chandos his, having eſpy'd Jaques of St. Martin, who had given his Maſter that unhappy Wound, ran to him fiercely with his Sword in both Hands like a Madman, and ſtrack him ſo violently, that he pierced both his Thighs, thô the Eſquire fought ſtill, untill the Wounds began with loſs of Blood to cool and ſmart. If Sr. Thomas Percy with his Men on the other ſide the Bridge, had but gain'd the leaſt Inkling of this Adventure, he could have given a ſeaſonable Aſſiſtance, and have offer'd a greater Sacrifice to the Ghoſt of his Departing Friend: But not imagining the leaſt of any ſuch Matter, when he heard no more of their Aſſaulting the Bridge, he thought they were returned back again, and ſo took Horſe and rode toward Poictiers, as one wholly ignorant of the Buſineſs. Thus therefore theſe few Engliſh fought at the Bridge of Luſſac, doing Marvels in Arms; but in ſhort being overpowred they could hold out no longer, but began to be diſcomfited and taken; only Sr. Edward Clifford would never ſtir from the Body of his Nephew, where he lay, and a Knot of Engliſh ſtood ready to back him; thô the Fortune of the Day was loſt. Now if the Frenchmen had had their Horſes near, they might have quitted the Field with Honour and much Profit from their Priſoners; but we ſhewed upon the firſt approach of the Lord Chandos, the French Pages ran all away with their Maſters Horſes; ſo that for want of them they loſt all. Then they began to ſay one to another, Ah! this is an Unfortunate Fortune: For the Day is ours, and yet thrô the fault of our Pages, we cannot ſecure it to our ſelves. And indeed they were all heavy armed, and very much wearied, ſo that 'twas morally impoſſible for them to foot it thrô a Country full of their Enemies, being at leaſt ſix Leagues from any Fortreſs that held for them; and beſides many of their Men were grievouſly wounded, whom they could not by any means leave behind them. Being in this Condition, without knowing what to do, thô they had ſent two freſh Bretons unarmed into the Fields, to ſee if they might find their Pages with their Horſes, they found a new Storm ready to fall upon them, which quite dampt their Courages. For there came up ſuddenly againſt them the Lord Guiſchard Dangle, the Lord Lewis of Harcourt, the Lord of Partenay, the Lord of Taniboton, the Lord of Pinant, Sr. James of Surgieres, Sr. Geoffry Argentine, and other Engliſh and Gaſcogners to the Number of 200 Spears, who having parted from the Lord Chandos early that Morning, rode about to ſeek for the Frenchmen, whom they had heard to be abroad. And ſo at laſt they alſo fell into the Track of their Horſes, and came forward a good round Trot, with Banners and Streamers waving in the Wind. When the Bretons and Frenchmen ſaw their Approach, knowing them to be Enemies, they ſaid said to those Englishmen whom before they had taken Prisoners, "Sirs, see there comes AN. DOM.

[d] True Uſe of Armory in the Life of the Lord Chandos p. 101.

"yonder a strong Brigade of your Party to your Assistance, and we are Conscious that we 1370.
"are not able to stand against them, and you are as yet our Prisoners. Now we will acquit An. Regni
"You of all Obligations whatsoever, and further will become your Prisoners, on condition Angliæ
"You will undertake to bear us harmless: For we had rather do so, than lie at the Mercy of XLIV.
"these New-Comers. The Englishmen were content to do thus, and so became Masters Franciæ to whom lately they were Servants. At which instant the Poictevins, Gascogners and XXXI.
English came up to the Frenchmen with great Fury, crying out St. George! Guienne! But the Frenchmen and Bretons drew aside, desiring them aloud to make no Outrage against them, for they were Prisoners already. The same affirmed the Englishmen, saying, how they were their Prisoners: Carlonet was Prisoner to Sr. Bertram Case, and Sr. Lewis of St. Julian to Sr. John Chambo, and so every one of them found a Master; some of the English having two or three Servants.

But when upon conference had, the case of the Lord Chandos was known, all the Barons and Knights of England and Poicton, were mightily cast down, especially when they saw their Valiant Seneschal lying on the ground, and that for all they could do or say, he was not able to speak one word. Then they complain'd lamentably, "Alas! Alas! Sr. John Chandos, thou Flower of all Chevalry, unhappily was that "Weapon forged, which hath thus reduced so Gallant a Soul to Death's Door. All, that were about him, wept pitifully, and he saw, and heard, and understood them well; but he could not speak one word; he did all by Signs. Then they wrung their Hands and tore their Hair, especially his Domesticks, and made Complaints beneath the Character of Men: For he was extreamly Dear to all that knew him. His Uncle, Sr. Edward Clifford, caused him to be carefully unarmed, and so being laid easily on Shields, his servants bare him softly to the next Fortress, called Mortimer; the rest of the Knights and Barons returning with their Prisoners to Poictiers; but among them that Jaques of St. Martin, who thus hurt the Lord Chandos, was so neglected, as to his Wounds, no body caring to look to him, that he died at Poictiers. And this Noble and Valiant, Discreet, and Courteous Knight, the Lord John Chandos, lived not above a Day and a Night, or two Days after, being not able to speak a word all the while, thô he was in perfect sense; of which no doubt he made the best use in preparing for his Dissolution by Pious Meditations. The Prince of Wales and the Princess, the Earls of Cambridge and of Pembroke, and all the Lords and Knights of English Birth or Interest, that were then in those Parts, and heard of his Death, were mightily cast down, and said, how now they had lost all on that side the Sea. The King of France himself, when he heard of this Mischance happening to so Noble a Knight, is [e] reported to have wept, because of his Exceeding Modesty, Nobility, and Great Prudence; besides, that he was a most Generous Enemy. And further, he was so apprehensive of his Loss; [f] that he passionately said, "There was not any "Knight then living, so likely to have renew'd the Peace between the two Crowns, as "He: He was so Dear unto King Edward, and so Reverenced, Esteem'd and Lov'd by "all Men. In [g] general the English lov'd him, because he abounded with all good Qualities: The French hated him, because they feared him; and yet the best and wisest Knights of France were sorry for his Death; saying, they had much rather he had been taken alive: For if so, he was so Discreet and Politick, and withall so Gracious with the King and the Prince of Wales; that he would have devised some way to settle a Peace between the two Realms; to which for his sake King Edward would have condescended. Thus both French and English were affected at his Death; but especially the English: For by him Guienne was kept and recover'd. He was one of the Founders of the most Glorious Order of the Garter; to which he added no less Honour, than he took therefrom: For he had such Candor [h] of Mind, and such an unbyass'd Judgement; that he never deny'd his Enemies their due Praise; such Moderation and Prudence, that before Fight he never slighted them, and when they were beaten, never insulted over them. In his Familiar Converse, none more Affable and Sweet-natur'd, than Him: And as he was Expert in War; so he was a most rigid Exactor of Discipline, and preserved the Wretched Husbandmen free from Military Licence: From whence he obtain'd Obedience from the Souldiery, Good-will from the Country People, and Love from his Prince, by whom he was Honour'd with the Seneschalsy of Poicton. While he bare that Office, the Commons were not oppress't with unjust exactions, nor vexed with the Rapines, or frequent Incursions of the Enemy; to all which they were abundantly exposed after his Death. In the Battles of Sluce, of Cressy, of Poictiers, of Auray, of Najara, and others, he gain'd much Renown

[e] Walsingh. Hypod. p. 132. n. 10

[f] Id. hist. p. 181. n. 10.

[g] Froiss. c. 270, &c.

[h] Vid. Rich. Dinothi Adversaria Historica, De Viris Illustribus p. 95. §. 66.

An. Dom. 1370. An. Regni Angliæ XLIV. Franciæ XXXI.

nown, as will appear by ſeveral Paſſages of this Hiſtory; however at laſt by Miſchance he received his Fatal Wound at Luſſac. He was Honourably interred in the Fortreſs of Mortimer; where he died, leaving no Iſſue of his Body behind him for he was never Married: Whereupon [i] Elizabeth and Eleanor, two of his Siſters (the Latter being then the Wife of Sr. Roger Collings) and Iſabell Daughter to Margaret, the Third Siſter, at that time Married to Sr. John Anneſley, were found to be his next Heirs.

[i] Dugd. 1 *Vol. p.*503. *ex Rot. Fin.*50. *Ed.*3. *m.*21. *& Aſhmole p.*704. *ex Commun. Term. Mich. an.*3. *H.*5.

Thus Reſt, Immortal Heroe, for thy Name
Shall laſt; till Heaven and Earth's devour'd by Flame.
And thô Baſe Envy at theſe Works repine;
Yet even they ſhall (if Mortals can Divine) Live for the Great Black-Prince's Sake and Thine.

II. Upon the Death [k] of the Renowned Lord John Chandos, who left his Dear Lord, the Prince of Wales, Heir to all that he had in Normandy, which amounted to the Yearly Revenue of 40000 Franks, or 4000 l. Sterling; the Lands of St. Saviour the Vicount, fell into the King of England's Hands, to beſtow, as he ſhould think fit: Wherefore he gave the Charge and Government thereof to a Knight of his Houſe, a Valiant and Expert Leader, called Sr. Alan Boxhull, who [l] bare for his Arms in a Shield Or a Lion Rampant Azure, cover'd with a Fret Argent, he to defend the Place, and to menage the Revenues thereof for the Profit of the King and of the Prince. To him ſhortly after ſucceeded William Lord Latimer, who bare * Gules a Croſs Paté Or, and being Steward of the King's Houſhold, was before the end of this Year [m] made Lieutenant, Captain, and Governour of the Caſtle, Town, and Vicountie of St. Saviour. And the Office of High Seneſchal of Poicton, being void alſo by the Death of the Lord Chandos, the Prince of Wales gave it to Sr. Thomas Piercy, a Gentleman of Great Valour and Experience, [n] who was Younger Brother to Henry Lord Piercy, and afterwards was created Earl of Worceſter.

[k] Froiſ. c. 271. fol. 166.

[l] True Uſe of Armory in the Life of the Lord *Chandos p.*108. & Aſhmole Plate 52.

* Aſhmole Plate 42.

[m] Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 32.

[n] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 285.

Soon after the Frenchmen, who were taken Priſoners at the Bridge of Luſſac, having by the Aſſiſtance of the French King, in whoſe Service they were taken, paid the ſeveral Ranſoms, which were ſet upon them, returned all back again to their ſeveral Garriſons; as Sr. Lewis of St. Julian, Carlonet the Breton, Sr. William Bourde, and others, of whom we ſhall ſay more anon. At this ſame time there were ſeveral Barons, and good Knights of France, who became very much concerned, when they ſaw the War of the two Crowns grow hotter and hotter every day; eſpecially the Lord Ingelram Coucy, whom it affected deeply, for he had a Fair Inheritance in England, as well upon his own account (for his Fathers had been Barons of that Realm ever ſince the days of King John of England) as by the Lady Iſabell, his Wife, who was Daughter to King Edward: Which Lands he muſt not only Renounce, but prove ungratefull to his Friend and Father-in-Law, if he ſhould ſerve the King of France; and yet on the other hand he would ſeem no better than unnatural and a Traytor, if he ſhould bear Arms for England againſt the King of France, to whom he was both an Ally and Subject: And yet he thought to ſtand Neuter, would be to befriend neither, but rather to diſoblige both. Wherefore he took a Fourth Courſe, reſolving for a time to bid Farewell to France, and to go and Travel abroad to inform his mind, and to ſeek Adventures. So having diſcreetly taken his leave of the French King, he ſet forth with a ſmall Retinue, and went into Savoy, where he was Honourably received by the Earl, and by the Barons and Knights of his Court. Having ſpent ſome time there, he rode forward into Lombardy, and went to the Lords of Milain, Galeas, and Bernabo, to whom he was welcome. In the ſame Manner, thô upon another occaſion, the Lord Edmund of Pamiers, one of the moſt Loyal Knights in the World, went away from the Prince's Service; the reaſon was this: In thoſe days, when there were ſo many Lords of Gaſcogne, and others, who daily revolted from the Prince to the French King's ſide, it could be no otherwiſe; but that the Prince and his Officers ſhould be very jealous of the Faith of thoſe, who gave but the leaſt umbrage of Diſcontent. But however it was in this caſe, whether only Suſpicion, or ſomething more ſolid, the Lord Thomas Felton, [o] who was Seneſchal of Bourdeaux for the Prince of Wales, and ſo conſequently Lieutenant for the King of England, cauſed the Lord William of Pamiers and a Lawyer his Secretary, and one of his Council, named John Coulon, a Native of Bourdeaux, to be apprehended and flung into Priſon. Being brought to their Tryal, it was proved home upon them (as was then affirmed) that the ſaid Lord of Pamiers had covenanted to yield himſelf, and all his Caſtles to the Protection of the French King, and had [o] *Froiſ. Vol.*2. *c.*1. Gallicè & *c.*318. *fol.*199. B. Angl.

had actually deliver'd his Caſtle of Fronſac into the French Hands; of all which the ſaid Lawyer and Counſellour were conſcious and acceſſary thereto; wherefore neither the Lord of Pamiers, nor his Clerk, nor the other, having any thing to ſay, why ſentence of Death ſhould not proceed againſt them, they were all three condemned by the Judgement of the Lord of L' Eſparre, and other Loyal Gaſcogners, and openly beheaded in the City of Bourdeaux; before an infinite concourſe of People; to the aſtoniſhment of many. But eſpecially thoſe of the Lord of Pamiers his Kindred took this Execution hainouſly, and upon this occaſion it was, that the moſt Gallant and Noble Knight in the World, Sr. Edmund of Pamiers, Uncle to the foreſaid Lord William of Pamiers, left Bourdeaux and Bourdelois, reſolving however in his Mind, neither for that, nor any other Provocation on Earth, to turn Traytor to his Lord, the Prince of Aquitaine; but with all, he took the Death of his Nephew ſo ill, that he ſware never from that time to bear Arms for the King of England, or his Son, the Prince, while he lived. And ſo he went on divers Pilgrimages to Cyprus, to the Holy ſepulchre and elſewhere, to fight againſt the Pagans, in which employment he ſpent ſeveral Years. At the ſame time, that the foreſaid Lord of Pamiers was apprehended, there were ſeveral others taken up on Suſpicion of being concerned in the ſame Matter, as Sr. John du Pleſſac, S. Peter of Landuras, and Sr. Bertram de la France, who lay in Priſon at Bourdeaux in great Danger; thô at laſt by endeavours of their Friends, and becauſe nothing could be clearly made out againſt them, they were deliver'd. There ran about alſo a Report, as if Sr. Galiard de Vignier was not free from this Treaſon; which made People wonder much; becauſe the ſaid Knight was then in Lombardy with the Lord of Coucy in the Service of the Church: Wherefore the Pope himſelf afterwards excuſed him, and ſo he had his Lands and Poſſeſſions continued unto him. And thus jealouſies and heart-burnings aroſe between the Prince and his Subjects, and there were not wanting Evil Men to enflame Matters further: Thô ſtill there remain'd a few Genuine Sons of Honour, who could not by any Arts be prevail'd upon to relinquiſh their old Friends the Engliſh. Particularly the Lord John [p] de Bourbon, who held part of his Lands of the Prince, and had rendred him Homage therefore, came upon ſome occaſion to Paris about this time, where the ſubtle Kin ply'd him with all the Arguments imaginable, to make him renounce his Fealty to the Prince; but this generous young Earl of Marche abſolutely rejected the motion, telling him; that if there was no Religion, a Gentleman ought to keep his Faith and Promiſe. Of a like ſteady temper was another great Baron of Limoſin, namely, the Lord of Pierre Buffierre, who being then alſo at Paris, was urged by the King to fall off from the Prince, but he would by no means agree thereto. But there were two other conſiderable Barons of Limoſin, who knew not how to imitate the Fidelity and Honour of thoſe Men; for they with a little tampering quitted the Prince, and embraced the French King's intereſt; their Names were, Lewis Lord of Maleval, and the Lord Raymund of Marvejols, his Nephew, who ſoon after began to make Bloody War upon the Engliſh from their Garriſons: Whereat the King of England and his Council were extreamly diſpleaſed; eſpecially, becauſe now many Barons began to fall off, only out of Wantonneſs and Deſire of Change, without the leaſt provocation given, either by his Son, the Prince, or Him. Whereupon King Edward was adviſed to write Covert Letters, ſealed with his Seal, to be convey'd by two or three of his Knights into Poicton and Aquitaine, and there to be made publick in the Cities, Caſtles, and Good Towns thereabouts. The mean while the Prince of Wales deliver'd out of the Priſon in Agen, Sr. John Champoneau, the Knight, who brought him the Letters of Summons from King Charles, in exchange for a Knight of his, called Sr. Thomas Banſter, who [q] bare in a Field Argent a Croſs Pateé Sable, and had been taken a little before in a Skirmiſh in Perigort. But the Doctor, that came with him remained ſtill in Priſon, at Agen, till Sr. John, his fellow-ſufferer, had upon his return into France collected his Ranſom. But ſince We ſpake of King Edward's Letters, we ſhall here ſet down the Copy of them, wherein we ſhall ſee, that He prudently forbears the Title of France, leſt he might ſeem, while he went about to compoſe Matters, to give occaſion of widening the Breach, and alſo thereby to leſſen King Charles his jealouſie, who already had too faſt hold of thoſe Gaſcogne Lords, and be ſure would never let them go, while he deſpair'd of an accommodation himſelf. The Tenor of his Letters ran thus, viz. [r]

AN. DOM. 1370. An. Regni Angliæ XLIV. Franciæ XXXI.

[p] Froiſ. c. 271.

[q] Aſmole's Garter, Plate 55.

III. "EDWARD, by the Grace of God, King of England, Lord of Ireland and of "Aquitain, to all thoſe who ſhall ſee or hear theſe preſent Letters. Know you, that "conſidering and regarding the Buſineſs of the Bounds, Marches and Limitations of our "Seignory of Aquitain, ſtretching from end to end, We have been enformed of cer-

[r] Extat in Originali Froiſ. Gall. fol. 226. Du Cheſne p. 704. & Anglicè, Froiſ. c. 272.

"tain

An. Dom. 1370. An. Regni Angliæ XLIV. Franciæ XXXI.

"tain Troubles, Grievances and Moleſtations, done or ſuppoſed to be done, by our "Right Dear Son the Prince of Wales, in the ſaid Countries: Wherefore being obli- "ged, and deſirous to withſtand and remedy all things relating to evil Surmiſes, Hates "or Contentions between Us and our Loyal Friends and Subjects; We do by theſe "Preſents announce and pronounce, certifie and ratifie, that of our meer Good Will, "and by great Deliberation of our Council for that purpoſe called, We will (and com- "mand) that our Right Dear Son the Prince of Wales, forbear and remit all manner of "Actions done or to be done, and do reſtore again to all ſuch, as have been grieved "or moleſted by Him, or by any of his Subjects or Officers in Aquitain, all their Coſts, "Expences and Dammages leavied, or to be leavied in the name of the ſaid Exactions, "Aids or Foüages. And if any of our true Subjects and Friends, as well Prelates, as "other Men of Holy Church, Univerſities, Colleges, Biſhops, Earls, Vicounts, Ba- "rons, Knights, Commonalties, and Inhabitants of Cities and Good Towns, be turned "to keep and uphold by evil Information and raſh Advice, the Opinion of our Ad- "verſary the French King, We pardon them that their Treſpaſs on Condition, that "theſe Letters once ſeen, they return to Us, or within a Month after. And We de- "ſire all our Loyal and True Friends to continue ſtill in the ſtate they now are; "that as concerning their Faith and Homage they incurr no Reproach; the which "thing would greatly diſpleaſe Us, and we ſhould ſee it very unwillingly. And if a- "gainſt our Dear Son the Prince, or againſt any of his Men they make any lawfull Com- "plaint, that in any thing they are grieved and oppreſſed, or have been in time paſt, "We ſhall cauſe them to have amends, ſo as of reaſon it may ſuffice, to the intent to "nouriſh Peace, Love, Concord and Unity, between Us and thoſe of the Marches "and Limitations aforeſaid. And to the end that all Men ſhould be ſatisfied of the "Truth of the Premiſes, We will, that every Man take and have a Copy of theſe "Preſents, the which We have ſolemnly ſworn to keep and maintain upon the Body "of our Lord JESUS CHRIST, there being preſent our Right Dear Son John Duke "of Lancaſter, William Earl of Salisbury, the Earl of Warwick, the Earl of Here- "ford, Walter of Manny, the Lord Percy, the Lord Neville, the Lord Bourchier, the "Lord Stafford, Richard of Pemburge, Roger Beauchamp, Guy Brian, the Lord Mo- "hun, the Lord de la Warre, Allan Boxhull and Richard Sterry Knights. Given at "our Palace of Weſtminſter, in the Fourty Fourth Year of our Reign, the fifth Day of "November.

Theſe Letters were ſent from the King of England into the Principality and Dutchy of Aquitain, and notified and publiſhed all about: And Copies thereof were ſecretly convey'd to Paris, to the Vicount of Rochechoüart, the Lord of Maleval, the Lord of Marvejols and Others, ſuch as had revolted to the French. But for all that neither do we hear of any, that they reduced to their Duty again, nor that they hindred others from falling off dayly, which they did now as much as ever, when they ſaw a fair opportunity of doing it ſafely: Eſpecially when they heard, [f] that King Charles had in the Chamber of Peers confiſcated the whole Principality, and whatever elſe either the Prince, or King Edward held beyond Sea, ſummoning in all the Vaſſals to come, and render unto him their Fealty and Homage: So that many Towns, Fortreſſes, Lands and Countries, as well in Guienne as in Picardy, return'd to the Obedience of the French King, as will appear hereafter.

[f] Du Cheſne p. 705. & Mezeray, &c.

IV. We ſpake before, how the Engliſh ſuffer'd Sr. Lewis of St. Julian, Carlonet the Breton, and Sr. William of Bourde to go free again; when by the help of the French King they had paid their Ranſoms: Which Uſage by the bie, thô it ſavour'd much of a generous Confidence, and of a Freedom from Malice, yet can it not eſcape without a mark of Imprudence at leaſt. For thoſe, who had been once taken, would be ſure to endeavour to revenge the Affront, and alſo to pay themſelves double the coſt of their Ranſom, as Sr. Nicholas Lovaine did to Sr. Hugh de Chaſtillon. Nor was there any likelihood of ending the War, while theſe Grand Bouteſeus of Mars were perpetually let looſe again to ſet the World on fire. Sr. Bertram of Clequin alone ſhall ſtand an Inſtance of the Truth of what I ſay; for he being more than once a Priſoner to the Engliſh, and by them as often acquitted for Ranſom, became not only a means to deſtroy their Friend and Confederate Don Pedro, as we have ſeen, but alſo at laſt in a manner turn'd all the Engliſh out of France; ſo that he was ſtiled the Reſtorer of that Realm. However this was the Cuſtom of thoſe Days among the Engliſh, French and Scots, courteouſly to put their Priſoners of War to Ranſom; whereas the Spaniard and German uſed to bind them in Chains, and handle them roughly in Priſon, thereby to extort the greater Summ of Money from them: Which thô not ſo Generous, was perhaps haps more safe in one respect. But to return whence we have made this Digression. Sr. Lewis of St. Julian being thus upon Ransom got home again to his Garrison of la Roche de Pozay, Sr. William Bourde into that of la Haye en Touraine, and Carlonet the Breton into St. Salvin, which had lost us the Lord Chandos; these Three made privately an Assembly of Men of War, all hardy Companions and well armed; with whom one Morning early they went to Chastellerault, and scaled the Town, and had like to have taken the Lord Lewis of Harcourt in his Bed. For at the winning of the Place he was asleep in his Quarters in the Town, till being awaked he was fain to fly in his Shirt, bare-footed and bare-legg'd from House to House, and from Garden to Garden in great fear of the French, who had enter'd the Town by Scalado, and by that time had won the Fortress. However at last with much ado he made shift to put himself under the Bridge of Chastellerault on the River of Vienne, where his Men had made a good Fortress, and here he was safe, and held himself so for a good while. But thus the Frenchmen were Masters of the Town, where they made a strong Garrison, and left Carlonet the Breton Captain of the Place, and every Day almost the Frenchmen went to the Bridge, and skirmished with Sr. Lewis of Harcourt and his Men that kept it. An. Dom. 1370. An. Regni Angliæ XLIV. Franciæ XXXI.

V. The mean while [t] Lewis Duke of Bourbon was informed, how the English Companions were in his Country of Bourbonnois, and that Ortingo, Bernard de Wisk, and Bernard de la Salle had taken his Castle of Bellepeche, and therein the good Lady his Mother; whereat he was horribly incensed, and resolved to go and lay siege unto Bellepeche, and not to stir thence till he should have won the Place. Upon his request the French King gave him leave to undertake the Enterprise, promising also not to be wanting in his Assistance towards the Work. So the Duke of Bourbon left Paris in the beginning of the Year, and made his Rendezvous at Moulins on the River Allier in Bourbonnois, and at St. Poursain on the Marches of Auvergne, in which places he raised a great number of Valiant Men. [t] Froiss. c. 272.

There was the Lord of Beaujeu with 300 Spears, the Lord of Villers and the Lord of Roussillon with an 100 Spears apiece, and several other Lords and Knights of Auvergne and Forestes, whereof he was Lord in Right of his Lady, who was Daughter to the Noble Lord Beroald late Earl Dauphin. Being thus enforced, the Duke of Bourbon went to Bellepeche, before which he built a great Bastion encompassed with a Ditch, and defended with Towers both for the ease of his Men, it being now but February; and for their safety in case of a Counter-siege or sudden Appearance of an Enemy: And so every Day he skirmished with the Companions, and at Night retired with the best part of his Troops into this Bastion. Besides this the Duke had with him four Terrible Great Engines, which cast huge massie Stones and Timber against the Castle, insomuch that the Tops of their Towers and Houses were beaten down, and a considerable part of their Turrets overthrown. Whereat the Duke's Mother who was Prisoner there, being extreamly affrighted, sent forth Messengers to the Duke her Son, desiring him to forbear using those fearfull Engines, which did so terrifie her and her Women that they knew not what to do. But the Duke of Bourbon, who knew, that she was put upon this by his and her Enemies, or however, that to obey her at this time was more for the Advantage of the English than of Her, return'd answer, that he was resolved by no means to forbear whatever came of it; and so continued playing with his Engines. When therefore these Companions saw how they were streightned, and that the Frenchmens Forces encreased (for the Lord Lewis of Sancerre Marshal of France, was newly come thither with a great Power) then they resolved to acquaint Sr. John Devereux Seneschal of Limosin, who lay then at la Sousterraine two little days-Journey from them, of this their Desperate Condition, and how the Lords of Poictou and Gascogne, when they left them in the Expedition of Quercy, had promised them on their Faiths, how that if they should take any Fortress in France and be besieged thereupon, they should have Relief upon Demand. Having wrote Letters to this Effect, they sent them away one night secretly by a Valet, who undertook to carry them, and got safe to la Sousterraine. When the Lord John Devereux had read the Letters, he remembred very well, how the Lord John Chandos had given them such a Promise, by the Consent of all the English Lords there present, and so he said he would most certainly bring them speedy Succour, and that he might succeed the better, he promised forthwith to go to Angoulesme to the Prince and the English Lords there, nothing doubting but to perswade them so, as that Bellepeche should have timely Assistance. With this News the Valet return'd, and Sr. John having left his Fortress in sure Keeping, rode to Angoulesme, where he found the Prince, the Earl of Cambridge, the Earl of Pembroke, the

An. Dom. 1370. An. Regni Angliæ XLIV. Franciæ XXXI.

the Captal of Buſche, the Lord Thomas Percy, the Lord Thomas Felton, the Lord John Montagu, Sr. Guiſchard Dangle, Sr. Robert Knolles and many more: Before all whom he ſuccinctly declared, "How the Companions were beſieged in the Caſtle of Bellepeche by the Duke of Bourbon, the Earl of St. Paul and others: How it was for "their ſakes thoſe Men had reduced themſelves ſo far, and in confidence of their Aſ-"ſiſtance that they refuſed now to yield. The Lords of England gave good Attention to theſe words and ſaid, how they would ſurely endeavour to relieve them as they had promiſed; and the Prince himſelf ſent forth his Summons to all his Subjects within ſuch and ſuch Precincts, that upon ſight of his Letters they ſhould with all ſpeed haſten to the general Rendezvous at Limoges.

The Earl of Cambridge and the Earl of Pembroke were Captains of this Enterpriſe, and ſo when they had aſſembled their Forces, amounting to 1500 Spears and 3000 others, they lead them forth and came to Bellepeche, and began to encamp on the other ſide the Fortreſs, oppoſite to the Frenchmen, who lay ſtill within their Fortifications, which were environ'd with a deep Ditch, and as Defenſible as a conſiderable Town. The Engliſh Foragers had much ado to get any Victuals, but that want was ſupply'd from Poictou and other Parts behind them; for the Enemy commanded the reſt of the Country. Upon this Arrival of the Engliſh Army, the Lord Lewis of Sancerre Marſhal of France ſent News thereof to the French King, and to the Knights of his Court, and cauſed Writings and Bills to be ſet up upon Poſts and Gates, importing to this effect, "All you that are Knights and Eſquires, and deſire to purſue Honour in the Field, We "certifie you for a truth, that the Earl of Cambridge, and the Earl of Pembroke are "come with an Army before Bellepeche, with deſign to raiſe the Siege laid there by the "Duke of Bourbon and our Men; who have endured much Trouble for a long while; "till at laſt we have brought them to that ſtreight, that of neceſſity they muſt either "yield up the Place, or venture all upon a Battle with us. You are therefore deſir'd to "come hither with all ſpeed; for here you ſhall be ſure to find Noble Deeds of Arms, and "you may be certain of this, that the Engliſh do not lie in any good Order, and beſides "are in ſuch a place, where they may eaſily be incommoded by us. Given from the Camp "before Bellepeche, &c.

VI. Upon theſe and the like Invitations of the Marſhals ſeveral Valiant Knights of France came to the Siege; particulatly Sr. Allart of Coutances, Governour of Blois came thither with 50 Spears, ſo did the Earl of Porcien and Sr. Hugh de Porcien his Brother. Now [u] when the Earls of Cambridge and Pembroke, had thus faced the Frenchmen for the ſpace of 15 Days, and ſaw that they would by no means come forth out of their Baſtion to give them Battle, as they had expected; they reſolv'd to ſend the Herald Chandos unto them, which they did; and he being fully inſtructed ſaid thus, "Meſſieurs, my Lords and Maſters have ſent me to you, and they give you to underſtand "by me, how they all wonder extreamly, that ſince you cannot but know of their being "here now theſe 15 days before you; yet you will not come forth of your Fortreſs to "fight them. Now therefore they ſend you Word by me, that if you will come forth a-"gainſt them, they will permit you freely to chooſe a plat of Ground to fight; and "then let them have the Victory, to whom God ſhall pleaſe to ſend it. To this the Duke of Bourbon anſwer'd, "Chandos, you may tell your Maſters, that we do not de-"ſign to fight with them at their Diſcretion or Appointment: 'Tis true, I know very "well they are there: But for all that I will not ſtir hence, nor break up my Siege, till "I ſhall have the Caſtle of Bellepeche in my Power. "Sir (reply'd the Herald) I "ſhall tell them what you ſay; and ſo he left them and return'd to the Engliſh Lords, to whom he ſhew'd the Duke of Bourbons Anſwer; and they thought it moſt ſhamefull and diſhonourable. Then having taken Counſel, they call'd in Chandos the Herald ſaying, "Go once more to yonder French Lords, and tell them thus and thus; and ſo they declared unto him what he ſhould ſay. The Herald being admitted into the Duke of Bourbons Tent ſpake thus before Him and his Council, "Meſſieurs, my Lords "and Maſters once more ſend you Word by me, that ſince you will not afford them Bat-"tle, they have now reſolved the Third Day from hence, at nine a Clock in the Morn-"ing, or elſe at Noon in the open Day, to ſet the Lady of Bourbon on Horſeback, and "ſo to convey her away before your Faces, and in ſight of You, my Lord of Bourbon, who "are her Son. And then Sir, they bid you reſcue her if you can. "Well (reply'd the "Duke) to ſee the Lady my Mother carried away will be to me no great Pleaſure; but "for all that we hope to recover her again when we may. And yet Mr. Herald, ſince "you have ſaid thus much unto us, tell your Maſters again from me, that if they will "ſend into the Field fifty of their Men, We ſhall ſend againſt them as many of ours, [u] Froiſ.c. 273.

"and

"and then let that ſide win the Day that can. Sir (ſaid the Herald) I ſhall ſhew them AN. DOM.
"your Challenge with all my Heart. And ſo Chandos left them, and returned to his Ma- 1370.
ſters, to whom he declared what the Duke had ſaid, and the Subſtance of his Chal- An. Regni lenge; but of that they would not admit, becauſe they ſaid 'twas but a Vapour, and Angliæ a pretence for gaining of Time, till mutual Security might be given, and the Laws of XLIV.
the Combat ſettled: Wherefore they ſtuck to their firſt Reſolution of Marching away Franciæ the Third Day after with the Lady of Bourbon, aud all the Companions in the Caſtle, XXXI. who had ſuffer'd much by the Enemies Engines of Battery.

On the day appointed, early in the Morning, [x] they ſounded all their Trumpets, and arm'd themſelves and all their Men, and ſo drew out into the Field in Battle Array, on Foot and on Horſeback, ready to Fight the Frenchmen, with their Banners and Penons waving before them. But at Nine of the Clock their Inſtruments beat up on high; at which time the Companions marched out of the Fortreſs of Bellepeche, with all the Goods, or what ever was valuable therein, and the Lady of Bourbon was brought forth, and mounted on a Rich Palfrey, and her Ladies and Maids of Honour about her; the Lord John Devereux, and the Lord Euſtace Dambreticourt being appointed to wait upon her. And thus about noon the Engliſh marched quite away in ſight of the Duke of Bourbon and the French Army (who made not the leaſt offer to ſtop them) having quite ſpoil'd the Caſtle, and return'd all together into the Principality. The Lady of Bourbon remain'd a Priſoner with the Companions at la Roche Vauclaire in Limoſin. But at her confinement the Prince of Wales was not pleaſed; for when ever there was any talk of her; he would ſay, "he made not War "againſt Women; and that if any one had taken her, but the Companions, he would "have given order for her ſpeedy Deliverance." But when the Companions heard of that, they ſaid, whatever Bargain ſhould be made in order to her Liberty, they would have in conſideration thereof, that Valiant Knight of the Prince's Sr. Simon Burley, who was at that time Priſoner with the Frenchmen.

[x] Froiſ. c. 274. fol. 167. Gallicè fol. 228.

No doubt, the Duke of Bourbon was ſufficiently nettled to ſee his Mother after that Manner led away by the Engliſh: But when ſhe was gone and paſt Recovery, he went preſently and took Poſſeſſion of Bellepeche, which the Engliſh had left quite naked, as his own. Then he repaired and new-fortify'd the Caſtle, making it much ſtronger, than before; after which he brake up his Army, all his Men returning to their former Quarters. But the Duke himſelf went back with the Knights and Eſquires of his Retinue to the French King, who made him welcome, and was glad to ſee him.

VII. The mean while the Earl of Pembroke return'd with his Men to his Fortreſs of Mortagne in Poictou; and the reſt of the Men of Arms, and Archers went and quarter'd about in Poictou and Sainctogne: But the Companions thô among their Friends, could not for their hearts abſtain from doing Miſchief. Soon after this Sr. Robert Knolles took leave of the Prince, and return'd into Bretagne to his own Caſtle of Derual; where he had ſcarce been a Month; but that he received an Expreſs from King Edward, that all excuſes laid aſide, he ſhould haſte over to Him into England. Wherefore Sr. Robert ſet himſelf to prepare for that Voyage, and went on Board, and arrived ſafely at St. Michaels Mount in Cornwall; from whence he rode, till he came to Windſor; where the King then held his Court. He was extream Welcome to the King, and to all the Barons of the Realm; becauſe they thought, they ſhould make good uſe of him, and knew him to be a Valiant Man of his Hands, and a moſt accompliſh'd Leader: Wherefore the King intended to ſend him over with a compleat Army into France about May, or June. For the late Expedition about Bellepeche was finiſh'd in the Month of March at the beginning of this Year. Nor was the King ſlack in ſtrengthning himſelf by Allies from abroad, and therefore [y] Sr. John Attewood, and Mr. Robert de Wykford, Archdeacon of Wincheſter, and Doctor of Laws, were ſent beyond Sea, being empower'd to treat with Wenceſlaus, Duke of Brabant and Lorraine, Marqueſs of the Empire, about furniſhing the King with Men and Arms, to ſerve him in his Wars. He alſo [z] confirmed the Treaty with the Earl of Flanders, and the Good Towns of Gaunt, Bruges, and Ipers. And laſtly, as We ſhall ſee by and by, he ſecured the Back-Door, Scotland, by a Treaty of Peace for Nine Years; that he might have more leiſure to be intent on the French War.

[y] 18 May Pat. 44. Ed. 3. p. 1. m. 8. Vid. Mr. Aſhmole p. 666.

[z] 4. Aug. Pat. 44. Ed. 3. p. 3. m. 1.

VIII. [a] In the depth of the Preceding Winter, the Duke of Anjou had left Thoulouſe, with a large Retinue of Knights and Gentlemen in his Company, and riding thrô France, went to Paris; where he found the King, his Brother, with the Duke of Berry and the Duke of Burgundy; who were extream glad to ſee him. Theſe Four Illuſtrious Brethren being thus together, conſulted frequently on the Publique Affairs, after what manner they ſhould deal with the Black-Prince, and how they ſhould beſt menage the next Campaigne. In the end, it was reſolv'd among them to raiſe two Mighty Armies, which by two ſeveral ways ſhould enter the Principality of Aquitaine, the Duke of Anjou to lead the One thrô Agenois, by la Reole and Bergerac, and the Duke of Berry to march with the other thrô la Marche and Limoſin, and ſo both Armies to meet before the ſtrong City of Angouleſme, and there to beſiege the Prince of Wales with all their Power. And that this Enterpriſe might ſucceed the better, they determin'd prudently enough to ſend for Sr. Bertram of Clequin, who was then in Spain, being [b] made by King Henry, Earl of Molina and Soria. But for all thoſe tyes, that Gallant Man left the Court of Don Henry at the firſt Command of his Natural Lord, the King of France, and ſhortly after joyn'd the Duke of Anjou, who then doubted no Miſchance; ſince he had ſo Valiant, Diſcreet, and Fortunate a Leader in his Company.

[a] Froiſ. f. 229. Gallicè; & c. 275. Anglicè. Du Cheſne p. 705. & Mezeray p. 84. &c.

An. Dom. 1370. An. Regni Angliæ XLIV. Franciæ XXXI.

[b] Mezeray p. 84.

Thus the Four Royal Brethren tarried together at Paris, mixing many Princely Entertainments and pleaſant Diverſions, with their more ſerious and weighty deliberations, till the beginning of May: At which time the Duke of Anjou took his leave firſt, becauſe he had the furtheſt way to take, being waited on by many of the Chief Barons and Knights of France; for they loved him particularly, becauſe of his high Courage and Zeal for the Honour of the French Nation. At Mompellier he tarried about a Month in giving neceſſary Orders, and then went to Tholouſe, where he held his General Rendezvous.

In like manner the Duke of Berry, having taken his leave of the King, went to Bourges, the Chief City of that Region, where he made his Aſſembly of Knights and Eſquires of France and Burgundy. Beſides all this, the Duke of Bourbon went again into his Country, where he ſoon gather'd a great Body, conſiſting of the ſeveral Retinues of many Knights and Eſquires of the Earldom of Foreſtes and Bourbonnois, Sr. Peter of Alenſon, his Brother, making great Proviſion alſo for the War. At that very time there came the young Lord Guy of Blois into France, being newly return'd out of Pruſſia, where he had been made a Knight in the Field, and reared his Banner in a Skirmiſh againſt the Infidels. When he heard of this Expedition, which his two Couſins were then undertaking againſt the Prince of Wales, he went ſtrait to Paris, where he preſented himſelf, his Life and Fortunes to the King's Service, and was by him order'd to go and joyn the Duke of Berry with all his Retinue of Men of Arms, Knights, and Eſquires. Whereupon he took the firſt opportunity of leaving Paris, and took the way toward Orleans, to go into Berry to the Duke.

And yet all this while the Companions on the French ſide kept the Field, holding Frontier War againſt the Engliſh in Rouvergne and Quercy, and did much Miſchief daily in the Country thereabout; as on the other hand, Sr. Lewis of St. Julian, and Carlonet the Breton were ready on the Marches of Poictou to take all Advantages, they could think on.

IX. Againſt all theſe Preparations of France, we ſhall ſee by and by what Proviſion the Black-Prince made; but over and above all that, King Edward, who ſaw his own Honour and Right concern'd in this War made againſt his Son; was as vigilant on the other hand, and reſolved to ſet forth two conſiderable Armies alſo on his part. Firſt he order'd his Son John of Gaunt, Duke of Lancaſter, with 400 Men of Arms, and 4000 Archers, to go into the Principality of Aquitaine, to his Brothers Aſſiſtance: For he verily believed, that the French King would turn the greateſt ſtreſs of his Arms that way. But yet by Advice of his Council, he ſent another Army into Picardy, under the Command of Sr. Robert Knolles, in this bearing teſtimony to the former Choice of the Prince, his Son; who had made that Great Captain one of his Generals. And He for his part, nothing puff'd up with the Approbation of two ſuch Illuſtrious Perſonages, went roundly and wiſely about his buſineſs, making haſte to go as ſtrong, as he might, for Calais, thence to make an Impreſſion into France, in ſuch a manner, as to gain a Confirmation of the Eſteem, his Sovereign had for him, by a pitch'd Battle with the French, which he thought they would not refuſe. And that he might have the greater Authority, the King gave him Commiſſion to pardon Rebells, and to treat with ſuch, as were willing to ſubmit, or to accept of Conditions, or come to the Peace of the King; as likewiſe the [c] Duke of Lancaſter on his part had another Commiſſion, to receive into Favour, and wholly to pardon, ſuch of his Cities, Caſtles, Towns, and Inhabitants, as well in Aquitaine, as other parts of France, as ſhould return to his Obedience, and to do and exerciſe all Power given in his ſaid Commiſſion, with the Conſent of the Prince, if Preſent, and in his abſence, as the King's Lieutenant, to do what the King himſelf could do, if perſonally there. And that Care might be taken in Civil Affairs, the King (reſerving ſtill to Himſelf the Sovereignty and Reſort in thoſe Territories) ſent a Blank [d] Commiſſion for the Prince to inſert the Names of ſuch, as he ſhould think fit to appoint for Judges, or Delegates, to hear all Cauſes, as well Criminal as Civil, upon Appeals from the Prince's Court: But of the Succeſs of theſe Armies We ſhall ſpeak hereafter. AN. DOM. 1370. An. Regni Angliæ XLIV. Franciæ XXXI.

[c] Aſhmole p. 675. ex Rot. Vaſc. 44. Ed. 3. m. 5.

taken

About this time the Lady Iſabella of Valois, Mother to the Duke of Bourbon, was deliver'd out of Priſon in Exchange for Sr. Simon Burley, by the menagement of Sr. Euſtace Dambreticourt, who, as he had [e] obtain'd the good Fortune of Marrying the Young Widow of John, late Earl of Kent, became a perpetual ſervant to that Charming Sex, which had ſo highly grac'd him: So that by his obliging Deportment to this Lady of Bourbon, he not only obtain'd her Good Word ever after, but alſo thereby extreamly gratify'd the Duke her Son (who in time found an opportunity to repay this his Kindneſs) and moreover he gain'd no ſmall Favour thereby from the French Queen, her ſelf, who ſent him a moſt Rich Preſent with her particular Thanks.

[d] Dat. 10 Junii Rot. Vaſc. 44. Ed. 3 ibid.

[e] Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 95.

X. Now there [f] had been for ſome time a Treaty on Foot between the French King and the King of Navarre, who lay then at Cherbourg in Normandy: For the King of France was adviſ'd by any means to make ſure of that Inconſtant and Troubleſome Man; and to bring him off from the King of England; his Council telling him, "That it was no time to make War with the King of Navarre; for he ſhould "find his Hands full enough with the buſineſs of England, and that therefore on oc- "caſion, he had better recede from a part of his Right, to pleaſe that froward "Prince; than by leaving him in Diſcontent, to ſet him upon Counſels highly Pre- "judicial to the whole Realm of France. For if Navarre ſhould once permit the "Engliſh to enter his Fortreſſes of Cherbourg or Coutances, which was much to be "feared, they might e'n do what they pleaſed in Normandy. By theſe and the like Reaſons the French King was perſwaded to hold a good Correſpondence with the King of Navarre, even upon any Terms whatſoever. So that going himſelf to Roüen, he ſent from thence unto him the Archbiſhop of that Place, and the Biſhop of Eureux, the Earls of Alenſon and Salebruce, Dr. William Dorman, and Dr. Robert de Lorraine, who found him at Vernon a City of Normandy, about Eight Leagues from Roüen, on the other ſide the Seyne. Here they were well feaſted by the King of Navarre, and on Security given, obliged him to bear them Company back to Roüen, where he was expected by his Good Brother, the French King. And here in ſhort, Articles were drawn up, the Peace made, and all Former Alliances and Confederations with France renewed, engroſſed, ſworn to, Signed and Sealed: The King of Navarre at the ſame time renouncing all Obligations of Love and Friendſhip made at any time before, between himſelf and the King of England, and engaging upon his Return into Navarre, to ſend and defie both the Prince of Aquitaine and his Father. In ſign of which new Agreement the King of Navarre went with full Confidence along with the French King from Roüen to Paris; where again all former Obligations were renewed, and mutual Faith and Friendſhip ſolemnly repeated, not without many extraordinary Careſſes, Feaſts, and Entertainments. After all which the King of Navarre took his leave of Paris, having left his two Sons, Charles and Peter with the King, their Uncle, as Pledges of his Faith, and he himſelf, not daring after this to go thrô the Principality, rode to Mompellier, whence he went into the Earldom of Foix, and ſo came at laſt into his own Country; where for a while We ſhall leave him.

[f] Froiſ. ibid.

XI. It may be remembred, how the Duke of Anjou for his part had undertaken to invade Guienne by the way of Agenois; for he extreamly hated the Prince of Wales, and the whole Engliſh Name and Nation. He was now making his Rendezvous at Tholouſe, where he only tarried for Sr. Bertram of Clequin, who came at laſt by the King of Spains leave, and then Anjou began his March. At which very time the Duke of Lancaſter went on board at Southhampton with 400 Men of Arms and 4000 Archers, and arrived ſhortly at Bourdeaux with the Lord Thomas Ros of Hamlake, William Beauchamp Lord of Bergavenny, Sr. Robert Ros, Sr. Michael de la Pole, Sr. John de St. Lô, and many other Valiant Worthies in his Company. The mean while the Duke of Anjou proceeded in his March from Tholouſe with a very great Army, wherein were no leſs than 2000 Spears, Knights and Eſquires, with 6000 on Foot arm'd with Pikes, Swords and Shields beſides others. Sr. Bertram of Clequin commanded thoſe 6000 Brigantines in Chief, the other Principal Commanders being the Earl of of Armagnac, the Lord of Albret, the Earl of Perigort, the Earl of Cominges, the Vicount of Carmaine,

An. Dom. 1370. An. Regni Angliæ XLIV. Franciæ XXXI.

the Earl of Liſle, the Vicount of Bruniquel, the Vicount of Narbonne, the Vicount of Talart, the Lord de la Barde, the Lord of Pincornet, the Lord Bertram of Cande, the Seneſchals of Tholouſe, Carcaſſon and Beaucaire, with many more. In their March towards Agenois they found by the way above a 1000 Companions in the Fields, who having quarter'd in and about Quercy, were then riding towards Agen, but now they fell in and joyn'd with the French Army. All the Country trembled before this Dreadfull Hoſt, and very few Places had the Courage to hold out againſt them. But eſpecially Moiſac, a ſtrong Town of Quercy, yielded aſſoon as ever they appear'd before it. Then they marched towards [5] Monpeſat and Aiguillon, both which yielded unto them; thô the latter held out four Days, at which time it was deliver'd up by the Captain thereof to the Admiration of all Men; eſpecially of the Lord Thomas Felton and the Captal of Buſche who lay then at Bergerac with an 100 Spears, Engliſh and Gaſcogners. But I dare not here follow Froiſard, in whom I know not by what Miſtake, Sr. Walter Manny is ſaid to be Captain of Aiguillon at this time: For thô we find him in France the laſt Year with the Duke of Lancaſter, yet he was then a very Old Man, and at this time paſt Action. Nor is this Relation any thing agreeable to the Fame, that conſtantly he obtain'd in War, nor to the Courage he had formerly ſhewn, as well in a thouſand other Cafes, as particularly in maintaining the very ſame Caſtle againſt John Duke of Normandy, and an Army of an Hundred Thouſand Men, of which we ſpake in the Twentieth Year of King Edward's Reign. However Aiguillon and Monpeſat being now yielded to the French, they deſign'd to go before Tonneins on the River Garonne in Agenois: So they rode on by eaſie journeys following the Courſe of the River, till they came to Port St. Mary, which forthwith yielded alſo; as did afterwards both the Town and Caſtle of Tonneins, into which they put a new Garriſon, and ſet there a Captain with Twenty Knights and Eſquires in his Company.

[5] Du Cheſne p. 705.

Now as the Duke of Anjou went thus on with his Army, invading the Prince's Lands by the way of Tholouſaine and Agenois; ſo on the other Hand the Duke of Berry made an Incurſion into Limoſin with an Army of 1200 Spears on Horſeback, and 3000 on Foot, beſides others; who for a while proceeded without Oppoſition, in conquering of Towns and Caſtles, and burning and ravaging about the Country. The Names of the Chief Captains with the Duke of Berry, were Lewis Duke of Bourbon, the Earl of Alenſon, and Sr. Robert of Alenſon Earl of Perche, the Lord Guy of Blois, the Lord John of Armagnac, Sr. Hugh Dauphin, Sr. John de Villemur, the Lord of Beaujeu, the Lord of Villers, the Lord of Senac, Sr. Geoffry de Montagu, Sr. John of Boulogne, and Sr. Godfry of Boulogne his Uncle, the Lord Lewis of Maleval, the Lord Raimond of Marvejols, the Vicount of Uzés, the Lord of Sully, the Lord of Talaſcon, with many more Valiant Barons, Knights and Eſquires. This Army as we have ſaid, made an Impreſſion into Limoſin, where they did much Miſchief, and at laſt came and laid Siege to the City of Limoges, which had been made very ſtrong by the Black-Prince; thô except the French Garriſon, there were but a few Engliſhmen at that time in the City, which Sr. Hugh Calverley had lately ſent thither; for he was as then Seneſchal of that Country.

XII. The Prince of Wales being then in the City of Angouleſme, had News brought him of theſe Two Great Armies, who had invaded his Principality on both ſides, and as he heard deſign'd to come and beſiege him jointly in his City of Angouleſme. Then he ſpake aloud and ſaid, "How his Enemies ſhould never find him immur'd up either in "Town or Caſtle, but that he would meet them in the plain Field, and by the Grace of "God give them Battle. So he ſent forth his Letters of Summons to all his Loyal Friends and Subjects in Poictou, Saintogne, Rochellois, Rouvergue, Quercy, Bigorre and Agenois, deſiring and commanding them to come to him in all haſte with Horſe and Armour, and their ſeveral Retinues, and meet him at the General Rendezvous at Cognac. Preſently after this he took his leave of his Lady the Princeſs, and carried along with him his Youngeſt Son Richard of Bourdeaux, and ſet up his Standard of War at Cognac, to which his Men flockt dayly from all Parts.

XIII. While thus the Prince was preparing to receive his Enemies, the Duke of Anjou rode on as yet uncontrolled, and ſo at laſt came to a Good Town called la Linde, ſtanding on the River of Dordonne, about a league from Bergerac; the Captain whereof was Sr. Thomas Batefoile a Knight of Gaſcogne, who was ſet there with a ſufficient Garriſon to defend the Place. Before this Fortreſs came the Duke of Anjou, and laid his Siege to it ſaying, "That he would never ſtir from the Place, till he "had it at his Devotion. The Town was ſtrong enough, and ſufficiently furniſh'd with Artillery and all things neceſſary: For Sr. Thomas Felton and the Captal of Buſche had had been there about a Fortnight before, and so well refreshed the Town, that they verily believed it was able to hold out against all the Power of the French; if they wanted not either Loyalty or Resolution: Especially because they were so near to Bergerac, from whom they might receive Assistance upon Occasion. But the Townsmen were all French in their Hearts, and desired mightily to accept of the Conditions offered them by the Duke of Anjou: So that at last they prevailed with their Captain Sr. Thomas Batefoile to be of their Mind also. And he in Consideration of a present Summ of Money, and a certain Annual Pension from the Duke of Anjou, undertook as on such a Morning to deliver the Town unto them, and ever after to embrace the French Interest. But this false Device was not so secretly convey'd, but that it was known at Bergerac the Night before the Place was to be deliver'd, at which time the Earl of Cambridge was newly come thither to reinforce that Garrison with 200 Spears, and was present when the News of this Treason was brought to the Lord Thomas Felton and the Captal of Busche. These two Lords were mightily surprised at this Treachery of Sr. Thomas Batefoile, but they said however they would be present at the Delivery of the Town by the Grace of God. And so before it was light they rode from Bergerac towards la Linde, whither they came by break of Day, and having caused the Gate to be open on that side, rode quite thrô the Town in silence, till they came to the other Gate where the Frenchmen were to enter; at which very instant the Gate was opening for the French, and Sr. Thomas Batefoile stood ready to receive them. Then Sr. John Greilly Captal of Busche alighted from his Horse, and stept forward with his Sword in his Hand to the Gate and said, "Ah! thou Perfidious Traitor Batefoil, thou shalt first die by my "hand, and never more commit Treason against thy Good Lord and Master." And with those Words gave him so sure a Blow, that he fell Dead to the Earth. When the Frenchmen perceived the Captal and his Banner, and Sr. Thomas Felton with him, they saw plainly how their Plot was discovered; whereupon they hastily withdrew from the Gates, like one that found a Lion in his way, and then turn'd their Backs and fled to their main Host. Then were the Gates closed again, for none pursued them, because of their great Army which lay near; and so the Town continued English, but was in great Danger of being plunder'd and burnt by these Captains, who were enclin'd to do so, and to put all the Inhabitants to the Sword; because they consented to this Treason: But they excus'd themselves by laying all the Fault upon Sr. Thomas Batefoile, who they said overaw'd them to it by Threats, and how they did nothing but for Fear, being compelled thereto; and so at last they were pardon'd: But these two Lords tarried there, till the Duke of Anjou had remov'd his Siege and taken another way; as we shall shew when we have cleared our Hands of other Matters, which naturally fall in at this Place.

AN. DOM. 1370. An. Regni Angliæ XLIV. Franciæ XXXI.

XIV. On the [h] Seventh Day of May David Bruce King of Scotland departed this Mortal Life at his Castle of Edenburgh, leaving no Lawfull Issue behind him; wherefore the Lord Robert Stuart, Eldest Son of the Lady Margaret, alias Margery, his Eldest Sister, by True Right of Succession came to the Crown and Kingdom of Scotland: Which have ever since continued in that Glorious Family, down to our Most Gracious Sovereign His Present Majesty, King JAMES, the Seventh of Scotland, and of England the Second. To whom may God Almighty grant a Long, Happy and Victorious Reign, and of his Race and Name to wear the United Crowns of Great Brittain; till all Earthly Kingdoms shall be swallowed up in the Eternal Kingdom of Heaven.

[h] Hector Boet. l. 15. f. 327. n. 50. Buchan. l. 9. p. 306. Holinsh. Scotl. p. 244. Oder. Rainal. ad hunc ann. § 27. & Favine le Paris. Theatre of Honour l. 5. c. 3. p. 89.

The Original of this Illustrious Family is thus traced by [i] Favine in his Theatre of Honour, Banquho who was Thane, i. e. President or Governor of Loquhaber in Scotland, being slain by the Tyrannical Usurper Mackbeth, his Son Fleance made shift to escape into Wales; where of the Daughter of Prince Griffith he begat a Son named Walter, and Sirnamed also Banquho as his Grandfather was. At that time the Arms of this Family are said to have been Or a Fess Checkie, Argent and Sable of Four Pieces. This Walter long after the Death of Mackbeth returning into Scotland, fought valiantly for his King against the Island Rebels, and the Savages of Scotland, and was in recompence of his extraordinary Vertue and eminent Services, made Great Provost and Treasurer of the Houshold Royal, which the Scots signifie by the Name of Stuart or Steward. And he so faithfully discharged the Trust reposed in him without the least Reproach, or Embezling of the Kings Money, that the Sirname of Stuart was imposed on him, and transmitted to all his Posterity. Walter begat Alan Stuart, who was in the Expedition of Godfrey of Boulogne, Alan begat Alexander I, his Son was Walter, who begat Alexander II, and Robert Stuart, by whom the Family ran into many Noble Branches. Alexander the II, Eldest Son of Walter the II, begat John Stuart, James and other Children; by whom Scotland hath been repleniſhed with a Numerous [i] Favine le Paris. l. 5. c. 3. p. 89. &c.

En-

An. Dom. 1370. An. Regni Angliæ XLIV. Franciæ XXXI.

Encreaſe of Generous Souls. John Stuart Eldeſt Son of Alexander the Second, left one Daughter named Jane Stuart, who brought unto her Husband the Lord of the Iſle of Bute, Walter Stuart, Third of that Name, who taking to Wife the Lady Margery, Eldeſt Daughter to King Robert the Firſt, and Siſter to King David Bruce, gat of her this Robert Stuart, King of Scotland by the Name of Robert the Second.

But becauſe there is a groſs Error in all the Scotch Hiſtorians, concerning the immediate Succeſſor of this King Robert, of which many Wicked Men have in our days thought to make Advantage, for the ſake of Truth and Juſtice, and the Honour of Majeſty, We ſhall here fairly ſtate the Matter, and faithfully and truly ſettle it. It is the Aſſertion of all the Scotch Writers, whom I have ſeen (thô in ſome particulars they differ one from another) that this Robert, before he was King, had by a certain Miſtreſs, named Elizabeth More, Three Sons and Two Daughters, that after by his Wife Euphemia Roſs, who was alſo Queen, he had two Sons and a Daughter, that upon the Death of his Queen, his Former Miſtreſs, being then alſo by the Death of her Husband Giffard, at Liberty, was by him taken to Wife, her Children legitimated, and the Right of Succeſſion by Act of Parliament ſettled firſt upon them. This is the Effect of what the Scotch Writers ſay; wherein there are many abominable Falſities, as We ſhall make appear; for We ſhall moſt evidently prove; that the Lady Elizabeth More, was his Firſt and Lawfull Wife, and died before he Married Euphemia; that John, who ſucceeded him by the Name of [k] Robert, was his true and lawfully begotten Eldeſt Son, and ſo reputed both by his Father and King David himſelf all along, and that this Act for ſettling the Succeſſion, was only a Declaration of what was Right and Equity, and done in the Life time of Queen Euphemia; as is abundantly * made out in Sr. George Mackenzies Jus Regium, and [l] Dr. Brady's True and Exact Hiſtory of the Succeſſion of the Crown of England; to whom I ſhall refer the Reader for the Original Record, and only ſet down here an Exact Tranſlation of the ſaid Record, word for word, that all the World may ſee upon what ſolid Grounds we go.

[k] When he came to the Crown, he laid by the Name of John, as unfortunate to two Kings of England and France and took upon him that of Robert, Fortunate to his Father and Great Grandfather Robert Bruce.

* P. 189. ad p. 201.

[l] Dr. Brady's True, &c. p. 309. ad p. 311.

The Declaration, Ordinance, or Statute of the Succeſſion to the Crown of Scotland, made at Scone on the 4th of April, in the Third Year of King Robert the Second. An°. Domini. 1373.

XV. In the Name of God, Amen. In the Year of the [m] Incarnation One Thouſand, Three Hundred, Seventy Three, and in the Third Year of the Reign of King Robert the Second, the Fourth day of April, the ſaid King Robert the Second in his Parliament at Scone, [n] being deſirous to avoid to his Power the Uncertainty of Succeſſion, which hath formerly happened in moſt Kingdoms and Parts, and for him and his as much as may be to prevent it for the Future, of Deliberate Counſel, and with the Conſent and Aſſent of the Prelates, Earls, Barons, and other Lords and Nobles, and of all others of the Three Eſtates, or Communities of the whole Realm, there Aſſembled, hath Declared, Ordained and [o] Eſtabliſhed, that the Sons of the ſaid King now begotten of his Firſt and Second Wives, and their Heirs, ſhall [p] in order ſucceed the ſaid King in the Kingdom, and in the Right of Reigning, in manner under-written, and under the form and conditions, under-written. Videlicet, that the Lord John, the Eldeſt Son, Earl of Carrick, and Steward of Scotland, (for whoſe Right of Succeſſion, Declaration was fully made in the [q] Parliament immediately preceding) and his Heirs after his Death, ſhall ſucceed him in the Kingdom, and in the Right of Reigning: And the ſaid Lord John and his Heirs failing perchance (which God forbid) the Lord Robert Earl of Fife, and Menteith, Second Son of the ſaid Lord the King by his Firſt Wife, and his Heirs, ſhall in Order, and immediately ſucceed in the Kingdom, and in the Right of Reigning: And the ſaid Lord Robert and his Heirs [r] alſo failing, perchance (which God forbid) the Lord Alexander Lord of Badenagh, the Third-begotten Son of the ſaid Lord, the King, by the ſame Wife, and his Heirs only ſhall in the ſame manner ſucceſſively, and immediately after their Death ſucceed in the Kingdom and Right of Reigning. But the ſaid Lord Alexander and his Heirs aforeſaid failing alſo, perchance (which God forbid) the Lord David Earl of Strathern, Son of the ſaid Lord, the King, begotten of his Second Wife, and his Heirs, they ſo failing, [s] ſhall ex toto ſucceed in like manner ſucceſſively, and immediately to the Kingdom and Right of Reigning. But the ſaid David and his Heirs aforeſaid in like manner perchance failing, Walter, Son of the ſaid Lord, the King, Brother German of the ſaid Lord David and his Heirs ſhall ſucceed in like manner to the Kingdom, and the Right of Reigning. But the foreſaid Five Brothers, and the Heirs from them deſcending, failing perchance in like manner and [t] wholly (which God forbid) the True and Lawfull Heirs of the Blood and Stock Royal ſhall from thence ſucceed to the Kingdom, and the Right of Reign-

[m] Incarnationis ejuſdem viz. Dei, which went before.

[n] Ac Capiens, &c. ſed τὸ ac ſuperfluum.

[o] Statuit.

[p] Succeſſivè ſuccedent.

[q] Hoc Parliamentum fuit coactum An°. 1372, &c. Vid. Statuta Roberti II. c. 17. §. 2, 3, 4.

[r] Hîc inſeritur hujuſmodi otiosè, ut mihi videtur.

[s] Ex toto integrum; & in jus, lego-ex toto in regnum, &c.

[t] Ex toto.

Reigning. Which things being thus Eſtabliſhed, Ordained, Declared and Done, all the Prelates, Earls, and Barons, and all of the Three Eſtates or Communities of the whole Realm, in the ſaid Parliament, for that, and other things there Aſſembled, did Ratifie and approve them, for them and their Heirs for ever. And notwithſtanding thoſe underwritten, namely Prelates, Biſhops of Churches, the Lord William of St. Andrews, Michael of Dunkelden, Alexander of Aberdeen, Patrick of Brechin, Alexander of Murray, Andrew of Dumblane, Alexander of Roſse, and Malcome of Cathanes, on the Holy Goſpels of God, being preſent and open, and the underwritten Earls, Barons, and Nobles, namely, Firſt the Elder Sons of the ſaid King, that are of Age, viz. the Lords John, Robert, and Alexander; and alſo the Lord William Earl of Douglas, George of Dumbar Earl of Marche, John of Dumbar Earl of Murray, Thomas Hayes Conſtable of Scotland, the Lord William Keth Marſhal of Scotland, James Lindſey Lord of Crawford, Archimbald Douglas Lord of Galloway, James Douglas Lord of Dalkeith, Robert de Irskin, Hugh de Eglington, Duncan Wallais, David Graham, Walter of Haliburton, William Diſſington, Alan de Irskin, Alan[u] Frazer, James Frazer, Alexander Frazer, Robert Stuart of Innerneſs, Roger Mortimer; David Fitz-Walter, Patrick Graham, Andrew Vaux, John Wallais, John Maxwell, Andrew Campbell, William de Cunningham the Son, and John Straquhan, Knights, John Kennedy, and Alexander Cockburn, Eſquires, and each of them, on the ſaid Holy Goſpels, by their Hands touched have corporally ſworn, that for them and their Heirs they will inviolably obſerve, and by others to their Power cauſe to be obſerved for ever, the foreſaid Declarations, Ordinations, and Statutes. Conſequently and immediately whereto, the whole Multitude of the Clergy and People, being ſpecially thereto called in the Church of Scone before the High Altar, and the foreſaid Declaration, Ordination, and Statute ſo ſworn-to, being read unto them openly and aloud, Every One with his Hand lifted up in manner of giving Faith, in token of the Univerſal Conſent of all the Clergy and People, did expreſs and manifeſt publiquely their Conſent and Aſſent. In witneſs of all which the foreſaid Lord, the King, commanded his Great Seal to be put to the preſent Writing or Inſtrument, and for the Greater Evidence, and Fuller Security, all the Biſhops, Earls, Barons, and Nobles aforeſaid, cauſed their Seals to be put to the ſaid Inſtrument, for the ſake of Teſtimony, and to the perpetual Memory of thoſe that are to come: Acta fuerunt hæc apud Sconam in pleno Parliamento Domini Regis, Prædictis, Anno, Menſe & Die, ſuperiùs annotatis.

AN. DOM. 1370. An. Regni Angliæ XLIV. Franciæ XXXI.

[u] Ità lacunam hìc ſuppleo.

Now if the pretended Defect be true, as to the Children begotten on the Body of Elizabeth More, it was a very palpable and undeniable One, and could not but have been unanſwerably known to the whole Nation. And how then can We imagine, that the whole Parliament would ſo unanimouſly draw upon themſelves the dreadfull ſin of Perjury, by Excluding the Lawfull Heir, againſt their National Oath taken in the Reign of King Kenneth the Third, whereby they ſwore for ever to own the Immediate Heir? Or that they would thus venture to entail upon themſelves a Civil War, by preferring even a Queſtionable Heir, after the Miſeries, which they had ſo lately felt in the Competition betwixt the Bruce and the Bailiol? Nay among theſe Seals, We find the Seal of James Douglas, Lord of Dalkeith is One, and how ridiculous is it to think, that he would ſit and declare a Baſtard preferable to the Brother of his own Lady, and alſo to his own Lady, who would have ſucceeded, if her Brothers had died without Iſſue? And then it is moſt evident, that when John was thus Deſigned Heir, the Queen Euphemia Roſs was not dead, as the Scotch Writers ſay, and the King Married to his Mother: For as there is extant a Grant given by the ſaid King to Paul Metine, confirming unto him a Charter Granted by the Earl of Roſs, Father to Euphemia, wherein the ſaid John is Witneſs by the Name of Eldeſt-Son and Heir, ſo there is a Charter granted unto Her by the King upon the very ſame day; of the Lands of Lochleaven; both Grants bearing Date Junii 1mo. An°. Regni Primo. And it is againſt all ſenſe and reaſon to think, he could have been acknowledged Heir Apparent, during her Life, if he had not been Legitimate.

Nay further, we find by our Records, that [x] 19 Years before this, he is ſtiled John, Eldeſt Son and Heir of Robert Stuart, as alſo ſeven Years after he bears the ſame Title, being ranked * Firſt among the Hoſtages, which lay for King David. And further to put all out of Queſtion, there is extant in Fourdons Hiſtory a Charter granted by King David, wherein the Witneſſes are Robert Stuart, Earl of Strathern our Nephew, John Stuart Earl of Carric his Eldeſt Son and Heir, Thomas Earl of Mar, George of Dumbar Earl of March, and William Earl of Douglaſs. So that here again Buchanan is found Tardy, who ſays that John was created Earl of Carrick by the King his Father, [x] Rot. Scotiæ 25. Ed. 3. m. 3. & Aſhmole p. 657. Vid. Hujus Hiſt. l. 2. c. 11. §. 8. p. 445.

* Vid. Hujus Hiſt. l. 3. c. 2. § 3. § §. 4. p. 529.

An. Dom. 1370. An. Regni Angliæ XLIV. Franciæ XXXI.

ther, after the Death of Ephemia Roſs; when here we find him ſtiled Earl of Carrick by his Great Uncle King David, who alſo atteſts, that he was Eldeſt Son and Heir to his Nephew Robert; and ſurely he could be no ways byaſſed in the Affair.

But if any one ſhall ſay, what need then had there been of this Act or Declaration, if the Title of John had not been Doubtfull? We anſwer, that King Robert could not forget [y] how William Earl of Douglas, by pretending a Right from the Bailiols and the Cumins, had like to have diſturbed his own Coronation; but that he was not allowed in his Deſign by his Friends. And therefore to ſtop all Controverſies for the future, he thought good to fortifie his Right, and the Right of his Children for ever by a National Declaration, as well as by Statute. And thus much for this Important Matter in this Place; we now return to the Point from whence we digreſſed.

[y] Hector & Buchan. ibid. &c.

XVI. This King Robert the Second of Scotland, who had been well acquainted with the Power and Force of King Edward, and knew what Havock of that Nation he had made in time paſt, being now in the beginning of his Reign deſirous to eſtabliſh his Kingdom in Peace, made a Motion for a Treaty with England, which King Edward moſt readily embraced, becauſe of the great War that he expected from France. So that at laſt a firm Truce and Peace was taken and ſettled between the two Realms, to endure for the ſpace [z] of Nine Years. All which time it might be lawfull for the Scots to take Arms at their Pleaſure, and to ſerve for Wages either the King of England or of France, without any Imputation of Breach of Peace. So that Sr. Robert Knolles, whom King Edward deſign'd to ſend into France with a Conſiderable Army, had now with him no leſs than [a] an Hundred Spears, all Choſen Men of that Warlike Nation. In relation to which Expedition [b] Proclamation was ſent forth, that all Souldiers deſign'd for Picardy and other Parts of France, under Sr. Roberts Command (he being [c] conſtituted the Kings Lieutenant in thoſe Parts) ſhould be at Southhampton by the Octaves of St. John Baptiſt following, ready fitted to take Shipping there with him. So that in the beginning of July, Sr. Robert finding all things ready, went on Board at Southhampton, and arrived ſafely and landed with all his Men at Calais, where he was highly welcom'd by Sr Nicolas Stambourn Captain of the Town. Here he tarried ſeven Days to refreſh his Men, and to conſider what Courſe to take; on the eighth Day early in the Morning he began to march out of Calais with an Army of [d] 30000 Men, among whom were 1500 Men of Arms and 4000 Archers on Horſeback; the Chief Captains whereof were Sr. Alan Boxhull, Sr. Thomas Grandiſon, Sr. Walter Fitz-Walter, Sr. Gilbert Gifford, Sr. John Menſtreworth, Sr. John Bourchier, Sr. Hugh Meinill, Sr. Geoffry Vrſwell and Others. The firſt Day they reached Fiennes, but Sr. Moreau de Fiennes, Conſtable of France was then in the Place, with a ſufficient Number of Knights and Eſquires, all well provided, and ready to receive their Enemies. The next Morning the whole Army faced the Caſtle, but when it plainly appear'd, that much might be there loſt, and little or nothing won, they paſſed by without attempting it; and marching thrô the Earldom of Guiſnes, enter'd the Land of Fauquenberg burning all before them, till they came to Teroüenne, which yet they attempted not, for ſeeing it well provided, they thought 'twould be but loſt Labour. Then they paſſed the River of Lys, and began to enter Artois; but they never went above four or five leagues a Day, becauſe of the Infantry and their Carriages, ſtill taking up their Lodgings early in the Afternoon, and near ſome conſiderable Village or other. At laſt they drew near to the City of Arras, and took up their Lodgings in the Town of Mount St. Eloy, near to the ſaid City, where they tarried two Days to refreſh themſelves, all the while deſtroying and burning round about, as far as the Marſhals durſt ſtretch.

[z] But for 3 years Mezeray, for 14 Buchan. and 9 Froiſ.

[a] Froiſ. Gall. f. 231. Angl. c. 278.

[b] 6 Maii, Clauſ. 44. Ed. 3. m. 15. Dorſo.

[c] Rot. Franc. 44. Ed. 3. m. 14.

[d] Mezeray ità, ſed 12000 Holinſh. ego priorem præfero, quia dicitur Exercitus magnus, M.S. vet. Angl. in Bibl. C.C.C. Cantab. c. 234. & Walſing. hiſt. p. 179.

Now the French King had already provided for all the Defenſible Places in thoſe Parts, as well as elſewhere, ſtrictly enjoyning his Chief Officers, not to be eaſily tempted out to a Battle, but only to ſtand on the Defenſive part: Which Order was generally obey'd, and prov'd more miſchievous to the Engliſh than open Oppoſition could have done; for by this means they could get very little Proviſion without Blows, but could never come to a Battle as they deſired and expected. On the third Day they left St. Eloy and paſſed by Arras, but Sr. Hugh Meinill, and Sr. Geoffry Vrſewell, who were the Marſhals of the Engliſh Army, reſolved however to go and look upon thoſe of Arras, to ſee how they were diſpoſed, and whether they might not find ſome Advantage againſt them. Therefore with 200 Spears and 400 Archers they advanced to the Suburbs of the City, and ſo came to the Barriers, which they found well furniſhed with Croſsbows and Men of Arms: And Sr. Charles of Poictiers was Chief Captain there under the Counteſs of Artois, but he made no Offer to come forth againſt them; for all they ſtood daring him ſo without. The Marſhals were angry angry at this their Behaviour, reputing it no other than rank Cowardiſe; and that they might be ſure to leave a Remembrance behind them (if they could not provoke them to come forth) they ſet fire to the Suburbs in many places, whereby they did much harm, and among the reſt deſtroy'd a great Monaſtery of Preaching Fryers, Cloiſter and all: But yet the Defendants kept their Poſt without offering a Sally. So the Marſhals return'd after the Army, which took its way directly toward Bapaume ravaging all about. Thus they paſſed into Vermandois, and came to the ſtrong Town of Ham, whither all the People of thoſe Parts had withdrawn together with their Goods for Safety, except thoſe, who ſought Reſuge at St. Quintin or Perone. But here they did no harm, becauſe a Day or two before they had ſo obliged themſelves: For being come to Vermand the Chief City at that time of all the Country, the Engliſh Marſhals upon their ſafe Conduct got the Captain to come to them, and ſaid thus unto him, "How ſay "you, Sir, what will you give us, on Condition that We forbear this Country, and reſpite "it from burning and Plunder? So the Captain fell to a Compoſition, and agreed to pay them ſuch a Summ of Money, and thereupon no more Harm was done in thoſe Parts. And by this means Sr. Robert Knolles gain'd in this Expedition for his own Share more than an 100000 Franks, thô he had like to have repented afterwards of his Mercate: For he was by his Maligners accuſed to the King, his Maſter, that thrô Covetouſneſs he had not done his Duty in offending the Kings Enemies, as we ſhall ſee anon. From Ham he marched, and came to the Town of Roye in Santerre; which he took, plunder'd and deſtroy'd. In this manner the Army went on fair and ſoftly in dreadfull Order, two, three or four Leagues a Day, their cuſtome being to tarry three or four Days in a Place, where they found plenty of Proviſion, to refreſh Themſelves and their Horſes. But they ſeldom met with any thing abroad, except Barns and Granges full of Corn; for it was now toward the end of Auguſt. As for the Lands of the Lord of Coucy, King Edward's Son-in-Law, they remain'd in perfect Peace untouch'd and unmoleſted: And if any Man or Woman did but ſay they belong'd to the Lord of Coucy, Earl of Soiſſons, they had not the leaſt harm done unto them: Nor ſo much as a ſingle Penny taken from them. At laſt the Engliſh Army came before Noyon a City of Picardy, which was well ſupplied with Men of War and Good Captains: Here they tarried a while making their Approaches as near as they durſt, to try whether there was any likelihood of prevailing or no; but it plainly appear'd, that ſmall Advantage was to be got by attempting the Place. Sr. Robert Knolles was lodged in the Abbey of Dorlans, with his Men in good Order round about him, and at laſt having tarried there long enough to little purpoſe, he drew out his Army one Day before the City, to ſee if any would ſally out upon him from the Town: But there was no ſuch Matter offer'd, wherefore Sr. Robert diſpos'd himſelf to march away from thence. At that time there was done an extraordinary Feat of Arms by a Scotch Knight, named Sr. John Aſſueton, being one of thoſe Men of Arms of Scotland, who had now enter'd King Edwards Pay. This Man left his Rank with his Spear in his hand, his Page riding behind him, and went toward the Barriers of Noyon: Where he alighted ſaying, "Here hold my Horſe, and ſtir not from hence; and ſo he came to the Barriers. There were there at that time Sr. John de Roye, and Sr. Lancelot de Lorris with ten or twelve more, who all wonder'd what this Knight deſign'd to do. He for his part being cloſe at the Barriers ſaid unto them, "Gentlemen, I am come hither to viſit "you, and becauſe I ſee you will not come forth of your Barriers to me, I will come in to "you, if I may, and prove my Knighthood againſt you: Win me if you can. And with that he leap'd over the Bars, and began to lay about him like a Lion, he at them and they at him; ſo that he alone fought thus againſt them all for near the ſpace of an Hour, and hurt ſeveral of them. And all the while thoſe of the Town beheld with much Delight from the Walls and their Garret Windows his great Activity, Strength and Courage; but they offer'd not to do him any hurt, as they might very eaſily have done, if they had been minded to caſt ſtones or darts at him: But the French Knights charged them to the contrary, ſaying, "how they ſhould let them alone to deal with "Him. When matters had continued thus about an Hour, the Scotch Page came to the Barriers with his Maſters horſe in his hand, and ſaid in his Language, "Sir, pray come "away, it is high time for you to leave off now: For the Army is marched off out of "ſight. The Knight heard his Man, and then gave two or three terrible ſtrokes about him to clear the way, and ſo arm'd, as he was, he leap'd back again over the Barriers, and mounted his Horſe, having not received any hurt; and turning to the Frenchmen, ſaid, "Adieu Sirs, I thank you for my Diverſion, and with that he rode after his Man upon the ſpur towards the Army.

AN. DOM. 1370. An. Regni Angliæ XLIV. Franciæ XXXI.

An. Dom. 1370. An. Regni Angliæ XLIV. Franciæ XXXI.

Now as Sr. Robert Knolles marched away from before Noyon, and had paſſed the River of Oyſe at Pont l' Eveſque, ſome that were in the Reer lag'd behind, and ſet fire on the ſaid Town of Pont l' Eveſque, wherein there were many goodly Houſes. The Knights and Eſquires then at Noyon were mightily diſpleaſed to ſee this Fire, wherefore when they underſtood by the ſaying of the Scotch Page, that Sr. Robert was marched off with the Groſs of the Army, they ſent out of the Town 60 Spears, who rode up to Pont l' Eveſque, and came where the Fire was. There they found ſome of the Authors of that Miſchief, and others that tarried behind for Plunder; the moſt part of whom they ſlew outright, releaſed ſeveral French Priſoners, ſaved many Houſes from fire, wan fourty good Horſes, and 15 Engliſh Priſoners; all whoſe Heads they cauſed to be ſtruck off, when they came to Noyon.

The mean while the Army marched forward in good Order toward Laonnois, deſigning to paſs the River of Ayſne; but they did no harm in the Land of Soiſſons, becauſe it belonged to the Lord of Coucy, King Edwards Son in Law. Now all along there were certain Lords of France, that coaſted the Engliſh Army, and watched their Motions at a Diſtance, as the Vicount of Meaux, the Lord of Chauny, the Lord Ralph de Coucy, the Lord William de Melun, Son to the Earl of Tancarville, with their ſeveral Retinues; whereof the Engliſh being aware durſt not break their Order; but alway marched in Battle-Array cloſe together. Wherefore the Frenchmen had no opportunity to meddle with them, but ſtill they coaſted them, in hopes one time or other to get ſome Advantage againſt them, and every Night the Frenchmen lodged in ſome Town or ſtrong Hold, while the Engliſh lay in the Plain Country, where now they found plenty of Victuals and New Wines, whereof they were very free. Thus they rode thrô the Country, burning and pillaging all before them, till they paſſed the Marne, and after that they entred into Champagne, going over the River of Aube; then they turned toward the Marches of Provins in Brie, and having more than once paſſed the Seyne, they drew at laſt toward the Imperial City of Paris. For they underſtood, how the French King made there a great Aſſembly of Men of War, of whom the Earl of St. Paul, and the Lord Cliſſon were to be the Chief Leaders: Wherefore now Sr. Robert reſolv'd for Paris, being very deſirous to come to a Battle; and that was the Reaſon he had not much troubled himſelf in Aſſaulting ſtrong Places, becauſe he deſigned to ſpare his Men for a better Service. When the French King heard that Sr. Robert Knolles was coming towards him, he wrote to Sr. Bertram of Clequin, then in Aquitain about the Parts of Limoſin, requiring and commanding him on ſight of his Letters to come unto him; for he was minded to employ him elſewhere.

XVII. But before We proceed in this Matter, We ſhall firſt take notice, what thoſe two Mighty Armies of France, which were led by the Dukes of Berry and Anjou, did perform worthy of their Name againſt the Invincible Black-Prince, who made his Rendezvous at Cognac, a City of Aquitain, in the Province of Angouleſmois, on the River la Charente; reſolving (thô now he was fain to uſe a litter) to expect the two French Dukes, and give them Battle. At his Summons there came unto him all the Loyal Barons, Knights, and Eſquires of Poictou, Sainctogne, and other Lands, that held of the Prince; and at the ſame time the Duke of Lancaſter with 400 Men of Arms, and 4000 Archers out of England arrived at Bourdeaux; where he tarried but a Day and a Night, and then marched towards Cognac; for he heard, how the Prince, his Brother, was reſolved to give his Enemies Battle; if they would abide him. Being within a days journey of Cognac, he met with the Earl of Pembroke, who had left his Garriſon of Mortagne, and was going alſo to ſerve the Prince. Theſe two Great Perſonages were glad to ſee one another, and ſo they rode together to Cognac, where they found the Prince and Princeſs (who was newly come to ſee her Lord and Husband from Angouleſme) and the Earl of Cambridge: To all whom they were extream Welcome. And now the Prince thought himſelf already Victorious, if his Enemies Courage would ſuffer them to look on him; or his own health permit him to give them a Viſit. And daily there flocked unto his Banners many Gallant Warriers, from Poictou, Sainctogne, Rochellois, Gaſcogne, Gaure, Bigorre, and the Marches next adjoyning; which yet continued under the Obedience of the Prince.

On the other Hand the Duke of Anjou had conquer'd Cities, Caſtles, Towns, and Fortreſſes, more than Fourty in Number, and was now come within Five or Six Leagues of Bourdeaux, having waſted all the Country. But about Bergerac and la Linde he was informed, how the Prince of Wales was perſonally in the Field at Cognac, and that beſides a Great Army, which he had rais'd, the Duke of Lancaſter was newly come to him with a conſiderable Reinforcement of Men of War, Spears, and Archers. Hereupon

upon his High Courage began to ſtoop, and he call'd a Council of the Lords about him, to enquire, how to perſevere, in which Council Sr. Bertram of Clequin was preſent. Here many things were warmly debated; and ſome were directly for giving Battle to the Prince, alledging, "how he was ſo empair'd in his Health, that he was but "the Shadow of himſelf now. Others held the contrary Opinion, affirming, that even "the Preſence of ſuch a General in the Field was of Great Importance, and carried Cou- "rage, if not Fortune, along with it. That either he was Dangerouſly Ill, or not; "if not, he was now as formidable, as ever; and if really ſo, he would waſte away of "himſelf; they need not by their Raſhneſs prepare heaps of their own Men for Him "to die upon. So in ſhort all things conſider'd, the Duke of Anjou was adviſ'd to break up his Army for the preſent, and to diſpoſe of his Men about in Garriſons, to make Frontier War: For (as they ſaid) they had done enough for that time. And beſides there was a neceſſity for the Gaſcogne Lords, as the Earl of Armagnac, the Lord of Albret, the Earl of Perigort, and others, who compoſed the better part of that Army, to return into their Reſpective Countries; for they knew not, which way the Prince would move with thoſe Forces, which he had raiſed. Thus the Duke of Anjou brake up his Army with more Reputation for Prudence, than Courage; if indeed that Courage is not the beſt, which is match'd with Prudence. He himſelf went to Cahors, where he diſpoſed his Men all about the Country in Garriſons; the Earl of Armagnac, and the other Diſaffected Lords return'd into their own Lands; but Sr. Bertram of Clequin with his Company, went to the City of Limoges, before which the Duke of Berry, the Duke of Bourbon, and the Lords of France, lay at that time with the other Army, having greatly conſtrained the Place; ſo that by the Biſhops means eſpecially, they were even then upon the Point of yielding.

AN. DOM. 1370. An. Regni Angliæ XLIV. Franciæ XXXI.

At Sr. Bertram's [e] coming, all the Army rejoyced, and ſoon after they purſued the Treaty, which they had already begun, between the Biſhop of Limoges, and the Inhabitants of the City on the One part, and the Duke of Berry on the Other. So at laſt the Biſhop, and the City turn'd to the French ſide, and ſware Homage and Fealty to the Duke in the French King's Name; and then the Duke had Poſſeſſion of the Place, and tarried there three days to refreſh his Men, and to ſettle Affairs, as to the Garriſon; which done, he brake up his Army, as the Duke of Anjou had done, giving leave to all his Chief Captains to go to their ſeveral Reſpective Places to defend them: Becauſe "(ſaid he) I hear, how Sr. Robert Knolles is now in the Iſle of France; and we have "done enough for this Campaine, if only in that we have taken Limoges, which the "Prince of Wales ſo much values, and had ſo greatly fortify'd. This Reſolution was put in practice, and the Duke at the requeſt of the Biſhop, having left in Garriſon, Sr. John Villemur, Sr. Hugh de la Roche, and Roger Beaufort, Eſquire, with an 100 Men of Arms, and others, went himſelf into Berry, the Duke of Bourbon into Bourbonnois, and the other Lords of the farther Marches into their ſeveral Countries. Only Sr. Bertram of Clequin remain'd ſtill in the parts of Limoſin with two Hundred Spears, to keep the Caſtles of the Lord of Maleval; who had newly revolted to the French.

[e] Froiſ. c. 280. fol. 171.

XVIII. News came preſently to the Prince of Wales, that his City of Limoges had revolted from him, and that the Biſhop of the ſaid Place, who had been Godfather to his Eldeſt Son, Edward, and in whom he had repoſed much Confidence, was chiefly concern'd in the Treaſon. The Prince was horribly incenſed at this Falſhood of the Biſhop, and never after ſo entirely reſpected Men of the Clergy, as he had done all his Life before. However firſt [f] he ſent his Heralds unto the Inhabitants of Limoges, commanding them to yield unto him, and to return to their Duty, acknowledging their fault, before it ſhould be too late. But they, finding themſelves encompaſſed with ſtrong Walls and Fortifications, abundantly ſupply'd with Victuals, and back'd with a ſtrong Garriſon, valued not the Prince's Summons. Whoſe Obſtinacy when the Prince underſtood, he ſent once more unto them, denouncing this Judgement againſt them. "That if they did not preſently ſubmit unto him, and turn out the French Garriſon, "and deliver unto him the Traytors, he would ſurely come againſt them in Perſon, "raſe their City to the Ground, and put to the Sword, their Men, Women, and "Children, even all, whom he ſhould find therein. But for all this the Ignorant Vulgar, being deceived by their Captains High Words, and their own vain Confidence, did not only refuſe to take this Meſſage into Conſideration; but affronted his Meſſengers, and fortify'd their City yet more ſtrongly againſt him. Then at laſt the incenſed Prince [g] ſware by the Soul of his Father (which was the moſt Solemn Oath he ever us'd) that he would recover that City again, and take Vengeance on thoſe Inſolent [f] Walſing. hiſt. p. 180. n. 30, 40.

[g] Froiſ. c. 280, &c.

An. Dom. 1370. An. Regni Angliæ XLIV. Franciæ XXXI.

Rebels, and make all the Traytors pay dearly for their Falſhood. So he went from Cognac haſtily with 1200 Spears, Knights, and Eſquires in his Company, One Thouſand Archers on Horſeback, and a Thouſand Archers on Foot, with his Brethren the Duke of Lancaſter and the Earl of Cambridge, the Lord John Haſtings Earl of Pembroke, the Lord Thomas Piercy, the Lord Thomas Ros of Hamlake, the Lord William Beauchamp, the Lord Michael de la Pole, the Lord Baldwin Frevile, the Lord John Devereux, the Lord Hugh Meinill, Sr. Simon Burley, Sr. Geoffry Argentine, Sr. Stephen Coſſington, Sr. Richard Pontchardon, Sr. Dangouſes, Sr. Percival Collins, all Engliſhmen, beſides theſe Great Captains, Gaſcogners, Sr. Guiſchard Dangle, Sr. Lewis of Harcourt, the Lord of Pons, the Lord of Partenay, the Lord of Pinant, the Lord of Taniboton, the Lord of Monferrand, the Lord of Chaumont, the Lord of Landuras, Sr. Emery of Chartres, the Lord of Pamiers, the Lord of Mucidan, the Lord de l' Eſparre, the Soldiche de l' Eſtarrac, the Lord of Garonne, all Poictevins and Gaſcogners; together with Sr. Euſtace Dambreticourt of Hainalt, and the Captains of the Companions, as Sr. Perdiccas of Albret, Nandon of Bergerac, the Bourg de l' Eſparre, the Bourg of Bartuel, Batiller Eſpiot, Bernard Wisk, and Bernard de la Salle. When the Black-Prince began to March with this Army of Expert Men, all the Country trembled before him; but He himſelf was ſo ſore in his Limbs, that he could not endure to ride on Horſeback; but was carried in an open Chariot; taking the direct way to Limoges. Being come before the Place, he began to inveſt it round, and ſware, he would never riſe thence, till he had it at his Mercy. The Biſhop and the Chief Burgeſſes, who had yielded the Town to the French, began now to Repent of their Treaſon; but 'twas too late; for they were no longer Maſters of the Town, the French Garriſon held them under. Sr. John Villemur, Sr. Hugh de la Roche, and Roger Beaufort, who were Captains of the City, and Men of Exalted Courage and Skill in Arms, did all they could to hearten their Men and the Inhabitants, who moſt of all dreaded the Anger of the Incenſed Prince. "Sirs (ſaid they) be not at all daunted: We are ſtrong enough to hold "out againſt the Prince, and all his Power. 'Twas He himſelf that fortify'd this City; "So that by Aſſault He can never hurt Us; We are ſo well defended, and alſo ſufficiently furniſh'd with Artillery to offend the Aſſailants. And then We have Proviſion "enough to hold out all the next Winter; by which time, He will find it but cold Lodging "in the Field. The Prince and his Marſhals, who knew well the ſtrength of the City, and were fully informed, what Souldiers were within, concluded, that it would be to little purpoſe to Storm the Place, and ſo they Reſolv'd on another way, namely to undermine the Walls. Accordingly the Prince ſet his Pioneers (of whom he had the beſt in the World with him) on work; about which they fell briskly. The Captains within perceived, or at leaſt gueſſed, that they were undermin'd, and ſo they began to make Ditches, and to countermine, hoping to diſappoint the Prince that way. But here we ſhall leave the Prince at his Siege for a while, and return to Sr. Robert Knolles, whom we left on his journey to Paris.

XIX. Now this mean while Sr. Robert Knolles, had paſs'd with his Army thrô Artois, Picardy, Vermandois, the Archbiſhoprick of Laon, the Archbiſhoprick of Rheims and Champaigne; whence he turned back into Brie, and ſo came before the Great City of Paris, to try, if thus he might engage the Frenchmen to a Battle. And here he lay a Day and two Nights, the French King himſelf being at that time within the City, who might eaſily ſee from his Palace of St. Paul, the Huge Fires and Smoaks which the Engliſh made about in Gaſtenois. There was then with the King in Paris, a conſiderable Army, conſiſting, beſides the Common Souldiers, of Knights, Eſquires, and other Valiant Gentlemen of France, under the Command of theſe Captains of Name, Sr. Moreau de Fiennes Conſtable of France, and the Earl of St. Paul, newly come thither, the Earl of Tancarville, the Earl of Salebruce, the Vicount of Meaux, Sr. Ralph de Coucy, the Seneſchal of Hainalt, Sr. Edward of Renty, Sr. John de Vienne, the Lord Oliver Cliſſon, the Lord de la Riviere, the Lord de Chaſteau St. Julian, the Vicount of Rohan, the Lord of Creſpy, the Lord of Chauny, Sr. Angerant Dourdan, and others; but not one Man offer'd to come out againſt the Engliſh; for the King would by no means permit any ſuch thing. And indeed, beſides his own Cauteous Humor, the Lord Cliſſon, who was one of the Chief of his Council, and had his Ear moſt, caſt many doubts in the way, and ſaid, "Sir, be not eaſily tempted to ſend forth your People "againſt thoſe Madmen yonder. The beſt way to beat them, is to deny them Battle; "they will then fall away of themſelves. You may let them go on thus for a while; "for they cannot take your Inheritance from You; nor drive You out of your King-"dom by their Smoak. Sr. Robert Knolles therefore finding he could not obtain a Battle, tle, began to diſlodge with his Army on the Tueſday Morning, having fired all the Neighbouring Villages, about which he had encamped, that the Fire and Smoak were ſeen at Paris. Now there was a Knight in the Engliſh Army, who had made a Vow the day before, to ride up to the Gates of Paris, and ſtrike at the Barriers with his Spear. And therefore when the Army began to March away, he left his Rank in order to accompliſh his Vow, with his Spear in his Fiſt, his ſhield about his Neck, on a good Horſe, and arm'd at all Pieces, but his Head, his Eſquire bearing his Helmet after him on another Horſe. But when he came near to Paris, he took, and clapt on his Helmet, and ſo leaving his Eſquire behind, ſet ſpurs to his Horſe, and came on a full Carriere to the Barriers, which were then open. It was at the Gate of St. James his, and there ſtood there at that time the Earl of St. Paul, the Vicount of Rohan, the Lord of Chauny, the Lord of Creſpy, Sr. Edward of Renty, and Sr. Angerant Dourdan, who all wonder'd, what this Knight intended to do: For by his Riding they thought he deſign'd to enter into the City. But it ſeems he intended no ſuch Matter; for having ſtruck once or twice at the Barriers, as before he had vow'd to do, he turned the Reins of his Horſe, and rode back again. But when the Frenchmen ſaw this, they laugh'd him to ſcorn, ſaying, "Go thy ways in Gods Name, thou haſt ſhew'd thy Knighthood "enough of all Conſcience. The Gentleman's Name We can't recover, nor whether he was an Engliſh or a Scotch Man, or of what other Country, only the Blazon upon his ſhield [h] was Gules, Two Fuſils in a Fez Sable, a Bordure indented, Sable. But in the Suburbs, he met with an hard Rencounter, which he little expected; for as he paſſed along the ſtreet, there was before him a Butcher, a ſturdy big bon'd fellow, with a ſharp Axe in his Hand: Who had before obſerved the behaviour of this Knight, and intended to give him a Mark, if he could conveniently. As therefore he return'd and rode on careleſly, heeding no Body, this Butcher ſlipt on one ſide, and gave him ſuch a ſtroak between his Neck and Shoulders, that he fell flat upon his Horſes Neck, and yet recover'd again; but at that inſtant the Butcher redoubled his Blow ſo ſtrongly, that the Axe entred into his Fleſh. With that the Knight fell down to the earth; but his Horſe ran away and went to the Eſquire, who took him by the Bridle, as he ſtood at the end of the ſtreet, wondring, what was become of his Maſter: For he had ſeen him ride to the Barriers, and after he had ſtruck thereat with his Spear, return again. Wherefore now he rode a little forward, to ſee what was the Matter, and there he ſpy'd his Maſter lying on the ground among four or five luſty fellows, who laid on him, as if they had been beating on an Anvil with a Maſſy ſledge. At this the Eſquire was in ſuch a bodily fear, that he durſt by no means go any further, and beſides he thought his Maſter by that time paſt help, wherefore he rode back with his Maſters Horſe in his Hand to the Army, and told what miſadventure had happen'd unto him, whereat they were ſorry. So the Knight was there ſlain by the Butcher, and the reſt with him; after which the Lords of France, who ſtood at the Barriers, and ſaw all the Paſſage; laid up his Armour, and cauſed his Body to be decently buried in Holy Ground. That Night the Engliſh Army lodged between Paris and Montleherry, by a little River, named Yvette: For they always us'd to take up betimes.

[h] Froiſ. ibid.

XX. While Sr. Robert Knolles [i] was employ'd in this Expedition on the one part, and the Black-Prince on the other Hand with his two Brethren, lay before the ſtrong City of Limoges, Sr. Bertram of Clequin with his two hundred Spears ravaged about on the one ſide of Limoſin; but he never lay in the Field ſo much as one Night for fear of being ſnap'd by the Engliſh, whom he knew ſo ſtrong in thoſe Parts. And yet every Day he rode about, endeavouring by all means to conquer and win Towns and Caſtles, and ſtill at Night he would retire for ſhelter into ſome Fortreſs belonging to the Lord Lewis of Maleval, or to the Lord Raimund of Marvejols, or ſome other, who had revolted to the French ſide. The Prince of Wales knew of all this his Progreſs very well, and Complaints were brought unto him dayly, how cruelly Sr. Bertram haraſſed the Country. But for all that he would not leave the Siege, no thô Bourdeaux had been in Danger to be loſt, becauſe of his Oath and Thirſt of Revenge: He only preſſed it on the more violently, that ſo he might be again at Liberty to attend other Matters. Thus Prince Edward lay before the City of Limoges for the ſpace of a Month or more, in all which time he made neither Skirmiſh nor Aſſault, but continued to undermine them Day and Night; he truſted ſo well to the skill of thoſe, whom he employ'd in that Matter. The Captains within the Town perciev'd plainly that they were undermin'd, and made many Countermines to deſtroy the Engliſh; but they made ſo many falſe Mines, and by great skill in Mathematicks ran their ways ſo variouſly, till they came to the Place deſign'd, and ſo amuſed their Enemies by flinging out Earth on one ſide the Town, when [i] Froiſ. c. 282.

AN. DOM. 1370. An. Regni Angliæ XLIV. Franciæ XXXI.

An. Dom. 1370. An. Regni Angliæ XLIV. Franciæ XXXI.

when they had advanced their Mine to the other; that at last they brought their Work to Perfection, without suffering the least harm from the Counterminers. Then the Captains of the Miners went to the Prince and said, "Sir, when ever now it shall please "Your Royal Highness to command us, we shall in so many Hours cause a great Pain of "the Wall to fall down into the Ditch; so that you may enter the City at your ease, "without any danger. The Prince being extreamly pleased with these Words said, "Then our Pleasure is, that early to morrow Morning all things may be ready for our En- "trance, as you have promised. Then Orders being given secretly thrô the Army, and a strong Brigade of Footmen and Archers being appointed to enter at the Breach, so to open the Gates for the Prince, whose Resolution also concerning the Inhabitants was now known, the Miners set fire to all the Props that were under the Wall, and so by the time appointed the full Effect was wrought as was expected; and there fell down a great Pain of Wall of near 30 Foot in length into the Ditch, and so fill'd it up. Immediately the English Footmen, who stood ready ranged in the Field over against the Place, gave a Shout, and streight enter'd the Breach, and ran directly to the Gates, and beat them down with Axes, and the Barriers also; for there was no sufficient Resistance made, the thing was done so unexpectedly. Then the Prince of Wales high-mounted in his Chariot, rode in at the Gates with his Guard of Partizans and Archers on Foot. With him went the Duke of Lancaster, the Earl of Cambridge, the Earl of Pembroke, Sr. Guischard Dangle, and the other Lords with their Retinues of Men of Arms; after whom follow'd a Party of the Infantry, chosen out of every Troop, ready to plunder the City, and to slay Men, Women and Children; for so they were commanded by the Angry Prince. Three Troops of Men of Arms and Archers stood at the Gates, and as many at the Breach, and a third Part of the Army remain'd in the Camp: So that it was impossible for any Soul to escape out of the City. Surely at such a time War is drest up in his most Dreadfull Habiliments, and that Heart must be very strongly barr'd against all access of Pitty, which would not relent at the sight, when Men, Women and Children with Hands and Eyes lifted up, flang themselves upon their Knees before the Enraged Prince to entreat for Mercy. But he was so immeasurably inflam'd with Anger at the false Treachery of the Frenchmen, and at their insolent Obstinacy, when he summon'd them to return to their Duty, that now he would take no Notice of any of those wretched Objects. So that his Footmen with their Halberts and Poleaxes dash'd out the Brains of all they met with, and all manner of People were put to Death without any Distinction, whether armed or naked, opponent or suppliant, even those that had never done any Treason, or other sin of their own. Nay there was so little regard to those poor Innocent Souls, who could have no share in the Guilt, that they had yet a greater share in the Punishment, than those Persons of Higher Degree, who had been chiefly concerned in the Offence. But if ever Justice is blind, much more is she so, when she commits her Sword into the hands of War and Fury. 'Twas a Dismal slaughter, and able to draw tears of Blood from the Hardest Heart, if ever the least Pulse of Religion or Humanity had beat therein. For that Day in the City of Limoges, before the Prince put a stop to the slaughter, there were slain and beheaded (besides the Souldiers and Men of War) more than [k] 4000 Men, Women and Children, most of whom may well be supposed to have had no share in the Offence against the Prince, but they suffer'd for the sins of others. As thus the Prince entred the City, there was dispatch'd a Troop of English to the Bishops Palace, where they found the Bishop himself, who had been the Occasion of all this Mischief. Him they immediately carried before the Prince, who beheld him with extremity of Anger and Disdain, and for all his Pleading for Mercy, the best that the Prince gave him was, how he should lose his Head: And so for the present he was hurried away out of his sight.

[k] Mezeray 2 Part. 3 Tom. p. 87.

Now as for the Captains of the Garrison, who were within the City, as Sr. John Villemur, Sr. Hugh de la Roche, and Roger Beaufort Son to the Earl of Beaufort, which Three were the Chief Captains of the City, when they beheld the Desolation and Misery, that so fast approached them, they said to one another, "We are but all dead Men: "That is certain; the Enemy gives no Quarter: Wherefore let us resolve to sell our Lives "dearly, as it becomes Good Knights to do; that so our Names may not die with us. And therewithall Sr. John Villemur said to Roger Beaufort, who was then but an Esquire, "Roger, it is fit that you should now receive the Honour of Knighthood by my hands. Sir "(quoth Roger) I have not yet done any thing worthy of that Honour; however I thank "you for your favourable Opinion: But if we survive this Day, I shall hope to have de- "served it. Thus calm were these Worthies at the very instant of Death, but no more more was ſaid; nor indeed had they leiſure to ſpeak any more. Wherefore they drew together in a convenient place with their Backs againſt an old Wall, and there began to diſplay their Banners, being in all to the Number of Fourſcore Choſen Men of Arms; upon whom immediately came the Duke of Lancaſter, the Earl of Cambridge, and the Earl of Pembroke with their Men, who all alighted from their Horſes, and encountred with theſe Reſolute Frenchmen; the Duke of Lancaſter was pleaſed perſonally to engage with Sr. John Villemur, who was a ſtrong and hardy Gentleman, the Earl of Cambridge in like manner undertook to deal with Sr. Hugh de la Roche, and the Earl of Pembroke fought hand to hand with Roger Beaufort, who, thô but an Eſquire, was not eaſily overmatch'd by a moſt Valiant Young Prince. Theſe three Frenchmen did many gallant Feats of Arms, while they fought long and well in ſingle Combat with the Three Engliſh Princes, their Men at the ſame time being hotly engaged one with another. And the Black-Prince, as he was riding by in his Chariot, ſtopt to behold them, and much applauded in his Mind their Skill and Courage. And he was ſuch a Lover of Martial Gallantry, that this agreeable ſight began to ſoften his Obdurate Heart; ſo that for the ſakes of theſe Three Frenchmen, he commanded that no more ſlaughter ſhould be made in the City, and that the French Captains ſhould not ſuffer beyond the Law of Arms. Then the French Captains paid their Reverence to the Prince of Wales, and beholding their Swords ſaid with one conſent to their Antagoniſts, "Lords, we are yours, "you have conquer'd us: Do unto us according to the Law of Arms. Sirs (ſaid the Duke of Lancaſter) we expect no leſs, and ſo receive you as our Priſoners. Thus the three French Captains by their own exalted Courage ſav'd their Lives, but their Men were all ſlain, they could not hold out againſt ſuch Numbers of Engliſh; eſpecially their Captains being perſonally engag'd in that manner. After this triple Combat by the Prince's Command an end was put to the Slaughter; ſo that no more died that Day, except perchance any one reſiſted; the [1] reſt were all taken to Mercy. But the City was abſolutely given up to the Plunder, and rob'd and burnt, and level'd with the Ground. And now we had beſt to ſee what became of the Biſhop of Limoges, the chief Occaſion of all this Miſchief, whom therefore the Prince of Wales had threatned to make ſhorter by the Head. This Biſhop had the fortune to have many Great Friends among the Engliſh themſelves, particularly the Duke of Lancaſter, who cunningly pretending to be his Enemy, eaſily obtain'd of the Prince, his Brother, to have him deliver'd into his Hands, to do with him as he ſhould think fit; the Prince believing that he would put him to condign Puniſhment. The Duke of Lancaſter, that he might not diſpleaſe his Brother, by wholly acquitting the Biſhop upon his own Account, wrote ſecretly to the Pope, [m] who was juſt then return'd from Italy to Avignon, enforming him of the Biſhops taking and Danger, and that a Letter from his Holineſs, directed to himſelf on the ſaid Biſhops Behalf, might be very beneficial unto him. Hereupon the Pope, as it were of his own Head, with ſweet Words wrote unto the Duke of Lancaſter, deſiring him for Reverence of the Apoſtolick See to pardon the ſaid Biſhop, and to ſend him unto him to Avignon. The Duke of Lancaſter ſhew'd this Letter to the Prince, his Brother, who could not deny, but that he ought to grant the Pope's Requeſt, confeſſing that now he had the ſole Diſpoſe of him; but wiſh'd he had not defer'd his Puniſhment ſo long. However the Biſhop was ſent away to Avignon, having very hardly, by the Duke of Lancaſters Favour, evaded the Fury of the Prince.

AN. DOM. 1370. An. Regni Angliæ XLIV. Franciæ XXXI.

[1] Walſingh. hiſt. p. 180. n. 40.

[m] Urbanus V. rediit Avinionem hoc anno xxiv. Septemb. vid. Odor. Rainal. ad an. 1370. §. 20. &c.

After this [n] Deſtruction of Limoges, the Prince and his Brethren return'd with their Spoil and Priſoners to Cognac, where the Lady Princeſs was: At which time the Prince gave leave to the greater part of his Forces to go to their ſeveral Quarters; reſolving to do no more at that ſeaſon; for it was now late in the Year, and his Sickneſs encreaſed more and more upon him: whereat his Brethren and Friends were much diſcouraged: And indeed this prov'd the laſt Warlike Exploit, which that Gallant Prince ever performed.

[n] Froiſ. c. 284.

XXI. About the time, that Limoges was thus taken by the Prince, he was pleas'd to expreſs his love to his Brother the Duke of Lancaſter, by [o] granting unto him the Caſtle, Town, and Chaſtellanie of la Roche Sur Yon, in the Inſtrument whereof, bearing Date the Eight of October this Year, he ſtyles himſelf Edward, Eldeſt Son of the King of France and of England, Prince of Aquitain and of Wales, Duke of Cornwall, Earl of Cheſter, Lord of Biſcay, and of the Caſtle of Ordiales. Appendant to which in Green-ſilk-ſtrings [p] is his Seal alſo of Green Wax, on which he is repreſented in his Robes, ſitting on a Throne, with a Circle on his Head, and a Scepter in his Right Hand, as Duke of Aquitain, between two Oſtrich Feathers and Scroles, whereon were the Words ICH DIEN; over which are the Letters E. P. (viz. Edvardus Princeps) in [o] Sandford Geneal. Hiſt. l. 3. c. 4. p. 185. ex Inſtrumento in Camerâ Ducatûs Lancaſtriæ.

[p] Vid. illius formam Sandford p. 125.

An. Dom. 1370. An. Regni Angliæ XLIV. Franciæ XXXI.

in Capitals. On the Reverſe he is figur'd on Horſeback, his Surcoat, Shield, and the Capariſons of his Horſe, charged with the Arms of France and England quarterly, a Labell of three Points: And for his Creſt a Lion Paſſant-Guardant, Crowned and gorged with a Labell alſo of three Points. The Seal and Reverſe being thus circumſcribed in * Capitals. S. EDVARDI PRIMOGENITI, REGIS ANGL. PRINCIPIS AQUITANIÆ ET WALLIÆ, DUCIS CORNUBIÆ, ET COMITIS CESTRIÆ.

* Saxon Capitals in the Original, after the manner of that Age.

XXII. Now when the French King heard of the Ruine of Limoges, and how it was level'd with the ground, and left utterly deſolate, he was infinitely diſpleas'd, and had great Compaſſion of thoſe poor Souls, who ſuffer'd ſo much for his ſake. But ſince there was no Remedy now, his next Care was, how to ſtrengthen himſelf againſt a like Miſchief for the Future. A little before this, Sr. Moreau de Fiennes Conſtable of France, who had been in his Days a moſt Valiant and Accompliſht Knight, but was [q] now quite worn out with Age, and the Fatigues of War, reſign'd up his Office into the King's Hands, and obtain'd his Quietus eſt. Whereupon the French King being aſſured, how it was neceſſary, that France ſhould in ſuch a juncture have ſome Extraordinary Perſon for her Conſtable, reſolved at laſt by conſent of his Council, that Sr. Bertram of Clequin, if he might be won to accept it, was the moſt Expert in Arms, the moſt Valiant and Vertuous, and every way the Fitteſt to Execute that High Office, being alſo the moſt Fortunate, and Succeſsfull of any One, they knew, who bore Arms for the Crown of France. Hereupon, as we ſaid before, the King cauſed Letters to be writ unto him in his Name, requiring him to come immediately to confer with him at Paris.

[q] Mezeray p. 85.

Now after the two Dukes of Anjou and Berry, had finiſh'd their Expedition, Sr. Bertram of Clequin [r] entred into the Vicounty of Limoſin, a Country, which was yielded to, and held of, the Lord John of Monford Duke of Bretagne; thô the Engliſh had alſo many Garriſons and Towns in thoſe parts. There Sr. Bertram began to make heavy War in the Name of the Lady, the Relict of Charles of Blois. His Succeſs was conſiderable; for his Invaſion was ſudden, the Duke of Bretagne never imagining, that at this time Sr. Bertram could find any the leaſt pretence to quarrel with him. But whether his Conſcience perſwaded him, that the Widdow had the better Title, or that he might Revenge that Indifference, which the Duke had lately ſhewn to the Crown of France, when he gave leave to the Earl of Cambridge to paſs thrô his Country, or being himſelf a Breton, becauſe he thought it his Duty to take the part of his Lawfull Prince, which he took to be the Widdow of Charles of Blois and her Children, upon ſome, or all of theſe accounts, Sr. Bertram began this unexpected War; and firſt went before the Town of St. Hyrier, which not being commanded by any Gentleman of Name, yielded up for fear to Sr. Bertram, who took it in the Name of the Lady of Bretagne: And here at St. Hyrier, Sr. Bertram and his Bretons made a ſtrong Garriſon, whereby they wan divers other Towns in Limoſin.

[r] Froiſ. c. 282.

When the [s] French King's Meſſengers came to him, they found him in theſe Parts, having lately taken a Town called Brantoſme, and juſt then riding to beſiege another. He received the Meſſengers with great Reſpect and Honour, for he was very well-bred, and a Diſcreet Perſon, but when he ſaw the King's Letters, and had read his Expreſs Command, he reſolved to make no excuſe, but immediately to wait upon him to know his Pleaſure. Wherefore having diſpos'd of moſt of his Men into Garriſons, and left all to the Care and Conduct of his Nephew, Sr. Oliver Manny, he rode ſtraight for Paris, where he found the King, who received him very graciouſly. There the King told him, how by Advice and Conſent of his whole Council, he had pitch'd upon him to be Conſtable of France. Sr. Bertram ſeem'd very much ſurpris'd, and ſaid, "Sir, I am "by no means worthy of ſo High an Office; for in reſpect of the Great Lords, and o- "ther Valiant Gentlemen of France, I am but a poor Knight; althô indeed Fortune hath "a little advanced me in the Eye of the World. Sr. Bertram (reply'd the King) it is "to no purpoſe, that you ſeek to excuſe your ſelf: You can no ways avoid accepting of "this Place: For it is a Matter, that hath already been abſolutely determin'd by our Coun- "cil, and alſo ordained by the Peers of France, and by the Three Eſtates. So that you "muſt not expect that I ſhall now fruſtrate, what they have on ſuch good grounds Eſta- "bliſhed. Then Sr. Bertram, who ſaw that he was hereby ſet as a Mark for Envy, and that his Office would require a more abſolute Authority, than would be willingly yielded to one of his Degree, took another way, and ſaid, "Right Dear and Gracious So- "vereign, I neither may nor dare in the leaſt contradict or oppoſe your High Reſolutions. "But Sir, this is true, that I am but a mean Perſon, and of too low a Rank and Blood to

[s] Froiſ. c. 284.

"be

AN. DOM. 1370. An. Regni Angliæ XLIV. Franciæ XXXI.

"be raiſed to the Dignity of being Conſtable of France, which is ſo High and ſo Noble "an Office. For it is convenient, that whoſoever will rightly execute that Function, muſt "have Authority to Command, as well thoſe of the Higheſt Quality, as inferior People, "if not much more. And Sir, behold! here are my Lords, Your Majeſties Royal Bre- "thren, your Nephews and your Couſins; who all Command many Men of War in your "Armies: Now Sir, how dare I be ſo bold, as even upon occaſion to Command theſe High- "born Princes? Surely Sir, from ſuch a Matter ſo much Envy may ariſe to me, that I "ought to be very cautious thereof. And therefore, Sir, upon this account alſo, I requeſt "Your Majeſty to pardon me, and to beſtow this Charge upon ſome other, who may deſerve "it much better, and execute it far more worthily. To all this the King anſwer'd very ſeriouſly, Come, Come, Sr. Bertram, neither will this Excuſe ſerve your turn: For I "have no Brother, Nephew, nor Couſin; no Duke, Earl, nor Baron in my Kingdom, "that ſhall not readily obey You; and if any preſume to do otherwiſe, I ſhall reſent it ſo "Highly, that he ſhall ſoon find ſome evident Marks of my Diſpleaſure. Therefore Sir, "freely in Gods Name accept the Office; it is the Deſire of all the Realm, and it is alſo "my Expreſs Command, that You do ſo. Sr. Bertram, ſeeing it in vain to uſe any further tergiverſation, fell down upon his Knees, and ſaid, [t] "My Lord, ô King, I heartily "obey your Commands, and accept this High Office: But moſt humbly requeſt, that be- "fore I take the Sword into my Hands, You will grant me one thing, which I ſhall ask; "it being a Matter no way prejudicial to your Royal Dignity, Eſtate, and Honour. The King promiſed him ſo much, and then he proceeded, "Sr. (ſaid he) becauſe I have of- "ten heard, that for the moſt part Envy and Calumny do frequent the Courts of Great "Princes, and Detraction by her Officious Inſinuations doth many times gain Credit, I "therefore humbly requeſt, that You will never ſuffer any Man whatſoever to ſpeak Evil "of me, unto You, unleſs he will dare to affirm that, whereof he accuſes me, before my "Face. This the King graciouſly promiſed, and ſo at laſt, Sr. Bertram of Clequin (thô much againſt his will) accepted on the [u] 2[d] of October of the Sword of Conſtable of France, to the general ſatisfaction of all the Court. And that ſame day, the King to ſet a Mark of Eſteem upon him, [x] made him ſit down with him at his own Table, ſhewing him all the ſigns of Love and Reſpect imaginable, and together with that Office gave him many Rich Gifts, and ſettled upon him conſiderable Lands and Revenues for him and his Heirs for ever. But the Duke of Anjou was the Chief Aſſiſtant in exalting Sr. Bertram to this Honour.

[t] Richardi Dinothi Adverſ. Hiſtor. p. 150. ex Libro de Bertrandi Gueſchinatis Vitâ conſcripto. Vid. Monſieur Menard in his Life of Sr. Bertram of Clequin, &c.

[u] Mezeray p. 85.

[x] Froiſ. ibid. & Du Cheſne p. 707.

XXIII. When Sr. Bertram of Clequin was thus made Conſtable of France, [y] he ſaid to the King, "Sir, if it pleaſe your Majeſty, I will go and ride after Sr. Robert Knolles, "who, I hear, is ſtill about the Marches of Anjou and Maine. The King was well pleaſed with this his Offer, and commanded him to make what preparations he thought ſufficient, adding, how all his Subjects ſhould obey him. But yet he is ſaid [z] to have limited him to ſuch a Number of Men, to the end, that he might only have an Eye to the Enemy, and keep him ſhort, but not give him Battle. However Sr. Bertram was ſo earneſt, upon this his Firſt Expedition, that to furniſh himſelf the better, and to oblige his Followers, he ſold all his Jewels and Rich Moveables, which he had purchas'd in Spain, to diſtribute the profit thereof among his Souldiers. So he went from Paris with the Lord Oliver Cliſſon in his Company, and took his way towards Maine; making his Garriſon in Mans, the Chief City of that Province, as the Lord Cliſſon alſo did at la Suze, a Town near thereunto, both of them making up about 500. Spears, beſides others.

[y] Froiſ. c. 285. fol. 174.

[z] Mezeray p. 85.

Sr. Robert Knolles indeed was in thoſe Parts with a Great Army; but his Captains [a] were not all of a Mind; for the Young Lords Grandiſon, Fitz-Walter and others, would no longer obey their General, Sr. Robert, nor follow his Directions. He adviſed them, now Winter was drawing on, to retire along with him into Bretagne, where they might Quarter more ſafely, being among their Friends and Allies; for at ſuch times they could not live many together, and the Frenchmen were all upon the Catch. But the Major part of the Captains ſaid, how as for that Matter they were ſtrong enough, and that the Enemy durſt not look them in the Faces; they had try'd their Courage ſufficiently that Campaigne, and therefore they were reſolv'd to quarter in their Enemies Country, and not burthen their Friends. When firſt this difference of Opinion aroſe in the Engliſh Army, it was preſently by ſly inſinuations fomented by an unhappy Villain, named Sr. John Menſtreworth, an Engliſh Knight, Valiant indeed of his Hands, but Deceitfull, Covetous, Perverſe, and Diſloyal; and one that having embezel'd great Summs, which were deſign'd for Souldiers pay, was now afraid of being called to an account by his General, and ſo endeavour'd to deſtroy him; thô the ſame Sr. Robert had been his prime Patron, and had advanced him to a conſiderable Command in the Army. But this Ungratefull Man did all he could to blow the Coals of Contention among the Chief Leaders, and eſpecially to inſtigate the Young Lords againſt Sr. Robert Knolles, by telling them, "how it redounded to their Diſcredit, to be ſubject to a Man of ſo mean "an Extract, as he was, that now the Campaine was over, the Date of his Authority was "expired; and if ſtill he pretended to Command his Betters, he was not to be endur'd: "That every One of them was far from being a Novice, and able enough to do his own "Buſineſs without the Direction of that old Freebooter. Upon theſe and the like inſinuations tending to Diſcord, they divided into ſeveral Bodies, and every Man drew to himſelf, as many as favour'd his Opinion. Sr. Robert Knolles and Sr. Alan Boxhull, who only held firmly to the beſt Counſel, were at that time not far from Mans, but they deſign'd to go ſtreight into Bretagne, and Quarter there. The Lord Thomas Grandiſon, the Lord Walter Fitz-Walter, Sr. Hugh Meinil, Sr. John Menſtreworth, and the greater part of the other Lords, were in other Places about the parts of Anjou and Touraine. But when Sr. Robert Knolles, and Sr. Alan Boxhull knew, that the Conſtable of France and the Lord Oliver Cliſſon were come ſo near unto them, they were very glad thereof, and Sr. Robert ſaid, "This is good News for Us: Let Us now gather our "Friends together, and take our Advantage. Surely Sr. Bertram of Clequin for Novel-"ty of his Office is come hither to look upon Us: Althô We have ridden thrô all "France; without meeting any, that dared ſo much before. I pray God, 'tis not from "our Diſſention, that they have taken Courage! However I'll ſend and invite hither, "to a participation of our Deſign, the Valiant and Loyal Sr. Hugh Calverley, who is now "in Garriſon at Saumur on the Loire, as alſo to Sr. Robert Briquet, Sr. Perdiccas of Al-"bret, Sr. Robert Cheney, and the other Captains of the Companions our Friends, that "are here about Us, deſiring them to come and joyn Us immediately; I believe, they "will be glad of ſuch an Opportunity to ſhew their Valour. We will alſo ſend to our Diſ-"ſenting Friends, who have ſeparated from Us; if ſo be We ſhall now be able to per-"ſwade them to embrace wholſome Council. For (ſays he) if We may overthrow this "New Conſtable, and our inveterate Enemy, the Lord Cliſſon, it will redound exceed-"ingly to our Honour and Advantage. Now, as we ſaid before, Sr. Robert Knolles and Sr. Alan Boxhull were always of one Mind, and they agreed in this point accordingly, and ſent Meſſengers with Letters ſecretly to Sr. Hugh Calverley, to Sr. Robert Cheney, and the reſt, deſiring them to come and joyn them by ſuch a time, at ſuch a place, to the end they might give the Frenchmen Battle. They ſent alſo to Sr. Thomas Grandiſon, Sr. Walter Fitz-Walter, and the reſt of that Faction to the ſame effect; who alſo prepared readily to come to them, the latter party amounting to [b] 200 Spears. But whether Sr. John Menſtreworth did already begin to hold Correſpondence with the French, as ſhortly after he openly fell off to them, or by what other means, I know not, this Aſſignation of Sr. Robert's was not ſo cloſely carried on, but that Sr. Bertram of Clequin had particular notice thereof: So that at the time appointed, he went out of his Garriſon with [c] 400 Spears, beſides others in his Company, and planted himſelf in a way, where he knew the Engliſh muſt of neceſſity paſs, at le Pont Vallin in the County of Maine. That very Night Sr. Thomas Grandiſon with his 200 Spears, and about 6000 others, left his Quarters, and began to March toward the place appointed, to joyn Sr. Robert Knolles. But his journey was ſhortned by Sr Bertram of Clequin, who meeting him early in the Morning at Pont Vallin, gave him a ſudden Charge with all the Vigour imaginable. The Frenchmen were at leaſt double, the Number of the Engliſh, and the ſurpriſe, wherewith they made the Onſet, was no ſmall Advantage on their ſide neither. However the Battle was ſtrong, and well fought, and laſted a good while: For at the Firſt Encounter, the Engliſhmen alighted all on Foot, and came boldly againſt their Enemies, fighting with Spears, Swords, and Axes Valiantly. But at laſt the Victory fell to the French, and they obtain'd the Day, almoſt all the Engliſh being ſlain, or taken; except the Pages, and Boys, and ſuch, who leap'd on their Maſters Horſes, and ſo ſaved themſelves. But Sr. John Menſtreworth however made ſhift to eſcape, and ſoon after [d] he got back into England, where he challenged Sr. Robert Knolles of Treaſon, and accuſed him as the ſole occaſion of this Loſs, before the King and Council. But the approved Worth of the Man was ſo well known, that generally Sr. John was look'd on, as a falſe Liar, and Sr. Robert clearly acquitted in the Opinion of all Men. Thô this Diſloyal Calumniator had ſo ſtoutly beſpatter'd him; that the King withdrew a Penſion, which before he had granted him; and Sr. Robert durſt not afterwards return into England, till he had ſecur'd the King's Favour, both by the Teſtimony of his Friends, and a good round Sum of Money; as We ſhall ſee preſently.

[a] Walſing. hiſt. p. 179. & 180. M.S. vet. Angl. in Bibl. C.C.C. Cantab. c. 234.

An. Dom. 1370. An. Regni Angliæ XLIV. Franciæ XXXI.

[b] Froiſ. ibid.

[c] Froiſ. &c.

[d] Walſingh. hiſt. p. 180. n. 10. & Hypod. p. 131. n. 50.

In

In the foresaid Battle there were slain upon the Spot above [e] 1200 English, and almost all the rest were taken Prisoners, as the chief Captain the Lord Thomas Grandison, the Lord Walter Fitz-Walter, Sr. Gilbert Gifford, Sr. Geoffry Ursewell, Sr. Hugh Meinill, Sr. Philip Courtney, Sr. Hugh Spencer, and many other Knights and Gentlemen, all who were carried away Prisoners to the City of Mans. On the French side the famous old Warrier the Lord [f] Arnold D' Endreghan died of the Wounds he receiv'd in this Battle. The News of this Loss was presently carried to Sr. Hugh Calverley at Saumur upon the Loire, to Sr. Robert Cheyney and their Fellows, who thereupon forbore to go to Sr. Robert Knolles, as they had designed. And Sr. Robert Knolles for his part, together with Sr. Alan Boxhull and his Friends, retired from the appointed Place of Rendezvous, and wholly quitted the Design of going against the Constable. Shortly after he went into Bretagne to his own Castle and Town of Derual, and there he gave leave to all his Men of Arms and Archers to go where they pleased; so that some of them returned into England, others went to Sr. Alan Boxhull to the Town of St. Saviour the Vicount in Normandy, which King Edward had committed to his Charge.

AN. DOM. 1370. An. Regni Angliæ XLIV. Franciæ XXXI.

[e] Du Chesne p. 707.

[f] Jacob Meyer l.13.p.190.

XXIV. But Sr. Bertram of Clequin, who had given the English this memorable Discomfiture at Pont Vallin, finding he was not able to do any more that Year (for it was now deep Winter) return'd with much Honour ro Paris, leading thither with him the greater part of the English Prisoners, whom the Frenchmen are said to have used very courteously, and to have ransomed reasonably, letting many of them go only upon their Faith and Promise. It was not then the manner of the English and French to put their Captives in Stocks, in Chains and Dungeons, and to use them severely, as the Germans and Spaniards would do in those Days, by that means to extort an high Ransom from their Prisoners. Wherefore Honest Froisard is here a little concerned against those Nations, and curses them for that their Unknightly Severity, saying also, that because they were so void of Pitty and Honour, they ought to have no Mercy shew'd unto them. But Sr. Bertram of Clequin and the other Frenchmen (says he) were very courteous to their English Prisoners, and put them to easie Ransoms. And yet I find [g] that the Lord Walter Fitz-Walter was so highly rated at this time, that he was fain to mortgage his Castle and Lordship of Egremond in Cumberland for the Summ of a 1000 l. (for certain Years) towards raising of the Fine, which he was demanded, for his Redemption.

[g] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 222.

Sr. Bertram of Clequin, having obtain'd so remarkable a Succes against so formidable an Enemy, just upon his Entrance into the Office of Constable, gain'd much Honour and Commendation of all Men; especially of the King his Master and other true Frenchmen, who began already to look upon him as THE RESTORER OF FRANCE, a Title which afterwards was appropriated unto him. But the Black-Prince and the Duke of Lancaster, who lay then at Cognac, were extreamly concern'd at this Loss, chiefly because it fell in such a juncture, when a little Fresh Reputation was most necessary for their Affairs. As for Sr. Robert Knolles, when he understood how he had been traduced to the King his Master, as the Occasion of that Loss, he sent two discreet Persons of his Esquires to make his Excuse, and to give the King a true Prospect of the whole Matter; and these Men by the help of Sr. Alan Boxhull, and other Knights of sound Reputation, who voluntarily went to the King in his Behalf, did their Devoir so well, that the King and his Council held him blameless, and plainly saw, how they had been misinformed. So Sr. Robert was again settled in the Favour of the King, and his Son the Prince of Wales; and Sr. John Menstreworth was summon'd in by such a Day to give Answer to the King and his Council, to what should be objected against him. But not appearing at the time limited, he was proclaimed Traytor and Outlawed, if again by such a Day he should not submit himself to a Legal Tryal. But his evil Conscience would not give him the Courage so to do; he rather chose to forfeit his Allegiance, and so turned Runagate, and fled over to the French King; but was taken some Years after, and executed in England, as we shall shew in due place.

XXV. While these Broils were thus hot in France, Pope Urban the V, who had been for about two Years and an Half at Rome, was now return'd again to Avignon, and used all his Endeavours to make a Peace between the Realms of France and England: But the Two Kings remained Deaf to all his Propositals, and shortly after, viz. on the [h] 19 of December his Holiness departed this Life, having enjoy'd the Papacy the space of 8 Years, one Month, and 23 Days. He was succeeded by Peter Rogerii, a Cardinal but of Fourty Years of Age, who was Son to William Earl of Beaufort, by the Lady Joan sister to Pope Clement VI. This Man who took unto him the Name of Gregory the XI, first return'd back the Papal Seat to Rome, after that it had continued at Avignon in France for the space of 70 Years in all. To which Removal (thô not undertaken dertaken till about six Years after this) he was prompted by this Occasion: As he[k] beheld once a certain Bishop (whose presence perhaps he was not over-fond of) standing by him, he demanded of him, why he was absent from his Pastoral Charge, adding, "That it became not a good Shepherd to remove himself so far from his Flock. Whereupon the Bishop replied, "If so, why then is your Holiness, who are the Chief Bishop, "and ought to be a Pattern to us all, so far from Rome, where your Charge doth lie, "and where St. Peter resided? This is said to have been an occasion of the Removal of that Chair, and the Pope was convinc'd, it was his Duty, and went thither as soon as he might accordingly. Which I wonder at, not knowing how it should come to pass, that he should forget, how he was an Universal Bishop, and so might reside any where, as having a like Pastoral Authority every where; but when Conscience appears, witty Evasions avail but little.

[h] Labbe Chron. Techn. ad ann. 1370. vid. Odor. Rainal. ad eundem annum §. 23. & c. Mezeray & Walsingh. M.S. vet. Ang. in Bibl. C.C.C. Cantab. c.234. & Victorell. & Froiss. c.279.

[i] Victorell. & Ciacon. 1 Vol. p. 949.

An. Dom. 1370. An. Regni Angliæ XLIV. Franciæ XXXI.

[k] Sabellicus Ennead. & Paul. Æmyl. p. 297. & Blondus & Jacob Meyer. Ann. Flandr. p. 193.

Nor shall we forget to mention a Son of the Muses, perhaps as Great, thô not as Dignified as either of these Popes; especially because Learned Men have a Title to the Laurel, and a Right to be recorded in History, as well as Captains themselves. This Man was Maximus Planudes a famous Greek Monk, who flourished[l] at this time, thô some by Mistake have put him later. However, as if his Prophetick Genius had even then foreseen the Downfall of the Greek Empire (which yet was not compleated till 83 Years after, at which time Constantinople was taken by Mahomet the Great) he made it his chief Endeavour to advance, or at least to preserve that then-decaying Language. To which end he translated into the Greek Tongue that small Book of Morals, which is called Cato, and also all the Works of St. Augustine, which he finished not till he was very old. He is moreover believed to have collected those Fables, which bear the Name of Æsop the Phrygian Fabulist; to which he added the Life of that merry conceited Philosopher. Further yet he turned into Greek the Poet Ovid's Books of Metamorphosis, with his Heroick Epistles; besides Macrobius his Saturnalia, aud Somnium Scipionis; and (which I value above all his Labours) collected those [m] Seven Books of the Greek Epigrams, commonly called the Anthologia, as they are now extant. For all which commendable Industry his Name deserves highly to be respected by the Learned and Ingenuous of all Nations. He died in a good Old Age several Years before Constantinople was taken, therein having a like Fate with St. Augustin, whom he had translated; for he also died, as he had desired, before he saw the Ruines of Hippo, his dearest City.

[l] Joh. Gerard. Vossius in l. de Scient. Mathem. reponit illum ad hunc ann. 1370. Vid. Guliel Burton in Græcæ Linguæ hist. p. 57.

[m] De quibus hæc olim lusi, Ἐνθ' ὅλῳ Εὐρώπης κόσμῳ πάνυ Ἄνθεα Μουσέων Ἐπὶ δὲ δεμινπλέκτοις ἐνδέδεται στεφάνοις.

CHAPTER the EIGHTH.

The CONTENTS.

An. Dom. 1371. An. Regni Angliæ XLV. Franciæ XXXII.

I. The Surprisal, Redemption and Death of the Lord Eustace Dambreticourt. II. The Danger and Escape of the Lord Raimond of Marvejols. III. The Death of Edward Plantagenet, Eldest Son to the Black-Prince: The said Prince, having appointed his Brother of Lancaster his Lieutenant in Aquitain, returns with his Family for England. IV. The Castle of Monpaon being betrayed to the French is recover'd by the Duke of Lancaster. V. The Lord of Pons revolts from England, and Poictou divided. VI. The Castle of Moncoutour won by the Englisn. VII. Sr. Bertram of Clequin prevails in other Parts. VIII. A Parliament at Westminster. IX. Pope Gregory endeavours a Peace between the Two Crowns. X. The Englisn obtain a Naval Victory over the Flemings. XI. The Flemings submit to a Peace. XII. James King of Majorica dies. XIII. The Duke of Lancaster and the Earl of Cambridge marry the two Daughters of Don Pedro King of Spain, whereby Don Henry being alarum'd, enters a Confederation with the French King. XIV. The Pope endeavours to make Peace between England and France, the Copy of his Letters to the Captal of Busche. XV. The Duke of Lancaster and the Earl of Cambridge return with their Ladies into England.

[a] Froiss. c. 286.

I. THIS Winter the Valiant and Generous Captain [a] Sr. Eustace Dambreticourt was in great danger of being utterly lost thrô his own too free Confidence in an old Acquaintance. For he rode one Evening to pay a Visit to the Lord of Pierre Buffierre, whom he look'd upon as his special Friend and Lover, and also of the Englisn Interest: For as we [b] shew'd before, the French King himself himself could not persuade him to renounce the Homage, which he had made to the Prince of Wales. In the Christmas Holydays Sr. Eustace rode to his Castle, designing to make merry with him; but his Entertainment was much otherwise than he expected: For his unkind Host admitted Sr. Tibauld du Pont a Knight of Breton, and an Enemy to England into his Castle, whom he suffer'd to seize upon Sr. Eustace, while he suspected no harm, and to lead him away Prisoner. And now he had certainly been put to a shamefull Death, because he had been a Captain of the Companions, and so great an Enemy to the Realm of France: But then the Duke of Bourbon was pleas'd to remember the good Turns he had done him in releasing his Mother, who was taken at Bellepeche, and so to requite him interceeded effectually for his Life at this time, and compounded for a Ransom of 12000 Franks; 4000 whereof Sr. Eustace paid down, leaving his Son Francis Dambreticourt in Hostage for the Remainder with the Duke of Bourbon, who thereupon repledged him, engaging his own Word for the Residue to Sr. Tibauld. Sr. Eustace being thus acquitted went and lay at Carentan, beyond the Marches of St. Clement in Base Normandy, a Town which the King of Navarre had given him. And there he shortly after died, having been in his Days a most Valiant Knight, and a sworn Servant to the Ladies.

[b] Vid. l. 4. c. 7. §. 2. p. 785.

AN. DOM. 1371. An. Regni Angliæ XLV. Franciæ XXXII.

II. About the same time there fell another Adventure, which I presume worth the Relating, because therein will appear the ill Consequences that attend Treason, with the great Power of natural Sympathy and Commiseration, and the agreeable Prospect of an unexpected Turn of Fortune. We shew'd before, how the Lord Lewis of Maleval and his Nephew the young Lord Raimund of Marvejols, had without any Constraint or Provocation revolted from the Service of the King of England, and began to make War against the Prince of Wales. Now the Lord Raimund of Marvejols hearing at this time, that all his own Country had followed his Example, and were turned French, took his leave of the Court at Paris intending to go home. But by the way he was suddenly met by two or three Troops of Sr. Hugh Calverley's Men, who were led by Sr. Geoffry Argentine, Captain of a Castle in Poicton. He fell so unluckily within their Power, that he could not possibly avoid them; so he was forthwith taken Prisoner, and carried into Poicton unto the said English Knights Castle. When it was known in England, that the Lord Raimund of Marvejols was taken and in sure Custody, King Edward wrote his Letters to Sr. Geoffry Argentine, who had him in his Keeping, commanding him with all speed to send over unto him his Enemy, that false Traytor, Sr. Raimund of Marvejols; saying, how he would take such Vengeance on him, that all others should take Example by him; and further he promised the Knight for his acceptable Service in taking him 6000 Franks. Sr. Geoffry Argentine resolv'd by all means to obey the King his Masters Commands, and said, he would surely fulfill his Pleasure, as soon as he could meet with an opportunity of Transporting him with Security; and began presently to seek out for a Vessel and Company to have him convey'd into England. Of all this Sr. Raimund had knowledge, wherefore he was much more nearly concern'd than ever: For before he hoped to get off by Ransom, but now he saw there was no other Remedy but inevitable Death, and that in all likelihood to be as full of Torment as Ignomy; for he knew how Traytors were usually punish'd, as well in England as elsewhere. He was then in the Flower of his Age, a Proper, Young, Handsom Valiant Gentleman, of a fair Estate and Fortune in the World; and perhaps not so fit to die, as those who have not met with the Temptations which attend so high a Condition: No wonder then, if he was very much affected with these Apprehensions of Death. He began to make the most dolefull Lamentations imaginable, and always when his Keeper came near, he heard him bewail his untimely End, and complain of his Misfortunes so pathetically, that it was impossible for Flesh and Blood not to sympathise therewith. The Keeper, who was an Englishman, had the Curiosity to ask him the occasion of so great Sorrow, and while he declared it in the softest Terms that could be devised, wept along with him for pitty, and afterwards gave him all the Consolation that might be, telling him how King Edward was a very Mercifull Prince, and thô terrible to those that resisted him, yet always Gratious to those whom he had in his Power; and much more he said with great Tenderness, out of a Pious Consideration of his Prisoners dejected and forlorn Condition. Sr. Raimund, who knew his Life lay at stake, saw little or no Comfort in all these Words, but only observing how wonderfully concerned his Keeper was for him, he began to repeat his Moans, thereby to raise his Compassion, and at last said unto him, "Ah! my "dearest Friend! Next unto God, it is in your Power alone to save me, which if out of " Christian Charity you will undertake to doe, I promise you by my Faith and Troth to be- "stow Half my Lands and Possessions upon you, to be held for You and your Heirs for e- "ver.

An. Dom. 1371. An. Regni Angliæ XLV. Franciæ XXXII.

"ver. The Engliſhman, who was but a poor Eſquire and unmarried, conſider'd how Sr. Raimund was a fine Gentleman, that it was a great Pitty he ſhould be put to Death upon any account; and alſo that he had promiſed him very largely, and ſo he ſaid in general, that he would do his utmoſt to ſave him. Sr. Raimund being exceeding glad at that Word, ſware ſolemnly unto him, how he would moſt religiouſly keep his Promiſe, and further do for him whatever he ſhould deſire. Then they fell to contrive how to bring their Purpoſe to effect, and as it was agreed, the Engliſhman, who bore the Keys of the Caſtle and of the Tower wherein Sr. Raimund was, and alſo of the Poſtern Gate, let him out about Midnight into the Fields, and went along with him into a great Wood for fear of being followed preſently. That Night they ſuffer'd much Pain, for they footed it ſeven Leagues before 'twas light Morning, ſo that they cut their Feet, becauſe it was an hard Froſt. But by Day-light they came to a French Fortreſs, where they were kindly received by the Garriſon, to whom Sr. Raimund declared all his Adventure, the Danger he was in, and the Eſcape he had made: Fot which they all thanked God and the Engliſh Eſquire.

But when Sr. Geoffry Argentine found the next Morning, that Sr. Raimund and his Keeper were fled, he ſent forth Men on Horſeback to ſcour about the Country, and to purſue them: But it was too late, they were far enough off, and perhaps in the Caſtle of their Friends by that time. After this manner Sr. Raimund of Marvejols made his Eſcape, and came into his own Country, where his Lands and Eſtate lay, and there he told all his Relations and Allies, what a ſignal Courteſie the Engliſh Eſquire had ſhew'd unto him in his extremity; whereupon they all embrac'd him, and ever after highly reſpected and lov'd him, and Sr. Raimund offer'd him (as he had promiſed before) to convey over unto him the Moiety of all his Inheritance; but he would not by any means receive ſo much; he only took 200 l. per annum, ſaying, it was as much as befitted one of his Degree. And thus the Engliſh Eſquire continued in thoſe parts, and Married, and liv'd there upon his Eſtate, and was ever Dear and Welcome to Sr. Raimund, and to all his Friends and Relations.

[c] Froiſ. c. 287. &c.

III. In the opening of the Year [c] there died at Bourdeaux the Young Lord Edward Plantagenet, Eldeſt Son to the Black-Prince, in the beginning of his ſeventh Year, to the extream Regret of the Prince and Princeſs, and the whole Court. At that ſame time the Prince himſelf was adviſed by his Phyſicians and Chirurgeons, who knew the Nature of his Diſtemper, to go into England, his Native Country, to try if ſo at leaſt he might recover his Health, which by this time was mightily empaired. The Prince approv'd of their Counſel, and ſo provided for his Return into England; appointing his Brother the Earl of Cambridge, and his Brother-in-Law, the Earl of Pembroke, with their Retinues, to be his Convoy. And while the Fleet was rigging out in the Haven of Bourdeaux on the Garonne, he ſent forth his ſpecial Summons to all the Loyal Barons and Knights of Gaſcogne and Poictou, and other parts of his Dominions, to come unto him by ſuch a Day to Bourdeaux. And all theſe at the time appointed, having preſented themſelves before the Prince in his Chamber, he began to tell them, "How he had now been for almoſt Ten Years ſpace a Good and Gracious Lord unto "them, as much as in him lay; for he had kept them in Peace, and had maintain'd "them in great Wealth, Proſperity, and Honour; till the Common Enemy of Man-"kind had ſcatter'd new Occaſions of War among them, wherein notwithſtanding he "had defended them with a ſtrong hand. But that now, for the Recovery of his Health, "which he very much wanted, he had deſign'd for England; thô he ſhould leave be-"hind him his Deareſt Brother, the Duke of Lancaſter, to ſupply his place. Him "therefore now he deſir'd, that they would all Believe, Honour, Serve, and Obey, e-"ven as hitherto they had done unto his own Perſon; and he alſo required them to "be heartily aſſiſtant unto Him in all his Undertakings, by their Counſel and otherwiſe, "nothing doubting, but that they ſhould find him a very Good and Gracious Lord "upon all occaſions. Then all the great Barons of Gaſcogne and Guienne, of Saintogne and Poictou, promiſed and ſware on their Faith and Honour, that there ſhould never be found any fault or failure in them. And ſo there, in preſence of the Prince, they did Fealty and Homage to the Duke of Lancaſter, as to the Prince's Lieutenant, and therewith according to the Cuſtom they kiſſed his Mouth. After which the Prince tarried not long at Bourdeaux, but [d] went on Board in the beginning of January, with their Son Richard and the Princeſſes Children by her Firſt Husband, together with the Earls of Cambridge and of Pembroke, and 500 Men of Arms, beſides Archers. Thus they ſailed without any Oppoſition from the Elements or their Enemies; till they arrived happily at Southampton, where they Landed, and tarried two Days to refreſh themthemſelves. On the Third Day they all took Horſe, the Prince only uſing a Litter, and ſo the Navy returning to Bourdeaux with the Earl of Cambridge; the Earl of Pembroke went along with the Prince to Windſor, where the King was at that time, who with much joy received his Son and Daughter, and their Young Son Richard, and was now by the Prince perfectly informed of the ſtate and Condition, wherein he had left Aquitaine. Soon after the Engliſh Court return'd to Weſtminſter, and the Prince of Wales went with his Family, to his Mannor of Berkhamſteed near London, where the Air is accounted better than ordinary.

[d] Froiſ. ibid. Walſing. hiſt. p. 181. M.S. Vet. Angl. in Bibl. C.C.C. Cantabr. c. 234.

AN. DOM. 1371. An. Regni Angliæ XLV. Franciæ XXXII.

IV. When the Prince of Wales had left Bourdeaux, and the Earl of Cambridge was returned with the Fleet and his Men of War, the Duke of Lancaſter ſolemniſed the Obſequies of his Nephew, Edward of Angouleſme, Eldeſt-Son to the Prince, his Brother, after a moſt Stately and Magnificent manner, in the City of Bourdeaux; at which Solemnity were preſent all the Lords and Barons of Gaſcogne and Poictou, who had ſo lately ſworn Obedience unto him. But before the Solemnity of the Funeral was quite over, while yet all the foreſaid Lords and Knights tarried at Bourdeaux. Theſe French Lords, namely, the Lord William de Leondoul, the Lord Lewis of Maillezais, the Lord of Archy, and Sr. Alan Huſſy marched forth of Perigeux, with 200 Spears, French and Bretons in their Company, and rode to a ſtrong Caſtle, called Monpaon, belonging to the Prince of Wales. Now the Captain of this Fortreſs, named Sr. William of Monpaon, thô he kept the Caſtle for England, was rather in his Heart a Friend to France; wherefore believing himſelf ſecure now, becauſe the Prince had left the Country, he preſently received theſe Frenchmen into his Caſtle, and openly turn'd Traytor. When the French Captains had thus eaſily obtain'd a Place of that ſtrength and importance, they fell about repairing and amending the Fortifications, and being even overjoy'd, ſaid, they would now Defend that Garriſon againſt all the World. When the News of theſe things came to Bourdeaux, the Duke of Lancaſter ſaid to the Lords about him; "Gentlemen, ſurely We do not our Duty aright: For the Bretons and French-"men are abroad, and have taken the Fortreſs of Monpaon, which borders upon Us: "Wherefore it behoves Us to go forth and ſhew our ſelves; or the Enemy will laugh Us to "ſcorn. Thus the Duke and all the Lords about him were concerned, and thought it would redound much to their ſhame, if they ſhould ſuffer that Place to remain in the Enemies Hand. Wherefore on the Wedneſday following, the Duke of Lancaſter leaving the Earl of Cambridge to govern in his abſence, marched out of Bourdeaux, with 700 Spears, and 500 Archers on Horſeback, beſide Footmen; the Chief Lords and Captains whereof, were the Lord Thomas Felton, the Lord Thomas Percy, the Lord Thomas Ros of Hamlake, the Lord Michael de la Pole, the Lord Baldwin Frevile, the Lord William Beauchamp, the Lord John Willoughby of Eresby, Sr. Richard Pontchardon, and Sr. Dangouſes; beſides the Gaſcogne Lords, ſuch as the Lord John Greilly, Captal of Buſche, the Lord of Pamiers, the Lord of Chaumont, the Lord of Monferrant, the Lord of Landuras, the Soldiche of Eſtarrac, Sr. Bernard of Albret, the Lord of Garonne, Sr. Emery de Tharſe, with theſe Lords of Saintogne and Poicton, the Lord of Pons, the Lord of Partenay, the Lord Lewis Harcourt, the Lord Guiſchard Dangle, the Lord James of Suggieres, Sr. Moubron de Liniers, Sr. William of Montendre, Sr. Hugh de Vinoye, the Lord of Crupenac, and ſeveral others; who all rode forth with the Duke of Lancaſter to lay Siege to Monpaon. When Sr. William of Monpaon heard, how the Duke was coming againſt him with a great Power, and ready to beſiege him, his Heart miſgave him mightily; for he knew, if he ſhould be taken, he muſt die an ignominious Death. So he fairly diſcover'd his Mind to the Bretons, ſaying, "Sirs, "I'll e'n leave this Caſtle to your Care, and I'll remove to Perigeux, and help to Defend "that: For the Duke of Lancaſter will not take me to Mercy, if I ſhould chance to fall into "his Power: Thus with their conſent he marched off, and the reſt put themſelves into the beſt poſture of Defence, that might be.

When the Duke of Lancaſter [e] was come with his Army before Monpaon, he began to inveſt the Place, and Tents and Pavilions were ſet up, and Proviſion for Lodging and other neceſſaries was made, as if he intended to tarry there ſeven Years. Nor yet did he ſuffer his Men to lie idle, for immediately they prepared to Aſſault the Caſtle, and forced the Clowns thereabout to fell an huge Quantity of Wood and Timber to caſt into the Ditch. For 15 Days together, they did nothing but buſie themſelves in filling up the Ditches, by flinging in Wood, Stones, and Timber, and always upon that, ſtraw and earth; ſo that at laſt they had made up a conſiderable ſpace of the Ditch; that it was firm as any other Ground; whereby they might approach the Walls at their pleaſure, to Aſſault the Beſieged, or Skirmiſh at the Barriers, which they never failed to do Five or Six times a Day. In this Siege there happen'd many notable Exploits; for the French and Bretons, were all good Knights and Eſquires, Men of Reputation and Courage, and Defended themſelves extraordinary well. Inſomuch, that thô the Engliſhmen and Gaſcogners by filling the Ditch, came ſo near them, yet they were nothing the more concern'd with fear, and alſo they behav'd themſelves with that Induſtry and Valour, that for all that, they had little or no Diſadvantage: Wherefore they are worthy to inherit an Honourable Report.

[e] Froiſ. c. 288. fol. 175. ſed Gallicè fol. 239. b.

to

An. Dom. 1371. An. Regni Angliæ XLV. Franciæ XXXII.

Now there was not far from thence another Garriſon of Bretons in a Caſtle called St. Macari, whoſe Captains were John de Maleſtroit, and Silveſter Budes: and every day they had News brought them, how bravely their Friends of Monpaon acquitted themſelves, thô they were ſo hardly put to it. Theſe Men ſaid often to one another, "Our Friends "and Countrymen yonder in Monpaon are every day upon hot Service, and deſerve great- "ly to be honoured for their noble Courage, whereof we hear ſo advantagious a Character. "And yet, behold! We ſit ſtill here, neither undertaking any thing to advance our own "Names, nor to aſſiſt our Friends, who are thus ſtreightly beleaguer'd: Surely we do not "as becomes Knights and Gentlemen to do Thus they ſhew'd a good Will to go and help their Neghbours, but then they conſider'd the Danger of leaving their own Fortreſs void: So that in this Caſe they were at a ſtand what courſe to take. At laſt Silveſter ſaid to his Fellow, "John, either you ſhall go and I'll ſtay behind, or I'll go and "leave you here: Choſe you whether. Then John ſaid, "Silveſter, you ſhall ſtay here "and I'll go: Thus there was a long ſtrife between them who ſhould go, for both of them claim'd that as a Privilege. But at laſt they agreed, ſwearing and promiſing before all the Garriſon to ſtand to the Deciſion of Fortune by drawing of Cuts; ſo that he of the two, who ſhould draw the Longeſt, muſt go to Monpaon, and the other was to ſtay behind. They drew, and Silveſter had the longeſt Cutt, whereat all the Company laught, becauſe indeed (however in point of Honour they had contended for it) 'twas look'd upon as an Enterpriſe far more full of Hazard than Advantage However Silveſter took not the Matter as a Jeſt, but ſeriouſly ſet about it, and exactly accoutred himſelf, and mounted his Horſe, and rode forth with 12 Choſen Men of Arms in his Company; and in the Dark of the Evening came and entred into the Fortreſs of Monpaon (for he had the Night before given them intelligence of an Aſſiſtance coming) where he was heartily welcome to the Knights of the Garriſon; all who thanked him kindly, and highly extolled his Courage. The very next Morning Silveſter had occaſion to ſhew his Valour, for they were alarum'd with a fierce Aſſault, and after that with another; ſo that all the Defendants had their Hands full. But the Engliſh had now made themſelves ſtrong Mantelets or moveable Penthouſes in manner of a Teſtudo, under which they ſhrouded certain Pioneers, who, while the Archers ſhot thick to clear the Battlements, with great Pickaxes undermined the Walls; till at laſt there fell down a Pane of Fourty foot long; at which inſtant the Archers ſhot ſo thick, that none durſt appear at the Breach, and the Engliſh Army ſtood ready embattled to enter. Then and not till then were the Bretons afraid, and immediately they ſent out an Herald on Horſeback, to try if they might be accepted to make any ſort of Treaty. The ſight of the Herald cauſed a Ceſſation, ſo when he had told his Meſſage to the Duke, which was to obtain a little Reſpit and Leave for their Captains to come forth and ſpeak with Him; the Duke by Advice of his Council granted thus much. The Herald being return'd with this Good News, all the Four Knights of France came forth at the Breach in a peaceable manner, to whom the Duke ſent Sr. Guiſchard Dangle, who ſpake with them on the near ſide of the Ditch. Firſt the Frenchmen demanded, "in what manner the Duke "would pleaſe to receive them? Sr. Guiſchard, who had full Inſtructions what to ſay, anſwer'd, "Why certainly Gentlemen, you have very much offended my Lord the Duke; "for by your Obſtinacy you have held out now [f] ſeveral Weeks, to his great Charge and "Trouble; beſides the loſs of his Men: So that he is reſolved now he has won you, not to "receive you to Mercy, unleſs you abſolutely ſubmit to his Pleaſure; and alſo in the firſt "place deliver up into his hands that falſe Traytor Sr. William of Monpaon, that he "may put him to Death as he hath deſerved. To this Sr. Lewis of Maillezais for himſelf and his Company reply'd thus, "Sr. Guiſchard, as for Sr. William of Monpaon, "whom You deſire to have, We ſwear unto you truly, that we know not where he is at this "time: For he hath not been in this Fortreſs ſince you laid your Siege thereto. And Sir, "it is an hard thing to compell us to yield up abſolutely, ſince we are ſent hither by a "Power above us, whom we ought to obey, and whom we ſerve for Wages, which is our "Livelyhood: As you alſo ſend your Men abroad, and are ſometimes content to take "Wages your ſelves. Wherefore before we will make any ſuch Bargain, we reſolve to [f] Froiſard ſays above Eleven Weeks: But then I cannot ſee, why the Duke disbanded his Men after this, ſince by that means it would have been time to begin a Campagne.

"ſell

"ſell our Lives at ſuch a Rate, that it ſhall be talk'd of an hundred Years hence. But "Honourable Sir, We deſire you to go back to the Noble Duke your Maſter, and let him "know it is our Requeſt, that he would receive us courteouſly, as Priſoners of War to be "ranſomed; as he himſelf would wiſh his Men ſhould be dealt withall, when they fall into "the like Danger. Sr. Guiſchard having promiſed to do his beſt in their Behalf, returned to the Duke, taking unto him the Captal of Buſche, the Lord of Roncoigne, and the Lord of Mucidan, that he might be able to perſuade the better. All theſe gave the Duke ſuch Arguments from his own Generoſity, from the Submiſſion of his Enemies, from the ill Effects their Deſpair might produce, and alſo from the Uncertainty of his own Condition; that the Duke at laſt condeſcended to their Reaſons, and was content to take the Four Captains with Silveſter Budes, and all their Men to Mercy as Priſoners of War.

AN. DOM. 1371. An. Regni Angliæ XLV. Franciæ XXXII.

V. And thus the Duke of Lancaſter recover'd Monpaon again, and took Fealty and Homage of all the Town, and ſet there 40 Men of Arms, and as many Archers in Garriſon under the Command of two Valiant Knights Gaſcogners: And after he had repaired the Breach, and abundantly fortified the Caſtle and the Walls, and clear'd that part of the Ditch that had been fill'd up, and ſuppli'd the Place with Proviſion and Artillery, he [g] brake up for that time, and diſmiſſed all the Lords, giving them leave to go whither they would. He for his part return'd to Bourdeaux, the Poictevins and Gaſcogners to their ſeveral Garriſons, and the Companions quarter'd abroad in the Country, where they did much Miſchief in the Lands of their Enemies, and not a little among their very Friends: Which yet the Duke of Lancaſter was fain to connive at, becauſe he expected to make further uſe of them very ſhortly: For the Wars were then much more warm in the Land of Poictou, than in any other Parts of the Principality. Particularly there was a ſtrong Garriſon in the Fortreſs of Moncontour, which was about four Leagues from Thoüars, and ſix from Poictiers; and there Sr. Peter de Guerſille, and Sr. Jordan de Coulonges were Captains, who overran the whole Country, and rode almoſt every Day either up to Thoüars or to Poictiers, rifling, plundering and ſlaying all of the Engliſh Name or Intereſt. Not far thence there was in Chaſtellerault Carlonet the Breton, with another huge Garriſon conſiſting of 700 Bretons, who likewiſe domineer'd and ravag'd all the Country about them. Beſides which the Garriſon at la Roche de Pozay, and that of St. Salvin tyranniſed as much about their Precincts; ſo that the Loyal Barons of Poictou, which held ſtill for England, durſt hardly ſtir abroad, unleſs in Conſiderable Bodies, for fear of the Frenchmen which lay ſcattering about in the Country.

[g] Froiſ. c. 289.

Soon after the Regaining of Monpaon to the Engliſh Side, all the Lords of Poictou being retired to their ſeveral Garriſons, to keep Frontier War upon the French, the Lord Lewis of St. Julian, the Vicount of Rochechoüart, and other French Gentlemen came ſecretly into Poictou, bringing along with them many powerfull Arguments, and many more-prevailing Bribes from the French King, thereby to corrupt the Faith of the Poictevins: For the French King ſtudied night and day, how he might bring over the Land of Poictou to his Devotion. Theſe Lords therefore being thus inſtructed, prevail'd ſo much at this time with the Lord of Pons, that he fell off to the French even againſt the Will of his own Lady, and all the Men of the Town of Pons in Poictou, who ſtill remain'd firm to the Engliſh Intereſt; the Lady her ſelf being for King Edward, and the Husband for King Charles. All the Loyal Barons and Knights of Poictou were much concern'd at this Levity, which the Lord of Pons had ſhewn; becauſe being a Perſon of a Conſiderable Character, he was therefore likely to do much Harm by his Example. The Duke of Lancaſter himſelf was hugely diſpleaſed at the Matter, but on the other hand highly extoll'd the Vertue of his Lady, and the Inhabitants of Pons for their Fidelity: And in order to their greater Encouragement as well as Security, preſently diſpatch'd away unto them Sr. Edmund Bourges, who was a Valiant and Expert Captain, with a conſiderable Reinforcement.

After this manner were the Engliſh in thoſe Parts buſied, being always forced to ſtand upon their Guard; for [h] many of theſe Great Lords, whom either the Reputation, Fortune or Liberality of the Black-Prince had conſtrained to follow Him, fell now away to the French King after his Departure: So that the Knights and Lords of Poictou were engag'd in a kind of Civil War, the Weaker being alway made a Prey to the Stronger, and Caſtles and Fortreſſes being ſo intermingled one with another, here an Engliſh and there a French Garriſon, that there was nothing but mutual Loſſes and Repriſals every Day, all things were in Confuſion, neither Law, Right nor Reaſon being of any moment in thoſe Parts.

[h] Mezeray p. 87

VI. Now the Loyal Barons and Knights of Poictou, who ſtill adher'd to England,

An. Dom. 1371. An. Regni Angliæ XLV. Franciæ XXXII.

consider'd, that the Castle of Moncontour [1] molested them more than any other Garrison, wherefore they agreed to go thither and lay Siege thereto. So the Lord Thomas Percy, who was Seneschal of Poictou, made his Summons for that Purpose within the City of Poictiers, where upon the Muster he found his Forces to amount to 500 Spears, and 2000 Footmen well armed, besides Archers: The Chief Captains whereof, next Sr. Thomas himself, were the Lord Baldwin Frevile, Sr. Dangouses, Sr. Matthew Gournay, Sr. Walter Hewett, Sr. Percival Collins, Sr. Geoffry Argentine, Sr. Richard Pontchardon, English Men; and these Knights of Poictou, Sr. Guischard Dangle, Sr. Lewis Harcourt, the Lord of Partenay, the Lord of Pinant, the Lord of Taniboton, the Lord of Crupenac, Sr. Hugh de Vinoye, Sr. James of Surgieres, Sr. Moubron of Linieres and others; all who marched forth of Poictiers in good Order, under the Conduct of the Lord Thomas Percy, and came and sat down before Moncontour. This Castle and Town of Moncontour stands on the Marches of Poictou and Anjou, being little more than six Leagues from Saumur in Anjou, and about as many from Poictiers; but hardly four from Thoüars.

[1] Froiss. ibid.

The Castle was exceeding strong and fair, and had a good Garrison, commanded, as we said before, by Sr. Peter de Guerfille, and Sr. Jordan de Coulonges. But the English had brought with them from Poictiers several Great Engines of Battery, and had others also sent to the Camp from Thoüars; all which they reared up against the Fortress, and plaid therewith Night and Day. Besides this there were Skirmishes held at the Barriers constantly, and especially by the Companions, who were then in the English Army, being commanded by Sr. Walter Hewett, John Cresswell and David Holcraft: For they were continually upon Duty, being all Valiant Men, and desirous by any means to carry the Place; because Sr. Thomas Percy had promised to bestow it on those, who should win it. The Garrison wanted neither Courage nor Provision, nor any other thing necessary, but Repose and Quiet; for they had no rest allow'd them Night nor Day, but were constantly alarum'd in several Places without any intermission. Especially on the Tenth Day of the Siege the Assault was General, and more vigorous than ordinary; so that at last the Place was carried by fine Force, and every Man within put to the Sword, except the two Captains, and about five or six Men of Arms, who were taken to Mercy. Upon this Success the Lord Thomas Percy, by Advice and with Consent of all the Barons and Knights present, granted the Castle to the Custody of Sr. Walter Hewett, John Cresswell and David Holcraft, who undertook with their Troops amounting to 500 able Men Companions, to make good the Place, and to hold Frontier War with those of Anjou and Touraine. And this English Garrison subsisted thus a great while to the no small Detriment of the Frenchmen their Neighbours; but the Lord Percy having succeeded here discharged his Troops for the present, and sent them to their several Quarters.

VII. Now Sr. Bertram of Clequin, Constable of France, having after his Victory over the English at Pont Vallin, designed to Winter at Paris, was informed, how the English had again taken the Field in Poictou and Guienne: Wherefore he resolved after Candlemas, in the beginning of the Year, to raise an Army, and to ride forth against the Enemies of France, who ranged about at their pleasure; especially from their Garrisons in Poictou, Limosin, Quercy, Auvergne, and Rouvergue. For in most of these Parts the English had behav'd themselves with much Honour, and had sustain'd their Interest with Commendable Bravery, ever since the War began. Particularly the Lord John Devereux was just then return'd into Limosin, whereof he was Seneschal; having lately pass'd in Hostile Manner thrô Auvergne and Givaudan, till he came into Vivarais, where he took the Castle, with the City, and base Town and all: But Sr. Bertram thought not to leave such Matters uncontroverted. So having the King's leave, he left Paris with a considerable Number of Men of Arms, among whom were these Captains of Name; the Dukes of Berry and Bourbon, the Earl of Alenson, and his Brother the Earl of Perche, the Earl of St. Paul, the Dauphin of Auvergne, the Earl of Vendosme, the Earl of Porcien, the Lord of Sully, the Lord of Montagre, Sr. Hugh Dauphin, the Lord of Beaujeu, the Lord of Rochefort, the Lord of Talascon, and many more Barons, Knights, and Esquires of the Marches of France. All these went into Vivarais, and sat down before the City of Uzes, where having layn fifteen days to no purpose, the Place being Valiantly Defended by the English, they raised their Siege, and marched thence toward the Parts of Rouvergue; the Constable thinking fit to go and make Experiment of his Enemies there also. But at his rising from before Uzes, several of the Chief Lords with him, took their leaves of him for a while, and struck off to Avignon to pay a Visit to Pope Gregory, and to the Duke of Anjou, who was then with him; having [k] lately been very instrumental in advancing him to that See. But having received his Holinesses Blessing, and confer'd a little with the Duke of Anjou, they re-

[k] Froiss. ibid.

turn'd

turn'd from Avignon, and follow'd the Conſtable toward Rouvergue, where they joyn'd him, and proceeded with him in winning Towns and Caſtles from the Engliſh. Among others, they came before the ſtrong Town of Millaud, and laid Siege thereto; the Captain therein for the Engliſh, being Sr. Thomas Wake, who had kept the Place about a Year and an half together, with another Fortreſs not far off, called la Roche Vauclere. But now on certain Reaſons the ſaid Sr. Thomas was fain to deliver up Millaud upon Compoſition to depart with Bag and Baggage, and flying Colours; whoſe Example was ſoon after followed by many other Fortreſſes on the Frontiers. Sr. Bertram ſtay'd a while hereabouts to refreſh his Men, and ſo went back again toward the City of Uzes, reſolving to renew his Siege, and that he might do it the more effectually, he ſent for Great Engines from Riom and Clermont, and reared them up againſt the Walls, and made ready all other Inſtruments of War, in order to make one grand and general Aſſault. When the Engliſh within ſaw the Conſtable's Deſign, [1] being informed that ſuch a Man as Sr. Thomas Wake himſelf had yielded up Millaud, and quitted all Rouvergue, and conſidering alſo that there was no Engliſh Army in thoſe Parts able to fight Sr. Bertram, or to raiſe the Siege, they called a Council of War, and concluded to treat with the Conſtable; which they did ſo diſcreetly, that they were permitted to go away with all their Goods, and what they pleaſed to carry, and were alſo conveyed ſafely into Limoſin; where they incurred no Blame of their Friends for what they had done. Thus Sr. Bertram proſper'd in this Expedition, and wan many Towns and Caſtles from the Engliſh before he return'd into France.

AN. DOM. 1371. An. Regni Angliæ XLV. Franciæ XXXII.

[1] Froiſ. c. 291.

VIII. But now 'tis time to look at home and ſee, how King Edward behaves himſelf in this juncture: He for his part [m] in the firſt Week of Lent, being the Beginning of March, held his High Court of Parliament at Weſtminſter, at the opening whereof William of Wickham Biſhop of Wincheſter, and then Lord Chancellor of England, declared in the Painted-Chamber before the King, Lords, and Commons, how ſince the laſt Seſſions, his Majeſty had defrayed a Mighty Maſs of Money, and had ſent over conſiderable Armies, for the Conqueſt and Recovery of his Own: And that he had lately received perfect information of the Great Power, which the French King had prepared, therewith to drive him from his Inheritance beyond the Seas; as alſo of his Vaſt Navy, whereby he meant to Subject unto him the whole Realm of England; of all which the King demanded their Counſel and Advice. Then there were appointed Receivers of Petitions for England, Ireland, Wales, and Scotland, Guienne, and other foreign Places and Iſles; and Tryers alſo for the ſaid Petitions.

[m] M.S. Rot. Parl. p. 107. Sr Rob. Cottonis Abridgm. p. 111. M.S. vet. Angl. in Bibl. C.C.C. Cantab. c. 234.

At this time * the Clergy granted unto the King an Aid, towards his Wars in France, of Fifty Thouſand Pounds, to be paid that Year, towards which Sum Chantry Prieſts were taxed, according to their Annual Receits, and alſo ſmall Benefices, which had not been taxed before. And the Laity alſo, Lords, and Commons granted unto the King for the Uſe aforeſaid, the like Sum of Fifty Thouſand Pounds, to be levied of every Pariſh within the Realm, at the rate of 22 s. 4[d]. the greater Pariſhes helping out the leſs; ſuppoſing (according to the Common Opinion) that there had been as many Pariſhes in England, as would have ſufficed to anſwer the ſaid Sum. Wherefore Writs were directed into all the Shires in England, that the King might be certified of all the Churches in every Shire, and of their Number: Upon which it was found; that the ſaid Sum of Fifty Thouſand Pounds, might not be raiſed in that Manner, as had been propoſed.

* Stow p. 268. M.S. vet. Ang. in Bib. C.C.C. Cantab. c. 234.

The mean while, among other things, becauſe all the High Offices of the Realm had been engroſſed in a manner by Men of the Church, [n] to the Diſheriſon of the Crown, the Lords and Commons petition'd, that for the future, Secular Men only might be Principal Officers of the King's Court and Houſhold, (the Chief of which Places were there named particularly, as that of the Chancellor, Treaſurer, Privy Seal, and the like) and none of the Clergy, they being enough taken up by their Spiritual Affairs, if they minded them according to their Duty: Saving unto the King his Prerogative freely to chooſe or remove Officers, provided they may be of the Laity only. To which Petition, althô the King's Anſwer was then, That he would do by Advice of his Council, yet we find, that in this very [o] Month of March, William of Wickham Biſhop of Wincheſter, and Lord Chancellor of England, did deliver up the Great Seal unto the King at Weſtminſter, who immediately deliver'd it to Sr. Robert Thorpe, One of the Juſtices of the Law. At the ſame time [p] Thomas Brentingham, alias Brantington, Biſhop of Exceſter, was alſo removed from being Lord Treaſurer, in whoſe Place Sr Richard Scroop of Boulton, a Baron of the Realm ſucceeded on the 27 of March. And then it paſſed into a Law, that for the future the Chancellor, Treaſurer, and Clerk [n] M.S. Rot. Par. Sr. Rob. Cottons Abridgm. ibid. & M.S. vet. Angl. in Bibl. C.C.C. Cantab. c. 234.

[o] Philipots Catal. Chancellors p. 43.

[p] Philipots Catal. Treaſurers p. 39. & Godwins Catal. Biſh. 408.

An. Dom. 1371. An. Regni Angliæ XLV. Franciæ XXXII.

of the Privy Seal, ſhould not be Spiritual Men; but that Secular Perſons only ſhould have thoſe Employments. After which thô ſometimes indeed the Clergy did attain the ſaid Dignities; yet it was much more ſeldom, and in proceſs of time, very rare or never.

This done, [q] Sr. Robert Thorpe, the New-Lord Chancellor declared, that for as much as Eaſter drew near, all the Petitions of the Commons could not be anſwer'd at that time: But that after the ſaid Feaſt, the King would take Care to anſwer them. And ſo the King thanked the Lords and Commons for their Travel and Aid, and gave them leave to depart.

[q] *M.S.Rot.Par. p.*107. §. 8. *Sr. Rob.Cotton's Abridgm.p.*111.

The next Seſſions was held at [r] Weſtminſter, in the Octaves of the Holy Trinity, then next after; at which time the Lord Chancellor declared unto the Lords and Commons there aſſembled, how their late Grant of 22 s. and 4[d]. out of every Pariſh, would not amount to 50000 l. becauſe by the Return into the Chancery, it appear'd, that there were not ſo many Pariſhes in the Realm. Whereupon the Lords and Commons, for the perfecting the foreſaid Sum, granted unto the King of every Pariſh-Church, aſſeſſed within the Realm, Five Pounds [s] Sixteen Shillings, compriſing therein the foreſaid Sum of Twenty Two Shillings and Four Pence; except the County of Cheſter, and all ſuch Lands of the Church, as had been amortized before the Twentieth of King Edward the Firſt. The Form of the Commiſſion for this Subſidy was read before the King; and the Collectors and Commiſſioners were appointed by the Knights of the ſeveral Counties; and there were ſet down the [t] Names of every Shire, with the Number of the Pariſh-Churches therein; and the Sum, to which the Groſs of the Payment of all the Pariſhes amounted: Which was in all 50181 l. 8 s. Whereof the Odd 181 l. 8 s. was deducted, becauſe thrô great Poverty the Pariſhes in Suffolk paid but Five Pounds Twelve Shillings and Seven Pence apiece; and thoſe in Devonſhire but Five Pounds Twelve Shillings and Ten Pence Farthing. And ſo the King was anſwer'd his full Summ of 50000 l. But Cheſhire, a County Palatinate, I know not for what Reaſon, came not to this Parliament, and ſo was not reckon'd among the other Counties, nor in the Tax: Thô in the City of Cheſter there were Ten Pariſh Churches, and in the Shire Eighty Seven more, beſides Chappels.

[r] Ita M.S. Rot. Parl. rectè; ſed Wincheſt. apud Sr. Rob. Cotton.

[s] Ità M.S. rectè, ut videtur; ſed Sr. Rob. Cotton legit 10 s.

[t] Vid. Stow p. 268. &c. ubi tamen error in numeris non facilè emendandus.

[u] M.S.Rot.Par. 45. Ed. 3. *n.*7, 11, 13. *p.*107. *Sr. Rob. Cotton p.*111, &c.

In this Parliament it was [u] agreed, that a Staple ſhould be held at Melcomb Regis in Dorſetſhire, after which the Petitions of the Commons not before anſwered, were now read and anſwer'd before the King, the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and the Commons; which done the King licenſed the Eſtates to depart, and the Parliament ended.

Petitions of the Commons with their Anſwers.

That Magna Charta and the Charter of the Foreſt may be obſerved in all Points; and alſo that every Petition now exhibited may be by ſome of the Lords conſidered. It pleaſeth the King. For that the Realm hath been of long time governed by Men of the Church, to the Diſheriſon of the Crown, the Lords and Commons required, that Laymen only may be Principal Officers of the Kings Courts and Houſhold, and that none of the Clergy be, ſaving (as before) unto the King his Free Election, &c. The King will therein do by Advice of his Council. That all Lands holden of the King in Chief may be let for Life without Licence. The King will do his Pleaſure. That there be no Fines for any Writs of Chancery. The Chancellor ſhall conſider the ſtate of the Perſon. That no Purveyance be made for the King but for ready Money, and that the King be ſerved by common Meaſure. The Statute made ſhall be obſerved. That no Eyre or Trailebaſton be uſed during the Wars. It pleaſeth the King. That in the Extracts of Green Wax mention may be made at whoſe Suits ſuch Amerciaments were loſt, in what Term, in what Plea, and between what Parties. Let the ſame be provided at the next Parliament. That Sheriffs be no further charged than they ſhall receive. The Party grieved upon Complaint ſhall have Remedy. That the Birth of any Man may be try'd as well of the Country where the Birth is alledged, as where the Writ is brought. The Law uſed herein ſhall ſtand. That no Mayor, Bailiff, or any Sergeants be Victuaſler, [x] Hoſtler or Taverner during their Offices, on pain of 20 l. There is in this Caſe a certain Law. That the Eaſterlings may give Security to treat the Engliſh Merchants in their Country, in ſuch manner as they are here. The ſame hath and ſhall be done as need ſhall require. That all Merchants may paſs over Wooll freely. The King will be adviſed. That ſuch Statutes, as reſtrain Engliſh Merchants from fetching Wines at Gaſcogne, may be utterly repealed. The Statutes heretofore made ſhall ſtand. That all Corporations may enjoy their Liberties, any Statute to the contrary notwithſtanding. Such as be grieved, upon Complaint ſhall be anſwer'd. The Commons affirm the Decay of the Navy to ariſe from three Cauſes; Firſt, becauſe ſeveral Mens Ships are ſtay'd for [x] i.e. Hoſteller, Diverſorii Dominus.

for the King long before they ſerve; whereby the Owners are compelled at their own Charges to find their Mariners to their undoing. Secondly, becauſe Merchants (the Nouriſhers of the Navy) are often reſtrained their Shipping, that Mariners are forced to ſeek out for other Trades to get a Livelihood. Thirdly, becauſe Maſters of the Kings Ships do take up Maſters of other Ships as good as themſelves, ſo that moſt of theſe Ships lie ſtill, and the Mariners are enforced to ſeek out for a new Livelihood: For all which they pray that Remedy may be had. The King will provide a Remedy. That all ſuch Merchants, as plead the Kings Pardon for Goods not Cuſtomed, may have the ſame allowed. The Grieved upon Complaint ſhall be heard. That every Man may freely make Fortreſſes, Towns and Walls [y] Karnelled and Embattled. The King will be adviſed. That ſuch as ſue forth Affiſes be not obliged to pay for the Juſtices Patent. The ſame ſhall be as formerly. That the Commiſſioners for the Kings Affairs may be allow'd their Charges of the Profit of their Seſſions. The King will provide therefore. That in Villenage alledged in the Plaintiff, as regarding a Mannor, the Iſſue may be where the Mannor is laid. The King will be adviſed. That no Man be put from his Poſſeſſion by an Inqueſt of Office before the Eſcheator, or other Juſtice by Commiſſion, untill the Right be try'd by Scire Facias. The Statute made heretofore ſhall ſtand. That no Sheriff or Eſcheator do remain above one Year. The Statute made ſhall be kept. That the Boys or Valets of France being here, ſhall be uſed as Servants or Bondmen. Let them ſtay till the next Parliament. That the Statutes, whereby Juſtices are not to defer doing Juſtice, for the Great or Privy Seal or other Commandment, and that no Man be put to anſwer, but by due Order of Law, may be kept. Such as are grieved ſhall be heard. That none of the Houſe of Commons be appointed for Collecting the Subſidy. The King will be adviſed. That ſuch as remain on the Sea-Coaſts by the Kings Command may have Protections with the Clauſe Volumus, &c. The ſame is to the apparent Loſs of the Commons. That ſuch as counterfeit any Mans Seal to any Deed, may remain in perpetual Priſon. The Statute made therefore ſhall ſtand. That all Scotch Money may be brought into the Kings Exchequer by a Day: And that the Statutes of the Prieſts by Aſſent of the Clergy may be obſerved. The Anſwer to both theſe Petitions cannot now be read from the Records.

AN. DOM. 1371. An. Regni Angliæ XLV. Franciæ XXXII.

[y] Vid. Skinner in voce Kernells, & Cornelle, &c.

IX. During this [z] Seſſion there came from Pope Gregory two Legates, the One having been Chancellor to the King of England, and the Other to the King of France, namely Simon Langham titulo S^ti Sixti, and John titulo Sanctorum Quatuor Coronatorum, Prieſts, Cardinals of the Apoſtolick See, who were ſent from his Holineſs with Letters beating Date VII. Idûs Martii Anno Pontific. I. to treat effectually with King Edward about the ſettling of Peace between the two Crowns of France and England. But althô in this caſe the Pope ſhew'd how willing he was to follow the pious Footſteps of his Predeceſſor; yet he alſo found no better effect than the other had. And ſo the Breach continued as wide as before.

[z] M.S. vet. Ang. in Bibl. C.C.C. Cantab. c. 234. Walſingh. hiſt. &c. Od. Rainal. ad hunc an. §. 1.

X. This Year King Edward [a] ſent the Lord Humphry Bohun, Earl of Hereford, Eſſex and Northampton, to treat and confer with John Duke of Bretagne, his Son in Law, about ſome important Matters. But becauſe the War was open, and the Seas infeſted with the Fleets of France and Spain, there went in this Voyage many Noble and Valiant Knights of the Kings Houſhold. The Chief of theſe was Prince Thomas of Woodſtock, King Edwards Youngeſt Son, then about ſixteen Years of Age, who ſhortly after married the Lady Eleanora, Daughter to the ſaid Earl of Hereford, Eſſex and Northampton, and in time became Conſtable of England, Earl of Buckingham and Duke of Glouceſter. The Admiral of the Fleet was the Lord Guy Brian, a moſt expert Commander both by Sea and Land, and one of the Honourable Order of the Garter. With him was joyned Sr. Richard Sturry, and many other Valiant Captains, with a choice Number of Archers for their Defence upon Occaſion. Nor was all this Precaution needleſs, thô they were neither encountred by the Fleet of France nor of Spain; for ſince the Heireſs of Flanders had been given away to Philip of Burgundy, there was no good Correſpondence between England and Flanders. The Flemiſh Fleet had been at Rochell, where they were laden with Wine, and now in their Return homewards they called at la Baye in Bretagne, where they took in vaſt Quantities of the beſt Salt, the Heer van John Peterſon being their Admiral. The Engliſh making up to the ſame Port, knew not at firſt who they were, but when they ſaw them prepare to entertain them as Enemies, they made haſt to receive them couragiouſly. So there began a fierce and terrible Medley which laſted long: For [b] the Flemings were more in Number, and better provided for a Battle, as thoſe who waited for ſuch a Buſineſs; thô they found here but an indifferent Mercat neither. This Naval Fight endured for three Hours together, in which time time many Gallant Actions were performed by the valiant Men on both ſides, and many wounded, hurt or ſlain: For they were faſtned to one another with Grapling-Irons, ſo that there was no other way but to conquer or die. At laſt the Victory fell to the Engliſh, the Heer van John Peterſon, the Flemiſh Admiral, being taken Priſoner, together with all that were left alive, the reſt being either drown'd or ſlain; not [c] a Man of them eſcaped one of theſe three Evils: For the Engliſh were more than uſually ſevere, when they had the full Maſtery; becauſe they had been ſo bold as [d] to begin the Aſſault. After the Fight, the Earl of Hereford adviſed Sr. Guy Brian the Admiral to make for England as then, and not expect his Return, till he had reinforced the Fleet: So he took land with the reſt of the Commiſſioners at la Baye, and went ſtraight to Breſt, where he found the Duke of Bretagne. But the Lord Guy Brian ſet ſail for England, returning with his Conqueſt and Priſoners, above 4000 of the Enemy being ſlain, and as many taken, with 25 Ships laden with Salt, and all the Wine they had taken in at Rochell.

[a] Froiſ. c. 292. f. 177. Walſing. hiſt. p. 181. & Aſhmole p. 666. M.S. Vet. Angl. in Bibl. C.C.C. Cantab. c. 235. Jacob. Meyer. Annal. Flandr. ad hunc ann. l. 13. p. 190.

[b] Froiſ. ibid.

An. Dom. 1371. An. Regni Angliæ XLV. Franciæ XXXII.

[c] Jacob. Meyer ibid.
[d] Walſing. hiſt. p. 182.

XI. The King of England was wonderfully pleaſed as this unexpected Succeſs of his Fleet, and ſo much the more, when he heard, how the Flemings had been the Aggreſſors, and gave the firſt Occaſion, and yet were ſo entirely defeated. The Heer van John Peterſon their Admiral was ſent to the Tower of London, and the other Flemings beſtow'd about in other places. And becauſe the King reſolved by any means to pull down the Pride of thoſe People, who had thus preſumed to begin a War againſt him, [e] he forthwith ſent out a Royal Fleet againſt the Flemings, giving ſtrict Command to his Admiral and Viceadmiral to make ſharp War upon all the Merchants of Flanders, and to block up their Ports, and conſtantly ply about the Sea called la Manche, or Pas de Calais, between Dover and Calais, ſo to intercept all their Commerce with France. When this was known to the Men of Gaunt, Bruges and Ipres, they had a Council together, wherein all things conſider'd, they concluded it moſt for their Intereſt, to remain at Peace with England, and not any longer to have the Diſpleaſure of King Edward, for the ſake of their Lord the Earl of Flanders, who was now again wholly for the French. Wherefore all the Good Towns of Flanders having agreed in this Reſolution, ſent Deputies ſufficiently inſtructed into England to treat for a Peace with the King and his Council: And theſe Deputies had ſuch Succeſs, that they return'd with a Conſummation of Peace with Flanders on certain Conditions, ſealed and agreed to on both Parts. Thus lightly can Vulgar Minds be moved to begin a War, and when they are beaten, as readily ſue for Peace.

[e] Froiſ. & Jac. Meyer. ibid.

XII. It may be remembred, that upon the Black-Prince's Return out of Spain, we obſerv'd, how James the Young King of Majorica by reaſon of ſickneſs was forced to tarry behind; and how ſhortly after he was taken Priſoner in his Chamber by the Baſtard Henry, upon his return to make new War againſt King Don Pedro. Now I ſuppoſe, it will not be amiſs to inform the Curious Reader, what further became of this Unfortunate Prince. And firſt Pope Urban being moved with his Calamity, [f] wrote in his Behalf to Don Henry, that he would reſtore to liberty the unhappy young King, who had ſo long languiſhed in the King of Aragon's Priſon before. And the Queen of Naples, his Lady, and the Marchioneſs his Siſter, when they were informed of his Miſchance, took it very heavily, and within a while [g] ſent certain diſcreet and ſage Gentlemen to treat with Don Henry, who was then King of Spain, about his Ranſom. So at laſt he was deliver'd for the Summ of an 100000 Franks, which the Ladies paid very punctually to King Henry's ſatisfaction.

[f] Dat. vi Kal. Januar. Ann. 6. Vid. Tom. 6. Ep. Secr. p. 32. & Odor. Rainald. ad an. 1367. §. 18.
[g] Froiſc. 294. Gallicè fol. 242.

When the King of Majorica had thus got his Liberty, he returned into Naples, where yet he lay not long idle; but having amaſſed together conſiderable Sums of Money, and gather'd many Valiant Captains and hired Souldiers about him, he began his March towards Navarre, with deſign to make War upon the King of Aragon, his Adverſary; to whom he could by no means be reconciled; for he had Murther'd the King, his Father, and had long kept him himſelf in Priſon; and unjuſtly and violently withheld from him his Crown and Heritage. Upon which account he had furniſh'd himſelf with Men of War from all Parts, as Engliſh, Gaſcogners, Italians, Almaines, Bretons, and ſome Troops of the Companions: Who in all amounted to 1200 Men of Arms; beſides Archers and Footmen. The Captains of the Companions were Sr. Gracian du Chaſtel, Sr. John de Maleſtroit, Silveſter Budes, and James Braye; beſides ſundry Lords and Gentlemen of Divers Countries, to all whom he gave great Wages and promiſed to ſatisfie them in each point. King James order'd his Affairs ſo well, that he had leave to bring this Army into the Realm of Navarre, and alſo to tarry there ſome few days to refreſh himſelf. From thence he entred into Aragon, and began gan to make heavy War againſt Don Pedro, King of that Realm, and ravaged the Country, and took little Fortreſſes, and Ranſom'd and ſlew Men, and won Cattle and Priſoners, and fill'd the plain Country with Deſolation. The King of Aragon, who very much doubted this War, being alarum'd at this ſudden Invaſion, ſent Men of Arms in all haſte to the Frontiers, under the Conduct of the Vicount of Roqueberton, and the Earl of Rodaiz; while himſelf was buſied in raiſing an Army to go againſt [h] his Nephew, the King of Majorica. But He, Poor Prince, even while thus the War was fair on his ſide, fell ſick again in the Valley of Soria; of which ſickneſs he died within few days, leaving the Injuries done unto his Father and himſelf unrevenged, and all the hopes of his Crown and Life together. It is likely, that upon his Delivery from his Spaniſh Priſon, when he found, how the Black-Prince, in whoſe Fortunate Valour he had repoſed a ſure hope of Succeſs, was himſelf ſeiſed with an Incurable Malady, he thereupon began by Degrees to entertain Melancholy thoughts; till now at laſt his Grief and Sickneſs together put an end to his troubleſome Life. However his Uncle, the Aragoneſe, had Peace thereby, and continued in that Condition ſeveral Years after. As for the Companions, who came with the King of Majorica to make War againſt him, they return'd back into France, where they thought to make their advantage either by owning the French, or Engliſh Intereſt. The reſt of the Auxiliaries went, as their Humor or Intereſt led them, to other Parts.

AN. DOM. 1371. An. Regni Angliæ XLV. Franciæ XXXII.

[h] Vid. Lit. Papales de hoc ad Regem Aragoniæ apud Odor. Rainal. ad an. 1363. §. 9.

XIII. All this [i] while John of Gaunt, Duke of Lancaſter, was in the City of Bourdeaux on the Garonne; where he kept a Court little inferior to that of the Prince, his Brother, having about him a Gallant Retinue of Barons, Knights, and Eſquires of England, and of Aquitaine. And as yet Fortune had not taken her leave of King Edward, as We may ſee by his late unexpected Victory over the Flemings: Thô ſeveral Lords of Poictou, Limoſin, and other Provinces, revolted daily to the French King, and immediately turn'd their Arms another way, making frequent Skirmiſhes and Rencounters with the Engliſh.

[i] Froiſ. c. 295: fol. 178. Gallicè fol. 243.

But now Divine Providence began to weaken the Engliſh Intereſt and Power, even by ſuch a Means, as all other Princes make uſe of to ſtrengthen theirs, viz. An Alliance by Marriage, which thô Glorious in ſhew, prov'd no more, but an Airy Title, and yet that brought forth in time many Expenſive Wars, and gave an Occaſion of much Bloodſhed, and loſs of Treaſure, principally in Spain and Portugal; but by accident alſo it produced the loſs of Rochelle, and conſequently of many more Places in France, as we ſhall now ſee. We ſpake [k] before of the Death of the Lady Blanch, Dutcheſs of Lancaſter, upon which the Duke, her Husband, being left a Widower; the Barons of Gaſcogne (now with the ſaid Duke at Bourdeaux) began to conſider, how Don Pedro, late King of Caſtille and Leon, had left behind him two Daughters, which he had by a Lawfull Bed. That theſe young Ladies were then at Aire a City of Gaſcogne, having been left as Pledges with the Prince of Wales for certain Sums of Money, due unto him from their Father. And when theſe Ladies heard firſt of the Murder of the King, their Father, they were extreamly Diſconſolate, and in ſuch Fear and trouble, that it was a Thouſand Pities, ſuch Innocent Virgins of Royal Blood ſhould ever be brought to ſuch Affliction by the Sins of their Father. Eſpecially, all Men lamented the Condition of the Eldeſt, who was now the True and Lawfull Heir to the Crown of Caſtille, by Right of Succeſſion, devolved unto her immediately upon the Death of her Father, King Don Pedro. All this Sr. Guiſchard D' Angle ſhew'd unto the Duke of Lancaſter, in the Preſence of the Earl of Cambridge, his Brother, ſaying, "My Lord, if it pleaſe your Royal Highneſs, You are yet to be diſpoſed of "in Marriage once more; and Sir, We can tell You of a Match not unfitting your "Birth; whereby You ſhall obtain the Title of a King in her Right, and your Chil- "dren by her ſhall be Heirs to a Crown; and ſhe likewiſe hath a younger Siſter, which "will make a good Wife for You, my Lord of Cambridge. They are both Ladies of "Incomparable Perfections both of Mind and Body; being the Daughters of Don Pe- "dro, late King of Caſtille and Leon. And ſurely it is no ſmall point of Charity to "ſuccour and comfort diſtreſſed Damſels, eſpecially they being Daughters to a King, "in ſuch a forlorn Condition, as Fortune hath now reduced them to. My Lord Duke, "We your Faithfull Servants would adviſe You to take unto Wife, the Lady Con- "ſtance, who is the Eldeſt of theſe Princeſſes: For We cannot tell where You can "Match more Honourably, or obtain Higher Dignity in ſo doing. Theſe Words and more to the like purpoſe, made ſuch an Impreſſion on the Duke's heart, who was now but One and Thirty Years of Age, and in the Higheſt Vigour of Nature, but eſpecially when both their Beauties were enlarged upon, he was ſo pleaſed, that he reſolv'd [k] Vid. l. 4. c. 6. §. 31. p. 782.

An. Dom. 1371. An. Regni Angliæ XLV. Franciæ XXXII.

solv'd forthwith to send for the two Ladies, Constance the Eldest, whom he had pitch'd upon, and Isabella the Youngest, whom his Younger Brother, the Earl of Cambridge, design'd to espouse. Four Lords with their Attendants went for them, and they managed their Business so well, that the Ladies consented to go along with them to Bourdeaux, when they should have got all things ready for their journey. Upon News of the time, the Duke of Lancaster and the Earl of Cambridge rode forth to meet them, and were both so extraordinarily pleased with their several Mistresses, that they immediately Married them in the next Village to them, called Rochefort, not far from Bourdeaux. The Marriage was solemnised with a Great and Royal Feast, and after that, the two Princely Bridegroomes brought their Ladies to Bourdeaux, where again there was Feasting and Joy, and a most Splendid Resolemnization of this Double Marriage, being attended with a great Number of Lords and Ladies, all who Caressed the Royal Brides, and presented them with many Rich Jewels, and other Gifts, to shew their Respect chiefly to the Duke.

But whatever all this might be in other Circumstances, it was only now in effect to denounce Mortal War against the King of Spain and his Heirs for ever; and thô indeed that King was an Usurper, yet he was at that time of Great Power; so that it seem'd no ways convenient to put him to Despair, in a juncture, when the King of England had his Hands full of War elsewhere. King Henry of Castille had early notice, how the Duke of Lancaster had Married the Eldest of his Neices, and the Earl of Cambridge the other: Wherefore by Advice of his Grandees, who were all strictly United to his Interest, he resolved forthwith to engage with the French King in a close and perpetual League Offensive and Defensive, thereby to support himself the better against the Power of England. The first Opportunity accordingly he dispatch'd away his Ambassadors to the Court of France; who were graciously received at Paris by the French King; and there between him and these Deputies, who had Procurations from King Henry, ready sealed (whereby they were fully Authorised to treat, and to proceed effectually in all Causes in the Name of their Master in any Parliament or Council whatsoever) there were accorded, ordained, and confirmed certain mutual Alliances and Confederations, Engrossed and solemnly sworn to on both Parties, them firmly to hold and maintain, nor by any means to infringe, or do any thing contrary thereto: But that the two Kings should for ever abide firmly in mutual Unity of Peace, Love, and Alliance; and then, and there, the French King sware upon the Word of a King, to aid and assist the King of Castille and his Heirs, in all his Business, and never to make any manner of Peace or Agreement with the King of England, unless he should be comprised in the same. And to this League Sr. Bertram of Clequin, the Constable gave much furtherance; for he as Dearly loved King Henry, as King Charles loved and believed him. So the Spanish Ambassadors return'd back to their Master, whom they found at his City of Leon in Spain; and he received extraordinary satisfaction from this his Alliance with France, and entertain'd less doubt of the English, than before. However, like a Wise Prince, he neglected no means of Establishing his own Affairs; but began to strengthen himself by Sea and Land; as One, that knew foreign Amities of small force, as well as of slow approach, where due Care is not taken at home. Nor indeed was all this his Caution wholly needless or vain: For soon after John of Gaunt, Duke of Lancaster, in Right of this his Lady, Eldest Daughter to Don Pedro, the last Lawfull King of Spain, took upon him the style of King of Castille and Leon; and [1] empaled the Arms of Castille and Leon with his Ducal Coat. Nor only so, but some Years after began a fierce War against the Bastard, Usurper of his Crown, which at last could no other ways be ended, but by a Match between the Sole Daughter and Heiress of John of Gaunt by this Spanish Princess, and Henry Grandson and Heir of the said Henry the Bastard; in whose Line and Posterity, thus legitimated, that Kingdom hath ever since remained.

[1] Archbishop Abbot's Description of the World p. 7. Vid. Mr Sandford's Geneal. Hist. p. 238. & p. 253.

XIV. Before this Solemn League was thus Established between France and Spain, the Pope, being alarum'd with the Wonderfull Success of the Turks against Christendom, used all his Endeavours to close the Breach between England and France, and especially to heal the exulcerated Mind of our King Edward. To which end he wrote to the Duke of Lancaster and the Earl of Cambridge, that they would joyn to move the King, their Father, to dispose himself towards a Peace with France; he also wrote to the King himself, the Form of his Letters [m] being very near the same, with those, which Pope Innocent VI wrote [n] formerly to the Black-Prince upon his Victory at Poictiers; wherefore we purposely omit them in this Place: But I shall here set down another Letter, which this Pope sent, a little before he wrote to the King, to that Renown-

[m] Extant apud Odor. Rainald. ad hunc ann. §. 3. ex Tom. 1. Ep. secr. p 112.

[n] Vid. Hujus Hist. Lib. 3. c. 1. §. 14. p. 517.

Renowned Warrier John Greilly Captal of Buſche, whom he knew to be very Gracious with King Edward, and of a truly Heroick Mind, thô moſt able for War, yet exorable, and apt to embrace an Honeſt Peace. °

AN. DOM. 1371. An. Regni Angliæ XLV. Franciæ XXXII.

"GREGORY the Biſhop, Servant of the Servants of God, to his moſt Beloved Son "in Chriſt, John Captal de Buſche, Greeting and Apoſtolick Benediction. The Eaſtern "Parts being expoſed to heavy Dangers, and in a manner obnoxious to utter Ruine, do "cry unto the Vicar of Chriſt, unto Chriſtian Princes and other Nobles. The Holy "Land alſo being violently poſſeſſed by the moſt impure Saracens, of a long while "baſely detained and polluted by their filthy Touch, doth cry unto them, doth o- "pen her Wounds unto them with ardent Deſire, expecting an healing Aſſiſtance from "them.

° Extant apud Odoric. Rainald. ad hunc an. §. 8.

"Certainly when late we underſtood thoſe things, [p] concerning the miſerable Condition "of the ſaid Parts, and heard alſo thoſe things, which our Beloved Sons the Ambaſſadours "of the whole City of Genoa, ſent unto Us particularly for this purpoſe, did declare unto "Us concerning this miſerable State of the ſaid Parts, We were inwardly wounded with "the Compunction of bitter Sorrow. For it was their Aſſertion, that the Turks and o- "ther Enemies of the Croſs of Chriſt, being gather'd together in a great Multitude, "do with heavy tempeſts of Wars afflict, waſte and conſume the ſaid Eaſtern Parts, ear- "neſtly affecting to aboliſh the Chriſtian Name and Worſhip in thoſe Parts; nay even "utterly to exterminate from thence the poor Remainders of Chriſtianity. And that "unleſs there be made in the next March Expedition a powerfull Reſiſtance to the "fury and malice of the ſaid Infidels, there will hardly be found in thoſe Parts to in- "voke the Name of Chriſt. And 'tis probably feared, nay 'tis by many held for certain, "that the foreſaid Turks and other Miſcreants are preparing to invade Sicily, and by "Conſequence other Countries of the Chriſtians. Wherefore the foreſaid Genoans "from an inward compaſſion of their Hearts, condoling with the ſad Tribulations of "the foreſaid Parts, and together with the Aid of other Faithfull Chriſtians, willing "to comfort them with the Remedy of a ſpeedy Aſſiſtance, neither ſparing their own "Goods nor Perſons, are now Rigging forth a mighty Fleet of Gallies to paſs the Seas "this next March-Expedition: But they do not think themſelves any ways able to re- "ſiſt in the Premiſes, unleſs they are aſſiſted by other Chriſtians. Oh! How unplea- "ſant is the Memory of theſe things to Us! O how bitter the Recollection, conſide- "ring theſe and other ſo great Dangers of the Faithfull! For while we revolve theſe "ſad things in our Mind, while with ſollicitous thoughts We meditate thereon, our Zeal "is kindled like a Fire; Tears being conceived ſpring forth as witneſſes of our Grief; "nor can we forbear ſighing, chiefly for this; that as to the Readineſs of haſting with "ſo great Succours the Meaſure of Poſſibility can no ways equal, as We would, the vaſt- "neſs of our Wiſhes, many Confuſions in the Parts on this ſide the Sea hindring; and "eſpecially the heavy Diſcord, which long ſince the [Grand] Diſturber of Peace, "and Enemy to Charity hath ſtirred up between our moſt Dear Sons Edward and Charles, "the Illuſtrious Kings of England and France. For the allaying whereof We have "deſtin'd to ſend unto the ſaid Kings two of our Reverend Brethren, Cardinals of "the Holy Roman Church, viz. Simon of the Title of St. Sixtus, and John of "the Title of the Four Crowned Saints, Prieſts-Cardinals, Nuntio's of the Apoſtolick "See.

[p] In hoc loco vo- culam quæ de- leo.

"Leſt therefore, ô moſt Beloved Son, the Eaſtern Parts do now irreparably run to "ruine, and fall irrevocably into the Hands of cruel Barbarians, We thought good to "have our Recourſe to your Piety, earneſtly entreating and deſiring you in the Lord "JESUS CHRIST; and alſo perſwading you in Order to the Remiſſion of your ſins, "that conſidering the Premiſes with ſuch pious Meditation as is fitting, you would in- "duce the ſaid King of England, and our Beloved Sons, John Duke of Lancaſter, and "Edmund, Earl of Cambridge, Sons of the ſaid King (to whom alſo We write to this very "purpoſe) to make a good and laſting Peace and Concord with the ſaid King of France, "and to provide for ſome Succour, as ſhall ſeem good to them in the ſaid next Expe- "dition; when for ſuch as ſhall be willing to paſs the Seas, a mighty Fleet will be e- "quipped by the ſaid Genoans: So that ſuch great Evils may ſoon be obviated, and "the ſaid Peace being made (which God grant, who is the Author of Peace) ſpeedy "Succour may be ſent unto the ſaid Eaſtern Parts. For We requeſt very many Princes "and Nobles for ſpeedy Succour, by writing unto them effectually for that Purpoſe. "And what ſhall ſeem good to your Magnificence in the Premiſes, forget not to write "back unto Us as ſoon as may be. Dat. apud Villam Novam Avenion. Diœceſ. Kal. Auguſt. An° Pontif. 1mo.

An. Dom. 1371. An. Regni Angliæ XLV. Franciæ XXXII.

Thus did his Holineſs uſe his utmoſt Diligence to oppoſe the Succeſs of the Infidels Arms, by healing the Breaches of Chriſtendom; but the French King being now more confident upon the late League with Spain, was leſs careſull to hearken to moderate Terms, and ſo this Deſign fell; and the War continued open as before.

XV. The [q] Duke of Lancaſter, and his Brother the Earl of Cambridge tarried at Bourdeaux with their New Ladies in great Jollity and Sporting till after Michaelmas; about which time the Duke reſolved to return into England, not only becauſe there was a Great Council to be held about Carrying on of the War, but alſo that he might more particularly inform the King his Father of the Affairs of Aquitain. But before his Departure, he ſummoned all the Loyal Barons of Guienne to meet him at Bourdeaux: Where he declared unto them, "How he deſign'd to go for England about certain Af-"fairs relating to their Advantage, and the Weal and Safety of all Aquitain; and that "by the next Summer at furtheſt he would be there again with them, if ſo it ſhould "pleaſe the King his Father. And all Men being highly ſatisfied with theſe Words, he appointed the Noble and Valiant Lord John de Greilly Captal of Buſche, his Deputy Governour of all Guienne, and with him he joyned as Aſſiſtants the Lord of Mucidan, and the Lord of Leſparre. In Poictou he ſet as Chief Governour the Lord Lewis of Harcourt, and the Lord of Partenay; and in Sainctogne the Lord Lewis of Argenton, and the Lord William of Montendre; and all his Seneſchals and other Officers he left in ſtatu quo priùs. Then there were nominated certain Repreſentatives for the Good Towns of Gaſcogne, Sainctogne and Poictou, who were to go along with the Duke of Lancaſter into England, the better to inform King Edward of the State and Condition of Aquitain; the Chief whereof were the Lord Guiſchard Dangle, the Lord of Pinant, and Sr. Emery of Tarſe. When they had all made themſelves ready for the Voyage, the Duke of Lancaſter went on Ship-bord with his Lady the Dutcheſs, and her Siſter, and his Brother the Earl, and a great Company of Men of Arms and Archers; ſo that the Fleet conſiſted of Threeſcore Good Veſſels, together with thoſe that bore their Proviſion and Neceſſaries. They had Wind at Will, and ſo landed with ſafety at Southampton, where having tarried two Days, they went all to Windſor to the King. He was glad to ſee his two Sons, the Duke and the Earl, and his Daughters the two Spaniſh Princeſſes, and alſo all the Lords and Knights Strangers. But in eſpecial manner he welcom'd Sr. Guiſchard Dangle, for he was a moſt Valiant and Loyal Baron, and one who had a Deep inſight into Men and Matters.

[q] Froiſ. c.296.

CHAPTER the NINTH.

The CONTENTS.

I. The Death of the Earl of Northampton, and the Lord Walter Manny. II. Some Overtures for a Peace, but both the Kings prepare for War. III. King Edward deſigns the Duke of Lancaſter to invade France by Calais and Picardy, and the Earl of Pembroke by Rochell and Poictou. IV. The Earl of Pembroke being come before Rochelle, has a ſharp Engagement with the Spaniſh Fleet; but on the ſecond Day is beaten and taken Priſoner with many more. V. Sr. James of Surgeres obtaining his liberty on eaſie Terms, makes Relation of the Fight to the Rochellers. The Spaniſh Fleet bear off with their Priſoners, and ſet ſail for Spain. The Captal of Buſche with a great Number of Men of Arms comes to Rochell all too late. VI. An Account of one Owen or Evan a Pretended Prince of Wales: He ſerves the French King againſt England. VII. He invades the Iſle of Garnſey, and overthrows the Governour thereof in Battle, and lays ſiege to Cornet Caſtle, but is call'd off by the French King and ſent into Spain. VIII. King Edward's Concern for the loſs of the Earl of Pembroke, and his Deſigns for the Security of Poictou, which are daſh'd by new Affairs from Bretagne. IX. Owen of Wales being in Spain inſults over the Captive Earl of Pembroke: The Engliſh Priſoners preſented to King Henry, who uſes them reſpectfully, but commits them to ſafe Cuſtody. X. The Captal of Buſche reinforces the Garriſon of Rochelle, and goes and clears the Country about Soubize of the Enemy. XI. The Conſtable of France takes Monmorillon, Chauvigney, Luſac and Moncontour. Poictiers much ſtrengthned by the

the Lord Thomas Percy and Sr. John Devereux. XII. The Frenchmen laying siege to St. Severe; the Captal of Busche, the Lord Thomas Percy and Sr. John Devereux prepare to raise the siege. XIII. The Constable takes the Place before their coming, and is invited to come and take Seisin of Poictiers, which he does with all speed. XIV. The English and Gascogners hereupon separate, the latter going to Thoüars, the former to Niort, which latter being shut against them is taken by Storm, and Garrison'd for England. XV. Owen of Wales brings a Fleet from Spain before Rochell; Soubize being besieged by the French is rescued by the Captal of Busche, but Owen of Wales coming suddenly upon him he himself is taken; and so Soubize follows his Fate. XVI. The French take St. Jean D'Angely, Angoulesme, Taillebourg and Saincte*s.* XVII. Rochell Castle obtain'd by stratagem: The Inhabitants submit to the French King on Composition. XVIII. Sr. Bertram of Clequin takes St. Benoist by Assault, and puts all within to the Sword: He takes Marans by Composition, and Surgeres he finds void: He takes Fontenay le Comté, and sits down before Thoüars, which obtains a Truce on promise to yield, if not rescued by such a Day by the King of England or one of his Sons in Person. The Captal of Busche brought Prisoner to Paris, his Loyalty to the English, for which he is confin'd for Life; his Praise and Nobility, and that he was Ancestor to Lewis XIV, the present King of France. XIX. King Edward upon News from Thoüars, resolves to go in Person to the Rescue, and the mean while calls his Parliament, and declares Richard of Bourdeaux, the Black-Prince's only Son, to have the Right of Succession after the Death of his Father and Grandfather, and so leaving the said Prince Richard his Lieutenant during his Absence, he sets Sail for Rochelle with a mighty Army. XX. The French King prepares to oppose, and the Loyal Lords of Gascogne to joyn, him with all their Strength. XXI. But the Wind continuing adverse for a Month, he is disappointed, and forced to return into England. XXII. The English and Gascogne Lords offer themselves to save Thoüars, but are not accepted, because the Conditions required the King or one of his Sons to be there in Person. XXIII. Thoüars yielded to the French: Mortagne besieged by the Lord Cliffon, who leaves the Siege upon the Approach of the English Succours. XXIV. The Duke of Bretagne enters Alliance with King Edward, and is made Earl of Richmond, John of Gaunt resigning that Earldom upon an Equivalent. XXV. Prince Edward surrenders into his Fathers Hands the Principality of Aquitain. The Death of the Earl of Stafford, of Sr. William Molineux, and of Sr. John Mandeville the Famous Traveller.

AN. DOM. 1372. An. Regni Angliæ XLVI. Franciæ XXXIII.

I. THIS being the first Inauspitious Year of our Great Edwards Reign, was begun with the Death of two Famous Peers of this Realm. For first [a] on the 16 of January there died the Valiant Lord Humphry Bohun Earl of Northampton, Hereford and Essex, and Constable of England; the Tenth of that Name, and the last Male of that Noble Family: For by the Lady Joan his Wife, Daughter to Richard Fitz-Alan Earl of Arundel, he left Issue only two Daughters his Heirs, the Lady Eleanor (who became the Wife of Thomas Plantagenet sirnamed of Woodstock, the Youngest Son of King Edward) and the Lady Mary, who was Wife to the Eldest Son of John of Gaunt Duke of Lancaster, called Henry of Bolingbroke, Earl of Darby, and afterwards by Usurpation King of England by the Name of Henry the IV. This Earl is also said in a certain [b] private Genealogy, which I have seen, to have left behind him another Daughter named Beatrix, which is there pretended to have been married to an Ancestor of that Family: But this is a gross Error and Mistake, and a Vanity worthy to be corrected (thô here I spare the Gentlemans Name) since it contradicts [c] all the Publique and Authentick Accounts, that are any where to be met with.

[a] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 186. & Mill's Catal. Honor. p. 1075.

[b] M.S. Penes Dn. Ed. D. Mil. de Sharsted in Cantio.

[c] Dugd. ibid. & Mills ibid. & Sandford Gen. Hist p. 227. &c.

About the same time, viz. on the 15 of January [d] being a Thursday, and the Day after the Feast of St. Hilary the Bishop and Confessor, there died in the City of London, that most Generous and Couragious Gentleman the Lord Walter Manny, Banneret, and Knight of the most Noble Order of the Garter, leaving behind him the Lady Anne his only Daughter and Heir, then married to the Lord John Hastings Earl of Pembroke, she being at that time but Seventeen Years of Age. At this Mans Death King Edward and all the Lords of England were mightily concerned, because of the extraordinary Judgment, Loyalty and Courage, that had always been found in him. He was therefore [e] buried with great Solemnity in his own Chappel of the Carthusians, now called the Charter-House in London, King Edward and all his Children, the Great Prelates of the Church, and the Brethren of the Order of the Garter, with many of the Chief Barons of the Realm honouring his Funeral Rites with their Presence. He died [f] seized of the Mannor of Dunstaple in Kent, of Dovercourt, Chesterford Magna, and Rumford in Essex, of Weston and Knebworth in Hertfordshire, of the Castle of Strigoile, and Mannor of Tudenham in the Marches of Wales, of the Mannors of North-Pidele in Worcestershire, of Bretteby in Darbyshire, of Oneston and Barton-Hanrede in Northamtonshire, of Scotteſdon in Shropshire, of Aspele, Alspathe, Thurlaston and Fleckenho in Warwickshire, of Cold-Overton, Dalby, Segrave, Sileby, Montsorrel, Groby, Witherdale, and the Hundred of Goscote in Leicestershire, of Watton and Stoneham in Suffolk, of Framlingham, Southfield, Lodden, the Moiety of the Mannor of Dikelburgh, and Half-Hundred of Ersham in Norfolk, and of a certain Mannor in Penne near Beaconsfield in Buckinghamshire. All which Possessions (except the Mannor of Dunstaple first mentioned) came to him in Right of the Lady Margaret his Wife, Daughter and Heir of Thomas Plantagenet sirnamed of Brotherton, Earl of Norfolk, and Uncle to King Edward the Third. Of her Body he gat (besides a Son unhappily drown'd in his Childhood) only one Daughter, namely the Lady Anne, married, as we said before, to the Earl of Pembroke. Whereupon all these Lands and others, as well in England as beyond the Seas in Hainalt, his Native Country (besides what King Edward [g] had given unto him in Calais and other Parts of France) fell now unto the said Earl of Pembroke in Right of his Wife the Lady Anne Manny aforesaid. Wherefore soon after the said Earl sent two of his Knights to make Seisin of the said Lands belonging unto him in Hainalt; and they did their Devoir so well with Duke Albret of Bavaria, who then Governed for his Distracted Brother William, that they attained their Purpose.

[d] Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 150. & Froiss. c. 296. Lit. Dom. DC.

[e] Sanford Gen. Hist. p. 207. & 208. Stow's Survey p. 478. Dugd. &c.

An. Dom. 1372. An. Regni Angliæ XLVI. Franciæ XXXIII.

[f] Dugd. 2 Vol. p.150.

[g] *Vid. hujus Hist. l.*2. *c.*6. §.20. *p.*411.

II. Now thô King [h] Edward design'd to enter France with two Fresh Armies this Year; yet upon the Pope's earnest request both by Letters and Messages, he first endeavour'd to lay hold of an Honourable Peace. To which end [i] Power of treating thereon was given to Simon Sudbury, alias Tibald Bishop of London, to the Lord Guy Brian and the Lord Roger Beauchamp Bannerets, to Sr. Arnold Savage, Knight, Dr. John Appleby Dean of London, and John de Branketre, Treasurer of York. And the [k] next day the King granted his Letters of safe Conduct for the Ambassadors of France to treat about that Affair. But because nothing as to Peace was now done, we shall proceed orderly to the War.

[h] *Ashmole's Garter p.*666.

[i] 19 Febr. *Rot. Franc.*46 Ed. 3. *m.*47.

[k] 20 Febr. ibid. m 48.

All this Winter [l] there were held in England by the King many Consultations, how to carry on the War the Summer following; for he design'd to send two Powerfull Armies, the One to act about the Parts of Aquitaine, and the other from Calais, to March thrô Picardy into France: And all the while he neglected not to Establish himself with Friends on every side, as well in Almaine, as the Marches of the Empire; where he purchas'd many good Knights and Esquires to his Service. And besides all this, in England he made such Wonderfull Preparations, that the like had hardly been seen before. But it seems, that God Almighty was willing to prepare this Glorious Monarch by some sensible Affliction for his final Dissolution; and that He might, by observing his own Weakness, fall to a due Consideration of Gods Power, and learn to despise the false Grandeur and Painted Glories of the World, he was pleased from this time to blast both his maturest Counsels, and his strongest Preparations; whereby, as a Father doth his Child, he weaned him from the Delights and Allurements of this Life, and directed him to seek after a better. For to say the Truth, We cannot till this time Date the Full Birth of King Edward's Misfortunes: But from henceforward We shall see his Great Web of Victories continually to unravel, and the strong spring of his Success to run backwards with much more speed, than ever it was wound up.

[l] Froiss. 296. *&c. & Gallicè f.*244.

King Charles [m] of France was perfectly informed of all King Edward's most secret Resolutions; whereupon he provided in all Places accordingly. And first, he mightily fortified all his Towns, Cities, and Castles in Picardy, and the Marches towards Flanders, supplying all his Garrisons with good Captains and Souldiers, and other necessaries. Nor did he forget his Concerns in Guienne; but besides the Armies on that side in Garrison, which were able to resist any Encounter, after his usual way of Artifice, he tamper'd secretly with the Chief Burgesses of Rochelle, and other Places; and sent also to his New Confederate the King of Spain, desiring him effectually to assist him with a strong Fleet the next Summer.

[m] Froiss. ibid.

III. On the other hand King Edward, when the Spring was enter'd, and he had magnificently solemnised the Feast of St. George, as was his constant Custom, at Windsor, having created Sr. Guischard Dangle Knight of the Garter, in the Room of Sr. Walter Manny deceased, return'd to London, and at his Royal Palace at Westminster, held a Great Council about the Affairs of his Realm. Here he ordain'd the Duke of Lancaster, ſter, as his Lieutenant, to invade France with a great Army by the Plains of Picardy; the Earl of Cambridge being to attend him. Then at the inſtant requeſt of the Lord Guiſchard Dangle, and all the Poictevin Lords, whom he and his fellows repreſented, he order'd the Earl of Pembroke, [n] as his Lieutenant in Aquitaine, to go into Poictou to preſerve that Country, and to make Powerfull War againſt the French on that ſide. For the Gaſcogners and Poictevins had earneſtly requeſted of the King, both by their Letters and the Mouth of Sr. Guiſchard Dangle; that if he could not ſpare ſome One of the Princes, his Sons, yet at leaſt he would ſend the Earl of Pembroke unto them, whom next to thoſe, they lov'd and honour'd moſt, as having had good Experience of his Extraordinary Courage and Conduct. Hereupon King Edward, before all his Barons and Knights then aſſembled in Council, ſaid unto the Earl of Pembroke, who thô now Husband to the Lord Manny's Daughter, had for his firſt Wife a Daughter of the Kings, "My Fair Son John, I here appoint You as my Lieutenant and Commander in Chief o-"ver all Aquitaine, to go into Poictou along with my Lord Guiſchard of Angouleſme, "and there to be Captain of all my Forces, as well of thoſe, whom I ſhall ſend with You, "as of ſuch, whom You ſhall find there ready to joyn You; who are no ſmall Number, "as I am credibly informed. The young Earl kneeling down, ſaid, "Sir, I heartily "thank your Majeſty for the great Honour You are pleaſed to confer upon me; thô I ſhould "be glad to be employ'd in your Majeſties Service, either there, or elſewhere, as One of the "meaneſt Officers of your Army.

AN. DOM. 1372. An. Regni Angliæ XLVI. Franciæ XXXIII.

[n] Rot. Vaſc. 46. Ed. 3. m. 4.

IV. Theſe Orders being thus ſettled, and due Care taken for all things to be ready againſt the time appointed, the Council brake up, and the King return'd to his Beloved Seat of Windſor: He took along with him among others, the Noble Poictevin Lord, Sr. Guiſchard Dangle, with whom he frequently ſpake of the Affairs of Poictou and Guienne. Sr. Guiſchard advis'd the King by no means to doubt the Loyalty of his Good Subjects there; "For Sir (ſaid he) as ſoon as my Lord of Pembroke ſhall but "once appear, he ſhall find a Conſiderable Army in the Field to joyn him: For We ſhall "make up to the Number of Four or Five Hundred Spears at leaſt, with their ſeveral "Retinues, all at Your Majeſties Service, to live and die for You; ſo they may have "their Wages duly paid them. Sr. Guiſchard! Sr. Guiſchard (reply'd the King) take "You no Care for Gold and Silver to maintain the War, when You are once come thither; "For, I thank God, I have enough, and I am well content to beſtow it on ſuch a Commo-"dity, as the Glory and Advantage of Me and my Kingdom. In ſuch [o] Diſcourſe the King paſt the time with Sr. Guiſchard Dangle, whom he entirely reſpected, and credited no leſs, as indeed he deſerved; till the Fleet was ready, and the Earl of Pembroke came thither to take his leave of the King, in order to his going on Board. The Captains that accompanied him, were the Lord Thomas Grandiſon, the Lord John Tuchet, Sr. Thomas of St. Albans, Sr. John Lawton, Sr. Simon Whitaker, Sr. John Curſon, Sr. Robert Beaufort, Sr. John Grimſton, all Knights of England, beſides the Poictevins, as the Lord Guiſchard Dangle, the Lord of Pinan, the Lord John of Mortagne, Sr. Emery of Tarſe, and others; but they had no great Company with them, becauſe Sr. Guiſchard Dangle had advis'd the King, not to exhauſt England of her Beſt Men at that time, when there were enough ready to fight for him in Poictou; provided he ſent over ſufficient for their Wages. All the Captains and their Men were order'd to repair to Southampton, where they were fain to tarry no leſs than fifteen days in expectance of a Wind; and then they went on Board with a good merry Gale, and ſet ſail for Poictou (as they ſaid) in the Name of God and St. George, but moſt certainly in an unlucky Hour. For King Charles of France being either inform'd of all this, or thrô his great Inſight into Matters, gueſſing how things would fall, or thrô doubt however of what might be, reſolv'd not to leave ſo Conſiderable an Entrance unguarded; and therefore, having obtain'd from his New-Confederate of Spain, a ſtrong Navy of Fourty Great Ships, and Thirteen Barks, well trim'd and furniſh'd with Men and Artillery, he order'd them to ply about Rochelle, either ſo to trap the Earl of Pembroke, whom he heard to deſign for that Port, or at leaſt to encourage thoſe Rochellers, who enclin'd to a Defection, and to frighten the others of the Engliſh ſide into a Revolt. The Admirals of this Fleet were Four Valiant Gentlemen of Spain, viz. Sennor Don Ambroſio di Baleguer; Don Cabeſſo di Vaccadent, Don Hernando Du Leon, and Don Rodrigo de Roſes; all who had layn at Anchor about Rochelle, and the Iſle of Re many days, expecting the return of the Poictevins with the Earl of Pembroke; for they were certainly informed, how they intended that way to come into Poictou.

[o] Froiſ. c. 297. ſed Gallicè fol. 244. b.

On the 22[d] day of June the Earl of Pembroke came up to the Port, and ſhould have taken Land happily enough with all his Company: But there he found this Fleet of

Spaniards

An. Dom. 1372. An. Regni Angliæ XLVI. Franciæ XXXIII.

Spaniards ready to impeach his Landing. He saw now it was too late to avoid them; wherefore he comforted his Men and began to arm, the Archers being placed to the best Advantage. But surely the Match was nothing equal, neither in Numbers of Men, nor bulk, or strength of Ships; to say nothing of the Artillery of the Spaniards among which [p] One places Canons, and other Fire-Arms. And indeed Froisard himself witnesses the same: For he tells us, how the Spanish Fleet being well-provided with a vast Number of Men of Arms, Brigands, Cross-bows, and Canons, great Barrs of Iron, and heavy plumets of Lead to fling down, first fetch'd a course, and tack'd about to get the Wind of the English, and so came upon them with full Sails in manner of an Half-Moon, making a High and horrible noise, which rebounding from the shoar ascended the Skies. The Earl of Pembroke, having Knighted several Young Esquires for their better Encouragement, received them warmly without the least sign of Fear, and that day in person performed most worthily, doing many notable Exploits with his own Hands, and exhorting his Men, by telling them these were the same Spaniards, over whom they had triumphed at Najara. Indeed all the Lords both of England and Poictou shew'd that day extraordinary Manhood in Offending and Defending, while the Spaniards from their High-built Carracks thundred down among them huge Barrs, massy Stones, and heavy Plumets of Lead, wherewith they extreamly frustrated the Valour of the English Knights, who were not permitted to cope with an equal Enemy; but lay thus obnoxious to every Disadvantage. However they and their Friends the Poictevins were all greedy of Honour, and so became well Content to Court her in the greatest Difficulties. And many of their Enemies, who saw and felt them, acknowledged afterwards, [q] that they doubted no Attempt whatsoever, but to Advance their Names, readily accepted the most hazardous offer; and that never any Men did fight more Valiantly, thô they were but a few in respect of the Spaniards, and had also both fewer and smaller Vessels. So that it was wonderfull, how they could subsist so long, had not those Generous thoughts within them, supply'd them with fresh Courage, and that Courage rendred them for a while Invincible. Insomuch [r] that it was thought, the Spaniards would have got but very little, or no Advantage over them, had they been in Ships no Higher, nor Stronger than theirs. For they held themselves so close together, and fought with such Resolution and Animosity, that none were able to abide their stroaks; but those, who were exceeding well arm'd and shielded from their Fury. But the rowling down of Stones, Lead, and Barrs of Iron afflicted them, and endammaged their Vessels, and hurt and wounded many good Knights and Esquires. The Citizens of Rochelle saw all this Engagement; but they made not the least Motion to come and help the Earl of Pembroke and his Men, who fought so obstinately with their Enemies at such mighty Disadvantage. They were indeed at that time under the subjection of England, but in their Hearts they wished small Success to any of that Nation. And thus much the Spaniards knew before by the private Intelligence they had; or else they durst not have engaged in the very Mouth of the Channel of Rochelle, which was a Place so Considerable. Thus the Rochellers left the English to their Fortune, not affording them any Succour; thô however they maintained themselves with Excessive Bravery, till Night coming on, the two Fleets with One Consent separated from each other, and cast Anchor: The English having lost this first day two Good Barges laden with Provision, together with all the Men within them.

That same Night Sr. John Harpedon, who was then Seneschal of Rochelle for King Edward, spake to John Chaudron the Mayor, and to the Chief Burgesses of the City, desiring them to take Arms, like good Loyal Friends, and to muster such a Number of the Commons of the City, and so to go on Board to the Assistance of the Noble Earl of Pembroke, and the rest of their Friends, who came thither only to Succour them, and had endured so much all that day in Valiantly resisting their Enemies. But these false-hearted Men, who had no mind to the Matter, but had kept secret Correspondence with the Enemy, began to excuse themselves, saying, "how it was as much, "as they could do to maintain the Town against the Spaniards, and how they were no "Men for Sea-fights; nor should be able to do any Service upon the Water, But if "the Battle was to have been on the Land, he should see, how gladly they would go "into the Field to serve their Lord the King of England. And more than this the Seneschal could not perswade them to, and to offer to force them was not seasonable in that juncture. And yet besides the Constant Garrison, there were at that time in the City the Lord Taniboton, Sr. James of Surgeres, and Sr. Maubron of Liniers, who also earnestly desired the Mayor and Burgesses to send assistance to the English in this their extremity: But when they saw, they could not prevail, they three together with Sr. John Harpedon, [p] Mezeray ad hunc ann. p. 89. & Angl. p. 391.

[q] Froiss. c. 298. &c.

[r] Froiss. ibid.

Harpedon, having left a ſufficient Garriſon in the Caſtle, went and arm'd themſelves, and all the reſt of their Men, ſuch as could be ſpared, and would partake with them (which yet was but an Inconſiderable Number) and ſo went on Board in Four Barks, and at the break of Day, when the Floud came, ſet forth and joyn'd the Earl of Pembroke, who thanked them heartily for their Good-Will. Theſe Knights told the Earl and Sr. Guiſchard Dangle, how the Rochellers had refuſed to come to his Aſſiſtance. "Well then, ſaid the Earl, We muſt Couragiouſly expect what Chance it ſhall pleaſe God "to allot Us: And I doubt not but one day We ſhall find a time to make theſe Rochel- "lers repent their unkind Dealing. On [t] that ſame Morning, when the Floud was now pretty High, the Spaniards weighed Anchor, making a great noiſe with Trumpets and Clarions, and ſet themſelves in good order, as they had been the Day before; verily believing, that the Engliſh were by this time quite tired out, and much impaired in their Numbers. Being all ready, they began to take Advantage of the Wind, and ſo to come upon the Engliſh, who were nothing equal to them in any thing, but Courage. However they and their Friends the Poictevins, who ſaw well what their Enemies did, prepared to receive them, and drew all boldly together, ſetting their Archers before them, and with that the Spaniards came upon them with full Sail, and the Battle began to wax hot on all Hands. Certainly never did Men endure more Difficulty in a Naval Fight, than the Engliſh did that Day; for tho the moſt part of them were grievouſly wounded and bruiſed with the fall of Barrs of Iron, and the flinging of Leaden Bullets, and the [t] ſhooting of Stones; yet for all that they fought, while they were able to ſtir, and by a Generous Importunity courted Victory (who firſt now began wholly to turn her back from King Edward) till Three of the Clock in the Afternoon: But the Fickle Goddeſs was coy unto them notwithſtanding. For now the Spaniards, finding the Engliſh mightily waſted, and that they themſelves had far more and ſtronger Veſſels, better furniſh'd with Men and Artillery, began to caſt their Grappling-Irons, and ſo faſtned themſelves to the Engliſh, that they could not get aſunder. To the Earl of Pembroke's Ship there were no leſs than Four Spaniards faſtned at one time, in all which there were many Choſen Men of Arms, under the Command of Don Cabeſſo di Vaccadent, and Don Hernando Du Leon, two of the Admirals. With the Earl of Pembroke at that time was the Lord Guiſchard Dangle, and Two and Twenty other Valiant Knights, beſides Eſquires and Archers, who fought as Gallantly as was poſſible, and held out a long while, notwithſtanding the Spaniards had ſuch Advantage of them many ways. But there Sr. Emery of Tarſe, a Valiant Knight of Gaſcogne, was ſlain by the Earl's ſide, and with him a Gallant Engliſh Gentleman, Sr. John Lawton, who was Knight for the Earl's Body; ſo that at laſt the Earl's Ship was Boarded, and then was done many a Noble Exploit; but there was no more room for Valour; the Spaniards ruſh'd in like a floud on all ſides: So that there the Earl himſelf was taken Priſoner, and all his Men either ſuffer'd the ſame Fate or a Worſe, Sr. Guiſchard Dangle, Sr. Robert Beaufort, Sr. John Curſon, and Sr. John Grimſton were taken alive. But the Lord John Tuchet, Sr. Simon Whitaker, Sr. John of Mortagne, Sr. Emery of Tarſe, and Sr. John Lawton were ſlain. Yet ſtill the Lord Thomas Grandiſon, and the Poictevins, as the Lord of Pinant, the Lord of Taniboton, Sr. James of Surgeres, Sr. Maubron of Linieres, and others fought on in other Ships: But finally they were all overmaſter'd by Number; ſo that none eſcaped being either taken or ſlain. And when the Lords and Knights were all conquer'd, they deſired the Spaniards to forbear ſhedding the Blood of their ſervants: For they ſaid, how they would pay a Ranſom for the Lives of them all.

AN. DOM. 1372. An. Regni Angliæ XLVI. Franciæ XXXIII.

[t] Froiſ. c. 299.

[t] Vid. Skinner's Etymol. Ling. Angl. in voce Gunſtones.

It was impoſſible for any Men to behave themſelves better, in thoſe Circumſtances, the Engliſh and Poictevins were in at that time, than they did: And the ſtouteſt Heart alive muſt yield to Neceſſity. But ſurely the Lord Guiſchard Dangle (tho he [u] was a moſt Valiant and Noble Knight, and after this, deſervedly made Earl of Huntington) did not adviſe King Edward well, when he told him, that now a ſmall Convoy would ſuffice; becauſe they had Friends enough beyond the Seas. And it muſt be attributed to ſome ſecret Ordinance of Providence; that ſo Wiſe a Prince was now perſwaded to commit ſo Fatal an Overſight. For a Victorious King, who is no longer ſo without Reputation, ought never to commit any conſiderable Adventure, meerly to the Will of Fortune (eſpecially in ſo doubtfull a juncture, as this was) ſince One Great Miſcarriage undoes all his former Deeds; as now it happen'd. Whereas had this Fleet been but well fitted out, they had infallibly Conquer'd; and thereby all France had been ſaved, and King Edward had dy'd as Victorious, as he liv'd: But it pleas'd God to order it otherwiſe.

[u] His Arms Or Bilette a Lion Rampant Blue. Vid. Tho. Mill's Catal. Honour p. 918. Aſhmole's Garter-Plates Plate 40. Sr. Will. Dugd. Baron. 2 Vol. p. 173.

Among

An. Dom. 1372. An. Regni Angliæ XLVI. Franciæ XXXIII.

Among other Losses, that Ship wherein lay all the Treasure, wherewith Sr. Guischard Dangle should have paid the Souldiers their Wages, was unhappily sunk and drown'd, and all within lost to the value in Money of 20000 l. Sterling, besides other things. But this was nothing comparable to the Los England received in the Death and Taking of so many Valiant and Noble Gentlemen. And yet the ill Consequences of this Day were far greater than the Los it self; and it was evident, that King Edward now received the greatest Blow that ever he had felt before: For by this Discomfiture he lost in a manner all that ever he had got in France, except Bayonne, Bourdeaux and Calais, as will appear in the Sequel of this History.

V. All that Day, which was the Three and Twentieth of June, and the Eve of St. John the Baptist, and the Night of that Day, and the next Day till Noon, the Spaniards lay still at Anchor before Rochelle, triumphing and making much joy at their hardly-obtained Victory. And it happen'd well for Sr. James of Surgeres, a Knight of Poictou, that they staid so long there: For he spake such fair Words to his Spanish Master, and in subtlety so obligingly humbled himself, that he was immediately acquitted only for paying 300 Franks, or Thirty Pounds Sterling. And so on St. Johns Day having his full Liberty, he came and din'd in the City of Rochell, and there made a particular Relation of all the Engagement, and who were kill'd, and who were taken Prisoners; at which heavy Tale the Burgesses that were present, seem'd to be very much concerned; but indeed they were glad of it: For naturally they never cared for the English Nation.

Now on the Feast of St. John about Noon, when the Tide was up, the Spaniards weighed Anchor, and hoised their Sails, and so left that Coast with a merry Noise of Trumpets and Clarions, their Masts and Foredecks being adorn'd with Long Streamers, and rich Penons and Standards, beaten with the Arms of Castille and Leon, which made a glorious Shew, as they waved about in the Wind.

Thus the Spaniards left the Haven of Rochell, with the Earl of Pembroke and the rest of the Prisoners in their Company, and set Sail for the Coasts of Galizia. A little after whose Departure, on that very Day of St. John Baptist, there came by Land to Rochell a great Number of Men of Arms, English and Gascogners, who as yet knew nothing of this Mischance of their Friends: They had only heard, that for certain the Spaniards lay before Rochell, with design as it should seem to block it up, and therefore they came thither now to preserve the Place. The Chief Captains of these Men were the Noble Lord John Greilly Captal of Busche, Sr. Beras du Launde, Sr. Peter of Landuras, the Soldiche of Estarrac, Sr. Bertram de France; and of Englishmen the Lord Thomas [x] Percy, the Lord Baldwin Freville, the Lord John Devereux, Sr. Richard Ponchardon, Sr. Walter Hewett, Sr. William Fermin and others. When these Lords and Knights with their Troops, which were to the Number of six hundred Men of Arms, were come to Rochell, the Citizens made them extream Welcome, as it should seem: For as then they durst not shew the Malice of their Minds. But when Sr. James of Surgeres had inform'd them of the Spaniards Victory by Sea, in which Engagement he himself had been taken and ransomed, these heavy Tidings all the Barons and Knights took mightily to Heart, and thought themselves the most unfortunate Men Living, that they had not come thither time enough to their Friends Assistance: But they were beyond measure displeased, that they had lost the Earl of Pembroke and Sr. Guischard Dangle. However there they tarried certain Days to consider how they should now proceed; and because the Seneschal of Rochell Sr. John Harpedon, was taken by the Spaniards, the Captal of Busche, as being one of the Duke of Lancasters Chief Deputies in those Parts, constituted Sr. John Devereux Seneschal of Rochellois, of which We shall speak hereafter.

[x] Vid. de his Baronibus Dug. Bar. ad eorum nomina.

VI. Many French Writers talk of one Owen or Evan (which they corruptly call Yvan) making him to be Son to a Prince of Wales, whom (say they) King Edward the Third put to Death, and gave the Principality to his Son Edward the Black-Prince. But those that are better acquainted with the Welch Story can tell, that Lhewellin ap Griffith, the last Prince of Wales of the British Blood, died without Issue, being slain at Buelht in the Days of King Edward the First, Grandfather to our Edward, in the Year of our Lord MCCLXXXII, which was full 90 Years before this time. That indeed [y] one Madoc of the Kindred of the said Lhewellin rebelled afterwards, but being taken was kept a perpetual Prisoner in the Tower, or as some say, submitted and was received into Favour, on Condition he would bring in another Rebel named Morgan, and put him into the King's Hands, which he did. That [z] Edward of Carnarvon, afterwards King Edward the Second, was by his Father stiled Prince of Wales, and received the Homage

[y] Lloyd's Hist. of Wales p. 374

[z] Lloyd ibid. p. 382. ex Rot. Turr.

Homage of ſeveral Lords and other Free-Holders of Wales: That his Son Edward of Windſor, in time King of England by the Name of Edward the Third, about the Sixteenth Year of his Fathers Reign, was in a Parliament holden at York created Prince of Wales and Duke of Aquitain; thô (as [a] we ſhew'd before) he is no where found to have uſed the former Title of the two. But this is moſt certain, that his Son the Black-Prince in the [b] Seventeenth Year of his Fathers Reign was created Prince of Wales, and that by this means Wales was ever after joyned to the Crown of England, even to this Day. From all which it appears, that this Owen (however otherwiſe commendable) was but a Counterfeit as to this Point: And yet it might be no ill Policy for the French Kings to entertain him, as being a Declared Enemy to the Engliſh. Having thus by a ſincere Antidote taken away the Venom of this Upſtart Prince's Pretenſions, I ſhall now proceed to ſhew what Uſe the French King made of him at this time in his Affairs. It was reported, that our King Edward the Third took one Edmund Prince of Wales (who was never elſe heard of) and beheaded him, that his young Son, this Owen forſooth, being by ſome means or other brought over into France, was nouriſhed up by King Philip of Valois, as a Child of Honour in his own Chamber: That he bare Arms for King John at the Battle of Poictiers, but that after the famous Peace at Bretigny he retired into Lombardy: Whence upon the Renewing of the War between the two Realms he came back again, and offer'd his ſervice to King Charles againſt the Engliſh. The King received him gladly, and advanced him in his Court, committing to his Charge certain Troops of Souldiers; particularly this Summer he gave him 4000 Men, and ſent him to ſea againſt England.

AN. DOM. 1372. An. Regni Angliæ XLVI. Franciæ XXXIII.

[a] Vid. hujus Hiſt. l. 1. c. 1. §. 2. p. 2

[b] Vid. hujus Hiſt. l. 1. c. 3. §. 5. p. 45. & l. 1. c. 21. §. 9. p. 273.

VII. Prince Owen (for ſo however We will take leave to call him) went on Board, having imbarked his Men at Harfleur in Normandy, and ſo ſet Sail taking his Courſe to the left hand for the Iſle of Garnſey, the Governour whereof for the King of England was Edmund Ros, a Valiant and Hardy Eſquire. When this Gentleman heard how the French had took land in the Iſle, and that Owen of Wales was their Leader, he made his Summons immediately thrô the Country, reſolving to march forth againſt him, and to give him Battle. The whole Iſle is not [c] above 36 Miles in Circuit: But however what with his own Men and the Inhabitants, he preſently raiſed 800 Fighting Men, and ſo came and preſented Battle to Owen of Wales. The Fight proved fierce and obſtinate on both ſides, but at laſt the Engliſhmen, who were far outnumbred by the Enemy, were diſcomfited and fled, leaving behind them 400 dead upon the Spot. Ros himſelf with the reſt made ſhift to retire into a ſtrong Fortreſs about two leagues from the place of Battle, called Cornet-Caſtle, which he had exceedingly fortified and victuall'd before, and there he reſolv'd to expect what God would pleaſe to ſend him. After this Victory Prince Owen rallied his Men together, and went directly and laid ſiege to the Caſtle of Cornet, whither he heard Edmund Ros the Captain was retreated. But the Place was ſo ſtrong, and as we ſhewed before ſo well provided, that it was not to be won without much time and labour; wherefore Owen ſat down before the Caſtle.

[c] Speeds Maps p. 94.

It was in the time of this Siege, that the late unhappy Adventure fell to the Earl of Pembroke, and the Lord Guiſchard Dangle and their Men in the Haven of Rochell, as we have related. At the News whereof the French King was extream glad, and aſſumed the greater Courage to purſue the Wars in Poictou and elſewhere. For now he thought, when the Good Towns and Cities of thoſe Parts did ſee the Engliſh once begin to decline a little, they would preſently put themſelves into his Hands. Wherefore he forthwith determin'd to ſend his Conſtable into Poictou, to the Parts of Saintogne and Rochellois eſpecially, there to make hot War both by Land and by Sea; for he ſaid, the Engliſh had never a Conſiderable Captain in thoſe Countries. And that he might be well furniſhed with a Navy, he ſent his Letters to Owen of Wales, who lay at that time before Cornet-Caſtle in the Iſle of Garnſey (of all which the King was informed, and how in all likelihood the Fortreſs was impregnable) commanding him on ſight of his Letters to break up his Siege and leave Garnſey, and forthwith to go on Board a ſwift Sailer, which the King had ſent him for the ſame purpoſe, and to make for Spain, and in his Name to require of King Henry, his Confederate, that he would lend him once more his Admiral and Men of War, with a Fleet of Barks and Gallies, to go and block up Rochell by Sea, while others held Siege thereto by Land. This Command of the French King's Owen reſolved forthwith to obey, and ſo having ſent his Men away by Sea to Harfleur, himſelf went on board that good Ship which the King had ſent him, and ſet Sail for Spain: Whereby the Iſle of Garnſey and Cornet-Caſtle were preſerved.

An. Dom. 1372. An. Regni Angliæ XLVI. Franciæ XXXIII.

VIII. King Edward was extreamly [d] displeased, when he heard, how the Fleet which he had sent into Poictou with the Earl of Pembroke, was overthrown in a Sea-fight by the Spaniards, and so many Brave Men, and all his Money lost: So that all those Parts were left in a manner defenceless. And indeed both the King and his Council, and all the Wise Men of the Realm concluded, that now all Poictou and Saintogne were in great likelihood to be lost by reason of that Mischance. Wherefore about this weighty Affair much Consultation was held, and for the present the King order'd the Earl of Salisbury to go into those Parts with 500 Men of Arms besides Archers. But whatever was now determin'd, there was no such Matter done: For the Affairs of Bretagne coming on presently after put this Business by, which thing King Edward repented when it was too late.

[d] Froiss. c. 301. &c.

IX. The mean while the Spaniards, who had taken the Earl of Pembroke, were detain'd on the Sea several Days by contrary Winds; but however at last they arrived without much loss at the Port of St. Andero in Biscay: Where they landed and entred the Town about Noon, bringing all their Prisoners into the Castle bound with Chains, after the Spanish manner of Treating their Captives: Which was far from that Courteous and more Human way of Entercourse held between the French, English and Scots of those Days. That same Day in the Afternoon arrived in the same Port Owen of Wales, who came, as we shew'd, from the French King, to request a Naval Assistance from King Henry of Spain. Being landed he went to the Castle, where Don Hernando du Leon, and Don Cabesso di Vaccadent had placed the Earl of Pembroke and the other Prisoners: So that as soon as he was conducted into his Chamber, he was informed, that in the same House there were several English Captives. Owen had a great mind to see these Men, and to know who they were, and so immediatly went forth into the Hall, and as he was going thither encountred the Earl of Pembroke, whom he knew very well; altho he had seen him but once in his Life before. Then he said to him by way of Taunt, "O Sir, Earl of Pembroke, are you then at last come into this Country to do "Homage unto me for such Lands, as you hold in the Principality of Wales, whereof I "am the True Heir: Altho your King hath taken it from me by bad Counsel and rash "Advice? The Earl of Pembroke was asham'd to see himself a Prisoner, and thus affronted in a strange Land, by a Man, of whom he had no knowledge; tho he spake to him in his own Language. So he only asked him briefly, "Pray Sir, who are you, "that give me these Words? Why Sir (said he) I am Owen Son to Edmund Prince of "Wales, whom your King of England put to Death wrongfully, and without title of Rea- "son, and hath disinherited me his Son and Heir. But I hope shortly to find a Remedy "for these Evils, by help of my Gracious Lord the King of France. And I give you now "to understand, that if ever I may find you in any place convenient to fight you, I shall "not fail to do it: But then and there I will prove upon your body the Wrong you have "done unto me: As also I shall prove upon the bodies of the Earl of [e] Hereford, and the "Lord Edward Spencer; if I may but once light on them: For by reason of your Fa- "thers and other bad Counsellors, my Lord my Father was betray'd, whereat I ought to "be displeased, and seek amends as soon as I can. At this there stept forth a Knight of the Earl of Pembroke's, named Sr. Thomas of St. Albans, and making haste to speak, said, "Sir Owen, if you will say and maintain, that my Lord the Earl of Pembroke "hath ever done any thing false or unknightly, or that he oweth or should owe any Ho- "mage to you or to any of your Antestors, cast down your Gage in that Quarrel, and you "shall soon find him, that will take it up. To this Owen reply'd scornfully; "Sir, you "are a Prisoner, I can have no Honour in Challenging you: For you are not at your own "Dispose, but at the Command of those, who have taken you. However when you shall "be at Liberty, we shall talk further about this Matter: For the Quarrel shall not end "thus. At which words certain Knights of Spain came between, and so parted them asunder.

[e] He now lately deceased: But this Owen might not know.

Soon after the Spanish Admirals led forth their English Prisoners toward the City of Burgos, to present them unto King Henry, who then held his Court there. He for his part hearing of their Coming, sent forth his Eldest Son Prince John, who was then stiled the Infant of Castille, with an honourable Retinue of Knights and Gentlemen to meet the Englishmen, and to do them Honour. For this King knew very well what belong'd to Generosity; and therefore he himself, when they were brought before him, shew'd them much Respect and Honour both in Word and Deed, as unto Men of High Birth and Merit: Tho however within a while after he sent them into several parts of his Realm to be put in safe Custody, as having been his Enemies.

X. Now let us see what became of the Business of Poictou, after this loss of the Earl Earl of Pembroke, and thoſe who came with him for the Defence of thoſe Parts. It may be remembred, how that preſently after the Spaniſh Fleet was gone from before Rochell, there came thither the Captal of Buſche with ſix hundred Men of Arms, who were all extreamly troubled, that they came too late to ſave their Friends. But however when they ſaw the Matter paſt Remedy, they fell to conſult, how they might prevent any further Miſchief thereabouts. They ſaw and knew, that the Rochellers were falſe at the Bottom; wherefore by general Conſent, the Captal who was the Chief, as being the Duke of Lancaſters Deputy, took order for the Security of the City, and made the Lord John Devereux Seneſchal of Rochell (in the place of Sr. John Harpedon, who had been taken by the Spaniards) with whom he left no leſs than 200 Men of Arms: For he knew, that as long as he was ſtrong enough in the Caſtle they durſt not rebell. Having thus ſettled Affairs here, he left Rochell, and marched away with 400 Spears toward Soubize; for he heard, how certain Troops of Bretons held ſeveral Churches and ſmall Fortreſſes thereabouts, which they had made Defenſible. But when the Captal and the Engliſh Lords came thither, they eaſily wan their Holds, drave them away, and rid the Marches clean of them.

AN. DOM. 1372. An. Regni Angliæ XLVI. Franciæ XXXIII.

XI. All this while [f] there kept the Field about the Frontiers of Anjou, Touraine, and Berry, Sr. Bertram of Clequin, Conſtable of France, the Duke of Berry, the Duke of Bourbon, the Earl of Alenſon, the Dauphin of Auvergne, the Lord Lewis of Sancerre, the Lord Oliver Cliſſon, the Lord Beaumont de la Val, the Vicount of Roüen, and the Lord of Beaumanoir, and a great many other Lords of France, with very conſiderable Forces, to the Number in all of 3000 Men of Arms. Theſe being all joyn'd with the Conſtable in Poictou, went, and laid Siege to Monmorillon ſtanding on the River Gartempe, which they wan by Aſſault, and put every Soul within to the Sword, and new-mann'd the Place with Frenchmen. Thence they proceeded to Chauvigny on the Vienne, where they lay two Days, and on the Third the Place was yielded up, and the Engliſh within taken to Mercy. Thence they went to the Town and Caſtle of Luſac, both which yielded without enduring One Aſſault. After that they came before Poictiers, the Chief City of that Province, before which they lay One Night among the Vines; ſo that the Engliſh within began to be mightily concerned, as expecting to be beſieged, but there was no ſuch Matter: For upon ſome occaſion or other, contrary Reſolutions were taken, and the next Morning the Duke of Berry went away from the Hoſt with a good Body, and the Conſtable lead the Reſidue of the Army toward Moncontour, and ſat down before it. The Captains within were John Creſwell and David Holcroft, and with them were ſixty Men of Arms of approved Valour; who had very much conſtrained the Marches of Anjou and Touraine, and other French Garriſons, their Neighbours: Wherefore the Conſtable vow'd not to ſtir thence, till he had the Place at his Devotion. But becauſe the Dikes were broad and deep, he cauſed the Bores of the Country to cut down Wood, and bring it thither, and ſo flinging it into the Ditches with ſtraw and earth upon it, they fill'd them in Four Days time, that they might paſs over, when they pleas'd. On the Fifth Day the Conſtable Commanded to the Aſſault, and there was one begun, which laſted with great Animoſity all that day; But the Garriſon were as buſie to Defend themſelves: So that by their extraordinary Manhood for that time, they kept themſelves from all Diſadvantage. On the Sixth Day the Conſtable renewed the Aſſault, and the mean while ſent over Pioneers with Pick-Axes and Mattocks in their hands; who being cover'd with a Teſtudo, made ſeveral ſmall Breaches in the Walls, to the great terrour of the Beſieged: But yet they fought as Valiantly, as was poſſible for Men to do; inſomuch that they remain'd that day alſo unconquer'd. But at Night John Creſwell and David Holcroft, began to conſider with themſelves the Danger they were in; that the Conſtable ſeem'd reſolv'd not to ſtir thence, till he had them at his Mercy; and that if they were taken by Force, nothing but Death was to be expected: Which Matters being duly weigh'd, they fell to a Treaty, proffring to deliver the Caſtle, their Lives and Goods ſaved. The Conſtable, who was not willing to haraſs his Men by another Aſſault, nor indeed to be too ſevere to thoſe of the Caſtle, becauſe he eſteem'd them as Valiant Men, yielded at laſt to let them go without any Bodily Hurt, on Condition, that they ſhould Carry nothing with them, except only Gold or Silver. And this Conceſſion being accepted, they left the Place, and were convey'd, as they had deſired, to Poictiers.

[f] Froiſ. c. 301, 302, &c. Gallicè fol. 247.

The Conſtable having thus obtained Moncontour, tarried there a while to refreſh his Men, and to repair the Fortifications of the Caſtle; during which ſpace he advis'd, whether he ſhould March next to Poictiers, or any other Place. But when it was known at Poictiers, that the Conſtable had taken the Caſtle of Moncontour, they were more doubtfull of themſelves, than before, and immediately diſpatch'd away Meſſengers to their Seneſchal the Lord Thomas Percy, who was then abroad in the Company of the Captal of Buſche. But before Sr. Thomas had received this Notice, Sr. John Devereux came to their Aid with 50 Spears of his Retinue: For hearing that the Conſtable of France had been once already before Poictiers to view the Place, whereby he gueſs'd, how he would ſhortly lay Siege thereto, eſpecially becauſe he knew, that Sr. Thomas Percy himſelf was not preſent, he left an Engliſh Eſquire, named Philip Manſell, for his Deputy and Captain in the Caſtle of Rochelle, and ſo went with the 50 Men of Arms aforeſaid to Poictiers; where he was very welcome, and received many thanks for his Good-will. But when News came to the Lord Thomas Percy, who was then with the Captal, how his Men at Poictiers deſired his ſpeedy return unto them, foraſmuch as they doubted a Siege, and that they requeſted him to come as ſtrong as he could, becauſe the Bretons and Frenchmen were a great Army, he ſhew'd the Matter to the Captal, requiring his Advice thereupon. The Captal having ſeriouſly debated the point, determin'd by no means to break his own former Deſign for that buſineſs; but he gave leave to Sr. Thomas to return to Poictiers, becauſe it was his particular Charge. And ſo Sr. Thomas went thither with 80 Spears, where he found Sr. John Devereux, and gave, and received many hearty Welcomes among his Friends.

An. Dom. 1372. An. Regni Angliæ XLVI. Franciæ XXXIII.

XII. All this was ſhew'd to the Conſtable, who was ſtill at Moncontour, namely, that Poictiers was mightily ſtrengthened by theſe New Acceſſions; beſides that before it was thought no eaſie Matter to attempt it. Wherefore he intended to give over his Deſign of making tryal there, and to go for the preſent, and joyn the Duke of Berry, who, having a conſiderable Army alſo, which he had gather'd out of Auvergne, Berry, Burgundy, and the Marches of Limoſin, had lately ſent for him to come and go along with him to lay Siege to St. Severe in Limoſin; which Fortreſs alſo belonged to Sr. John Devereux. He had ſet there however theſe Engliſh Captains under him, namely, Sr. William Percy Knight, Richard Gill, and Richard Horne Eſquires, with a Convenient Garriſon of luſty Souldiers, who had before this overrun the Country of Auvergne and Limoſin, and had done ſo much miſchief to the Frenchmen, that now the Duke of Berry was reſolved to call them to an account; and ſo ſent, as we ſhew'd, to the Conſtable, deſiring him, if he could conveniently, to come and joyn him for the purpoſe aforeſaid. And the Conſtable for the Reaſons above ſpecified, having taken Order for the ſafe-keeping of Moncontour, marched thence with all his Forces, and went to the Duke of Berry, who received him gladly.

The French Forces being thus joyn'd made up a very Conſiderable Hoſt, even to the Number of 4000 Knights and Men of Arms, beſides others: All who went now to reduce St. Severe, vowing not to riſe from before it, till they had their Deſign upon the Place. Sr. William Percy, who was a Valiant Engliſh Gentleman, and Chief Captain of the Place, put himſelf preſently in a poſture of Defence, and diſpatch'd away a Meſſenger to Sr. John Devereux, deſiring him to haſten to his Aſſiſtance; for the Duke of Berry, the Conſtable of France, the Dauphin of Auvergne, the Lord Cliſſon, and the Vicount of Roüen had beſieged his Fortreſs of St. Severe with 4000 Men of Arms. At this News Sr. John Devereux was very much dejected, and ſaid to the Lord Thomas Percy, who was there preſent at the Delivery thereof, "Sr. Thomas, you are Se-"neſchal of this Country of Poictou, and have great Authority and Power in your Hands: "Wherefore I heartily deſire you to aſſiſt me toward the Relieving of my Men; who "are all but loſt, if they have not timely Succour. Sir (reply'd Sr. Thomas) I ſhould "be very glad to do them and You this piece of ſervice, eſpecially ſince thereby I ſerve my "King and Country according to my Duty. And Sir, for your ſake I will go hence a-"long with You: But let us firſt go and ſpeak with my Lord, the Captal of Buſche, "who is not far hence, and let us endeavour to perſwade him to joyn Us with his For-ces, that ſo We may be the better able to raiſe the Siege, and upon occaſion to give the Frenchmen Battle. With that he committed the Cuſtody of Poictiers to a Valiant and Loyal Gentleman, at that time Mayor of the City, named Sr. John Reinolds, and himſelf rode forth with Sr. John Devereux, till they met with the Captal, who was riding in the Head of an Army toward St. John D. Angely. There they ſhew'd unto him, how the French had taken Monmorillon hard by Poictiers, and Moncontour alſo, and now lay with a great Army before St. Severe, a Caſtle belonging to Sr. John Devereux, wherein were Sr. William Percy, Richard Gill, and Richard Horne, all Captains too Good to be loſt. To theſe Words the Captal after ſome ſtudy, "And, Gen-"tlemen, what would You have Me to do? The Chief Knights about him anſwer'd, "Sir,

"Sir, We have often heard You ſay, that You deſire nothing more than to come to a Bat- AN. DOM.
"tle with theſe Frenchmen: And Sir, You can never find them more eaſily than now. 1372.
"Wherefore We are of the Mind, that You ſhould draw that way, having firſt ſent out An. Regni
"your Summons into Poictou and the Marches of Anjou; for then We ſhall be Men e- Angliæ
"nough to fight them, conſidering the Good-will We have to the Matter. By my Faith XLVI.
"(reply'd the Captal) I am content: And ſhortly by the Grace of God We ſhall give Franciæ
"them Battle. Then immediately he ſent forth his Letters to the Barons of Poictou XXXIII.
and Sainctogne, deſiring, and ſtrictly Commanding them to come unto him to a certain Place, by a time limited. His Letters were readily obey'd, and ſoon after there came to him, the Lord of Partenay, the Lord Lewis of Harcourt, the Lord Hugh de Vinon, and Sr. Thomas his Brother, the Lord Percival of Cologne, Sr. Emery of Rochechoüart, Sr. James of Surgeres, Sr. Geoffry Argentine, the Lord of Puiſſances, the Lord of Rouſſillon, the Lord of Campenac, Sr. John Dangle, [g] Son to the Lord Guiſchard Dangle, and Sr. William of Montendre, who being joyn'd with the Captal, amounted in all to 900 Spears, and 500 Archers on Horſeback, beſides Footmen.

[g] Mill's Catal. Hon. p. 919.

XIII. But by this time [h] News were brought into the French Camp, that lay before St. Severe, to Sr. Bertram of Clequin, and the other Lords there, how the Engliſh and Poictevins were marching thitherward, with intent to raiſe the Siege. When the Conſtable heard this, he reſolv'd to make quick Diſpatch there, that ſo, if poſſible, he might reduce the Place, before their Succour ſhould come: And ſo preſently he commanded all Men to Arms, and to begin an Aſſault worthy of their Name and Nation. There was not a Man there, that would, or durſt, diſobey him: So the French and Bretons with mutual Emulation went before the Fortreſs in good Order, well-armed and defended with ſhields, and then there began a moſt terrible Aſſault indeed, every Lord being preſent under his own Banner, giving Orders, and Encouraging his Men. Surely it was a great Beauty to behold this Brisk Contention on both ſides, the Engliſh Lions nodding ſeverely from the Tops of the Towers, and the French Banners waving orderly in the Field to the Number of Fourty Nine, beſides Penons and Streamers. The Conſtable himſelf was there with the Lord Lewis of Sancerre, encouraging their Men to the Aſſault; whereupon many Knights and Eſquires of ſeveral Nations adventur'd themſelves more boldly to encreaſe their Honour, and did Wonders in Arms: For ſome waded quite thrô the Ditches, which were full of Water, and ſo came to the Walls, not offering once to Retire for all the Arrows, Darts, and Stones, that came againſt them. And on the Dike ſtood the Dukes of Berry and Bourbon, the Earl of Alenſon, the Dauphin of Auvergne, and the other Great Lords, beholding and encouraging their Men; ſo that they valued not the Face of Death himſelf, when they found themſelves under the Eye of their Lords and Maſters. Sr. William Percy was not all this while ſlack in his own Defence; but was perſonally preſent in all the heat of the Action, ordering, and commanding, and encouraging his Men with his Sword waving about his Head. The Engliſh poured down upon their Enemies, Arrows, and Pots of quick Lime, and Stones, and Barrs of Iron plenty: So that the ſervice was exceeding hot on both ſides. However at laſt Sr. William and the two Eſquires of Honour, Captains of the Fortreſs, perceiving, how fiercely they were attacked, and that the French grew more reſolved and Deſperate againſt them every day, ſo that it was not poſſible for them to hold out long, eſpecially ſince they knew nothing of the Succour, that was now coming to them, nor of any Friend, that was near them within Ten Leagues; on theſe Conſiderations they made ſigns for a Parley, intending to treat with the Conſtable, while yet they might do it on tolerable Terms. Now Sr. Bertram of Clequin had received notice before this, that he ſhould hear of the Engliſh Succours that very Night: Whereupon he more readily enclin'd to this Treaty, and agreed to receive them to Mercy, and ſo took the Caſtle, and let the Garriſon go with their Lives and Armour only. This done, he forthwith drew out all his Army into the open Field, and ſet them in Battle Array, ready to fight, if need ſhould be, ſaying to his Men, "Meſſi-
"eures, Conſider well your buſineſs: For our Enemies are coming towards Us apace;
"and I think yet before Night We ſhall have Battle. Stand therefore all to your Guard "and be ready to play the Men for the Honour of France. Thus was Sr. Bertram diſpos'd: But the Engliſh made no great Haſte to the Battle, when they knew, that St. Severe was loſt beyond Recovery: Beſides other Matters came upon them, which filled both their Hands and Heads with buſineſs enough.

[h] Froiſ. c. 304.

For it is to be underſtood, that the Frenchmen in Poictiers had all along many unſteady Minds among them, who only ſought an opportunity to revolt from the Engliſh:

So

An. Dom. 1372. An. Regni Angliæ XLVI. Franciæ XXXIII.

So that now in the abſence of Sr. Thomas Percy their Seneſchal, there aroſe an high Diſſention in the City: For three Parts of the Town were for letting in the French, but Sr. John Reinolds the Mayor, and Part of the Communalty reſolved to remain true to the Engliſh. Yet the Chief of the Richeſt Burgeſſes and of the Clergy, whereof there was a great Number, would by all means have the Conſtable ſent for to come and take Poſſeſſion of the City; for they promiſed to open the Gates unto him: Of which News the Conſtable was glad, and communicated the matter to the Dukes of Berry and Bourbon. Then it was agreed, that the Conſtable ſhould go from the Army with 300 Spears, the beſt mounted in all the Hoſt; and ſo he went and rode the remainder of that Day and the Night following, taking little reſt, more than 30 Leagues, by another way than that which he knew the Engliſh kept. The next Morning he came to Poictiers, where he found the Gates open, and his Friends ready to receive him: Yet if he had tarried but an Hour longer or ſo, he had come too late. For Sr. John Reinolds the Mayor of Poictiers, and thoſe of his Party ſent in all haſte to the Captal and Sr. Thomas Percy, who ſent them immediatly an 100 Spears, and as many Archers on Horſeback, and theſe were then come within a league of the City when Sr. Bertram enter'd.

XIV. Upon News of the Loſs of this Conſiderable Garriſon of Poictiers, all the Lords, Knights and Eſquires of Gaſcogne, Poictou and England were mightily caſt down; eſpecially thoſe who were then aſſembled together in Poictou, to the number of 800 Spears, and 400 Archers on Horſeback: For two Hundred of their former Number were now gone to ſave the Place, thô as we ſhew'd, they came too late. Then they called a Council of War to adviſe, how to proceed among ſo many Dangers and Uncertainties: For they ſaw well they were in the midſt of their Enemies, and yet knew not whom to truſt to as their Friends. But the Loyal Barons and Knights of Poictou, when they ſaw the Engliſh Captains ſo ſuſpitious and jealous, as they might well be in thoſe Circumſtances, to raiſe up their Minds, and aſſure them the more, ſaid, "Certainly Gentlemen, our Friends and Companions in Arms, We are very ſorry to ſee how ill Matters go in theſe Parts, and that it is not in our power to help it. But ſurely Gentlemen, You may be Confident of this, that while We can hold our Swords in our Hands, and there is but one Caſtle or Fortreſs left in Poictou for us to retire to, we ſhall never deſert you, but remain True and Faithfull to our Natural Lord the King of England and to You. The Engliſh Captains that were there reply'd, "Gentlemen, next unto God Almighty, our chief Confidence is in You: And thô it be to die in the Quarrel, You ſhall find us True Companions. Thus there was a long Debate held in the Field, but at laſt it was concluded that the Poictevins ſhould march ſeparately one way, and the Engliſhmen another. And ſo the former, viz. the Lord of Partenay, the Lord of Thoüars, the Lord of Rouſſillon, the Lord Lewis of Harcourt, Sr. Emery of Rochechoüart, Sr. John Dangle, Sr. Percival of Cologne Captain of Thoüars, Sr. Reginald de Thoüars, Sr. William de Campenac, Sr. James of Surgeres, Sr. Hugh Monberon; all theſe with their Retinues went to the ſtrong City of Thoüars. But the Engliſh Lords and Captains, as the Lord Thomas Percy, Sr. Richard of Ponchardon, Sr. Thomas Fowkes, Sr. Matthew Gournay, Sr. Geoffry Argentine, Sr. Walter Hewett, Sr. John Vbrues, Sr. Dangouſes, John Creſwell, David Holcroft and others, took the way to Niort, where they thought to have found a ready Entrance. But when they came thither, they found the Gates ſhut againſt them, and the Bridge drawn up, and upon Demand, the Townſmen anſwerd, That they muſt not expect any Admittance there. This Affront the Engliſh could not endure, but upon Advice reſolved to aſſault the Place, and to make the Inhabitants an Example to all others.

Now thô the Men of Niort had Inconſtancy enough to imitate the Defection of others, yet they had not ſo much Wit as to conſider, that they were not able to defend themſelves againſt this Power of the Engliſh: For as yet they had no ſufficient Captain among them to direct them in caſe of Neceſſity, nor any that underſtood perfectly the Art of War. Wherefore after a ſhort Defence, wherein they ſhew'd more Animoſity than Skill, the Place was carried by Force, the Inhabitants for the moſt part put to the Sword, and the Town ſpoil'd and rob'd by the Engliſh. Though if they could but have held out till Night, in all likelihood they had eſcaped: For the Conſtable of France had ſent thither Sr. Tibauld du Pont, with 200 Choſen Men to reinforce them; but this Succour (as well as that which the Engliſh ſent to ſave Poictiers) came too late. And ſo at Niort the Engliſh made a ſtrong Garriſon, intending to lie ſtill till they heard more News.

[1] Froiſ. c. 304. XV. While the Engliſh [1] thus lay at Niort, and durſt not divide themſelves for doubt of of their Inconſtant Friends, and for fear of their prevailing Enemies; Owen the Titular Prince of Wales, had ſucceeded ſo well with Don Henry King of Spain, that he came now before Rochell with a ſtrong Fleet of Fourty tall Ships, Thirteen Barges, and Eight Galeons full of good Souldiers, under the Command of Don Rodrigo di Roſes Admiral of Spain, and therewith ſo block'd up the Haven, that none could paſs out or in without much Danger. The Rochellers ſeeing themſelves in no good Condition, and indeed being more willing to open to an Enemy, that fought for their Friends, than to continue under their Engliſh Friends, to whom in their Hearts they were Enemies, fell into ſecret Communication with Owen of Wales and the Admiral of Spain: With whom (having diſcover'd, that they only wanted the Caſtle to ſhew themſelves true Frenchmen) they agreed for a mutual Forbearance, the Spaniards to do no injury to the Rochellers, nor they to the Spaniards. But however the Navy lay ſtill thereabout at Anchor, and had their Spies abroad all over the Country of Poictou and Saintogne, to enquire and know what was done or reſolv'd in every Place. But as yet the Engliſh held the Caſtle of Rochelle, which commanded the Town, the Captain thereof for the Lord John Devereux, being Philip Manſel a Valiant and Loyal Eſquire of England, but a Man of no great Reach, as we ſhall obſerve by and by.

AN. DOM. 1372. An. Regni Angliæ XLVI. Franciæ XXXIII.

The mean while the Conſtable of France, being at Poictiers, which he had newly taken, ſent forth the Lord of Pons, and Tibauld du Pont with 300 Spears to the Caſtle of Soubize, a ſtrong Fortreſs in Saintogne, about five leagues from Rochell Southward toward Broüages, ſtanding on the Sea-ſide by the Mouth of Charente, where that River falls into the Sea. Within the Caſtle at that time was the Lady thereof with a ſmall Garriſon; wherefore upon the firſt apprehenſions of Danger, ſhe ſent an Eſquire to the Lord John Greilly, Captal of Buſche and Conſtable of Aquitain, who was then at St. John D' Angely, requeſting his timely Aid and Succour. The Captal immediatly upon this Meſſage ſent for Sr. Henry Haye Seneſchal of Angouleſme, Sr. William of Marvejols, Nephew to Raimund Lord of Marvejols, to the Lord Thomas Percy, and to Sr. John Creſſwell to come unto him, and they all came accordingly. Now of this Rendezvous, and of the Siege of Soubize Owen of Wales had ſecret Intelligence, as he lay with the Spaniſh Fleet before Rochell: Whereupon preſently he took 400 of the moſt ſelect Men of Arms, the ſureſt and beſt Arm'd of all his Company, and diſpoſing them into [k] thirteen Barges, he left the Admiral and the reſt of the Fleet before Rochelle, and ſo together with the Lord James of Monjoy and Morilett his Brother, row'd away ſecretly toward Soubize, and came on the other ſide right over againſt the Lord of Pons, as he held his Siege, who yet knew not that he had a friendly Ambuſh ſo near him, no more than the Captal of Buſche, who was now muſtering his Men at St. John D' Angely; for if he had had the leaſt Hint of any ſuch Matter, he would have taken with him more Men than he did. Whereas now he ſent back a great part of thoſe whom he had ſummon'd, and left another part of them in St. John D' Angely, and ſo rode toward Soubize with only 200 Spears and no more. Toward Night being come near to the French Leaguer and the Caſtle, he order'd his Men to alight a while beſide a little Wood to reſt themſelves and their Horſes; and that done he commanded them to horſe again, and cauſed his Banners and Penons to be diſplay'd, and ſo riding forth they ſuddenly daſh'd in amongſt the Frenchmen, crying their Cries, and beating down all before them. There was a great ſlaughter and Confuſion, and many a Frenchman grievouſly wounded; for they were taken at unawares. So there the Lord of Pons and Sr. Tibauld du Pont, with ſixty of the beſt of their Company were made Priſoners, and all the reſt either ſlain or put to Flight. But while ſome of the Captals Men follow'd the Chace, and others were buſied about the Spoil, or had unarm'd themſelves, as after a compleat Victory, there came an unexpected Miſchief upon them: For at that inſtant Owen of Wales, having paſſed the Charente with the Barges, came on with his 400 choſen Spears, there being a great number of Flambeaus, Torches, Firebrands and other Lights with him; for the Night was exceeding dark. Theſe freſh and luſty Men came ſuddenly upon the Captal and his Men, Engliſh and Gaſcogners, who thought they had finiſhed their Exploit, and were now ſcatter'd abroad, and buſied in the Chace or Spoil, or looking to their Priſoners: So that of meer neceſſity they were preſently beaten down, diſcomfited, ſlain and taken. Then there pricked forth an hardy Eſquire of Vermandois named Peter Daniel, and he among others adventur'd ſo near to the Captal, that at laſt he took him Priſoner by true Feat of Arms: And this Captal was the only Knight either of Gaſcogne or England, that the French King deſired to have in his Power, if not at his Service: For he was one of the moſt Conſiderable Barons of his Age for Perſonal Valour and Good Conduct. With him there were taken the Lord Thomas Percy, who was

[k] Ita Gallicè; Three verò Angl. edit.

An. Dom. 1372. An. Regni Angliæ XLVI. Franciæ XXXIII.

was Prisoner to a Welch Priest named David, Sr. Henry Haye, and Sr. Moubron of Lini-eres with others. Sr. Walter Hewett escaped with much difficulty; but Sr. Petiton of Coutras, Sr. William Ferenton and Carmil fled directly to the Town of Soubize, where by good Chance the Lady of the Place being present, she caused the Barriers to be open'd for them, so that they had timely Admittance with others, who fled along with them. But the next Day Owen of Wales brought thither all his Barges, and began a fierce Assault both by Land and Water, the Lord of Pons and Sr. Tibauld du Pont, whom he had rescued from the Captal, joyning with him. Yet for that Day the Besieged behaved themselves resolutely enough, and without any great Loss; but at Night both they and the Lady consider'd, that the Town was not strong enough to hold out any long space, and that all their Hopes of speedy Succour were quite cut off now, that the Captal and the Lord Percy were taken. Whereupon the Lady by advice of her Council, and with the Consent of all the Knights and Captains within, fell to a Treaty with Owen and the French Lords; The Effect whereof was, "That all the Men of War "within the Place might freely, and without any Dammage or Impeachment, go to Ni-"ort, Sainctes, Lusignan, or whither else they should please, and that the Lady of Sou-"bize should submit Her self and her Lands to the Obedience of the French King. All which was put in execution, the English and Gascogners were safely conveyed to what Places they desired, and the French took Possession of the Town, the Lady doing Homage, and swearing Fealty unto Owen in the Name of King Charles of France.

XVI. After this Succes of Soubize, Owen of Wales, Sr. James Monjoy and their Company went to their Barges again, and so return'd with the Captal and other their Prisoners to the Fleet before Rochell. But the Lord of Pons, Sr. Tibauld du Pont, and the other Bretons and French with them, made all the haste imaginable to ride forth with a fresh Company; such as the Constable of France had newly sent to joyn them, as the Vicount of Rohan, the Lords Clisson, Tournemine, Beaumanoir, and Rochefort, Sr. William of Bourdes, Sr. Oliver Manny, Sr. Reinald of Limosin, Geoffry Ricon, John de Lansonet, Alan de St. Pol, Carswell and other Captains, all who with their several Retinues went before St. John D' Angely, which they prepared to assault. But the Inhabitants seeing how fast the whole Country fell away, and despairing of any timely Succour, now their Chief Governour the Captal was taken Prisoner, yielded themselves, and voluntarily engag'd for the French Interest.

After this they presented themselves before Angoulesme, which submitted in the same manner, and this Example was followed by Taillebourg a Town of Sainctogne, from whence they went and lay before Sanctes, the Chief City of that Province, where they were two Days without any Succes: Because their Captain Sr. William Ferenton resolved, as he said, not so lightly to yield up so considerable a Place; but rather to stand stoutly to his Defence. But there was within the Bishop of that See, who was a perfect Frenchman, and made such Harangues to the Citizens, that they siezed the Captain, and threatned to kill him, unless he would agree to deliver the Town. So thrô fear he was obliged to consent, but on this Condition, that He and his Men might go away freely without any Harm or Impeachment. And thus was Sainctes also given to the French, and Sr. William Ferenton with his Men had safe Conduct to go to Bourdeaux.

XVII. Now the Spanish Fleet of which we spake, lay still at Anchor before the City of Rochell with Owen of Wales, and many Bretons and French among them. And all the while the Rochellers held under-hand Treaty with them; for they durst not openly declare their Minds, while the Castle remain'd in English Hands. Wherefore also they had hither to dissembled, till by little and little the main Strength of the English Garrison had left them, while they went to prevent the Loss of other Places. As particularly the Lord John Devereux had lately gone to reinforce the City of Poictiers with fifty Spears, having left the Castle of Rochell in the Custody of Philip Mansel an English Esquire, who had with him in Garrison about an hundred Men of Arms more.

Now at this time there was a Burgess, Mayor of the City, a subtle Man and a secret Enemy to the English, named John Chaudron, who having one day in a close Caball assembled the Chief of his Faction, said unto them, "My Friends, We see dayly, "how our Neighbours turn to the French side, and because We delay to do the same, I "fear, We shall be shortly so strictly beleaguer'd, as well by Land, as now by Water, that "We shall not tell which way to stir, nor dare to put our Heads out of the Town. Where-"fore in my Opinion 'twould be good to take heed betimes, and to consider, how We may "Reduce this Castle into our Power; which hath been so great a Curb unto Us hereto- "fore.

"fore. Surely at this time it is but meanly provided with Men; and honeſt Philip Man- AN. DOM.
"ſel the Captain has no great Wit to boaſt of. I intend therefore to tell him, how I 1372.
"have received a Command from the King of England, to cauſe all the Inhabitants of An. Regni
"the City, that bear Arms, to appear in the Field, and be exerciſed at the time and place, Angliæ
"as I ſhall tell him: That I may take their Muſters, and view their Number, and the XLVI.
"Goodneſs of their Horſes and Armour; as alſo of thoſe within the Caſtle, and ſo ſend Franciæ
"word thereof unto the King. And hereupon I ſhall Command him in the King's Name XXXIII.
"to come forth of the Caſtle, and to make his Muſters together with Us; which I be- "lieve, he will not ſcruple to do, as I ſhall handle him. And if ſo, We will be provided
"of an Ambuſh of 200 Men of Arms, lying among the Old Walls without the Caſtle;
"which Ambuſh ſtepping in between him and the Bridge ſhall cut off his Return. The "mean while others ſhall be ready to compleat the Deſign, and ſo We ſhall take them at
"our pleaſure, and be Maſters both of them, and alſo of the Caſtle. This project was agreed on, and kept ſecret, till one day the Mayor, who was Author of the Invention, invited Philip Manſell to come and dine with him, and ſeveral Burgeſſes alſo, moſt whereof were then of the Engliſh part, but they knew nothing of the Plot.

There was a great and Splendid Dinner indeed, and many things relating to the King of England's Affairs were at that time diſcuſſed, and the Mayor acted his part very well. But after Dinner he produced a Letter with King Edward's Broad Seal appendant to it, the better to perſwade Philip Manſell to believe him; whom he knew to be ignorant of Letters. And Philip for his part ſaw, and knew the Seal very well, but he could not read a Word, whatever he pretended by looking on. In ſhort the Mayor took the Letter and read it unto him, as he pleaſed, otherwiſe than it was written, the unlearned Captain looking over him all the while, as if he read along with him, thereby to conceal his Ignorance, which yet the Cunning Mayor knew well enough. Then he ſaid to Eſquire Manſell, "Captain, by the Tenor of this writing You ſee and hear, how our "Sovereign Lord the King hath Commanded Me, and alſo You by Me, to make our "joynt Muſters. Wherefore in the King's Name I now require You to come forth to "morrow Morning, and take a View of your Men; as I likewiſe according to my Duty "ſhall do. The Captain, who ſuſpected no harm in the leaſt, ſaid, he would be ready to do his Duty, and ſo took his leave, and return'd to the Caſtle.

That ſame Night before Day the Mayor took 200 Men of Arms, and laid them in an Ambuſh near the Caſtle among the Ruines of old Walls, that were without, and at ſuch an Hour he cauſed the Watch-Bell to be ſounded, and all the Inhabitants to be Armed. On the other hand Philip Manſell, having Armed Eighty Choſen Men, marched forth of the Caſtle in good Order at the Head of them, toward the Field, where the Rendezvous was to be. But when he was once paſs'd the old Walls, the Ambuſh ruſh'd forth, and placed themſelves between him and the Bridge; and then he ſaw, he was betray'd. However he fac'd about Couragiouſly upon them, hoping by force to recover an entrance into the Caſtle again. But then came the Mayor upon his Reer with the Commons of the City to the Number of 2000 Fighting Men: So that the Engliſh, being thus unequally match'd and aſſailed from before and behind, were compelled to yield only for ſafeguard of their Lives: They could obtain nothing further. But for all that the Caſtle was not yet won: For Eſquire Manſell had left behind 20 Valiant Men ſtill in the Place; beſides their ſervants, Valets, and Officers of the Caſtle, who ſeeing their Captain thus intercepted, had by this time drawn up the Bridge again, and ſhut the Gates. Whereupon the Mayor being exceedingly enflam'd with anger, that ſo well form'd a Plot ſhould thus be ſpoil'd, came to Philip the Captain and the reſt, whom he had taken. "Hark Ye, Gentlemen, and mind well "what I ſay unto You; be aſſured of this, that unleſs You cauſe your fellows yonder with-
"in the Caſtle to yield up the Place immediately, all your Heads ſhall be ſtricken off here "at the Bridge Foot: I'll not ſpare a Man of You. The Engliſh being thus ſtreightned, promiſed to do their beſt, and went near, and ſpake to their Fellows in the Caſtle; and ſo by this means however they gain'd better Conditions; thoſe within capitulating, That both they and all their Fellows without ſhould be put into a good Ship with all their Goods and Moneys, and ſafely convey'd by the Mayor and Burgeſſes of Rochelle to the Port of Bourdeaux. Thus the Impregnable Caſtle of Rochelle was in the Hands of the City, and the Engliſh were ſent away, as they deſired.

When the Dukes of Berry, Bourbon, and Burgundy, the Marſhal of Sancerre, the Vicount of Rohan, the Lords of Pons, Sully, Cliſſon, and Beaumanoir, with the other Barons of France, heard this agreeable News; they went from Berry and the Marches of Limoſin, deſigning for Poictiers, where at that time the Conſtable of France was.

An. Dom. 1372. An. Regni Angliæ XLVI. Franciæ XXXIII.

In their way thitherward they took St. Maixent, a Town in Poictou, which yielded upon their first approach; but the Castle, that scorn'd to follow so poor an Example, was not taken without Assault: Wherefore every Man within was slain. And before this they had taken the Castle of Aunay, as also of Brion and Mesle, and several other Fortresses, which they found in their way. Being thus come to Poictiers, they sent Messengers to treat with the Burgesses of Rochelle. But these Men refus'd to open their Gates, or to admit any of the French Lords, their Friends: For they said, they would no more commit their Liberty to the Keeping of any other without good Caution. But said they, "If it will please the Duke of Berry, and the other Lords with him to "grant Us their safe-Conduct for six days, to come to Poictiers, and to go at our plea- "sure, then We will wholly unbosome our selves as to that Matter. In short a safe-Conduct was granted, and several of the Prime Burgesses of Rochelle went to Poictiers, where they told the French Lords, that they were all well content to submit to the Government of King Charles, on Condition that they might have leave to demolish their Castle, and be secured never to have another built among them. And this being once granted, the City and Country of Rochelle and Rochellois should be for ever thenceforth under the Resort and Demaine of the French King, never after to be alienated by any Marriage, Alliance, or Article of Peace, that may happen to the Realm of France, or by any other Condition whatsoever. Besides all which they required to have a Mint set up among them to Coyne Florens, and Money both [1] Black and White, of the same Form and Alloy with that in Paris. To these strange Conditions thus unusually proposed by subjects, the Lords of France durst not agree, but referr'd them to the King, their Master, and gave them their safe-Conduct to go to the King about that Matter. So Twelve Rochellers went to Paris to the King, who seeing it no time now to kindle Domestick Heats; but that it was necessary even by the loss of a Part, if need were, to preserve the whole, and being by all means desirous to Unite and Incorporate together the many Divided Cantons and scatter'd Limbs of his Kingdom, not only readily granted their Desire, but also feasted them greatly, and gave unto them many Rich and Princely Gifts, besides his Charter of Pardon, for presuming to Capitulate with their Prince. Thus the Rochellers return'd with their Charters of Liberty and Amnesty for all past, which had been confirmed in the Chamber of the Peers of France, and sealed by the King himself. Hereupon immediately they began to Demolish their Castle, which had been one of the strongest in the World, and rased it down to the Ground, and when once they had secur'd themselves of that Fear, they sent to Poictiers to the Lords of France, desiring them now to come to Rochelle; for they were ready to open their Gates, and to receive them. Then the Constable went thither with 200 Men of Arms in his Company; and the Rochellers received him with great joy and Triumph, and there did unto him Fealty and Homage, as unto the French King; from whom He had a Procuration for that purpose. For King Charles had established him in those Parts, as his Lieutenant, representing his own Person on such Occasions.

[1] Black i.e. Copper-unsilver'd. [m] White, i.e. Copper silver'd-over.

[n] Froiss. c. 305. fol. 185. sed Gallicè fol. 252. b.

XVIII. When [n] Sr. Bertram of Clequin, Constable of France, had been Four Days at Rochelle, setting things in Order, and appointing the Burgesses how to behave themselves for the future, he return'd to Poictiers to the other Dukes and Lords of France; with whom being joyn'd, he began with 3000 Spears in his Company to March from Poictiers: For he design'd to recover those Castles and Fortresses in Rochellois, and about the Marches, which were still in English hands. And first they came before St. Benoist, a Fair Castle and a strong; which notwithstanding they vow'd to reduce, before their Departure. Within the Place were two Valiant Captains, set there by the Captal of Busche, the One a Knight of Naples, called Sr. James, [o] without any Sirname, and the Other an Esquire of the County of Foix, named William du Pons. The French made here many fierce Assaults, but were received as fiercely by the Besieged; so that it was likely the Siege would prove of some Continuance. Now there was a Fortress in those Parts, called Surgeres, wherein was an English Garrison, set there also by the Captal, for whom they kept it. These Men said one Evening, how they would go and awake the French Army before St. Benoist; and accordingly at a time appointed there rode forth Fourty Spears well Mounted, who in their way joyning with a Party belonging to Marans, a Neighbour-Friendly-Garrison, came suddenly to the French Camp, and dash'd into the very Quarters of the Constable, where they hurt divers of his Men, and slew an Esquire of his Body, and took certain Prisoners, with some other Mischief in other Parts of that Quarter; but the Constable himself they found not, he was then in the Duke of Berry's Tent at Council. At the Report of this brisk Camisade the whole Army began to stir; for the Alarm was great and general: But the English, [o] Sans Surnom.

Engliſh, who had already done, what could be expected, without any Loſs to themſelves, return'd again timely enough, and came to their own ſeveral Fortreſſes, leaving the Conſtable ſo vext at this Affront, that he ſware never to ſtir from before St. Benoiſt, till he had both it and all within at his Mercy; not one of whom he was reſolv'd to ſpare. So the next Morning he commanded all to their Arms, and to prepare all manner of Machines and Engines for a general Aſſault, and then he attacqued the Beſieged with ſuch Fury, that the like had ſeldom been ſeen. For the Men of Arms themſelves, eſpecially the Bretons, waded thrô the Ditches, without favouring themſelves, and ſo came to the foot of the Walls, with ſhields over their heads, and dug at the Walls with Pick-axes and Mattocks, that it was wonderfull to behold their Eagerneſs. Till at laſt, thô not without much loſs, as may well be gueſſed, they got down a great Pane of the Wall, whereat they eaſily made their Entrance, and put all within to the Sword without Exception.

AN. DOM. 1372. An. Regni Angliæ XLVI. Franciæ XXXIII.

Then the Conſtable having repaired the Breach, and what elſe was amiſs, and ſet therein a ſtrong Garriſon of Frenchmen, reſolved to attack the Caſtle of Marans; but the Engliſh there deſpairing to maintain a place ſo much leſs defenſible than St. Benoiſt, capitulated with him, and yielded on Condition to ſave their Lives and Goods, which was accepted. From thence he went to Surgeres, reſolving to make that Garriſon pay dearly for their late Attempt upon him a few Nights before; but the Engliſh had left the Place void beforehand, not daring to expect his Arrival. Having ſet a good Garriſon here, he went back to Fontenay [p] le Comté, a Caſtle belonging to the Lady of Sr. John Harpedon, an Engliſh Knight, who was then a Priſoner in Spain: Here he laid Siege both to Town and Caſtle, and made many fierce Aſſaults, till at laſt it was agreed by Compoſition, that the Lady her ſelf and as many as would remain true to King Edward, ſhould go to Thoüars, their Lives, Honours and Goods ſaved: And accordingly thither they were ſafely convey'd by the Conſtable's Order, the reſt turning to the French ſide; and ſo the Conſtable took Poſſeſſion both of Town and Caſtle, and made a new Garriſon there.

[p] Ità Gallicè, ſed in Angl. le Comté omittitur.

And now the Conſtable reſolved to go and lay his ſiege to Thoüars it ſelf, to which Place the greater Part of thoſe Barons that held ſtill for England were retired; as the Vicount of Thoüars, the Lords of Partenay, Puiſſances and Cors, the Lord Lewis of Harcourt, Sr. William of Campenac, Sr. Geoffry Argentine, Sr. James of Surgeres, and Sr. Percival of Cologne, with many more. Thither they went, and began immediately to inveſt the Place, having brought from Poictiers and Rochelle ſeveral Engines, which they play'd Night and Day againſt Thoüars, to the great Trouble of the Engliſh and Gaſcogne Lords: Till at laſt, with deſign to put off the Day of Calamity as long as might be, and in hopes of a good Succour by that time, they agreed with the Frenchmen for a mutual Reſpit and Truce for themſelves and their Lands, till the Feaſt of St. Michael then next enſuing; "They in the mean time to ſend to the King of England their "Lord, to certifie him of their Condition; but ſo, as that if they ſhould not be ſuccoured "either by Him, or one of his Sons in Perſon, within the ſaid time, then they to "yield both Themſelves and Lands to the Obedience of the French King. This Treaty being agreed to by the Conſtable and other Lords of France, they return'd for that time to Paris, whither the Captal of Buſche was brought as Priſoner, and put under ſafe Cuſtody in a Tower of the Temple. The French King being extreamly pleaſed at his Taking, rewarded the Eſquire of Vermandois, who took him, with 12000 Franks. But becauſe the Captal would by no means renounce the Engliſh Intereſt, thô it were to ſave his Life, and to purchaſe his Liberty, the French King, who feared his Valour, would never let him be put to Ranſom, nor acquitted by Exchange; thô the Engliſh offer'd [q] one Earl and three Knights in Exchange for him: So that he never had his Liberty more, but was confin'd in Priſon till his Death, which happen'd about four Years after. A Prince worthy of a better Fate and of Immortal Memory; for he yielded to none in that Age for Valour, Courteſie, Piety or Conduct; and as for his Nobility, he was nearly allied to the Kings of Navarre, France, and England, and from his Blood is deſcended the [r] Preſent Royal Houſe of France, and the Glorious King LEWIS the Fourteenth.

[q] True Uſe of Armory in the Life of the Captal p. 152.

[r] True Uſe of Armory in the Life of the Captal of Buſche p. 109 in Titulo. ex Bibl. Cottoniana.

XIX. The mean while the Meſſengers that were ſent from the Poictevin Lords in Thoüars, came into England, and there ſhew'd unto the King, and Prince and their Council, the low Condition of Poictou and Saintogne, and the doubtfull Eſtate of the City of Thoüars, and all the Lords and Captains therein, together with the Conditions of their late Agreement with the French.

When King Edward heard and ſaw, how in a manner without any War he loſt all the

An. Dom. 1372. An. Regni Angliæ XLVI. Franciæ XXXII.

Lands, Cities and Countries, that had coſt him ſo much to win, he ſaid haſtily, [f] "How "he never knew a King leſs addicted to Arms than Charles, who yet had given him "more trouble than his Anceſtors, that were Warriers. And thereupon having ſtudied a little, he proceeded ſaying, [f] "That he would croſs the Seas ſhortly ſo ſtrong, as to be "able to give Battle to the whole Power of France; and that as for his part, he would ne- "ver return into England, till he had reconquer'd what he had loſt, or together with the "reſt loſt Himſelf in the Endeavour. So preſently he commanded the Duke of Lancaſter (who was juſt then ready according to former Orders to go to Calais with a Conſiderable Army) to attend now a while, for he deſign'd, that he ſhould go along with him into the Parts of Poictou and Saintogne toward Rochell; the greater ſtreſs of the matter being judg'd to lie there. The mean while the King made an extraordinary Summons throughout his Realm, commanding all Men of ſuch and ſuch Age and Degree, to come ready Arm'd to Sandwich and thereabouts by a Day appointed, there to take the Seas with Him, and his Sons the Prince and the Duke. None of thoſe, who were concerned, either would or durſt diſobey this General Command of the King's; but drew as faſt as they might to the Sea-ſide, where lay ready for them 400 great Ships, beſides other Veſſels.

[f] Du Cheſne p. 709.
[f] Froiſ. c. 305. & Gallicè fol. 253.

While theſe Preparations were making, the King call'd his High Court of Parliament to meet at Weſtminſter, that ſo the Affairs of the Nation might be ſettled before his Departure out of the Realm: Eſpecially the King reſolv'd to let them know his Mind as to the Succeſſion; for before the Meeting of this Parliament the King and the Prince of Wales had upon Conſultation agreed, that if either the One or the Other ſhould miſcarry in this Expedition, then Richard of Bourdeaux, the Prince's only Son living, ſhould ſucceed, according to Right, unto the Crown of England. For the Black-Prince, [u] whoſe Wiſdom fell no way ſhort of his Courage, knowing how apt they are, who ſtand neareſt unto a Throne to ſtep firſt into it, was ſo careſull to prevent any Diſorder of that kind, which might be feared from the Ambition of his Brethren (the Eldeſt of whom had already the Title of a King) that he obliged his Father at this time to declare his Son Richard the next Heir to the Crown, after the Deceaſe of the King, and of his ſon Edward Prince of Wales. And now the Prince himſelf [x] ſhew'd in Full Parliament, that if he ſhould happen to die before the King his Father, then his Son Richard, as being next Heir, was to ſucceed to the Crown of England after the Deceaſe of the King his Grandfather. And here, beſides the Equity of Law and Nature, and the Unalterable Rule of Succeſſion, never but by Treaſon, Uſurpation and Violence tranſgreſſed in the Kingdom of England, the Prelates, Lords, Knights, and all the Commons of the Realm, had ſuch a Veneration for the Prince of Wales, becauſe of his many Heroick Vertues, that with one Conſent they all agreed to ſo Reaſonable a Motion, and took it upon themſelves and their Poſterity, that they would always be true to the Right Line, eſpecially to the Lord Richard; and this they deſired to be enacted not without apparent Demonſtrations of extraordinary joy. And firſt the King himſelf, then all his Sons, and after that all the Lords of England Spiritual and Temporal, ſware to uphold and maintain the Right of the Young Prince Richard, in caſe of the Prince his Fathers Deceaſe: And to this Ordinance the Prince of Wales cauſed them all to put their Hands and Seals before they went away: The Commons only expreſs'd their Concurrence by Holding up their Hands and Conſenting all together. Nor is this to be look'd upon as a Caſe not before clear enough, or that it was poſſible for the Prince to doubt the Right of his Son; but that it became the Wiſdom and Tenderneſs of a Father by all lawfull Arts imaginable to corroborate the Title of a Preſumptive Orphan, againſt the open or ſecret Attacks of Ambition or Treaſon. Accordingly to ſet an early Mark of Sovereignty upon the Young Prince Richard, the King his Grandfather, by Commiſſion [y] bearing Date at Sandwich the 30 Day of Auguſt, in the 46 Year of his Reign, conſtituted him his Cuſtos Regni, or Lieutenant during his Abſence beyond the Sea. And having given Directions, that Publick Prayers ſhould be made in all Churches for his Good Succeſs in this Voyage; that ſame Day, being a [z] Monday, about Nine of the Clock he went on Board at Sandwich, in a Ship called the Grace de Dieu, with as Great a Fleet as ever any King before had carried forth of England. There was with the King at this time the Prince of Wales, who had as then recover'd to a tolerable degree of Strength, alſo the Duke of Lancaſter, and the Earl of Cambridge his Brethren, the Earls of Saliſbury, Warwick, Arundel, Suffolk and Stafford, with the Lord Edward Spencer, then newly return'd out of Lombardy, whither he went with Prince Lionel Duke of Clarence four Years before. There was alſo in this Expedition the Lord Henry Percy, afterwards Earl of Northumberland, the Lord John De la Ware, Sr. William Nevile, younger [u] Churchill's Divi Britannici p. 245.

[x] Froiſ. c. 305. &c.
[y] Pat. An. 46. Ed. 3. pars 2. m. 25. Vid. Sandford's Geneal. Hiſt. p. 191.
[z] Clauſ. 46. Ed. 3. m. 12. Dorſo. Lit. Dom. DC. vid. Aſhmole p. 667.

younger Brother to the Lord John Nevile, Sr. Ralph Freſcheville Baron of Cryche, Anceſtor to the Freſchevilles now Barons of Stavely, and ſeveral other Lords, Knights and Eſquires of England, to the Number of 3000 Men of Arms, and 10000 Archers on Horſeback, beſides Footmen. This Great Navy ſet Sail for Rochelle, coaſting Normandy and Bretagne, but the Wind was adverſe, and would by no means ſerve them. AN. DOM. 1372. An. Regni Angliæ XLVI. Franciæ XXXIII.

XX. The mean while the French King, who had perfect knowledge of all theſe vaſt Preparations againſt him, had made no ſmall Aſſembly of Men of War from all Parts to reſiſt ſo Conſiderable an Enemy. And as it was ſaid, He himſelf now at laſt intended to have a Pull before Thoüars with the King of England, all things ſeeming to be laid upon this laſt Stake. On the other hand the Loyal Gaſcogners and others, who held in thoſe Parts for King Edward, prepared now to joyn him with their utmoſt Forces. And firſt the Lord Archimbald Greilly, Uncle to the Captal of Buſche, at the inſtance of the Lord Thomas Felton, Seneſchal of Bourdeaux, came to the General Rendezvous at Niort with 300 Spears, among whom were the Lords of Duras, of Courton, of Mucidan, of Roſan, of Languran, of Landuras, and Sr. Petiton Coutras, and Sr. William Ferenton, an Engliſh Gentleman. All theſe went from Bourdeaux to Niort the place of Rendezvous, where they found Sr. Thomas Percy, Sr. Walter Hewett, Sr. John Creſwell and many more, to the Number of 1200 Spears; and laſtly, Sr. Richard Ponchardon came and joyn'd them with 1200 Spears more: So that all France was now alarm'd, and ſwarm'd with Souldiers of one part or the other.

XXI. All this while King Edward and his Sons with their great Army were on the Sea, not being able by reaſon of Contrary Winds to take Land at Rochell or thereabouts, as was deſign'd: And that ſtrange Fortune, which before was always ready to waft that Prince over, but very Difficult to convey him back, was now quite otherwiſe diſpoſed, and became an eminent Hinderer of his Glorious Deſigns: So that for this Succeſs France was beholden to the moſt inconſtant of Elements, or rather to the Benign Providence of Him, who governs both the Winds and the Seas. King Edward having thus for a Months ſpace ſtruggled to no purpoſe againſt Wind and Fortune, when he ſaw now the Feaſt of St. Michael come, and that it was impoſſible for him to keep the Time appointed for the Reſcue of Thoüars, was obliged to break up this Expedition, as he did with great Diſpleaſure of Mind, and gave leave to his Men to return home as they pleaſed. But at his Return he had Wind at Will, and immediately after the Wind was favourable for thoſe Parts; ſo that 200 Sail of Engliſh Merchants, who traded for Wine, arrived at Bourdeaux, whither they were bound the very day after St. Michael. King Edward for his part, beſides that he was thus ſtrangely hindred from keeping his Day before Thoüars, is ſaid to have loſt more than 900000 Marks, or (as one ſays) Pounds, in this Expedition.

XXII. Now about a Week before Michaelmas, the Barons of England and Gaſcogne, that were beyond the Sea, marched from Niort toward Thoüars in order to joyn the King of England; but they were extreamly ſurpriſed, when they ſaw the Day come, and yet heard no News of the King. However to acquit themſelves to their Power, they ſent to the Barons of Poictou, that were in Thoüars, this Meſſage by certain Knights, "Right Dear Sirs, we are ſent hither unto you from the Loyal Lords of Gaſcogne and of "England, who remain under the Obedience of the King of England, to let you know, "that there are come from Niort above twice twelve hundred Men of Arms, ready prepar'd to "aid and aſſiſt you in all manner of reſpect: Only Sir, they deſire to know from you, whe- "ther in the Abſence of the King of England and of his Children, you will accept of "their Aſſiſtance or no. As for them they are ready, if ſo it pleaſe you, to adventure "their Lives and Fortunes together with you. The Barons of Poictou heartily thanked the Lords of England and of Gaſcogne, who had made them ſo kind a Proffer; but they deſired time to conſider what in that Caſe was to be done. At firſt they could not agree; for the Lord of Partenay, who was a Principal Member among them, would have them accept of the Aſſiſtance of theſe Lords, who as he ſaid, repreſented the King of England. But moſt of the other Lords were of a contrary Opinion, ſaying, "How "they had ſealed and ſworn to this Agreement, "that if by ſuch a Day the King of "England, or one of his Sons, did not appear there Perſonally in the Field, then they "ſhould ſubmit themſelves to the Obedience of the French King. Upon this Reſolution the Lord of Partenay went away to his Lodgings in deep Diſpleaſure, but the next Day he was ſo wheedled by thoſe of the adverſe Party, that he alſo became of their Mind. And ſo with one Conſent they returned this Anſwer; "That they thanked them "heartily for their Good-will: Notwithſtanding the King of England or one of his Sons "muſt needs be there in Perſon, according to the Treaty, whereto they had ſworn and ſea-

"led.

An. Dom. 1372. An. Regni Angliæ XLVI. Franciæ XXXIII.

"led. This Answer was no way pleasing to the English and Gascogners about Niort, but they could no ways hope to save them, who were thus disposed not to be saved by them.

XXIII. On the Eve of St. Michael there came from Poictiers to hold their appointment before Thoüars, the Constable of France, the Dukes of Berry, Burgundy and Bourbon, the Lord Oliver Clisson, the Vicount of Rohan, the Dauphin of Auvergne, the Lord Lewis of Sancerre, the Lord of Sully, and other Great Lords of France, to the Number of 10000 Men of Arms; besides others. This vast Army stood ready ranged in Battle Array in the Field before Thoüars on the Eve, and all the day long on the Feast of St. Michael, and against Night they withdrew to their Tents. But on the Morrow in the Morning the Constable and the Dukes sent to the Knights of Poictou within Thoüars, demanding of them to deliver up the City according to their Promise and Oaths in that behalf made. To these Summons 'twas answer'd, how they would shortly come to Poictiers, and there submit themselves and all their Lands to the Protection of the French King. This Answer seeming sufficient to the Lords of France they brake up from before Thoüars, and the Dukes dismist the greater part of their Army; only retaining such competent Forces, as they had before they expected King Edward's Arrival. Among others the Lord Clisson was appointed by the Constable to go with 200 Spears, and attempt Mortaigne on the Severe Nantoise, which as then held for England, having within sixty Men of Arms for its Defence under the Command of an English Esquire, named James Clare. The Lord Clisson, being come before the Place, began a fierce Assault, whereat he himself was present; but for all that he wan little or no Advantage: but at Night was fain to retire to his Camp. The Captain within seeing himself thus put to it, sent out secretly to the Lords of England and Gascogne then at Niort, telling them, that if they would send any Troops thither before Morning, he would receive them into his Fortress, whereby they might easily pass thrô the Castle into the Lord Clisson's Camp; who had with him but 200 Men of Arms. Upon this Notice certain Lords went that Night from Niort with 500 Men of Arms in their Company, and so rode on toward Mortaigne, being very desirous to entrap the Lord Clisson, if they could. But there was a spy, who knew all their purpose; for he came out of Niort with them that Evening; and so rode on upon the spur before, and came to the Lord Clisson, whom he found at Supper, and said to him "Sir, "Your Enemies to the Number of 500 Men of Arms have left Niort, and are coming "upon you apace. With that the Lord Clisson thrust away the Table from him, and arm'd himself with all speed, and mounted his Horse, and rode away hastily with all his Company, leaving the greater part of the Carriages behind, and never stopt, till he came to Poictiers: And the English having thus failed of their design, return'd to Niort in great displeasure. Soon after which, having left Sr. Dangouses and Sr. John Creswell in garrison there, the other great Lords and Captains, brake up their assembly at Niort, Sr. Walter Hewet with some few more returning into England; and all the rest to Bourdeaux: But as they went, they burnt and ravaged in the Lands of the Lord of Partenay, who was lately turn'd French at Thoüars. Thus all the Country of Poictou was reduced under the French, except a few Fortresses, as Niort, Les Esars, Mortimer, Mortaigne, Lusignan, La Motte Achart, La Roche Sur Yonne, Gauzar, La Tour Landry, Mexis, and some others, which made divers Excursions and Inroads among their Neighbours, sometimes chacing, and sometimes being chaced themselves.

[a] Froiss. c. 306. f. 186. sed Gallicè f. 254.

XXIV. Now the [a] Lord John of Monford, Sirnamed the Valiant, who had hitherto full and quiet Possession of the Dukedom of Bretagne, his Competitor Charles of Blois being slain, as We have shewn, was infinitely displeased at these Losses of his Old Friends the English. Both Gratitude and Honour made him rather love their Interest; since it was truly said, that the King of England had advanced him to what he was; and that he had had nothing, had it not been for Him; who all along had made Powerfull War in his behalf, and had lent him vast Sums of Silver and Gold, and given him his Daughter also in Marriage. Wherefore the Duke himself would rather have held his Lands of King Edward, than of the French King: But the Major part of the Lords, Knights, and Esquires of that Country were for France in their hearts; especially the Lord Clisson, the Lord de la Val, and the Vicount of Rohan, who were the Chief Lords of all that Country; and these doubted not to assure the Duke to his Face, that he must expect no service of them, unless he continued true to France, "Sir (said they) as soon "as We shall once perceive, that You resolve to take part with the King of England a-"gainst our Sovereign Lord the French King, We will all forsake your service, and "take

AN. DOM. 1372. An. Regni Angliæ XLVI. Franciæ XXXIII.

"take our leave of Bretagne. But for all this Declaration of theirs, the Generous Prince could not conceal the Courage of his heart; but told them plainly, they did wrong both to him and to the King of England; and that if they ſhould continue to forget their Country and Him, he hoped to bring it again to their Remembrance, and other high Words he ſpake unto them, which they reſolved to take no notice of, till they ſhould find him acting againſt France. And the French King, who by his Arts had debauched the Faith of all the Lords of Bretagne, and other the Duke's Friends, except that of Sr. Robert Knolles, who continued firm and unſhaken, had inſtructed them, that as ſoon as ever they ſhould ſee the Duke begin to take Arms, they would ſend him word thereof, and he would provide a Remedy. But the Duke, who ſaw by theſe Words of his Lords, and other evident Circumſtances, how they ſuſpected him, and had a conſtant Eye upon all his Actions, began to doubt, leſt ſome of them ſhould proceed to ſeiſe upon his Perſon, and ſo ſend him to be a Priſoner at Paris, as his Father had been before. Wherefore he ſent ſecretly to King Edward, repreſenting the Danger he was in from his own Subjects, and deſiring him, that he would ſend him ſome Troops for his Defence upon occaſion. The King, who always lov'd him entirely, ſent him 400 Men of Arms, and as many Archers, under the Command of the Lord John Nevil, who arrived at St. Mahè de Fine poterne, and lodged there in the Town without doing any Injury or Violence, for they all lived regularly, and paid juſtly for what they had: And the Duke never offer'd to put them into any Fortreſs, but let them Quarter there all that Winter. The Lords of Bretagne however took great Indignation at this Action of their Lord's, that in ſpite of them he had brought Engliſhmen into their Country; wherefore they fortify'd their Caſtles, and began to ſtand upon their Guard, breathing nothing but War and Defiance againſt the Duke and his Adherents, and in this tickliſh Poſture ſtood the Affairs of Bretagne all this Winter.

Before this, [b] namely on the 25 of June, John of Gaunt Duke of Lancaſter, and King of Caſtille and Leon, had reſign'd into the Hands of the King, his Father, his Earldom of Richmond with all the Caſtles, Mannors, Lands, and other Perquiſites thereto belonging: In lieu whereof he had a Grant in general tail, bearing Date the ſame Day, of the Caſtle, Mannor, and Honour of Cykehill, and ſeveral other Caſtles, Mannors, Advouſons, Free-chaſes, Bayliwicks, and Privileges mention'd in the Patent, beſides the yearly Farm of 200 Marks, which the Abbot and Covent of St. Maries at York, ought to pay for the Mannor of Whitgift. And this Exchange and Reſignation was made for the ſake of the Duke of Bretagne, whoſe [c] Anceſtors had been Earls of Richmond from the time of William the Conquerour, and Alan Fergaunt Earl of Bretagne. For as it appears, that the Year [d] foregoing upon a certain Agreement then made between King Edward and John Duke of Bretagne, the King had granted unto the ſaid John in general tail divers Lands and Caſtles in Aquitain, to be held of the Prince of Aquitain by Homage, as alſo the whole Dukedom of Bretagne, to be held of the King himſelf, as King of France, by Homage, he rendring unto the King divers Lands and Caſtles: So now upon a [e] further Agreement betwixt the King and Him, for the ſpecial Affection, which the King bore unto him (as the Words of the Patent do import) and to the end, that He and the Heirs of his Body ſhould keep thoſe Covenants, which were then newly made betwixt them; the King gave unto him and to his Lady and their Heirs lawfully begotten, the Caſtle, Town, and Honour of Richmond in Yorkſhire with all the Caſtles, Mannors, and Lands thereto belonging, as alſo the Earldom of Richmond, which John of Gaunt had now reſign'd.

[b] Sandford's Geneal. Hiſt. p. 243. Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 115. ex Pat. 46. Ed. 3. m. 35.

[c] Vid. Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 46. & Catal. Hon. p. 588.

[d] Rot. Franc. 45. Ed. 3. m. 7.

[e] Pat. 46. Ed. 3. p. 2. m. 33. Vid. Sr. Will. Dudg. Bar. 1 Vol. p. 52.

XXV. But the moſt Heroick Prince of Wales, thô not yet brought to extremity, perceiving by this time that it was hardly poſſible for him to recover any tolerable Degree of Health again, [f] ſurrendred up into his Fathers Hands his Principality of Aquitain, with all his Right and Title thereto; the Surrender bearing Date V Octobris, in the Fourty ſixth Year of the King his Fathers Reign, and the Year of our Lord MCCCLXXII. From which time the King govern'd thoſe Countries again by Lieutenants, as he had before he gave it to his Son the Prince.

[f] Selden's Titl. Hon. p. 493. ex Rot. Vaſc.

This Year there deceaſed Three Famous Engliſh Gentlemen, the One was the good Old Warrier, Ralph Stafford Earl of Stafford, and Baron of Tunbridge, who died on the laſt of Auguſt, having arrived to the Age of Threeſcore and Ten: For he was [g] found to be one and twenty in the Seventeenth Year of King Edward the Second, or the Year of our Lord 1323. He was an Eminent Commander of approved Valour and Conduct, and now dropt into the Grave full of Age and Glory, being Honourably interred in the Priory of Tunbridge in Kent. He left behind him Hugh Lord Stafford, his Son and Heir, who being [h] at that time 28 Years of Age, but long before in Action, followfollowed the ſteps of his Noble Father in his Valiant Exploits againſt the Enemies of his King and Country.

[g] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 159. a.

[h] Dugd. ibid. p. 161.

An. Dom. 1372. An. Regni Angliæ XLVI. Franciæ XXXIII.

The other was [i] Sr. William Molineux, who had done Valiantly in France, and elſewhere, and was made Knight Banneret by the Black-Prince at the Battle of Najara in Spain. He died this Year at Canterbury, being then newly come out of France, about the Feaſt of St. John Baptiſt.

The laſt was Sr. John de Magnavillâ, commonly called Sr. John Mandevil, Knight, and Doctor of Phyſick, a Man Worthy of Immortal Memory. He was [k] of an Ancient and Honourable Family, born at St. Albans; but from his tender Years did ſo addict himſelf to Study, that he ſeem'd to have no taſte for any thing, but Learning and Experimental Knowledge, as well Divine as Humane. He ſet not any Value upon his High-Birth or Alliance (for [l] ſome ſay, He married a Couſin of King Edward's) but reſolved to Cultivate his Mind, and to ennoble his more precious Part with Wiſdom.

[i] Weever's Fun. Mon. p. 234 & Stow p. 269.
[k] Sr. Richard Baker & Pitzæus p. 511.
[l] Warner's Albions England p. 267.

Having therefore as the beſt Preparative furniſh'd himſelf with a Competent Knowledge in the Scripture, he directed his Study to Phyſick, as being an Art moſt Worthy of a Gentleman, and a Candid Nature; whereby he ſhould be enabled to do good to the afflicted Bodies of his Fellow-Creatures. But above all his Inclination prompted him to Travel, eſpecially into Aſia and Africa, two vaſt Portions of the World, which together with Europe, made up the whole Terreſtrial Habitation; for in thoſe days the Newfound World of America was not known. Being therefore well provided with Neceſſaries, and having taken Care for Bills, that would paſs among Merchants of moſt Nations, he ſet forward, reſolving with Ulyſſes to diſcover the Government and Manners of many Nations. Thus having with much labour carefully ſurvey'd the Greater and the Leſſer Scythia, Armenia, Tartaria, both the Countries of Libya, Arabia, Syria, Perſia, Media, Meſopotamia, Illyria, India, Græcia, Egypt, and other Kingdoms, and not only informed his Mind with many Curious and notable Obſervations, but alſo with the Knowledge of ſeveral Languages; leſt all this ineſtimable Treaſure ſhould periſh together with his Life, he wrote exactly, in the Latine, French, and Engliſh Tongues, his Itinerary of Thirty Three Years, a Book of the Wonders of the World; and a Deſcription of the ſeveral Countries he had ſeen. And at his Return into England, as he ſeriouſly noted the Abuſes of the times, the Pious Gentleman would ſay, In theſe our "days We may ſay more truly, than ever, That Vertue is neglected, the Church is "trampled on, the Clergy is led away with Errour, the Devil reigneth, Simony beareth "ſway, Greatneſs is abus'd by Flattery, Diligence, Learning, and Vertue are deſpiſed, "Vice and Impudence are exalted, &c. At laſt he departed this Life at Liege, a City in the Biſhoprick of Liege in Germany, and lies buried in St. William's Convent without the Gate of the ſaid City, with this [m] Latine Inſcription, "Here lies the No-"ble Gentleman, Sr. John Mandevil, otherwiſe ſirnamed Knight of the Beard, Lord "of Kempten, born in England, a Profeſſor of Phyſick, very Devout in Prayer, a moſt "Bountifull Beſtower of his Goods to the Poor, who after he had travelled almoſt over "the whole (known) World, ended his Life at Liege in the Year of our Lord 1372 the "17 of November. Beſides which Inſcription there was engraven on the Stone, the Image of an Armed Man with a Forked Beard, a Lion at his Feet, and at his Head an Hand bleſſing with theſe Words in French, [m] Ortelius in Itiner. & Pitſæus p. 511. & 512.

Mos ki paſſeis ſor mi,	All you, that paſs by
Pour l' Amour Deix Proiez por mi.	Pray for me of Charity.

The ſhield of his Arms, thô void of late days, is ſaid to have been cover'd with a Plate, whereon his Arms were depicted, being Azure, with a Bordure indented Or, a Lion Rampant Argent, with a Creſcent Gules on his Breaſt. Formerly there were to be ſeen the Knives, Spurs, and the Horſe-Furniture, which he us'd in his Travels thrô the World. It ſeems he was a Perſon of much more Credit with the Germans and French (who have many Years perus'd his Writings in their own Languages) than here in England among his Countrymen. 'Tis ſaid of him, [n] that after he had ſeen moſt of the Cities in the World, he prefer'd Liege to whatever he had before met with, and reſolv'd, as he did, to ſpend the Reſidue of his Life in that Place. But ſurely, thô vulgarly the Books, that go under his Name, are reckon'd full of Incredible Stories, either We muſt look on them, as greatly falſified and differing from the Original, or if once convinced of their Authority, ought to be careſull in cenſuring raſhly: For this Man had the Reputation of being as Eminent for Piety and Integrity, as for Knowledge.

[n] Engl. Atlas Vol. p. 302.

CHAP-

CHAPTER the TENTH.

The CONTENTS.

I. The Conſtable of France lays Siege to Sivray: An Army of Engliſh comes to raiſe it, but are beaten. II. Hereupon the Conſtable takes Sivray, and after that Niort and Luſignan: But Chaſtellacher obtains a Reſpite at the Requeſt of the Lady thereof, after that taking in Mortimer and Didonne, he returns to Paris, and is highly careſſed by the King. III. Becherel in Bretagne, and St. Saviour le Vicount in Normandy beſieged by the French. IV. King Edward ſets forth a Fleet, which burns a part of the Spaniſh Fleet. V. King Charles confiſcates the Dutchy of Bretagne, becauſe the Duke adher'd to England, and ſends the Conſtable to take Seiſin thereof. VI. The Duke of Bretagne thrô diſtruſt of his People, retires for England, leaving Sr. Robert Knolles behind as his Lieutenant. VII. The Conſtables Conqueſts in Bretagne. Sr. Robert Knolles puts himſelf into Breſt. VIII. The Conſtable comes before Breſt, and the Lord Cliſſon lays Siege to la Roche ſur Yon in Poictou; a Detachment at the ſame time being ſent to take in Derual, which was the Inheritance of Sr. Robert Knolles. IX. La Roche ſur Yon yielded; Derual compounds and gives Hoſtages. Nantes recieves the Conſtable on certain Conditions. X. Sr. Robert Knolles compounds for Breſt, that it ſhall be reſcued in 40 Days or yielded. XI. The Earl of Salisbury being reinforced, reſolves to ſuccour Breſt by the Day appointed, and to give the Conſtable battle, but the Conſtable deceives him. XII. Sr. Robert Knolles goes to Derual. XIII. The Duke of Lancaſters Expedition and March thrô France. XIV. Sr. Robert Knolles refuſing to hold the Agreement made by his Men about yielding up Derual, the Duke of Anjou ſtrikes off the Heads of the Engliſh Hoſtages; in revenge whereof Sr. Robert Knolles ſtrikes off the Heads of 4 French Priſoners in ſight of the Duke. XV. Pope Gregory XI, having obtain'd a Treaty to be held at Bruges, writes unto the Commiſſioners of both Kings to prepare them, and ſends two Legates to compoſe Matters between the Duke of Lancaſter and the French King. XVI. The Difficulties of the Engliſh Army; the Duke arrives at Bourdeaux. XVII. A Parliament at Weſtminſter. XVIII. A Prodigious Malady call'd St. John's Dance. XIX. The Death of ſundry Great Perſonages.

I. NO [a] ſooner was the unactive ſeaſon of Winter paſt, but Sr. Bertram of Clequin, Conſtable of France, began to take the Field, marching from the City of Poictiers with 14000 fighting Men, whoſe Chief Captains beſides the Conſtable were Sr. Alan de Beaumont, Sr. John de Beaumanoir, Sr. Arnold of Limoſin, Sr. Geoffry of Ricon, Sr. John du Lanconet, Sr. Geoffry of Carnuel and others. With this Army the Conſtable went and laid Siege to [b] Sivray, encloſing his Camp with Pales and a Ditch, to avoid being troubled by Excurſions in the Night. During this Siege Sr. Robert Mico and Sr. Robert Scot, who were Captains of the Place, and had defended themſelves with great Valour againſt the Attacks of the Frenchmen, ſent ſecret Word of their Condition to Sr. John Vbrues, and to Sr. Dangouſes Captains of Niort: Who ſending alſo to thoſe of the Garriſon of Luſignan, and of Dangouſay to come and joyn them, they went all together from Niort to the number of 607 Spears, all good Men of War, beſides Footmen and others. Being come near to Sivray (for it was diſtant but four Leagues from Niort, they made an Halt to be the more freſh and ready: But it had been better for them to have made a ſudden Attempt upon the Conſtable in his Entrenchment: For upon this their Demurr, he had perfect knowledge of their Coming, and that they were ranged in the Field ready for an Onſet. He was not much diſturbed at the Report, but forthwith commanded his Men to be armed, and to repair to their Colours, which being done he ſaid, "Gentlemen, how ſay "you? Are you really diſpoſed to fight? For I verily believe it will behove us to fight. They all anſwer'd with one Voice, "Sir, we thank God, a Battle ſhall be welcome to us. Then Sr. Bertram order'd an Ambuſh of 200 Choſen Men to receive thoſe of the Garriſon, if they ſhould offer to make a Sally, as he verily believed they would, and at the same time he caused the most part of the Pales, that were about his Camp to be cast down, lest they should create any Hindrance to him, when he should resolve to come forth. And so he stood still ready ranged in three Battalia's, two of them being as Wings to the Third, which himself lead, and one Wing was governed by Sr. Alan of Beaumont, and the other by Sr. Geoffry of Carnuel; Command being given that none should pass before the Constable's Banner without a special Licence, but that all should keep their Places still within the Entrenchment. The mean while Sr. Robert Mico and Sr. Robert Scot, when they saw from the Walls and Battlements of their Fortress, how their Friends the English were ready ranged in the Field, said to one another, "Let "us now arm our selves, and make a brisk Sally: We shall soon pass thrô these Bretons, "and when our Friends find that we are engaged, they will come on to our Rescue, and "utterly spoil the Enemy: Before they can tell who hurts them. With that they sallied out on Horseback to the number of Fourty Spears well armed, thinking to skirmish with the Host: But they were suddenly entrapped by the Ambush which was laid for them, and there arose a smart Skirmish. But the English were overmatch'd, and so enclosed on all sides, that being neither able to retreat, nor to go forward, they were all either taken or slain, not a Man of them escaped: The two Captains were taken alive.

[a] Froiſ. c. 306. f. 186. b. ſed Gallicè f. 255.

[b] Sireth Froiſ. Tizeth Du Cheſne, &c.

An. Dom. 1373. An. Regni Angliæ XLVII. Franciæ XXXIV.

All this while the English stood ready ranged in the Field, and the Constable in his Enclosure; from whence he stirred not: For he feared that the English had some great Ambush for him in the Wood behind. In the English Army there were 200 Poictevins and Bretons, Robbers and Pillagers, that fought for Spoil and lived by Rapine. These Men being sent beforehand to skirmish with the French, and to provoke them forth of their Hold, as soon as they came to the Constable's Battail, turned to him saying, "How "their Hearts were good French, and they would be on the Constable's side if it pleased "him. The Constable said, he was content to receive them, and so set them in a Wing on one side, having first learned of them all the Behaviour, Number and Quality of the English, and that they had no manner of Ambush or Reserve behind them. With this Discovery Sr. Bertram was extreamly satisfied, and so drawing all his Men together, the Pales were all cast down, and he caused his Banner to advance forward, and went forth on Foot, with the two Battalions for Wings, and crying out, Our Lady of Clequin. When the Englishmen saw their Enemies to issue forth of their Enclosure, they advanced themselves forward with much Courage to receive them. At the first joyning they encountred the Constable's Battail, and fought there so furiously, that they passed clean thrô, reversing and spoiling many a Man, as they made their way along. But then the Bretons who had wisely order'd themselves in a Wing on each side, being all Fresh and Lusty, returned all together upon the English who were now wearied, and dash'd in among them with such Fury, that they were all mightily shaken. The mean while the Constable's broken Battail was repairing it self, and began to rally and recover its former Order. However still the English fought most valiantly, like Persons of Courage and Honour, with good Axes and Swords of Bourdeaux, wherewith they gave many fatal strokes that Day. There were on both sides many Valiant Knights and Esquires, who freely adventur'd their Lives to purchase Honour: So that this Battle was fought as well, and as many gallant Actions were then done in Taking and Rescuing again, as had been seen of many a Day before in plain Field, without any material Advantage on either hand, saving that the French and Bretons did more than twice exceed the English in Number, besides that Accession of 200 Fugitives before the Battle. However the matter was disputed on both sides with great Obstinacy, every Man setting himself forth to do his utmost: So that many a Valiant Knight was sore hurt, and not a few slain and trod to Death. But in the end the Victory abode with the French, and the English and Poictevins were utterly discomfited, most of them being either taken or slain; but a very few escaped, they tarried so long contending in Battle. There were slain two Gallant Esquires of England, Richard Meinil and William Vrsewell, and James Willoughby was grievously wounded. Sr. Dangouses escaped away, but there were taken Sr. John Vbrues, Sr. Emery of Rochechoüart, David Holcroft, Richard Oliver, John Cresswell, and many more both of England and Poictou. This Battle was thus fought near Sivray on the twenty second Day of March in the Year of our Lord God [c] MCCCLXXIII.

[c] 137$\frac{2}{3}$. Vid. Froiss. c. 306. & Du Chesne p. 710.

II. The Victory being thus obtained, the Constable returned to his former Camp, where having taken Care of his Wounded and Prisoners, of both which sort he had Plenty, he sent Sr. Alan de Beaumont to denounce against those that remain'd in Sivray, that if they held out till they were taken by Force, they should all die without Mercy. Upon this terrible Threat (which was the usual way with the Constable) especially ſpecially becauſe of their late Loſs, and that their Succours were overthrown, the Garriſon ſubmitted, and had the favour to go off without ſuffering any Harm either in their Goods or Perſons, the Conſtable allowing them a Convoy to Bourdeaux. Thus this Fortreſs, and all the Land pertaining thereunto returned to the Obedience of the French King. AN. DOM. 1373. An. Regni Angliæ XLVII. Franciæ XXXIV.

After this the Conſtable went with his Bretons and Frenchmen, and came before Niort in a great Heat: This was a ſtrong Town in Poictou, ſtanding on the Sevre, which had held for the Engliſh, while they had a good Garriſon among them. But now that the Flower of the Engliſh Forces was loſt before Sivray; when the Inhabitants heard, that the Conſtable himſelf was coming againſt them, they went out to meet him with the Keys of the Town in their Hand, and ſo conducted him into the Walls with great joy. Having tarried here four Days to refreſh his Army, he went thence in great Array, his Forces conſiſting of 1400 Spears, beſides others, and preſented himſelf before the Caſtle of Luſignan, which yielded unto him upon Compoſition, thoſe of the Garriſon being permitted to go off with their Lives ſaved, and of their Goods as much as they could carry on their Horſes before them, and ſo to be ſafely conducted to Bourdeaux. And thus was this ſtrong Place alſo reduced to the French King's Devotion.

From hence the Conſtable rode to Chaſtellacher, and ſummon'd the Lady thereof, which was Madam[d] Conſtance, Wife to Sr. Guiſchard of Angouleſme, to yield up the Caſtle unto him. But ſhe only deſired of the Conſtable his ſafe Conduct, that ſhe might go to Poictiers to ſpeak with the Duke of Berry, which requeſt Sr. Bertram granted, and cauſed her to be attended thither with one of his own Knights. Being come before the Duke ſhe kneeled down, but the Duke preſently took her up, demanding what her Pleaſure was. "Sir (ſaid the Lady) I am ſtrictly ſummon'd by the Conſtable of France to "ſubmit my ſelf, my Lands and Caſtle to the Obedience of the French King. And Sir, "your Royal Highneſs knows very well, how my Lord and Husband lieth as yet a Priſoner "in Spain, his Lands being left to the Government of me, a weak helpleſs Woman. Sir, "I may not diſpoſe of mine Husbands Inheritance after my Pleaſure, for if I ſhould do "any thing of ſuch high Moment without his Knowledge, he would ſurely give me no "Thanks therefore; and ſo I might incurr blame, which God forbid, I ſhould ever juſtly "deſerve from my Lord and Husband. But Sir, to ſatisfie Your Highneſs, and to pre- "ſerve my Lands in Peace, I ſhall compound with You for my ſelf and all mine; that "You ſhall make no War upon Us, nor We upon You, till my Husband be releaſed out of "Priſon: At which time, I believe he will make for England. And then I'll ſend him "word of this our Compoſition, and he will moſt ſurely let me hear, whether he will agree "thereto or no: And ſo your Highneſs ſhall have a final Anſwer.

[d] Mill's Catal. Honor. p. 918.

To this the Duke reply'd, "Fair Madam, I am well content to grant your Deſire on "this Condition, that neither You, nor any Captains of your Fortreſſes make any greater "Proviſion of Men, Victuals or Artillery during this Ceſſation, than you have at this pre- "ſent time. And this alſo being agreed to by the Lady, ſhe return'd to her Caſtle, where ſhe cauſed the Siege to be raiſed, by ſhewing unto the Conſtable the Duke of Berry's Letters to that Effect. From thence the Conſtable went before Mortimer, the Lady whereof ſubmitted her ſelf, and her Lands to the Obedience of the French King, and ſhe alſo deliver'd up the Caſtle of Didonne which belonged to her. Thus was all Poictou, Sainctogne and Rochellois, quite rid of the Engliſhmen: Whereupon the Conſtable having ſet good Garriſons in all Places, when he ſaw no ſign of Reſiſtance in thoſe Marches, even as far as the River Garonne, returned homeward into France, as alſo did the Dukes of Berry, Bourbon and Burgundy, and moſt of the French Barons, who had been concern'd in thoſe Parts. All theſe were highly feaſted and entertain'd by the King at Paris, but none ſo much as Sr. Bertram of Clequin; the reſt were no more than Shadows to him, his Glory eclipſed them all, and when he came to Paris, the King thought he could not honour and careſs him ſufficiently.

III. Now[e] while the Conſtable remain'd with the King at Paris in much Honour, the Lord Oliver Cliſſon, the Lord de la Val, the Lord of Vangoure, the Lord of Tournemine, the Lord of Rieux, and the Lord of Rochefort, with the Vicount of Rohan, Sr. Charles of Diguier, Banneret of Bretagne, the Marſhal of Blaroville, the Lords of Hambie, of Ruille, of Fonteville, of Granville, of Farnville, of Dennevalle and Des Cleres Bannerets of Normandy, went with a great Army of Bretons and Normans, and laid ſiege to the ſtrong Caſtle of Becherel in Bretagne, which they very much ſtreightned by their continual Aſſaults. But there were two Valiant Engliſh Captains within, namely Sr. John Cornwall, and Sr. John Appleyard; who with certain Choice Troops defended the Place couragiouſly, and made many Sallies and Skirmiſhes, and endured ma[e] Froiſ. c. 307. f. 187. b. ſed Gallicè f. 256. b.

An. Dom. 1373. An. Regni Angliæ XLVII. Franciæ XXXIV.

ny warm Attacks to their Honour. In Normandy the Frenchmen maintain'd at the ſame time another Siege before St. Saviour le Vicount, wherein were Captains Sr. Thomas Tribles, Sr. John de Burgo, Sr. Philip Picard, and the Three Mauliverers Brethren. And it is to be noted, that theſe two Garriſons before they were now beſieged, had overran all the Country of Baſe Normandy; ſo that nothing could be ſecure from them, but what was in ſtrong Fortreſſes. Beſides which they ranſom'd and took Priſoners, as well in the Biſhoprick of Bayeux, as in Eureux, the King of Navarre himſelf conniving thereat, nay, and ſometimes aſſiſting them with Victuals and Men, ſuch as he had diſpoſed about in Garriſons in the Country of Eureux. For as then he was not agreed with the French King: So that the Garriſons of Cherbourg, of Conches, of Bretevil, of Eureux, of Cocherel and others, under the Obeiſance of the King of Navarre, had made great Havock in Normandy, as well as the Engliſh themſelves. But as [f] we ſhew'd before, there had lately ſuch Means been made between the two Kings of France and Navarre, eſpecially by the diligent Promotion of the Earl of Salebruſe and the Biſhop of Eureux, that they came to an Accord, and ſo met together in Friendly manner at the Caſtle of Rohan on the River of Seyne. And there beſides the two Kings, many Great Lords on both Parts were ſolemnly ſworn, to cultivate a mutual Peace, Friendſhip and Unity for ever. After which Aſſurance thus given and taken on both Sides, the King of Navarre went along with the French King, as we ſhew'd, to Paris, where He and all His were received with much Honour and Royal Magnificence. And then and there the King of Navarre put all his Lands, which he held in Normandy, into the Hands and Diſpoſal of the French King, he undertaking their Protection, and that the Propriety ſhould remain entire to the King of Navarre, but the Uſe of them to the French King during the Wars with England. This done, the King of Navarre left his two Sons Charles and Peter, with their Uncle the French King, and ſo took his leave of Paris and returned into Navarre. And this Peace indeed he kept, and upheld beyond his uſual Cuſtom for the ſpace of five or ſix Years; at which time there fell a new Occaſion of Diſſention, and ſo the War began again as violently as ever: But nothing of this will fall within the Compaſs of our Hiſtory, which is to end with the Life of King Edward.

[f] Vid. hujus Hiſt. Lib. 4. c. 7. §. 10. p. 795.

IV. Now while the two Sieges were held by the Frenchmen before Becherel and St. Saviour le Vicount, there being a ſtrong Report, how Owen of Wales was coming by Sea with 6000 Men of Arms, deſigning to take Land in England, and to burn and deſtroy about in the Country; King Edward [g] appointed the Noble Earl of Salisbury, William Montagu, to guard the Engliſh Seas, he himſelf being at that time [h] retain'd by Indenture to ſerve the King with no leſs than 300 Men of Arms, whereof 20 beſides himſelf were Knights, and 279 Eſquires, and 300 Archers: Not to mention the ſeveral Retinues of the other Lords and Captains with him, as Sr. John Montacute Brother to the Earl of Salisbury, [i] Sr. William Nevil, Sr. Philip Courtney, Sr. William Lucy, Sr. Brian Stapleton and others. This Fleet [k] conſiſting of Fourty Great Ships beſides Barges, and of 3000 Men of Arms beſides Archers, ſet forth from the Coaſts of Cornwall, and made directly for the Port of St. Malo in Bretagne. Being arrived and finding in the Haven ſeven huge Spaniſh Carracks, they burnt them all; whereat all the whole Country was ſurpriſed, verily believing, that the Engliſh had had their Intelligence and Direction from the Duke himſelf. Hereupon in all Towns, Caſtles and Fortreſſes, the Bretons held their Duke in great ſuſpicion, and had a ſtricter Eye to their own Defence than formerly.

[g] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 647.
[h] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 648.
[i] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 649.
[k] Dugd. ibid. p. 647. & Froiſ. ut ante.

V. Now the Duke's moſt ſecret Intentions had before this been fully diſcover'd to the French King by certain of his own Knights, to whom he had let fall ſome Words in Favour of the King of England and his Title. Whereupon he commanded his Conſtable to undertake an Expedition into Bretagne, enjoyning and empowering him to take into his Hands all Towns, Cities and Fortreſſes, and to ſieſe on the Bodies and Goods of all that ſhould reſiſt. For the [l] King and his Council had already agreed, that the Duke had now forfeited all his Lands, as having received his Enemies, the Engliſh, into his Towns and Caſtles, and he alſo himſelf took Part with the King of England, and had entred an Alliance with Him againſt the Crown of France, of which he held his Dutchy of Bretagne by Faith and Homage. So the Conſtable went from Paris to Angiers, where he made his Rendezvous, and there came to him thither the Duke of Bourbon, the Earl of Alenſon, the Earl of Perche, the Earl of Porcien, the Dauphin of Auvergne, the Vicounts of Meaux and of Aunay, Sr. Ralph de Coucy, Sr. Robert de St. Pol, Sr. Ralph de Ravenal, Sr. Lewis of Sancerre, Marſhal of France, and a great Number of the Barons and Knights of Vermandois, Picardy and Artois, tois, beſides thoſe that came thither from the Marches of Anjou, Poictou and Touraine. AN. DOM. 1373.

[l] Froiſ. ibid. f. 188. b. ſed Gallicè f. 257. &c.

On the other ſide the Earl of Salisbury, who lay with his Fleet in the Port of St. Malo, was well enformed of theſe mighty Preparations of the Conſtables, and how in a manner all the Dutchy of Bretagne was ready to revolt from the Duke: Whereupon he ſailed thence, till he came to Breſt, which was one of the ſtrongeſt Places in the World, but threatned, as he heard, to be beſieged by the French: Wherefore he reinforced the Place with Men and Victuals. An. Regni Angliæ XLVII. Franciæ XXXIV.

VI. A little before this the Duke of Bretagne was gone for England: For when he heard, how the Conſtable was coming with ſuch a Power againſt him, He durſt not repoſe any Confidence in the ſtrength of Vannes, or of Dinant, nor indeed in the ſtrongeſt Fortreſs of Bretagne; leſt the Inhabitants ſhould deliver him up to the French, as they had done to his Father before him. Wherefore he reſolved for England, as well to avoid the impending ſtorm, as to haſten Succours; but firſt having conſtituted Sr. Robert Knolles, his Deputy Governour of all Bretagne, during his Abſence; he went to viſit his Caſtle of Auray, between Vannes and Hennebond, which held firm to him ſtill: An Engliſh Knight, named Sr. John Auſten, being Captain thereof under Him. With this Knight he left the Lady, his Wife, deſiring Him to keep her well, which he promiſed to do againſt all the World to his Power. From Auray the Duke rode to St. Matthew du Fine-poterne, which undutifully cloſed her Gates againſt him; wherefore he paſſed on to le Conquet, and there took ſhipping for England.

VII. The mean while the Conſtable was come into Bretagne with a great Army, to whoſe Banners there reſorted all thoſe Lords and Knights of Bretagne, who had been at the Siege before Becherel, leaving that affair to be carried on by the Lords of Normandy. When the Conſtable was thus reinforced, he went firſt to Rennes; the Inhabitants whereof, knowing how their Lord was adjudged by the Peers of France to have forfeited all his Lands, and that theſe Forces were accordingly ſent to take them in, reſolved by no means to ſtand out againſt the Conſtable; but without any further Scruple received him peaceably, acknowledging him for their Sovereign Lord in the Name of the French King, whoſe Perſon he now repreſented. Having thus taken Poſſeſſion of Rennes, He preſently rode before Dinant, which alſo ſubmitted in like manner; ſo did afterward the Great City of Vannes: But Luzemont (after a bold Reſiſtance) being taken by Force, all within were put to the Sword. Thence the Conſtable went to Jugon, which yielded unto him; ſo did Gony en la Foreſt, ſo did la Roche D' Arien, and the Town of Guingand, St. Matthew du Fine-Poterne, and St. Malo in the Iſle. After this he took in Quimpercorentin, alias Cornovaille, then Quimperlay, and other Fortreſſes thereabout, all which yielded without a ſtroke, except Quimperlay, whereof John Rous an Engliſh Eſquire was Captain, who when the Town was taken, was ſlain by the hands of Sr. Oliver Cliſſon, who for all the Benefits he had formerly received from England, did now ſo hate all Engliſhmen, that he hardly took any to Mercy, that once fell into his Hands. It was the Conſtables Reſolution firſt to reduce Bretagne Britonant, becauſe that part was always more inclinable to Duke John's Intereſt, than Bretagne Gallicant; and therefore he chiefly beſtirr'd himſelf in theſe parts.

But now 'tis time to ſee what became of Sr. Robert Knolles, who had been made the Duke's Lieutenant of all that Country. His Courage was ſo notable, and his Conduct ſo good, that there is no doubt to be made, but he would have given the Conſtable Battle before this, had he but had the Hearts of the People: But alas! His own Engliſh Forces were but ſmall, and he had not many of the Great Men of that Country, that would obey him. However he took what Care he could, and had made all his Garriſons, as Defenſible as he might; and particularly having well furniſh'd his own Caſtle of Derval, and committed it to the Cuſtody of Sr. Hugh Bright, his Couſin, he himſelf went to Breſt, ſetting all his Fortune upon the ſtrength of that Place.

About the ſame time the Conſtable, who had by his Detachments taken in moſt part of the ſmall Towns, as Crodon and Callac, and the like, came in Perſon, and laid his Siege to Hennebond, the Captain whereof under the Duke was an Eſquire of England, named Thomas Wiche, to whoſe aſſiſtance Sr. Robert Knolles had lately ſent a Valiant Knight, called Sr. Thomas Prior; ſo that they made Fourſcore Men of Arms, beſides others. As ſoon as ever the French Army was come thither, they began to aſſail the Caſtle, having brought with them certain Engines and Great Guns, wherewith chiefly they had won divers Caſtles and Fortreſſes, eſpecially that of Quimperlay. When theſe Engines were ready planted againſt the Town and Caſtle, the Conſtable ſware aloud, that that he would ſup that Night in the Caſtle, and ſo the Aſſault was began on all ſides: But the Townſmen Defended themſelves Valiantly; ſo that there was yet no likelihood, that the French would prevail. Then the Conſtable commanded, that theſe Words ſhould be loudly proclaim'd in his Name to the Inhabitants of the Town, "Hear you "Bretons, that are Townſmen, thus ſaith our Lord the Conſtable of France; it is cer- "tain, that We ſhall Conquer You; for We have made an Oath to ſup this Night with- "in Your Walls. Know You therefore for a truth, that if any one of You ſhall henceforth "caſt but a ſtone, or a Quarrel, whereby the leaſt of our Company may be hurt, I make a "Vow to God, You ſhall all looſe your Lives therefore. At this Proclamation the Townſmen were ſo diſheartned, that they all ſhrunk away from their Walls into their Houſes, and left the Engliſh Garriſon to make good the Place by themſelves: Which notwithſtanding they did with great Courage, as long as they were able to hold. But the Town was ſo large, that it was impoſſible for ſo few Hands to ſuffice for all Places; wherefore after a briſk Aſſault, the Frenchmen entred the Town by Scalado, and put all the Engliſhmen to the Sword, except the two Captains, who only were taken to Mercy. But as for the Townſmen, becauſe they had ſo carefully obey'd the Conſtable's Command, he now gave an eſpecial Charge, that none ſhould be ſo bold, as to do the leaſt injury to any one of them. Here the Conſtable tarried 15 days to ſtrengthen the Town and Caſtle, and to ſet things in Order; the mean while he ſent a great part of the Army to le Conquet, a Port-Town, which he reſolved alſo to reduce. This Place after a ſtout Reſiſtance was taken likewiſe by Aſſault, and every ſoul within put to the ſword, except only the Captain, Sr. John Langley, an Engliſh Knight, who was received to Mercy.

An. Dom. 1373. An. Regni Angliæ XLVII. Franciæ XXXIV.

VIII. Le Conquet being thus won, the Conſtable took Care to repair it, and ſet it in good Order, and then reſolved to go before the ſtrong Fortreſs of Breſt. The Earl of Salisbury had lately been there, and when he had very well ſupply'd the Place with Men of Arms, Archers, Artillery, and Victuals, he took ſhipping again, and coaſted about the Country, if he might happily find the Frenchmen; for as yet he knew not where they were, nor whither they would go. Soon after his Departure the Conſtable came and ſat down before Breſt, wherein at that time was Sr. Robert Knolles himſelf, and Sr. William Nevil, with an 100 Men of Arms, and as many Archers; beſide the Inhabitants, who were all Loyal to their Lord, the Duke, and well provided of all things. However here the Conſtable laid his Siege with more than 6000 Fighting Men; for as ſoon as ever he had perfected his Siege there, he ſent Sr. Oliver Cliſſon with the reſt of the Army, to go, and in the Duke of Anjou's Name lay Siege to la Roche Sur Yon, on t'other ſide the Loire in Poictou; which was then in Engliſh Hands.

But now the Lord Cliſſon inveſted it Round about, and raiſed up Engines againſt the Town, which were brought thither from Angiers and Poictiers; and here the Lord Cliſſon was joyn'd by ſeveral Noblemen and Knights from Anjou and Poictou, who all vow'd not to riſe, till they ſhould have the Place at their Devotion. And all the while they lay there, the Duke of Anjou ſent them ſtore of Victuals, and other Neceſſaries for carrying on the Siege. And ſtill the Conſtable lay with his Men before Breſt, the Duke of Bourbon, the Earls of Alenſon and Perigort, the Dauphin of Auvergne, and divers other Great Lords, being in his Company. But here they wan little or nothing; for Breſt was one of the ſtrongeſt Caſtles in the World, and Sr. Robert Knolles and Sr. William Nevil, were no Children in Matters of War. However the Conſtable, who was ſubtle, in hopes to divert or diſtract Sr. Robert Knolles his Mind, order'd another Detachment of 400 Fighting Men, with ſeveral Lords of Bretagne and Touraine to go now and lay Siege to the Caſtle of Derval, which was Sr. Robert's own, being given unto Him by the Duke, for him and his Heirs for ever.

[n] Froiſ. c. 309. fol. 189. ſed Gallicè f. 258.

IX. Thus [n] at one time the French Lords laid Siege to Five ſeveral Places, the One before Becherel, the other before Breſt in baſe Bretagne, a Third before Derval in Bretagne alſo, a Fourth before St. Saviour in Normandy, and the laſt before Roche Sur Yon in Poictou, which belonged to the Duke of Lancaſter: And to each of them were given many ſhrewd Aſſaults. But thoſe of Roche Sur Yon, who were fartheſt off from any Succour, were firſt obliged to come to a Compoſition: Which was, that unleſs they ſhould be relieved within the ſpace of a Month, they would leave the Place to be diſpoſed of at the French Kings Pleaſure. At the end of the time limited the Lord Oliver Cliſſon return'd thither with his Troops, and no Reſcue being come, or likely to come, the Caſtle was given up according to Covenant, and the Engliſhmen were ſafely convey'd to Bourdeaux by the Lord of Pons. After this Succeſs the Lord

Cliſſon

Cliſſon went to reinforce the Siege before Derual, carrying along with him his Great Engines; and thither alſo ſhortly after came the Conſtable himſelf with the Dukes of Bourbon, the Earl of Alenſon and Perche, and a great many other Barons and Knights of France: For they found by this, that they did but loſe their time in lying before Breſt; however they had left behind them 2000 Men, who were ſtrongly encamped in places which commanded the Avenues; ſo that none could go in or out at Breſt without their Leave.

AN. DOM. 1373. An. Regni Angliæ XLVII. Franciæ XXXIV.

When Sr. Hugh Bright and the Garriſon of Derual ſaw themſelves beleaguer'd by ſo great an Army, they doubted very much, that they ſhould not be able to make good the Place; but that at laſt they ſhould miſcarry, and ſo be ſlain every Man. Wherefore by a Treaty they obtain'd a Reſpit for two Months, on this Condition, that unleſs they ſhould be Reſcued by that time, either by the Duke of Bretagne, or ſome other able to keep the Field againſt them, and to raiſe the Siege, they would yield up the Caſtle to the Duke of Anjou, or to the Conſtable. And if Men of Arms ſhould be ſent from the Duke of Bretagne, who could only coaſt the Frenchmen, but not be able to give them Battle, then the Beſieged ſhould take no notice of them, nor ſeek any Aſſiſtance from them. This Treaty being ſhew'd to the Duke of Anjou, he agreed unto it, on Condition, that thoſe within the Caſtle ſhould not, during the ſaid term, take into their Fortreſs any more Aid or Succour. For the true keeping of all which Covenants Sr. Hugh Bright deliver'd up unto the French, as Hoſtages, Two Knights and an Eſquire, and gave his Oath alſo to be true and punctual. So the Conſtable brake up from before Derual, and rode to Nantes; where he found the Gates ſhut againſt him, becauſe he came with ſo great an Army; wherefore alſo they ſent out unto him, to enquire what he intended or deſign'd to do. The Conſtable anſwer'd, how he was ſent by the French King, their Sovereign Lord, to take Poſſeſſion in his Name of the Dukedom of Bretagne, which Sr. John of Monford, who calls himſelf Duke (ſaid he) hath forfeited by his Diſloyalty. The Burgeſſes deſired time to conſider of theſe things in Council, that they might know what anſwer to make him. This being granted they return'd to the City, and after a long Debate held in the Common-Hall, they came forth again to the Conſtable, and ſaid, "Sir, it ſeems very ſtrange unto Us, and thoſe "that ſent Us, that You are thus come to ſeiſe the Inheritance of our Lord, the Duke, "for the French King, who yet himſelf commanded Us to receive him as our Duke and "Lord: So that to Him We have ſworn Fealty and Homage, and he alſo hath ſworn "to govern Us as his Subjects. Thus We have accepted of each other; and ſince We "know nothing to the contrary, but that hitherto he hath been a Gracious and good Lord "unto Us; We ſee not how either in Honour or Conſcience We can offer to withdraw our "Faith from him. But if You ſay, You come as Procurator General from the French "King, We will allow You to enter our City on this Condition, that if upon the Return "of our Lord, the Duke, he will own the French intereſt; then all the Prelates, Ba- "rons, Gentlemen, and all the Good Towns of Bretagne ſhall own and acknowledge him "for their Lord, as before; and yet be wholly acquitted by You of all Damage, or any ob- "ligation, either now, or at any other time. And that the mean while You will forbear "to take up any Rents, or Revenues belonging to the Duke of Bretagne, and let them "lie ſtill in our Hands to be reſerved for our Lord; till We hear other News, than You "bring Us. All this the Conſtable ſware to fulfill without fraud, as being the French Kings Procurator in that Caſe, and ſo was admitted into the City of Nantes (which in thoſe days was the Metropolis of all Bretagne) both He and the Chief Lords and Captains, as many as he would.

X. When Sr. Robert Knolles, the Duke's Lieutenant, who was now in Breſt, underſtood, how his Couſin Sr. Hugh Bright, had made a Compoſition with the Duke of Anjou and the Conſtable, and ſaw, that he could not by any other means leave Breſt, to go and ſave his Caſtle of Derual, he reſolved rather than to loſe ſo important a Place, to enter himſelf into certain Covenants with thoſe, who beſieged him. Upon the firſt offer they return'd him anſwer, how they could do nothing without the Conſtable; ſo they ſent to know his Pleaſure. They found him before Nantes with a great Army of French and Bretons ſpread along by the Famous River of Loire. In ſhort the Conſtable gave them a Commiſſion, and this Treaty took ſuch effect, that the Garriſon of Breſt was to have Reſpit for Fourty Days; ſo that if by that time they were not relieved by an Army able to fight the Conſtable, then they ſhould forthwith yield up their Fortreſs. And the Garriſon was to remain all that while, as now they were, without revictualling, or taking in any New ſupply of Men or Ammunition, or any ſort of Proviſion, beyond what they had already. With this Agreement Sr. Robert Knolles his Negotiators return'd back unto him; whereupon he ſent ſufficient Hoſtages, both

Knights

An. Dom. 1373. An. Regni Angliæ XLVII. Franciæ XXXIV.

Knights and Eſquires to the Conſtable; thereby to ſecure him, that there ſhould be no default on his part. The Conſtable put the Hoſtages in Cuſtody, and gave Licence to thoſe Troops, that lay before Breſt to break up, and he ſent them with the One half of his Forces towards Paris, the French King having lately remanded them home, that now he might reinforce his Garriſons in Picardy: For it ſeems the Duke of Lancaſter, [o] being made the King his Fathers Lieutenant of Aquitaine, and General of all his Forces on that ſide the Sea, was then newly arrived at Calais with an Army of more than [p] 30000; of whoſe Succeſs we ſhall ſpeak by and by.

[o] Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 115.
[p] Mezeray, &c.
[q] Froiſ. c. 309.

XI. Now the Earl [q] of Salisbury, who was at Sea, having all this while cruiſed up and down by the Frontiers of Bretagne and Normandy, received at the ſame time a ſtrong Reinforcement from England of a 1000 Men of Arms, and 2000 luſty Archers. Wherefore when he heard of the Compoſition of the Garriſon of Breſt, he ſaid, that by the Grace of God he would go and fight the Conſtable of France, and relieve the Fortreſs, and ſo he directed his Courſe to Breſt, where he took land, and ranged his Men in Battle Array, and ſtood for ſeveral Days in that Manner before the Place, and at Night he returned to his Ships: But every Day he drew out thus into the Field ready to fight, if the Frenchmen ſhould come thither. The Conſtable, who had now ſent a good part of his Men into Picardy, and with others maintained a ſiege before Becherel in Normandy, as one who little thought, that the Earl of Salisbury could ſo quickly come thither ſtrong enough to give him Battle, thought to depart however from Nantes with ſuch Forces as he had; when the time drew near that the Buſineſs of Breſt was to be decided. But now when he underſtood, that the Earl of Salisbury was there ready to give him Battle, he made an Halt, and reſolved to practiſe another way, which indeed was more agreeable to the cauteous Counſels of the French King, than to the Fame of the Conſtable, who was called the RESTORER OF FRANCE; unleſs perhaps he had Command from the King ſo to do, which is not unlikely. However the Earl of Salisbury having taken a convenient Plat of Ground before Breſt, when he ſaw that the French and Bretons moved not forward, ſent an Herald to the Conſtable, who being brought before him ſaid, Sir, my Lord the Earl of Salisbury, and the other "Lords of England ſend you Word by me, who am an Herald of Arms, how they under- "ſtand, that ſome while ſince you laid ſiege to the Caſtle of Breſt, and how certain Trea- "ties and Compoſitions were made between you and thoſe of the Garriſon, importing, that "if they were not relieved by ſuch a Day, which is now at hand, then they ſhould deliver "up the Town and Caſtle into your Hands. Wherefore Sir, may it pleaſe you to know, "that they are now come before Breſt to keep their Day, and to defend the Place. And "for your part they expect you ſhould repair to meet them, which if you ſhall do, they "promiſe you Battle without fail: But if you refuſe thus much, then they require you to "ſend them again ſuch Hoſtages as you have upon this Account. The Conſtable anſwer'd ſubtlely, " Herald, whereas you tell us, how the Engliſh are come to give us Battle, you "bring us good News, and are therefore Welcome: You ſhall tell your Maſters alſo, that "we are more deſirous to fight with them than they can be with us; but yet they are not "in that Place, where the Treaty was confirmed and authoriſed. Therefore let them "know, that if they will come hither, without fail we will preſent them with Battle. This the Politick Conſtable ſpake, becauſe he knew it impoſſible for them to go as far as Nantes, where the Treaty was made, on Foot, ſince it was more than 40 leagues off from Breſt. With this Anſwer the Herald return'd to the Earl of Salisbury, who thereupon ſent him back again with another Meſſage, which he thus deliver'd; " Sir, I am "come again to you from my Lords and Maſters, to whom I have related your firſt An- "ſwer from Point to Point: But Sir, they ſay, how they are Men of the Sea, and being "lately come thence have no Horſes with them, and that they are not accuſtomed to travel "far on Foot. But this they ſay, that if you will ſend them your Horſes, they will come "to what Place you will appoint, and give Battle, to keep touch with you. " No more " haſte than good Speed (reply'd the Conſtable) we are not in the humour to do our "Enemies ſuch a Kindneſs as to ſend them our Horſes, it would ſurely be a ſmall piece "of Wiſdom ſo to do. And yet if we had ſuch a Purpoſe, we ſhould demand good and "ſufficient Hoſtages, which ſhould be reſponſible for our Horſes again. Sir (ſaid the He- "rald) I have no Orders to ſay any thing as to that Matter: But this Sir, they comman- "ded me to tell you, that if you will not yield thus much you cannot lawfully detain the Ho- "ſtages, which are in your Hands. Wherefore Sir, in ſending them back you will do ho- "nourably as you ought to do. The Conſtable ſaid, he was not advis'd to do any ſuch thing; and ſo the Herald return'd to the Earl of Salisbury before Breſt. When he heard, that the French would neither give him Battle, nor reſtore the Hoſtages, he was extreamly extreamly diſpleaſed, but however there he tarried till the Day was expired, and he found that the Conſtable did but dodge with him. The next Day following the limited time he entred Breſt, and revictuall'd the Town, and reinforced the Gariſon greatly; after which he return'd to his Ships, to keep the Marches and Frontiers on the Sea-coaſts, as he had been commanded by King Edward to do. AN. DOM. 1373. An. Regni Angliæ XLVII. Franciæ XXXIV.

On the other ſide, when the Conſtable ſaw that the Engliſh came not forward to fight him, which indeed he never thought they could do, he ſaid the Hoſtages were all his Priſoners, becauſe the Appointment was not truly kept; for the Earl of Salisbury had newly reinforced and victuall'd the Garriſon; and ſo he ſent the Hoſtages to Priſon: Which Procedure of the Conſtable's was certainly more full of French Fineneſs, than of any True Honour or Heroick Courage. When the Earl of Salisbury was gone, and Breſt fully ſecured, Sr. Robert Knolles rode away from Breſt with certain Good Men of Arms, and went ſtraight to his own Fortreſs of Derual. News thereof came preſently to the Conſtable and the Duke of Anjou, who were then at Nantes; whereupon they ſuppoſed as indeed it happen'd: For ſoon after Sr. Robert ſent them word, that he would keep no ſuch Agreement as his Men had made in his Abſence without his Leave, ſeeing they had no ſufficient Authority ſo to do. When the Duke of Anjou heard this, he reſolved to go Perſonally and beſiege Derual, but the Proſecution of this we ſhall refer to another more proper Place, and ſpeak now of the Duke of Lancaſter.

XIII. This Valiant Prince [r] with the Duke of Bretagne in his Company, and an Army of above 30000 Men, whereof there were 3000 Men of Arms and 10000 Archers, landed ſafely at Calais about the beginning of July, the ſame Expedition being deſign'd the Year before; but that it was put off for that time by reaſon of the Buſineſs of Thoüars. In this Army beſides the two Dukes of Lancaſter and Bretagne, there were the Earls of Warwick, Stafford and Suffolk, the Lord Edward Spencer, one of the Greateſt Barons of the Realm, at that time Conſtable of all the Hoſt, the Lord Robert Willoughby, the Lord Michael de la Pole, the Lord Ralph Baſſet of Drayton, the Lord Ralph Baſſet of Sapcote, the Lord Thomas Holland, the Canon Robſart, the Lord Henry Percy, the Lord Lewis Clifford, the Lord William Beauchamp, the Lord John Falveſle, the Lord John Burwaſh, the Lord John Mohun, Sr. Richard Ponchardon, Sr. Walter Hewet, Sr. Stephen Coſſington, Sr. John Bourchier, Sr. Matthew Gournay, Sr. John Harpedon, Sr. Robert Twyford, Sr. Matthew Redmayne, Sr. Geoffry Say, Sr. Thomas Spencer, Sr. Thomas Fowkes, Sr. Hugh Brudnel, Sr. Nicolas Gaſcogne, Sr. Geoffry Werkeſly, Sr. Thomas Emerton, Sr. John Chandler, Sr. Philip Cambray, Sr. Lionel Dautrey and many Others, whoſe Names at this Diſtance are not eaſily recoverable. The French King, who knew beforehand of all this mighty Preparation againſt him had provided ſufficiently for the Defence of his Cities, Towns, Caſtles and Fortreſſes in Artois, Picardy and Vermandois, having well ſtock'd them with Souldiers, as Frenchmen, Bretons, Burgundians, Picards, Normans and divers that belonged to the Empire. The Duke of Lancaſter having ſtaid a while at Calais to refreſh his Men, and to fit the Carriages, whereof there was in Abundance, began on the 20 of July to march from Calais, in three Great Bodies, as well order'd as poſſibly could be deviſed. Firſt went the Battails of the Marſhals, who were the Earls of Warwick and Suffolk: Then came the two Dukes of Lancaſter and Bretagne, and with them a Noble Company of Men of Arms, Bow-men and others: And laſtly, the Third Battail was lead by the Conſtable the Lord Edward Spencer; all Three marching forward in good Order, ready arm'd and accoutred at all points, as if they expected every Moment to give or receive an Onſet. And none were permitted to go before the Marſhals battail without ſpecial Licence, it being their Uſe not to march above three or four Leagues a Day, and at Night to lie all together in one Field, keeping good Watch, like expert Men of War. In this manner they paſſed by Montrevil, whereof the Lord of Hambour was Captain, but they gave no Aſſault there, as neither had they done to St. Omers nor Terroüenne: But their Van-Currours burnt and ravaged in the Earl of St. Paul's Lands, and ſo came near to Arras, the two Dukes being lodged in the Abbey of Mount St. Eloy, where they tarried two Days. Paſſing thence they coaſted Arras, but attempted it not; for they thought it would be but loſt Labour ſo to do. Thence they went to Bray on the Somme, and there the two Marſhals made a fierce Aſſault before the Gates: Among others that behav'd themſelves notably at that time, the Canon Robſart fell'd three Valiant Men to the Earth with his good Sword; for the Skirmiſh was exceeding hot: But the Frenchmen behav'd themſelves manfully, and loſt little or nothing, there being in the Town many choſen Knights and Eſquires of Picardy, whoſe Chief Captains were the Vicount of Meaulx, and Sr. Ralph de Menac. Wherefore the Engliſh Army paſſed on ſtill coaſting the River of [r] Froiſ. c. 310. f. 190.

An. Dom. 1373. An. Regni Angliæ XLVII. Franciæ XXXIV.

Somme, with Design to get over at Ham in Vermandois, and at St. Quintins four leagues off. While thus the Duke of Lancaſter, who was King Edward's Lieutenant, marched along with his Army, the Lord of Boſſut in Heinalt being come into France, chanced to paſs by the Bridge of Ham, where he was earneſtly requeſted by the Inhabitants to accept of Wages from them, and to ſtay and help to defend them from the Engliſh. He condeſcended to their requeſt, and tarried there two Days, till the Duke of Lancaſter's whole Army was gone by; for they took their way higher to enter into Vermandois, and to get over the River at a ſtraighter Paſſage. But when the Lord of Boſſut ſaw and knew, that the Engliſhmen were all gone by, and that they drew toward St. Quintins and Ribemont, where his Father-in-Law the Lord of Chinon was at that time, the ſaid Lord, and himſelf alſo in Right of his Wife, holding fair Lands and Inheritance thereabout, upon theſe Accounts, and becauſe he knew Ribemont was but indifferently provided of Men of War, he now took his leave of the Inhabitants of Ham, from whom he received many tokens of their Thanks, and rode thitherward with that ſmall Company which he had. He was certainly in no ſmall Danger all the way, for the Land was full of Engliſhmen; ſo that he was but hardly got into St. Quintins, when the Engliſh Currours were at the Gates after him. There the Lord of Boſſut found Sr. William of Bourdes, who made him very welcome, and deſired him to ſtay there with him; but the other ſhewed ſuch good Reaſons, that he obtain'd not only free leave to paſs on to Ribemont, which he ſaid was deſtitute of a Captain, but alſo twelve Croſsbows out of St. Quintins, beſides thoſe few with him. He had rode but little way in the head of this Company, when he eſpied afar off a great Body of Engliſh, whom nevertheleſs he eaſily avoided by taking a lower way on the one ſide of them; for he was well acquainted with the Country. As he rode thus in danger enough towards Ribemont, he luckily encountred with a Knight of Burgundy, called Sr. John Bull, who was riding toward St. Quintins, but being perſwaded by the Lord of Boſſut, he reſolved to go along with him for Ribemont, when both together they made up about fourty Men of Arms and twenty Croſsbows. As thus theſe two Captains rode toward Ribemont, and had ſent one before them to give warning to the Townſmen of their coming, they ſaw another Troop of Engliſh conſiſting of about fourſcore Men, but they all out of Order and ſtraggling, as Men that had been ſcatter'd abroad to find Forage; then the Frenchmen cry'd to one another, "See yonder are our Enemies laden "with Plunder, let us make haſt and partake with them. And with that they clapt Spurs to their Horſes, and ſet forward a good Gallop crying out, "Our Lady of Ribe- "mont to the Reſcue; and ſo ſtrack in ſuddenly among the Engliſh, whom they eaſily diſcomfited, and ſlew the moſt part; happy was he that could get away. Having given this Overthrow to the Engliſh they preſently came to Ribemont, where they found the Lord of Chinon, who was newly come thither with fourty Spears, and twenty Croſsbows too. As theſe three Captains ſtood Complementing before the Caſtle, their Men being retired to their Lodgings to unarm, they ſuddenly heard the Watchman crying out, "To Arms, to Arms! the Enemy is coming. At this they drew their Men together again and demanded of the Watchmen, what Number he thought they might be? He anſwer'd, that according to his judgment they were about Fourſcore Men of Arms. Then ſaid the Lord of Boſſut, "Gentlemen, 'tis fit we go forth and fight them; for 'twould reflect upon us, to permit them to come ſo near to our Fortreſs, without calling them in Queſtion. "Well ſaid, my Fair Son, quoth the Lord of Chinon, "cauſe our Horſes to be brought forth there, and diſplay abroad my Banner. My Lords "(ſaid Sr. John Bull) you ſhall not go without me: But however my Advice is, that we "be not too raſh: For perhaps theſe are but Forerunners of the Engliſh Marſhals, or the "Conſtable's Battail, to entice us from our Hold; and if ſo, our Sallying forth may "turn to our Diſadvantage. Said the Lord Boſſut, if You'll follow my Counſel, we will "go forth and fight, that briefly! Fall out what will! I am reſolved to meet them. With that they all Three clapt on their Helmets, mounted their Horſes, and ſallied forth with [f] Sixſcore Men in their Company; the Engliſh being about [f] Fourſcore, all of Sr. Hugh Calverley's Troops, but Sr. Hugh himſelf was not there, he rode with the Duke of Lancaſter; however there were about ſix Knights and many Eſquires among them, all who came thither to revenge their Fellows, that had been overthrown a little before by the Lord of Boſſut and Sr. John Bull. As ſoon as e'r the Frenchmen were out of the Gate, they met with the Engliſh, who couching their Spears ran in among them, but the French readily open'd to the Right and Left, and ſo gave them free Paſſage: Whereupon with the quick Motion of their Horſes feet there aroſe ſuch a Duſt, that for the preſent they could hardly ſee or know one another. The mean while the Frenchmen men wiſely cloſed themſelves together, and crying out our Lady of Ribemont, return'd again upon them, and then there began a fierce Medley, many being overthrown on both ſides. The Lord of Chinon had in his hand an heavy Plummet of lead, wherewith he batter'd Helmets, and fell'd to the Earth ſuch as he could light on: For he was a big and ſtrong Knight, and well-form'd of his Limbs. But at laſt he himſelf receiv'd ſuch a ſtroke on the Helmet, that he had fallen to the ground, had he not been held up by an Eſquire next unto him: But the Blow grieved him while he liv'd, which was not long after. Several Engliſh Men wondred to ſee the Lord of Chinon's Banner: For it was [t] of ſix Barrs Varry and Gules; ſo that it ſeem'd the ſame with the Lord of Coucy's Earl of Bedford, for he bare Barry of Viverry and Gules, which made the Engliſh ſay to one another; "How is this, that the Lord of Coucy hath ſent Men hither "againſt us, ſince he ought to be our Friend? This was an hard Rencounter, and fiercely fought on both ſides, but at laſt the Engliſh had the worſt, moſt of them being taken or ſlain; but a few eſcaped back again. The Lord of Boſſut took two Brethren, a Knight and an Eſquire named Pennenorts, Priſoners; and Sr. John Bull had two more, with whom they returned. Preſently after, the whole Engliſh Army marched by Ribemont without any Aſſault or Skirmiſh: And by the Duke of Lancaſter's Order they forbare to commit any Hoſtility in the Lands of the Lord of Coucy, becauſe he was then in Lombardy fighting for the Church againſt Duke Bernabo of Milain, and concern'd himſelf nothing with the Wars of France. Thence the Engliſh Army went and encamped in the Valleys of Laon and thereabouts, between Bruyeres and Creſpy, having done much harm in the Lands of Laonnois: Thô indeed the French King had beforehand cauſed all the Moveables and Proviſion in the Plain Country to be withdrawn into ſtrong Fortreſſes, moſt whereof were ſo well defended, that the Engliſh could expect but little Advantage in Aſſaulting them. Nor did the Duke of Lancaſter much care to buſie himſelf and loſe his time in Attacking of Paltry Towns, which would revolt as ſoon as ever they were won: He rather deſired that the French King would ſend out an Army againſt him, that ſo the Fate of the two Kingdoms might be fairly decided in open Field. But that Politick Prince ne'r intended any ſuch matter, but gave ſtrict Command to the Conſtable and all his other great Captains, that they ſhould not upon any account adventure to engage with the whole Power of the Engliſh; but only follow them cloſe at the Heels, and to keep them as ſhort as might be. And thus it was done, the Frenchmen lying in ſtrong Fortreſſes at nights, and ever in the Day-time following the Engliſh Army aloof; but they knowing, how narrowly they were watched on all Hands, rode cloſe together, the Conſtable of the Hoſt with a good Number of Choſen Men ſecuring the Reer.

[f] Froiſ. c. 310. fol. 191.

AN. DOM. 1373. An. Regni Angliæ XLVII. Franciæ XXXIV.

[t] True Uſe of Armory in the Life of the Captal of Buſche p. 151. Vid. Aſhmole's Garter Plate 39. & Mill's Catal. Honor. p. 440.

One Morning the Engliſh Army having paſs'd Soiſſons, a City between Picardy and Champaigne, there were ſixſcore Engliſh Spears forerunners of the Army, that in ravaging about the Country, fell ſuddenly within the Danger of an Ambuſh of Burgundians and Frenchmen, the Captains whereof were Sr. John de Vien the Younger, Sr. John Bull, Sr. William Bourdes, Sr. Hugh Porcien, Sr. John of Coucy, the Vicount of Meaulx, the Lords of Ravenal and Bonne, and others, who with 300 Spears had all along coaſted the Engliſh, watching to find ſome Advantage againſt them. And that Night they lay in the Field, where they made an Ambuſh in a little Wood hard by Soiſſons; near which the ſixſcore Engliſhmen aforeſaid paſs'd early next Morning to ſeek for Prey and Plunder; the Main Army being lodged a little behind them. As ſoon as they were paſs'd this Wood, the Frenchmen came forth of their Ambuſh, and diſplay'd their Banners and Penons, preparing to engage them. When the Engliſh ſaw ſo conſiderable a Body of the Enemy ſo near unto them, they faced about and ſtood ſtill, to conſider what courſe to take; but firſt of all they ſent Advice to the Army, which was not far behind. Now there was a very conſiderable Captain among the Engliſh, whoſe Name in Froiſard is corruptly written Sr. Walter Manny, whereas by [u] his own Confeſſion, that Noble Lord died at London the Year before. This Gentleman, whatever his true Name was, being not far thence, as ſoon as he heard of the Matter, leap'd ſuddenly on his Horſe, with Spear in Hand, but thrô haſte without either Helmet or Viſor, and ſo rode thither raſhly and without conſideration, his Men following as faſt as they could; but there in the heat of the Fray this Knight was ſtricken thrô the Neck, and fell down Dead, the other Engliſh fought Valiantly; but they were overpower'd, and all taken or ſlain, except a few, that very hardly eſcaped. Theſe Engliſh Knights were there taken Priſoners, Sr. Matthew Redmayne, Sr. Thomas Fowkes, Sr. Hugh Brudnel, Sr. Thomas Spencer, Sr. Thomas Emerton, Sr. Nicolas Gaſcogne, Sr. John Chandler, Sr. Philip Cambray, Sr. John Harpedon, Sr. Matthew Gournay, Sr. Robert [u] Vid. Lib. 4. c. 9. §. 1. p. 827. &c.

An. Dom. 1373. An. Regni Angliæ XLVII. Franciæ XXXIV.

bert Twyford, Sr. Geoffry Say, Sr. John Bourchier, Sr. Geoffry Werkesley, Sr. Lionel Dautrey, and of Esquires William Dautrey, John Galliard, Thomas Bradley, Henry Monford, Guy Hewet, John Meinil, William Gostwick, John Flamstead, Thomas Solerant, William Quintin, Robert Boteler, Robert Audeley, Ralph Stanley, and Thomas Archer. When News came to the English Host how their Forerunners were engaged, the Marshals made haste to send them a Reinforcement, they themselves moving after with a strong Battalion: But all was too late, the Matter by this time was wholly over, and the French and Burgundians had quitted the Field with all their Prisoners, so that the English knew not where to find them. This was the Issue of that Rencountre which happen'd near to Ouchy le Chasteau, not far from Soissons, on the 20 day of * October in the Year of our Lord MCCCLXXIII.

* Nà substituo pro Froisardi Feurier, quia Dux Lancastriæ hanc expeditionem Julio mense aggressus finierat eandem ante Natalem Domini: Quare corruptio sit necesse est.

After these two Losses at Ribemont and Ouchy le Chasteau, there fell no other adventure to the Duke of Lancaster worth the mention: For thô still the Army was fain to go thrô many a straight and hazardous passage; yet ever afterwards they rode all together, or at least in stronger Parties, when they went to Forage: The Duke of Burgundy and other Lords of France watching all Opportunities to cut them off. And still as the French King shew'd any Discontent, when he heard of the Havock they made about in the Country, his Council would say unto him; "Sir, suffer a little longer "and let them go on in Gods Name: for thus they will never be able to wrest your King-"dom from You: They will weary and spend themselves to no purpose; but long they "cannot subsist. For behold, when a Storm or Tempest ariseth; if Men will but keep "within Doors, it wasteth away of it self, without much harm doing; and thus you shall "see it will happen to these Englishmen. And here we shall take our leave for the present of the Duke of Lancaster, and what remains of this Expedition, till we have Dispatched other Matters that fall in this place.

[y] Froiss. c. 311. fol. 191. b.

XIV. It may be remembred, [y] how we spake lately of Sr. Robert Knolles, that he came to his Castle of Derval, which was his Inheritance, and that he wholly cancell'd and brake off the Treaty made between his Men and the Duke of Anjou, who also laid claim to the same Castle, as which had been formerly given unto him by the Lord Charles of Blois, when he took to Wife the said Lord Charles his Daughter: Thô after the Death of the said Lord Charles, John of Monford, the true Duke of Bretagne, gave it to Sr. Robert Knolles, a Knight of England, to him and his Heirs for ever, in Requital of his many signal Services done unto him in all his Wars. Therefore now the Duke of Anjou went in Person before Derval, resolving by Siege or Assault to win the Place: But about the time he first came thither the French King sent hastily unto him, to the Constable, to the Lord Clisson, and all the Knights of Bretagne, Poictou, and the low Marches, and the rest, that lay with the Duke before Derval, commanding them to return with all their Power into France, to assist his Brother, the Duke of Burgundy in coasting and cutting short the Duke of Lancaster, who was then marching thrô France. Upon this the Duke of Anjou sent to those within Derval, urging them to make haste and yield up their Castle, as they had promised. But when the Day was come and past, whereon it was to be deliver'd, and yet no such thing once offer'd, the Duke began to wonder what they meant; for thô he knew how Sr. Robert Knolles was got in with some Succour both of Men and Provision, yet he hop'd, they would not break the Obligation, to which they were bound, and thereby expose the Lives of their Hostages. However not daring to linger much here because of the French Kings Letters, he sent an Herald to Sr. Robert Knolles, and especially to Sr. Hugh Bright, who had made the Agreement with him, which Herald being admitted into the Castle, said, "Gentlemen, my Lords have sent me hither, to "know the Reason, why you don't take care to acquit your Hostages, and deliver up "the Castle, according to Covenant, to which, Sr. Hugh, you are bound by Oath. To this Sr. Robert Knolles answer'd, "Herald, tell your Masters, that without my leave "my Men could make no Composition concerning the Delivery of what was not their "own: Go to them again, and tell them so from me. The Herald return'd with this Answer, and was sent back again with this Message; "Gentlemen, my Lords send you "once again word by Me, how the Composition was, that you should not receive any "one into your Fortress, till the day prefixed; and yet since that Agreement was made, "and before the appointed term of two Months was ended, they have admitted you, "Sr. Robert Knolles, into their Fortress, which they ought not to have done. Where-"fore, Sir, know for certain, that unless you yield up the Castle forthwith, your Ho-"stages shall lose their Heads. "Herald, answer'd Sr. Robert, for all the Menacing of "your Masters, I will not lose my Castle so, by God! Tell them they may do their "worst

"worst; but if so be that the Duke put my Men to Death, let him know, that I shall serve "him like for like: For here within I have both Knights and Esquires of France my Prisoners; and thô I might have an 100000 Franks for their Ransom, yet they shall surely "die every Man of them, if he offers to do so to the Hostages. With this Answer the Herald went his way, and reported what he had heard: Presently whereupon the Duke of Anjou, all enflam'd, as he was, with Anger, call'd for the Executioner, and caused the Hostages, being two Knights and an Esquire of England, to be brought before the Castle, whose Heads were all immediately struck off in sight of Sr. Robert and his Men. Then the enraged Sr. Robert Knolles caused a broad board to be thrust out at one of the Hall Windows, and four Prisoners, which he had there with him, Three Knights, and One Esquire, for whom he might have had a great Ransom, all these he order'd to be brought thither, and so the Executioner struck off their Heads, flinging down their Bodies one way and their Heads another into the Ditch.

AN. DOM. 1373. An. Regni Angliæ XLVII. Franciæ XXXIV.

After this unhappy sight the Frenchmen brake up their Siege, and went all into France, the Duke of Anjou returning to Paris to the King, his Brother. But the Constable, the Lord Oliver Clisson, and the rest rode toward the City of Troyes in Champaigne; for the English were then in the Marches thereabout having passed the Marne, and directing their Course toward Auxerre.

XV. Now since the Christian Religion, which might chiefly expect to be Defended by the Arms of the French and English, being destitute almost of all Aid, was in a manner overwhelmed by the Victories of the Infidels; it is to be remembred, that Pope Gregory XI, had the last Year induced the Two Kings to hold a Treaty at Calais: But that being dissolved without any good effect, he again prevail'd with them to hold another at Bruges this Year, and therewithall [z] sollicited both Edward and Charles to embrace peaceable Counsels: To which that he might prepare the Minds of those Nobles, who were to be on both sides at this Treaty in the Names of the Two Kings, he directs his Letters also to them; wherein having set forth the Miseries of Christendom in General, arising from this Discord, he gives them a shrew'd innuendo, that those of them, who shall be found to be in Fault, if Peace doth not ensue, are to expect no less then the Utmost the Church can inflict.

[z] Greg. XI. Tom. 2. Epist. sec. p. 237, 238, 239. Vid. Odor. Rainal. ad hunc annum §. 22.

"GREGORY the Bishop, servant of the servants of God, to his Dear Sons in "Christ, the Ambassadors of our Most Dear Son in Christ, Edward the Illustrious King "of England, Commissioned to treat of, and to reform a Peace between Him and our "most Dear Son in Christ, Charles the Illustrious King of France, at Bruges, in the "Diœcese of Tournay, Greeting, and Apostolical Benediction. Considering, how much "the Hostile Commotion of the Two Kings, so long radicated, and so hurtfull to the "whole World, hath been, and is, prejudicial to the Affairs of the Holy Land, and not "only induces the Babylonish Tyrant to the Destruction of Christians, but hath also lately administred unto many Infidels, the Courage to seise on the Lands of Christians, "and to extinguish the [a] Name of the Christian Religion; and that if the said Infidels shall perceive, that Discord shall endure between the said Kings of England and "France, and Concord shall be banished, of their wonted madness they will arise more "Couragiously and boldly against the Christians and their Lands, and will assume the "greater Confidence to bring upon Christian Kings, Kingdoms and People more heavy, "and pernicious Troubles, than before, to the Execution whereof the foresaid most "wicked Infidels do already (as is said) prepare and dispose themselves: And not be"ing able any longer to endure the like War and Discord, as also weighing, and often "revolving, that We and our Predecessors, Popes of Rome, by frequent sending both "Cardinals of the Holy Roman Church, and divers other Nuntio's of the Apostolick "See to those Parts, have in this point shewn what Diligence, We could; since We "cannot see any further Remedy, if this Concord and Peace cannot be perfected, We "intend not any longer to delay; but forthwith to proceed without any Favour, Justice "always being our Guide, against that Party (of the two) which shall appear to be the "Occasion thereof, and all its Favourers, Counsellers, and Assistants whatsoever, by Eccle"siastical Censures, and other Remedies of Law. Dat. Aven. III Non. Jan. An°. Pont. II.

[a] Lat. aliàs, & ad Religionem Christiani Nominis extinguendam.

The same [b] Letters only mutatis mutandis were sent to the Ambassadors of the French King at the same time. But the Rancour of their Minds was too great, and the Difficulty of adjusting Affairs to both their satisfaction too impracticable, to admit of any tolerable Agreement at this time: Thô Simon of the Title of St. Sixtus, and John of the Title of the Four-Crowned-Saints, being sent unto the Two Kings, and much stirr'd up by the Popes Letters, are reported to have spared no pains in the Affair.

[b] Tom. 2. Ep. secret. p. 237. Vid. Odoric. Rainald. ibid.

This was in the beginning of the Year, as appears by the Date of the Pope's Letters; but

An. Dom. 1373. An. Regni Angliæ XLVII. Franciæ XXXIV.

but now, when the Duke of Lancaſter was thus upon his March thrô France, and all things tended to a Deſperate War, the Pope ſent again into France his two Legates, the Archbiſhop of Rouën, and the Biſhop of Carpentras, to treat of a Peace, if poſſible, between the Two Kings. Theſe Pious Prelates took much Pains in riding too and fro between the French King and his Brethren on the One Part, and the Duke of Lancaſter on the other, but all to no purpoſe: For all the while the Engliſh Duke rode forward, as we have partly ſhew'd, piercing thrô, and ravaging from Artois and Picardy, thrô Champaigne, Burgundy, Beaujolois, le Foreſtes, Auvergne, and Limoſin; by the Loire, even to the Lot, Dordogne, and Garonne, Rivers of Guienne.

[c] Froiſ. Gallicè fol. 257. a.

XVI. Much part [c] of this long way, being at that time the whole extent of the Kingdom of France, gave indeed great trouble to the Engliſh; beſides thoſe few Loſſes We have related; for not to mention the many Difficulties incident to ſuch a long March, eſpecially when Proviſion was ſo hard to be got, the Duke of Lancaſter loſt many, both Men and Horſes, thrô ſome ſecret indiſpoſition: From which neither were the Frenchmen free; for there died ſeveral of them, and particularly three Lords of Hainalt, as the Lord Fatieres of Berlammont, the Lord Bridol of Montagne, and the Begue of Werlan. But there was no ſuch Matter, as ſome Hiſtorians too raſhly report, namely, that the Duke of Lancaſter's Army of 30000 was reduced only to 6000 by that time he came to Bourdeaux; unleſs it be meant, that he had no more Horſes left. For of them it muſt be confeſſed, how there periſhed a great Number for want of Fodder, as well becauſe all Provender was convey'd away into ſtrong Places, as becauſe the French King by his ſeveral flying Parties kept them from Foraging: So that whatever they got was dearly bought, and not fetch'd in to the Army without many Hands. Wherefore more wiſely doth Honeſt [d] Fabian ſay from the French Writers themſelves, that thô indeed this Expedition was Honourable to the Engliſh, becauſe they rode thrô the whole Realm of France unfought withall, yet was it alſo exceeding troubleſome and chargeable unto them, conſidering the many miſchiefs they met withall in their long March, eſpecially the great Loſs of Horſes.

[d] Fabian p. 258.

When the Duke of Lancaſter had paſt the Loire about Roanne, he was informed how the Frenchmen prepar'd to entertain him, as they ſhould find opportunity, with ſundry Ambuſcadoes. Wherefore he preſently [e] ſet his light Horſemen with a Diviſion of Archers in the Front: and in the Main Battail, where he himſelf was with the Duke of Bretagne, the whole Force of his Footmen, and Men of Arms on each ſide for Wings to cover them: The Reſt of the Horſe with the other Diviſion of Archers he appointed to be in the Reer, and having commanded them all to March cloſe together in this Order, he thus fruſtrated all further attempts of his Enemies, and came in ſafety into Poictou, where in Revenge of their Defection from England he began a new ſpoil, killing and ranſoming the people, waſting the Country, and firing the Towns, whereever he came, till at laſt he arrived at Bergerac in his way to Bourdeaux, the Frenchmen always following, till he came thither, at the tail, and coaſting him as they ſaw occaſion, without any further Advantage, than what we have mention'd. But the Duke of Anjou having left Paris, and joyn'd the Conſtable, rode above towards Rouvergue, Rodez, and Tholouſe; but at laſt they return'd to Perigort; where the two Legates then were, having rode between the two Parties, preaching and laying many ſound Reaſons before them, to bring them to ſome Agreement; but they were both ſo harden'd, that neither would admit of Peace, without ſome apparent Advantage, which the other would not grant. So about the beginning of November the Duke of Lancaſter came to Bourdeaux; where both he and the Duke of Bretagne lay all that Winter and the Lent following; only ſome few taking their leave, now the Campaine was over, among whom the Lord Ralph Baſſet of Sapcote with his Retinue went back into England; whereat the King was much diſpleas'd, and chode him ſeverely; that he would offer to return without his Lord and General.

[e] Poly d. Virg. & Holinſh. p. 994.

Of this Expedition we are to obſerve, that ſome thrô largeneſs of ſpeech have made it to begin in Flanders; whereas it is to be underſtood, as We have ſhewn, at Calais, which confines on Flanders. And ſo Sr. William Dugdale is to be expounded, who ſpeaks of an Expedition this Year made into Flanders; wherein he [f] ſays were preſent the Lord Edward Spencer, the Lord * John Falveſle, the Lord John Willoughby, the Lord John Burwaſh, the Lord John Mohun, and the Canon Robſart, all who were notoriouſly in this Expedition. And indeed our [g] old M.S. ſo often quoted, makes this Expedition into Flanders, and that which We have treated of, to be the ſame; in theſe Words, Soon after the Duke of Lancaſter with a great Hoſt went into Flanders, and paſſed by Paris thorough Burgundy, and thorough all France, till he came to Bourdeaux without any manner of withſtanding of the Frenchmen, &c.

[f] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 396.
* Id. 2 Vol. p. 173.
[g] M.S. vet. Ang. in Bibl. C.C.C. Cantab. c. 236.

XVII. But

AN. DOM. 1373. An. Regni Angliæ XLVII. Franciæ XXXIV.

XVII. But now it is time to look a little at Home, where Matters concerning the Government were concerted; and from whence indeed all Publick Actions had their first springs and Motion. King Edward had [h] ſummon'd his High Court of Parliament to meet Him this Year at Weſtminſter, on the next Day after St. Edmund the King, that is, on the 20 of November, which fell then on a Sunday. To which Parliament as Dr. William de Lynne, alias Lulimere, Biſhop of Worceſter, [i] was taking Horſe to ride, he was ſuddenly ſeized with an Apoplexy, whereof he died ſoon after, viz. on the 18 of November, two days before the Parliament was to ſit.

On the Sunday [k] Morning Proclamation was made in Weſtminſter Hall, that all thoſe who had been ſummon'd to the Parliament might for the preſent depart, but ſo as to be ready the next Morning in the Painted Chamber, to hear the Cauſes, why the King had call'd them together.

Accordingly the next Day Sr. John Knivet Lord Chancellor of England, before the King, Prince, Lords and Commons declared. "How becauſe the Peace was broken "by the French, the King to reſiſt his Adverſaries, and to obtain his own Right had "ſent over ſeveral conſiderable Armies, and now laſtly his Son the King of Caſtille "and [l] Leon, and Duke of Lancaſter, who had atchieved many great Exploits to the "Overthrow of his Enemies, and had acquitted himſelf right Nobly. How further his "Majeſty had ſet forth a Royal Navy of Ships; towards all which thô the Subject "had for his Part given a liberal Supply, yet the Prince was at infinite more Charges "than that amounted to. He put them alſo in Mind, that ſuch Nobles and others, "who hazarded their Lives for the Defence of the whole Realm, ought ſpeedily to be "reinforced with new Supplies and Aſſiſtance; and the rather becauſe the Enemy never "made himſelf more ſtrong by Sea and by Land than at that time. Wherefore the King wil-"led them throughly to weigh thoſe Matters, conſidering that becauſe the Winter Seaſon "began to wear away, their Reſolves ought therefore to be the more ſpeedy as to the "next Campain. Upon this they were all licenſed to adjourn till the next Day. Then certain of the Houſe of Commons coming unto the Houſe of Lords requeſted, that certain of the Lords, whoſe Names are in the Records of this Parliament, would vouchſafe to confer with the Commons: To which the ſaid Lords condeſcending went preſently into the Chamberlain's Chamber, there to treat with the Houſe of Commons. On the Thurſday in the Week before the Feaſt of St. Andrew, being the 24 of November, the Lords and Commons, after Conſultation had, agreed upon a Grant to the King for aid of his Wars, as is contained at large in a Schedule Indented, thô without any Seals thereunto annexed, the Effect whereof followeth, viz. "The Lords and "Commons grant unto the Kings Majeſty two Fifteens to be paid in two Years, of e-"very Twenty Shillings of Merchandiſe coming into the Realm, or going out, Sixpence "for two Years, except of Wooll-Skins and Wooll-Fells; alſo the Subſidie of Wooll "for two Years, on Condition, that if the Wars do ceaſe within two Years, then the "latter Payment of all their Grants to ceaſe. And they humbly pray, that theſe Grants "may be employ'd upon the Wars, and they pray, that every Ship may have their Com-"miſſions without any thing paying; alſo they pray further, that none of the Houſe "of Commons may be appointed to be a Collector of any of theſe Grants. This Schedule being deliver'd to the King was read before him, after which the Commons requeſted an Anſwer of their Petitions, which was promiſed; the chief whereof were theſe. That the Great Charter and Charters of the Foreſt be kept. It pleaſeth the King. That the City of London, and all other Cities and Towns may enjoy their Liberties, any Statute notwithſtanding. Let any ſhew the breaches in particular, and they ſhall be anſwer'd. That the Staple be kept in Calais, and no Patent or Grant be made to the contrary. The King will appoint the Staple as to him and his Council ſhall ſeem beſt. Certain Counties there named do pray, that for their more eaſie Carriage of Woolls, a Staple may be at Lynne. The King granteth thereto, ſo that ſtill the Staple at Yarmouth ſhall continue. That as for the Tythe of Wood above Twenty Years Growth, it may be Enacted, that no Tythe ſhall be due, and that in all ſuch Caſes a Prohibition may be granted. Such Prohibition ſhall be granted, as hath heretofore been uſed. That Remedy may be had againſt the Chirographer, becauſe he will not engroſs any Fine within the Terme, untill the Foot of the Fine be fretted, unleſs he may have Three Shillings and Four Pence, or [n] Four Shillings more than his due Fee of [n] Four Shillings. Let the Aggrieved come to the Common-Pleas and he ſhall have Right. That the Statute of Labourers may be executed four times in the Year; and that the Juſtices may be removed for not doing their Duty. The King granteth thereto. That Villenage may be only tried where it is laid, and no where elſe. The King meaneth not to alter the Law

as

[h] M.S. Rot. Par. p. 112. & Sr. Rob. Cotton's Abridgment p. 115. & 116. Lit. Dom. B.

[i] Godw. Catal. Biſh. p. 444.

[k] M.S. Rot. Par. & Sr. Rob. Cotton ibid.

[l] Aragon in M.S. & Sr. Rob. Cotton malé.

[n] Ita M.S. ſed 40 s. Sr. Rob. Cotton.

An. Dom. 1373. An. Regni Angliæ XLVII. Franciæ XXXIV.

as to this point. That Masters of Ships shall be paid their Wages for them and their Mariners from the Day of their being appointed to serve the King. The taking up of Ships shall not be but upon Necessity, and the Payment shall be reasonable as heretofore. The said Masters of Ships request, that they may have Allowance for the Tackling of their Ships worn out in the King's Service. Such Allowance hath not been made heretofore. The Commons request Remedy against the Provisions of the Pope, whereby he reaps the First-Fruits of Ecclesiastical Dignities, the Treasure of the Realm being thereby convey'd away, which they cannot bear. The King hath already Honourable Ambassadors at the Court of Rome, touching these Grievances, before whose Return he cannot well answer as to that point. [And it is to be understood, [n] that not long before the King had sent the Ambassadors aforesaid to Avignon to require of Pope Gregory, that as to the Reservation of Benefices of England made in his Court, he would supersede Medling for the future, that Clergymen might freely enjoy their Elections to Episcopal Dignities; and that it might be sufficient for them to be confirmed by their Metropolitans, as was the Antient Custom. Upon these and the like Abuses they required Remedy of the Pope, concerning all which Articles the said Ambassadors had certain Answers from his Holiness, touching which the Pope enjoyned them upon their Return into England to certifie him by their Letters of the King's Will, and of his Realm; and also that they would press the King to let him first know what he and his Council design'd to do, before they proceeded to determine any thing as to the Premises: The Result whereof we shall refer to the next Year. However in this Parliament it was Enacted, That Cathedral Churches should enjoy their own Elections, and that for the future the King should not write against the Persons so Elected; but rather by his Ltters endeavour their Confirmation if need were: But this Statute availed not much afterward.] The [o] Burgesses of Bristow in this Parliament require, that the said Town with the Suburbs thereof may be a County of it self, and that the Perambulation of the same with the Bounds thereof returned into the Chancery, with all the Liberties and Charters thereto granted, may be confirmed by Act of Parliament. The King is content to grant, that the Charters, Liberties and Perambulation aforesaid may be confirmed under the Great Seal. That no French Prior Alien be permitted to dwell within twenty Miles of the Sea-Coast for several Reasons there specified. The King by his Council will provide therefore. That Remedy may be had, that Men be not called into the Exchequer upon Suggestion without Process contrary to the Statute made in the 42 Year of the King. Let any particular Man complain and he shall find Remedy.

[n] Walsing. hist. p. 183. n. 20. & M.S. Vet. Angl. in Bibl. C.C.C. Cantab. c. 236. Caxton, &c.

[o] M.S. Rot. Par. ut ante & Sr. Rob. Cotton ibid.

After this the Lord Chancellor in the Kings Name gave great Thanks to the Lords and Commons, and so this Session ended.

It is to be observed, that the Printed Statute touching the Assize of Broad Cloath Cap. 1. agreeth with the Record: As also that Cap. 2. touching Scottish Silver Coin.

XVIII. This Year it is reported, [p] that there happen'd in Italy, France and England, especially in the Lower Countries, a certain Maniack Passion or Frenzy unknown to former Ages: for those who were tormented therewith, which for the most part were the Scum of the People, stript themselves stark naked, put Garlands of Flowers on their Heads, and taking one another by the Hands, went about in the streets and into the Churches, dancing, singing and turning round with such vehemence, that they would fall down to the ground quite out of Breath. This Agitation made them swell so prodigiously, that within an Hours time they would burst, unless some-body took care to bind their Bellies about with strong Swathing-bands. Those who looked on them too earnestly, were often tainted with the same Malady: It was thought to have come by some Diabolical Operation, and that Exorcisms did much prevail against it. The Vulgar called it St. John's Dance.

[p] Mezeray ad hunc ann. p. 92. & Odor. Rainal. ad an. 1374. §. 13. ex Chron. Belg. & Joh. Leyd. &c.

XIX. There died [q] about this time a valiant Baron of England, named the Lord Miles Stapleton, one * of the Founders of the most Noble Order of the Garter, leaving behind Thomas his Son and Heir, then of full Age, who yet died also this same Year without Issue, leaving his Sister Elizabeth his next Heir, she being then married to Sr. Thomas Metham: Which Sr Thomas having at that time Issue by her, and doing his Homage, had Livery of the Lands of her Inheritance.

[q] Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 70. b. * Vid. Lib. 1. c. 22. § 7. p. 298.

There died [r] also this Year Dr. John Thoresby Archbishop of York, and Dr. John Barnet Bishop of Ely, besides the Bishop of Worcester, of whose Death we spake at the beginning of the last Parliament: Alexander Nevile succeeded in the See of York, Thomas Fitz-Alan younger Son to the Earl of Arundel, in that of Ely, and Henry Wakefield in that of Worcester.

[r] Walsing. hist. p. 183. Vid. Godwins Catal. Bish. &c.

CHAP.

CHAPTER the ELEVENTH.

The CONTENTS.

I. King Edward inquires into the Livings then in the Hands of Aliens; with his Letters to the Biſhop of Wincheſter for that purpoſe. II. He ſends Commiſſioners to treat with the Popes Legates about the Premiſſes; with the Copy of their Commiſſion, and the Effect of their Treaty. III. The Duke of Anjou's Expedition into Gaſcogne. IV. A Truce between the Dukes of Lancaſter and Anjou. V. The Lords of High Gaſcoſgne yield to the Duke of Anjou, who takes in all 40 Towns and Caſtles from the Engliſh. VI. Becherel for want of ſuccour yields. VII. Sr. Hugh Chaſtillon Maſter of the Croſsbows of France is redeem'd, with an Adventure between him and the Lord of Gomegines Captain of Ardres for King Edward. VIII. A Treaty at Bruges, concerning a Peace between the two Crowns, wherein Care is had of the Earl of Pembroke and others taken formerly by the Spaniards; with the Death of the ſaid Earl of Pembroke, and ſome Obſervations thereon. IX. The Death of Francis Petrarch Laureat Poet of Italy, and ſome other Conſiderable Perſons of England. X. An Account of Madam Alice Perrers, who was falſly ſaid to be King Edward's Concubine.

I. KING Edward being perpetually alarum'd as well in Parliament as otherwiſe by his Subjects, who complain'd of the many great Abuſes done unto Him and his Authority by the See of Rome; as of their Reſervations and other Arts, whereby they entrenched upon his Prerogative Royal, and the Liberties of the Church of England, exhauſting his Kingdom to enrich Strangers, and ſuch as were his Enemies; the King I ſay, being now throughly awaken'd at theſe Cries of his People, among other notable Ways, whereby he encountred theſe Uſurpations, began [a] at this time to require an exact Survey of all Benefices and Dignities Eccleſiaſtical throughout his Dominions, which were then in the Hands of Italians, Frenchmen or other Aliens, with a true Valuation of the ſame; and ſent unto all his Biſhops his Royal Commiſſion to make ſuch Enquiry; the Tenor whereof followeth.

[a] Fox Acts & Monum. p. 560.

"EDWARD by the Grace of God King of England and France, and Lord of Ire- "land, to the Right Reverend Father in God William by the ſame Grace, Biſhop of "Wincheſter, Greeting. Being willing (for certain Reaſons Us thereunto moving) to "be certified what and how many Benefices, as well Archdeaconries and other Digni-"ties, as Vicarages, Parſonages, Prebends and Chapters, within your Diœceſe, there
"be at this preſent in the Hands of Italians and other Strangers; what they be, and
"of what Value, and how every of the ſaid Benefices are named, and how much eve"ry of them is worth by the Year, not as by way of Tax or Extent, but according to "the true and full Value of the ſame: As alſo to know the Names of all and ſingular
"ſuch Strangers as are now Incumbents, or occupy the ſame, and of every of them: Like-
"wiſe the Names of all thoſe whether Engliſh or Strangers, of what State or Conditi"on ſoever they be, who have the Occupation or Diſpoſal of any ſuch Benefices, with "the Fruits and Profits of the ſame, on the Behalf or by Authority of any of the "foreſaid Strangers by way of Farm, Title or Procuration, or by any other way or "means whatſoever, and how long they have occupied or diſpoſed of the ſame; and "withall, if any of the ſaid Strangers be now reſident upon any of the ſaid Benefices:
"We command you, as heretofore We have done, to ſend Us a true Certificate of "all and ſingular the Premiſes into our High Court of Chancery, under your Seal di-
"ſtinctly and openly, before the [b] Feaſt of the Aſcenſion of our Lord next coming,
"without further delay, returning alſo this our Writ at the ſame time. Witneſs our "Self at Weſtminſter the 16 Day of April in the 48 Year of our Reign of England,
"and of France 35.

[b] Whitſunday fell this Year on the 21 of May. Lit. Dom. A. Paſcha 2 April.

By Vertue of this Writ, Certificate was accordingly ſent up to the King into his Chancery out of every Diœceſe in England, of all ſuch Spiritual Livings, as were then in the Occupation either of Priors Aliens, or of other Strangers; whereof the Number is ſaid to have been ſo great, that it would take up ſeveral ſheets of Paper, to ſet them all down. Wherefore it ſeem'd high time for the King to ſeek a Remedy in that Caſe, either by Treaty with the Pope, or otherwiſe; conſidering, what a vaſt proportion of the Revenues of his Realm, was by this means convey'd away, being either employ'd to the Relief of his Enemies, or however of ſuch, who were neither his Subjects nor Friends. An Inſtance whereof may be ſeen in Mr. Fox his Acts and Monuments at the laſt Year of the Reign of King Edward III.

An. Dom. 1374. An. Regni Angliæ XLVIII. Franciæ XXXV.

II. Shortly after the Return of the ſaid Certificates, the King ſent Mr. John Wickliffe, who was afterwards an Eminent Reformer in England, and at that time Divinity Profeſſor in the Famous Univerſity of Oxford, together with certain others, his Ambaſſadors beyond the Seas, with full Commiſſion to treat with the Pope's Legates concerning the foreſaid Matters, and other Affairs then depending between his Holineſs and the King. The Tenor of their Commiſſion runs thus, viz.

* Fox Acts & Mon. p. 554. & al. Edit. p. 390.

Rex Univerſis, ad quorum notitiam præſentes literæ pervenerint, &c.* "The King, "unto All, to whoſe knowledge theſe Preſent Letters ſhall come, Greeting. Know Ye, "that We repoſing aſſured Confidence in the Integrity and Abilities of the Reverend "Father John Biſhop of Bangor, and other our loving and Loyal Subjects, as Maſter "John Wickliffe, Reader of the Divinity Lecture, Maſter John Guttern Dean of Sego- "via, and Maſter Simon Multon, Dr. of the Law, Sr. William Burton Knight, Maſter "John Belknap, and Maſter John Honington, have directed them, as our Ambaſſadors "and ſpecial Commiſſioners to the Parts beyond the Seas; giving unto our ſaid Ambaſ- "ſadors and Commiſſioners, or to any Six or Five of them (among whom I will that "the ſaid Biſhop ſhall be One) full Power and Authority, with ſpecial Command to "treat and conſult mildly and charitably with the Legates and Ambaſſadors of our Lord, "the Pope, touching certain Affairs (about which We before have ſent the ſaid Biſhop, "William Vghtred Monk of Durham, and Maſter John Shepey to the Apoſtolick See) "and to make full Relation of all things done and tranſacted in the ſaid Aſſembly: That "all thoſe things, which may tend to the Honour of Holy Church, and the Advance- "ment of our Crown and this our Realm, may by the Aſſiſtance of God, and the Wiſ- "dom of the Apoſtolick See, be brought to good effect and accompliſhed. Witneſs our "ſelf at London the 26 day of July in the 48 Year of our Reign.

Theſe Commiſſioners were met at Bruges about the beginning of Auguſt by the Pope's Nuntio's, Bernard, alias Benedict, Biſhop of Pampelone, and Ladulph, or Rodulph Biſhop of Senigaglia, and Giles Sancho, Provoſt of the Church of Valenza: Who were likewiſe commiſſion'd from the Pope to treat [c] Concerning the Liberties of the Church of England, and of the Prelates and other Eccleſiaſtical Perſons of the ſaid Realm of England. But this Treaty held off and on for about two Years after; when at laſt it was concluded, [d] that for the future the Pope ſhould deſiſt from making uſe of Reſervations of Benefices, and that the King ſhould no more confer Benefices by his Writ, Quare Impedit. But as to the Elections aforeſaid, concerning which Ambaſſadors had been ſent to the Court of Rome the Year before, there was nothing mention'd in this Treaty. The Reaſon whereof was aſcribed to the Politick Dealing of ſome, who knew, they could more eaſily attain to the Epiſcopal Dignities, which they aim'd at, by the Court of Rome, then by due and regular Elections; that is, rather by Money, Favour, and Intereſt, than by any true Worth or Merit of their own.

[c] Odor. Rainald. ad hunc annum §. 21. quem vide ſis.

[d] Walſingh. hiſt. p. 184. n. 10. & Churchill's Divi Britannici p. 36.

III. But now 'tis time to ſee, what Deeds of War were performed this Year, or rather what Advantage France gain'd, and what Loſſes England ſuffer'd; for things were grown to that paſs at this time. Soon [e] after Eaſter the Duke of Anjou, being at Perigueux raiſed a great Army conſiſting of 15000 Footmen, beſides a conſiderable Number of Genoüeſe and Croſsbows, and the moſt part of all the Barons and Knights of Bretagne, Poictou, Anjou, and Touraine; with whom alſo the Conſtable of France was joyned, and ſeveral Lords of Gaſcogne, as the Lord John of Armagnac, the Lords of Albret and of Perigort, the Earls of Cominges and of Narbonne, the Vicounts of Carmaine, and of Villemur, and of Talart, the Earl Dauphin of Auvergne, the Vicount of Mende, the Lord de la Barde, Sr Robert of Charde, and the greater part of the Lords of Auvergne and Limoſin. With this Great Army the Duke of Anjou marched towards High Gaſcogne, and came before Mont de Marſan, which having took, he proceeded to St. Sever, whereof an Abbot was Lord, who thô the Town was ſtrong, yet doubting to loſe it by force, fell to treat with the Duke of Anjou, telling him, "that his Town and Fortreſs was but a ſmall Matter in reſpect of other "Towns and Caſtles in High Gaſcogne, whither he ſuppos'd his Highneſs was march- "ing: Wherefore he deſir'd that for the preſent he might be let alone, on Con- "dition, that neither He, nor His ſhould make any War, unleſs ſome Violence was "offer'd on the French part: But that if the Heritors and Lords of Gaſcogne ſhould "be [e] Froiſ. c. 311. fol. 192.

"be reduced by him, then he alſo would yield up unto him, and in all things do, as "they ſhould do. To this the Duke agreed, receiving of the Abbot Hoſtages for his true performance; which Pledges he ſent to Perigueux, and ſo drew toward the Town of Lourde in Bigorre, to which he laid his Siege, and then ſummon'd the Garriſon to yield. The Townſmen would willingly have agreed to the motion; but the Knight, that govern'd the Place, ſaid ſtoutly; "That ſince the Earl of Foix had deliver'd it to "his Care, he was reſolv'd by no means to reſign it up into the hands of any other "Perſon living. With which anſwer the Conſtable and the Duke of Anjou were ſo nettled, that they commanded a general Aſſault to be made: So that at laſt the Place was carried by force, and the Captain and moſt of his Men ſlain, with all the Inhabitants, Men, Women, and Children, and the Town raſed and given up to the Plunder. Nevertheleſs they left a Garriſon in the Caſtle at their Departure. Thence they Marched into the Lands belonging to Chaſtel Bon, ravaging all about as far as Chaſtelneuf, which they took, and thence Marching toward Bearn, they enter'd the Land of the Lord of Leſcar, whence they rode, till they came before a good ſtrong Town and Caſtle, named Sailles, which held of the County of Foix; thô all the Lands and Arriere-fiefs lay in Gaſcogne.

AN. DOM. 1374. An. Regni Angliæ XLVIII. Franciæ XXXV.

The Black-Prince, before his Expedition into Spain, had intended to call the Earl of Foix to an Account, becauſe he paid not his Duties unto him for this Place: And now alſo the Duke of Anjou, who had by this time reduced in a manner all Aquitain, and look'd upon himſelf as Maſter thereof, reſolv'd by any means to have this Place alſo. So he laid his Siege unto Sailles; which was not at all eaſie to be won, and beſide there was within a Valiant and Expert Captain, named Sr. William de Pons.

When the Earl of Foix heard, how the Frenchmen conquer'd in his Lands and Arriereſiefs, which in reaſon he ought to hold either of the French King, or of the King of England, he ſent for the Vicount of Chaſtel Bon, for the Lords of Mont Marſan, of Chaſtelneuve and Leſcar, with the Abbot of St. Sever, who being all come to him, he purchas'd a ſafe-Conduct, and ſo went before Sailles to the Duke of Anjou, with the foreſaid Lords in his Company. There at laſt he agreed with the Duke, "That both "He and they with all their Lands, ſhould remain in perfect Peace, till the midſt of Au- "guſt, or the Feaſt of the Aſſumption of the bleſſed Virgin Mary: At which time there "ſhould appear before the Town of Moiſſac on the Tarne in the Province of Quercy, an "Army of the French Kings, or of the King of England's part: And if the Engliſh Ar-"my could keep the Field, then they would hold their Lands of the King of England: "and if the French Army could keep the Field that day, either by Battle, or Non-ap-"pearance of the Enemy, then they would hold their Lands of the King of France for "ever. Which Covenant faithfully to perform both the Earl of Foix, and the other Lords gave ſufficient ſecurity, and ſo the Duke of Anjou brake up his Siege, and went back to Perigueux with his whole Army: For he would not let a Man be disbanded.

IV. But however Pope Gregory XI did now ſo double his Diligence in plying the Chriſtian Work of Peacemaking by his Legates; that at laſt a Treaty began between the Duke of Lancaſter and the Duke of Anjou, aſſurances being given to the latter at Perigueux, for the Former held himſelf as Chief, being Regent, as he ſaid, for the King of England, his Father. So at laſt a firm Truce was agreed on to be held faithfully, and without Fraud between Them and all their Friends, Vaſſals, and Aſſiſtants, untill the laſt day of Auguſt; the Two Dukes engaging to be preſent in the Marches of Picardy about the beginning of September, in Order to prolong the ſaid Truce; the Duke of Lancaſter at Calais, and the Duke of Anjou at St. Omers. Which Truce being thus taken, the ſaid Duke of Lancaſter, with the Duke of Bretagne, the Earls of Warwick, Suffolk, and Stafford, the Lord Edward Spencer, the Lord Henry Percy, the Lord Chanon Robſart, the Lord Willoughby, and other Lords and Knights both of England and Gaſcogne, went on board at Bourdeaux on the Eighth of July, and ſet ſail for England: Upon [f] which Return of the Duke of Lancaſter, the People of thoſe Parts almoſt totally revolted, nothing being left in Aquitaine, but Bourdeaux and Bayonne. In Bretagne alſo the Captains of Becherel, as Sr. John Cornwall, and Sr. John Appleyard, who had now kept that Fortreſs a full Year againſt the French, that beſieged them, when they heard, how the Duke of Bretagne was gone back into England, and that now they had no hopes of any timely Succour, eſpecially ſince their Victuals was almoſt ſpent, upon Mature Advice, reſolved to treat with their Enemies, and to come to ſome agreeable Compoſition. The Lords of Bretagne and Normandy, that lay there at Siege, as the Lord of Hambie, Stoneville, Blanville, and Granville, were by this time very weary, and would willingly enter into any kind of Treaty; but they thought beſt to know the French Kings Mind firſt, and when they found, that he agreed to allow their Treaty, they determin'd the Matter thus: "That if the Duke of Bretagne, or ſome "other from the King of England, did not come perſonally, between that time and the "Feaſt of All-Saints then next coming, ſtrong enough to raiſe the Siege; then they "within were to yield up the Place, their Lives and Goods ſaved. Which was done "accordingly, (None appearing at the time appointed in their behalf) and Sr. John Corn-"wall, and Sr. John Appleyard with their Men and Goods took the Sea and return'd for England.

[f] Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 115. & Walſing. hiſt. p. 183. n. 40.

An. Dom. 1374. An. Regni Angliæ XLVIII. Franciæ XXXV.

[g] Froiſ. c. 312.

V. When [g] the Middle of Auguſt drew near, which was the time limited for the Deciſion of High Gaſcogne to be made before Moiſſac, the Duke of Anjou drew thitherward with an huge Army, and kept the Field before the Place ſix days together: All which time no body appeared for King Edward. For the Engliſh all thought, that becauſe of the Truce lately taken between the Dukes of Anjou and Lancaſter (which was to hold to the laſt of Auguſt) the Deſign about Moiſſac was to be given over. But the Duke of Anjou and his Council were, it ſeems, of another Mind, and reſolved to take all Advantages they could, without troubling their Heads with unprofitable Scruples of Honour, Faith and Juſtice. So when the Duke of Anjou ſaw once the Feaſt of the Aſſumption paſt over without the appearance of any One in the King of England's behalf, he ſent word to the Earl of Foix, the Vicount of Chaſtel-Bon, to the Lords of Mont de Marſan, of Chaſtelneuve, and of Leſcar, and to the Abbot of St. Sever, letting them know, that if they did not now ſtand to their Bargain, he would forthwith put all their Hoſtages to Death, and after that enter their Lands with ſuch a Power, as to oblige them all to cry Mercy. Hereupon they all freely ſubmitted themſelves, and their Lands to the Obedience of the French King; and the Inhabitants alſo of Moiſſac, which was a Fair Garriſon, open'd their Gates and their Chief Burgeſſes went out with the Keys to the Duke of Anjou, rendring their Fealty and Homage unto him, as unto the French Kings Lieutenant. Then the Duke and all the Lords with him enter'd the Town and tarried there 18 days; during which time they had Counſel, which way to draw next; for the Month of Auguſt was paſt, at which time the Truce was ended; and as yet there was no News of the Duke of Lancaſter's being at Calais to renew the Truce, wherefore now again the War was open.

So after this Succeſs the Duke went with his Army before la Reole; which he beſieged three days, and on the Fourth was received into the Town, the Inhabitants returning to the Obedience of the French King. After that the Duke took in Langon, St. Macari, Condom, St. Bazeille, or Baſil, la Tour de la Prudence, Mauleon & la Tour de Drû, and other Towns and Caſtles to the Number of Fourty in all; the laſt being the ſtrong Town of Auberoche in Perigort, in all which he ſet good Garriſons.

VI. When things were thus happily ſettled, and in a manner all Gaſcogne and Guienne, except Baionne and Bourdeaux, were thus either conquer'd or revolted from the Engliſh; the Duke of Anjou, and the Conſtable being ſent for by the French King, gave leave to their Men to go whither they would, and they themſelves return'd into France. But the Lords of Cliſſon, of Beaumanoir, of Roye, of Riom, and of Anaugeur, with the Vicount of Rohan, and of Lavalle, and many more went to the Siege of Becherel, which was not yet yielded up, nor was to yield till the Feaſt of All-Saints, by which time it had been covenanted, that if it was not reſcued, it ſhould be yielded. And now theſe Lords went thither, becauſe they heard, that the Duke of Bretagne, Sr. Robert Knolles, and the Lord Edward Spencer would be there in Perſon to raiſe the Siege. Thô in the end this Rumor prov'd falſe; and no Succour coming, Sr. John Cornwall, and Sr. John Appleyard yielded up the Place, and return'd into England, as We ſaid before.

[h] Vid. L. 4. c. 6. §. 29. p. 781.

VII. It may be remembred, that we [h] ſhew'd how Sr. Hugh de Chaſtillon, Maſter of the Croſsbows of France, was taken near Abbeville by Sr. Nicolas Lovaine, and carried Priſoner into England. Ever ſince that, even for the ſpace of near five Years, he continued in that Condition, and could not be redeem'd, becauſe they asked ſo great a Ranſom for him: Thô now by the Aſſiſtance of a certain Merchant of Flanders he paid down 20000 Franks, being but the Moiety of what he was to pay; but when this Merchant by paying that Summ had got him out of England, he eſcap'd all further Obligation by a ſubtle Device, too long to be remembred here; and perhaps the Recital would rather inſtruct Knaves than pleaſure Honeſt Men. However when thus Sr. Hugh de Chaſtillon was return'd into France, King Charles reſtor'd unto him his Office of Maſter of the Croſsbows, and ſent him to Abbeville his old Province, there to keep the Frontiers with 200 Men of Arms in his Company, and he was obey'd as Chief by all all the Captains of the Neighbour-Garriſons, as Sr. John of Bournonville Captain of Boulogne, and Sr. John Liſle Captain of Dieppe, and the Captains of Teroüenne, St. Omers, of Liques, Fiennes and Montrevil. AN. DOM. 1374. An. Regni Angliæ XLVIII. Franciæ XXXV.

Now it happen'd one Morning that the Lord of Gomegines, who was ſtill Loyal to King Edward, being an Hainalder by Birth, and by him made Captain of Ardres, a Town of Picardy about three leagues from Calais, prepared early one Morning to ride abroad; ſo together with the Lord John of Ubrues, he left his Garriſon with about 800 Men of Arms, collected from ſeveral Places, with a Deſign to ride towards Boulogne to ſeek for ſome Adventure. That ſame Morning it chanced, that Sr. John Bournonville Captain of Boulogne, had left his Garriſon with 60 Spears, and rode towards Calais with a like Deſign. But when he had met with nothing of that kind, as he was returning, not well pleaſed, that he had ſucceeded no better, he met with this Lord of Gomegines, who had been riding towards Boulogne with his Men. The Captain of Boulogne at ſight of this great Power, drove down another way which he knew, as faſt as ever his Horſe could carry him; but he was ſo cloſely purſued, that he loſt 14 of his Men of Arms, and very narrowly eſcaped himſelf with the reſt: After which Chace the Lord of Gomegines was returning homeward, not thinking to meet with any more Adventures. But it happen'd otherwiſe: For that ſame Morning Sr. Hugh Chaſtillon Maſter of the Croſsbows, had left his Garriſon alſo with 300 Spears of Artois, Vermandois and other Countries, whom he had collected from the Neighbour-Fortreſſes for that Purpoſe. At which very time the young Earl of St. Pol, being newly come into Picardy from his Lands in Lorraine, was riding on a Pilgrimage to our Lady of Boulogne. But hearing by the way, that the Maſter of the Croſsbows was riding thitherward alſo, he went and joyned him, and rode with him firſt before Ardres, where they tarried a while in the Field altogether, to ſhew themſelves to the Garriſon, not knowing any thing, that the Engliſh were abroad at that time, no more than the Engliſh knew where they were. When the Frenchmen had been a while before Ardres, and ſaw none would offer to come out againſt them, they rode back as far as the Abbey of Liques. But upon their departure there preſently rode forth out of Ardres an Engliſhman, who taking ſeveral By-ways, as one that well knew the Country, met at laſt with the Lord of Gomegines, as he was returning toward Ardres; to whom he told, how the Frenchmen had been juſt before to view his Garriſon, with about 400 Spears, but that now they were gone off. When the Frenchmen were got a little beyond Tournehan toward the Abby of Liques, they alſo were informed, how the Engliſh were abroad with the Captain of Ardres, but their Number was not known. However upon the Information they agreed to meet them, and ſo turning coaſted on one ſide, and laid an Ambuſh of 300 Spears, whereof Sr. Hugh Chaſtillon was Captain, in a litrle Wood hard by the Abbey of Liques: The Earl of St. Pol being appointed with his Hundred Knights and Eſquires to ride abroad, ſo to entice the Enemy into their Ambuſh.

Not far thence along by a great Hedge were the Lord of Gomegines and his Men, who ſtood there on Foot all in good Order, only Sr. John Harleſton[1] Captain of Guiſnes, was ſent forth with 20 Spears to ſee if he could find the French, his Orders being on ſight of them to fly, and ſuffer the Enemy to purſue him towards this Hedge, where his Friends ſtood ready for them. As Sr. John was riding forth in the Fields with this Deſign, the young Earl of St. Pol eſpi'd him, and ſaid aloud to his Men, "Sirs, now "let us advance forth! Yonder are our Enemies; and ſo clapping Spurs to their Horſes they ſet forward full Speed; Sr. John Harleſton flying as faſt before them, till he came to the Hedge, where his Friends ſtood ready ranged with the Archers in their Front. As ſoon as the Frenchmen came in their reach, the Archers received them warmly, ſhooting and overthrowing to the ground Men and Horſes, and immediatly the Men of Arms came up with them having remounted their Horſes, with Spears and Axes in their Hands; while Sr. John Harleſton with his twenty Spears fetching a Compaſs about, came behind and fell in upon their Backs with great fury. Many gallant Deeds were done by the Young Earl of St. Pol and the Frenchmen, but being thus ſurrounded and overpower'd with Number, they were all ſlain or taken to a Man. The Earl of St. Pol was taken alive by the hands of an Eſquire of the Dutchy of Gueldre, and together with him by other Hands the Lord of Pons, the Lord of Clery, the Lord William of Neſle, Sr. Charles of Chaſtillon, Sr. Lionel D' Araines, Sr. Gawen de Veſley, Sr. Henry de Liſle and Sr. John his Brother, the Chaſtellain of Beauvais, and many more Knights and Eſquires. Immediately after which Diſcomfiture the Lord Hugh de Chaſtillon came thither with his three hundred Spears, and his Banner before him; he rode up almoſt to the Hedge end, but underſtanding then how his Friends Buſineſs was already done, and that the Engliſh

[1] True Uſe of Armory in the Life of the Captal of Buſche P. 154.

An. Dom. 1374. An. Regni Angliæ XLVIII. Franciæ XXXV.

Engliſh ſo far outnumbred him, he drew his Men together, and wheel'd off without giving a ſtroke; for he doubted more to encreaſe the Loſs, than to repair it.

Upon this good Succeſs the Engliſh return'd to Ardres with their Priſoners, and that very Night the Lord of Gomegines bought the Young Lord Valeran Earl of St. Pol of the Eſquire that took him; and ſoon after carried him into England, and preſented him to the King, who thanked him very much, and rewarded him more for that acceptable Piece of Service. But this young Earl found ſuch Gracious Dealing from King Edward, that he became ever after as great a Friend, as his Father had been an Enemy to the Engliſh Nation, * being Married to the Half-ſiſter of King Richard the Second.

* Mill's Catal. Hon. p. 765.

VIII. About that time the Duke of Anjou and the Conſtable return'd, as we obſerv'd before, into France, where they found the Archbiſhop of Roüen, and the Biſhop of Carpentras, who had been long with the King at Paris, making inſtant and continual Application unto him in the Pope's Behalf, as other Legats at the ſame time dealt with King Edward for the ſame Purpoſe. Wherefore according to a former Agreement between the Dukes of Anjou and Lancaſter, both the Kings were now again obliged to enter a Negotiation, thereby if poſſible to accommodate their Differences. The Place appointed for the Aſſembly was Bruges in Flanders; but firſt the Duke of Anjou according to his Obligation, went to St. Omers in great Array, having ſent for his Couſin Guy of Blois to come thither to him out of Hainalt; about which time the Duke of Lancaſter arrived at Calais, ſoon after which both the Dukes with their ſeveral Retinues went to Bruges. And all the while there lay on the Marches between France and Flanders towards Aire, and about Belle or Baillieul, and Caſſell in Flanders, and near thoſe Parts, the Conſtable of France, the Lords of Cliſſon and la Vall, and Sr. Oliver Manny with above 600 Men of Arms to keep the Country, leaſt any thing ſhould be innovated by the Earl of Flanders. For theſe Lords being all Bretons could not repoſe any Truſt in that Earl, becauſe he was ſo firm a Friend to John of Monford Duke of Bretagne, againſt whom they fought. Wherefore neither would they ever come to Bruges, whatever the Commiſſioners on both ſides could ſay or do.

There were preſent at this Treaty on the French Kings Part Lewis Duke of Anjou, and Philip Duke of Burgundy, the Earl of Salebruce, the Biſhop of Amiens, the Biſhop Elect of Bayeux and others: And for the King of England, there was John Duke of Lancaſter, William Montagu Earl of Salisbury, Simon Sudbury Biſhop of London, Sr. John Cobham of Kent, Sr. Frank van Hall, Sr. Arnold Savage, Mr. John Shephey and Mr. Simon Multon. This Treaty was carried on by Snatches for [k] two full Years with incredible Expences, the Frenchmen all the while preparing at Home [l] for War, fitting and making of Arms of all ſorts, and providing all manner of Warlike Habiliments: And thus even in thoſe Days were the French always too hard at Council for the Engliſh. However for the preſent, [m] that no Harm or Moleſtation ſhould come to any of the Lords of either Party, or to any of their Men, by ſubtlety or other means, ſince there were Hundreds that rode in and out daily of both Sides, thô they could not ſettle a Firm and General Truce, becauſe of the Duke of Bretagne's Concerns and other Matters, which render'd the thing impracticable; yet firſt of all they ſettled this Point by agreeing on a Partial Truce to endure till the Firſt of May in the Year following in all the Marches of Calais, as far as the River of Somme; all other Lands being left in their former ſtate of Hoſtility. Whereupon the Lord Oliver Cliſſon, and the Lord de la Val haſted with their Troops into Bretagne, becauſe the Truce extended not to that Dukedom.

[k] Mezeray.

[l] Walſingh. Hyp. p. 133. n. 40.

[m] Froiſ. c. 312. fol. 194. Angl. ſed Gallicè fol. 264. b.

[n] Froiſ. c. 311.

About this [n] time alſo there was a Treaty ſet on Foot concerning the Delivery of the Earl of Pembroke, and the reſt of the Priſoners out of Spain; eſpecially becauſe the Earl of Pembroke, [o] not enduring the hard Uſage of the Spaniards, ſent to Sr. Bertram of Clequin Conſtable of France, whom he knew to have great Intereſt with the King of Spain, entreating him to uſe his power to deliver him out of that inhumane Thraldom. Whereupon Sr. Bertram upon delivering back his Lands belonging to Soria Caſtle, and acquitting certain Sums of Money due unto him from the King of Spain, (his Nephew Sr. Oliver Manny at the ſame time reſigning his Lands alſo) had the Earl of Pembroke, and all the other Priſoners rendred back: For whom they were now to make their Bargain as well as they could. For the Ranſom of the Lord Thomas Percy the ſtrong Caſtle of Liziniac was yielded up to the French: But the manner of the Lord Guiſchard D' Angouleſme's Redemption was thus. It may be remembred, how we ſhew'd before, that the Lord of Roy was ſtill a Priſoner in England, and likely enough to continue ſo; becauſe King Edward loved him not. Now this Lord who was of High Birth and Eſtate, had no Children but only one Daughter, a Fair young Lady his [o] Walſingh. hiſt. p. 185. n. 10.

his Sole Heireſs. During his Impriſonment at this time, his Friends proffer'd this Lady in Marriage to Sr. Oliver Manny, a Knight of Bretagne, Sr. Bertram of Clequin's Nephew, on Condition he could obtain the Delivery of the Lord of Roye by Exchange for any one or more of his Priſoners. Whereupon Sr. Oliver Manny ſent to King Edward of England, to know what Knight next the Earl of Pembroke, he would have deliver'd in Exchange for the Lord of Roye. The King hereupon intimating his particular Eſteem for Sr. Guiſchard Dangle, the Exchange was made, and Sr. Oliver Manny married the Lord of Roye's Daughter, with which Fortune he was ſo well pleaſed, that he procured the other Engliſh Lords and Knights, with all the reſt of the Priſoners, to be deliver'd for very eaſie Ranſoms: But as for the Earl of Pembroke [p] no leſs than 6000 Florens of Florence were ſet on his Head, for which certain Merchants of Flanders engag'd, being to pay the Money at Bruges upon News of his ſafe Delivery at Calais. 'Tis [q] thought the Spaniards upon his leaving them had given him a Doſe: For ſoon after this Bargain for his Redemption, he began to be ſo extream ſick, that the Conſtable of France, feating the loſs of his Money by his Death, made haſt to convey him by eaſie journeys from Paris in an Horſe-litter. But a Feaver came ſo violently upon him, that he died by the way at Arras; and ſo the Conſtable loſt his Money. He departed this Life on the [r] ſixteenth Day of April in the Year of our Lord 1375, being the following Year; till the beginning whereof this buſineſs of the Priſoners was not ſettled. He left behind him [s] one Son, his Heir, named after his Name, John, then but two Years old and an half, and not born when his Father was taken Priſoner. Which young Child proving of a very forward Vertue, exceeding Hopefull and Towardly, was afterwards in the Flower of his Youth, being but ſeventeen Years of Age, ſlain in a Tilt by an unlucky ſlip of Sr. John St. John's Lance, to the great Regret of the King and of the whole Court; becauſe he was a Perſon of ſo Noble a Diſpoſition as well as Extract, and in Courage, Bounty and Courteſie, exceeded moſt of his Age and Degree.

AN. DOM. 1374. An. Regni Angliæ XLVIII. Franciæ XXXV.

[p] Froiſ. ibid.

[q] Walſingh. hiſt. p. 185. n. 20.

[r] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 577. ex Eſc. 49. Ed. 3. n. 70.

[s] Dugd. ibid. p. 578.

I do not love to trample upon the Dead, and to kill them again in their Reputation: But for Example ſake we muſt not conceal, what ſome have obſerved to have been the occaſion of theſe Judgments upon this Noble Earl and his Family. It is firſt ſaid, [t] that ever ſince Emery de Valence (Earl of Pembroke and Anceſtor of this Haſtings) ſat among thoſe, who gave Sentence of Death againſt Thomas Earl of Lancaſter in the Days of King Edward the Second, none of the ſucceeding Earls of Pembroke ever ſaw his Father, ſo as to be ſenſible of him, nor any Father of them ſaw his Child, or but an Infant: But as for this Earl John, whom we obſerve to have been taken Priſoner on the Eve of St. John Baptiſt, which it ſeems is the Feſtival of St. Ethelred the Virgin, many in thoſe Days took occaſion thence to cenſure, that he was thus purſued by God's Judgments for the injury he had done to the Church of that Holy Virgin at Ely, in a Cauſe depending betwixt the Church of St. Edmundſbury, and that, before his laſt Departure out of England. And that the Money ſo loſt did no more good, foraſmuch as it had been extorted from Religious Houſes and the Clergy. Thô ſurely [u] Walſingham is too preciſe in fixing his Death alſo on the Day of the ſame Virgin Saint, ſince it appears by Record to the contrary, as we have ſhewn. But [x] others attributed this ill Succeſs to his having lead an Adulterous Life, being a Married Man; alſo becauſe he had in Parliament attempted an Infringement of the Churches Liberties, and perſuaded the King to lay heavier Taxes upon the Clergy than on the Laiety, for the ſupport of his Wars: Which practice of Pilling and Polling the Church (however the Temporal Lords were pleaſed therewith) yet what Succeſs enſued thereupon (ſaith [y] Walſingham) not only England, but the whole World doth know. I dare not accuſe the Earl of theſe Crimes, becauſe 'tis evident, how the Monks in thoſe Days were apt to attribute every Miſchance that a Man met with, to the Hand of God ſtretch'd out for their ſakes; wherefore I leave the Diſcuſſion of this Matter to the judgment of the Reader. However the Earl of Pembroke dying thus in the Flower of his Age (having then ſeen but twenty ſeven Years.) His Body was brought over into England, and buried firſt in the Choir of the Fryers-Preachers at Hereford; but afterwards for the Summ of an 100 l. Tranſlated to the Grey-Fryers near Newgate in London, now called Chriſt-Church.

[t] M.S. in Bibl. Bodlei. K. 8. Cant. 186. b.

[u] Walſing. ibid. n. 26.

[x] Walſing. hiſt. p. 182. Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 577.

[y] Walſingh. hiſt. p. 182.

This Earl John [z] in the Fourty Third Year of King Edward (having obtained Licence for that purpoſe of the King) made a Feoffment to Walter Amias and others of all his Caſtles, Lordſhips, Lands and Mannors in England and in Wales, to certain Uſes Which Feoffment being left ſeal'd up in the Hands of his Feoffees, to be kept till his Return from beyond the Seas, was now upon his Death deliver'd up to the Kings Council, [z] Pat. 51. Ed. 3 m. 29 per Inſpeximus Eſc. 49. Ed. 3. n. 10. Clauſ. 49. Ed. 3. in Dorſo.

An. Dom. 1374. An. Regni Angliæ XLVIII. Franciæ XXXV.

cil, who thereupon opening it, found, that in case he died without Issue of his Body, the Town and Castle of Pembroke should come to the King, his Heirs and Successors, and the Castle and Lordship of Bergavenny, and other his Lands in England and Wales to his Cousin William Beauchamp, his Mothers Sister's Son in Fee, provided he would bear his Arms, and endeavour to obtain the Title of Earl of Pembroke. But in case he should decline so to do, then his Kinsman William Clinton to have them on the same Conditions.

IX. There died [a] this Year the Famous Francis Petrarch, the Laureat Poet of Italy, (of whom We have spoken [b] in the former Part of this History) in the seventieth Year of his Age; wherefore Squarzaficus the Writer of his Life is to be corrected, who acknowledges him to have been of that Age, and that he was born in the Year 1304; but yet that he died Anno 1364, which is a palpable Mistake.

[a] Jacob Meyer. Annal. Flandr. l. 13. p. 193. &c.
[b] Lib. 1. c. 19. §. 14. p. 247.

Upon the Thursday next after the Feast of the Translation of St. Thomas the Martyr, there departed this Life that Valiant Baron Sr. John Charleton, Lord of Powis, leaving John, his Son and Heir, at that time 14 Years of Age, and another Son, named Edward, aged about Four Years, behind.

On the [c] 5th of July D. William Wittlesey, Archbishop of Canterbury, departed this Life, presently after whose Death the Monks of Canterbury elected for their Archbishop one Adam Easton, [d] a Cardinal, who was an Englishman born, but thoroughly Italianated, as having lead his whole Life in a manner at the Court of Rome. Wherefore King Edward was so offended at this Choice of the Monks, that he determin'd to banish them out of the Realm, and to confiscate their Goods. But then Pope Gregory, thô he favour'd this his Cardinal, yet to shield the poor Monks from the Danger of this Tempest, was content to annull their Election, and to bestow the Archbishoprick by way of Provision on Dr. Simon Sudbury, then Bishop of London; whom he knew the King liked well enough. This Man was the Son of Nigellus Tibalds, a Gentleman of Suffolk; but being born in the Parish of St. George in Sudbury, a Town of the said County, he took his sirname thence, after the manner of many Clergymen in those days. He was a Man of Excellent Parts, great Knowledge, Judgement, Wisdom, and Eloquence, and among many Works of Charity, he [e] built the West-Gate of the City of Canterbury, and all the Wall from that Gate unto North-Gate, commonly called by the Name of the Long-Wall; an Act of no less Advantage to the City, than of Expence and Charge to the Builder. About seven Years after he yet ended unhappily, being barbarously Murder'd (together with Sr. Robert Hales, Treasurer of England) by the Rebels, who were headed by Wat Tyler and Jack Straw in the Days of King Richard the Second, neither his Age, nor Dignity, nor Eloquence, nor Piety, being able to mollifie the Minds of those Wretches, who had already cast away the Bonds of their Allegiance.

[c] Vid. Thorn's Chron. apud 10. Angl. Script. p. 2148. & p. 2150. Walsing. hist. p. 183. & Hypod. p. 133. Godw. Catal. p. 146. M.S. vet. Angl. in Bibl. C.C.C. Cantab. c. 236.
[d] Ità Scriptores nostri, sed bis térve evolventi Victorellum, nullus mihi occurrit Cardinalis horum temporum Adam nominatus.
[e] Speed's Maps in Kent. c. 3. §. 8.

X. About this time a certain Lady, named Madam Alice Perrers, being a Person of extraordinary Beauty, [f] was therefore made Lady of the Sun, and rode from the Tower of London thrô Cheap-side, accompanied with many Lords, Knights, and Ladies; every Lady leading a Lord or a Knight, by his Horses Bridle, till they came into West-Smithfield; where presently began a Solemn Justs, which held for seven Days together.

[f] Stow's Survey of London p. 421.

But because hereafter we shall have occasion to speak further of this Madam Alice Perrers, especially since by our Vulgar Historians she hath constantly been misrepresented, I shall here once for all make a more particular Enquiry, who and what She was. That She was not King Edward's Concubine (as most of our Writers, one taking it from another, too boldly affirm) may appear not only from the utter Improbability of the Matter it self, which we shall shew; but also from the Reputation of her Person, which was so great, that after this She was [g] taken in Marriage by a considerable Baron of this Realm, the Lord William Windsor, [h] who in the Fourty Third of this King was Constituted his Lieutenant of Ireland; but afterwards became much more notable. Now, I say, 'tis neither probable, that King Edward, who never else is said to have gone astray, even in the Flower of his Age, especially while his beloved Queen lived, which was within five Years of this time (except only that Story of his being enamour'd on the Fair Countess of Salisbury, which We have utterly exploded) should now in the very impotence of his Age burn in Flames, to which he had so seldom indulged: And it is as improbable, that so Noble a Baron, as Sr. William Windsor, should afterwards take in Marriage so notoriously infamous a Woman, had she been thought at that time such a lewd and impudent Strumpet, as many would make her. But the [i] Records themselves are nothing so severe upon the Reputation of this Lady, as appears from these Words, [g] Dugd. Warwickshire p. 434.

[h] Dugd. Bar. 1 Vol. p. 509.
[i] Rot. Par. 1 Ric. 2. n. 41. &c. Vid. M.S. & Sr. Rob. Cotton's Abridg. p. 158. n. 41.

Words, "Dame Alice Perrers was introduced before the Lords, and by Sr. Richard AN. DOM. "Scroop Knight, Steward of the Kings Houſhold, charged for purſuing of Matters con- 1374.
"trary to order taken two Years before, namely, that no Woman ſhould for any Advan- An. Regni
"tage preſent any Cauſe in the Kings Court, on pain of loſing all they had, and being Angliæ
"baniſhed the Realm for ever. That particularly ſhe had procured Sr. Nicolas Dagworth XLVIII.
"to be called from Ireland, whither he had been ſent; and at the ſame time procured from Franciæ
"the King Reſtitution of Lands and Goods to Richard Lyon, Merchant of London, where- XXXV.
"as the ſame Lands, having been forfeited by him, had been given to the Kings own "Sons. To all which the ſaid Dame Alice reply'd, that ſhe had not purſued any ſuch "thing for any Advantage of her own: Whereupon divers Officers, Counſellours, and "Servants to King Edward the Third, being examin'd, prov'd, that ſhe made ſuch pur"ſuit; and that in their conceits for her own private Gain. And ſo the Lords gave "judgement againſt the ſaid Lady; that according to the Order aforeſaid, ſhe ſhould be "baniſhed, and forfeit all her Goods and Lands whatſoever. But, as Sr. Robert Cotton goes on, "to ſay truth of the Devil is counted Commendable; and therefore ſurely
"(ſays he) the Record againſt the ſaid Lady, being very long, proves no ſuch heinous "Matter againſt her; only it ſhews, how ſhe was in ſuch Credit with King Edward the "Third, that ſhe ſat at his Beds-head, when others were fain to ſtand at the Cham"ber Door; and that ſhe moved thoſe things unto him, which they of the Privy-
"Chamber durſt not. And further (ſays he) thoſe two Points, for which ſhe "was condemned, ſeemed very honeſt: Only her Misfortune was, that ſhe was Friend"ly to many, but all were not ſo to her: The Record is ſtrange and worthy of "peruſal.

Thus much by the by for clearing of injur'd Innocence, and ſtopping the Mouth of Popular Calumny; thô this Matter of Record happen'd after the Death of King Edward. I ſuppoſe, that being very dextrous in humoring the old King, and tending him carefully in his ſickneſs, ſhe thereby prevail'd ſo upon him, as to be able to influence his Favour more powerfully, than others of Higher Condition: Whereupon, thô ſhe did much good, and took thence many Advantages to aſſiſt the Oppreſſed, ſhe was in the end only rewarded with theſe Envious Reflections for her Labour. Thô the Year [k] after Sr. William Windſor and his Lady pray'd a Revocation of this Judgement for the Errors therein, and at laſt by their Attourneys, Edmund Clay and Robert Brown, obtain'd a Reverſal of the ſame.

[k] 2 Ric. 2. n. 36. Vid. Sr. Rob. Cotton's Abridg. p. 177. & Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 510.

CHAPTER the TWELFTH.

The CONTENTS.

I. St. Saviour le Vicount being preſt by the French, Compounds. II. King Edward AN. DOM.
ſends his Son Edmund Earl of Cambridge along with the Duke of Bretagne, with 1375.
his Conqueſts in thoſe Parts: The Duke of Bretagne lies down before St. Brieux. An. Regni
III. While the Lords of Bretagne on the French ſide beſiege Sr. John Devereux in Angliæ
New-fort, who is reſcued by the Duke. IV. The Duke of Bretagne, having an Ad- XLIX.
vantage over his Rebel Lords, is forced by a Truce to loſe it, and ſo returns into Franciæ England. V. The Death of the Lord Edward Spencer. VI. A Treaty between King XXXVI.
Edward and King Robert Stuart of Scotland. VII. The French take St. Saviour le Vicount notwithſtanding the Truce. VIII. Eſquire Katrington, that deliver'd it up, challenged of Treaſon, loſes the day. IX. Some Engliſh Veſſels taken by the Spaniards.
X. The Death of two Earls: two Acts of Charity.

I. ABOUT the Declining of the laſt Year, [a] when the Knights of Bretagne and Normandy had taken in Becherel, according to the Compoſition made, that if it was not reſcued by the Feaſt of All-Saints, it ſhould then be yielded up, by the French Kings Command they all went and laid Siege before St. Saviour le Vicount in Coutantin in Normandy, which once belonged to the Lord John Chandos, but after his Death was given by the King to Sr. Alan Boxhull, who was at that time in England, having committed the Town of Coutances, together with [a] Froiſ. Anglicè c. 312. fol. 194. ſed Gallicè fol. 264. b.

An. Dom. 1375. An. Regni Angliæ XLIX. Franciæ XXXVI.

with the Fort of St. Saviour to the Custody of an English Esquire, named Thomas Katrington. He had now for his Assistants two Valiant Knights, Sr. Thomas Cornet and Sr. John Burroughs, and Three Brethren Mauliverers, with about Sixscore other Valiant Men. But Sr. John de Vienne, Admiral of France, kept the Sea-Coasts near those Parts, and about the Mouth of the River Carentan, to hinder Provisions from being brought to them by Water, while the Lords and Knights of Bretagne and Normandy Besieged the Fort by Land, with a very Great Army, the Constable himself and Sr. Lewis of Sancerre Marshal of France being there, together with the Earl of Harcourt, the Dauphin of Auvergne, Sr. John Bull, Sr. Mouton de Brianville, and many other Men of Name. The Constable caused his Engines to be reared up against the Fortress, and put the Besieged very hardly to it. But however the Captain, Esquire Thomas Katrington, held out Valiantly against them all, till about the beginning of March, when being much streitned by the continual playing of Engines (among which 'tis probable, that there were Pieces of Ordnance at this time) he began to enter a Treaty with the French, and in short obtain'd a Truce to endure to Whitsuntide in the Year of our Lord MCCCLXXV, which was about Fourteen Weeks after; on this Condition, that unless within that term the Frenchmen should be fought withall, and the Siege raised, they should then yield up the Fort, their Lives and Goods saved: So the French Army lay still before the Place, but committed nothing of Hostility all the while. Now Katrington in making this Agreement had respect unto the Duke of Bretagne, whom he expected shortly there to raise the Siege; for he heard, He was preparing then to return into Bretagne with an Army out of England, as now we shall shew, leaving Esquire Katrington's business to another time.

[b] Pasch. 22. April. Lit. Dom. G.

II. While the Frenchmen [c] lay at Siege before St. Saviour le Vicount, and the Negotiators of England and of France were yet at Bruges in consultation about a Peace, the Duke of Bretagne, who having left his Lady in the strong Castle of Auray, was gone over into England, as we shew'd before, did daily importune his Father-in-Law, the King, for some Powerfull Assistance against his Enemies. At last the King said unto him, "My Fair Son, I know, well, that the Love of Me hath overballanc'd all your own "Concerns, and that for my sake only You are cast out of your Lands and Princely Inhe- "ritance. But rest You satisfied with this, that You shall most surely recover all again: "For I will never make Peace with the French King, unless You may be comprised therein, "and entirely restored to your Dominion. The Duke humbly thanked him for this his Gracious Promise, and the King resolv'd to do, as he had said: For he presently fell to raise competent Forces, which he intended to send into Bretagne with his Son-in-Law, the Duke, giving him Commission to act, as his Lieutenant, and at the same time joyning his Son [d] Edmund, Earl of Cambridge, in Commission with him in the Lieuteanncy of France and other Foreign Parts. And on the [e] 18 of November of the preceding Year, Commands were sent forth to arrest Ships for the Passage of these Forces into Bretagne, to be ready at Dartmouth and Plimouth with all speed, thô notwithstanding the earliness of these Preparations they went not till the [f] Spring of this Year. The Rendezvous was at [g] Southampton, where the Duke found 3000 tall Archers, who by the Kings Command were all paid their wages for half a Year, besides whom, there were no less than 2000 Men of Arms, Knights, and Esquires, the Chief whereof besides the Duke himself and the Earl of Cambridge, were these, the Lord Edmund Mortimer Earl of March, Thomas Beauchamp Earl of Warwick, Hugh Stafford Earl of Stafford, the Lord Thomas Holland Earl of Kent, Eldest Son to the Princess of Wales, by her former Husband, the Lord Edward Spencer, the Lord John Mohun, the Lord Michael de la Pole, the Lord Hugh Hastings, the Lord Thomas Grandison, Sr. Nicolas Camois, Sr. Richard Pontchardon, Sr. John Lascels, Sr. Edward Twiford, and many more of the English Nobility and Gentry; for [h] whose Good Success Publick Prayers were appointed to be made.

[c] Froiss. Anglicè c. 313. fol. 194. sed Gallicè f. 265.

[d] Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 154. & Ashmole p. 667.
[e] Rot. Franc. 48. Ed. 3. m. 7. 18 Novemb.
[f] Claus. 49. Ed. 3. m. 46.
[g] Froiss. ibid.

[h] 8 May Claus. 49. Ed. 3. m. 46. Vid. Ashmole's Garter p. 667.

With these Forces the Duke of Bretagne arrived safe at St. Matthew du Fine Poterne in Bretagne, where formerly he had found the Gates shut upon him. Here he took Land in good Order, and forthwith began to Assault the Castle, which stood without the Town, not greatly fortified at that time either with Men, or Munition: Wherefore the English carried it by force, and put every Man of them to the Sword; because they repented not, but stood out still in Rebellion against their Natural Lord. When the Townsmen saw this severe Example, they presently set open their Gates to receive the Duke, unto whom again they sware true and constant Obedience. From hence the English marched straight to the City of St. Pol du Leon, which was very strong and enclosed with a Wall and a Ditch: However they began a fierce and Vigorous Assault, and all the while while the Archers, who ſtood on the Dikes, ſhot ſo wholly together, that few or none durſt appear at their Defences, and ſo at laſt the Place was won, rifled, and plunder'd, and many hundreds put to the Sword, but of the French Garriſon not a Man was ſaved. From thence they paſſed on taking Towns and Caſtles all along, till they came to St. Brieux de Vaulx, which was well furniſhed with Men and Arms, and all things neceſſary: For the Lords of Cliſſon and of Beaumanoir, the Vicount of Rohan, and other Lords of Bretagne had been there but a little before, and refreſhed the Place ſufficiently: But the Duke ſat down reſolving to try what he could do by Siege and Aſſault.

AN. DOM. 1375. An. Regni Angliæ XLIX. Franciæ XXXVI.

III. The mean while the Vicount of Rohan and the Lord of Beaumanoir, who lay by way of counterſiege not far off, fronting the Duke of Bretagne, heard how the Lord John Devereux being near Quimperlay, made great havock thereabouts, and had newly repair'd and fortify'd a little Place of Defence which he call'd New-Fort; that there he kept his Garriſon, to the terrour of the whole Country; ſo that the Inhabitants could hardly put their Heads out of their Gates, but they were preſently pick'd up by Sr. John and his Men. Upon this they ſent word to the Lord Cliſſon, who was then at Lamballe, a Town about Five Leagues from St. Brieux; and He for his part, having left ſome Troops behind to ſecure the Town, marched with the reſt of his Men to joyn his Friends before New-Fort, to which they ſoon after laid Siege.

News hereof was brought to the Duke of Bretagne and the Engliſh Lords before St. Brieux, juſt as they had loſt a Mine, which with great Coſt and Pains they had been making for 15 Days together: Wherefore being vext at this Diſappointment, and alſo deſirous by all means to ſave Sr. John Devereux, they agreed not to tarry any longer before ſo ſtrong a Place, but rather to riſe and go to the Succour of their Friends, "For "(ſaid they) if We may but find them in the Field, who have now beſieged them, We "truſt to have a Fair Day againſt them. Upon this Determination they brake up their Siege, and began to March towards New-Fort; which it ſeems the Lords of Bretagne had ſo fiercely Aſſaulted, that they were now come even to the foot of the Wall, and began to dig with might and maine, not fearing any thing, that the Engliſh could caſt upon them, they were ſo well cover'd with a Penthouſe of ſhields; and indeed the Engliſh had but little heavy Matter to fling down. But however Fortune ſo well favour'd them, that at the very Inſtant, while they were thus digging to bring down a Pane of the Wall, there came one to them ſuddenly upon the Spur, ſaying, "Lords, "get away as faſt as You can; for yonder is the Duke of Bretagne coming in all haſte "upon You with his Engliſh Army; They cannot be above two Leagues off by this time. Upon this immediately the Trumpets ſounded a Retreat to the Aſſailants, and they drew all back, mounted their Horſes, and marched off ſpeedily, taking their way to Quimperlay, the neareſt Place of Defence they knew of, and being enter'd they ſhut up their Gates, drew up the Bridges, and prepared for their Defence.

IV. By this time the Duke of Bretagne came thither with all the Barons and Knights of England, having paſs'd by New-Fort, and given but a ſhort Viſit to Sr. John Devereux, who thanked them all heartily for their timely Aſſiſtance; without which he had been moſt certainly loſt. But now the Duke lays Siege to Quimperlay, his Archers being brought forth into the Field, and his Footmen and Men of Arms ſet to the Aſſault. The Engliſhmen were not in jeſt, no more were the Beſieged: So that after a cruel Attack and a Reſolute and well-menag'd Defence, many being grievouſly wounded on both ſides, they parted for that time. But thus every day the Game was play'd between them without any conſiderable Advantage to the Engliſh; thô to all appearance, it was not poſſible for the Beſieged to hold out much longer. For Succour to come, they had none; to Eſcape away there was no hope, all the Avenues being poſſeſt by the Enemy; and they very well knew, that if they were taken by force, they ſhould have no mercy, eſpecially the Lord Cliſſon, who had been of late ſo inveterate an Enemy to the Engliſh, that he could expect no favour at their Hands. Upon theſe conſiderations they fell to treat with the Duke, offering to yield themſelves, on Condition they might be put to courteous Ranſom. But the Duke thinking it ſhamefull to Capitulate thus orderly with his own Subjects, abſolutely rejected that Motion, and would have them yield up ſimply. However at laſt with much ado they obtain'd of him a Truce and Reſpit for Eight Days; during which time there fell an happy Chance for the Beſieged. For two Engliſh Knights, Sr. Nicolas Charnells and Sr. Walter Urſewick were ſent thither from the Duke of Lancaſter, then at Bruges, enjoyning the Duke of Bretagne and all the Engliſh Commanders in the King of England's Name to forbear all further Acts of Hoſtility: Foraſmuch as there was then lately a Truce taken between the two Kings of England and of France, and all their Friends and Allies; of the Articles whereof theſe Knights brought Authentick Copies into the Camp. They were immediately read and publiſhed thrô the Camp, and alſo to the Beſieged in Quimperlay, to the great joy of the latter; for without this unexpected good Fortune they had all been loſt infallibly.

An. Dom. 1375. An. Regni Angliæ XLIX. Franciæ XXXVI.

And thus the Duke of Bretagne, being trepan'd by this ſubtle trick of the Frenchmen, was forced to let his Enemies ſlip out of his Hands, and ſo brake up the Siege, licencing all his Men to depart, except his Domeſtick Retinue; with whom he went to Auray, where he found his Dutcheſs. After this having at his leiſure refreſhed his Garriſons of Breſt and Auray, and done what was neceſſary for the preſervation of his own, he return'd with his Lady into England to adviſe further with the King, his Father-in-Law.

V. A little before which, Edmund Earl of Cambridge, Edmund Mortimer Earl of March, the Earls of Warwick, Stafford and Kent, the Lord Edward Spencer, and the other Engliſh Captains returned alſo for England. But the Lord Spencer preſently upon his return fell grievouſly Ill, wherefore he began to diſpoſe himſelf for another World; and among other things [i] made his Teſtament, which bears Date at Lanblethian, a Caſtle of his in the Marches of Wales, upon the Sixth of November, Anno 1375. Wherein he bequeathed his Body to be buried in the Abbey of Tewkſbury in Gloceſterſhire, near his Anceſtors, on the South part; and gave to the Lady Elizabeth his Wife, who was Daughter to the Lord Bartholomew Burwaſh, his Great Bed of Camaka-Blew with Griffons, as alſo another Bed of Camaka ſtriped with White and Black, and all the Furniture belonging thereto. Moreover to the Abbot and Covent of that Houſe of Tewksbury, he gave an whole Suit of his beſt Veſtments, as alſo two Gilt Chalices, and an Hanap or Baſon Gilt; likewiſe an Ewer, wherein to put the Body of Chriſt on Corpus Chriſti Day, which Ewer was given him by the King of France. I ſhall mention no more Particulars, but that he died ſhortly after, viz. on Martinmaſs-Day in the ſame Month at his Caſtle at Kaerdiff, leaving behind him Thomas his Son and Heir, then but Two years of Age, and four Daughters, Cecily who died young, Elizabeth firſt married to Sr. John Arundel, and afterwards to the Lord de la Zouch; Anne who became Wife to Sr. Hugh Haſtings, and after his Death to the Lord Morley; and Margaret the Wife of Sr. Robert Ferrers. This Lord Edward Spencer was a Mighty Baron of the Realm; and ſo Valiant, that his Death was look'd on as a National Loſs, and a great Empairment of the Strength of England. He died too ſoon, being but in the 39 Year of his Age, and was deſcended from thoſe Deleſpencers Earls of Gloceſter, who were ſuch Favourites to King Edward the Second; the Greatneſs of whoſe Condition may be eſtimated from this Inventory, which was found to have belonged to Hugh Deleſpenſer the Younger; [k] as Ten Good Caſtles in Wales, and Twenty Three Mannors, beſides the Countries of Lantriſſan, Glamorgan and Wenceland, with the County of Galeſy; and it appear'd, that Hugh the Elder, had at the time of his Fall no leſs than Fifty Nine Lordſhips in ſundry Counties, Twenty Eight Thouſand Sheep, One Thouſand Oxen and Steers, One Thouſand two Hundred Kine with their Calves, and Fourty Mares with their Colts of two Years, one Hundred and Sixty Draught Horſes, two Thouſand Hogs, three Thouſand Bullocks, Fourty Tuns of Wine, ſix Hundred Bacons, Fourſcore Carcaſſes of Martinmas Beef, ſix Hundred Muttons in his Larder, Ten Tuns of Cider; Armour, Plate, Jewels and ready Money better than ten Thouſand Pounds, Thirty ſix Sacks of Wooll, and a Library of Books.

[i] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 396. ex libro Sudbury *dicto, fol.*89.

[k] Rot. Parl. 21 Ric. 2. *n.*58. *vid. Sr. Rob. Cotton's Abridg. p.*372. & Sr. W. Dugd. Bar. 1 *Vol. p.*396. ſed Sr. Rob. Cotton bis térve corrigendus ex Dug.

VI. About this time there were ſent into Scotland by Commiſſion from King Edward, the Lord [l] Thomas Beauchamp Earl of Warwick, the Lord Guy de Brian, and the Lord Henry Scroop of Maſham, to treat with William Earl of Douglas and Others, appointed by Robert Stuart King of Scotland, touching the Reſtitution of thoſe Lands, which by Vertue of the Truce formerly made did belong to England; and [m] for Settling all things amiſs, which had fell out contrary to the Truce and Agreement made between the Kings of England and Scotland.

[l] Dugd. 1 *Vol. p.*236.

[m] Dugd. 1 *Vol. p.*658.

VII. Now when the Truce of which we ſpake, was thus made at Bruges, being to continue for one whole Year (unto the Firſt of April 1376.) between the Kings of England and France, and their Allies, the Duke of Lancaſter on the one Part, and the Duke of Burgundy on the other, ſware to uphold the ſame; and that at the Feaſt of All-Saints next coming they would return again to Bruges in order to treat further about Prolonging the Truce, or Compleating a Peace. Each Party being permitted to hold and enjoy every thing, which at that time they had in Poſſeſſion, untill the ſaid Firſt of April.

From

From this latter Clauſe the Engliſh concluded, that St. Saviour le Vicount would be ſecure; but the Frenchmen, who always got the Advantage of them by Treaties, reſolved that the Firſt Covenant ſhould take place of the Latter. At Whitſuntide therefore, which was the Time appointed that the Garriſon of St. Saviour was to yield, unleſs reſcued by their Friends, the French King ſent thither no leſs than 6000 Spears, Knights and Eſquires beſides Others; but none appear'd on the Behalf of the Garriſon, either to raiſe the Siege, or hold the Field againſt them. When therefore the appointed time was come and expired, the Engliſh much againſt their Wills yielded up to the French; the Captain Thomas Katrington, Sr. Thomas Cornet, and Sr. John Burroughs, with the Three Brethren Mauliverers, and the reſt of the Garriſon, being convey'd to Carentan, whence they all took ſhipping for England.

AN. DOM. 1375. An. Regni Angliæ XLIX. Franciæ XXXVI.

VIII. And thô during King Edward's Reign, this Eſquire Katrington was never queſtion'd in the leaſt for this Matter; yet a few Years after in the Days of King Richard the Second, a Noble Knight named Sr. John Anneſley, [n] who had married the late Lord John Chandos his Niece, [o] accuſed him of flat Treaſon in thus Delivering up that Fortreſs, and thereupon challenged him to a Combat, which the Eſquire accepted, and the King granted, reſolving to be himſelf a Spectator, as He was with all the Court; the Liſts being made in the Palace Yard of Weſtminſter. This Eſquire Katrington was a mighty Man of Valour, of a large ſtature, and far overtop'd the Knight, being alſo of greater Expectation in ſuch Matters. But however whether Juſtice, or Chance, or Valour only decided the Buſineſs, the Knight prevail'd, and Katrington the day after the Combat died of his Wounds, as ſome ſay; thô conſidering the Laws attending the Duello in ſuch Caſes, I rather here encline [p] to Fabian, who affirms, that he was drawn to Tiburn, and there hanged for the Treaſon, whereof by being vanquiſhed he was proved Guilty.

[n] Dugd. 1 *Vol. p.*503.
[o] Sr. Rich. Baker p. 150. *ad ann.*1381.
[p] *Fabian p.*324.

IX. But to return, beſides this Encroachment on the Truce made by the French, in taking St. Saviour le Vicount after that Manner, [q] certain Ships of England, which had lately carried over into Aquitain the Lord Thomas Felton Seneſchal of Aquitain, and Sr. William Elman Governour of Bayonne, whom they had landed at Bourdeaux; being now return'd thence to le Baye in Bretagne, were Boarded by certain Spaniſh Gallies, and taken on the Tenth of Auguſt, thô the late Truce extended unto the Spaniards alſo, as being Allies of France. Of which we ſhall find Complaint made in Parliament the Year following by the Owners of the ſaid Veſſels.

[q] Rot. Par. 50 *Ed.*3. *n.*127.

X. On the [r] Tenth of October this Year there departed this Life the thrice-Noble and Valiant Lord David Strabolgi, Earl of Athol, leaving only two Daughters his Heirs, behind him: And the moſt Honourable Heroe Richard Fitz-Alan, Earl of Arundel [s] died on the Ninth of the Calends of February this ſame Year, in a good old Age, leaving behind him three Sons and three Daughters; Richard the eldeſt of his Sons ſucceeded him both in his Honours and Vertues.

[r] Dugd. 2 *Vol. p.*96.
[s] Dugd. 1 *Vol. p.*318. Catal. Honor. p. 650.

Helming [t] Legat Eſquire, having obtained Licence of the King, gave at this time one Tenement, with a Cartelage or Yard thereto belonging, and a Garden with an Entry leading thereto, unto Mr. John Hariot Parſon of Fen-Church and to his Succeſſors for ever; the Houſe to be a Parſonage-Houſe, and the Garden to be a Church-yard or Burying-place for the Pariſh.

[t] Stow's Survey of London p. 217.

And about the ſame time [u] Ralph Lord Baſſet of Drayton founded an Houſe at Atherſton in Warwickſhire, called the Fryars-Hermits of St. Auguſtin; over the Gate whereof is yet to be ſeen his Coat of Arms cut in a fair Shield of Stone.

[u] *Dugd. Warw. p.*781. a.

CHAPTER the THIRTEENTH.

The CONTENTS.

I. Ingleram Lord Coucy makes an Expedition a ſecond time into Auſtria, but to no purpoſe. II. Another Treaty at Bruges, which only produces a ſhort Truce; and that another. At which time King Edward offers largely for the Redemption of the Captal of Buſche, but cannot obtain it. III. The Jubile of King Edward's Reign. A Parliament at Weſtminſter. IV. During whoſe Seſſions the Black-Prince dies; his Will,

Cha-

An. Dom. 1376. An. Regni Angliæ L. Franciæ XXXVII.

Character, Burial and Epitaph. V. The Captal of Buſche takes his Death to Heart and pines away. VI. The Black-Prince's Character again, his Children. VII. The Continuation of the foreſaid Parliament at Weſtminſter. VIII. A Cenſure thereof; who the Firſt Speaker of the Houſe of Commons. IX. The Death of an Engliſh Cardinal, and of the Lord John Peche. X. Pope Gregory returns the Papal Chair to Rome.

I. IN theſe Days Ingleram de Guiſnes Lord of Coucy, Earl of Bedford, and King Edward's Son-in-Law, [a] returned into France from the Wars in Lombardy, which at the Inſtance, and on the Behalf of the Pope, he had maintain'd together with John Galeas Earl of Vertus, Son of Duke Galeas, againſt his Uncle Duke Bernabo and his Allies, the Recital whereof would be Foreign to the Matter now in Hand. This Lord of Coucy was Son to the Lady [b] Catherine of Auſtria, who was Siſter to [c] Peter Duke of Auſtria laſt deceaſed; ſo that the ſaid Duke dying without Iſſue lawfully begotten, the Lord of Coucy was of Right to ſucceed in that Dukedom to his Uncle Peter aforeſaid. But the [d] People of the Country had already given the Dukedom to another, further removed than he; whereof he had before this made frequent Complaints to the Emperour Charles the Fourth: Who very well knew the Right which he had, but durſt not interpoſe too vigorouſly on his Behalf, becauſe the Auſtrians were a conſiderable Nation, and Hardy in War. Wherefore the Lord of Coucy, ſeeing he could not be righted otherwiſe, had his laſt recourſe to Arms, wherein thô aſſiſted by his Aunt, Siſter to the late Duke, and his Mother, he nevertheleſs had but ſmall Succeſs; wherefore having afterwards exerciſed his Arms for ſome time in Lombardy, he now returned, as We have ſhewn, into France, where he was received very gratiouſly of the King, who highly eſteem'd him for his Valour, and imagin'd by what means he might win him over from King Edward unto himſelf.

[a] Froiſ. c. 314. fol. 195. Gallicè f. 266. De bello inter Bernabonem & Pontifices geſto, vid. Odor. Rainal. ab An°. 1360. n. 6. &c.

[b] Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 761. a.

[c] Catal. Honor. p. 440.

[d] Pannones olim dicti.

The Lord of Coucy, underſtanding that there was a Truce at that time between England and France, which was in a fair way to be prolonged, and that there were many Men of War then in France without any Employment, who as he thought, might prove very ſerviceable to him in Recovering his Right in Auſtria, began now to requeſt of King Charles, that he would permit thoſe Bretons and Companions, who during the Truce were like to be but a Burthen to his Realm, to go along with him into Auſtria, to help him to recover his Right. The King as well to rid himſelf of that Charge and Trouble, as to oblige him, granted this his Requeſt, and beſides that either gave or lent him 60000 Franks to beſtow among his Followers. Wherefore ſeveral French Lords themſelves, when they ſaw how well their King himſelf wiſh'd to this Cauſe, joyned themſelves with the Lord of Coucy; as the Vicount of Meaux, the Lord of Aunay, Sr. Ralph de Coucy, the Baron of Roye, and the Lord Peter de la Bar, with many other Lords and Knights of France, Bretagne, Artois, Vermandois, Picardy and Hainalt, all deſirous to advance their Bodies in Queſt of Military Honour. With theſe Forces the Lord of Coucy rode forth towards Auſtria, about the Feaſt of St. Michael in the Year 1375; the Companions that were with him, after their manner, doing much Miſchief all the way. But when the Auſtrians and the Almaignes with their New Duke whom they had choſen, underſtood for certain, that the Lord of Coucy was coming againſt them with ſuch Forces, they immediately burnt and deſtroy'd for three Days journey along by the River Danube, after which they retired into the Mountains and other Places hard of Acceſs. So that the Lord of Coucy and his Men, who had expected to have met with Victuals, could find none at all; whereby they ſuffer'd that Winter infinite Loſs and Trouble, for not knowing where to get Forage or Victuals for themſelves or their Horſes; many of both Sorts died, what with Hunger, Cold and Sickneſs. Theſe Afflictions put an end to this Expedition, ſo that in the Spring the poor Remainders of the Army returned into France, where they divided into ſeveral Quarters to refreſh themſelves. But the King ſent the moſt part of the Companions into Bretagne and Low Normandy to quarter there, till he ſhould have occaſion for them, which he expected ſhortly. For there was only a Momentary Truce taken between the Realms of England and France, of which we ſhall now ſpeak a little.

II. When the Feaſt of [e] All-Saints drew near, which was the Time appointed for a Meeting at Bruges, in order to prolong the Truce beyond the forelimited time of the Firſt of April, or if poſſible, to ſettle a laſting Peace; there came again to Bruges for the French King, the Duke of Burgundy, the Earl of Salebruſe, and the Biſhop of Amiens; but the Duke of Anjou tarried ſtill at St. Omers. From King Edward there came John of Gaunt Duke of Lancaſter, John Dreux commonly called Monford, Duke of Bretagne, [e] Vid. L. 4. c. 12. §. 7. p. 876.

Bretagne, William Montagu Earl of Salisbury, and William Courtney Bishop of London: Sr. Robert of Namur was also with the Duke of Lancaster, and waited on him to do him Honour, while he staid in Flanders, and the two Legates, the Archbishop of Rouën, and the Bishop of Carpentras, went between the two Parties, and took much Pains, shewing many weighty Reasons to induce both Sides to Moderation, but all to no purpose; the Lords were so far asunder in their Resolutions. For the French King demanded back again 1400000 Franks, which had been paid for the Redemption of King John, and also to have Calais rased and beaten down to the Ground: To neither of which would the King of England by any means consent. Then the [f] French Deputies required Licence of the Legates, that they might ride to Paris to declare more particularly unto the King the Offers made on the English Part; after which they promised to return with an Account of his Pleasure as to the Premises. Upon this Demand it was at last resolved, that certain sufficient Persons for that purpose appointed, should go and shew unto King Charles, "How the English Negotiators, besides that they absolutely "refused to refund the Money, or to rase Calais as aforesaid, stood stifly for the Abso- "lute Sovereignty, which they said belonged to the King their Master, and that the "King of England, and his Heirs Kings of England, should for ever enjoy all the "Lands comprised in the former Peace, made between Him and King John, without any "Homage or Resort, or any other Duty paying or owing therefore. Upon this King Charles summon'd his Peers and Nobles about him, and there came many Lawyers and Doctors of Divinity unto him to Paris, to hold a Debate and Argument on this Matter. And here at last it was peremptorily determin'd, that the King might not part with his Right of Sovereignty, without great Peril of his Soul, because he was so manifoldly engaged to maintain the Rights of his Kingdom.

AN. DOM. 1376. An. Regni Angliæ L. Franciæ XXXVII.

[f] Fabian p. 258. &c.

This Report being brought to Bruges, the Treaty immediately fell to pieces without any further Effect; but only that by the earnest Intercession of the Legates the Truce however was prolonged to the [g] Last of June then next ensuing, and afterwards was lengthen'd out farther to the First of April of the Year MCCCLXXVII, to give notice whereof to the English Subjects [h] a Proclamation was set forth.

[g] Rot. Franc. 50. Ed. 3. m. 16 & 21.

So these Lords on both sides tarried at Bruges the Remainder of the foregoing [h] Winter, and most part of the Lent following, keeping great State, especially the Dukes of Lancaster and Burgundy. But in the Spring they all return'd to their several Countries, except the Duke of Bretagne, who tarried still in Flanders with the Earl Lewis his Cosen, [k] who made him extream welcome for the space of a Year.

[h] 7 Aug. Claus. 50. Ed. 3. p. 1. m. 3. Dorso vid. Rot. Vasc. de eod. an. m. 8. & Rot. Franc. m. 10.

[i] Fabian p. 258.

[k] Jacob. Meyer. Annal. Flandr. l. 13. p. 193.

But we must not forget to make mention of the great Good-will, which King Edward and his Children still manifested to the Person of the Noble Lord John Greilly Captal of Buche, who being taken, as we have related, before Soubise, was all this while kept a Prisoner in the Tower of the Temple at Paris. Him they [l] earnestly labour'd to get at Liberty, and made frequent Overtures to that purpose; but especially now by their Ambassadors and Negotiators at Bruges they offer'd in Exchange for him Valeran the young Earl of St. Pol, and Three or Four other Knights, besides [m] Gold and Silver in Abundance: But the French King and his Council would by no means consent to deliver him, [n] unless he would swear, "Never more to bear Arms against the Crown of France. To which Proposal the Loyal Gascogner stoutly reply'd; "That thô he was sure otherwise to die in Prison, yet he would never make any such Oath. But of this Valiant Prince's Death we shall speak hereafter.

[l] Froiss. c. 315.

[m] Froiss. c. 332. fol. 210. b.

[n] Froiss. c. 315. fol. 196. b. & Jacob Meyer Annal. Flandr. l. 13. p. 194.

III. This Year being the Fiftieth of King Edward's Reign over England, he kept [o] a Second Jubilee in consideration thereof and gave Pardons, Immunities and Graces, and shew'd many Notable Acts of Bounty and Goodness to his People, as in the First Jubilee, which was the Fiftieth Year of his Age. A singular Blessing, which very few Monarchs have ever arrived to, either before or since that time.

[o] Daniel's History p. 256.

Soon after, viz. on the 28 of April, [p] being the Monday after the Feast of St. George, the King of England held his High Court of Parliament at Westminster: On which Day there was a considerable Appearance both of Lords and Commons before the King in his own Chamber Royal. But because divers of the Lords, and some few of the Commons were not come, Proclamation was made in the Great Hall at Westminster, that all such, who had received Summons to Parliament, should be there the next Morning by Eight of the Clock.

FE. Lit. Dom. [p] M. S Rot. Par. 50. Ed. 3. p. 116. n. 1. &c. Item Sr. Rob. Cotton's Abridgment p. 120. &c.

§. 2.

At which Day Sr. John Knevet, Knight, Lord Chancellour of England, declared before the King, Lords and Commons, the Causes of the present Parliament to be Three, viz. To enquire how the King should best provide for the Government of the Realm; Secondly, for the Defence of the same, as well beyond the Seas as on this side, both by Sea and

An. Dom. 1376. An. Regni Angliæ L. Franciæ XXXVII.

and by Land; and lastly, how he might prosecute his Quarrel against his Enemies, and make good the same; the Chancellour adding, "That as the King had always in all his "Attempts follow'd their Good Counsel, so now he meant to do no less: Wherefore in the King's Name he wish'd them to go together, the Lords by themselves, and the Commons by themselves, and speedily to consult and return an Answer.

§. 3,4,5,6,7. * §. 8.

So when there were appointed Receivers of Petitions for England, Ireland, Wales, and Scotland, as also for Gascogne, and other Places and Isles beyond the Seas, Tryers of the said Petitions after the Custom being subjoyned, the * Commons were willed to depart to their accustomed Place, being the Chapter-House of the Abbot of Westminster, whither they went accordingly. And then certain of the Lords and Nobles, who are particularly named in the Records, were order'd for the quicker Dispatch of Affairs to go and consult with the Commons.

§. 9. In consideration of the necessary Charges of the Government, the Lords and Commons grant unto the King the like Subsidy of Woolls, Skins, and Wooll-Fells, as was granted in the last Parliament, to endure for Three Years from the Feast of St. Michael, then next ensuing.

§. 10. Then an Order was devised by the Commons; that the King should have at least Ten or Twelve Counsellours, without whom no weighty Matter should pass, and for small Matters at least Six or Four of them: Whereunto the King granted, provided that the Chancellour, Treasurer, and Keeper of the Privy Seal, should by [q] their selves end all Matters belonging to their Offices; and that these Counsellours should take no Rewards.

[q] His M.S^m. Corrigo ex Sr. Rob. Cotton.

§. 11. That no other of the Kings Officers and Ministers do take any Reward for any thing touching their Offices.

§. 12. That Report of Matters of Council shall be made to the King by some One or Two of the Council appointed, and by no others.

§. 13. That all Ordinances made by the King and his Council shall be by all the Kings Officers Executed.

§. 14. That the Ordinance forbidding any Man within London, or elsewhere to sell sweet Wine by Retail, is Repealed; and that every Freeman may sell such Wines in London by Retail; so as always the Lord Mayor have the Disposing of the Price thereof.

§. 15. After this the Commons in full Parliament making Protestation of their due Allegiance to the King, declared; That if he had Faithfull Counsellours and Officers, he could not but have passed all other Princes in Treasure, considering that the Ransoms of the Kings of France and of Scotland were to him paid, besides the great Subsidies here. And therefore they require, that the Falshoods and Deceits of certain of the Kings Council and other Persons, may be enquired after and punished; whereby he might long maintain his Wars without any Imposition on the Commons; and namely if due Enquiry be made, as to Three Things, viz.

§. 16. First, of such of the Council, as convey Staple Ware and Bullion to other Places, than to Calais, for their own private turn: Secondly, of such as made shifts for Money for the King deceitfully. Lastly, of such as of Coven between certain of the Council, and them bought of sundry the Kings Subjects Debts due by the King to them for the Tenth and Twentieth Peny.

§. 17. Here Richard Lyon, Merchant of London, was accused by the Commons of divers Deceits, Extortions and other Misdemeanours, as well for the time, that he had repair to certain of the Kings Council, as for the time, that He was Farmer of the Kings Subsidies and Customs, and namely for obtaining Licences to convey over great [r] Quantities of Wooll and Staple-ware, for devising the Change of Money; for making the King for one [s] Chevisance of twenty Marks to pay 30 l. For buying of Divers Mens Debts due [t] from the King for small Value: For taking special Bribes to pay the Kings due Debts by way of Broakage; all which it should seem he must do, not without secret practice with some of the Council.

[r] Ibi Foizon, i.e. Copia.
[s] Chevisance, i.e. Merces, Mercimonium, &c.
[t] To in M.S. &c. sed puto non rectè.

§. 18. To some part of which Articles the said Richard answereth, and touching the Rest submitteth himself to the Kings Pleasure, as to Body, Lands, and Goods.

§. 19. Whereupon the said Richard is committed to Prison, during the Kings Will, and all his Lands, Tenements, and Goods order'd to be seised to the Kings Use.

§. 20. And as to the Extortion done, while He was Farmer of the Subsidies and Customs, Order was taken, that by Commission throughout England, it should be enquired into: And further the said Richard Lyon was disfranchised.

§. 21. William Lord Latimer was openly accused by the Commons for divers Oppressions by by him done, as well while he ſerved under the King in Bretagne, as for the time, he was Chamberlain to the King and of his Council: Namely, for that in Bretagne, He and his Officers had taken of the People there in Victuals and Ranſoms againſt the Kings Will, to the Value of 24000 l. and at another time an Hundred Thouſand [u] Scutes of Gold; whereof was never anſwer'd to the King One Peny. The particulars of all which are to be ſeen in the Records. AN. DOM. 1376. An. Regni Angliæ L. Franciæ XXXVII.

[u] Sr. Rob. Cotton Eſſentes, pro Eſcutes.

The ſame Lord Latimer was alſo accuſed for Victuals ſold in Bretagne to the Value of Ten Thouſand [x] Marks; as alſo for the Loſs of the Town and Fort of St. Saviour in Normandy, whilſt He was Captain there; and likewiſe of the Town of Becherel in Bretagne, and of other Towns and Forts. §. 22, 23.

Beſides all which it was urg'd, that He was partaker of all the Crimes of Richard Lyon aforeſaid; [y] and that he had withheld from the King divers great Sums of Money, which he had received for the Kings behoof, while he was Governour of Becherel in Bretagne; that whileſt he was of the Kings Council, he had unneceſſarily expended his Treaſure; and likewiſe that He had obtain'd Letters Patents to tranſport Woolls into other Places, beſides the Staple at Calais, and laid Impoſitions upon Woolls, without conſent of Parliament to the prejudice of that Staple. §. 24. [x] Ità M.S. ſed Franks apud Sr. Rob. Cotton. §. 25. [y] Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 32.

To all which the ſaid Lord Latimer, ſaving the Tryal of his Peers, offer'd to anſwer any particular Perſon; but that the Commons would not allow, inſiſting on this general Charge only. §. 26.

Whereupon the ſaid Lord anſwer'd every Objection, and as it ſhould ſeem by the Record, very well voided them in open Parliament: Notwithſtanding [z] at the Deſire of the Lords and Commons, He was not only put out of all his Offices and Employments, but Order'd to be committed to the Marſhalſea, untill he ſhould make Fine and Redemption for the ſame at the Kings Pleaſure. Beſides all which an Order was made, * that the Prior of Egglefield, an Alien, ſhould exhibit his Bill of Complaint againſt the ſaid Lord Latimer, concerning the Parſonage of Egglefield, which the ſaid Lord had wrongfully recover'd againſt the ſaid Prior. But to avoid the Fury of this Tempeſt, the Lord Latimer prudently ſubmitted for the preſent; only as to his Impriſonment, he found certain Lords and others, * his Mainpriſers, for the forth coming of his Body, during the Parliament, as by a Schedule doth appear: Wherein his Mainpriſers are found to have been One Archbiſhop, Three Biſhops, One Prior of St. John, Three Earls, Fifteen Lords, and Thirteen Knights; all their Degrees of the beſt Renown. Upon which Mainpriſe the Marſhal of England offer'd him to be at large. So that after all this upon the ending of the Parliament, [b] he went to the King then at Havering at the Bowre, and totally ſubmitted himſelf unto his Grace; whereupon, thô he had been Fined at 20000 Marks, the King was pleaſed wholly to remit both his Fine and Impriſonment, and the Year following the Lords and Commons themſelves repreſenting to the King, that he had been deprived of his Offices, and put from the Privy Council by undue ſuggeſtion, he was reſtored unto them again. However ſome weak Hiſtorians, who reſemble the Common People in Clamour and want of Judgement; ſay, how that was done in the Kings Declining Age, after the Death of Prince Edward, when he had taken his Son John of Gaunt to be his Aſſiſtant in the Government, whom, it ſeems, the Vulgar could not endure. §. 27. [z] Dugd. ibid. ex ipſo Record. §. 28. * §. 36. * §. 29, 30. [b] Dugd. ibid.

But however at this time the Commons proceeded in their warm beginnings, and beſides this Noble Peer, One William Ellis of Great Yarmouth, was accuſed of ſundry Extortions by him done; when he was Farmer of the Kings Petty-Cuſtoms there, and Deputy to Richard Lyon aforeſaid, for the Subſidy of Six-pence in the Pound, granted unto the King by Parliament. §. 31.

To which accuſation, it ſeems, that the ſaid William Ellis made a ſufficient Anſwer, But it was not then allow'd to be ſo: For he was notwithſtanding condemned to be Impriſon'd and Fined at the Kings Pleaſure. §. 32.

Alſo John Peachie, Fiſhmonger of London, was accuſed for procuring a Licence under the Great Seal, that he only might ſell ſweet Wines, and that under Colour thereof, he took Four-Shillings Four Pence per Tun of every Man, which notwithſtanding he juſtified by Law, as indeed he might, yet judgement was given, that he ſhould be committed to Priſon, during the Kings Pleaſure, and make Recompence to all Parties Grieved. §. 33. Vid. [c] Stow's Survey of London. p. 255.

The Lord John Nevill alſo was accuſed, that while he was of the Kings Privy Council, he ſhould buy certain Debts due by the King, namely of the Lady Ravenſham, and of Simon Love, Merchant, far under the Value, and for receiving of the King more wages, and for a longer time, for an Hundred Souldiers in Bretagne, than was due. To §. 34.

An. Dom. 1376. An. Regni Angliæ L. Franciæ XXXVII.

the first he answer'd, of the Ladies own Good-Will, he confessed, that for the obtaining of her Debt, he had received Ninety Five Pounds. As to Love's business, he denied, that there was any such thing: Upon which Love himself being call'd into the Parliament, he also wholly acquitted the said Lord. But because the Day before Love had confessed so much to two Knights of the House, he was now committed to Prison; So that this Accusation fell of it self, and as to the other of receiving Wages, the Noble Lord wholly cleared himself. Yet notwithstanding Judgement of Imprisonment, and Loss of Lands, Goods, and Offices was given against him, in like manner, as against the Rest, and that he should make Restitution of the Ninety Five Pounds to the Executors of the said Lady then lately deceased.

The Bishop of Norwich supposeth an erroneous Judgement to be given against him in the Common-Pleas for the Archdeaconry of Norwich, belonging to his Presentation, and prayeth that those Errors might be heard for redress thereof: Whereunto Answer was made, that Errors by Law in the Common-Pleas are to be corrected in the Kings Bench, and of the Kings Bench in Parliament, and not otherwise.

As well at the Complaint of the Men of Layston, as at the pursuit of the Commons, the Grant lately made by the King to the Town of Great Yarmouth, that one Place in the Sea, call'd Kirkleroue, be annexed to the Port of Yarmouth, shall be utterly repealed, saving all other their Liberties.

Adam Bury, Alderman, and sometimes Mayor of London, was accused of divers Deceits and wrongs by him done, while he was Mayor of Calais and Captain of Belingen, a Castle in Picardy, between Ardres and Guisnes, in the Marishes: But he was not minded to abide that Tryal, where Innocence it self would not avail, unless Power would please to own it. Wherefore upon his Non-appearance after Summons, it was agreed, that all his Goods and Chattels should be arrested, and so they were.

The King ordaineth, that from thenceforth no Woman should for Maintenance or Lucre, present any matter in any of the King's Courts, and particularly Alice Perrers, on pain of Forfeiting all they have, and being banished the Realm for ever.

[d] Froiss. c. Gallico f. 266. b.

IV. During this Parliament, the [d] Flower of English Chevalry, that Most Renowned Hero, Edward Sirnamed the Black-Prince, being utterly exhausted and worn out with a lingring Sickness, which gradually grew upon him, till it ended in an High Calenture, or Violent Burning Fever, to the infinite Regret of all the World, departed this Mortal Life in the King his Father's Great Chamber, in the Royal Palace of Westminster, on the Eight day of June, [e] being then Trinity-Sunday, [f] which Festival in whatever Place He was, He constantly all his Life held the most Sacred and Solemn of all the Days in the Year: In Memory whereof his Anniversary [g] Obit was afterwards appointed to be held at Windsor on the Eighth of June for ever. He died in the Fourty Sixth Year of his Age, even in the same Month wherein he was born, Ripe for Heaven and Full of Honour: And thô falling short in Years of his Great Father, and many Renowned Captains; yet thereby (in my Opinion) happily exempt from the Imperfections and Errors of Old Age, which too often qualifie preceding Glories. Upon which Account Servius Tullus [h] dispensed with those Knights, who were Seven and Fourty Years of Age, from all voluntary Services of War; Augustus afterwards reducing the Term of being emerit to Fourty and Five.

[e] Lit. Dom. FE. Pasch. 13. April. vid. Sandford p. 187 Walsingh. p. 186 & omnes [f] M. S. vet. Ang. in Bibl. C. C. C. Cantab. c. 238. & omnes.

[g] Ashmole p. 151.

[h] Vid Ld. Montaigne's Essays l. 1. c. 57. &c. ult.

However he died too soon for the English Nation, who had conceited much Happiness to it self under his expected Government: And also for his Father, who desired above all things to leave so great a Successor behind him; as likewise for his Son Richard, who extreamly wanted to have his tender Youth Cultivated with the Seeds of those Vertues, which had so prosperously flourished in this his Father, thrô the whole Course of his Life.

[i] Mr. John Gadbury in his Astrolog. Judgm. on the Nativity of the Black-Prince. M. S. penes me.

A little before his Death [i] there was celebrated a famous Opposition of Saturn and Jupiter in Aquarius and Leo, the Abject Parts and Places of his Geniture; which was according to Astrologers no small Cause of so great a Calamity. Besides which the Year before his Lamented Expiration, he was called for by a Bearded Comet of considerable Magnitude.

It is not altogether beneath our Consideration to observe Four Remarkable Stages of his Life, all well-nigh a like Distance from each other. In the year 1346, being then in the Sixteenth Year of his Age, he obtain'd that Memorable Victory at Cressy in Ponthieu; in the Year 1356, being the 26th of his Age, he took King John of France Prisoner at the Battle of Poictiers; in the Year 1366, he undertook the Quarrel of Don Pedro, upon which Account he Triumphed at Najara in Spain, being then Thirty Six Years Old; and now lastly in the Year 1376, being the Fourty Sixth of his Age, he left this World for a better.

His

His laſt Will and Teſtament was finiſh'd [k] but the Day before his Death (all the former being then rendred void) wherein he diſpoſed of his Body to be buried in the Cathedral of Canterbury called Chriſtchurch: And ſuch was his Care of thoſe who had done him Service, that he charged his Son Richard by his Will, to continue unto them all the Payment of thoſe Pentions which he had given them. But 'tis not material to reckon up here the Various Legacies that he gave, as Silk-Beds, Horſes, Armour, Gold and Silver, beſides what he dedicated to Holy Uſes; as he had done many things of that nature in his Life-time. We ſhall only remember the Names of his Executors, as they were appointed in his Will, viz. his Brother of Spain, the Duke of Lancaſter, William of Wickham Biſhop of Wincheſter, John Harewell Biſhop of Bath and Wells, William Spridlington Biſhop of St. Aſaph, Robert Walſham his Confeſſor, Hugh Seagrave Steward of his Lands, Sr. Alan Stokes, and Sr. John Fordham.

AN. DOM. 1376. An. Regni Angliæ L. Franciæ XXXVII.

[k] Aſhmoles Garter p.676. ex libro in Offic. Principal. Cant. vocat. Sudbury f.90. b.

And thus fell this Victorious Prince, in whoſe [l] Fall the Hopes of all England ſeem'd to be caſt down: While he lived, they feared no Invaſion, they doubted no Warlike Encounter; He never march'd againſt any whom he overcame not, never beſieged any City which he took not. All Nations both Heathen and Chriſtian dreaded his Fortune and Conduct in War, as of another Hector; nor did his * Wiſdom any way come ſhort of his Courage: Both which were equall'd by his Exemplary Juſtice, Clemency, Liberality, Piety and Moderation, Vertues but ſeldom ſincerely embraced by Perſons of High Condition. He was a Prince, [m] of whom we never heard any Ill, nor received any other Note than of Goodneſs, and the Nobleſt Performances, that Magnanimity, Generoſity, Courage and Wiſdom could ever ſhew: Inſomuch as what Praiſe can be given unto Vertue is due unto Him.

[l] Walſing. hiſt. p. 186. & M.S. vet. Ang. in Bibl. C.C.C. Cantab. c.238.

* Churchill's Divi Britan. p.245.

[m] Daniel's hiſt. p.256.

King [n] Charles of France, becauſe he was of his Kindred, performed his Obſequies in moſt Solemn Manner in the Holy Chappel of the Palace at Paris, the greater part of the Prelates and Peers of his Realm being preſent: A little before which time the Truce between the two Realms was again [o] prolonged unto the Firſt Day of April, which was to be in the Year of our Lord 1377. The mean while King Edward was ſorrowfully buſied with the unwelcome Cares of his Son's Funeral, the laſt Office he could pay unto Him; but [p] that 'tis believed thrô Grief at this Loſs, that he was the rather content to looſe Himſelf by following him ſooner into the other World; for we ſhall find that he ſurviv'd him but a Year and Thirteen Days. Nor did he properly live that while neither, for preſently upon the Death of his Son, he retired to Eltham in Kent, endeavouring to concoct this hard Morſel of Providence, thô it was every day ready to break his Heart.

[n] Froiſ. c. 314. fol. 195. b. & Gallic. f.266. b.

[o] Rot. Franc. 50. Ed. 3. m. 16. & 21.

[p] Polyd. Virg. p.399.

The Body of this Famous Warrier being Embalmed, lay in State, and was then wrapped up in Lead, to be kept till Michaelmas next coming, that ſo it might be interred with the Greater Solemnity, in the Preſence of the Parliament, as both Houſes had deſired. And accordingly at Michaelmas He was carried in a ſtately Herſe, drawn with 12 Horſes thrô the City of London over the Bridge, the Whole Court and the Two Houſes of Parliament attending him in Mourning, till they came to Canterbury, where he was buried with Great Solemnity, in the Cathedral of Chriſt-Church, as Himſelf had order'd in his Will, on the South-ſide, and near the Shrine of St. Thomas Becket, and over his Grave was ſhortly after erected a Stately Monument of Grey Marble, with his Pourtraiture lying thereon of Copper Gilt: The Ends and Sides whereof are garniſhed with Eſcutcheons of Copper, enamel'd with his Arms and Deviſes, the One being the Arms of France and England Quarterly with a Labell of Three Points, and the Other the Oſtrich Feathers, commonly called from Him the Prince's Arms, with the Word Houmont on the Formet, and Ich Dien on the Latter. On an Iron Bar over the Tomb are placed the Helm and Creſt, Coat of Mail and Gauntlets, and on a Pillar near thereunto his Shield of Arms richly Diapred with Gold, all which He is ſaid to have uſed in Battle. The Figure of this Noble Monument is exactly delineated in [q] Mr. Sandford's Genealogical Hiſtory of the Kings of England. On the Monument there is this old French Epitaph circumſcribed on a Fillet of Braſs, beginning at the Head, * viz.

[q] Sandford p. 188.

* Extat apud Sandford ibid. & Weever's Fun. Mon. &c.

Cy Giſt le Noble Prince Monſieur Edward, aiſnez Filz du Treſnoble Roy Edward Tiers; Jadis Prince d' Aquitaine & de Galles, Duc de Cornwaille, & Comte de Ceſtre, qi morust en la Feſte de la Trinite, qeſtoit le viii jour de Juyn, l'an de Grace, Mill Trois cenz ſeptante ſiſme. Lalme de qi Dieu eit Mercie. Amen.

That is in Engliſh.

Here lieth the Noble Prince, the Lord Edward, Eldeſt Son to the Thrice-Noble King Edward the Third, late Prince of Aquitaine and of Wales, Duke of Cornwall and Earl of Cheſter: Who died on the Feaſt of the Trinity, which was the Eight

An. Dom. 1376. An. Regni Angliæ L. Franciæ XXXVII.

Day of June, in the Year of Grace MCCCLXXVI. On whose Soul God have Mercy, Amen.

To which is added this French Rhyme, beginning at the South-side of the Tomb, and running on at the Foot of the North-side.

Tu qi passez oue bouche cloſe
Par la ou ce Corps repoſe,
Entent ce qe te dirai,
Si comme te dire le ſcay.
Tiel comme tu es autiel fu,
Tu ſerag tiel comme je ſu.

Thou who ſilent paſſeſt by,
Where this Corſe interr'd doth lie,
Hear what to thee I now ſhall ſhow,
Words that from Experience flow.
As thou art, once the World ſaw Me,
As I am, ſo thou once ſhalt be.

De la mort ne penſai je mie,
Tant comme javoy la vie:
Entre avoi grand Richeſſe,
Dont je y fis grand Nobleſſe,
Terre, Meſons, grand Treſor, Draps, Chivaux, Argent e Or.

I little could my Death divine,
When Life's bright Lamp did ſweetly ſhine,
Vaſt Wealth did o'r my Coffers flow,
Which I as freely did beſtow;
Great ſtore of Manſions I did hold,
Land, Wardrobes, Horſes, Silver, Gold.

Mes ore ſu jeo poures e chetifs
Perfond en la * tre gis
Grand Beaute eſt tout allee;
Ma char eſt tout gaſtee.

* An Terre?

But now I am of all bereft,
And deep in Ground alone am left,
My once admired Beauty's gone,
My Fleſh is waſted to the Bone.

Moult eſt eſtroit ma Meſon,
En moi na ſi Veritie non:
Et ſi ore me veiſſez,
Je me quide pas qe vous deiſſez,
Qe je euſſe onques home eſte,
Si ſu je ore de tant changee.

A Narrow Houſe doth me contain,
All that I ſpeak is True and Plain;
And if you ſhould behold Me here,
You 'ld hardly think (I juſtly fear)
That e'r the World to me did bow,
I am ſo chang'd and alter'd now.

Pour Dieu priez au Celeſtien Roy,
Qe Mercie ait de l'alme de Moy,
Touz ceulx qe pur Moy prieront
Du a Dieu m' accorderont,
Dieu les mette en ſon Paradis,
Ou nul ne poet eſtre chetifs.

For God's ſake, pray to Heaven's High King,
To ſhade my Soul with Mercy's Wing,
All thoſe that try on bended Knee
To reconcile my God and Me,
God place them in his Paradiſe
Where neither Death can be, nor Vice.

The Judicious Reader will attribute the Weakneſs of theſe Lines to the Age, wherein they were made; but ſurely this Hero's Victories at CRESSEY, POICTIERS and NAJARA in Spain, ſhall prove both a more Elegant Epitaph, and a more Durable Monument to his Name.

V. When his Dear Friend, the Lord John Greilly Captal of Buſche, who was ſtill a Priſoner at Paris, heard of his Death, he began to neglect himſelf, and at laſt abandon'd all Care of the World, or hopes of Life or Liberty; inſomuch that it is ſaid, he abſtain'd from Suſtenance, and gradually pin'd away thrô Exceſs of Grief for the loſs of ſo Brave a Commander.

VI. Thus his Friends both at home and abroad took the Death of this Gallant Worthy; for indeed he was of ſo Obliging a Character, that he won the Hearts of all Mankind; eſpecially of thoſe who delighted in Martial Performances; and in General He was a Prince of ſuch Excellent Demeanour, [r] ſo Valiant, Wiſe and Politick in his Doings, that the very perfect Image of Knighthood appear'd moſt lively in his Perſon: And ſuch was his Towardlineſs, or rather Perfection in Princely Government; that every Man judg'd, if he had lived to attain the Crown, he would ſurely have exceeded the Glorious Renown of all his Anceſtors.

[r] *Mill's Catal. Honor. p.*315.

He left behind him one onely Son, Richard ſirnamed of Bourdeaux, then in the Tenth Year of his Age, and after the Death of his Grandfather, King of England by the Name of Richard the Second. But in all Probability he had left a more Numerous Iſſue, but for the Spaniſh Expedition; for from that time that he left Spain, where firſt he was infected with that fatal Malady, he never had any more Children, thô before that he had two Sons within the Compaſs of two Years. But it is reported, that he had alſo [t] two Natural Sons, Sr. John Sounder, of whom we read nothing, and Sr. Roger Clarendon, to the latter whereof he gave by his Will a Silk Bed, with all the Furniture thereunto belonging. He became afterwards one of the Knights of the Chamber to his Half-Brother King Richard the Second, and bare for his Arms Or, on a Bend Sable Three Oſtrich

[t] Sr. Rich. Baker's Chron. p. 143. *Mr. Aſhmole p.*676. Sandford's Gen. Hiſt. p. 189. *ex l.*10.*f.*39. lib. in Collegio Armorum.

Oſtrich Feathers Argent, the Quills transfixed thrô as many Scroles of the firſt, being as is thought, Anceſtor to the Family of the Smiths in Eſſex.

AN. DOM. 1376. An. Regni Angliæ L. Franciæ XXXVII.

VII. On Wedneſday, [t] which was the Day after St. John Baptiſt, or the 25 of June, at the earneſt requeſt of the Commons, there came into open Parliament before the Lords, the Young Lord Richard of Bourdeaux, Son and Heir of Edward, late Prince of Wales, and ſo conſequently Heir Apparent of the Realm; of whom, after the Archbiſhop of Canterbury had ſpoken Words of Commendation, the Commons with one Voice prayed, that the Lords would make him Prince of Wales, as his Father was. But the Lords with more Diſcretion anſwer'd, that it lay not in them, but in the King only ſo to do; to whom however they promiſed to be Mediators for that purpoſe. But becauſe the King was ſick at Eltham, the Lords and Commons went thither about the Premiſes, and to have a Confirmation and Anſwer to theſe Petitions, which follow.

[t] M.S. Rot. Par. p. 120. §. 40. Sr. Rob. Cotton's Abridgment p. 123. n. 41. §. 42.

Petitions of the Commons with the King's Anſwer.

That the Great Charter, and the Charter of the Foreſt may be kept in all points. The King granteth thereto. That the Sheriffs in all their Returns of any Inqueſt, do return the moſt Honeſt and Nigheſt Neighbours, and that in every weighty Cauſe the Sheriff be ſworn to view the Panel, before he return the ſame. The Statute therefore made ſhall be executed, and withall adjoyned to the Oath of every Under-Sheriff, that He in his own Perſon ſhall ſurvey the Panel, before he return the ſame. A Motion was made, that all Liberties granted to any Myſtery, or Occupation, in any City or Town, be revoked, and no more granted; ſo as the Mayor and Bayliffs of every City and Town may ſee things amended. But this was quaſh'd, before it came to the King. That divers Commiſſions for Extortions, or ſuch like, granted heretofore to ſundry Perſons of Evil Name, may be Repealed, and no ſuch granted hereafter; but to Lords and others of beſt Reputation in their Countries. The King granteth thereunto, and that no ſuch Commiſſions be hereafter made, but to the Juſtices, Serjeants, and others, Learned in the Law. For the ſaving of Salmons and other Fry of Fiſh in the Thames, almoſt deſtroy'd by certain Engines, as the King himſelf hath often found; that therefore all Trunks between London and the Sea may be overthrown; and that no Salmon be taken between Graveſend and Henley upon Thames in the [u] Kipper-time, viz. between the [x] Invention of the Croſs and the Epiphany, and that no Nets be laid in the Thames, unleſs the ſame be of large Maſh of Aſſize. The Statutes therefore made ſhall be kept, and Commiſſion given out for enquiring after the ſame. That the Wears upon the River Brent, in the County of Middleſex, a parcel of the Thames, be taken away. The Statutes therefore made ſhall be executed. That all thoſe Lombards, called Broakers, who only maintain Uſury, (having alſo brought into the Realm the ſhameſull Sin, which is not to be named) and moreover are ſpies, may be taken Care of. As to Broakers Aliens, that is partly anſwer'd in the Bill of London. On Declaration of the many Inconveniences, which ariſe, for that in every Town, Strangers, not being Free of the ſame, are yet ſuffer'd to buy and ſell there, it is therefore required, that Cities and Towns may have their Liberties renewed and confirmed for reaſonable Fines, and that they may enjoy them ſo, as no ſtranger of any Town being not Free may occupy there. Such as have good Charters or Liberties may ſhew them in the Chancery, where thay ſhall have Right. That the Protections Cum clauſâ Volumus, whereby many Men are undone, and namely, one made to Giacomo, a Lombard, may be repealed, and no ſuch hereafter granted. After Examination had by the Council they ſhall be Repealed, if need be. That Ribalds and ſturdy Beggars may be baniſhed out of every Town. Touching Ribalds, the Statute of Wincheſter and the Declaration of the ſame, with other Statutes of Roberdſmen ſhall be executed: And for ſuch, as make themſelves Gentlemen and Men of Arms, or Archers, if they cannot ſo prove themſelves, let them be driven to their Occupation or Service, or to the Place, from whence they came. The Counties of Lincoln, Leiceſter, Nottingham, and Darby, pray that the Staple may be held at Lincoln, as it was at the firſt Ordinance, and not at St Botolphs. It ſhall continue at St. Botolphs at the King's Pleaſure. For that divers Men do live incontinently, for ſaving their Clergy, it is requiſite, that any Man may have his Clergy, albeit he Marry two Wives or a Widdow. The King will be adviſed. That ſuch Bayliffs in Fee being indicted before the Juſtices of the Foreſt for Vert or Veniſon, and thereupon have their Offices ſeiſed and forfeited to the King, being not called to anſwer, may have a Writ out of the Chancery upon the Statute to be let to Mainpriſe, until the Eire, and to be reſtored to their Offices, according as it hath been uſed. Who is ſpecially grieved may declare the ſame, and ſhall find Remedy. That all ſuch Officers and others of the Kings Council, who [x] Inventio Crucis 3 Maii Epiphania 6 Januarii.

[u] i.e. Spawning time à Belgico Kippen, pullos edere, ova excludere.

An. Dom. 1376. An. Regni Angliæ L. Franciæ XXXVII.

who are convicted of Deceit, and displaced, be never restored again, and that so much be Enacted. If the Defaults declared to the King and Council deserve such Punishment: Otherwise the King will do, as to him shall seem best. That Remedy may be had against such Aliens Religious, as sue to the Court of Rome for their Pensions and Livings. Who is especially grieved upon Declaration of the same to the Council, shall have Remedy. That all Justices of the Peace may be named by the Lords and Knights of every Shire in Parliament, where they may be sworn, and none to be renewed out of Parliament, and that they may be allowed reasonable Fees. They shall be nominated by the King and his continual Council, and as for the Fees, the King will be advised. They require, that for Lands sold by any Religious Person, or other Person of the Church, the Statute of Westminster the Second may be kept, and that Judgement Executory may be had against the Tenant of the Lands. The King would have the Statute to be kept, and touching Alienations made before this Parliament, Writs shall be granted against the Tenants of the Land; and for such Alienations to be made, the King will be advised. That Hundreds be not let to Farm, or other Farm letten; but kept in the Lords Hands. The Statutes therefore provided shall stand. That such, as are indicted before the Coroner for Murder, and flee upon the same by siniſter means to them made, should forfeit their Goods, and that the same be enquired of only before the Justice of the Goal Delivery, whether they so fled or withdrew themselves. Who will especially Complain, shall find Favour. That Stanks, Stakes, and other annoyances made about Havens be removed and thrown down. The Statute therefore made shall be kept. That the Accompts, as well for Sums of Money for [u] Assarts, or otherwise in the Exchequor, may be discharged on the Averment, that there are no means to levy the same. The Grieved, upon Declaration of their Grievance, shall have Right. That such Lords, and others, who have Lands upon the Sea-Coasts, for the Defence of the same, may be bound to dwell upon the same. The King by Advice will appoint Order therein. That no Sheriffs be made, but from Year to Year, and that such, and their Deputies, as have been otherwise, may be in the same Case. The Statutes therefore appointed shall be observed. That none be appointed to be a Justice of Assize in his own Country, unless some Foreign Justice be associate with him. Who will complain, shall have Right. That the Charter made to the Men of Yarmouth, that none should within the time of their Fishing buy any Herring within seven Miles of the same Town, may be Repealed; so as Men may openly buy and sell. The King granteth thereto in respect of a new Grant above mention'd, saving to the Town all other their Liberties, with this Clause, Licet. That no Man be barred by any Warranty collateral; but for so much of Lands, as Descending unto him by such Aunceſtry. The King will be advised until the next Parliament. That the Justices of Assise shall keep their Sessions in Towns, where Goals be, and make their Deliverances before their Departure, at least once by the Year: And that to the same Justices may be made in One a Patent, as well to take the Assise, as to Deliver the Goal. The Justices of Assise shall have their Patent in such Wise, as hath been, and shall as well take the Assise, as make Delivery. That all Sheriffs may be Yearly chosen on the Feast of St. Michael, and so as their Gifts and Dinners to the Officers of the Exchequor may be done: That the Justices deliver into the same Court their Extracts at the Octaves of St. Michael, and that they be deliver'd to the Sheriff at the Quindenes of St. Martin, or the Day after Hilary at th'utmost: That Sheriffs and Escheators may be annually removed. Sheriffs and Escheators shall be Yearly chosen at Michaelmas, and have out their Commissions the Day after All-Souls; That no Dinners or Gifts be given them in Receipt or Exchequor, on such and such Penalties. That Writs be sent into all the Counties of England to publish the Perambulations of the Forest heretofore made, and to make Perambulations, and to establish the Continuance of the same; so as every Officer upon the Breach thereof, do forfeit his Office, and render double Damages to the Party grieved. The King meaneth to make new Perambulations thrô England, and willeth, that the Charter of the Forest be observed. That Remedy may be had against certain Lombards, who have coloured certain Ships fraughted, and wrecked Goods of the Kings Enemies, and pursued by certain of the Kings Subjects, to be their own; and so by siniſter means have obtained the same. The Grieved upon suit to the Council, shall have Right. That no Lands or Tenements be seised by any of the Kings Officers, of any Person, not attainted of Treason or Felony in his Life time. Let this be more fully opened. That no Sheriff, Under-Sheriff, or Goaler be Justice during their Offices, neither that they be put in any Commission, other than what Concerns their Offices. It pleaseth the King. That the Bishops do certainly appoint what shall be taken for a Probate of a Testament, and

[u] De hoc verbo vid. Cowell & Skinner, in Etymol.

and for an Acquittance upon the Account. The Statutes therefore made ſhall be kept. That for Goods of Felons found by Office, every Man may traverſe ſuch Offices, and upon the Reverſing of the ſame be diſcharged. The Law ſhall ſtand as it doth. That no Man be charged upon an account in the Exchequor of Scottiſh Money, ſweet Wine ſold without Licence, Corn, Lead, Tin, Worſted, Butter, and ſuch like, whereby no Profit comes to the Prince. For Scottiſh Money, Remedy was provided, An°. 47. Ed. 3. tit. 19. For ſweet Wines, Remedy was appointed the laſt Parliament; And for the reſt Care ſhall be taken the firſt Opportunity. That the Clerk of the Mercate of the Kings Houſhold, do not by Extortion take Fines in Groſs, or certain, of any Towns, and that there may be appointed a Certainty of Meaſures, and weight according to the Standard. He ſhall ſee puniſhment done according to the Quality of the Fault, without any ſuch Fines taking there, where he doth not his Office: And the Meaſure ſhall be according to the Standard and Statute made. That no Patent of any Lands found by the Eſcheators Inqueſt be granted; ſo as the Party will ſtand bound to anſwer the King the Profits thereof, if upon Tryal it be found for the King. The King will be adviſed. That the Chancellour upon the Writ of [z] Champartie, may grant forth Writs at the ſuit of the Party, and that he may recover Damages in his ſuit. The King will be adviſed until the next Parliament. They Require Remedy againſt Reſervation of Benefices from (the Court of) Rome. The Bill is elſewhere anſwer'd. That the Lord Steward and Marſhal of the Kings Houſhold do hold no other Pleas, than are contained in the Statute called Articuli ſuper Chartas: That for twelve Miles they may be certainly limited, whether from the Kings Preſence, or the Place of his Houſhold, and not from both, unleſs they be together. And that the Steward do keep his Seſſion within three Miles about the Preſence of the King, as it hath been accuſtomed. They ſhall have Juriſdiction from the Place, where the King himſelf is, or from the Place, where the Houſhold is kept, twelve Miles in circuit, and not from the One and the Other at one time. And further the Statute therefore made ſhall ſtand. That every Man in the Exchequor being impleaded, may wage his Law, as in other Courts, where Wage doth lie. They ſhall not wage their Law in the Exchequor, as in other Courts, where the King is not Party. That the Chirographer may be ſworn, that neither He, nor none of his Clerks, do take for the engroſſing of a Fine, but only Four Shillings. The Statute made therefore ſhall ſtand.

AN. DOM. 1376. An. Regni Angliæ L. Franciæ XXXVII.

[z] Vid. Cowell & Skinner.

Then there was prefer'd a [a] long Bill againſt the Uſurpations of the Pope, as which were the Cauſe of all the Plagues, Injuries, Famine and Poverty of the Realm, ſo as thereby was not left the Third Perſon, or other Commodity within the Realm, as lately was: That the Tax paid to the Pope of Rome for Eccleſiaſtical Dignities, doth amount to five fold as much as the Tax of all the Profits, as appertain to the King by the Year, of this whole Realm; and for ſome one Biſhoprick or other Dignity, the Pope by Tranſlation and Death hath three, four or five ſeveral Taxes: That the Brokers of that ſinfull City for Money promote many Caitiffs, being altogether unlearned and unworthy, to a thouſand Marks living yearly; whereas the Learned and Worthy can hardly obtain twenty Marks, whereby Learning decayeth: That Aliens, Enemies to this Land, who never ſaw nor care to ſee their Pariſhioners, have thoſe Livings; whereby they deſpiſe God's Service, and convey away the Treaſure of the Realm, and are worſe than Jews or Saracens. It is therefore to be conſidered, that the Law of the Church would have ſuch Livings beſtowed for Charity only, without Praying or Paying. That Reaſon would, that Livings given of Devotion ſhould be beſtow'd in Hoſpitality. That God hath given his Sheep to the Pope to be paſtured, and not ſhorn or ſhaven. That Lay-Patrons perceiving this Simony and Covetouſneſs of the Pope, do thereby learn to ſell their Benefices to Beaſts, no otherwiſe than Chriſt was ſold to the Jews. That there is none ſo Rich a Prince in Chriſtendom, who hath the Fourth Part of ſo much Treaſure, as the Pope hath out of this Realm for Churches moſt ſinfully. After a Repetition of their Zeal for the Honour of the Church, it was declared, that all the Plagues there particularized have juſtly fallen upon this Realm for ſuffering the Church of England thus to be defaced; and that theſe Miſchiefs will dayly encreaſe without Redreſs. Whereupon followeth an earneſt Perſuaſion to reedifie and reform the ſame; and the rather, for that this was the Year of Jubilee, the Fiftieth Year of the King's Reign, the Year of Joy and Gladneſs, than the which could be no greater. The means how to begin this was to write two Letters to the Pope, the one in Latine under the Broad Seal, the other in French under the Seals of the Nobles, importing theſe Particularities, and requiring Redreſs. And for a further Accompliſhment hereof to Enact, that no Money be carried out of the Realm, by Letter of Lombardy or otherwiſe, on Pain

[a] M.S. Rot. Par. p. 127. n. 85. Sr. Rob. Cotton's Abridgm. p. 128. & Fox Acts, &c. p. 552.

of

An. Dom. 1376. An. Regni Angliæ L. Franciæ XXXVII.

of Forfeiture and Impriſonment, and to Enact the Articles hereafter enſuing. The King hath heretofore by Statute provided ſufficient Remedy, and otherwiſe purſueth the ſame with the holy Father the Pope; and ſo mindeth to do from time to time, untill he hath obtained the ſame, as well for the Matters before, as for the Articles enſuing, they being in a manner all one. Then it was remonſtrated, that the Pope's Collector, and other Strangers the King's Enemies, and only Leiger-Spies for Engliſh Dignities, and diſcloſing the Secrets of the Realm, ought to be diſcharged. That the ſame Collector, being alſo Receiver of the Pope's Pence, keepeth an Houſe in London with Clerks and Officers thereunto belonging, as if it were one of the King's Solemn Courts, tranſporting yearly to the Pope 20000 Marks, and moſt commonly more. That Cardinals and other Aliens remaining at the Court of Rome, whereof one Cardinal is a Dean of York, another of Salisbury, another of Lincolne, another Archdeacon of Canterbury, another Archdeacon of Durham, another of Suffolk, and another Archdeacon of York; another Prebendary of Thame and Naſſington, another Prebendary of Yorkes in the Diœceſe of York, have divers other the beſt Dignities in England, and have ſent over Yearly unto them 20000 Marks, over and above that which Engliſh Brokers lying here have. That the Pope to ranſom Frenchmen the King's Enemies, who defend Lombardy for him, doth always at his Pleaſure levy a Subſidy of the [b] Whole Clergy of England. That the Pope for more Gain maketh ſundry Tranſlations of all the Biſhopricks and other Dignities within the Realm. That the Pope's Collector hath this Year taken to his Uſe the Firſt-Fruits of all Benefices. That therefore it would be good to renew all the Statutes againſt Proviſions from Rome, ſince the Pope reſerveth all the Benefices of the World for his own proper Gift, and hath within this Year created Twelve new Cardinals; ſo that now there are Thirty, whereas there were wont to be but Twelve in all; and all the ſaid Thirty Cardinals, except Two or Three, are the King's Enemies. That the Pope in time will give the Temporal Mannors of Dignities to the King's Enemies, ſince he dayly uſurpeth upon the Realm and the King's Regality. That all Houſes and Corporations of Religion, which from the King ought to have free Elections of their Heads, the Pope hath now [c] accroached the ſame unto himſelf. That in all Legations from the Pope whatſoever, the Engliſh Clergy beareth the Charge of the Legates, and all for the Goodneſs of our Money. It alſo appeareth, that if the Money of the Realm were as plentifull as ever, the Collector aforeſaid with the Cardinals Proctors would ſoon convey away the ſame. For Remedy whereof it may be provided, that no ſuch Collector or Proctor do remain in England, upon pain of Life and Limb; and that on the like Pain no Engliſhman become any ſuch Collector or Proctor, or remain at the Court of Rome. For better Information hereof, and namely touching the Pope's Collector, for that the Whole Clergy being Obedient to him, dare not diſpleaſe him, it were good that Dr. John Strenſall, Parſon of St. Botolphs in Holborn, may be ſent for to come before the Lords and Commons of this Parliament; who being ſtraightly charged can declare much more, for that he ſerved the ſame Collector in Houſe five Years.

[b] In M.S. & Sr. Rob. Cotton legitur Holy.

[c] Vid. Skinner's Etymolog.

The Commons require, that the Statute made in 14 Ed. 3. (that the King's Ward ſhould be committed to the next Heir of the Ward, to whom the Lands cannot deſcend, he yielding therefore as much as another would) might be confirmed. The King granteth thereto ſaving his Regality. That time of Preſcription in Writ of Right may be from the Coronation of King Edward the Firſt, and in Writs of Mort D' Aunceſter nuper Obiit, [d] Coſenage, [e] Ayel, and ſuch other Writs may be from the Coronation of the King now being. The King will be advis'd for Changing the Law heretofore uſed. That no Alien do enjoy any Living that hath Cure, or requireth Reſidence. This Bill is anſwer'd before in the two long Bills of Rome. For that Errors had before Juſtices of Aſſiſe are Revocable before the Chief Juſtice of the Common Pleas, they require, that the Chief Juſtice there be appointed no Juſtice of Aſſiſe. The King granteth, when the Number may ſpare him. That a General Pardon may be of all Miſpriſions and Intruſions made into any Lands, holden of the King in Chief. The King will ſhew Favour where him liketh. That they may have an Action of Account againſt the Executors of the Guardian in Soccage. The King will be adviſed untill next Parliament. That Reſtitution may be made to Engliſhmen, Farmers of any Religious Aliens Houſe. Touching Farmers aboveſaid the King granteth, ſo it concern Priors, Churches Conventual, Collegiate and Parochial; but for Engliſh Governours the King will be adviſed. That no Special Grant be made to any Man for ſingular Profit, which may redound to the Diſadvantage of the King or Realm. Let them declare themſelves more particularly. That the Statute made for Buyers in [f] 36 Ed. 3. tit. 10. &c. may be kept, and that [d] In hoc loco jus Cognationis ſignificat.

[e] Vid. Cowell in hâc voce.

[f] Inter Statuta Gallica M.S. Coll. Eman. apud Cantabr. ut & Statuta Anglica impreſſa nil tale occurrit, ſed potius referuntur ad An. 27. Ed. 3. c. 10.

that Juſtices of the Peace may enquire of the ſame. The Statutes therefore made ſhall ſtand, and the Juſtices of the Peace ſhall determine the ſame. That an Infant within Age levying a Fine, may have Reſpit two or three Years after his full Age to reverſe the ſame. The King will be adviſed. That no Alien be made Head of any Religious Houſe belonging to Aliens; and that during the Wars all French Religious Perſons may be baniſhed the Realm. To this nothing was done. Certain being taken Priſoners, and unable to ranſom themſelves, viz. Sr. Matthew Gournay, Sr. Matthew Redmayne, Sr. Thomas Fowkes, Sr. John Harpedon, Sr. Gregory Say, Sr. Geoffry Werkeſley, Sr. Robert Twyford, Sr. John Bourchier, and divers other Good Knights and Eſquires, pray the King to ranſom them. The King is willing to do for their Comfort as far as Reaſon would. The Commons of the County of Devon for divers Oppreſſions done by the Officers of the Stanneries there, under Colour of their Liberties, require the King by Parliament to explain his Grant to them made, which being divided into particular Branches is done, but too long to be here abridged. The like Bill did the Commons of Cornwall exhibit for the Liberties of their Stanneries, the Grant and Anſwer agreeing with the preceding, but that alſo is too long for this Place. The Commons of the County of Cumberland require Aid of the King for the Repairing the City of Carlile, being in a manner ſpoiled and fallen down, for that the Townſmen are not able to do the ſame; and alſo for the Appointing of one to be Warden of the Marches there. The Biſhops and Lords, together with the Earl of Warwick and Sr. Guy Bryan ſhall aſſemble and appoint reaſonable Order therein. The Inhabitants of the Port Towns in England pray, that whereas it often happens, that a Man or a Boy being in one of their Ships or other Veſſels, and by miſadventure falling therefrom is drowned, their Ship or Veſſel is thereupon ſeiſed as a Deodand, and that therein Remedy may be had. If the Veſſel be upon the Sea it ſhall be adjudged no Deodand; if upon the Freſh-Water, let the Owner complain to the King, who will extend Favour. The Watermen of London complain of leaving of Locks, Stanks and Weares upon the River of Thames, and namely of a Lock called Hamelden-Lock, and for that there is Cuſtom demanded of them, paſſing the Bridges of Stains, Windſor and Maiden-head, and other Locks againſt their Franchiſes. As for the Locks and Kidels the Statute made in the 37 of Ed. 3. tit. 18. ſhall be executed: And for exacting Money of them at the Bridges aforeſaid, or elſewhere againſt their Franchiſes, they ſhall make their Suit in the Chancery, and have their Writs grounded on their Liberties, to ſtay ſuch takings. The Commons of the County of Kent complain againſt the Officers of the Caſtle of Dover, for arreſting them by their Catchpoles to anſwer before them; whereunto they are [s] [not] bound. The Officers ſhall have no Juriſdiction out of the Fee of the Honour and Caſtle of Dover, nor ſhall make any Proceſs by Capias out of the Liberties of the Cinque-Ports. Certain of the Sea-Coaſts complain to the King, that whereas they by the King's Appointment with their Ships tranſported Sr. Thomas Felton Steward of Gaſcogne, and Sr. William Elman Governour of Bayonne, unto Bourdeaux, and from thence went to the Baye, where certain Spaniſh Gallies, notwithſtanding the Truce taken between the King, the Spaniards and Frenchmen, boarded and took them, viz. on the tenth of Auguſt laſt paſt before, herein therefore they pray Remedy. The King hath done, and will do, his beſt for Redreſs and Reſtitution. The Inhabitants of the Town of Southhampton pray the King to take the Town into his own Hands; for that they are not able to pay the Fee-Farm, by reaſon of the great Charge about the Fortification of the ſame, and that he would ſend thither Men of War for the Defence of the ſame. The King will be adviſed. The Mayor and Commonalty of Wincheſter pray the King to confirm and grant to them their Liberties, in ſuch wiſe as was laſt granted to London, and that towards the Murage of the ſame he would give them ſome Aid of Cuſtom or otherwiſe. [The Anſwer to this is not to be read.] The Commons of divers Cities and Towns require the payment of certain Moneys lent the King in the time of Thomas Brantingham Biſhop of Exceſter, and Treaſurer of England. They ſhall be paid as ſoon as may be. The Lords of the Realm and their Tenants pray the King of Remedy againſt the Riots of divers Cities and Towns, for that they enter upon their ſeveral Grounds, therein claiming Common, conſidering the Waſts thereunto adjoyning may ſuffice therefore; and namely, that ſuch of the Townſmen as have not Lands lying with any of the ſaid Lords, may have no Common in any of their Lands. This Matter is before the Council. The Inhabitants of Bath complain, that whereas they had a Fair there at the Feaſt of St. Calixtus, the Town of Briſtow being but ten Miles from them, have raiſed a Fair at Briſtow the ſame Day, and forbidden all their Townſmen of Briſtow upon certain Penalties to bring any Wares to the ſaid Fair of Bath, for this they pray Remedy. It is before the [s] M.S. & Sr. Rob. Cotton hæc vocula not intercidit.

AN. DOM. 1376. An. Regni Angliæ L. Franciæ. XXXVII.

An. Dom. 1376. An. Regni Angliæ L. Franciæ XXXVII.

Great Council. The Commons of Eſſex and Suffolk pray, that certain Clothes there or elſewhere, called Cogware and Kerſies, made in the ſaid Counties, be not within the compaſs of the Statute of Clothes, made in the 47 Ed. 3. [h] c. 1. The King willeth, that they have ſuch Words, that the Straight-Ware called Cogware and Kerſies, made in the ſaid Counties, ſhall not be intended to be compriſed in the ſaid Statute, nor under the Penalty therein. The Mayor, Aldermen and Commons of the City of London pray, that they may enjoy all their Liberties, and that no Stranger do keep Houſe, or be a Broker, or ſell Merchandiſe by Retail. The King hath granted thereto conditionally, that the ſame City be well governed, ſaving to the Merchants of the Hans their Liberties. The Citizens and Burgeſſes of divers places there mention'd, complain for and in the Name of their reſpective Cities and Towns, that divers of the King's Tenants having [i] Burgage within them, do ſuffer them to fall to decay, whereby they are the leſs able to pay their Fee-farms, for which they pray Remedy. The Citizens of * Chicheſter pray Remedy, for that they are impleaded out of the ſame City for their Freeholds, and for that they are driven to appear at Aſſizes and Seſſions, contrary to the general Words of their Liberties. Let them ſhew their Charters in the Chancery and they ſhall have Right. They require alſo Confirmation of their Charters according to that purport. Let them alſo ſhew their Charters, and they ſhall have Right. The Commonalty of Surrey and Suſſex pray Remedy, that whereas the King out of his Fee-farms paid for the ſaid Counties, hath granted to Richard Earl of Arundel the two [k] Turns of Sheriffs in the Rapes of Chicheſter and Arundel, worth by the Year 30 l. and certain Rent called Sheringdeld, to the Yearly value of 14 l. 19 s. 1 d. yielding therefore yearly 3 l. 6 s. 8 d. The Sheriff may upon his Accompt be diſcharged thereof. Let it be ſhewed to the King, and if it pleaſe him, that the Earl enjoy the ſame, the Sheriff ſhall be diſcharged according to the Quantity; if not the Sheriff ſhall be at his Anſwer. The Burgeſſes of Southwark pray a Confirmation of their Charter, lately burn'd by Caſualty. Let them make their purſuit in the Chancery, and they ſhall have Right. The Mayor and Commons of New-Caſtle upon Tine complain, that whereas the Prior of Tinemouth, Parcel of St. John of Jeruſalem in England, by cautelous and ſuborned means brought his Writ of Freehold in Fernham, and put in View and Plaint the greater Parcel in Value of the ſame Town, holden in Farm of the Crown time out of Mind, and recovered: Whereupon Order was taken, that the ſame Juſtice of Aſſize ſhould not in that Aſſize have a procedendo; but that the Chancellor ſhould grant a Commiſſion for the Examining of the Truth, untill which time the Matter ſhould ſtay; they therefore require, that the Aſſize be no further proceeded in, untill the Commiſſion return. Remedy is provided in this Parliament, as appeareth by another Bill thereunto indorſed. The Commons of the Marches [m] of Eſtritheng require, that Commiſſion may be made to the Lord Percy, the Prior of Bridlington, Sr. Robert Boynton, Sr. Robert Conſtable, Sr. John Snaresby, and John Almaric, that they may appoint able Perſons for the Defence of the ſame, and namely an Arrival between a Place called Earl-Dikes and the Town of Whitby. It pleaſeth the King. The Commons of the Counties of Eſſex and Hertford pray, that the Sheriff upon his Account be allowed an 100 l. yearly of that which he cannot receive. Let them ſearch the Exchequer, or Treaſury, or elſewhere for the Cauſes of the Diſtreſs of thoſe Farms for two years now enſuing, and in the mean time the Sheriff ſhall have pardon of an Hundred Marks. The Commons of the City of Rocheſter pray, that the [n] Clerk of the Market may have nothing to do within the ſaid City. He ſhall make Aſſay and due Puniſhment of ſuch as make Default, without taking any Fines in Groſs of the ſame Town, where he doth not his Office. The Commons of the City of Northampton ſhew, that the Sheriff is yearly charged with an Hundred Pounds for the profit of the Shire, where he knows not how to leavy above fifty three Pounds three Shillings four Pence, and pray Conſideration thereof may be had. Let them declare their Requeſt in ſpecial manner. They pray a Pardon of all Forfeitures ſuppoſed to be done by any of them, whereof they were not attainted in all their Life, and that no ſuch hereafter be made. The King will be adviſed. That the Proceſs of ſuch as be at Iſſue, and do not within one Year after ſue out their Niſi Prius, be diſcontinued and had for nothing. The Law heretofore uſed ſhall ſtand. That no Man on pain of Loſing all he hath, do carry forth Corn out of the Realm, but only for the Proviſion of Calais. The Liege People ſhall have leave to convey Corn whither they pleaſe for their moſt Advantage. The Commonalty of Nottingham, Darby and Lincoln, and of the Town of Nottingham require, that by the King's Letters Patents the County and Town of Nottingham aforeſaid, may appoint two Guardians, who may purchaſe Lands unto them and their Succeſſors for the Maintenance of a Bridge called Heibeth-Bridge, nigh

[h] In M.S. &c. 41. ſed ex Statutis corrigo.

[i] Vide de hâc voce Cowell, Spelman, Skinner, &c.

* M.S. Cheſter.

[k] M.S. Towns, &c. in Sr. Rob. Cotton.

[m] an Eſtriveling?

[n] Ità Sr. Rob. Cotton; ſed in M.S. Sheriff.

nigh unto the Town of Nottingham. The King will be adviſed. That the like Order that is made in London againſt the Horrible vice of Uſury, may be obſerved throughout the whole Realm. The old Law ſhall continue. That Recovery may he had, and an Attourney by a Writ of Aſſize of Novel Diſſeiſin of Nuſance made to a Miln, or to the Frank-Tenant of Nuſance made in times paſt as heretofore. Let the Common Law run. They require that Remedy may be had againſt certain Lombards, who named themſelves to be of the Company of Askertines, or of Stroze, or other the like, and thereby have upon Credit bought Wooll of Engliſhmen, ſome to the value of thirty Pounds, and ſome twenty Pounds; and ſome have departed to the great undoing of divers Engliſhmen, as Thomas Blanchered, Nicolas John, and other their Factors lately did. It is before the Great Council. For the Tryal of any Man's Birth, whereupon Inheritance doth ſtand, that the Inqueſt for the Tryal may be of the County, where the Birth is laid, and not where the Writ is brought. The Old Law therein ſhall be obſerved. That the Kings Carriage for himſelf and his Houſhold may be of Carts and Horſes of his own, and not to charge the Commons therewith; and to remember the Court of Marſhalſey; for there is great Complaint thereof throughout the whole Realm. The King knoweth not, how theſe things are brought to paſs: But if they be, he will charge the Steward and other Officers to make Redreſs: And as to the Article of the Marſhalſey, let it be declared. The Merchants of the Staple require to be eaſed of divers new Impoſitions, as Chalking, [p] Tronage, Wharfage, &c. The King would make no new Impoſitions, but that the ſame be enquired of, if it be needfull. That Commandment may be made to the Sheriff and Juſtices of the Peace of every Shire, to raiſe the Power of the Shire for repreſſing of Routs and Riots. The King will appoint Order, and willeth that the Statute be executed. They require, that good regard may be had for the Keeping of the Caſtle of Nottingham, wherein the Sons of Sr. Charles of Blois are under the Keeping of a Stranger, not able to anſwer therefore; whereas by Record it appeareth, that the Keeper of that Caſtle was wont to be an Earl of the Realm. Let it be declared before the King and the Great Council. The Commonalty of Cities and Towns pray, that ſuch Parcel and Hamlets of Towns, lying near to the Walls of their Cities and Towns, and yet not belonging to the ſame, may be contributory to all Charges, within ſuch their Walled Cities and Towns, and that the Mayors and Bayliffs of the ſame may arreſt all Breakers of the Peace there. The King meaneth thereof to be adviſed. That it would pleaſe the King to pardon the Commons of Northumberland, all Iſſues and Amercements loſt in any of the Kings Courts from An°. 48. Ed. 3. unto this preſent. The King will be adviſed. The Commons of Southampton pray Remedy againſt the Extortions of the Lord Nevil; for not paying Men their Wages, whereby the Souldiers ſpoiled the Country, to the Value of 400 l. and that Remedy may be provided for the future. The Offender ſhall anſwer for the time paſt, and for the time to come, the King will provide Remedy. The Commons of Norfolk require, that Payment be made to them and to all the Countries, for ſheep taken by the Purveyors far under the Price againſt the Statute. The Bill is otherwiſe anſwer'd within the Bill of Buyers. That the poor Commons of Yarmouth, who came to the Parliament to complain of the Oppreſſions done unto them by the Rich of the ſame Town, may be in the Kings Protection, ſworn and examined for the Profit of the King. It pleaſeth the King. The Commons of the Diœceſs of York complain of the outragious taking of the Biſhop and his Clerks for Admiſſion of Prieſts to their Benefices. Who hath moſt cauſe, let him ſue by the Law. The Commons of the Hundred of Geſtling in Suſſex, deſire Remedy; foraſmuch as the Cinque-Ports have bought half the ſaid Hundred, and will not contribute any thing to them. It is before the Great Council. The Commons of Worceſterſhire, Salop, and Stafford, Hereford, Briſtol, and Glouceſter deſire Remedy; for that the Merchants of thoſe Shires in travelling to Calais, are oft arreſted for the treſpaſſes and debts of other Men, with whom they have no Acquaintance or Doing: And alſo that ſuch, as being of the Marches of Wales and County of Cheſter, and rob in the Counties firſt-recited, or commit any other Felonies or Treſpaſſes, and being thereof attainted in ſuch Shires, where the Felonies are done, may therefore loſe their Goods and Lands to their Lords. Let the old Law there be kept. That no Woollen Yarn be carried out of the Realm, or ſold to any Perſon, but imployed in Draping. No ſuch Yarn ſhall paſs out of the Realm upon pain of forfeiture. That all Liberties granted to Cities or Towns may be confirmed, and no Farmers of any ſuch Liberties be Diſturbers of the ſame. Let them ſhew their Charters in the Chancery, and they ſhall have Right. The Poor Commons of Great Yarmouth pray, that they may freely buy and ſell, and chiefly in the Fiſhing time, according to their Charter, and not to be

AN. DOM. 1376. An. Regni Angliæ L. Franciæ XXXVII.

[p] i.e. Vectigal pro Ponderatione Mercium, &c. Vid. D. Skinner, &c.

An. Dom. 1376. An. Regni Angliæ L. Franciæ XXXVII.

oppreſſed by the Rich. Let them ſhew their Grievances in particular before the Great Council, and they ſhall be heard. The Commons of Tivedale, as well Religious as ſecular, pray to be reſtored to their Poſſeſſions, given from them to their Enemies. Let the Lords Marchers (there named) treat thereof, and report to the Lords in Parliament their Opinion concerning a Remedy. The Citizens of York deſire, that whereas the Lord of Ard and Cockham in Holland hath ſtayed ſix and Thirty Surples of their Woolls to the Value of 1900 l. ſuppoſing that the King oweth him Money for his Service in France, and will neither for the Kings Letters, nor other means deliver their Woolls, that therefore they may have Licence to ſtay the Ships of the ſame Lord at Calais, or in England, till they be paid and anſwer'd to the Value. Let it be declared to the Grand Council, and they ſhall have Remedy according to Reaſon. John de [q] Bretſhorne maketh his Title to the Mannor of Grinſteed in the County of Wilts, and to the Advouſon of the ſaid Mannor, and to the Moiety of the Mannor of Exbury in the County of Southampton, and prayeth to be reſtored to the Poſſeſſion of the ſame from Robert de Beverley; the Premiſes being confeſſedly held of the King in Chief. It is before the Great Council. The Commons of Devonſhire pray, that they may be paid for Victuals taken of them by the Duke of Bretagne, while he lay there a long time for paſſage; and that from henceforth no Protection be granted to any Paſſenger over, to take any Victuals, otherwiſe than for preſent pay. Let the Offenders for the time paſt anſwer, and for the time to come the King will provide. That Remedy may be had touching the Diſhoneſt Returns of Bayliffs of Nihil habent, againſt them for their bribing Fees, and other Corruptions. It is before the Grand Council. Where Men for ſafeguard and fear of their Lives do fly to Church-yards, and after depart therefrom, the Steward of the Kings Houſhold forthwith enquireth, how they eſcaped out of the Church-yard, and upon the Matter found, awardeth an Eſcape againſt the Town or Pariſh, wherein they pray Remedy. The King will be adviſed herein. That if the Party Plaintiff or Defendant, upon his Habeas Corpus returned, do not ſue out his Niſi prius, then the whole Proceſs may be diſcontinued, and that in all, and every of the Kings Courts; and that every Man may have the Niſi prius granted, as well againſt the King, as others without ſuing to the Privy Seal. Let the Law uſed run. That ſuch, as have, or ſhall ſue, Livery upon an Inqueſt of Office by Eſcheators, where thoſe Lands indeed are not holden of the King, may be received to aver, of whom, or by what Service, the ſame Lands are holden. If any Mans Inheritance be charged by any ſuch Inqueſt, he, who will complain, ſhall be received to traverſe the Inqueſt before his Homage done. That any Man, having the Privy Seal for the Payment of Debts, due by the King unto him, ſhall not be ſtayed from the Payment thereof by any private Letter of the Treaſurer. The King granteth thereunto. That a Parliament may be holden every Year, the Knights of the Parliament may be choſen of the whole Counties; and that the Sheriff may likewiſe be without Broakage in Court. As to the Parliament, there are Statutes already made: For the Sheriffs, Anſwer hath been given; and as for the Knights, it is agreed, that they ſhall be choſen by Common Conſent of every County. That ſuch, as by ſiniſter means procure Extents againſt the King at One Value, where it is thrice, or however far better, may be puniſhed. The King will make Enquiry thereof, as himſelf pleaſeth. That no Pardon be granted to any Impeached in this Parliament, being the Kings Counſellors, or ſworn to him; but that ſuch be thenceforth removed, and never reſtored, and an Act thereof to be made. The King will do therein, as ſhall pleaſe him. That all the Articles of Wrongs, declared in this Parliament, againſt any Perſon, may be duly determin'd by Commiſſions, by the Kings Juſtices, and other Lords, and that the Judgement given in this Parliament be not Repealed by Reaſon of Broakers about the King. The King will do by Advice of his Council, what ſhall ſeem beſt, ſaving to every One his Liberties. They require the King to have good Regard to the Government of the Realm, that all Profits of the Crown may be employ'd to the Kings Honour. The King (as next above) will do for his own Honour, the Good Government, Profit, and Eaſe of the People. That ſuch, as ſhall of their own Authority lay new Impoſitions without Aſſent of Parliament, may loſe Life, Member, and other Forfeitures. Let the Common Law heretofore uſed run. Then there follows a long Bill againſt the Broakages and corrupt Recovery of Religious Perſons, by the taking of Sheriffs; that any notwithſtanding ſuch Recoveries might have Tryal, and upon the Matter found, thoſe Religious Perſons to be puniſhed therefore, as therein is contained, with many other Matters relating to the ſame. The Law therein heretofore uſed ſhall be kept. That all Wapentakes and Hundreds let to Farm may be Repealed, and none hereafter granted, and that all Bayliffs may be ſufficient and able. The Statutes made therefore ſhall be kept.

[q] Ità M.S. ſed Sr. Rob. Cotton Britſhorne.

kept. That Remedy may be had ſo, as there may be Reaſonable warning given for the holding of Wapentakes and Hundreds. The Statutes therefore made ſhall be kept. That Preſentments may be made but twice in the Year in Leets or great Wapentakes. There be Statutes therefore. That none but ſuch as be [r] Reſiant, do come to any Wapentake or Hundred. There are Statutes provided therefore. Complaint made againſt Bayliffs of Markets and Fairs, who attach Men out of their Juriſdictions. There are Statutes made therefore. Againſt Bayliffs, being Farmers of Wapentakes or Hundreds, who thereby procure Plaints in other Mens Names, and ſue great Sums, by dividing the ſame into leſs Sums. Let them hold to the Statutes.

AN. DOM. 1376. An. Regni Angliæ L. Franciæ XXXVII.

[r] i.e. Reſident.

¶ Petitions exhibited by the Clergy, and their Anſwers.

That all Conſultations may readily be granted in the Suit for Tythes of Sylva Cædua, and that no Attachment do Enſue the ſame. A Conſultation granted doth ſuffice; and if need be, there may be a ſpecial Clauſe for Prohibitions Granted, or to be Granted. That the Ordinary may according to the Eccleſiaſtical Laws puniſh ſuch, as do fraudulently procure Conſultations: That in Matters touching the puniſhing of the Soul, the Kings Prohibition may ceaſe, or a Conſultation be granted: That in Demands of Penſions by One Church from another, no Prohibition be granted. The Juſtices ſhall meet in the preſence of certain Biſhops, who ſhall take Order therein to content. In a Caſe of Tythes, upon objection that the Tythes exceed a Fourth part of the Value of the Church, a Prohibition is granted againſt the Canonical Sanction. That the Kings Purveyors take up of the Clergy, and cauſe them alſo to make Carriage for the King againſt their Traditions and Statutes therefore made. That if the Matter of Tythes under the Name of Chattels be depending before any Temporal Judge, the Eccleſiaſtical Judge affirming the Contrary, ſhall decide the ſame. That upon any Conditional Conſultation the Eccleſiaſtical Judge may take upon him the very true Underſtanding thereof, and ſo proceed therein. That no Man ſhall have any Prohibition, unleſs he do bring to the Chancellour the Libell, ſigned with the Judges Seals, before whom it is hanging, for the more perſpicuity thereof. That no Clerk, or his ſervant being with him, be arreſted by any Officer, while in the Church-yard, or other Sacred Place, or in carrying the Communion to any Man. The King granteth the ſame, ſo as none do keep himſelf in the Sanctuary by Coven.

¶ The Commons of the Town of Calais pray, that the Staple may only be holden there, and in this their Requeſt it appears by the Records, that when the Staple ſtood there, upon all Roads or Excurſions made by the Captain of Calais, the Mayor of the Staple furniſhed him out of the Number of Merchants, and their Servants with One Hundred Bill Men, and two Hundred Archers. Wherefore the King granteth, that the Staple ſhall be holden there, and no where elſe in the Parts beyond the Seas, as well of all Staple-Ware, as of Lead, Tin, Worſted, Butter, Cheeſe, Feathers for Men of War, &c. That the Old Charter of Maud Counteſs of Artois, which was confirmed by the King, may be allowed, except the Tryal of Land and Liberties of Staple. The King will be adviſed in this Matter. That in ſtead of Bayly-Eskmins and Cornmans granted in their Old Charter, they may have a Mayor and twelve Aldermen, and the Mayor one of the Twelve at their Election, as in London. And whereas the Mayor heretofore without any charge had two Hundred Pounds Fee, that he may have now but one Hundred Pounds, bearing the Charge of ſix Men, as every Alderman now doth. They ſhall have ſuch Mayor and Aldermen, ſo as they be Engliſh, and bear the Reputation of the Payments, and ſuch like Charges af the Town; towards the bearing whereof they ſhall have the Office of Wine, Beer, and Ale, the Stallage of Drapers, Mercers, and Butchers, the Pickage in the Market, all Iſſues, Fines, Profits, and Amercements of the Mayors Court, excepting to the King the Fines of Strays, and Bloodſhed, and Eſcheats of Lands and Goods; they to be diſcharged of all Watches and Wards, but only before their own Houſes. Many other Liberties are alſo to the ſame Town of Calais granted, not unworthy to be ſeen; eſpecially if that Place had ſtill bore the ſame Relation to England, as in thoſe days, and 200 Years after, even till the Reign of Queen Mary.

The Commons upon Delivery of the Bills aforeſaid, required that they might be executed: That done, the Chancellour willed them to ſue their Writs for their Fees, according to the Cuſtom. After that the Biſhops aroſe and took their leaves of the King, and ſo this Parliament ended at Eltham, having been continued from day to day, until Thurſday the Tenth of July, in the whole Ten Weeks and more.

VIII. And thus ended this Notable Parliament, commonly by our Hiſtorians called the [s] Good Parliament, thô more upon the Account of thoſe many convenient and uſefull Statutes, than for that Popular Air and Quarrelſom Humour which appeared therein.

[s] Daniel's hiſt. p. 257.

An. Dom. 1376. An. Regni Angliæ L. Franciæ XXXVII.

therein. For we find the very next Parliament condemned their Proceedings, as to that Point; and it is said, [t] how upon that and the like Accounts, Sr. Peter de la Mere was committed to perpetual Impriſonment in Nottingham Caſtle, thô about two Years after he was again releaſed.

But that vulgar Error of our Hiſtorians, which makes this ſame Sr. Peter de la Mere to have been Speaker at this time in the Houſe of Commons, muſt not paſs here without Correction: For it is undoubtedly [u] recorded of Sr. Thomas Hungerford, that in the Year following he was Speaker of the Houſe of Commons in the Parliament then held at Weſtminſter (that being the Firſt Parliament, in which that Houſe had a Speaker) he being then a Knight. But indeed the Year after that, being the Firſt of King Richard the Second, [x] we find this Sr. Peter de la Mere, as it were in Reward of his Impriſonment, or in Deſpight of the Duke of Lancaſter, to be the Speaker of the Houſe of Commons.

[t] Walſingh. Hyp. p. 134. n. 30.
[u] Dugd. 2 Vol. p. 203. ex Rot. Par. 51. Ed. 3. m. 87.
[x] Rot. Par. 1 Rich. 2. m. 15. Vid. M.S. Rot. Par. p. 157. & Sr. Rob. Cotton p. 155.

IX. Dr. Simon Langham, once Archbiſhop of Canterbury (when by Urban V. he was created Cardinal Titulo S^ti Sixti, upon which he reſign'd his Archbiſhoprick, and afterwards by Pope Gregory XI. was made Biſhop-Cardinal of Præneſte) being ſuddenly after Meat taken with a Palſie and loſs of Speech, four Days after [y] departed this Life, viz. on the XI of the Calends of Auguſt, being the Feſtival of St. Mary Magdalen, and after our Account the 22^d^ of July in this Year. He was firſt buried in the Church of the Carthuſians, whoſe Houſe he himſelf had founded at Avignon, with this [z] Epitaph.

[y] Godw. Catal. Biſh. p. 144. Walſingh. hiſt. p. 187.
[z] M.S. vet. Ang. in Bib. C.C.C. Cantab. c. 238. ad finem. [a] Ciacon. & Vict. de Vit. PP. Rom. p. 963.

HIC. IACET. DOMINVS. SIMON. DE. LANGHAM. DE. ANGLIA. QVONDAM. ARCHIEPISCOPVS. CANTVARIENSIS. S. R. E. PRÆNESTINVS. EPISCOPVS. CARDINALIS. QVI. ISTAM. ECCLESIAM. DE. NOVO. CONSTRVXIT. ET. OBIIT. XXII. MENSIS. IVLII. ANNO. DOM. MCCCLXXVI.

ORATE. PRO. EO.

But however [b] three Years after (according to his own former Appointment) his Bones were taken up and buried the ſecond time at Weſtminſter in a goodly Tomb of Alabaſter. And well ought his Body to find Repoſe there, where during his whole Life his Heart ſeem'd to reſt: For not to mention his other Acts of Munificence, nor to ſpeak of the foreſaid Monaſtery of Carthuſians at Avignon, it is almoſt incredible what wonderfull Bounty and Liberality he ſhew'd to the famous Abbey of Weſtminſter all along. When he was firſt made Abbot there, he beſtow'd all that ever he had gathered together while he was Monk and Prior, in paying the Debts of that Houſe, which amounted to the Value of 2200 Marks: But all this he wholly diſcharged, beſides divers other Sums of Money, which particular Monks ow'd here and there. And as for them, he conſtantly tender'd and nouriſh'd them as his own Children, never taking any thing from them; but rather Augmenting their Portions and Dividends out of what was his own Due. When he was Lord Chancellour and Treaſurer of England, he purchaſed divers good Pieces of Land, which he gave unto them and their Houſe for ever. And upon his Departure out of England he left them in Books to the Value of 830 l. Copes, Veſtments, and other Prieſtly Ornaments to the Value of 437 l. But now at his Death he bequeathed unto them all his Plate, priſed at 2700 l. beſides all Debts due unto him, which amounted to 3954 l. 13 s. 4 d. Over and above all which he ſent at the time of his Death unto the ſaid Monaſtery the Summ of a 1000 Marks to buy 40 Marks per annum Land, to encreaſe the Portions of Four Monks, who were to ſay Maſs dayly for the Souls of his Parents and Himſelf. So that the Money, which from firſt to laſt he beſtow'd only upon the Abbey of Weſtminſter, is by a [c] Monk of the ſame Place reckon'd to amount to no leſs than 10800 l. Sterling, a Prodigious Summ in thoſe Days. For all which they cauſed [d] a Rhyming Epitaph to be engraven on his Tomb, not worth Eight Farthings, thô as Rich as their poor Wits could make it: But the Reward of Charity lies in another World.

[b] Antiq. Britan. Matth. Parkeri p. 250. & Godw. ut ſuprà.
[c] --tua, Simon, ſunt data quondam Octingentena Librarum Millia Dena.
[d] Vid. Philipot's Catal. of Chancell. p. 42. & Catal. Treaſur. p. 37. & Godw. Cat. Biſh. p. 144.

And yet this Noble and Munificent Prelate could not avoid the ſtinging Libels of an Infamous Wretch, who upon his Tranſlation from Ely to Canterbury [e] ten Years before, ſet forth this Malicious Rhyme concerning him, viz.

Lætentur Cœli, quià Simon tranſit ab Ely; Cujus in Adventum flent in Kent Millia Centum.

[e] Vid. hujus Hiſt. l. 3. c. 13. §. 3. p. 671.

There [f] died alſo this Year Sr. John Peche, a Valiant Knight of Warwickſhire, and Lord

[f] Dugd. Bar. 1 Vol. p. 677. & Warwickſh. p. 699.

Lord of Hampton in Arden, leaving behind him John his Son and Heir then but fifteen Years old. His Fathers Arms are said to have been Gules, a Fess between Six Croslets Argent, with a Label of three Points in Chief. AN. DOM. 1376. An. Regni Angliæ L. Franciæ XXXVII.

X. This Year [5] Pope Gregory XI. return'd the Papal Seat to Rome, upon the Occasion which we mention'd before, and at the Exhortation of St. Briget of Sweed and St. Catherine of Siena. He left Avignon and embarqued at Marseilles on the 13 of September 1376. and after many great perils at Sea, arrived at Rome on the 17 of January following, where he was received with the greatest Pomp and Joy imaginable.

[5] Vid. Ciacon. & Victorel. de Vitt. Pontiff. Rom. p. 949. Odor. Rainald. an ann. 1377. §. 1. Mezeray p. 95. &c.

CHAPTER the FOURTEENTH.

The CONTENTS.

I. King Edward creates his Grandson Richard, the Black-Prince his only Son, Prince of Wales, Duke of Cornwall and Earl of Chester; whereby he shew'd him to be his next Heir. II. The Citizens of London pay their Respects to the Young Prince in an Extraordinary Manner. III. The King takes unto him John of Gaunt Duke of Lancaster, as his Assistant in the Government. IV. A Parliament at Westminster, with a Copy of the King's Writ, &c. V. An Exact Account of John Wickliff and his Doctrine. VI. The Duke of Lancaster favours him, and upon his Account quarrels with the Bishop of London. VII. The Londoners in a Sedition affront the Duke of Lancaster. VIII. The Bishop of London with much adoe restrains the People from doing more Mischief. IX. The Princess of Wales puts the City in Mind of their Duty: They make their Excuse to the King, and a Reconciliation is made between the Duke and Them. X. Sr. John Menstreworth taken and executed for Treason. XI. The Lord of Coucy, King Edward's Son in Law, cleaves to the French Interest. XII. A Treaty held at Bruges to no purpose. XIII. King Edward creates his Grandson, Prince Richard, Knight of the Garter. XIV. A further attempt for Peace being frustrated, the War is again open: Sr. Hugh Calverly made Captain of Calais, and England prepares for War: The Fortress of Outwick yielded to the French. Sr. Hugh Calverley revenges on the French an Affront done to certain Englishmen. XV. The English Commissioners with the Duke of Bretagne return for England, and find the King upon his Death-bed: He dies. XVI. A Story of Alice Perrers, and of the Manner of his Death refuted. XVII. The French King's Commendation of him; his Burial, Epitaph, Tomb and Character.

I. NOW it is to be remembred, that, as We said heretofore, how the Prince of Wales desired his Father to inaugurate his Son Richard in his Life-time, thereby to recommend Him to the Care of the Parliament and the English Nation, so the last Parliament, of which we spake in the preceding Year, had made their Request to the King for that Purpose. Whereupon soon after the said Prince's Obsequies were perform'd, as We have shewn, viz. [a] on the 20 of November in that same Year, the Young Lord Richard of Bourdeaux, Onely Son living of the Deceased Prince of Wales, being then not compleatly [b] Ten Years of Age, was by the King his Grandfather (at Havering atte Boure) created Prince of Wales, Duke of Cornwall, and Earl of Chester, as his Father had been before him. And thereupon the King declared unto his Sons the Duke of Lancaster, the Earl of Cambridge, and the Lord Thomas of Woodstock, that the Young Prince Richard was of Right to Reign over them after his Decease. And so he caused them all to swear to uphold and maintain Him, as their only Lawfull Lord and Undoubted Sovereign. And on the Christmas Day following, the King his Grandfather made him to sit down with him at his Table, in Great State, above all his own Children, representing thereby, that he was to be looked on as the Next Heir of the Crown, and consequently King after his Decease. AN. DOM. 1377. An. Regni Angliæ LI. Franciæ XXXVIII.

[a] Mills his Catal. Hon. p. 315.
[b] Vid. hujus Hist. l. 4. c. 2. §. 1. p. 695. Ubi natus 6 Jan. 1367.

II. This Conduct of the King's gave a General Satisfaction to all the Land, who hitherto retain'd a Gratefull Sense of the Black-Prince's Merit, and were extream glad, that his Son Prince Richard was to Rule over them. And here I hope it may deserve a Pardon, if I take liberty to shew, in what an extraordinary Manner the Citizens of London expressed themselves on this Occasion.

On

An. Dom. 1377. An. Regni Angliæ LI. Franciæ XXXVIII.

On a Sunday, the First of February, and the day before Candlemas toward the Evening, [c] there were One Hundred and Thirty of the Prime Citizens, who being all well Horsed and Disguised, as for a Mummerie, with the Sound of Trumpets, Sackbuts, Cornets, Shaumes and other Minstrelsie, rode with innumerable Torch-lights of Wax from Newgate, thrô Cheapside, and so over the Bridge thrô Southwark, till they came to Kennington near Lambeth, where at that time the Young Prince of Wales was with the Princess his Mother, his two Uncles, the Duke of Lancaster, and the Earl of Cambridge; also the Earls of Stafford, [d] Warwick and Suffolk, besides many other Lords and Ladies. In the First Division of these Mummers there rode Fourty Eight, habited like Esquires, Two and Two together, all clothed in Scarlet Coats and Gowns of Say or Sendal, with comely Visards on their Faces: After whom went Fourty Eight Knights in like Order, and in the same Livery of Stuff and Colour: Then came One richly Arrayed, like an Emperour; and some distance after him Another, Gorgeously attired in Pontificalibus, representing the Pope, with Twenty Four Cardinals attending him. In the Reer of all came up Eight Persons with Black Visards and strange, as if they had been Ambassadors from some Foreign Princes. These Mummers being enter'd the Court of Kennington, alighted all from their Horses, and went orderly into the Great Hall: Whereupon the Young Prince, his Mother, and the Great Lords, who were acquainted with the Matter, came out of the Chamber into the Hall, and received the Salutations of the Mummers. They by a pair of Dice flung upon the Table, signified their Desire to play with the Young Prince, and upon his Accepting their Motion, they so obligingly contrived the Dice, that the Prince always won, whether He cast at Them, or They at Him. Having thus lost some considerable Sums of Gold, then they set to the Prince Three Jewels, one after another, viz. a Bowl of Gold, a Cup of Gold, and a Ring of Gold; all which the Prince wan at three Casts.

Then they set to the Lady Princess, to the Duke, the Earls and other Lords, to every One a large Ring of Gold, which, as the Dice were order'd, those Illustrious Personages also wan. After Play succeeded a Splendid Entertainment accompanied with most exquisit Musick; the Prince and the Lords dancing on the One part, and the Mummers on the Other. And then all being concluded with a Banquet of Wine and Spices, the Mummers departed in Order as they came.

D. Lit. Dom. c Stow's Survey of London p. 78. &c. d Ità corrigo pro Hertford, quùm neq; Hertford, neq; Hereford hoc tempore Comitem in vivis habuerit.

III. Now it is to be observed, that althô King Edward was something recover'd from his Sickness, yet not being very Current, and especially because of his great Age, he had lately associated unto Himself his Son John of Gaunt Duke of Lancaster, as his Assistant in the Regency: Who thô perhaps he might be Ambitious enough, yet being of too Rough and Martial a Temper to please the People, was not thereby in any great likelyhood of Injuring the Right of the Young Prince of Wales, who besides the Advantage of his Title, was also for his Great Fathers Sake most strongly rooted in the Affections of all True Englishmen. However the Duke of Lancaster being thus advanced shew'd himself Terrible to all his Enemies, especially to William of Wickham Bishop of Winchester, whom he hated mortally (for what Cause I shall not here enquire) and caused him [e] to be deprived of all his Temporalities, with a Prohibition not to come within 20 Miles of the Court. And not being well assured of Edmund Mortimer Earl of March, at that time Marshal of England, with a Design to remove him out of the way, he commanded him in the King's Name toward the End of the preceding Year, to haste over unto Calais according to his Office, and there to take a diligent View of the Castle and Town of Calais, as also of all the Castles and Forts in the Marches thereof, and to cause such Repairs to be made as should seem needfull, and likewise to see them well Manned and Victualled. But the Earl of March, who saw how hereby he was set as a Mark for Envy, declin'd the Matter, and chose rather to yield up his Rod, with the Office of Marshal thereto belonging, than obey in so hazardous an Employ. The Duke gladly accepts his Rod, and gives it with the Office to his sure Friend the Lord Henry Percy, afterwards Earl of Northumberland, the First of that Name and Family, who was then [f] assign'd to the same Employ; thô he had not full Commission till this present Year.

e Fox p. 392.

f Dugd. 1 Vol. p. 276. b.

D. Lit. Dom.

IV. But now a Parliament is summon'd to meet at Westminster, as on the Quindene of St. Hilary, being the Tuesday [g] next after the Conversion of St. Paul, that is the 27 of January, the Writs of Summons bearing Date at Westminster on the 1 of December preceding. And here for instance-sake, I shall set down the Names of those Peers, to whom the Kings Writs were directed, with a Copy of the Writ it self, as taken from the Latine, only premising, that the King herein calls his Nephew Prince Richard, by the Name of Son, as well to set the higher Character upon him, as because he was now g Vid. Rot. Par. 51. Ed. 3. & M.S. prædict. p. 143. & Sr. Rob. Cotton p. 144.

now in Law to be look'd on, as his Son, being come into the Place of his Deceased Father. AN. DOM. 1377. An. Regni Angliæ LI. Franciæ XXXVIII.

"EDWARD, by the Grace of God, King of England, and France, and Lord of "Ireland, to his most Dear SON Richard, Prince of Wales, Duke of Cornwall, and "Earl of Chester, Greeting. Whereas concerning divers and Weighty Matters, re- "lating especially to Us, and the State of our Realm, We intend to hold our Parlia- "ment at Westminster, on the Quindene of St. Hilary, next ensuing, and there with "You and others our Peers and Barons of the Realm, to consult about the Premises: "We command You, upon the Faith and Allegiance, which You owe unto Us, firm- "ly enjoyning, that at the said time and Place, all other Business laid aside, You be "personally present, there to consult and advise about the Premises, with Us, and o- "ther our Peers and Barons; and that this You omit by no means. Teste meip- "so apud Westmonast. primo Decembris, An°. Regni nostri Angliæ 50, Franciæ "verò 37.

Per ipsum Regem.

The like Letters were directed (besides the Clergy) to these Peers following, viz.

John King of Castille and Leon, Duke of Lancaster.
Edmund Earl of Cambridge.
Richard Earl of Arundel.
Thomas of Woodstock Constable of England.
Edmund Mortimer Earl of March.
Thomas Beauchamp Earl of Warwick.
Hugh Courtney Earl of Devonshire.
Hugh Stafford Earl of Stafford.
Gilbert Umphravile Earl of Angos.
William Ufford Earl of Suffolk.
William Montagu Earl of Salisbury.
Henry Lord Percy Marshal of England.
William Lord Latimer.
William Lord Bardolph.
Guy Lord Bryan.
Roger Lord Beauchamp.
John Lord Clinton.
Gilbert Lord Talbot.
William Lord Botreaux.
John Lord De la Warre.
Henry Lord Scroop.
John Lord Nevill.
Thomas Lord Rous of Hamlake.
Richard Lord Stafford.
Reginald Lord Grey of Ruthin.
John Lord Grey of Codnovre.
Henry Lord Grey of Shereland.
Nicolas Lord Burnel.
William Lord de la Zouch of Harringworth.
Roger Lord Clifford.
And the Lord Almaric of St. Amand.

The Quindene of St. Hilary, as We said before, was the First Day of the Parliament: At which time the Noble and Puissant Lord, Richard Prince of Wales, Duke of Cornwall and Earl of Chester, together with the Bishops, Lords, Justices, Commons, and others summon'd to the Parliament, assembled at the Palace of Westminster, in the Painted-Chamber, where the Prince sitting in the Kings own Place (in absence of the King, who was still but weak) the King sent thither his Letters-Patents, being a Commission to the said Prince to begin the Parliament.

Which Letters being openly read, Dr. [h] Adam Houghton Bishop of St. Davids, and then Chancellour of England, at Command of the said Prince, then and there President, adjourn'd the Parliament, till the next day at Nine of the Clock in the Morning; because divers of the Lords and Commons were not yet come.

[h] Philipot's Catal. Chancel. p.44. Godw. Catal. Bps p.512.

The next day the Prince, Bishops, Lords, and Commons met all in the Place aforesaid, where the said Lord Chancellour began his Oration with that of St. [i] Paul---Libenter suffertis Insipientes, &c. Ye suffer Fools gladly, seeing, that Ye your selves are Wise. Which he apply'd, That they being Wise, desired to hear Him, who was the Contrary. He proceeded with Scripture, and said, That as a Messenger, who bringeth joyfull News, is Welcome, so he ought to be now, since he brought them joyfull News of the Kings Happy Recovery from a Dangerous Sickness.

[i] 2 Cor. c. 11. v. 19.

Whence he took occasion to argue, that God loved the King and the Realm; the King, because [k] Quos diligit, castigat, whom the Lord loveth, he chasteneth; and further from that of the Psalmist, [k] Uxor tua, sicut Vitis, abundans in Lateribus, &c. Thy Wife shall be as a Fruitfull Vine by the Walls of thine House, thy Children like Olive Plants round about thy Table; and thereupon he shew'd, that for Children, no Christian Prince living was so happy; which happiness he aggravated from the Words following, "Ut videas filios filiorum, Thou shalt see thy Childrens Children; which the King now saw.

[k] Hebr. c. 12. v. 6.

An. Dom. 1377. An. Regni Angliæ LI. Franciæ XXXVIII.

And that God loved the Realm, he proved from the Recovery of ſo Renowned a Prince, the ſaid Recovery happening in the Fiftieth Year of his Reign, the Year of Jubilee, the Year of Joy for his ſaid Recovery: Of Joy; becauſe he would thereby impart unto his Subjects Bleſſings as well Spiritual as Temporal, all Bodily Comforts.

Then from a ſimilitude, that althô the Head be ſound, if ſome particular Member of the Body be diſeaſed, the ſame infected Part can receive no Vertue, Benefit, or Salve from the Head; He inferreth, that the King being the ſound Head, and willing to ſhew Grace and Favour to his Subjects, they ought to qualifie themſelves aright by approving their Loyalty ſound and uncorrupted: And therefore he perſwadeth ſuch, as would be partakers thereof, to conform themſelves thereafter, by having Love and Charity, without which he proveth by St. Paul, that nothing doth avail.

Thereupon he converts his Diſcourſe to the Lords, amplifying the Matter and ſhewing, what reaſon they had to think the King loved them Dearly, ſince among many other Gracious tokens of his Good will, he had upon their Requeſts, ſince the laſt Parliament, advanced the Lord Richard there preſent to be Prince of Wales. Then he ſhew'd what cauſe they had to embrace the ſaid Prince, by Offering unto him, as the [1] Wiſe Men did to Chriſt, all Honour, by preſenting Gold in token of Riches and Renown; and Myrrhe in token of his Honourable Scepter: Since even the Pagans were uſed to throw abroad Money at the approach of their Princes. He inſiſted, that the ſaid Prince ſhould without all Rancour be embraced in their Hands and Hearts, even as Simeon embraced Chriſt, becauſe their Eyes had now ſeen that which their Hearts had much longed for; and likewiſe he ſhew'd, how they ought to obey him, as the Vicar and Legate of God, that they might ſee the true Peace of Iſrael, viz. here in England, the [m] Inheritance of God: Whereof after many Victories, there is no ſmall hope. After which he ſhew'd the cauſe of this preſent Parliament to be; For that the French King under Colour of the Truce(granted by the King at the Mediation of the Pope)yet enduring, had allied himſelf to the Spaniards and Scots, the Kings Enemies, and had prepared great Quantity of Arms and Puiſſant Armies, thereby conſpiring to blot out the Engliſh Tongue and Name from under Heaven. In which caſe the King was willing to have their Faithfull Counſel; wherefore the Chancellour willed them to go together, and to give a ſpeedy Anſwer.

[1] M.S. Princes of Cullen, &c.

[m] Vox Angeli ad Monachum Regni ſtatum deplorantem ob extinctam Regiam Proſapiam, Regnum Anglorum eſt Regnum Dei, Deus providebit pro ſuo Regno.

This grave Harangue was ſeconded by Sr. Robert Aſhton Knight, [n] Conſtable of Dover-Caſtle, and Lord Warden of the Cinque-Ports, being at this time the Kings Chamberlain, and Lord High-Treaſurer of England: He continued, how He had a particular Charge to move them from the King, for the Profit of the Realm, which Words (ſays [o] my Tranſcriber) lay not perchance in the Biſhops Mouth, becauſe they touched the Pope. Yet at the ſame time he proteſted, that the King was ready to do all that ought to be done for his Holineſs: But becauſe divers Uſurpations were by him made upon the King, his Crown and Realm, as by particular Bill in this Parliament ſhould be declared, the King requireth them to ſeek redreſs.

[n] Philipot's Catal. Treaſ. p.40.

[o] M.S. Rot. Par. p.145. n.13.

Then were appointed Receivers of Petitions for England, Ireland, Wales, and Scotland, as alſo for Gaſcogne, and other Places beyond the Seas, and for the Iſles; and after that Tryers for thoſe ſeveral Petitions.

This done the Commons were willed to repair to the Chapter-Houſe of the Abbey of Weſtminſter to treat of theſe Matters, and how Money might beſt be levied for the Kings Service, and certain Lords, there named, were appointed from time to time to confer with the Commons, for their better Direction and Information.

The Lords and Commons grant to the King towards his charges Four pence of every Poll, Man or Woman, paſſing the Age of [p] 14 Years, only Beggers excepted. And beſides this the [q] Clergy grant unto the King toward the Aid of his Wars, 12 d. of every Parſon Beneficed, and of all other Religious Perſons 4 d. by the Poll, the Four Orders of Fryars Mendicants only excepted. But here it is to be remembred, that the King, becauſe of his preſſing occaſions, not being able to ſtay, till the foreſaid Taxes were levied, borrow'd in ſundry Places ſeveral Sums of Money, particularly he ſent to the City of London for 4000 l. which [r] Loane becauſe the Mayor, Adam Staple, was backward in raiſing, he was on the 22[d] of March diſcharged his Office by the Kings ſpecial Command, and Sr. Richard Whittington, Mercer (of whoſe Riſe by means of his Cat, there are ſuch pleaſant Stories) placed in his ſtead for the Remainder of the Year.

[p] Ità Sr. Rob. Cotton, Fabian, & Daniel's hiſt. Unde M.S. hic corrigend. ubi One and Twenty.

[q] Daniel's hiſt. p.260. Fabian p.261.

[r] Fabian ibid.

The Commons requeſt, that the King would appoint two Earls and two Barons, to receive receive as well their Subſidy, as the Subſidy of the Clergy, and the Subſidy of Woolls granted in the laſt Parliament, ſo as the ſame may be imploy'd upon the Wars; and that the High Treaſurer do in no wiſe intermeddle therewith. But when afterwards it was made appear, to how great a Sum the Wages of theſe Four Treaſurers would amount, then the Commons changed their Mind, and required, that the High-Treaſurer might be the ſole Menager thereof for the uſe of the Wars.

AN. DOM. 1377. An. Regni Angliæ LI. Franciæ XXXVIII.

Afterwards, viz. on the 22^d^ of February, certain Biſhops and ſecular Lords, and alſo the Chancellour, Treaſurer, and Keeper of the Privy Seal, by the Kings appointment, went all to Sheen in Surrey, where the King then lay ſick, and there in preſence of them all the Articles of the Kings General Pardon were read, with the Anſwers made to the Petitions of the Commons, to which the King agreed, willing that they ſhould be read in the Houſe the next day; on which day he order'd them to be diſſolved. And ſo it was done the next day, being the Twenty-third of February, by Authority of the King and Prince Richard, the Preſident.

Petitions of the Commons with their Anſwers.

That all Perſons and Corporations may have the Pardon freely without paying any thing for the Great Seal. Such as for Felony are to ſue, ſhall do the ſame before the Nativity of St. John and pay the Fees only. The Prelates, Dukes, Earls, Barons, Commons, Citizens, Burgeſſes, and Merchants of England in this Parliament [f] Petition the King not only for a Pardon in General, and of Fines and Amerciaments before the Juſtices of the Peace, not yet levied in ſpecial; but they alſo ſubjoyn thereto this memorable Requeſt, That in time to come Your ſaid Prelates, Earls, Barons, Commons, Citizens, and Burgeſſes of your Realm of England, may not be henceforth Charged, Moleſted, nor Grieved, to make any Common Aid, or ſuſtain any Charge, unleſs it be by the common Aſſent of the Prelates, Dukes, Earls, and Barons, and other People of the Commons of your Realm of England, and that in full Parliament. And that no Impoſition be put upon their Woolls, Wooll-Fells and Leather, above the Ancient Cuſtom; that is to ſay, of One Sack of Wooll, Half a Mark, and of One Laſt of Skins, One Mark of Cuſtom only; according to the Statute made the Fourteenth Year of your Majeſties Happy Reign; ſaving unto Your Majeſty the Subſidy granted unto You the laſt Parliament for a certain time, and not yet levied. To all which the King then gave Anſwer---- As to that, That no Charge be laid upon the People, but by common Aſſent, The King is not at all Willing to do it without great Neceſſity, and for the Defence of the Realm, and where he may do it with Reaſon. And as to that, That Impoſition be not laid upon their Woolls, &c. without the Aſſent of the Prelates, Dukes, Earls, Barons, and other People of the Commons of his Realm, There is (ſays He) a Statute already made, which the King wills to ſtand in its full force. That ſuch, as owe unto the King, may upon their Account be allowed of all ſuch Loanes, as are due to them, or to any of their Anceſtors. The Treaſurer and Barons ſhall make allowance of due Debt. That title of Preſcription of any Liberties may as well be allowed, as if it were by Grant, and that Preſcription may be from the Coronation of the King. The King by Advice will do herein, as he ſhall think beſt. That the Juſtices of the Peace do not enquire into any Articles, which are to be redreſſed in any Lords Leet, but only concerning the Peace and Labourers, and that they hold their Seſſions Four times a Year. The Statutes heretofore made cannot ſtand, if this be granted. That the Patent of Reynold Chambers for being Water-Bayliff of the Thames may be revoked, becauſe on that pretence he ſuffereth Kiddles, Trinks, and other unlawfull Nets to be laid, and caſt in the ſaid River of Thames. The Chancellour calling unto him the Citizens of London, the Conſtable of the Tower, and Reynold Newport ſhall take Order therein. The Citizens of London pray, that the King will confirm unto them their Liberties for puniſhing all Miſdemeanors in Southwark, and that Commandment be given, that the Marſhal do not intermeddle within the part of Southwark, which is called Gildable. The King cannot do it, without doing wrong to others. The Citizens of London require Confirmation of the Kings Letters Patents made to them, that no Stranger ſhould ſell any Merchandiſe, or Ware, to any other Stranger, to the end, that the ſame ſhould be ſold again. Then follow the very Words of the Patent. The King will be thereof informed. The ſame Citizens pray, that they may place and diſplace Coroners among themſelves, anſwering unto the King, what belongeth thereto. The King will not depart from his Ancient Right. That no Alien do remain within the Realm during the Wars, unleſs he be a Merchant or Artificer; and that no Engliſhman become any Farmer to any Alien without Licence: In which Act they proteſt, that of Temporal things they owe Obeiſance to none, but to the King. The King by Advice will take Order therein. That all Pro-

[f] Vid. Mr. William Prinne in his Edition of S. Rob. Cotton's Abridgm. p. 152

An. Dom. 1377. An. Regni Angliæ LI. Franciæ XXXVIII.

visors of things from Rome, and their Ministers may be out of the Kings Protection. The Pope hath promised Redress, the which if he do not, the Laws therein shall stand. That new Perambulations of the Forest be made according to the old Bounds, out of which if any Forester do attache a Man, that the attached may have his Writ of false Imprisonment. Many Counties are not grieved, wherefore let such as be, shew their Complaint, and they shall be heard. That it may be declared, what Pleas the Marshal shall hold, and that Prescription may be as well allowed before the Marshal, as before others the Kings Justices. They shall hold such as have been in the times of the Kings Progenitors. That no Man be impeached for hunting within the Purlieu, or without the bound of the Forest, and that there be levied no [t] Assartments. The Charter of the Forest shall be kept, and as to the Assart, the Demand is unreasonable. That as well the Priest, that taketh unreasonable Wages, as the Giver thereof, may either forfeit double to the King, and that the same may be tryed before the Kings Justices. The Statute therefore made shall be executed. That the next Heirs of the Kings Wards may have the Wards Lands in Farm. There is a Statute therefore made. That none of the Kings Officers be maintainers of any Quarrels within their Countries, on pain to lose their Offices, and to answer doubly to the Party grieved. The King hath forbidden his Officers so to do, and if any be grieved he shall be heard. That if any Religious Person taketh the Profits of any Lands, whereby it may be thought to be within the Compass of the Statute de Religiosis, that then the King, or Chief Lord, may enter upon the same. The King intendeth not to change the Laws. That the Statutes now made be not Repealed, but by Assent of Parliament, and that the Statute of Purveyors may be executed. The Statutes cannot be Repealed otherwise; and as for Purveyors the Law made shall stand. That the Knights Fees for coming to the Parliament may be levied of the whole County; as well within Liberties, as without, except Cities and Towns, and the bound Tenants of such, as come by Writ to Parliament. Let it be, as it hath been used. That no Ordinance be made at the Petition of the Clergy without Assent of Parliament, and that no Man be bound by any of their Constitutions made for their Advantage. Let this be more particularly declared. That such, as have [u] view of Frankpledge, may have the Correction of Taverners. It is no Article thereof. That none of the Commons be appointed Collector of this Subsidy. The King granteth it. That the Protection of such, as lie about Calais, or in Picardy, only to delay such as sue them, may be Repealed, and no such from henceforth granted. Let the Kings Council be informed of such Covin, and it shall be redressed. That certain Engines, used to the Destruction of Fish, and called Wonderecheone, in the manner of a Drag, being used in Havens and Creeks, may be forbidden. Commission to certain to enquire and to certifie, shall be made; whereupon Order shall be taken therein. They pray Remedy against such Debtors, as to defraud their Creditors, make Feoffments by Covin, and thereupon fly into Sanctuary. Upon the finding of such Feoffments to be so made, the Creditors shall have Execution of such Lands, as tho no such Feoffments were made. That the King would pardon all Piracies and Felonies done upon the Sea, except such as be Impeached of the Death of Sr. Henry de la Haye, or of such as be Impeached at the suit of the Party. The King will shew Pardon where him liketh. That divers having in their Charters, That no Seneschal Marshal, or Clerk of the Mercate, do intermeddle with their Liberties, are thereby little the Better; for that those Officers do intermeddle, because these Words are wanting, Tam in præsentiâ nostrâ, quam alibi: That therefore it be commanded, that none of those Officers do intermeddle. The King would have them to be allowed according to Law and Reason; as it hath been heretofore used. That no Customs of Woollen Cloaths granted in 44 Ed. 3. be paid, unless the same be Fulled. The King hath commanded, that no Woollen Cloths be carried out of the Realm before they be Fulled; and that no Customs be paid before such Fulling. That such Loanes, as were lent in the time of Thomas Brentingham Bishop of Excester, and Treasurer of England, may be now paid. It shall be so soon as may be. That no Tythe be paid for Sea-coals. It shall be, as it hath been. That no Fines be taken for any Writs according to that of the Great Charter, Nulli Vendemus Justitiam. Let it be according to the Discretion of the Chancellour, as it hath been. That no Knight, Esquire, or other be appointed for Sheriffs, Escheators, Coroners, Collectors, or such like, after his Age of 60 Years. The King will do herein, as him shall please. That all Charters heretofore granted may be allow'd and confirmed. They shall be allow'd, as duly heretofore hath been. That every Professed Person of what Sex soever, being professed of any Religion, and continuing the said Habit to the Age of Fifteen Years, may upon Tryal of the same in any of the Kings Courts, be in Law utterly debarred of any Inheritance, tho he hath a Dispensation [t] Vid. Somneri Glossar. in Assartari, &c.

[u] Vid. Gulielm. Somneri Glossar. in Visus-Franci-Plegii.

tion from Rome: Which Diſpenſations are the chief Grievance. The King and the Lords will provide therefore. That ſome Proviſion be made, that Herring may be better cheap, being now grown to an Exceſſive price. Indifferent and able Men by Commiſſion ſhall ſee the [x] Place, and enquire of the Cauſes, and certifie the ſame, whereupon Order ſhall be taken. The Commons of Devon require, that upon return of the Commiſſion, touching the Cuſtoms of the Stannery there, being now done withall in the Chancery, the reſt of the Liberties of the Stannery may be declared according to the Promiſe of the laſt Parliament, and that the ſame be made in Letters-Patents. Richard, Prince of Wales, prayeth, that the Declaration made in the laſt Parliament, as touching the Stanneries in Devon and Cornwall, may be revoked, conſidering, that the ſame was made, neither the Prince, nor any of his Council, nor any other the Officers, being called, or made privy thereto.

AN. DOM. 1377. An. Regni Angliæ LI. Franciæ XXXVIII.

[x] Ità M.S. ſed Price Sr. Rob. Cotton.

Such as ſtood for the County of Devon pray, that they may anſwer to ſuch as alledge, that the ſaid County ſhould ſeek to hinder the Profit of the ſaid Prince. The Circumſtances ſhall be examin'd by the Council of the King and of the Prince, and thereupon Order ſhall be taken.

The Counties of Leiceſter and Northampton, Huntington and Bedford, complain of the Erection of three Mills upon the high Stream of the [y] River of St. Ives, ſo that neither Ships nor Boats can paſs, and whereby they ſurround all the Grounds about the Towns of Bugden, Brampton, Godmancheſter, Herford and Huntington. Let the Statute in ſuch caſe provided be executed. The County of Warwick deſire, that the Goal-houſe in Warwick being very ruinous may be repaired with the profits of the County aforeſaid by the hands of the Sheriffs. Let them ſue to the Treaſurer, and others of the Council to have Redreſs. That none ſuch as paſs over Woolls, or have Ships on the Sea, be appointed Cuſtomers or Weighers of Woolls. The King will appoint ſuch Cuſtomers as ſhall pleaſe him. The Heirs and Tenants of the Land of the Chief Taxers of the Fifteen do pray, that they may be taxed by the Barons of the Exchequer, according to the old Rate, upon the View thereof, without bringing any Writ therefore. The Taxation being once reaſonably made ſhould ſeem to continue. Divers Counties adjoyning upon the River of Severne, deſire Remedy for the Courſe of the ſaid River between Worceſter and Briſtow, which is ſo ſtraightned, that the Grounds thereabouts are thereby ſurrounded, that Ships and Boats cannot paſs, and many are drowned in their Beds. Let certain Lords be appointed to hear and determine this matter. That if it ſhall happen any Man or Boy to be drown'd with a fall out of a Ship or Boat, or any other Veſſel, the ſaid Veſſel ſhall not therefore be a Deodand. Being upon the Sea it ſhall be adjudged no Deodand, and being upon a Freſh River the King will ſhew favour. That every Man may be admitted to prove his Age, and to ſue Livery by the Inſpection of his Body, and other ſufficient ways, where it is not return'd by Office. The Chancellor upon ſight of the Bodies of ſuch Heirs, and of Offices returns ſhall do what ſhall ſeem beſt to be done. That the Lord Latimer, being in the laſt Parliament by untrue Suggeſtions deprived of his Offices and of the Privy Council, may by Authority of Parliament be reſtored thereto again. The King granteth thereunto at the Inſtance of certain Biſhops, Lords and Commons. John Hawkwood Knight requireth of the King ſuch Charter of Pardon, as was granted to Sr. Robert Knolles. Sr. John [z] Clifford Knight requireth the ſame. The King meaneth, and will ſhew favour to whom him liketh. That the Statutes of Proviſors made at any time may be executed, and that Remedy may be had againſt ſuch Cardinals, as have within the Provinces of Canterbury and York, purchaſed any Reſervations to the value of Twenty or Thirty Thouſand Scutes of Gold; as alſo againſt the Pope's Collector, who was wont to be an Engliſhman, and now is a meer Frenchman, reſiding in London, who conveyeth Yearly to the Pope twenty Thouſand Marks or twenty Thouſand Pounds; and who this Year gathereth the Firſt-Fruits of all Benefices whatſoever. The Means to obviate theſe Reſervations and Novelties, are to command all Strangers to depart the Realm during the Wars: That no Engliſhman do become their Farmer, or do ſend to them any Money without ſpecial Licence, on pain of forfeiting the King's Protection. The Statutes and Ordinances therefore made ſhall be obſerved.

[y] Ouſe.

[z] Fifteen years before this Sr. John Clifford ſlew John Copland, who had taken King David of Scotland Priſoner at the Battle of Durham. But for his other Merits, now at laſt he obtain'd a Pardon. Dug. Bar. 1 Vol. p. 341. vid. hujus Hiſt. l. 3. c. 8. §. 5. p. 626.

Petitions of the Clergy with their Anſwers.

That upon Prohibition for Sylva Cædua Conſultations may be readily granted. The Law heretofore reaſonably uſed ſhall continue. That touching Penſions claimed by one Church or Benefice out of another, there may no Prohibition be granted, and that the Definition thereof may be only in the Ordinaries. The King will make ſearch in his Common-Pleas-Treaſury or elſewhere, and will thereafter deal therein. That of every Conſultation conditional, the Ordinary may of himſelf take upon him the true Underſtanding

An. Dom. 1377. An. Regni Angliæ LI. Franciæ XXXVIII.

ſtanding thereof, and proceed therein accordingly. The King cannot depart with his Right, but will yield to his Subjects according to Law. Touching the Biſhop of Wincheſter, and Matters by him attempted to be reformed, Order was, that his Temporalities ſhould be ſeiſed into the King's Hands. This done, the Knights and Burgeſſes were willed to ſue forth their Writs for their Fees: And ſo the Parliament ended. On the laſt Day of this Parliament Sr. Thomas Hungerford Knight, Speaker of the Parliament, declared, how that during the Parliament he had moved the King in general to pardon all ſuch as were in the laſt Parliament unjuſtly convicted: And how the King willed him to make a Special Bill therefore, which was done to Seven, whoſe Names follow. Firſt the Commons moved for a Pardon for Richard Lyon, Merchant of London, and for his full Reſtitution; then they made the like Motion for Revocation of the Judgment given againſt Alice Perrers, and for her Reſtitution; as alſo for the like Favour to be extended to John Liſter, Adam Bury, and Walter Sporior. John Peach of London made the like Requeſt for himſelf; and William Ellis of Great Yarmouth made the ſame Requeſt for himſelf: But nothing was at that time anſwer'd to this Bill, becauſe the Parliament ended that very Day. However before they brake up, the Commons ſhewed, that whereas Hugh Stafford of Great Yarmouth had been accuſed of divers Extortions in the laſt Parliament, whereupon Commiſſion was granted to the Earl of Suffolk, and Sr. John Cavendiſh Knight, to make Inquiry, and determine of the ſame; and they had ſince ſo done, and by Eighteen Inqueſts had found him Guiltleſs, as the ſame Sr. John in open Parliament witneſſed, he might therefore be in ſtatu quo priùs: but neither in this Matter was any thing done at that time; becauſe the Parliament ended the ſame Day.

V. But now We are called to another Matter, which that we may make more manifeſt, we muſt fetch a little Compaſs about, ſo to afford a fuller proſpect of the Perſon, who gave the firſt Occaſion to the thing in Hand. We have already ſpoken of one John Wickliff an Oxford Divine, who flouriſhed toward the Declining of our King Edward's Reign. About this time he began to be Famous in England for certain Opinions, which he publickly maintained for True and Orthodox, and together with [a] his Eloquence in Preaching and Teaching gain'd [b] Many, and Conſiderable Proſelytes unto them; althô by Others they were condemned as Heretical and Erroneous. It is yet confeſſed on all Hands, even by his [c] moſt inveterate Enemies, that he was in Learning equal, if not ſuperior, to the very Beſt of his Age. One particularly [d] confeſſes of him, That he was Doctor in Divinity, the moſt Eminent in thoſe Days, in Philoſophy accounted Second unto none, and in School-Learning Incomparable. And no doubt, if Sbinko, Archbiſhop of Prague, had not burnt 200 Volums of his Works, we ſhould have ſeen no ſmall Arguments thereof. However from thoſe many various M. SS. of his ſtill remaining in Bennet College in Cambridge, and the Bodleian Library at Oxford, it appears, that he held no ſuch Monſtrous Opinions, as ſome have laid to his Charge, as may be diſtinctly ſeen in thoſe ſmall Treatiſes ſet forth An° Dom. 1608. by the [e] Library Keeper of Oxford. He received his Firſt Education in Merton-College, of which he was made Fellow, and where he is ſuppoſed to have Tranſlated the Old and New Teſtament into Engliſh from the Original Hebrew and Greek; with no bad Deſign, as we may preſume; thô Honeſt Knighton complains thereof grievouſly, ſaying, That ſo the Pretious Pearls of the Goſpel are caſt before Swine. About the Year 1361. He was Maſter of Bailiol College, and Four Years after by Archbiſhop Iſlip made Warden of Canterbury-College, then newly by him Founded (which is now a Part of Chriſt-Church) as appears by the ſaid Archbiſhops own Letters, which follow Word for Word from the Original Latine, [f] SIMON, by Divine Providente Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Metropolitan of all England, to the Beloved Maſter John Wickliff Greeting. Directing our Eyes to the honeſty of your Life and laudable Converſation, and Knowledge of the Learning, wherewith the Moſt High hath endued your Perſon, who are Maſter of Arts, and having great Confidence in your Fidelity, Circumſpection and Induſtry, We ſet you over our Hall of Canterbury, lately by Us founded at Oxford, as Warden thereof; and do by theſe Preſents commit unto you the Care and Adminiſtration belonging to the Wardenſhip thereof, according to our Appointment in this Part, reſerving unto our ſelves the Receiving of your Corporal Oath, to be by you made unto Us, and due in this Part. Dated at Magfield V^to Idûs Decemb. An° Dom. CIↃ CCCLXV.

And from hence it appears, that Wickliff did not obtain this Place by any Ill means, as ſome have ſaid; thô it is to be believed, that when by this Archbiſhops Succeſſor he was afterwards ejected, no good Arts were uſed; for as then [g] nothing in the World was laid to his Charge, but that he was a Secular; which ſure he, that ſet him there firſt, knew as well as they.

But

[a] Hiſtor. Monaſt. D. Albani.
[b] Vid. Anton. Wood's Antiq. Oxon. l. 1. p. 186. Fox, &c.
[c] As Fryar Wodeford, Walden, Knighton, Walſing. &c.
[d] Knighton p. 2644. n. 30.
[e] Mr Thomas James, who publiſhed 2 of John Wickliffes Treatiſes (edit. Oxford, Printed by Joſ. Barnes, Printer to the Univerſity 1608.) together with an Apology for the ſaid John Wickliff, ſhewing his Conformity to the Church of England. Collected out of divers M. SS. ſtill remaining in the Bodleian Library.
[f] Extant apud Anton. Wood's Antiq. Oxon. l. 1. p. 184. ex Regiſtro Iſlip dicto fol. 306.
[g] Anton. Wood Antiq. Oxon. l. 1. p. 183.

But whereas [h] he is accuſed, for that as an Hypocrite he reſorted much to the Orders of Begging Fryars, frequenting their Company, and extolling the Perfection of their Poverty; this muſt ſeem abſolutely falſe and inconſiſtent to any, who hath but once heard of [i] that Notable Treatiſe of his now Extant, which he wrote particularly againſt the Mendicant Fryars, containing 50 Chapters.

However this is certain, that his Tenets were not received by the Generality of the Clergy in thoſe Days: For he affirm'd ſundry Doctrines very diſagreeable to the Genius of that Age, as, [k] That the Pope had no more Power to Excommunicate any Man, than another Prieſt. That if it be given by any Perſon unto the Pope to Excommunicate, yet to abſolve the ſame is as much in the power of another Prieſt, as in his. He affirm'd alſo, That the Temporal Power might, and ought to take away from the Clergy, what the Piety of former Times had beſtowed upon them; if they ſhall be found to abuſe the ſaid Goods, or to approve themſelves unworthy thereof; and that he proved to have been heretofore practiſed in England by King William Rufus, which thing (ſaid Wickliff) if he did lawfully, why may not the ſame be done now? If unlawfully, then doth not the Church err in Praying for him? As for the Sacrament of the Holy Euchariſt, he proved againſt the Fryars, who held the contrary Opinion, [l] That the Accidents of Bread remained not without the Subject or Subſtance; i. e. that the Body of Chriſt is preſent not without the Bread. He [m] alſo ſtoutly aſſerted the Regal Supremacy againſt Papal Uſurpation, he wrote againſt the Maſs, Tranſubſtantiation, Merit, Adoration of the Hoſt, of Saints, Images and Reliques, and againſt Pilgrimages and Indulgences. He likewiſe held, That the [n] Roman Church was no more the Head of all Churches, than any other Church. That no more Power was given to St. Peter, than to any other Apoſtle; and that the Pope of Rome had no more Power of the Keys of the Church, than any Other who was in Prieſtly Orders. That the Scriptures were ſufficient for Salvation; and that all other Rules of Saints (under the Obſervation whereof there are divers Religious Orders) do add no more Perfection to the Goſpel, than Waſhing a Wall over with Lime, doth make the Wall more perfect. As for his Arguments they may be ſeen at large [o] in Mr. Fox his Acts and Monuments, and more of his Opinions may be conſulted in the Authors quoted in the Margin; thô it is to be given as a Caution, that they all vary one from another, both as to the Number, Order and Senſe of the Articles.

VI. It is ſaid, that he was ſupported and upheld in theſe his Opinions by King Edward himſelf; but this is certain, that John of Gaunt, the Great Duke of Lancaſter, and Entitled King of Caſtille and Leon, who had now the chief Government of the Realm, during his Father's Weakneſs, was an Open Favourer and Patron of John Wickliff and his Doctrine. But at the ſame time his Opinions were ſo diſtaſtfull to the Clergy, that now there [p] came forth from Simon Sudbury Archbiſhop of Canterbury, a Proceſs and Order of Citation for the Author to be brought before the Spiritual Court; the Time and Place being formally aſſigned. When the Duke of Lancaſter heard, that his Client Wickliff was to appear before the Biſhops, fearing that he being ſingle might be overcome by the Number of his Adverſaries, he took unto him Four Batchelors of Divinity, of Good Learning and Skill in the Scriptures, to joyn them with Wickliff for his ſurer Support.

On the Day appointed, [q] which was Thurſday the Nineteenth of February, Dr. John Wickliff, being accompanied with the Four Batchelors in Divinity aforeſaid, and alſo his Mighty Patron, the Duke of Lancaſter, going along with him for the greater Honour and Countenance of his Cauſe, went toward the Church of St. Paul in London, the Lord Henry Percy, High Marſhal of England, going before to make way for his Lord the Duke and the Doctor. And all the way as they went, Wickliffes Friends animated him all they could, and bad him not fear, nor ſhrink, or be daunted at the preſence of the Biſhops, who (ſaid they) are all Unlearned in reſpect of You: And that he ſhould not dread the unuſual Concourſe or Clamors of the People, for they themſelves would aſſiſt and defend him; ſo that he ſhould receive no harm. With theſe Words of the Duke and other Nobles with him, Wickliff being much encouraged, came to St. Pauls, where there was ſuch a vaſt Throng of People, that the Duke and the Lords with him could hardly paſs thrô the Church for all the Lord Marſhal made way with his Officers. When William Courtney Biſhop of London ſaw the ſtirr, that the Marſhal and his Men made in the Church among the People, he ſaid unto the Lord Percy, that if he had known before, how he would have plaid the Maſter in his Church, he would have hindred him from coming thither. At which Words of the Biſhop the Duke diſdaining extreamly, anſwer'd him, that the Marſhal ſhould play the Maſter there, as he had begun; even althô he ſaid Nay. At laſt after much crowding they all got thrô, and came into our Ladies Chappel, where [h] Hiſtor. Monaſt. D. Albani & *Fox Acts & Mon. p.*392. *An° ult. Ed.*3.

[i] Extat in Bibliothecâ Publ. Academ. Cantabr. Fig. 19. 10. 13.

[k] *Fox, Walſing. Knighton, Odor. Rainald. Antiq. Britan. p.*258. &c.

[l] Wickliffe's Treatiſe againſt the Fryars c. 16. *p.*33.

[m] *Speed l.*9. c. 13. §. 118. p. 610.

[n] Odor. Rainal. ad hunc ann. §. 5 & *Walſing. hiſt. p.*188. & *p.*205 Knighton p. 2648.

[o] Fox Acts & Monum. Johan. Hus *Opera. Walſing. hiſt. p.*200. *ad p.*209. Hiſt. Monaſt. D. Albani & *Knighton p.*2644. & Nicol. Harpsfeldius in Hiſtor. Wickliffianâ, & *Holinſh. p.*998.

[p] Fox Acts & Mon. ex Hiſtor. Mon. D. Albani & Nic. Harpsfeldus in Hiſt. Wickliff. *c.*5. *p.*683.

[q] D. Lit. Dom. Paſcha 29 Martii.

An. Dom. 1377. An. Regni Angliæ LI. Franciæ XXXVIII.

where the Duke and other Barons ſat themſelves down with the Archbiſhop and other Biſhops; John Wickliff ſtanding before them, according to the uſual Manner, ready to anſwer what ſhould be objected unto him. The Lord Marſhal firſt brake ſilence, deſiring Mr. Wickliff to ſit down, and alledging, that he had many things to anſwer to, and therefore had need of ſome Repoſe. But the Biſhop of London ſaid, He ſhould not ſit down there; for neither was it according to Law nor Reaſon; that He, who was cited there to appear to anſwer before his Ordinary, ſhould ſit down during the time of his Anſwer, but rather ſtand. Theſe Words created others, and they brought forth more, the Biſhop ſtanding upon the Privilege of his Place and Function, and the Marſhal on his own, and the Duke's Authority; ſo that many bitter words and Menaces paſſed on both ſides, to the great Offence and Scandal of the People.

But then the Duke began to take the Marſhals part, and warmly chode the Biſhop, who was not a whit behind hand with him; ſo that the [r] Duke was aſham'd to find himſelf worſted by the Biſhop, and threatned, that he would ſhortly bring down the Pride not only of him; but of all the Prelacy of England; and to the Biſhop he ſaid, "Sir, You are too bold; and all in Confidence * of your Parents; who yet will not be "able to help you, they ſhall have enough to do to help themſelves. To whom the Biſhop reply'd, That he ought to be bold in declaring the Truth; but that his Confidence was not in his Parents, nor in any Mortal Man, but in the living God alone, in whom he truſted. Then the Duke ſoftly whiſper'd to one that ſat next him, how he had rather drag the Biſhop out of the Church by the Hair of his Head, than take this at his Hands. However this was not utter'd ſo ſoftly, but that ſome of the Londoners overheard him, who being enraged thereupon, cry'd out, that they would never ſee their Biſhop ſo abuſed; but rather loſe their Lives, then that any one ſhould draw him out of his Church by the Hair. Upon this Contention that Council was diſſolved before Nine of the Clock, and the Duke with the Lord Percy return'd to the Parliament, then ſitting at Weſtminſter, Wickliff being eaſily diſmiſs'd, thô not without a Prohibition, neither to preach, nor write any more in defence of thoſe Articles, which were objected to him.

[r] Erubuit Dux, quod non potuit prævalere litigio.hiſt.Mon.D. Albani ibid.

* He was a Younger Son to Hugh Courtney, ſecond Earl of Devonſhire of that Name, and of the Lady Margaret, Daughter to Humphry Bohun, Earl of Hereford and Eſſex (Eighth of that Name) by his Wife Elizabeth Daughter of King Edward the Firſt. His Parents were both now living; thô the Earl his Father died on the 2d of May this Year.

VII. 'Tis ſaid, that that ſame day before Dinner there was put up in Parliament by the Lord Thomas of Woodſtock, the Kings youngeſt Son, and the Lord Henry Percy Marſhal of England, a certain Bill, as in the Kings Name, importing, that the City of London ſhould no more be govern'd by a Mayor, but by a Captain, as in times paſt: And that the Marſhal of England ſhould have the ſole ordering of Arreſts within the ſaid City, as elſewhere, with many other Articles tending to the Diminution of the Liberties of London. Which Bill being read, there ſtood up a Worthy Patriot, Alderman John Philpot, one of the Burgeſſes of that City, who ſpake ſo notably againſt the ſaid Bill, and pleaded ſo ſtrongly in behalf of the Charters and Privileges of that Famous Metropolis, that immediately the Bill was flung out of the Houſe, and the Name of Alderman Philpot much ſet by.

I can find no Warrant for this indeed in the Records of the ſaid Parliament, which we have faithfully exhibited before, and therefore dare not abſolutely lean to the belief thereof: But whether it was really ſo, or only cunningly nois'd abroad by ſome ſeditious Arts to ſtir up the People; however we find, that the next day the Londoners aſſembled in Council to conſider of the Matter, and alſo how far the Power of the Marſhal extended, not forgetting to take notice of the Affronts put upon their Biſhop the Day before.

While thus the Chief Citizens were entertain'd with ſober Debates, and perhaps only prepar'd ſome Petition or Remonſtrance to ſhew unto the Parliament in the behalf of their City; the Commons underſtanding, that One of their Body was then in Priſon in the Marſhals Houſe, which ſtood within their Liberties, being ſecretly animated by ſome conſiderable Beautefeus (whom for ſeveral Reaſons I cannot, with others, believe to have been the Lord Guy Bryan and the Lord Walter Fitz-Walter) went immediately in great Fury to the Houſe of the Lord Percy, where breaking up the Gates, they took out the Priſoner by force, and burnt the Stocks, wherein he had been ſet, in the midſt of the City. Then they ſought for the Lord Percy, for whom all Corners and Privy-Chambers were ſearched, and the Beds and Hangings torn in pieces with their Bills and Javelins. But He, it ſeems, was at that time happily out of the way, being together with the Duke of Lancaſter invited to Dinner by one John of Ipres, at his houſe [t] called Ipres-Inne in Knight-Riders Street, of which the Londoners knew nothing, but thought they were at the Dukes Houſe, called the Savoy, and ſo poſted thither in great fury. But one of the Dukes Knights obſerving this madneſs of the People, went in great haſte to the Place where his Lord the Duke was, and when for all his Knocking he could not be admitted, he ſaid aloud to the Porter, whoſe name was Haveland, "Hark you, "Have-

[t] Stow's Survey of London. p. 260.

"Haveland! If you love my Lord, the Duke, and your Life, open the Gate. At theſe Words he was let in, and in great fear told the Duke, that there were infinite Numbers of Armed Men, ſearching for him, ſo that if he had not a Care, that day would be his laſt. At this the Duke leap'd ſo haſtily from his Oyſters, that he hurt both his Legs againſt the Form; Wine was offer'd, but he could not drink for haſte; and ſo fled at a Back gate with the Lord Henry Percy, and taking a Barge at the Thames never left Rowing, till they came to an houſe near the Mannor of Kennington, where at that time the Princeſs-Mother of Wales lay, with her young Son Richard, before whom he made his Complaint againſt the outragious Inſolence of the Citizens. And the Princeſs promiſed him to take ſuch Order in this Matter, as ſhould be to his Content. At AN. DOM. 1377. An. Regni Angliæ LI. Franciæ XXXVIII.

The mean [t] while the Commons of London had beſet the Dukes Houſe, called the Savoy, where a certain Prieſt began to queſtion them about the Reaſon of this their unuſual rage and concourſe. He was anſwer'd by ſome of them, that they ſought for the Duke and the Lord Marſhal, to get them to deliver Sr. Peter de la Mare, whom they wrongfully detained in Priſon. To this the Prieſt anſwer'd again more boldly than wiſely, "That Sr. Peter (ſaid he) is a falſe Traytor to the King, and worthy to have been hanged long ſince. At theſe words, the Rabble cry'd out upon him with a terrible ſhout, ſaying, that he was a Traytor, and ſo falling upon him, wounded him to Death. [t] Fox Acts & Mon. p. 394.

VIII. Nor in all likelihood had the Tumult thus ceaſed, had not the Biſhop of London, leaving his Dinner at the firſt News of this Diſturbance, come to them at the Savoy, and putting them in mind of the ſolemn ſeaſon of Lent, with much ado perſwaded them to go home and be quiet.

However, as they were returning to the City, ſeeing they could do no harm to the Dukes perſon, who was now out of their Reach, they began to wreak their Anger on all, that they could find belonging unto him; and taking his Arms, in the moſt ſhamefull manner, they hung them up Reverſed in divers parts of the City, as if he had been a Traytor. Nay when One of the Dukes Gentlemen came riding thrô the City with a Plate of the Dukes Arms about his Neck, theſe Men not enduring ſuch a ſight, flang him from his Horſe, tore away his Cogniſance from him, and had certainly ſerved him, as they had ſerved the Prieſt; but that the Mayor came opportunely to his Reſcue, and ſent him home ſafe to the Duke his Maſter. So hatefull at that time was the Duke of Lancaſter to the Londoners.

IX. When the Princeſs underſtood, how ill-affected the Londoners ſtood unto the Duke, ſhe ſent unto them Three of her Knights, Sr. Aubrey de Vere, Sr. Simon Burley, and Sr. Lewis Clifford, to entreat them to be reconciled unto the Duke. They for their parts anſwer'd, how for the Honour of the Princeſs they would obey, and with all Reverence be ready to do whatever ſhe ſhould pleaſe to require. But however this they ſaid, and charged the Meſſengers to tell the Duke as much by word of Mouth, that they were reſolved, that the Biſhop of Wincheſter and Sr. Peter de la Mare, ſhould be brought to their Anſwer, and judged by their Peers: So that either they might be acquitted, if they were Guiltleſs, or if culpable, receive their due according to the Laws of the Realm. At the ſame time the Mayor and Common-Council of London ſent certain [u] of their Chief Citizens to the Old King to make their Excuſe concerning this Tumult, proteſting, that they themſelves were no way privy thereto, but upon the firſt Knowledge ſought by all means to ſuppreſs the ſame: Which they could not do, becauſe the whole Commonalty was in a Commotion, upon an Information, that their Liberties ſhould be taken from them by Parliament. The King told them, that it never enter'd into his heart to infringe their Liberties, it was rather his Deſire to enlarge them. And therefore he willed them to baniſh all needleſs fear, occaſion'd by too eaſie Credulity, and to return and endeavour to keep the City in Quiet, which they did, being well ſatisfied with this Anſwer. We ſhall not here dwell on the minuter parts of this Story, nor ſhew, what Indignation and Grief the Duke conceived hereat; nor what means and ſuit the Londoners were fain to make to the King, his Father, for their Liberties; nor what Rhymes and Ballads were made upon the Duke in London; nor how the Biſhops, at the Duke's inſtance, were obliged to excommunicate all his Defamers, nor how at laſt he was revenged of theſe contumelious injuries, having cauſed the Mayor and Aldermen to appear before the King, where they were ſharply rebuked for their Miſdemeanor by the Grave Oration of Sr. Robert Aſhton, the Kings Chamberlain, in preſence of the King, Archbiſhops, Biſhops, the Kings Children, and the Chief Nobility of the Realm; nor how they were then and there enjoyned at the Publique Charges of the City, to make a Great Taper of Wax, which with the Dukes Arms ſet upon it ſhould be brought in ſolemn Proceſſion to the Church of St. Paul, there to burn continually before the I- [u] Daniel's hiſt. p. 359, &c.

An. Dom. 1377. An. Regni Angliæ LI. Franciæ XXXVIII.

mage of our Lady. Nor how at last in the beginning of the next Kings Reign the Duke and the Londoners were fully reconciled together, with the Kiss of Peace, and the said Reconciliation publisht in the Churches of St. Paul and Westminster, to the great joy of the whole City. Nor shall I speak any farther of John Wickliffe, [x] how the Pope wrote to the Archbishop of Canterbury and to the Bishop of London to convene him once more; and how the Princess of Wales deliver'd him; nor how lastly he was fain to retire into Bohemia, where he spread his Doctrine: For these Matters do neither in their own Nature nor Time agree with our present Design.

[x] Odor. Rainal. ad hunc an. § 4. *& Walsingh. hist. p.*201, &c.

X. All these things I pass over as Matters either foreign or of small Moment; so likewise I leave in silence the [y] Riot made between the Earl of Warwicks Men and the Abbot and Monks of Evesham; as also [z] the hurlyburly made at Laneham in Suffolk, against Henry Spencer, the Warlike Bishop of Norwich, and other trivial Matters. And haste now to an end of King Edward's Life, and our Labour.

[y] Vid. M.S. Vet. Angl. in Bibl. C.C.C. Cantab. *c.*238.

[z] *Fox Acts & Mon. p.*394.

About this time Sr. John Menstreworth, that false Knight, of whose abominable Treason We [a] spake in the Fourty Fourth Year of this King, was suddenly [b] surprised by certain Englishmen in Pampelone a City of Navarre; and being presently sent over into England, was now tryed before the Mayor, and other the Kings Justices in the Guildhall at London, where these things were proved home upon him, namely, "That being entrusted by his Sovereign Lord the King, and having received considerable Sums of Money, to pay the Kings Souldiers therewith, he had falsly and like a Traytor kept the Money to his own use; also that he had maliciously occasion'd a Dissention and Discord in the Kings Army, and thereby gave the Enemy advantage against them: Whereof being accused unto the King, and fearing the Punishment due unto him therefore, like a false and forsworn Traytor he fled into France unto the Kings Enemies, and there was sworn unto the French King, and conspired against his Natural Lord and Master, undertaking to direct the Spanish Navy, and bring them into England to the Confusion and Destruction of his Native Country. Of all which he was fully convicted, and so on the 12 of April was executed at Tiburn, and drawn, hang'd, and quarter'd; after which his Head was set upon London-Bridge.

[a] *Vid. Hujus hist. l.*4. *c.*7. §.23. *& p.*809, &c.

[b] M.S. vet. Ang. in Bibl. C.C.C. Cantab. *c.*239. Walsingh. hist. p. 189. Fabian p. 262. Holinsh p. 998.

XI. When [c] the Lord Ingelram de Guisnes, Earl of Bedford and Lord of Coucy was returned into France from his unhappy Expedition into Austria, thrô the exceeding importunity of his Friends, and a sense of Gratitude to the French King for his late Princely Supply and Assistance towards his Wars, he was at last utterly overcome, and resolv'd to yield himself absolutely up to the French side, wholly quitting his Interest in England. However that he might make the fairer shew, and as little as might be, disoblige his Father-in-Law, King Edward, he sent his Lady Isabella into England, to endeavour to pacifie her Father, the King, where she remain'd a while for that purpose with her younger Daughter [d] Philippa, the Elder, named Mary, continuing with her Husband, the Lord of Coucy. For notwithstanding this Change, his Counsellours and Friends told him, that he needed not to fear, he should lose his Heritage in England, since the King, his Father-in-Law, could not reasonably expect, that for his sake he should fling up a far greater Heritage in France, especially since, thô a [e] Baron of England, he was a [f] Frenchman by Name, Blood, Arms, and Extraction.

[c] Froiss. c. 314. *f.*175. b & Id. Gallicè 1 *Vol. c.*267.

[d] *Mill's Catal. Hon. p.*440.

[e] Dugd. 1 *Vol. p.*760.

[f] Froiss. ibid.

XII. Soon after the French King had such Confidence in the sincerity of his Conversion, that he sent him to Bruges, to assist his other Commissioners, who had Orders to be there about a Treaty for Peace between the two Realms. Thô as yet none of the Great Lords, either of England, or France were come thither, save only the Duke of Bretagne, who was still there with his Cousin the Earl of Flanders, not much concerned about settling any Peace.

But now on the [g] 20 of February King Edward empowers Dr. John Gilbert Bishop of Hereford, Sr. John Cobham of Kent, and Sr. John Montagu, Bannerets, and John Shepey, Dr of the Laws, to go to Bruges to treat with the Earl of Salebruse, the Lord of Chastillon, and Monsieur Philibert l' Espiote, where they met the Popes Legates, who, as friendly Mediators, were present all the while that the Treaty lasted. But when nothing was done here neither, the Legates seeing all things like to break to pieces, in Pious subtlety began to [h] propose a Match between Richard, the Young Prince of Wales, and the Lady Mary, Daughter to the French King. Which Proposal coming to the Ears of both the Kings, begat another private meeting shortly after at [i] Montrevil by the Sea, where Sr. Guischard Dangle, Sr. Richard Sturry, and Sr. Geoffry Chaucer (the Prince of our English Poets) met with the Lord of Coucy, Sr. Nicolas Braques, and Sr. Nicolas Brasier, Commissioners from the French King. And here they [k] treated earnestly about the Marriage, which if it might take effect, the Frenchmen offer'd many [g] Rot. Franc. 51. Ed. 3. *m.*7. & Ashmole p. 668.

[h] *Holinsh. p.*998.

[i] *Froiss. fol.*196. ibid Holinsh. p. 998.

[k] Froiss. ibid.

things,

things, in lieu whereof they would have ſuch things, as they named, or elſe nothing. Particularly, it is ſaid, [l] that they offer'd to leave unto the King of England Fourteen Hundred Towns, and Three Thouſand Fortreſſes in Aquitaine, on Condition, that he would render back Calais, and all that he held in Picardy. But to this the Engliſh Commiſſioners would not agree, knowing, that if once they parted with that ſure Landing-place, the French King would ſoon take away all thoſe Towns and Fortreſſes again: But that while they held Calais, as the Key of France, in their Hands, they might at any time be able to invade that Realm, and ſometime or other recover all their Former Loſſes. Thus in Effect each Party having chiefly ſpent their time in ſounding one anothers Inclinations, they brake up again, without any other Succeſs, than that they Prorogued the Truce one Month further, viz. to May-Day following.

AN. DOM. 1377. An. Regni Angliæ LI. Franciæ XXXVIII.

[l] Sr. Richard Baker p. 138. & Du Cheſne p. 711. c.

XIII. Now the Old King being ſtill deſirous to add more Honour to his Grandſon and Heir, Prince Richard of Bourdeaux, [m] at a Chapter held at Windſor, on the 23[d] of April, being the Feſtival of St. George, Created him Knight of the Moſt Noble Order of the GARTER, in Place of the Renowned Prince his Father, late deceaſed.

[m] Walſing. hiſt. p. 189. n. 20. & M.S. vet. Ang. in Bibl. C.C.C. Cantab. c. 239. Sed ibi St. Gregory pro St. George malé.

XIV. On the 26 of the ſaid Month of April, the King willing now, if it might be, to leave the Kingdom in Peace at his Death (which he look'd upon as not far off) cauſed [n] a Commiſſion to be made (for Holding another Treaty with the French) to Dr. Adam Houghton Biſhop of St. Davids, and Chancellor of England, Dr. John Gilbert Biſhop of Hereford, William Montagu Earl of Salisbury, Sr. Robert Aſhton the Kings Chamberlain, Sr. Guiſchard Dangle Banneret, Aubrey de Vere, and Hugh Seagrave Knights, Walter Skirlow Dean of St. Martins le Grand, and John Shepey Doctor of the Laws; empowering them fully to treat and compoſe all Differences, Wars and Contentions, according to the Inſtructions given them. Theſe Commiſſioners came in good time to Calais; while on the other ſide the Lord of Coucy, and Sr. William Dormer Chancellor of France, with their Aſſociates tarried at Montrevil; but by reaſon of ſome Suſpition, which the Commiſſioners had, or pretended to have, of each other, or elſe thrô ſome Punctilio of Honour, neither Party would vouchſafe to go to the other, whatever the Legates could ſay or do; nor yet to meet in any Indifferent place, either between Montrevil and Calais, or Montrevil and Boulogne; and ſo the time limited by the Truce, viz. the Firſt of May, elapſed without any Fruit.

[n] Rot. Franc. 51 Ed. 3. m. 3. Aſhmole p. 668.

Now when the War was open, [o] Sr. Hugh Calverley was made Captain of Calais, and ſent thither by the King of England with a good Retinue. All things began to threaten Bloody Conſequences of the next Campain, Commiſſions being ſent to the Great Lords throughout all England to Array all able Men from ſixteen to ſixty Years of Age, to be ready on Occaſion to defend the Kingdom, and to withſtand any Invaſion that might happen; there being apprehenſions, that the French would take Land in ſome part or other.

[o] Froiſ. ibid. & Walſingh. hiſt. p. 199. n. 30.

At this time the Frenchmen came ſuddenly with conſiderable Forces, and lay down before a ſtrong Fortreſs near Calais called Outwick, which they [p] began to batter ſo furiouſly with Nine pieces of Great Ordnance, that the Governour thereof William Weſton Eſquire, being terrified with the Novelty of thoſe irreſiſtable Engines, yielded up the Place upon Conditions, and ſo departed with all his Men to Calais, where Sr. Hugh Calverly ſeized upon him, and ſent him into England to anſwer for the Fact. He was for the preſent committed to the Tower, but during King Edward's Reign was proceeded againſt no further.

[p] Vid. l. 2. c. 3. §. 11. p. 361.

The Duke of Bretagne, [q] who had been more than a Year with his Couſin the Earl of Flanders, ſeeing now the War open again, took leave of the Earl, and went to Graveling; whither there went to meet him the Earl of Salisbury and Sr. Guiſchard Dangle, with a Select Body of Men of Arms and Archers, and ſo conducted him ſafely to Calais. The next Day ſome of their Retinue, [r] to the number of about Fifty, ſuddenly of their own Heads took Ship, thinking ſo to paſs ſecurely to Dover: But they were preſently ſnapt by ſome French Gallies, and every one of them, except two Men and two Women ſlain in the ſight of the Caliſians, who were not able to give them any help at that time. Sr. Hugh Calverley, who was then Captain of Calais, took this in very ill part; eſpecially becauſe the Injury was done to ſuch, as being concerned in the Treaty had the French King's Security to come and go without Danger; but ſince it was impoſſible to remedy the Matter, he reſolved to revenge it, and preſently taking with him ſome Choice Troops, he made an Inroad into the French Pale, where he ſlew many Men, retook the Caſtle of Outwick, and returned ſafe with a great Booty of Artillery and Cattle. And indeed many [s] notable Actions were afterwards done by this [q] Froiſ. c. 314. f. 196. & id. Gallicè fol. 267. b.

[r] Stow p. 276.

[s] Vid. Walſing. hiſt. p. 199. &c.

An. Dom. 1377. An. Regni Angliæ LI. Franciæ XXXVIII.

Valiant English Knight, of which notwithstanding We are forbid to speak, because they will not fall within the Compass of our History.

XV. When [t] the Duke of Bretagne, the Earl of Salisbury, and Sr. Guischard Dangle with their Company had tarried now about a Month at Calais, having at last got a sufficient Convoy, they set Sail for England about the Middle of June, and arrived safe at London. And from thence the Lords and Knights took Boat, and went to Sheen in Surry by the Thame's side, where at that time King Edward lay very sick, and soon after departed this Life, on the XI of the Calends of July, that is, on the 21 of June, being the Day of St. Alban the Protomartyr of England and a Sunday, in the Year of our Lord MCCCLXXVII, which was the One and Fiftieth of his Reign of England, but of France the Thirty Eighth, and of his Age the Sixty Fifth. In Memory whereof his Anniversary Obit was ordain'd to be held for ever on the [u] 21 of June in the Famous Chappel of St. George at Windsor.

[t] Froiss. ibid.

[u] Ashmole's Garter p.151.

And thus by the Death of this Great Conqueror, and his Son the Black-Prince, we may see, that no Worldly Grandeur can secure us from the Reach of Fate: But---

Monarchs, altho they bear the Stamp Divine,
And o'r the World their Awfull Scepters sway;
Tho Subjects their Commands obey,
To Death's High Hand must all their Crowns resign.
The Godlike Heroe, that from every Field
Reaps a Full Harvest of Immortal Fame,
To Conquering Fate his sinewy Arms must yield,
At whose First Frown the Fiercest Warrier's tame.
Beauty it self her Heavenly Lustre vails,
And all her dazling Glories die,
Those Swelling Charms, puff'd up with Flattery's Gales,
Shrink into Dirt, and wound th' offended Eye;
When Death attacks the once-relentless Fair,
Cruel to her, as she to them, whom once she bad Despair.
But Vertue, Heavenly Vertue, that can save
Th' Owner from wholly passing Lethe's Lake;
Vertue can even the Dead Immortal make,
And like some Heaven-born Plant sprouts fresher from the Grave.

Wherefore now it will become us to clear the Reputation of this Mighty Prince from those foul Reflections, which Malice or Ignorance may have cast upon his Declining Age (for till then the Fiercest Envy durst not attack him) and lastly to sum up his Character, and (as in a Looking-Glass) exhibit Him fully and faithfully to the World.

[x] Walsing. hist. p.189. Stow p. 276. Sr. Rich. Baker p.145. Daniel p.260. &c.

XVI. Most of our Historians taking it from one another, [x] talk very dolefully of his forlorn Condition at the point of his Death, and tell us, that first his Concubine, as they call her, Alice Perrers took the very Rings off his Fingers, and so left him; after whom other Servants went away in like manner with what they could carry. That at last only a poor Priest remaining in the Room, out of Christian Piety and Loyal Respect to his dying Master, went boldly up to him, and admonished him to lift up his Heart to God in the Heavens, and humbly with contrition to ask Mercy of Him, whose Divine Majesty he must needs have grievously offended; whereupon the King (say they) being awaken'd somewhat from his former Lethargy, began by Signs (for his Voice had by this time almost wholly fail'd him) as by taking a Crucifix in his hands, and kissing it with many Tears flowing from his Eyes, to signifie a Declaration of his Faith and Repentance; and so with much adoe making shift to pronounce the Adorable Name JESUS, with that Sweet and Salutiferous Word He finished his Speech and Life together.

Well might the Death of this Monarch be in such a Penitent Manner, whose Life had afforded so many Instances of Piety and Devotion: But as for Dame Alice Perrers her Rifling him of his Rings from his Fingers, it is no way credible, not only from what We [y] said of her before; and that upon her Convention in Parliament in the Year following, there was no such thing laid to her Charge by her most inveterate Enemies; but also because if she did it before Witnesses, it must have come out, and then could not but have been fatal to her; and if not, it could not have been known. And whereas it is said, that this Woman flatter'd the King, that He should still live, untill his Speech fail'd him, whereby he neglected to prepare for his Soul, as he ought to have done; this this savours of a Monkish Lie too grosly, and of that Spirit so visible in many of their Writings, which either from any Judgment falling upon a Man, presently attributes unto him some Failure against the Liberties of the Church, or some Saint; or else, when they find the Person to have in any thing thwarted their Interest, is apt to invent some Tale or other, which may insinuate his Dereliction of God. And this use only doth [z] Odoricus Rainaldus make of this Story, which none ever had before Walsingham, and none since, but from his single Authority. Whereas not only the Silence of all other Authors before his time, as to any such thing, may evince the Falshood of this matter, but the known Piety and Moderation, which King Edward used thrô all his Life; and that he could not easily be at this time unmindfull of Death may appear, in that many Years before, thrô a Pious consideration of Human Frailty, he chose the Place of his Sepulture, as [a] we have shewn; and likewise settled the Point of Succession afterwards, and had also so lately seen his Gallant Son go the same way before him; not to mention the many Instances of his Piety, of which we shall speak by and by. And as for that solitary manner of his Death, it is every whit as improbable; for the Court of the Next Heir being then hard by at Kennington, and the Three Sons of the King being thereabouts all the while, if Piety and Duty could not have kept his Servants about Him, yet a Care of their own Interest must have caution'd them at this time not to shew too much neglect of the Grandfather of the Young Prince, and of the Duke of Lancaster's Father: Not to say any thing of the Earl of Salisbury, the Duke of Bretagne, and Sr. Guischard Dangle; who, as we shew'd, were just come unto him a little before his Departure. And besides, He was so far from being totally neglected, that every Moment of his Sickness was particularly observed by his Sons and Others: So that on that very Day, whereon he died, before his Soul had left the Body, the Mayor, Aldermen, and Common-Council of London, being certainly informed, that his Case was now desperate, sent certain of their Chief Citizens to Kennington, where Prince Richard and his Mother resided, to declare unto the said Prince their Loyal Affections to his Sacred Person, and how ready upon his Grandfather's Death they should all be to accept of Him for their Lawfull King and Governour.

[y] Lib. 4. c. 11. §. 10. p. 872.

AN. DOM. 1377. An. Regni Angliæ LI. Franciæ XXXVIII.

[z] Vid. hujus Hist. l. 2. c. 6. §. 31. p. 392.

[a] Lib. 3. c. 4. §. 14. p. 564. An°. Regni 1359.

And yet had it been true, that our Edward was thus left at his last Gasp by all his Waiters and Domesticks; surely it would be very Hard, Uncharitable, and Unchristianlike, to argue any thing against his Person therefore, or to conclude his Death any whit the more miserable, since then he could not be sensible of what happen'd; and also it is very usual, and ever will be, for the Court to fall away from the Setting Sun, and to turn toward the East.

XVII. However thus died King Edward the Third, of whom (when his Enemy King Charles of France heard of his Death) he gave this Testimony, [b] ----That He had Reigned most Nobly and Valiantly, and well deserved to be added to the Number of the Antient Worthies. And soon after he assembled all the Nobles and Prelates of his Realm, with whom he Solemnly performed his Obsequies in the Holy Chappel of his Palace at Paris. But in England there was great Sorrow made for his Death, and immediately all the Ports were stopped, lest the News thereof should reach France, before the Affairs of the Kingdom might be settled.

[b] Froiss. c. 314. f. 196. Gallicè verò fol. 267.

A little before the Coronation of King Richard the Second, the Body of King Edward was removed from Sheen, and with a great Pomp of Sorrow, his Three Sons John of Gaunt, Edmund of Langley, and Thomas of Woodstock, and his Son-in-Law John the Valiant, Duke of Bretagne, and all the Barons and Prelates of England following the Herse, was brought along thrô the City of London with Open Visage to Westminster, where it was [c] solemnly interred on the South-side of the Royal Chappel in the Abbey of St. Peter, near to the Body of his Beloved Queen Philippa, as on her Death-Bed she had requested. Where betwixt two Pillars parallel with the Tomb of King Edward the Confessor, He hath his Monument of Grey Marble, upon the Superficies whereof lies his Full Portraiture of Copper Gilt; and upon the Verge of the Tomb these Old Verses are ingraven, beginning on the North-side at the Foot, being Latine Rhyme, after the Manner of that Age.

[c] Sandford p. 175. vid. Keep's Mon. Westmonast.

Hic

An. Dom. 1377. An. Regni Angliæ LI. Franciæ XXXVIII.

Hic Decus Anglorum, Flos Regum Preteritorum,
Forma Futurorum, Rex Clemens, Pax Populorum,
Tertius Edvardus, Regni complens Jubileum,
Invictus Pardus, Bellis pollens Machabeum.
Prospere dum vixit, Regnum Pietate revixit:
Armipotens Rexit: Jam Cœlo (Cœlice Rex) Ait!

Tertius Edvardus Famâ super æthera Notus.

Pvgna pro Patria.
MCCCLXXVII.

On both Sides of this Tomb are the Figures of all his Sons and Daughters in Solid Brass, viz. On the South-side in several Niches are Edward Prince of Wales, Joan of the Tower, Entitled Queen of Spain, Lionel Duke of Clarence, Edmund of Langley, Mary Dutchess of Bretagne, and William of Hatfield, under which their several Escutcheons of Arms Enamelled are placed: And also under them the Arms of Saint George, and of King Edward the Third interchangeably on Four large Shields of Brass Enamelled. On the North-side were the Statues, and still there remain the Arms of Isabell Lady Coucy, William of Windsor, John Duke of Lancaster, Blanch of the Tower, Margaret Countess of Pembroke, and Thomas of Woodstock; near unto which Sepulchre they will still shew you the Sword, which it is said this King used in his Wars in France, being only Cross-barr'd, Seven Foot long, and weighing Eighteen Pounds.

I will not dissemble, [d] that there is somewhere attributed unto him one Natural Son (besides his Twelve Legitimate Children) named Nicolas Litlington, who was Abbot of Westminster, and lies buried in the said Abbey before the Altar of St. Blase: But there are several Arguments, which with me weigh down the Credit of this single Testimony; as his Age, he being made Abbot immediately after Simon Langham sixteen Years before this, whereas usually Old Age is required for such, and he survived King Edward but [e] Nine Years. He bare for his Arms [f] Quarterly Argent and Gules, in the Second and Third a Fret Or on a Bend Azure Three Flowers de Luces of the Third.

His Character may best be gather'd from his History; but however we shall again represent him in little, according to those lively Colours, wherewith the joynt Concurrence of the best [g] Authors have represented him. He was a Prince the sooneſt a Man, and the longest that held so of any we meet with: His Stature not exceeding the usual Bigness of Men, but of the Middle sort, [h] that is, just six Foot or two Yards High, his Limbs neat and well-made, his Body strong, his shape Exact, his Visage something Long, but exceeding Comely, Gracefull, and Angelical; his Nose long, streight, and Manly, his Eyes sparkling and Majestick, but with so much Sweetness, that it was reckon'd of good Omen to behold his Face, thô only in a Dream. Fortunate he was beyond Measure, especially till the six latter Years of his Reign; Wise and Provident in Counsel, Well-Learned in the Laws, in History, Humanity, and Divinity. He understood Latine, French, Spanish, Italian, and High and Low-Dutch, besides his Native Language; He was of Quick Apprehension, Judicious, and Skilfull in Nature, Elegant in Speech, Sweet, Familiar, and Affable in Behaviour; stern to the Obstinate, but Calm and Meek to the Humble. Magnanimous and Couragious above all the Princes of his Days; Apt for War, but a Lover of Peace; never puff'd up with Prosperity, nor Dismay'd at Adversity. He was of an Exalted, Glorious, and truly Royal Spirit, which never entertain'd any thing Vulgar, or Trivial; as may appear by the most Excellent Laws, which he made; by those two Famous Jubilees he kept, and by the Most Honourable Order of the Garter, which he first Devised and Founded. His Recreations were Hawking, Hunting, and Fishing, but chiefly he lov'd the Martial Exercise of Justs and Tourneaments. In his * Buildings he was curious, Splendid, and Magnificent, in Bestowing of Graces and Donations, Free and Frequent; and to the Ingenious and Deserving always Kind and Liberal; Devout to God, Bountifull to the Clergy, Gracious to his People, Mercifull to the Poor, True to his Word, Loving to his Friends, Terrible to his Enemies. And because he was so strictly observant of his Faith and Honour, and withall so Valiant, Politick, and Fortunate; his Subjects imagin'd, that to live under Him was

to

[d] Cod. M. S. Miscell. R. Glover Somerset. fol. 135.

[e] He died 1386. Keep's Mon. West. p. 52.

[f] Vid. Keep's Mon. Westmonast. p. 13.

[g] Walsing. hist. p. 189. Henr. Knighton p. 2630. Fox Acts & Mon. p. 394. Daniel's Hist. p. 260. Ric. Dinothi Adverſ. p. 92. Sr. Rich. Baker p. 144. Stow p. 269. & Holinsh. p. 999. Weever's Fun. Mon. p. 466. &c.

[h] Vid. Hakewill's Apology for Providence p. 212.

* He founded East-Minster, an Abbey of the Cistertian Order, near the Tower, and an Abbey for Nuns at Dartford in Kent. He likewise Founded Kings Hall in Cambridge (now a Part of Trinity-College) for Scholars; He built a Fair Church and an Hospital for the Poor at Calais; as also St. Stephens Chappel at Westminster, and augmented the Chappel at Windsor, and reedified the Castle; not to mention his other Buildings at Henley and East-Hampstead, his Fortifications at St. Johnston and Roxborough in Scotland, at Barwick, Dover, Calais, Windsor, and to Reign in Triumphs; and his Renown ran abroad even to Barbarous and Foreign Nations; and all thought themſelves Happy and ſecure, if they were either under his Protection, or any way Confederate with him. The Turks and Saracens fear'd him; the Oppreſſed Chriſtian Princes humbly implor'd his Aſſiſtance; The Germans he had at his Command, during the time of his Lieutenancy under Lewis of Bavaria, and might have had them entirely, had he accepted their Proffer of the Empire. The Flemings were his Confederates, the Italians he oblig'd unto him by the Bond of Affinity; the French, Spaniards, and Scots he ſubdued by Force of Arms; he won Calais, recover'd Aquitaine, Normandy, and Ponthieu, and took John King of France, and David King of Scots his Priſoners; being the Firſt of Engliſh Kings, that bore the Arms and Title of France. In ſhort He had the moſt Vertues and the feweſt Vices of any Prince, that ever I read of; He was Valiant, Juſt, Mercifull, Temperate, and Wiſe; the beſt King, the beſt Captain, the beſt Lawgiver, the beſt Friend, the beſt Father, and the beſt Husband in his Days. And after all this his very Enemies will be found to ſay much more of him.

the [a] Caſtle and Town of Queenborough, by him ſo called in Honour of his Queen, Philippa of Heinalt; and laſtly, the [b] City of Aberconwey in Caernarvonſhire in Wales, which he wholly built out of the Ruines of the Old Britiſh City, called Caer-haen, on the Mouth of the River Conwey.

[a] Cambden in Cantio p. 236.
[b] Dr. Skinner's Etymol. Angl. in voce Conwey & Aberconwey.

Soli Deo Gloria, Amen.

FINIS.

FINIS.

13